¹⁴ Several words for sacrifice occur in the Emar rituals. The common western root zbh, "to slaughter for sacrifice," appears only in this noun.

¹⁵ "Their nibu-meat" represents an unknown portion.

¹⁶ Lit., "the same month," but the idiom and context indicate a day, and this should reflect scribal error.

¹⁷ This movement to the next day is not treated here as a new calendar definition, but an extension of the 15th. The statement is not set at the start of the line.

¹⁸ These are the kubadu ceremonies found in the installation and the zuku festival, above. The homages are not for gods but for some result, possibly as translated (text: a-na uš-ma da-ri-ia u a-na da-na-ni(?)).

¹⁹ Lit., "no planter may go out."

On the 17th day they enclose ^b a lamb for NINKUR.

On the 18th day NINKUR goes out in procession.
One fine white sheep (comes) from the fire-lighters.

Bread and beer from (some person) the men of the consecration-gift ... [eat and] drink.²⁰

Contract-bread²¹ ... ghee, in the contract-bread ...

the diviner ...

the diviner ...

a lamb ...

[on the] 19th [day] ...²²

... [proceeds] in front.

[The divine axe follows] behind.²³

...

[5-7 lines missing]

...

... a sheep to (some god) ...

... a sheep to (another god) ...

... one sheep to ...

...

Column IV²⁴

Month of Anna (lines 77-82)

The month of Anna.²⁵

The fire-lighters, along with the Hamša²⁶u-men^f give [bread] and beer to Adammatera.²⁶

One sheep for the Abi²⁷ of the House of the Gods, one sheep for the temple of Dagan, and one sheep for the town — these sheep (come) from the fire-lighters.

The diviner receives these hides.

Month of Adamma (lines 83-85)

The month of Adamma:

The return-ceremony of Illila falls on the 7th day.²⁸

The return-ceremony for all the gods falls on the

f 1 Sam 8:12;
cf. 2 Kgs 1:9

g Jer 16:5;
Amos 6:7

h 1 Sam 20:5, 18, 24, 27,
34; cf. 2 Kgs
4:23; Isa
1:13; Hos
2:13; Amos
8:5

8th day.

Month of Marzaḥāni (lines 86-95)

The month of Marzaḥāni: ^g

The Buqaratu fall on the 14th day.²⁹

On the 16th day she goes out in procession from the crossroads.³⁰

A sheep (comes) from the town.

Also, the divine axe follows from the crossroads.

The Hunt of Aštart falls on the same day.³¹

The Hunt of the Storm God falls on the 17th day.

They burn at the Hurrian(?) temple one sheep from the fire-lighters.³²

The Marzaḥu-men ^g of the fellowship(?) bring a standard loaf to the gods.³³

Half of the one sheep belongs to the diviner.

Month of Halma (lines 96-119)

The month of Halma:

On the second day they perform sacrificial homages at the temple of Dagan.³⁴

In the evening they fill goblets with wine and burn a bird.³⁵

The New Moon^h of Dagan falls on the third day.³⁶

One sheep (comes) from the town.

The divine axe takes up residence in the temple.

The sheep's hide belongs to the diviner.

On the 8th day Halma goes out in procession.

The divine axe follows after him.

One sheep (comes) from the town.

The men of the consecration-gift(?) feast.

The bread and the beer belong to the diviner.

On the same day, they enclose^b a lamb at the temple of the Storm God.

²⁰ The broken text prevents certain determination of the relationship between these players, the sheep, and the bread and beer.

²¹ In contracts, a table is anointed and hukku-bread is broken. This association offers the basis for translation here, though the actual identity of hukku-bread is unknown.

²² The number 19 begins line 67, which would fit a sequence to another day, but no more is visible.

²³ The axe consistently follows at the back of processions.

²⁴ There are no further missing lines between the end of column III and the beginning of column IV.

²⁵ Anna appears to be the Sumerian sky god An (= Anu), like Illila for Enlil, the Sumerian pantheon head, below, note 28.

²⁶ The items offered are not certain; bread and beer would be unusual. Adammatera appears also in the installation of the storm god's high priestess.

²⁷ The a-bi appear repeatedly in the text for the month of Abi, which in spite of alternatives for similar ritual terms appears to be read as "fathers" at Emar, based on one spelling with double -bb-, abbf.

²⁸ This is evidently Enlil as Anna is An(u), above, both major Sumerian deities from earlier southern Mesopotamia. The return-ceremony is the turtu, also found on the last day of the zuku festival.

²⁹ The meaning of this term is unknown. But see below note 33.

³⁰ The subject of the procession is not mentioned, though the goddess Aštart is the only deity active on this day (below).

³¹ The verb šadu means "to roam, hunt."

³² The "Hurrian" temple is uncertain.

³³ See McLaughlin (1991) for recent treatment of evidence for this group at Ugarit. The "standard" loaf is the naptanu. The verb "to bring" (wašabu) is unique in Emar ritual, though in inheritance documents it can refer to responsibility for continued sustenance. The modifier mi-di appears to mean "acquaintance."

³⁴ Here the homages are rendered kibadu, not kubadu.

³⁵ Burning of birds constitutes a particularly Hurrian ritual act, performed for purification, especially for contact with the underworld or death; see Haas and Wilhelm 1974:50-54, 137-142.

³⁶ The New Moon is the hidašu, a word not previously attested. The climax of this annual celebration falls on the third day, once the new moon is established, rather than at first visibility as expected for this term.

On the 9th day the Storm God of Canaan ³⁷ goes out in procession. An ox and six sheep proceed to his temple. Among them, the temple of Dagan Lord ... ³⁸ ... the servers ... he receives The hides, the intestines, the fat ... belong to the diviner.	i Exod 15:15; Judg 5:19; etc.	... the kidneys ... belong to the king of the land. (Left Edge) The Hiyaru of the Storm God falls on the 18th day. ³⁹ They slaughter an ox and two sheep. The men of the consecration-gift(?) eat and drink.
--	-------------------------------------	---

³⁷ The storm god of "Kina"u" is most easily explained by reference to the coastal region to the west, which several Amarna letters render Kinahhu. In his pairing with the goddess Astart at Emar's western temples, the storm god is called Baal and reflects a Canaanite or western coastal association.

³⁸ This line is not clear.

³⁹ The Hiyaru is a Syrian and Hurrian rite of uncertain derivation. Durand (1988) suggests that the word is the same as the Mesopotamian month Ayaru, with both ultimately derived from the word for "donkey," as a sacrifice.

TWO MONTHS JOINED BY THE UNDERWORLD, WITH BARRING AND OPENING OF DOORS (1.125)¹

Emar's tablet of rites for the month of Abi focuses on observances at the middle and end of the moon's cycle, set in a frame of offerings through the remaining intervals. The largest section of the text addresses rites at various abû shrines, with a central event on the 26th day, when "they bar the doors." This act is carried out with the last visibility of the lunar crescent and has its complement in the first line of a second tablet, which begins on "the day of opening the doors." Although the second tablet does not name a month, comparison of these two tablets with the fifth and sixth of the diviner's six-month collection confirms the sequence. Rites following the opening of doors therefore belong to the New Moon celebration for Dagan which is identified in the six-month tablet during the month of Halma. Both tablets are presented together in order to display both parts of the event which links them, through the waning and then the new appearance of the moon.

First Tablet

Frame Part I (lines 1-8)

During the month of Abi on the day of declaration,² they distribute among the gods:

two gallons and two quarts of second quality flour, one store jug, ten doves, one juglet of oil, and one quart of raisins.

On the 3rd day, they offer to Astart of the Abi:
one quart of second quality flour, barley, ..., (one) flagon, and one jar from the House of the Gods;

one female kid from the fire-lighters;
... cedar oil, barley, ghee, one hundred (shekels) of aromatics, one standard vessel, one brick of figs, ten pomegranates, and raisins from the palace.³

On the same day, as the offering to Mount Šinapši:⁴

one quart of (barley-)mash, two quarts of second quality flour, (one) standard vessel, one dove, fruit, and oil.

On the 8th day, they distribute among the gods:
two gallons and two quarts of second quality flour, one store jug, ten [doves, one] juglet of oil, and one quart of raisins.

Also on the 8th day, as the offering for Mount Šinapši:

one quart of (barley-)mash, two quarts of second quality flour, a store jug, ... [one] standard vessel, fruit, oil, and one dove.⁵

Mid-Month Observance (lines 9-26)

On the 14th day, they offer to Astart of the Šubu:
two gallons and one quart of (barley-)mash, one flagon, one standard vessel, ... [one brick of figs,] and ten pomegranates.

With bread and beer, ...

On the same day, (as the offering to ...):

one gallon and one quart of (barley-)mash, one flagon, one standard vessel ... [from the House

¹ See Emar 452 and 463.

² The noun hussu was encountered as a name for feasting personnel in the installation, above ("heralds(?)"). Here, it should refer to identification and perhaps accompanying proclamation of the new lunar crescent, so the first of the month.

³ In the zukru festival text, the given source evidently refers to the entire list that precedes, but in the initial offering of the 25th day (lines 31-32), the single source is moved forward into the middle of the list, so that it must be considered possible that only the immediately prior item is thus defined. The translation offered here preserves this ambiguity.

⁴ This location is known from Hurrian texts found at Hattuša, the Hittite capital, and is not part of the local Emar terrain.

⁵ The word for "offering" is moved ahead of the last item, the dove, an apparent scribal slip.

of the Gods(?));
 one gallon and one quart of (barley-)mash, one
 ...-vessel from the king(?);
 one gallon and one quart of (barley-)mash, one
 ... [from ...].⁶

They offer to Aštar of the Šubu:

...

During the days of the sacrificial homages, they offer to Aštar of the Pools:

...

They give to them:

... one gallon of breads, barley flour, and one flagon.

They offer to Aštar of the Abi:

... from the House of the Gods;
 one sheep from the fire-lighters.⁷

[On the 16th day,] they offer (to ...):

... one flagon, and sweet cakes.⁸

They bring in with her with wailing cries ...

They bring in ...

The Hunt is on the same day.

They bring out from the storehouse, ... the crossroads ...

The Hunt of Aštar is on the 16th day.⁹

[On the 17th day, (they offer ...):

... a jar, and one standard vessel from the House of the Gods;

...

On the same day, (they offer ...):

... one standard vessel from the House of the Gods.

They bring out the divine weapon ...

They make offering behind the temple of NINURTA.

They perform ...

Frame Part 2 (lines 27-30)

[On the 19th] day, [... gallons and ... quarts] of (barley-)mash, three standard vessels, one brick of figs, ten pomegranates, and one hundred (shekels) of aromatics — on the 19th day these go out in procession.¹⁰

a 2 Chr 32:33

b Deut 26:14;
 Isa 38:10;
 65:4

c Mal 1:10;
 Neh 6:10;
 7:3; 13:19;
 2 Chr 28:24

On the 20th day they offer them.

... offering ...

They offer to Mount Šuparatu:¹¹

... sheep from the king;

two quarts of (barley-)mash, two quarts of second quality flour, one gallon of barley flour, and one store jug from the House of the Gods;
 one sheep from the fire-lighters;
 one [quart(?)] of ablušu-flour.¹²

On the 20th day, as the offering for Mount Šinapši:

one quart of (barley-)mash, one quart of second quality flour, one standard vessel, one dove, fruit, and oils.

Barring the Doors at the Last Lunar Crescent (lines 31-52)

On the 25th day, they offer to the abû of the House of Trust:

one half gallon of (barley-)mash, two gallons of barley flour, one store jug from the House
 of the Gods;
 one standard vessel, one brick of figs, ten pomegranates, one sheep from the fire-lighters, and one dove.

On the same day, they give to the abû of NINKUR's temple:

two grasping loaves,¹³ second quality flour, one dove, and fruit.

On the same day, they perform the Greater Sacrificial Homage ^a at the Cemetery Gate, ^b with:

one gallon of barley flour, two quarts of second quality flour, one flagon, two sheep from the king, one standard vessel, and twenty-five Hurrian(?) birds.¹⁴

On the 26th day, up to the time of barring the doors ^c of the Gate¹⁵ they offer to all the gods:

two gallons of barley flour, two store jugs, twelve sheep from the fire-lighters, five sheep from the shepherds,¹⁶ and one juglet of oil.

Then they bar the doors.^c

On the same day, they offer to the abû of the palace:

one gallon and one quart of (barley-)mash, one

⁶ The tablet preserves less and less at the left edge, until it breaks off after this last line. Based on the proportions of the tablet, however, there should be only one line missing at most.

⁷ It is not clear whether the above lines belong to the 14th day or move to the full moon (15th). Comparison with the text for six months suggests this may still belong to the 14th day, called there the Buqaratu. Full moon rites are only attested at Emar for the first month, SAG.MU ("The Head of the Year") or Zarati.

⁸ This line begins a new section separated by a horizontal line, and comparison with the text for six months indicates location on day 16.

⁹ See the month of Marzaḥāni in the text for six months for the same event, one indication that Abi and Marzaḥāni are equivalent months.

¹⁰ The repeated day references appear to be redundant.

¹¹ This location is not known, but like Mount Šinapši may be at some distance from Emar and the Euphrates River.

¹² This word is unique at Emar, as well as unknown elsewhere.

¹³ This attempts to derive the šabbutu bread from the verb šabātu, "to grasp, hold." This action describes manipulation of lots before the storm god in confirmation of the high priestess selection.

¹⁴ The MUŠEN ḥur-ri may be understood as Hurrian, in connection to Hurrian practice of offering birds for purification in contacts with death and the underworld; see Haas and Wilhelm 1974:50-54, 137-142.

¹⁵ The "Gate" may be the Cemetery Gate ("gate of the grave") mentioned at the end of day 25.

¹⁶ The "shepherds" appear only here at Emar, lit., "men of the sheep."

gallon of second quality flour, two gallons of barley flour, two store jugs, and one standard vessel of wine from the palace;
one ox, one sheep, one gazelle, one bird, honey, oil, ghee, and fruit.

On the same day,
for the abû of Dagan's temple: two grasping breads, second quality flour, one dove, and fruit;
for Alal's temple: two grasping breads, second quality flour, one dove, and fruit;
for (Dagan) Lord of Habitations: two grasping breads, one dove, and fruit; for Išhara's temple: two grasping breads, second quality flour, and one bird.

On the 27th day, they offer the Lesser Sacrificial Homage ^a before the abû of Dagan's temple, with:
one gallon and one quart of (barley-)mash, a jar, one presentation vessel of barley beer, one presentation vessel of wine, one sheep, one dove, honey, oil, ghee, beef, venison, fish, apricots, soured milk, figs, all kinds of fruits, and four Hurrian birds.

For the abû of the temple of ...:
one half gallon of (barley-)mash, one half gallon of second quality flour, ... gallon of barley flour, and two store jugs from the House of the Gods.

They perform the song of the gods.

On the same day,
for the abû of Alal's temple: one gallon and one quart of (barley-)mash, one [jar, one] presentation vessel of barley beer, one presentation vessel of wine, honey, oil, ghee, one dove, beef, venison, one lamb, and all kinds of fruits.

On the same day,
they give to the abû of the House of Trust, for the abû from ...: honey, oil, ghee, beef, venison, fish, and all kinds of fruits.

Frame Part 3 (lines 53-55)

At the head of the month, on the day of (the moon's) disappearance (until?) ... it shines (again), they purify the city.^d

They offer to the Lord of Akka:
one half quart of barley flour, one jar from the House of the Gods, and ... sheep from the fire-lighters.

They bring out Latarek for three days.¹⁷

d Neh 12:30

e 1 Sam 3:15;
2 Chr 29:3

Second Tablet

The New Moon of Dagan (lines 1-14)¹⁸

On the day of opening the doors,^e they distribute among the gods: one sheep, one gallon of ...
one quart of barley flour, one standard vessel of wine, one ...-vessel ... from the king are provided for Dagan.
One dove ...

On the next day, [they perform] the Greater Sacrificial Homage ^a for ...

They distribute among the gods:
one hundred thick breads, two store jugs, one ...-vessel, ..., and seventy doves.

In the evening, they sacrifice one dove to Dagan.
They fill chalices from the city.

At night, they burn one water-bird, honey, and ghee.

One gallon of (barley-)mash is for the chalices.
One <quart> of (barley-)mash is for the breads.

One quart of [(barley-)mash] is for the thick breads.

(Also,) one sheep and one standard vessel of wine.

On the same day, after the sun is lit,
One sheep is from the fire-lighters.
One gallon of (barley-)mash, one quart of (barley-)mash, three standard vessels for the chalices, ten [figs], pomegranates, and the breads and the beers are from the House of the Gods.

[break]

Celebration for Halma (lines 15-18)¹⁹

...
... they offer oil ... on the day of the Hiyaru,²⁰ to Halma.

The Hiyaru of the Storm God (lines 19-25)

On the 18th day,
for the Hiyaru of the storm god: two sheep from the king, one for(?) the ambašši,²¹ two birds, one calf from the town ... of ... of the ambašši, one ox and one sheep from the town ..., beer, one gallon and one quart of barley flour, one ...-vessel, one standard vessel of wine, one quart of (barley-)mash, and one jar from the House of the Gods.
The breads and the beers are from the ...-men.

¹⁷ Latarek is a Mesopotamian god associated with Ištar. The Lord of Akka is not otherwise known.

¹⁸ This title is taken from the rite for six months, where it covers the second and third days of the month of Halma. The procedure for the second day of this tablet corresponds to that for the six-month collection.

¹⁹ The divine name reads Hal-ba, but Emar displays frequent interchange of /b/ and /m/ in the place name Halab (Aleppo), from which the divine name may derive. Rites for Halma occur on the 8th day of the month named for him in the text for six months.

²⁰ See the note for the last two lines of the text for six months, p. 439, note 39 (above).

²¹ Hurrian ambašši refers to some kind of cult place or object; see Laroche 1976-77:46.

Celebration for the Storm God and Hebat (lines 26-30)

On the 20th day, (they offer):
to the Storm God: one (ox);
to Hebat: one ox and one sheep.
[They offer] to Hebat one gallon and three quarts of (barley-)mash and one quart of barley flour.

They distribute among the gods: ... from the king, one quart of barley flour, two flagons, a juglet, and ...

TWO KISSU FESTIVALS (1.126)¹

The most often copied ritual texts from the diviner's collection are also among the most mysterious. Emar's kissu festivals serve a cluster of deities at the nearby village of Šatappi, though the language and procedure share the common stock of the larger center, especially of the installations for the storm god's high priestess and for the maš²artu. The festivals are found in several combinations on individual tablets, gathered once as a full set for Dagan, EREŠKIGAL, Ea, Išhara and NINURTA, and a final rite for all kissu's. No further gods are addressed in the separate fragments.

In their simplest form (EREŠKIGAL, Ea, Išhara and NINURTA), the kissu festivals do no more than devote one day to offering and feasting for a single god (or pair). Association of a kissu rite with the maš²artu priestess installation shows that this act of devotion may even be piggy-backed onto another event. The word kissu itself represents some local form, most easily accounted for as "throne," elsewhere kussu and kissu at Emar. A kissu would perhaps then celebrate the dominion of each god over his or her proper sphere.

Two of the most interesting kissu festivals are presented here. The rite for Išhara and NINURTA includes a new attestation of personnel called nābū, evidently related to the Hebrew word for "prophet."

Dagan²

Heading for all Šatappi kissu rites (line 1)

Tablet of rites for the kissu festival of Šatappi.

The Consecration Day (lines 2-9)

When the sons of Šatappi^a perform the kissu^b festival for Dagan, on the consecration day of aromatics before the tables³ they consecrate the gods of the town with bread and beer.⁴

They lay NINKUR in (Dagan's) temple, (and) sacrifice one ox and one sheep to NINKUR.

The wailing woman gives forth her cry.^d

They set before NINKUR the ritual portion of the ox and of the sheep.

They set four tables.^e Among them,

they set one table for Dagan,

one table for Išhara and NINURTA,

(and) two tables on the ground for Alal and Amaza.⁵

The Festival Proper (lines 10-20)

On the next day, they offer meats and thick breads,

^a Ezek 23:15;
Joel 4:6

^b 1 Kgs 22:19;
Isa 6:1; Jer
3:17; 17:12;
Ezek 1:26;
10:1; 43:7;
Ps 11:4

^c Deut 32:51;
Isa 30:29

^d Judg 11:40;
Jer 9:16, 19;
Ezek 32:16

^e Exod 25:23, etc.; Isa
65:11

^f 1 Sam 20:5,
25, 29

^g Exod 12:6;
Lev 23:5

and distribute one standard loaf each to the (aforesaid) gods of Šatappi.

They sacrifice two sheep to ...⁶ and set before the gods their ritual portion.

The men of the consecration-gift(?) eat and drink for three days in his temple. Also, they sacrifice two sheep regularly for each of the aforesaid three days. The high priestess of the storm god,⁷ the high priestess of Šumi, (and) the high priestess of Šatappi ... their tables^f receive regularly one presentation vessel ...

Also, daily they set before the gods four standard loaves and four dried cakes with fruit.

They regularly set one standard loaf and one dried cake with fruit (for each god).⁸

Day 4: The Final Day (lines 21-24)

On the fourth day they raise up NINKUR. In the evening^g they send the two brides (who) gave gifts on the second day back to the temple of Udḥa along with bread and beer.⁹

The singers enter and chant for Šuwala and Ugur,

¹ See Emar 385 and 387.

² Dagan's kissu festival is found on six separate tablets, and possibly a seventh small fragment (tablets A - G). These attest the following combinations: A (Dagan and EREŠKIGAL), B (Dagan — a splinter), C (Dagan and EREŠKIGAL), D (Dagan), E (Dagan), F (Dagan, EREŠKIGAL, Ea, Išhara and NINURTA, all kissu's), G (Dagan, another rite). Lineation here follows text A, which is by far most complete.

³ This qualification for the consecration day is unique and awkward. The text may be corrupt.

⁴ The broken tablets D and E specify particular types of bread. Text E adds an obscure reference to the diviner and (chief) scribe.

⁵ Tablet E lists various breads for the tables, but the broken tablet prevents full reading.

⁶ The text of A is confused, while tablet E introduces the goddess Šašābētu, encountered in the zuku festival (above Text 1.123 and note 10).

⁷ This is the same figure known from the installation festival (above, Text 1.122).

⁸ These offerings appear to recall the four tables set for four gods on the consecration day.

⁹ Comparing the last day of the installation for the storm god's high priestess, this act should somehow relate to raising up the goddess NINKUR. Unlike that text, however, the objects of the return are not described earlier. It appears that either these two "brides" (not clear whose) or their gifts are intended. Since no gifts are specified, the girls seem the more likely, though both their role and their evident origin in the temple and perform their rites.¹⁰

The musicians of the gods enter to perform.¹¹

Administration (lines 25-27)

Also, the officials who give the consecration-gift(?) receive three standard loaves each.

The king of the land, the diviner, and the chief scribe consecrate them (the gods) with contract-bread and a pot of barley beer.¹²

They give thirty gurtu of silver to EREŠKIGAL.¹³

Išhara and NINURTA¹⁴

The Consecration Day (lines 1-8)

On the consecration day of the festival, they consecrate Išhara and NINURTA with contract-bread, a dried cake with fruit, and a pot of barley beer.¹⁵

They bathe them, and then they bake seventeen bushels of fine flour for the contract-bread, and bake fifteen bushels of bright(?) flour for the bread-rings.¹⁶

They beat with their hands all thirty-two bushels of flour together.

They give to Išhara and NINURTA a bucket of bitter flavor,^h a sweet bucket,ⁱ a bucket of barley-beer, an offering of two sheep, two ewes(?) — that is(?) two sirtu-sheep.¹⁷

h Exod 12:8;
Num 9:11

i Neh 8:10

j 1 Sam 10:5, 10; 19:20;
1 Kgs 20:35;
2 Kgs 2:3

The Festival Proper (lines 9-14)

[On the next] day, they sacrifice those two sheep to Išhara and NINURTA at the house of the Nābū.¹⁸

They set out for the gods the ritual portion of the sheep.

They set out one dried cake with fruit and one rack of bread for Išhara and one rack of bread for NINURTA.

[They set out] two standard loaves and one pot of barley beer for Išhara [and NINURTA].¹⁹

Administration (lines 15-21)

Also, each and every man and woman of the town receives a due portion²⁰ from the loaves (baked from) the above thirty bushels of flour and from the buckets.

Also, they confine²¹ a slave-woman so as to have her bake with the sweet (bucket).²²

She receives the contract-bread and the pots of barley beer.

Also, the officials who give the consecration-gift(?) eat and drink [in the temple of Dagan/Išhara(?)].²³

They take away the pure bread from the tables. [They ...] Išhara and NINURTA in Dagan's temple.²⁴ of a local god Udḫa are obscure.

¹⁰ See Emar 369:73, on the last day of the high priestess installation (above, p. 430).

¹¹ It is not clear what difference in performance distinguishes the zammārū (verb zamāru) from the (collective) ḫarrūta (verb ḫarāru), here translated "singers" and "musicians" respectively.

¹² This administrative description evidently displays who provides the consecration offerings which begin the festival; see Fleming 1992:158-160, and above.

¹³ The term gur-tu, represents an alternative to the expected shekel measure.

¹⁴ This festival is attested in only two copies: the full kissu set of tablet F, and a second tablet J. Lineation follows F, which offers a longer text.

¹⁵ Text J does not mention the deities, but only "the consecration."

¹⁶ Emar zarḫu is uncertain, and this translation compares Hebrew zrḥ, "to be bright." The kakkaru is a round loaf. Consider also ṣarḫu, "roasted flour" (Akk. ṣarāḫū).

¹⁷ Text J mentions only Išhara.

¹⁸ A second new attestation of this plural noun at Mari indicates that they are indeed identified with prophecy; see for complete discussion of the data, Fleming (1993a, 1993b). Text J sacrifices only to Išhara and locates the event at "the temple of Išhara." In text F, all the kissu festivals take place in Dagan's temple, and "the house of the nābū" seems to provide a comparable setting within this alternative temple site. The connection with Išhara's cult is nevertheless preserved.

¹⁹ Only text F contains this last offering.

²⁰ Lit., "before him."

²¹ Lit., "seize."

²² The verb appears to be epū, "to bake," but the form is not expected Akk. for an evident causative meaning.

²³ One expects the feast to take place in the same location as the main offering. Dagan's temple appears in Ea's kissu festival, however, and serves as a general center for the set. Perhaps this is the temple of Dagan in text F and of Išhara in J.

²⁴ This appears only in text F.

REFERENCES

Arnaud 1986; Dietrich 1989; Durand 1988; Fleming 1990; 1992; 1993a; 1993b; Haas and Wilhelm 1974; Laroche 1976-77; McLaughlin 1991.

A PSEPHOMANCY RITUAL FROM ASSUR (1.127)
(LKA 137)

Victor Hurowitz

This text was found by the German excavations at Assur.¹ It is an incantation recited while performing a ritual for divination by use of black (hematite) and white (alabaster) stones (psephomancy). The ritualist, while pronouncing the liturgy, tells which cultic manipulations he is performing, thus permitting the reader to follow his actions. The type of divination described has general similarities to other types of divination practiced in Mesopotamia. But it may provide a specific parallel to the enigmatic Urim and Thumim, the only type of mechanical divination legitimized by the Bible in general and by the Priestly source (P) in particular.^{2 a}

Invocation (lines 1-2)

- (1) Incantation: I have called upon you O Shamash³ [...]
- (2) In the midst of the [pure (?)] heavens [...]

Description of Ritual (lines 3-8)

- (3) I am carrying a star; [...] you (?) [...]
- (4) I am carrying a star; I am touching my head [...]
- (5) x [...] offering, mashatu-flour ... [...]
- (6) The pure grain, in its body, a stone [...]
- (7) I offer bread, pure water, fine oil.
- (8) There is a star. According to the written tablet I incant.

Performance of Psephomancy and Request for Oracle (lines 9-28)

- (9) Judgement is nigh, O pu[re] Shamash,
- (10) The word hastens, hear the ut[terance] of my mouth(?).
- (11) You will judge me, O Bel. Reveal to me secrets!
- (12) Day and night [show] me secret lore.
- (13) [broken]
- (14) In the hem of my garment [...],
- (15) In the pure hem of my garment [...],
- (16) "Draw on the ground (the names of) seven god[s] ...]
- (17) Sin, Shamash, Adad, Marduk, Urash-g[ub-ba],
- (18) Dagan and Nab[u]."
- (19) I have drawn them, and now I am lifting up a st[one(?)].
- (20) If (your) judgement is nigh, and my plea is accepted,
- (21) If, Bel, in your heart, there is judge[ment].
- (22) If, Shamash, in your heart, there is revela[tion],
- (23) May a stone of desire jump up and may the hands cat[ch (it)].

a Exod 28:30;
Lev 8:8;
Num 27:21;
Deut 33:8;
1 Sam 14:4
(LXX);
1 Sam 28:6;
Ezra 2:67;
Neh 7:65

- (24) If (your) judgement is not nigh, (and my) plea is not accepted,
- (25) (If) Bel, in your heart, there is no judg[ment],
- (26) (If) Shamash, in your heart, there is no revela[tion],
- (27) May a stone of no desire jump up and may the hands cat[ch it].
- (28) A second time for judgement, a third time for decis[ion].

Title (line 29)

- (29) Incantation for (achieving) oracular decisions with alabaster⁴ and hematite.⁵

Reverse

- (1) Its ritual: On an appropriate day, you draw these [seven] gods on the ground and you intone the incantation ["I have called upon you O Shamash ...] in the midst of the pure heaven" [three] times, over the white and black stones. Afterwards, you shall inquire of the gods and it (the answer) will be reliable.

Diagram [Here are the names of seven deities (ll. 17-18) written perpendicular to the direction of writing of the text.]

- (5) [t]his[xxx]

Colophon

- (1) According to the long tablet of Nabu- [...]
- (2) ... like the old one.
- (3) An excerpt tablet of Kisir-[Assur, the exorcist of the Assur temple,]
- (4) son of Nabu-bessunu, the exorcist [of the Assur temple,]
- (5) son of Baba-shuma-ibni, the *zabar[dabbu]*⁶ official of Esharra.]

¹ For an edition, commentary and discussion of this text see Horowitz and Hurowitz 1992; Finkel 1995.

² For the identification see Reiner 1960; Lipiński 1970; Horowitz and Hurowitz 1992. Reservations are expressed by Milgrom 1991 and Finkel 1995.

³ Shamash, the sun god, is the Mesopotamian deity responsible for divination and oracles. As purveyor of divine decisions he is also referred to as the judge of the gods.

⁴ The Akk. word for alabaster, gišnugallu, means "great lamp" and corresponds with a possible meaning of 'urim.

⁵ An Akk. nickname of hematite is "truth stone," corresponding with a possible meaning of thumim.

⁶ Lit., "bearer of the bronze implements." The function of this official is totally obscure.

REFERENCES

LKA 137; Finkel 1995; Horowitz and Hurowitz 1992; Lipiński 1970; Milgrom 1991:507-511; Reiner 1960b; Van Dam 1993.

6. LOVE POEMS

LOVE LYRICS OF NABU AND TASHMETU (1.128)

Alasdair Livingstone

- | | |
|--|---|
| (1) Let anyone trust in whom he trusts; as for us we trust in Nabu, are filled with awe by Tashmetu! (4) What belongs to us is ours; Nabu is our lord and Tashmetu the mountain of our trust! Ditto. (6) Say to the one of the wall, to the one of the wall, to Tashmetu: "Grant safety from disaster! Settle down in the cella!" (8) Let the pure scent of juniper incense circulate in the sanctuary! Ditto. (9) O the shade of the cedar, the shade of the cedar, the shelter of kings! O the cypress shade of the magnates! The shade of a sprig of juniper is shelter for my darling Nabu and for my fun and games! Ditto. (12) Tashmetu dangles a golden ... in the lap of Nabu. Ditto. (13) My lord, put an earring on me and I'll give you pleasure in the garden! (15) [Nabu], my lord, put an earring on me and I'll make you rejoice in the Edubba! (17) O my [Tashmetu], I will put bracelets of carnelian on you! (18) [...] your bracelets of carnelian! (19) I will open [...]. Ditto. (20) [...] out came the goddess. (21) [...] like a mural crown (22) [...] ... [...] them (23) [...] Ditto. (At this point there is a lacuna of several lines in the text, followed by three poorly preserved lines.) Reverse (4) Let me give you a new chariot [...]! (5) Ditto, [whose] thighs are a gazelle in the plain! [Refrain.]¹ Ditto, [whose] ankle bones are an apple of the month of Siman! [Refrain.] Ditto, whose heels are obsidian! [Refrain.] Ditto, any part of whom is as fine as a tablet of lapis lazuli. Refrain. | a Cant 6:11;
7:13 Looking blossoming, Tashmetu entered the nuptial chamber. (10) She shut the door, putting in place the lapis lazuli lock. She rinsed herself, climbed up, got onto the bed. Refrain. Into a bowl of lapis lazuli, into a bowl of lapis lazuli, her tears flow. Refrain. With a flock of scarlet wool he wipes away her tears. Refrain. Thither ask, ask, question, question! Refrain. (15) "Why, O why are you adorned, O my own Tashmetu?" "So that I may [go] to the garden with you, my Nabu! ^a Let me go the the garden and [to the lord! Refrain]. Let me go alone to the most exceedingly beautiful garden! Refrain. They did not place my throne among the counsellors. Refrain. (20) May my eyes see the plucking of your fruit! Refrain. May my ears hear the twittering of your birds! Refrain. Bind and harness thither! Refrain. Bind your days to the garden and to the lord! Refrain. Bind your nights to the beautiful garden! Refrain. (25) Let my own Tashmetu come with me to the garden! Refrain. Among the counsellors, her throne is foremost! Refrain.² (At this point there is a lacuna of three lines after which the text continues on the edge of the tablet.) (30) May her eyes behold the plucking of my fruit! [Refrain.] May her ears listen to the twittering of my birds! [Refrain]. May her eyes behold, her ears listen! [Refrain.] |
|--|---|

¹ The imagery here is of a type well known in both Sumerian and Babylonian poetry. The subject and what it is to be compared with are simply juxtaposed in a nominal sentence, rather than being construed in the manner of a simile.

² The point is that she is not accompanied by her ladies in waiting; cf. line 19, which draws attention to the fact that this is not a day for temple business.

(A colophon concludes the tablet, but does not give any information apart from the name of the scribe, Budilu, and his	title LÜ.A.BA.)
--	-----------------

REFERENCES

Matsushima 1987:143-149; Livingstone 1989:35-37; Foster BM 2:902-904.

B. ROYAL FOCUS

This page intentionally left blank

1. EPIC

THE ADAPA STORY (1.129)

Benjamin R. Foster

In Mesopotamian tradition, Adapa was the first of the semi-divine sages (apkallu) who served as counselors (ummānu) to the ante-diluvian kings, bringing the arts of civilization to humanity. In a late formulation of this tradition, each of these kings had his own counselor, and Adapa served Alulim, the first king. He was identified as Oannes in the Greek version of the tradition as preserved by Josephus in the name of Berossos. In addition, Adapa was the protagonist of a myth known from a tablet found at El Amarna in Egypt and dating to the 14th century BCE, as well as from first millennium exemplars found in the royal libraries of Nineveh. This myth provides an aetiology of death and thus a parallel to the story of Adam in the Bible. [WWH]

Anu's messenger reached him,
 "Adapa, who fractured the wing of the south
 wind,
 Send him to me!"
 (45) He brought him along the [ro]ad to heaven,
 He went up to heaven.
 When he went up to heaven,
 And drew near Anu's door,
 Tammuz and Gizzida were standing at Anu's door.¹
 (50) When they saw Adapa, they cried, "(Heaven) help (us)!
 "Fellow, for whom are you like this?
 Adapa, why are you dressed in mourning?"
 "Two gods have disappeared from the land,
 So I am dressed in mourning."
 (55) "Who are the two gods who have disappeared from the land?"
 "Tammuz and Gizzida."
 They looked at each other and laughed and laughed.
 When Adapa made his approach to Anu the king,
 Anu saw him and cried,
 (60) "Come now, Adapa, why did you fracture the wing of the south wind?"
 Adapa answered Anu,
 "My Lord, I was fishing in the depths of the sea,
 For my master's temple."²

a Gen 2:16

The sea was like a mirror,
 (65) Then the south wind blew upon me and capsized
 me.
 I spent the rest of the day in the home of the fish.
 In my fury, I cursed the [win]d."
 There spoke up for [him Tammuz] and Gizzida,
 Saying a favorable word about him to Anu.
 (70) His heart grew calm, he became quiet.
 "Why did Ea disclose what pertains to heaven and earth
 To an uncouth mortal,
 And give him a violent temper?
 Since he has so treated him,
 (75) What, for our part, shall we do for him?
 Bring him food of life, let him eat."³ a
 They brought him food of life, he did not eat.
 They brought him waters of life, he did not drink.
 They brought him a garment, he put it on.
 (80) They brought him oil, he anointed himself.
 Anu stared and burst out laughing at him,
 "Come now, Adapa, why did you not eat or drink?
 Won't you live? Are not people to be im[mor]tal?"
 Ea my lord told me,
 'You must not eat, you must not drink.'³
 (85) "Let them take him and [ret]urn him to his
 earth."

¹ Tammuz (Sum. Durnuzi) and (Nin-)gizzida (lit., "lord of the right-hand tree") here serve as doorkeepers of heaven. There are indications that deceased kings ascended to heaven to serve as stand-ins for these divine doorkeepers for seven days; see below, text 1.132 and n. 3.

² His master is Ea (Sum. Enki), on whose advice he refuses the proffered food and water, thus forfeiting once and for all the chance to make humanity immortal.

³ Like the divine command to Adam to eat from all the trees of the garden of Eden including, implicitly, the tree of (eternal) life (Gen 2:16), the offer of the food of life (and the waters of life) to Adapa implied an offer of eternal life. See Buccellati 1973; differently Michalowski 1980.

REFERENCES

Text: BRM 4:3 and duplicates. Translations and studies: Picchioni 1981; Dalley 1989:182-188; Foster BM 1:429-434; FDD 97-101.

ATRA-HASIS (1.130)

Benjamin R. Foster

The "primeval history" of humanity, which occupies the first eleven chapters of Genesis, also exercised the Mesopotamian imagination. In Akkadian, the Epic of Atra-hasis constitutes its earliest and most systematic formulation. This epic explains the creation of man as intended to relieve the (lesser) deities of their toil, and the attempted destruction of humanity as divine response to the noise of the expanding human population which threatened the very rest that their creation had sought to provide for the gods. This destruction, decreed by Enlil, took several successive forms, culminating in the Deluge but, as in other flood-stories, its purpose was frustrated by the survival of the flood-hero, here called Atra-hasis ("exceeding wise"), through the intervention of Ea, the divine friend of humanity. The problem of over-population is resolved by other means in a concluding aetiology. The composition is nearly complete in a Late Old Babylonian recension in three tablets (chapters), and is known as well in various fragmentary later recensions. [WWH]

(1) When gods were man,¹
They did forced labor, they bore drudgery.
Great indeed was the drudgery of the gods,
The forced labor was heavy, the misery too much:
(5) The seven(?) great Anunna-gods were burdening

The Igigi-gods with forced labor.

...

[The gods] were digging watercourses,
[Canals they opened, the] life of the land.
[The Igigi-gods] were digging watercourses,
[Canals they opened, the] life of the land.
(25) [The Igigi-gods dug the Ti]gris river,
[And the Euphrates there]after.
[Springs they opened up from] the depths,
[Wells ...] they established.²

...

[They heaped up] all the mountains.
[]

[] years] of drudgery,
(35) [] the vast marsh.

They [cou]nted years of drudgery,
[] and] forty years, too much!
[] forced labor they bore night and day.

[They were com]plaining, denouncing,
(40) [Mut]tering down in the ditch:

"Let us face up to our [foreman] the prefect,
He must take off (this) our [he]avy burden upon us!
[], counsellor of the gods, the warrior,
Come, let us remove (him) from his dwelling;
(45) Enlil, counsellor of the gods, the warrior,
Come, let us remove (him) from his dwelling!"

...

"Now then, call for battle!
Battle let us join, warfare!"

The gods heard his words:

They set fire to their tools,

(65) They put fire to their spaces,
And flame to their workbaskets.²

Off they went, one and all,

^a Gen 4:5f.

To the gate of the warrior Enlil's abode.

[]

(70) It was night, half-way through the watch,
The house was surrounded, but the god did not know.

It was night, half-way through the watch,
Ekur³ was surrounded, but Enlil did not know!

(The gods awake, convene and send a messenger to the rebels.)

[Nusku opened] his gate,
[Took his weapons] and w[ent] ... Enlil.

[In the assembly of a]ll the gods,
(135) [He knelt, s]tood up, expounded the c[om-
m]and,

"Anu, your father,
[Your counsellor, the] warrior Enlil,
[Your prefect], Ninurta,
And [your bailiff] Ennugi [have sent me (to say)]:

(140) 'Who is [instigator of] battle?
Who is [instigator of] hostilities?

Who [declared] war,
[(That) battle has run up to the gate of Enlil]?
In []

(145) He trans[gressed the command of] Enlil.'
"Every [one of us gods has declared] war;

...

We have set [] in the e[xcavation].
[Excessive] drudgery [has killed us],

(150) [Our] forced labor was heavy, [the misery too much]!

Now, every [one of us gods]
Has resolved on [a reckoning(?)] with Enlil."

...

(When the gods learn the reason, they decide to create man to relieve them from labor.)

(a) Ea made ready to speak,
And said to the gods [his brothers]:
"What calumny do we lay to their charge?
Their forced labor was heavy, [their misery too

¹ The opening line of the epic has sparked a lengthy debate as to its each meaning; see Lambert 1969a.

² In effect, the first work stoppage in world history, or at least in world literature; see Komoróczy 1976.

³ Enlil's temple in Nippur; later, any temple.

much]!

(e) Every day []
The outcry [was loud, we could hear the clamor].
There is []
[Belet-ili, the midwife], is present.
Let her create, then, a hum[an, a man],
(j) Let him bear the yoke [],
Let him bear the yoke []!
[Let man assume the drudgery of god ..."
"[Belet-ili, the midwife], is present,
(190) Let the midwife create a human being,
Let man assume the drudgery of god."
They summoned and asked the goddess,
The midwife of the gods, wise Mami:
"Will you be the birth goddess, creatress of man-kind?
(195) Create a human being that he bear the yoke,
Let him bear the yoke, the task of Enlil,
Let man assume the drudgery of god."
Nintu⁴ made ready to speak,
And said to the great gods:
(200) "It is not for me to do it,
The task is Enki's.
He it is that cleanses all,
Let him provide me the clay so I can do the making."
Enki made ready to speak,
(205) And said to the great gods:
"On the first, seventh, and fifteenth days of the month,⁵ b
Let me establish a purification, a bath.
Let one god be slaughtered,
Then let the gods be cleansed by immersion.
(210) Let Nintu mix clay with his flesh and blood.
Let that same god and man be thoroughly mixed in the clay.
Let us hear the drum for the rest of time,
(215) From the flesh of the god let a spirit remain,
Let it make the living know its sign,
Lest he be allowed to be forgotten, let the spirit remain."
The great Anunna-gods, who administer destinies, (220) Answered "yes!" in the assembly.
On the first, seventh, and fifteenth days of the month,
He established a purification, a bath.
They slaughtered Aw-ilu, who had the inspiration,
in their assembly.
(225) Nintu mixed clay with his flesh and blood.
<That same god and man were thoroughly mixed in the clay.>

b 2 Kgs 4:23;
Isa 1:13;
66:23

For the rest [of time they would hear the drum],
From the flesh of the god [the] apt[rit remained].
It would make the living know its sign,
(230) Lest he be allowed to be forgotten, [the] spirit remained.
After she had mixed that clay,
She summoned the Anunna, the great gods.
The Igigi, the great gods, spat upon the clay.
(235) Mami made ready to speak,
And said to the great gods:
"You ordered me the task and I have completed (it)!"
You have slaughtered the god, along with his inspiration.
(240) I have done away with your heavy forced labor,
I have imposed your drudgery on man.
You have bestowed(?) clamor upon mankind.
I have released the yoke, I have [made] restoration."
They heard this speech of hers,
(245) They ran, free of care, and kissed her feet, (saying):
"Formerly [we used to call] you Mami,
Now let your n[am]e be "Mistress-of-All-the Gods (Belet-kala-ili)"
[The population increases until their noise disturbs the gods. They try to reduce humanity with disease and starvation, but Enki saves the human race through advising a wise man, Atrahasis, what to do. The gods resolve on a flood to wipe out all humans. Enki warns Atrahasis in a dream.]
(35) E[nlil] committed an evil deed against the peoples.
Atrahasis made ready to speak,
And said to his lord:
"Make me know the meaning [of the dream],
[] let me know, that I may look out for its consequence."
(15) [Enki] made ready to speak,
And said to his servant:
"You might say, 'Am I to be looking out while in the bedroom?'
Do you pay attention to message that I speak for you:
(20) 'Wall, listen to me!
Reed wall, pay attention to all my words!
Flee the house, build a boat,
Forsake possessions, and save life.'⁶
(25) The boat which you build,
[] be equal []

⁴ Nin-tu, whose very name means "lady who gives birth," is the mother-goddess par excellence. Belit-ili, "the mistress of the gods," Mami, "the mother?" and Aruru are other manifestations of the same goddess.

⁵ I.e., the new moon, the first quarter, and the full moon, the principal lunar festivals of Old Babylonian times. The last was called šapattu in Akk., and it is possible that the original meaning of Heb. šabbat was the same; see Hallo 1977 and Epic of Creation (above, text 1.111) V 14-18 and n. 10.

⁶ For the play on words involved, see Gilgamesh Epic XI (below, text 1.132) 24-26 and n. 2.

[gap]

Roof her over like the depth,
 (30) So that the sun shall not see inside her,
 Let her be roofed over fore and aft.
 The gear should be very strong,
 The pitch should be firm, and so give (the boat) strength.

I will shower down upon you later
 (35) A windfall of birds, a spate(?) of fishes.⁷
 He opened the water clock⁷ and filled it,
 He told it of the coming of the seven-day deluge.⁸

Atrahasis received the command,
 He assembled the elders at his gate.

(40) Atrahasis made ready to speak,
 And said to the elders:

"My god [does not agree] with your god,
 Enki and [Enlil] are constantly angry with each other.

They have expelled me from [the land(?)].

(45) Since I have always revered [Enki],
 [He told me] this.

I can[not] live in []

Nor can I [set my feet on] the earth of Enlil.

[I will dwell(?)] with <my> god in(?) the depths."

(50) "[This] he told me [] ..."

[gap of four or five lines]

(ii)

[gap]

(ii 10) The elders []

The carpenter [carried his axe],

The reed-worker [carried his stone].

[The rich man? carried] the pitch,

The poor man [brought the materials needed].

[gap]

Atrahasis []

[gap]

Bringing []

(ii 30) Whatever he [had]

Whatever he had []

Pure (animals) he sl[ughtered, cattle] ...

Fat (animals) [he killed, sheep(?)] ...

He chose t[and brought on] board.

(ii 35) The [birds] flying in the heavens,

The cattle(?) [and of the cat]tle god,

The [creatures(?)] of the steppe,

[] he brought on board

[] ...

(ii 40) [] he invited his people

c Gen 7:4,
 10

[] to a feast.

[] his family he brought on board.

While one was eating and another was drinking, (ii 45) He went in and out; he could not sit, could not kneel,

For his heart was broken, he was retching gall.

The outlook of the weather changed,

Adad began to roar in the clouds.

(ii 50) The god they heard, his clamor.

He brought pitch to seal his door.

By the time he had bolted his door,

Adad was roaring in the clouds.

The winds were furious as he set forth,

(ii 55) He cut the mooring rope and released the boat.

[four lines lost]

(iii 5) [] the storm

[] were yoked

[Anzu rent] the sky with his talons,

[He] the land

(iii 10) And broke its clamor [like a pot].

[] the flood [came forth],

Its power came upon the peoples [like a battle].

One person did [not] see another,

They could [not] recognize each other in the catastrophe.

(iii 15) [The deluge] bellowed like a bull,

The wind [resound]ed like a screaming eagle.

The darkness [was dense], the sun was gone,

[] ... like flies⁸

(iii 20) [] the clamor(?) of the deluge

[The gods regret their hasty action when they find themselves hungry and thirsty. When they find that Atrahasis has survived, they agree to a proposal that certain classes of humanity not reproduce.]

(iii 45) [Enki] made ready to speak,

And [said to] Nintu the birth goddess:

"[You], birth goddess, creatress of destinies,

[Establish death] for all peoples!

...

(1) "Now then, let there be a third (woman) among the people,

Among the people are the woman who has borne and the woman who has not borne.

Let there be (also) among the people the (she) — demon,

(5) Let her snatch the baby from the lap of her who bore it,

Establish high priestesses and priestesses,⁹

Let them be taboo, and so cut down childbirth.

⁷ For the water clock in Mesopotamia, see Neugebauer 1947.

⁸ For the role of the flies in the aftermath of the Deluge, cf. Gilgamesh Epic XI (below, text 1.132) 161-163 and n. 6.

⁹ The high priestess and certain other classes of priestesses were forbidden to have children (except perhaps by the king). See below, 1.133 and note 2.

REFERENCES

Text: Lambert and Millard 1969. Translations and studies: Dalley 1989:1-38; Foster BM 1:160-185; FDD 52-77.

ETANA (1.131)

Stephanie Dalley

The story centers on a king of Kish who is attested in the Sumerian king list as a quasi-historical character. Presumably the legend had its origin in Kish, although the patron deities of Kish, Zababa and Ishtar, play no part, for the sun-god Shamash alone is involved. The length and ending of the story are still disputed; if it was a three-tablet composition in its "Standard" form, it should consist of about 450 lines in all.

Tablets of the Old Babylonian version come from Susa in Elam and from Tell Harmal; a Middle Assyrian version comes from Assur, and the "Standard" version from Nineveh, to which may be added unprovenanced tablets in museum collections. But the story is certainly much older, for Lu-Nanna, the demi-sage of Shulgi, king of Ur (21st century), is credited as the author, and the ascent of Etana on an eagle's back is shown on cylinder seals of the Akkadian period (ca. 23rd century). The late version omits some episodes which are quite crucial to the understanding of the story although in other ways the versions seem close, with mainly rephrasing of individual lines or passages.

The bare motif, of a man's ascent to heaven on an eagle's back, is also found in the Greek myth of Ganymede; it was incorporated into the Alexander Romance, and is also found in Iranian stories and Islamic legends. The motif of a tree inhabited by a snake and a bird also occurs in the Sumerian text Gilgamesh and the Halub Tree, (see Dalley 1989:134, n. 147).

Etana is the only Mesopotamian tale to have been identified unequivocally on ancient cylinder seals (see Baudot 1982).

The different versions were almost certainly divided into tablets at different points in the text. SBV is followed here.

(SBV) (Tablet I)

[The great gods, the Igigi] designed a city,
[The Igigi] laid its foundation.
[The Anunnaki] designed the city of Kish,
[The Anunnaki] laid its foundation,
The Igigi made its brickwork firm
[].

"Let [] be their shepherd []
Let Etana be their builder (?) [] the staff of
[]."

The great Anunnaki who decree destinies
Sat and conferred their counsel on the land.

(10) They were creating the four quarters (of the world) and establishing the form (of it).

The Igigi [] decreed names (?) for them all.¹

They had not established a king over all the teeming people.²

At that time the headband and crown had not been put together,³

And the lapis lazuli sceptre had not been brandished
(?),⁴

At the same time (?) the throne-dais had not been made.⁵

The Sebitti barred the gates against armies (?), [The] barred them against (other) settled peoples.

The Igigi would patrol the city [].⁶

(20) Ishtar [was looking for] a shepherd
And searching high and low for a king.

Inninna [was looking for] a shepherd
And searching high and low for a king.

Ellil was looking for a throne-dais for Etana.

"The young man for whom Ishtar [is looking so diligently]

And searches endlessly [].

A king is hereby affirmed for the land, and in Kish [it is established (?)]"

He brought kingship []

[]

The gods of the lands []⁷

(about 120 lines missing)

¹ OBV has "festival" for "names(?)."

² "Teeming," apātu, used to be translated "beclouded" owing to an incorrect etymology.

³ Early crowns consisted of two parts: a rigid conical or high oval cap, and a band encircling its edge.

⁴ Taking the verb as šabāru II, not šapāru. Alternatively, "The sceptre had not been inlaid with lapis lazuli."

⁵ This line is taken from OBV, since it connects with a subsequent line, eight lines later.

⁶ OBV adds: "Sceptre and crown, headband and staffs, Were set before Anum in heaven. There was no advice for its people, (Until) kingship came down from heaven."

(Tablet II)

He named him []-man []⁸
 He built a fort (?) []⁹
 In the shade of that throne-dais a poplar sprouted
 []

On its crown an eagle crouched, [and a serpent lay at its base].

Every day they would keep watch [for their prey (?)].

The eagle made its voice heard and said to the serpent,

"Come, let us be friends,

Let us be comrades, you and I."

(10) The serpent made its voice heard and spoke to the eagle,

"[You are not fit for] friendship [in the sight of Shamash!]

You are wicked and you have grieved his heart.

You have done unforgivable deeds, an abomination to the gods.¹⁰

(But) come, let us stand up and [make a pledge (?)]"¹¹

In the presence of Shamash the warrior they swore an oath,

"Whoever oversteps the limit set by Shamash,

Shamash shall deliver into the hands of the Smiter for harm.¹²

Whoever oversteps the limit set by Shamash,

(20) May the mountain keep its pass far away from him,

May the prowling weapon make straight for him,

May the snares (on which) the oath to Shamash (is sworn) overturn him and ensnare him!"¹³

When they had sworn the oath on [the net of Sha-mash (?)],

They stood up (?) and went up the mountain.¹⁴

Each day they kept watch [for their prey (?).]

The eagle would catch a wild bull or wild ass,

And the serpent would eat, (then) turn away so that its young could eat.

(30) The serpent would catch mountain goats or gazelles,¹⁵

And the eagle would eat, (then) turn away so that its young could eat.

The eagle would catch wild boar and wild sheep.

And the serpent would eat, (then) turn away so that

its young could eat.

The serpent would catch cattle from the plains and wild beasts from the countryside,

And the eagle would eat, (then) turn away so that its young could eat.

The young of the serpent [had an abundance] of food.

The eagle's young grew large and flourished.

When the eagle's young had grown large and flourished,

The eagle plotted evil in its heart,

And in its heart it plotted evil,

And made up its mind to eat its friend's young ones.

(40) The eagle made its voice heard and spoke to its young,

"I am going to eat the serpent's young ones,

The serpent [is sure to be an]gry

So I shall go up and abide in the sky.

I shall come down from the tree top only to eat the fruit!"

A small fledgling, especially wise, addressed its words to the eagle, its father,

"Father, don't eat! The net of Shamash will ensnare you.

The snares (on which) the oath of Shamash (is sworn) will overturn you and ensnare you.

(Remember:) Whoever oversteps the limit set by Shamash,

Shamash shall deliver into the hands of the Smiter for harm."

(50) It would not listen to them, and would not listen to the word of its sons.

It went down and ate the serpent's young.

In the evening at the close of day,

The serpent came and was carrying its load,

Laid the meat down at the entrance to its nest,

Stared, for its nest was not there.

Morning came (?), but [the eagle] did not [appear]

For with its talons it had [clawed at] the ground,

And its dust cloud [covered] the heavens on high.

The serpent lay down and wept,

(60) Its tears flowed before Shamash.

"I trusted in you, Shamash the warrior.

And I was helpful (?) to the eagle who lives on the branches.¹⁶

⁷ In the following gap, Kinnier Wilson inserted a fragment that may better be placed in Tablet III. It is too fragmentary for translation here.

⁸ Perhaps "They" instead of "He."

⁹ "Throne-dais" may be used here to mean a whole shrine.

¹⁰ "You have done ... an abomination": lit., "You ate asakku-food." When pacts were made, ritual food was eaten which would "turn against" the one who broke the pact.

¹¹ Oaths were sworn while touching an appurtenance or symbol of a deity, which then could act as a weapon enforcing retribution upon a perjurer. The net thus may be referred to as a "prowling weapon" six lines later.

¹² Or, "hunter" rather than "smiter."

¹³ MAV adds: "May Shamash lift his head for the slaughterer, May Shamash deliver the evil one into the hands of the smiter, May he station an evil gallu-demon over him."

¹⁴ OBV inserts a perfunctory line: "All conceived, all gave birth," which MAV elaborates to: "In the crown of the tree the Eagle gave birth, And at the base of the poplar the serpent gave birth. In the shade of that poplar The Eagle and the Serpent became friends, They swore an oath together, they were partners, They confided their worries to each other."

¹⁵ OBV has: "The serpent would catch a leopard (or) a tiger."

¹⁶ Reading: ana erī tumant anāku ašrum (SMD).

Now the serpent's nest [is grief-stricken].¹⁷
 My own nest is not there, while its nest is safe.
 My young ones are scattered and its young ones are safe.
 It came down and ate my young ones!
 You know the wrong which it has done me, Shamash!
 Truly, O Shamash, your net is as wide as earth,
 Your snare is as broad as the sky!
 (70) The eagle should not escape from your net,
 As criminal as Anzu, who wronged his comrade."¹⁸
 [When he heard] the serpent's plea,
 Shamash made his voice heard and spoke to the serpent,
 "Go along the path, cross the mountain
 Where a wild bull [] has been bound for you."¹⁹
 Open up its innards, slit open its stomach,
 Make a place to sit inside its stomach.
 All kinds of birds will come down from the sky and eat the flesh.
 The eagle too [will come down] with them.
 (80) [Since] it will not be aware of danger to itself,
 It will search out the tenderest morsels, will comb the area (?),
 Penetrate to the lining of the innards.
 When it enters the innards, you must seize it by the wing,
 Cut its wings, feather and pinion,
 Pluck it and throw it into a bottomless pit,
 Let it die there of hunger and thirst!"
 At the command of the warrior Shamash,
 The serpent went, it crossed the mountain.
 The serpent came upon the wild bull,
 (90) And opened up its innards and slit open its stomach,
 And made a place to sit inside its stomach.
 All kinds of birds came down from the sky and began to eat the flesh.
 But the eagle was aware of the danger to itself
 And would not eat the flesh with the other birds.
 The eagle made its voice heard and spoke to its son,
 "Come, let us go down and let us eat the flesh of this wild bull!"
 But the young fledgling was exceptionally wise, and said to the eagle its father,
 "Don't go down, father; perhaps the serpent is lying in wait inside this wild bull!"

The eagle reasoned thus to itself:
 (100) "If the birds felt any fear,
 How would they be eating the flesh so peacefully?"
 It did not pay heed to them, did not listen to the words of its sons,
 Came down and stood upon the wild bull.
 The eagle inspected the flesh,
 But kept scanning ahead of it and behind it.
 It inspected the flesh again,
 But kept scanning ahead of it and behind it.
 It kept going further in (?) until it penetrated to the lining of the innards.
 As it went right in, the serpent seized it by the wing.
 (110) "You robbed (?) my nest, you robbed my nest!"²⁰
 The eagle made its voice heard and began to speak to the serpent,
 "Spare me, and I shall give you, as one betrothed, a nudunnû-payment."²¹
 The serpent made its voice heard and spoke to the eagle,
 "If I were to free you, how would I answer Shamash the Most High?
 The punishment due to you would revert to me,
 The punishment that I now inflict on you!"
 It cut its wings, pinion and feather,
 Plucked it and threw it into a pit,
 To die of hunger and thirst.
 (120) [The eagle]
 Every day it prayed repeatedly to Shamash,
 "Am I to die in the pit?
 Who realizes that it is your punishment I bear?
 Save my life for me, the eagle,
 So that I may broadcast your fame for eternity!"
 Shamash made his voice heard and spoke to the eagle,
 "You are wicked, and you have grieved my heart.
 You did an unforgivable deed, an abomination to the gods.
 You were under oath, and I shall not go near you!
 (130) But a man, whom I am sending to you, is coming — let him help you."
 Every day, Etana prayed repeatedly to Shamash,
 "O Shamash, you have enjoyed the best cuts of my sheep,
 Earth has drunk the blood of my lambs,
 I have honored the gods and respected the spirits

¹⁷ Restored from OBV.

¹⁸ As it stands in SBV, this line alludes to Anzu's betrayal of Ellil while acting as his trusted doorkeeper. However, MAV has the similar-sounding word anzillu, "abomination," at the same point, so the allusion to Anzu may derive from a corrupt text. Cf. also Erra and Ishum, note 39 Text 1.113 above.

¹⁹ Or, "Where [Shakkan] has bound a wild bull for you" or: "Where [I, Shamash,] have bound a wild bull for you."

²⁰ Very uncertain; von Soden reads as: "you entered and changed my nest"; Kinnier Wilson "You entered upon my nestlings." Edzard 1986:137 suggests a serpentine tongue-twister.

²¹ The word implies payment to a bride before marriage which ensured her livelihood after her husband's death.

of the dead.

The dream-interpreters have made full use of my incense.

The gods have made full use of my lambs at the slaughter.

O Lord, let the word go forth from your mouth
And give me the plant of birth,

Show me the plant of birth,

(140) Remove my shame and provide me with a son!"²²

Shamash made his voice heard and spoke to Etana,

"Go along the road, cross the mountain,

Find a pit and look carefully at what is inside it.

An eagle is abandoned down there.

It will show you the plant of birth."

At the command of Shamash the warrior,

Etana went, crossed the mountain,

Found the pit and looked at what was inside it.

An eagle was abandoned down there.

(150) The eagle raised itself up at once.

(Tablet III)

(LV) The eagle made its voice heard and spoke to Shamash,²³

"O Lord, []

The offspring (?) of a bird []

I am []

Whatever he says []

Whatever I say, []."

At the command of Shamash, []

The offspring (?) of the bird [].

The eagle made its voice heard and spoke to Etana,

"Why have you come to me? Tell me!"

Etana made his voice heard and spoke to the eagle,

"O my friend, give me the plant of birth,

Show me the plant of birth!

Remove my shame and provide me with a son!

Leave [...]

When you get out (?) [...]

Then the eagle said [to Etana (?)],

"All alone I shall [search the mountains (?)]."²⁴

Let me bring [the plant of birth (?)] to you."

(MAV) When Etana heard this,²⁵

He covered the front of the pit with juniper,

Made for it and threw down [...]

And kept [...]

Thus he kept (?) the eagle alive in the pit.

He began to teach it to fly again.

For one [month], then a second [month]

He kept (?) the eagle alive in the pit

And began to teach it to fly again.

For a third [month], then a fourth mo[nth]

He kept (?) the eagle alive in the pit

And began to teach it to fly again.

(OBV) [Etana] helped it for seven months.

In the eighth month he helped it out of its pit.²⁶

The eagle, now well fed, was as strong as a fierce lion.

The eagle made its voice heard and spoke to Etana,

"My friend, we really are friends, you and I!

Tell me what you wish from me, that I may give it to you."

Etana made his voice heard and spoke to the eagle,

"Change my destiny (?) and disclose what is concealed!"

(Gap of about 6 lines?)

(SBV) Etana (?) went and [helped the eagle out (?)].²⁷

The eagle hunted around [in the mountains (?)]

But [the plant of birth] was not [to be found there].

"Come, my friend, let me carry you up [to the sky],

[Let us meet] with Ishtar, the mistress [of birth].

Beside Ishtar the mistress [of birth let us].

Put your arms over my sides,

Put your hands over the quills of my wings."

He put his arms over its sides,

Put his hands over the quills of its wings.

[The eagle] took him upwards for a mile.

"My friend, look at the country! How does it seem ?"

"The affairs of the country buzz (?) [like flies (?)]"²⁸

And the wide sea is no bigger than a sheepfold!"

[The eagle took him] up a second mile,

"My friend, look at the country! How does it seem ?"

"The country has turned into a garden [...],

And the wide sea is no bigger than a bucket!"

It took him up a third mile.

"My friend, look at the country! How does it seem ?"

"I am looking for the country, but I can't see it! And my eyes cannot even pick out the wide sea!

My friend, I cannot go any further towards heaven.

²² Reading piltu (from pištu) rather than biltu, "load, burden," which is the traditional translation, but inappropriate (SMD).

²³ Kinnier Wilson's IV c (p. 112) is taken here as a better-preserved variant of III A (p. 104) in his edition. His fragment III/B on p. 106 may not belong to this myth. I am indebted to Dr. Jeremy Hughes for the observation that Kinnier Wilson and others had assigned obverse and reverse to his Text M (plates 24-25) incorrectly (collated).

²⁴ Restorations are based on line endings preserved in III A, p. 104 of Kinnier Wilson's edition.

²⁵ The translation differs from that of Kinnier Wilson here, rejecting the restoration of a ladder with rungs, and taking the phrase šabābu + kappu in its attested sense of "to teach to fly."

²⁶ Taking the verb as šadu.

²⁷ Kinnier Wilson would place this episode in a hypothetical fourth table (see his IV/A on p. 108). The present reconstruction supposes that line 8 of OBV in Kinnier Wilson p. 40 is a version of line 13 of SBV on p. 114, but this is far from certain.

²⁸ Reading ihambuba instead of ihammuš.

Retrace the way, and let me go back to my city!"
 The eagle shrugged him off for one mile,
 Then dropped down and retrieved him on its wings.
 The eagle shrugged him off for a second mile,
 Then dropped down and retrieved him on its wings.
 The eagle shrugged him off for a third mile,
 Then dropped down and retrieved him on its wings.
 A metre from the ground, the eagle shrugged him off,
 Then dropped down and retrieved him on its wings.
 (Gap of uncertain length)

(They go back to Kish. Etana has a series of three (?) dreams which encourage him to make a second attempt to reach heaven.)

Etana said to the eagle,
 "[My friend, I saw a first (?) dream.]
 The city of Kish was sobbing [...]
 Within it [the people were in mourning (?)]
 I sang [a song of lamentation (?)].
 'O Kish, giver of life!
 Etana [cannot give you an heir (?)]
 O Kish, giver of life,
 [...]
 Etana [cannot give you an heir (?)] ..."
 (Gap of uncertain length)

His wife said to Etana,²⁹
 "[The god] showed me a dream.
 Like Etana my husband [I have had a dream (?)],
 Like you [the god has shown me a dream (?)].
 Etana was king [of Kish for x years (?)]
 And his ghost []
 (Gap of uncertain length)

(Tablet IV)

Etana opened his mouth and spoke to the eagle,
 "My friend, that god showed me [another dream (?)].³⁰
 We were going through the entrance of the gate of Anu, Ellil, and Ea.
 We bowed down together, you and I.
 We were going through the entrance of the gate of Sin, Shamash, Adad, and Ishtar,
 We bowed down together, you and I.

I saw a house with a window that was not sealed.
 I pushed it open and went inside.
 Sitting in there was a girl
 (10) Adorned with a crown, fair of face.
 A throne was set in place, and [...]
 Beneath the throne crouched snarling lions.
 I came up and the lions sprang at me.
 I woke up terrified."
 The eagle said to Etana,
 "My friend, [the significance of the dreams] is quite clear!
 Come, let me carry you up to the heaven of Anu.
 Put your chest over my breast,
 Put your hands over the quills of my wings.
 (20) Put your arms over my sides."
 He put his chest over its breast,
 Put his hands over its feathers,
 Put his arms over its sides.
 The eagle tied its load on securely,
 Took him up a mile
 And spoke to him, to Etana,
 "See, my friend, how the country seems!
 Inspect the sea, look carefully for its features!
 The country is only the edge (?) of (?) a mountain!
 (30) And whatever has become of the sea?"³¹
 The eagle took him up a second mile
 And spoke to Etana,
 "See, my friend, how the country seems!
 Whatever [has become of (?)] the country?"
 The eagle took him up a third mile
 And spoke to Etana,
 "See, my friend, how the country seems!
 The sea has turned into a gardener's ditch!"
 When they came up to the heaven of Anu,
 They went through the gate of Anu, Ellil, and Ea.
 (40) The eagle and Etana bowed down together.
 They went through the gate of Sin, Shamash, Adad, and Ishtar.³²
 The eagle and Etana bowed down together.
 [...]
 He pushed it open [and went inside].
 (The rest of the text is missing)
 (According to the Sumerian King List, Etana was succeeded by his son Balih.)

²⁹ This fragment, given by Kinnier Wilson, p. 125 as LV, V, may come as the second in the preceding sequence of three dreams. Both in Etana and in Gilgamesh the reconstructions given here allow for a sequence of threes for confirmation. The dream may have indicated that Etana would have a son to carry out his funerary rites.

³⁰ For the phrase ana mimme tudru see AHw, s.v. mimmu B₂ (SMD).

³¹ The text has "ditto" at the repetitions.

³² The text has "ditto" at the repetitions.

REFERENCES

GILGAMESH (1.132)

Benjamin R. Foster

The Gilgamesh Epic is deservedly the most famous literary relic of ancient Mesopotamia. Its evolution can be traced from episodic Sumerian beginnings ("The Tale of Ziusudra") through successive Akkadian translations and adaptations to a final canonical version in twelve tablets (chapters) (see Tigay 1982), and serves as an empirical model for testing hypotheses about the evolution of the Biblical canon (Tigay 1985). Its recovery began early and helped spark interest in the further exploration of Assyria and, later, of Babylonia; the recovery is still not complete, and new discoveries continue to complete our knowledge of the text in its successive recensions. The overall theme of the integrated epic is the (doomed) quest for eternal life and the "consolation-prize" of enduring fame which, in the case of Gilgamesh, has actually been achieved. Of the many translations into English, those of Speiser in ANET (1956), Gallery Kovacs (1989) and Dalley (1989) can be singled out for accuracy, that of Gardner and Maier (1984) for its poetry. Note also two important new translations into French by Bottéro (1992) and Tournay and Shaffer (1994) respectively.

Of the many Biblical parallels featured in the Epic, none are more numerous or more familiar than those of Tablet XI with its version of the Mesopotamian story of the Deluge. It is the most elaborate version of a story that had been told in briefer compass already in other contexts, both Sumerian and Akkadian. Here it is put into the mouth of the Flood-hero himself, known in different versions by different names but here as Utnapishtim, (Uta-napishtam, "I have/he has found life"). At one stage of its evolution, Tablet XI was the last tablet of the epic, and concluded with the return of Gilgamesh to Uruk (omitted here). Subsequently a twelfth tablet was added by straight translation from a Sumerian prototype; it included a vision of the netherworld over which Gilgamesh presided as a deity. [WWH]

Gilgamesh said to him, to Utnapishtim the far-off,
 "As I look upon you, Utnapishtim,
 Your limbs are not strange, you are just as I am,
 You are not strange at all, you are just as I am!
 I imagined you ready for battle,
 Yet my arm [] and you lie on your back.
 [Tell me], how did you join the ranks of the gods when you sought life?"
 Utnapishtim said to him, to Gilgamesh,
 "Let me reveal to you, O Gilgamesh, a hidden matter,
 And a secret of the gods let me tell you.
 Shuruppak, a city you know of,
 [And which on] Euphrates [bank] is situate,
 That city was ancient and the gods were within it.
 The great gods resolved to send the deluge.¹
 They [sw]ore their father Anu,
 Their counsellor the warrior Enlil,
 Their throne-bearer Ninurta,
 Their canal-officer Ennugi,
 The leader Ea was under oath with them.
 He repeated their plans to the reed hut,
 'Reed hut, reed hut, wall, wall!
 Listen reed hut, be mindful, wall!
 Man of Shuruppak, son of Ubartutu,
 Destroy this house, build a ship,
 Forsake possessions, seek life,
 Build an ark and save life.²
 Take aboard ship seed of all living things.

The ship which you shall build,
 Let her dimensions be measured off.
 Let her width and length be equal,
 Roof her over like a hidden depth.
 I understood full well, I said to Ea my lord,
 '[Your command], my lord, which you spoke just so,
 I shall faithfully execute.
 What shall I answer to the city, the multitude, and the elders?'
 Ea made ready to speak,
 Saying to me, his servant,
 "Young man, do you speak to them thus,
 'It seems that Enlil dislikes me,
 I cannot dwell in your city,
 I may not set my foot on the dry land of Enlil,
 I shall go down to the depths and dwell with my lord Ea.
 [Upon] you shall he shower down in abundance,
 [] of birds, a surprise of fishes,
 [], harvest riches,
 [In the morning] spate of cakes,
 [In the evening] rain of grain.
 [With the fir]st glimmer of dawn in the land,
 The land was assembling [around me].
 The carpenter carried his ax[e],
 The [reedcutter] carried his kn[ife],
 [] the workmen [],
 The houses [made rope],

¹ Akk. abūbu. But in Sum., the word for flood is amaru (amatu, marru) and a near homonym with the native name for the Amorites who overran the lower valley of Tigris and Euphrates early in the third millennium, probably by descending the river courses "like a flood." It can therefore be suggested that, for the Sumerians, the "flood" was a metaphor for the Amorite incursions while the Akkadians and Akkadian-speaking Amorites who succeeded them in the rule of Mesopotamia "resolved" the metaphor by treating it literally; see Hallo 1990:194-197.

² There is a double-entendre in the original, for the words for "ship" and "possessions" are virtual homonyms in Akk.; for the corresponding passage in Atra-hasis, see above, Text 1.130 I 23-25 and note 6; for both see Hoffner 1976. For the alleged Janus parallelism of the passage (i.e. looking both forwards and backwards) see Noegel 1991.

The wealthy carried the pitch,
 The poor brought ... what was needful.
 On the fifth day I laid her framework,
 One full acre was her floorspace,
 Ten dozen cubits each was the height of her walls,
 Ten dozen cubits each were the edges around her.
 I laid out her contours, I sketched out her lines,
 I decked her in six,
 I divided her in seven,
 Her interior I divided nine ways.
 I drove the waterplugs into her,
 I saw to the spars and laid in what was needful.
 Thrice 3600 measures of pitch I poured in the oven,
 Thrice 3600 measures of tar did [I pour out] inside her.
 Thrice 3600 measures of oil for the workers who carried the baskets,
 Aside from the 300 measures of oil that the caulking consumed,
 And twice 3600 measures of oil that the boatmen stored away.
 For the [builders] bullocks were slaughtered,
 And I killed sheep every day,
 Fine beer, [grape] wine, oil and date wine,
 [Did I give] the workers [to drink] like drinking water,
 They made a feast as on New Year's Day.
 [I opened(?) ointment, dispensed (it) with my own hand.
 On the seventh day(?) the ship was completed,^{3 a}
 [] were very difficult.
 They brought on gang planks(?), fore and aft,
 [They ca]me [up] her (side?) two thirds (of her height?).
 [Whatever I had] I loaded upon her:
 What silver I had I loaded upon her,
 What gold I had I loaded upon her,
 What living creatures I had I loaded upon her.
 I made go aboard all my family and kin,
 Beasts of the steppe, wild animals of the steppe,
 all skilled craftsmen I made go on board.
 Shamash set for me an appointed time:
 'In the morning when it spates in cakes,
 In the evening when it rains in grain,
 Go into your ship, batten the door!'
 That appointed time arrived,
 In the morning spates in cakes,
 In the evening rain in grain,
 I gazed upon the appearance of the storm,
 The storm was frightful to behold!
 I went into the ship and battened my door,
 To the caulker of the ship, to Puzur-Amurri, the boatman,

a Gen 7:4, 10

b Gen 3:19

I gave (away my) palace, with all its possessions.
 At the first glimmer of dawn,
 A black cloud rose up from the horizon,
 Inside [the cloud] Adad was thundering.⁴
 While Shullat and Hanish went on before,
 Moving as a retinue over hill and plain,
 Erragal tore out the dike posts,
 Ninurta came and brought with him the dikes.
 The Anunna-gods held torches aloft,
 Setting the land ablaze with their glow.
 Adad's awesome power passed over the heavens,
 Whatever was light he turned into darkness.
 [He smote ...] the land, it shattered like a pot!
 For one day the storm wind [],
 Swiftly it blew, [the flood cam]e forth,
 It was passing over the people like a battle.
 No one could see his neighbor,
 Nor could the people see each other in the down-pour.
 The gods became frightened of the deluge,
 They shrank back and went up to Anu's highest heaven.
 The gods cowered like dogs, crouching outside,
 Ishtar screamed like a woman in childbirth,
 And sweet-voiced Belet-[ili] moaned aloud:
 'Would that day had turned to nought,
 When I spoke up for evil in the assembly of the gods!'
 'How could I have spoken up for evil in the assembly of the gods,
 'And spoken up for an assault to the death against my people?
 It was I myself who bore my people!
 (Now) like fish spawn they choke up the sea!'
 The Anunna-gods were weeping with her,
 The gods sat where they were(?), weeping.
 Their lips were parched(?), taking on a crust.
 Six days and [seven] nights
 The wind continued, the deluge and windstorm levelled the land.
 When the seventh day arrived, the windstorm and deluge left off their assault,
 Which they had launched, like a fight to the death.
 The sea grew calm, the tempest grew still, the deluge ceased.
 I looked at the weather, stillness reigned,
 And all of mankind had turned into clay.^b
 The landscape was flat as a terrace.
 I opened the hatch, daylight fell upon my face.
 Crumpling over, I sat down and wept,
 Tears running down my face.
 I beheld the edges of the world, bordering the sea,
 At twelve times sixty leagues a mountain rose up.
 The boat rested on Mount Nimush,

³ For the significance of the seven-day motif in the various versions of the Flood-story, see Hallo 1991a:178-181.

⁴ Adad represented the storm, while the other deities mentioned in the next five lines represented other natural phenomena.

Mount Nimush held the boat fast, not allowing it to move. ^{5 c}	c Gen 8:4	struction!'
One day, a second day Mount Nimush held the boat fast, not allowing it to move.	d Gen 8:6-12	Ninurta made ready to speak, and said to the warrior Enlil,
A third day, a fourth day Mount Nimush held the boat fast, not allowing it to move.	e Gen 8:21	'Who but Ea could devise such a thing?
A fifth day, a sixth day Mount Nimush held the boat fast, not allowing it to move.		For Ea alone knows every craft.'
When the seventh day arrived,		Ea made ready to speak, and said to the warrior Enlil,
I released a dove to go free,		'You, O warrior, are the sage of the gods,
The dove went and returned,		How could you, unreasoning, have brought on the deluge?
No landing place came to view, it turned back.		Impose punishment on the sinner for his sin,
I released a swallow to go free,		On the transgressor for his transgression,
The swallow went and returned,		(But) be lenient, lest he be cut off, bear with him,
No landing place came to view, it turned back.		lest he fall.
I sent a raven to go free,		Instead of your bringing on the flood, would a lion
The raven went forth, saw the ebbing of the waters,		had risen up to diminish mankind!
It ate, circled, left droppings, did not turn back. ^d		Instead of your bringing on the flood, would a wolf
I released (all) to the four cardinal points,		had risen up to diminish mankind!
I set up an offering stand on the top of the mountain.		Instead of your bringing on the flood, would a famine
Seven and seven cult vessels I set out,		had risen up for the land to undergo,
I heaped reeds, cedar, and myrtle in their bowls.		Instead of your bringing on the flood, would pestilence
The gods smelled the savor,		had risen up for mankind to undergo!
The gods smelled the sweet savor, ^e		I was not the one who disclosed the secret of the great gods,
The gods crowded around the sacrificer like flies.		I made Atra-hasis see a dream, he heard a secret of the gods. ^g
As soon as Belet-ili arrived,		Now then, make some plan for him.'
She held up the great fly-ornaments that Anu had made her in his infatuation, ^f		Then Enlil came up into the ship,
'O these gods here, as surely as I shall not forget this lapis on my neck, ⁷		Leading me by the hand, he brought me up too.
I shall be mindful of these days, and not forget, forever!		He took my wife up and made her kneel beside me,
Let the gods come to the offering,		He touched our brows, stood between us and blessed us,
But Enlil must not come to the offering,		"Hitherto Utnapishtim has been a human being,
For he, unreasoning, brought on the deluge,		Now Utnapishtim and his wife shall become like us gods,
And reckoned my people for destruction!'		Utnapishtim shall dwell afar-off at the source of the rivers."
Suddenly, as Enlil arrived,		Thus it was they took me afar-off and made me dwell at the source of the rivers.
He saw the boat, Enlil became angry,
He was filled with fury at the gods.
'Who came out alive? No man was to survive de-

⁵ Others read Nisir. The mountain is elsewhere located "in the land of Gutium," presumably somewhere in the Zagros highlands east of the Tigris not, as in the Bible, in Urartu (Ararat, i.e., eastern Turkey); see Hallo 1971b:718f.

⁶ The fly-ornaments may have been suggested by the simile of line 161 (or vice versa); for their significance see Kilmer 1987. For flies in the Atra-hasis version of the flood-story, see above, Text 1.130 III 19 and n. 9.

⁷ The reference may be to a cylinder-seal made of lapis and typically mounted on a pin attached to a necklace worn around the neck; see Hallo 1985.

⁸ Atra-hasis is the hero of an earlier version of the Flood-story in which famine and pestilence actually precede the Deluge as a means of stemming the growth of population; see above, Text 1.130.

REFERENCES

Text: Borger *BAL*² 1:105-111, 2:344-350. Translations and studies: see introductory note.

THE BIRTH LEGEND OF SARGON OF AKKAD (1.133)

Benjamin R. Foster

Sargon of Akkad erected the first world empire on Asiatic soil around 2300 BCE, and his exploits almost immediately became the stuff of legend. His (throne) name, in Akkadian šarru-ken(u), means "the king is legitimate," "the legitimate king," and served to make up for his usurpation of the claims of the ancient dynasty of Kish. The name was assumed again by an early king of Assyria (Sargon I, 20th century BCE) and by the more famous Sargon II (8th century BCE). "Sargon" is the biblical rendering of the last-named king (Isa 20:1). It was presumably also this king who commissioned a number of texts intended to glorify his old namesake, including the following legend of the latter's birth and rise to power, which shares features with the Moses narrative and with later treatments of the theme of the hero exposed at birth who nevertheless grows up to claim his birthright including, in this case, kingship. [WWH]

I am Sargon the great king, king of Agade.^{1 a}
 My mother was a high priestess, I did not know
 my father.
 My father's brothers dwell in the uplands.
 My city is Azupiranu, which lies on Euphrates bank.
 My mother, the high priestess, conceived me, she bore me in secret.²
 She placed me in a reed basket, she sealed my hatch with pitch.
 She left me to the river, whence I could not come up.^b
 The river carried me off, it brought me to Aqqi, drawer of water.
 Aqqi, drawer of water, brought me up as he dipped his bucket.
 Aqqi, drawer of water, raised me as his adopted son.
 Aqqi, drawer of water, set (me) to his orchard work.
 During my orchard work, Ishtar loved me,³ Fifty-five years I ruled as king.

a Gen 10:10

b Exod 2:2f.

I became lord over and ruled the black-headed folk,
 I ... [] hard mountains with picks of copper,
 I was wont to ascend high mountains,
 I was wont to cross over low mountains.
 The [la]nd of the sea I sieged three times,
 I conquered Dilmun.
 I went up to great Der, I [],
 I destroyed [Ka]zallu and [].
 Whatsoever king who shall arise after me,
 [Let him rule as king fifty-five years],
 Let him become lo[rd over and rule] the black-headed folk.
 Let him [] hard mountains with picks [of copper].
 Let him be wont to ascend high mountains,
 [Let him be wont to cross over low mountains].
 Let him siege the [la]nd of the sea three times, [Let him conquer Dilmun].
 Let him go up [to] great Der and [].
 ... from my city Agade
 [breaks off]

¹ Agade, the capital newly constructed by Sargon, also known as Akkad after its spelling in the Biblical "Table of Nations" (Gen 10), where it is associated with the semi-legendary Nimrod, perhaps a reflex of Naram-Sin, the grandson of Sargon; see Hallo 1971a.

² As explained at the end of the Atra-hasis Epic (above, Text 1.130 and n. 9), the high priestess (entu) was forbidden to bear children perhaps, on one theory, because her child-bearing capacities were reserved for the king.

³ The infatuation between Ishtar (or her Sum. equivalent Inanna) and a gardener, or vice versa, is the theme of several myths; see Hallo 1980a; Abusch 1985:161-173.

REFERENCES

Text: CT 13:42f. and duplicates. Translations and studies: ANET 119; Lewis 1980; Hallo 1991b:130f.; Foster BM 2:803-804; FDD 165-166.

2. HISTORIOGRAPHY

BABYLONIAN KING LISTS (1.134)

Alan Millard

Lists of rulers with lengths of reign were needed by scribes for calculating how long ago legal deeds had been concluded. They also enabled kings to learn when their predecessors had built temples or palaces which they were rebuilding. For a royal family they could supply a genealogy and justification for kingship although in Babylonia there were many changes of dynasty, in contrast to Assyria (compare the continuity of David's line contrasted with the changes in Israel). Lists of kings were read in religious ceremonies commemorating the dead. It is likely that they were also used in historical discussion; see the Weidner Chronicle (Text 1.138).

There are several lists of Babylonian kings. Two tablets give the lengths of reign and names of the kings of the Third Dynasty of Ur and the Dynasty of Isin, from ca. 2112 to about 1812 BCE, when they were written (Ur-Isin King List). Another tablet, clearly a practice or note tablet, lists kings of the Dynasty of Larsa, ca. 2025-1738 BCE twice (Larsa King List). A similar one gives the Second Dynasty of Isin, ca. 1157-1069 BCE (King List C). Kings of the First Dynasty of Babylon and the Dynasty of the Sea-Land, ca. 1894-1500 BCE, are listed on another of Neo-Babylonian date (King List B). The "Genealogy of the Hammurabi Dynasty" was created for a funerary cult at which the spirits of the dead were pacified with offerings and the recitation of their names in order to prevent them from harming the living. This tablet lists nineteen names, then the kings of the First Dynasty of Babylon (Hammurabi Dynasty, ca. 1894-1595 BCE), titled "Dynasty of the Amorites," followed by references to other ruling families and an attempt to ensure that all the dead were covered; see Finkelstein 1966, Lambert 1968. The principal Babylonian King List (A) gives all the rulers from the First Dynasty of Babylon until the end of Assyrian rule, with a note identifying each dynasty (palû), the number of its kings and its span. Regrettably, the tablet is damaged. Another composition, which is known in Akkadian and in bilingual Akkadian and Sumerian versions, begins in parallel with the Sumerian King List at the institution of monarchy and continues to the mid-eighth century BCE, with narrative passages that have led to its being called the "Dynastic Chronicle." Two texts, both incomplete, cover later periods, one commencing with Kandalanu and reaching to Seleucus II, ca. 647-226 BCE (Uruk King List), the other running from Alexander to Demetrius II, ca. 330-125 BCE, with each entry set beside the appropriate year of the Seleucid era (Seleucid King List). Each of these texts was drawn from more extensive sources. All the texts, except the Genealogy of the Hammurabi Dynasty, are set out by Grayson 1980.

Genealogy of the Hammurabi Dynasty

Arammadara, Tubtiyamuta, Yamquzuhalamma, Heana, Namzû, Ditana, Zummabu, Namhû,¹ Amnanu, Yahrurum, Iptiyamuta, Buzahum, Sumalika, Ashmadu, Abiyamuta, Abiditan, Mam[], Shu[], Dad[b]a[nâ], Sum[uabum],² Sumula[el], Zabium, Apil-Sin, Sin-muballit, Hammurabi, Samsuiluna, Abieshuh, Ammidita[na]; dynasty of Amorites, dynasty of Haneans, dynasty of Gutium; any dynasty which is not written on this tablet and any soldier who fell in his master's service;

royal sons, royal daughters, all mankind from sunrise to sunset, who have no one to care for them or celebrate
them,
come, eat this, drink this,
bless Ammisaduqa, king of Babylon!

King List A (col. iv)

[] Nabu-shum-ishkun, [his son]

[] Nabu-na[sir]³

2 years Nabu-nadin-zeri, his son

a2Kgs 15:19;
1 Chr 5:26

1 month, 13 days Nabu-shum-ishkun, his son

22⁷ dynasty of Babylon

b2Kgs 17:3;
18:9

3 years Ukin-zer, dynasty of Shapi⁴

2 Pulu⁵ ^a

5 Ululayu, ^b ⁶ dynasty of Ashur

12 Marduk-apla-iddin, ⁷ ^c dynasty of the Sea-Land

5 Sargon^d

2 Sennacherib, ^e dynasty of Habigal⁸

1 month Marduk-zakir-shumi, son of Ardu

9 months Marduk-apla-iddin, Habi soldier⁹

3 years Bel-ibni, dynasty of Babylon

6 Ashur-nadin-shumi, dynasty of Habigal

1 Nergal-ushezib

5 Mushezib-Marduk, dynasty of Babylon

8 Sennacherib¹⁰

[] Esarha¹¹ ^f

[] Shamash-shum¹²

[] Kandal¹³

f2Kgs 19:37;
Isa 37:38;
Ezra 4:2

5 Mushezib-Marduk, dynasty of Babylon

8 Sennacherib¹⁰

[] Esarha¹¹ ^f

[] Shamash-shum¹²

[] Kandal¹³

Seleucid King List

[] Alexander (III, the Great) [], Philip (III), brother of Alexander []. For [x]1 years there

¹ The names up to this one have some similarities with the first entries in the Assyrian King List (see below text 1.135) and may reflect a common tradition; see Finkelstein 1966; Malamat 1968; Hallo 1978; Glassner 1993:88-89; Chavalas 1994.

² Sumuabum was the first king of the First Dynasty of Babylon, ca. 1894-1881 BCE.

³ Nabu-nasir: known from Greek sources as Nabonassar.

⁴ Shapi is probably an abbreviation for Shapi-Bel, a stronghold in south-east Babylonia.

⁵ Pulu: apparently a short name for Tiglath-pileser III, not found in documents contemporary with him, but in this King List, in 2 Kgs 15:19; 1 Chr 5:26 (where it is equated with Tiglath-pileser) and in Hellenistic Greek sources; see Brinkman 1968:61-62, 240-241.

⁶ Ululaya: apparently the private name of Shalmaneser V (2 Kgs 17:3; 18:9), found also in the Assur Ostrakon of the mid-seventh century BCE and in the Ptolemaic Canon of Babylonian kings; see Brinkman 1968:62, 243.

⁷ Marduk-apla-iddin: biblical Merodach-baladan, see text 1.137, n. 4. He occurs twice because for a time he was chased from his throne by Sargon II.

⁸ Habigal: probably a form of Hanigalbat, a term for Upper Mesopotamia current from the mid-second millennium BCE.

⁹ Habi soldier: the meaning is unknown.

¹⁰ Sennacherib occurs twice because the upheavals in Babylonia brought a number of short-lived rulers to the throne, both local and Assyrian nominees, before he finally brought the city under his direct control.

¹¹ Esarha: an abbreviation for Esarhaddon.

¹² Shamash-shum: an abbreviation for Shamash-shum-ukin, 667-648 BCE.

¹³ Kandal: an abbreviation for Kandalanu, 647-627 BCE.

was no king in the land; Antigonus (the One-eyed), the general, was in control]. Alexander (IV) son of Alexander (III), [ruled until] year 6 (of the Seleucid Era). Year 7 is the year Seleucus became king; he ruled for 25 years. Year 31, month of Elul, king Seleucus was killed in the north-west. ...

[Year] 90, Antiochus (III, the Great) became king; he ruled for 35 [years. From year] 102 to year 119 Antiochus [] and Antiochus sons of the king. Year 125, month of Siwan, it was heard in Babylon that Antiochus (III) was killed on the 25th in Elam.

8 Dan 8:9-14; 11:21-45

The same year Seleucus (IV, Philipator), his son, became king; he ruled for 12 years. Year 137, month of Elul, 10th day, king Seleucus died x x. The same month Antiochus (IV),¹⁴ his son, became king; he ruled for 11 years. The sa[me year], in Arabsamna, Antiochus and Antiochus, his son, became kings. [Year 1]42, in Ab, king Antiochus, son of Antiochus, was executed at the command of king Antiochus (IV). [Year 14]3, Antiochus was king alone. [Year 148] in Kislev, it was reported that king Antiochus [had died]. ...

¹⁴ Antiochus IV, Epiphanes (175-164 BCE), the "little horn" of Daniel 8:9-14, the "despicable creature" of 11:21-45; cf. 1 Macc 1-6; 2 Macc 4-9.

REFERENCES

ANET 271 (King List B), 272 (King List A), 566-567 ("Seleucid" King List); Studies: Chavalas 1994; Finkelstein 1966; Glassner 1993:145-146; Grayson 1980; Hallo 1978; Lambert 1968; Malamat 1968.

ASSYRIAN KING LISTS (1.135)

Alan Millard

Lists of Assyrian kings have been found at Assur, Nineveh and Dur-Sharrukin (Khorsabad). The 'Assyrian King List' is known in five copies, none complete, two being only small fragments; there are slight variants between them. It begins with names of nomadic kings who lived about 2000 BCE, which some scholars think may be names of tribes rather than persons because there are similarities between them and names in the Genealogy of the Hammurabi Dynasty (see Babylonian King Lists, Text 1.134 above); however, tribes may also be named after their progenitors (cf. the tribes of Israel). The scheme of the List is simple: royal name, father's name, length of reign; each entry is separated from the next by a ruling. All copies share various short narrative passages and these are clearly part of the composition, not insertions by later hands, although it is clear that the opening sections were drawn from different sources. The purpose of the List was apparently to show continuity by collecting the names of all known rulers of Asshur considered to be "kings" (at least one is known today who is absent from the List; see Grayson ARI 1:29-30) and to supply relationships between them as far as possible. While there are evident links with the Eponym Canon (Text 1.136 below), the King List contains extra information, implying the existence of a more extensive record. Variant numbers of years and damage to the texts prevent construction of a complete chronology for Assyrian kings. There are small textual variations, given as alternatives in the translation, or mentioned in the footnotes. Two of the tablets, at least, had a tab at the top, pierced horizontally so that they could be fixed to a wall in such a way that someone could read the front, then lift up the tablet to read the back.

Fragments of two slightly different versions of the King List were found at Assur, and also five pieces of Synchronistic King Lists which set the names of the kings of Assyria in parallel with the kings of Babylon and vice-versa (cf. the synchronisms in Kings and Chronicles, e.g. 1 Kgs 15:1,9), one adding the names of the viziers (ummānu) who served many of the kings (ANET 272-274). All the Assyrian King Lists are set out by Grayson 1980.

Tudiya, Adamu, Yangi, Suhlamu, Harharu, Mandaru, Imsu, Harsu, Didanu, Hanu, Zuabu, Nuabu,¹ Abazu, Belu, Azarah, Ushpia, Apiashal.

Total: 17 kings who lived in tents.

Aminu was son of Ilu-kabkabu, Ilu-kabkabu of Yazkur-el, Yazkur-el of Yakmeni, Yakmeni of Yakmesi, Yakmesi of Ilu-Mer, Ilu-Mer of Hayani, Hayani of Samani, Samani of Hale, Hale of Apiashal, Apiashal of Ushpia.²

Total: 10 kings who are their ancestors³.

Sulili son of Aminu; Kikkiya; Akiya; Puzur-Ashur (I); Shalim-ahhe; Ilu-shuma.³

Total: 6 kings [named⁷ on] brick, whose [number⁷] of eponyms is [unknown⁷].

Erishu (I), son of Ilu-shuma, [whose x⁷], ruled for ¹ The occurrence of similar sounding names may be compared with examples in Gen 36: 21,35; 46:21; etc.

² The names in this section are in reverse order and may have been taken from a ritual text for commemorating dead ancestors, cf. the King List of Ugarit (Text 1.104).

30/40 years.

Ikunu, son of Erishu, ruled for [x years].

Sargon (I), son of Ikunu, ruled for [x years].

Puzur-Ashur (II), son of Sargon, ruled for [x years].

Naram-Sin, son of Puzur-Ashur, ruled for [x]4 years.

Erishu (II), son of Naram-Sin, ruled for [x] years.

Shamshi-Adad (I), son of Ilu-kabkabu,⁴ went to Karduniash⁵ [in the time of Naram-Sin. In the eponymate of Ibni-Adad, [Shamshi]-Adad [went up] from Karduniash. He took Ekallatum where he stayed three years. In the eponymate of Atamar-Ishtar, Shamshi-Adad went up from Ekallatum. He ousted Erishu (II), son of Naram-Sin, from the throne and took it. He ruled for 33 years.

Ishme-Dagan (I), son of Shamshi-Adad, ruled for 40 years.

Ashur-dugul, of no lineage, who had no title to the throne, ruled for 6 years.

In the time of Ashur-dugul, of no lineage, Ashur-apla-idi, Nasir-Sin, Sin-namir, Ipqi-Ishtar, Adad-salulu, Adasi, six kings of no lineage, ruled briefly.⁶

Bel-bani, son of Adasi,⁷ ruled for 10 years.

Libaya, son of Bel-bani, ruled for 17 years.

Sharma-Adad (I), son of Libaya, ruled for 12 years.

Iptar-Sin, son of Sharma-Adad, ruled for 12 years.

Bazaya, son of Iptar-Sin, ruled for 28 years.

Lullaya, of no lineage, ruled for 6 years.

Shu-Ninua, son of Bazaya, ruled for 14 years.

Sharma-Adad (II), son of Shu-Ninua, ruled for 3 years.

Erishu (III), son of Shu-Ninua, ruled for 13 years.

Shamshi-Adad (II), son of Erishu, ruled for 6 years.

Ishme-Dagan (II), son of Shamshi-Adad, ruled for 16 years.

a1 Kgs 15:11, etc.

Shamshi-Adad (III), son of Ishme-Dagan, brother of Sharma-Adad, son of Shu-Ninua, ruled for 16 years.

Ashur-nerari (I), son of Ishme-Dagan, ruled for 26 years.

Puzur-Ashur (III), son of Ashur-nerari, ruled for 24/14 years.

Enlil-nasir (I), son of Puzur-Ashur, ruled for 13 years.

Nur-ili, son of Enlil-nasir, ruled for 12 years.

Ashur-shaduni, son of Nur-ili, ruled for 1 month.

Ashur-rabi (I), son of Enlil-nasir, ousted [Ashur-shaduni], seized the throne; [he ruled for x years.]

Ashur-nadin-ahhe (I), son of Ashur-rabi, [ruled for x years.]

Enlil-nasir (II), his brother, [ousted] him; he ruled for 6 years.

Ashur-nerari (II), son of Enlil-nasir, ruled for 7 years.

Ashur-bel-nisheshu, son of Ashur-nerari, ruled for 9 years.

Ashur-rem-nisheshu, son of Ashur-bel-nisheshu, ruled for 8 years.

Ashur-nadin-ahhe (II), son of Ashur-rem-nisheshu, ruled for 10 years.

Eriba-Adad (I), son of Ashur-bel-nisheshu⁸, ruled for 27 years.

Ashur-uballit (I), son of Eriba-Adad, ruled for 36 years.

Enlil-nerari, son of Ashur-uballit, ruled for 10 years.

Arik-den-ili, son of Enlil-nerari, ruled for 12 years.

Adad-nerari (I), son⁹ of Arik-den-ili, ruled for 32 years.

Shalmaneser (I), son of Adad-nerari, ruled for 30 years.

Tukulti-Ninurta (I), son of Shalmaneser, ruled for 37 years.

Tukulti-Ninurta.... Ashur-nadin¹⁰-apli, his son, seized the throne and ruled for 3/4 years.

³ Contemporary inscriptions name Shalim-ahu son of Puzur-Ashur and Ilu-shumma son of Shalim-ahu (see Grayson ARI 1:6-8); assuming these are the rulers named here, each of the names in this section may be set in a father-son relationship.

⁴ If this is the Ilu-kabkabu listed earlier as father of Aminu, he was more likely the ancestor rather than father of Shamshi-Adad, given the number of generations and lengths of reign intervening, a recognised use of the word "father" (cf. 1 Kgs 15:11, etc.).

⁵ Karduniash is a name for Babylon current from the fifteenth century BCE onwards.

⁶ The meaning of the Akk. word translated "briefly," tuppišu, is uncertain; it seems to denote a very short period.

⁷ Esarhaddon (680-669 BCE) claimed descent from Bel-bani, evincing belief in the line of descent traced for over one thousand years (cf. the line of David); see Borger 1956:35, etc.

⁸ One copy has Ashur-rem-nisheshu, but Eriba-Adad's own inscriptions prove that to be an error; see Grayson ARI 1:41.

⁹ Two copies have "brother," again proved erroneous by Adad-nerari's own inscriptions; see Grayson ARI 1:78.

¹⁰ In both cases there are variant readings Ashur-nasir-apli, but contemporary texts show they are mistaken; see Grayson ARI 1:136, 138.

Ashur-nerari (III), son of Ashur-nadin¹⁰-apli, ruled for 6 years.

Enlil-kudurri-usur, son of Tukulti-Ninurta, ruled for 5 years.

Ninurta-apil-Ekur, son of Ili-hadda, a descendant of Eriba-Adad, went to Karduniash. He came up from Karduniash, seized the throne and ruled for 3/13 years.

Ashur-dan (I), son of Ninurta-apil-Ekur, ruled for 46 years.

Ninurta-tukulti-Ashur, son of Ashur-dan, ruled briefly.⁶

Mutakkil-Nusku, his brother, fought him and took him to Karduniash. Mutakkil-Nusku held the throne briefly,⁶ then died.

Ashur-resh-ishi (I), son of Mutakkil-Nusku, ruled for 18 years.

Tiglath-pileser (I), son of Ashur-resh-ishi, ruled for 39 years.

Ashared-apil-Ekur, son of Tiglath-pileser, ruled for 2 years.

Ashur-bel-kala, son of Tiglath-pileser, ruled for 18 years.

Eriba-Adad (II), son of Ashur-bel-kala, ruled for 2 years.

Shamshi-Adad (IV), son of Tiglath-pileser, came up from Karduniash. He ousted Eriba-Adad, son of Ashur-bel-kala, seized the throne and ruled for 4 years.

Ashur[nasirpal (I), son of] Shamshi-Adad, ruled for 19 years.

Shalmaneser (II), son of Ashurnasirpal, ruled for [x]2 years.¹¹

b Hos 10:14

c 2 Kgs 15:29
et passim

d 2 Kgs 17:3;
18:9

Ashur-nerari (IV), son of Shalmaneser, ruled for 6 years.

Ashur-rabi (II), son of Ashurnasirpal, ruled for 41 years.

Ashur-resh-ishi (II), son of Ashur-rabi, ruled for 5 years.

Tiglath-pileser (II), son of Ashur-resh-ishi, ruled for 32 years.

Ashur-dan (II), son of Tiglath-pileser, ruled for 23 years.

Adad-nerari (II), son of Ashur-dan, ruled for 21 years.

Tukulti-Ninurta (II), son of Adad-nerari, ruled for 7 years.

Ashurnasirpal (II), son of Tukulti-Ninurta, ruled for 25 years.

Shalmaneser (III), son of Ashurnasirpal, ruled for 35 years.⁶

Shamshi-Adad (V), son of Shalmaneser, ruled for 13 years.

Adad-nerari (III), son of Shamshi-Adad, ruled for 28 years.

Shalmaneser (IV), son of Adad-nerari, ruled for 10 years.

Ashur-dan (III), brother of Shalmaneser, ruled for 18 years.

Ashur-nerari (V), son of Adad-nerari, ruled for 10 years.

Tiglath-pileser (III), son of Ashur-nerari, ruled for 18 years.^c

Shalmaneser (V), son of Tiglath-pileser, ruled for 5 years.^d

¹¹ One of the two copies available at this point omits this entry.

REFERENCES

ANET 564-566; Borger, Asarh.; Glassner 1993:146-151; Grayson ARI 1:6-8; 1980:101-125.

ASSYRIAN EPONYM CANON (1.136)

Alan Millard

From the nineteenth century BCE onwards, Assyrian documents bear dates in the form "day X, month Y, limu Personal Name." The limu, "eponym," was an official who gave his name to the year. Little is known about the operation of the system before the first millennium BCE and nothing of its origin. (It may be compared with the systems of archons in Greece and consuls in Rome.) For the system to operate, scribes had to have lists of the officials in their sequence in order to be able to calculate how long ago a deed of loan, for example, had been written. No simple lists from the earliest period have been found, but from Mari has come an "Eponym Chronicle" in five fragmentary copies, listing over sixty names with a note of a significant event beside many of them, for the years about 1850-1775 BCE (for translation see Glassner 1993:157-160). This anticipates by a thousand years the Eponym Chronicle for the Neo-Assyrian period. Whatever the purpose of these chronicles was — and, as for the Babylonian Chronicles (text 1.137), it is unknown — they prove a concern for recording precisely the dates of important happenings and so give a basis for exploring the past. From Assur there is a damaged list of eponyms' names which began about 1200 BCE, but the sequence can only be restored completely from 910 down to 649, thanks to the Eponym Lists, simple lists of the names from Assur, Nineveh and Sultantepe, and the Eponym Chronicles from Nineveh and Sultantepe. The kings in the later period held the office in the second full year of their reigns, until Sennacherib broke the custom, their appearances in the sequence giving a helpful link with the King Lists (texts 1.134 and 1.135). The key date in the Eponym Chronicle is the entry for 763 BCE, reporting a solar eclipse. The eponym dates were used to pin-point when military campaigns were undertaken and royal monuments erected, and so provide invaluable aid in computing the chronologies of various surrounding states whose records are meagre or imprecise and, in particular, the chronology of the kingdoms of Israel and Judah. The texts covering 910-612 BCE are edited in Millard 1994. Extracts only are given here.

805 BCE	In the eponymate of Ashur-taklak, chamberlain, against Arpad. ^a	a2 Kgs 18:34, 19:13 (= Isa 36:19, 37:13); Isa 10:9; Jer 49:23	745 BCE	In the eponymate of Nabu-bel-usur, of Arrapha, in Ayar on the 13th day, Tiglath-pileser (III) sat himself on the throne ⁶ ; in Teshrit he went to the land at the river's bend. ⁷
804 BCE	In the eponymate of Ilu-issiya, governor of Assur, against Hazaz. ¹
803 BCE	In the eponymate of Nergal-eresh, governor of Rasappa, ^b against Ba'al. ²	b2 Kgs 19:12 (= Isa 37:12)	743 BCE	In the eponymate of Tiglath-pileser, king of Assyria, against Arpad, ⁸ defeat inflicted on Urartu.
773 BCE	In the eponymate of Mannu-ki-Adad, governor of Raqmat, against Damascus. ³	c Zech 9:1	742 BCE	In the eponymate of Nabu-da ²² inanni, commander in chief, ^{9 d} against Arpad.
765 BCE	In the eponymate of Ninurta-mukin-nishi, of Habruri, against Hatarikka ^c ; plague.	d2 Kgs 18:17; Isa 20:1	741 BCE	In the eponymate of Bel-Harran-bel-usur, palace herald, ^{10 e} against Arpad, conquered after 3 years.
763 BCE	In the eponymate of Bur-sagale, of Guzan, revolt in the citadel of Assur; in the month of Siwan there was an eclipse of the sun. ⁴	e 2 Sam 8:16; 20:24; 1 Kgs 4:3; 2 Kgs 18:18, 37 (= Isa 36:3, 22); 1 Chr 18:15; 2 Chr 34:8	738 BCE	In the eponymate of Adad-bel-ka ²² in, governor of Ashur, Kullani ^f conquered.
755 BCE	In the eponymate of Iqisu, of Shibhish, against Hatarikka.	f Isa 10:9; Amos 6:2	734 BCE	In the eponymate of Bel-dan, of Kalah, against Philistia. ¹¹
754 BCE	In the eponymate of Ninurta-shezibanni, of Talmush, against Arpad; ⁵ return from Assur.	g 2 Kgs 16:5-9; Isa 7:1-9	733 BCE	In the eponymate of Ashur-da ²² inanni, of Mazamua, against Damascus. ^{12 g}
			732 BCE	In the eponymate of Nabu-bel-usur, of Si ² mê, against Damascus.

¹ Hazaz, modern Azaz, lies north of Arpad.

² The place Ba'al has been identified with Ba'ali-rasi, the promontory south of Tyre, but is more likely to be Ba'al-saphon, Mount Casius, on the Syrian coast, north of Ugarit.

³ This campaign against Damascus, when its king Hadianu paid tribute to Assyria, may have led to the weakening of the kingdom which allowed Jeroboam II of Israel to extend his realm; see 2 Kgs 14:25-28.

⁴ The eclipse is dated astronomically 15th-16th June, 763 BCE. Setting out the names for each year before and after that date yields good equations with Babylonian and Greek records.

⁵ A fragmentary treaty, found at Nineveh, was imposed upon Mati'el, king of Arpad, by Ashur-nirari V (754-745 BCE) at this time (see COS volume 2).

⁶ Tiglath-pileser's accession was irregular in some way. His three predecessors were all sons of Adad-nirari III (810-783 BCE) and he may have been a member of the royal family who gained power in the revolt the Eponym Chronicle reports for the previous year. His name as written in Hebrew reflects accurately the Assyrian pronunciation of his day (Millard 1976).

⁷ The Akk. term bīrit nāri seems to mean "land at the bend of the river" and is comparable with Heb. Aram-naharaim and Greek Meso-potamia; see Finkelstein 1962.

⁸ The determined campaign against Arpad may have resulted from the local king, Mati'el, breaking the oath of loyalty he swore to the Assyrian Ashur-nirari V and making promises to a different overlord, recorded in the Aram. Sefire treaty texts (see COS volume 2).

⁹ The commander in chief (turtānu) usually held office as eponym immediately after the king, emphasizing his high position, corresponding to the position "over the army" in Israel (2 Sam 8:16; 17:25; 1 Kgs 4:4 etc.).

¹⁰ The palace herald was also one of the highest officials in the court and may be compared with the biblical mazkir; see Mettinger 1971:52-62.

¹¹ This Assyrian attack probably aimed to secure the route to Egypt's frontier, making the local kings vassals, an activity which had to be continued in following years.

¹² The major campaign against Damascus reduced it to a provincial capital. During the fighting, one of Tiglath-pileser's loyal vassals was killed, as the vassal's son recorded with pride (see the inscription of Bar-Rakib, COS volume 2). The assault on Damascus owed part of its impetus to Ahaz of Judah's plea to Tiglath-pileser for help against his enemies, Rezin of Damascus and Pekah of Samaria.

REFERENCES

THE BABYLONIAN CHRONICLE (1.137)

Alan Millard

The series of cuneiform tablets known as The Babylonian Chronicle covers the years from 745 BCE into the late Seleucid period (2nd century BCE). Entries follow a chronological order, introduced by the year of reign of the king of Babylon, although not every year is included. Warfare is the most common topic, within Babylonia and beyond, the accessions and deaths of kings are noted, the celebration or lapse of the New Year Festival in Babylon and a variety of other subjects. Some years have single, short entries, some longer, more detailed ones, or reports of several events. All the Babylonian Chronicle tablets appear to be excerpts from more extensive compositions, for where some overlap they do not give identical information. Perhaps a form of diary^a was kept on wax-covered wooden writing boards (Millard 1980). Although this type of chronicle is only known from the 6th century and later in Babylonia, some tablets report events from earlier centuries, indicating that older records remained available (cf. Assyrian Eponym Canon 1.136 above). One, commencing at the start of history, notes the burial places of various kings^b from about 1000 BCE, another lists market prices in various reigns. Most of the texts were re-edited by Grayson ABC, whose numbering is followed here. All known examples were translated by Glassner 1993. Extracts only are given here.

(Chronicle 1 i 27-32)

727 BCE On 27th Tebet Shalmaneser (V)¹ c ascended the throne in Assyria and Babylonia. He shattered Samaria (šá-ma-ra-in).² d 722 BCE Year 5: Shalmaneser died in Tebet. Five years Shalmaneser ruled Babylonia and Assyria. On 12th Tebet Sargon³ e ascended the throne in Assyria. In Nisan Merodach-baladan⁴ f ascended the throne in Babylon.

(Chronicle 1 iii 34-38)

681 BCE On 20th Tebet Sennacherib⁵ g king of Assyria - his son killed him in a revolt.⁶ h For [24] years Sennacherib ruled over Assyria. From 20th Tebet a Esth 2:21-

23; 6:1, 2

b 1 Kgs 2:10;

11:43; 14:20,

31, etc.

c 2 Kgs 17:3-

6; 18:9

d 2 Kgs 18:9-

12

e Isa 20:1

f 2 Kgs 20:12;

Isa 39:1

g 2 Kgs 18:13;

19:9, 16, 20,

36; 2 Chr

32:1, 2, 9,

10, 16, 22;

Isa 36:1;

37:9, 17, 21,

37

h 2 Kgs 19:37;

Isa 37:38

j 2 Kgs 19:37; Isa 37:38

k Jer 21:2 etc.; 2 Kgs 24:1 etc.

l 2 Chr 35:20; Jer 46:2

until 2nd Adar the revolt continued in Assyria. On [1/2]8th Adar Esarhaddon⁷ j, his son, ascended the throne of Assyria.

(Chronicle 5 1-11)

605 BCE [Year 21:] the king of Babylon⁸ was in his country. Nebuchadnezzar⁹ k, his eldest son, the crown prince, [called] out the [army of Babylon], took the van and went to Carchemish¹⁰ l on the bank of the Euphrates. He crossed the river [to face the army of Egypt] which was camped at Carchemish. [...] they fought together and the army of Egypt fled

¹ The reign of Shalmaneser V (727-722 BCE) is little known as no monuments of his survive. The Babylonian Chronicle, damaged entries in the Eponym Canon, a few references in other texts and the biblical verses are the only sources.

² The reading of the place name has been disputed because the signs for ba and ma are very similar in the cuneiform script; however, identification with Samaria is now accepted (Tadmor 1958:39).

³ Sargon, king of Assyria 721-705 BCE, was not in the direct line of succession, hence his throne name, meaning "legitimate king." (The Heb. form in Isa 20:1 reflects the name accurately as it appeared in the Assyrian dialect of his time, see Millard 1976:8.) The death of Shalmaneser was the signal for a general revolt by subject states, including recently conquered Samaria, but Sargon quickly re-asserted control in the west.

⁴ Merodach-baladan was a Chaldaean from Bit-Yakin in southern Babylonia whose family sought to control the country. He ruled from Babylon until Sargon took the city in 710 BCE, thereafter constantly fighting Assyria, regaining the throne in 703 but losing it after nine months and eventually being ousted from Babylonia to die in exile in Elam (Brinkman 1964; 1991). His embassy to Hezekiah of Judah is to be set in 703. The Heb. form of his name reflects well the Babylonian Marduk-apla-iddina (Millard 1976).

⁵ Sennacherib, 704-681 BCE, son of Sargon, acceded upon his father's death in battle in 705 and, like him, faced revolt around the edges of the empire, the most famous being Judah's, led by Hezekiah, but the Chronicle does not mention that. For the Heb. rendering of his name see Millard 1976:8, 13.

⁶ The Bible names two assassins, Adrammelech and Sharezer in 2 Kgs 19:37; Isa 37:38, and Esarhaddon reports that "his brothers went mad" (see ANET 289). Their identity is uncertain (Pappola, 1980). The dreadful deed was remembered in Assyria by Ashurbanipal, over a century later in Babylonia by Nabonidus, and echoed by Berossus and Josephus (Grayson 1991:120, n. 73).

⁷ Esarhaddon, 680-669 BCE, defeated his brothers to gain the throne his father had promised to him and strengthened Assyrian power, even penetrating Egypt. The Assyrian form of his name, "Ashur has given a brother," is well-rendered in Heb., Millard 1976.

⁸ The king is Nabopolassar, a Chaldaean, perhaps a descendant of Merodach-baladan, who wrested control of Babylon from the Assyrians in 626 BCE. At this time he was elderly or ill, hence the campaign was led by his son.

⁹ The famous Nebuchadnezzar ruled for forty-three years (605-562 BCE), but only the first eleven years are covered in surviving tablets of the Chronicle and there are few other Babylonian historical accounts from his reign to set beside the biblical and Greek sources.

¹⁰ The forces of Necho II of Egypt had made their way through Israel and Syria and camped at Carchemish, the major crossing of the Euphrates, in league with the last remnants of Assyrian power. Nabopolassar advanced into the area in 607, but retreated in 606, then in 605 Nebuchadnezzar routed the Egyptians as described here.

	before him. He defeated them utterly. The rest of the army of [Egypt, which] had escaped from the defeat and which the army of Babylon had not conquered, the army defeated in the district of Hamath so that [not] a single man [returned] to his country. At that time Nebuchadrezzar conquered the whole of Hamath. Nabopolassar ruled Babylon for 21 years. On 8th Ab he died. In Elul Nebuchadrezzar returned to Babylon and on 1st Elul he ascended the throne in Babylon.	m 2 Kgs 23:33; Jer 29:2 n 2 Kgs 24:17; 2 Chr 36:10 o 2 Kgs 24:13; 2 Chr 36:10 p Dan 5:30; 6:28	he took the city and captured the king.¹² ^m He appointed a king of his choosing there^a, took heavy tribute^o and returned to Babylon. (Chronicle 7 iii 12-16) 539 BCE In Tishri when Cyrus¹³ fought with the army of Babylon at Opis on the bank of the Tigris, the people of Babylon retreated. He took booty and killed people. On 14th Sippar was taken without battle. Nabonidus fled. On 16th Ugharu, governor of Gutium, and the army of Cyrus entered Babylon without battle. Afterwards, after Nabonidus had retreated, he was taken in Babylon. (Chronicle 7 iii 18) 539 BCE On 3rd Marcheswan Cyrus entered Babylon.¹⁴ ^p
(rev. 11-13) 598/597 BCE	Year 7: in Kislev the king of Babylonia called out his army and marched to Hattu.¹¹ He set his camp against the city of Judah [Ya-a-hu-du] and on 2nd Adar

¹¹ Hattu is a general term for the west in the Chronicle.

¹² Biblical sources make it clear the king captured was Jehoiachin, who ruled only three months in Jerusalem and spent most of his life in prison in Babylon.

¹³ After becoming king of Persia in 559 BCE, Cyrus gradually built up his power, conquering Media (550), Lydia (547) and finally Babylon. There he continued many of the old customs, restoring the traditional cults neglected by Nabonidus.

¹⁴ All the Babylonian sources make it clear that Cyrus was the conqueror of Babylon, so Darius the Mede of Dan 5:30; 6:28 is a mystery. Unless dismissed as an error or fiction, he may be identified with Ugharu, mentioned here, who became governor of Babylon, see Whitcomb 1959, or with Cyrus himself under a Median name as Wiseman proposed 1965.

REFERENCES

ANET 301-307; Brinkman 1964; 1991; Glassner 1993:179-204; Grayson ABC 8-126; 1991; Millard 1976; 1980; Parpola 1980; Tadmor 1958; Whitcomb 1959; Wiseman 1965:9-16.

THE WEIDNER CHRONICLE (1.138)

Alan Millard

Excavations at Ashur yielded a damaged tablet which was announced by E. F. Weidner in 1926 and so is called after him. Since then four smaller pieces of other copies have been identified and recently an almost complete tablet was recovered from Sippar, adding greatly to the interpretation of the text, although many uncertainties and gaps remain. The composition is set in the form of a letter from a king of Babylon to a king of Isin in the 19th century BCE, but probably composed centuries later. The propagandist aim is clear from the outset: the offerings for the god Marduk in his temple Esagila in Babylon were decreed by the gods, so the writer recounts the fate of various kings who brought, or failed to bring, offerings to Esagila or respect for it. Thus their attitudes to the god affected his treatment of the kings.

"Say to [Apil-S]in¹, ki[ng of Babyl]on², thus says Damiq-ilishu³, king of Isin:

'[] like [] his reign. I [mys]elf have written to you a matter to be pondered, a matter [], but you have not considered them. You have not listened or paid attention to the advice I gave you, nor heeded the special advice that [], you have been looking for something else. To do you a good turn [I have] you, but it is not in your mind. For your own good I have advised you to reinforce the training⁴ of your army, but you have not put your hand to it. His sh[rines] where I sought advice [] has ceased. Now I shall tell you my experience [] learn from it speedily!

I offered a sacrifice to my lady Ninkarrak,¹ mistress of Egalmah; I prayed and implored her, I told her the matter that I was constantly considering, and I spoke like this: "Entrust to me the people of Sumer and Akkad [] all the lands.

¹ Ninkarak was a title of Gula, goddess of healing, whose temple, Egalmah, stood in Isin.

Let the people of the Upper and the Lower lands bring their weighty tribute into Egalmah." In the night-time, holy Gula, the exalted lady, stood before me, she heard my speech, spoke to me clearly and blessed me. "You shall set a place in the underground water, in the ocean beneath the earth, [] you shall raise the top to the distant sky, in x [] above, a state of privilege. [Aft]erwards, Marduk, the king of the gods, who [] the whole of heaven and earth, [will the peop]le of Sumer and Akkad to his city Babylon x x x. He went quickly to his father, Ea, the craftsman, the counsellor of heaven and earth. "[May Bab]ylon, the city chosen in my heart, be exalted among all people! May Esagila, the majestic shrine, be [] to the limits of heaven and earth! May the lord of lords, who dwells in the shrine, from east to west, x x x x! May he shepherd human beings like sheep! May the city be famous x x x!" The lord Nudimud² [carried out] all he had said. Throughout heaven he honored him [].

Then Anu and Enlil, the great gods, favored him and [decreed?]. "May he be the leader of the Upper and the Lower lands. May the great gods of heaven and earth tremble before his shrine. Raise up to the sky the top of Esagila, of Ekua, the palace of heaven and earth []. May its foundation be fixed like sky and earth forever! By your sacrifice I understood what you said and [I have given to you?] long life []. Apart from the order announced in the dream, good advice for []. For the gods of that city, the great gods of heaven and earth, x x for daily, monthly and yearly purification/ renewal of life³ x x x no god shall oppose it x x whose mind x x x at his command they are bound, the hostile gods clad in dirty clothes x x x whoever sins against the gods of that city, his star shall not stand in the sky x x x his kingship will end, his scepter will be taken away, his treasury will become a heap of [ruins] x x x his x x and the king of the whole of heaven and earth (said) thus⁴, "The gods of heaven and earth x [] the behavior of each former king of which I hear to x x x [].

Akka, son of Enmebaragesi x x x x []. Enmekar, king of Uruk, destroyed the people x x x x. The sage Adapa, son of x x x heard in his holy sanctuary and cursed Enmekar. [] he/I gave to him rule over all lands and his rites [] he/I beautified like the heavenly writing (the constellations) and in

a2Kgs 15:3-6

b2Kgs 17:26

Esagila the king who controls the whole of heaven and earth for his 3,020 years x x x. In the reign of Puzur-Nirah, king of Akshak, the freshwater fishermen of Esagila [] were catching fish for the meal of the great lord Marduk; the officers of the king took away the fish. The fisherman was fishing when 7/8 days had passed [] in the house of Kubaba, the tavern-keeper, x x x they brought to [Esag]ila. (At that time BROKEN⁵ anew for Esagila x x x) Kubaba gave bread to the fisherman and gave water, she [made him offer?] the fish to Esagila. Marduk, the king, prince of the Apsû,⁶ favored her and said, "Let it be so!" He entrusted to Kubaba, the tavern-keeper, sovereignty over the whole world. Ur-Zababa [ordered] Sargon, his cup-bearer, to change the wine libations of Esagila. Sargon did not change but was careful to offer [] quickly to Esagila. Marduk, king of the world/ son of the prince of the Apsu, favored him and gave him rule of the four corners of the world. He took care of Esagila. Everyone who sat on a throne [brought] his tribute to Babylon. Yet he [ignored] the command Bel had given him.⁷ He dug soil from its pit and in front of Akkad he built a city which he named Babylon.⁸ Enlil changed the order he had given and from east to west (people) opposed him. He could not sleep. Naram-Sin destroyed the people of Babylon, so twice (Marduk) summoned the forces of Gutium⁶ against him. They [mal-treated?] his people with a goad. He (Marduk) gave his kingship to the Gutian force. The Gutians were unhappy people unaware how to revere the gods, ignorant of the right cultic practices.⁶ Utu-hegal, the fisherman, caught a fish at the edge of the sea for an offering. That fish should not be offered to another god until it had been offered to Marduk, but the Gutu took the boiled fish from his hand before it was offered, so by his august command, he (Marduk) removed the Gutu force from the rule of his land and gave (it) to Utu-hegal. Utu-hegal, the fisherman, carried out criminal acts against his (Marduk's) city, so the river carried off his corpse.⁷ Then he (Marduk) gave sovereignty over the whole world to Shulgi, son of Ur-Nammu, but he did not perform his rites to the letter, he defiled his purification rituals and his sin x x body² x [was s]et⁷. Amar-Sin, his son, changed the offerings of large ox[en] and sheep of the New Year festival in Esagila. It was foretold (he would die) from goring by an ox, but he died from the "bite" of his shoe.⁸ Shu-Sin made Esagila like the constellations for his ² Nudimud was a name or title of Ea.

³ This translates an ancient copyist's note indicating that his exemplar was damaged.

⁴ Apsu was the freshwater ocean beneath the earth, source of rivers and wells, ruled by Ea and so home to his son Marduk.

⁵ Sargon's sin was, apparently, to treat Babylon as a conquered city, taking soil to symbolize his rule over it in his new capital, Akkad. His action is reported in other Babylonian traditions. One copy reverses the names.

⁶ The Gutu were mountain people from the east, a long-term threat to the urban settlements of lower Mesopotamia.

⁷ Another tradition reports that Utu-hegal, king of Uruk about 2100 BCE, who re-established Babylonian rule after the Gutu, was drowned while inspecting a dam.

well-being. BROKEN what Shulgi did, his sin his son, Ibbi-Sin,⁹ []. BROKEN a former king who preceded x x x your desire and over his father Ea, the heaven and earth x x he did not create. Anu and Ishtar x x his majestic son, the great lord Marduk, [king?] of the gods, whom the gods x x, his (Ea's) grandson Nabu, who x x x he will name the king.

To his descendant Sumu-la-EI,¹⁰ the king, whose name Anu pro[nounced], for your well-being and x x all of it a pea[ceful?] dwelling place, a lasting rule⁷ in your hand.

⁸ The fate of Amar-Sin of Ur (ca. 2046-2038 BCE), also known from other sources, may have been gangrene resulting from too tight a shoe, seen as a reflection of an ominous forecast that an ox would gore him.

⁹ Ibbi-Sin, the last king of Ur (ca. 2028-2004 BCE), was captured by the Elamites who sacked his city.

¹⁰ Sumu-la-EI was second king of the First Dynasty of Babylon (ca. 1880-1845 BCE).

REFERENCES

Al-Rawi 1990; Arnold 1994; Glassner 1993:215-218; Grayson ABC, 43-45, 147-151.

3. ROYAL HYMNS

A HYMN CELEBRATING ASSURNASIRPAL II'S CAMPAIGNS TO THE WEST (I.139) (LKA 64)

Victor Hurowitz

This text was found by the German excavations at Assur in the house of a nargallu (chief singer).¹ It begins as a hymn to Enlil (Assur),² but then praises Assurnasirpal II (883-859 BCE) for his campaigns to the mountains in the west and for contributing to various temples the wood taken on the campaigns. It ends with a blessing of the king.³ The events referred to are described in detail in the king's annals and mentioned briefly in his royal titles.⁴

Invocation (obv. lines 1-3)

I⁵ will sing to the king of the ends of the earth the prince of the gods may I praise;⁶
Of Enlil⁷ who dwells in Esharra,⁸ may I glorify his divinity.

a Ps 140:12

the desire of the great gods;¹⁰
(5) The son of Tukulti-Ninurta, in fame is glorified.¹¹
By the lances(?) of his battle,
(he is) king of the huntsmen,
(who) knocks over all foreign rulers.¹² ^a Presentation of King Assurnasirpal II (obv. lines 4-6)

Aššur-nāšir-apli the obstinate,⁹

¹ See Pedersén 1986:38 text 24. For the library of the nargallu see Pedersén 1986:34-41. Groneberg 1987:189-190 states that LKA 64 mentions Assurnasirpal I, son of Tiglathpileser I. This remark is unexplainable and obviously a total error.

² Schramm, EAK 2:58 calls it "Ein Loblied auf Enlil und Anp." CAD passim cites the text as a "NA hymn to Assurnasirpal."

³ For other Assyrian hymns poetically relating individual military campaigns described in prose in the royal inscriptions see Livingstone 1989:43-53; Reade 1989; Hurowitz and Westenholz 1992.

⁴ See AKA iii 56-91 = ANET 276 = ARI 2 para. 584-586 = RIMA 2:216-219 column 3 lines 56-91; Schramm EAK 2 58 11; Ikeda 1984-1985. Brinkman PHPKB 393-394, Schramm, EAK 2:58, di Filippi 1977:27-30, and Conradie 1989 discuss the number and extent of Assurnasirpal's campaigns to the west but make no mention of LKA 64 or its content. In fact, the author of LKA 64 seems to be of the opinion that there was more than one campaign but he lumps them all together as a trip to the Lebanon. If the sea was mentioned explicitly, it would have been in the broken lines.

⁵ See Groneberg 1987:114.

⁶ See Groneberg 1987:113.

⁷ BAD/BE, read Enlil, is the chief of the traditional Mesopotamian pantheon. By this time he has been syncretistically assimilated to Assur so that the name is simply a synonym for the chief god of Assyria. Groneberg 1987:190 identifies the god as Bēl, following a neo-Assyrian practice (cf. Parpola, Iraq 34 [1972] 25). This identification disregards the fact that the god in question resides in Esharra, which was Assur's temple and not Marduk's.

⁸ The god Assur's temple in the city Assur.

⁹ See Lambert 1957-58:43 n. 35 for the reading and meaning of the title par-ri-ku. Seux ER 221 translates "chef(?)" and AHW s.v. parriku gives "eigenwillig." Groneberg 1987:44 "KN der widersetzliche, Wunsch der grossen Götter." The title is obviously to be understood positively.

¹⁰ Seux ER 104 s.v. ḫiṣḫtu translates "réclamé par les grands dieux."

¹¹ Taking šurruḫ to be a D stative of šarāḫu. It may, however, be an imperative, in which case the line is addressed to Assur and means "of the son of Tukulti-Ninurta, glorify (his) fame!" Cf. AHW 1318b s.v. tanattu.

¹² Following CAD N 1:7 s.v. na'āpu, taking the verb as derived from da'āpu, "to knock down." The line is a tricolon, with AB//BA parallelism in the second and third cola: šar bajjar // utta'ipu kal mālik. For the combination of bajjaru (to hunt) and da'āpu (to knock down) cp. Ps 140:12 "... as for a wicked man of violence — they shall hunt him down in fall-pits (yšūdennū l'madhēpōt)."

The Campaign to Lebanon (obv. line 7 - rev. line 11) He left¹³ the city of Kalhu,¹⁴ b to the mountain of Lebanon he took the road. To wage his war, (10) the city of Carchemish he approached — which is in the land of Hatti.¹⁵ In order to (show the) strength of my rule,¹⁶ the possessions of his¹⁷ palace I plundered;¹⁸ A valuable image of my likeness,¹⁹ for his temples I glorified.²⁰ The Kummuheans²¹ and Patinians,²² radiance overwhelmed them.²³ (15) [They brought]²⁴ to him possessions, ebony²⁵ and lapis lazuli he constantly received.²⁶ The daughter of the king of the [Pat]inians²⁷ for making merry are your [...]. All the [en]ds of the earth I roamed,²⁸ (20) to the Amanus mountains²⁹ I ascended over and over again.³⁰ [Tw]o times³¹ [...] pure sacrifices to [the gods] [I sacrificed] to [...]	b Gen 10:11, 12 c 2 Kgs 19:23; Isa 14:8; 37:24	Reverse (rev. lines 1-6)³² [...] ... [...] his [...] all the land [of ...] [...] ... [...] [...] wood [...] [...] (5) ... the land (?) of Ha-ra-³³ [...] sacrifices [...] ... [...] Presentation of the Wood in the Temples (rev. lines 7-12) Beams of cedar from the Aman[us...] c [he carried off] and took to Eshar[ra]³⁴ [to the temple, the shr]i[ne, to the temple of happiness, to the temple of Sin] and Shamash [great/holy gods.] They entered into Esharra; [verb] by the lifting of his eyes.³⁵ Divine Blessing for Assurnasirpal (rev. lines 13-14) "The king is beloved of my heart, Aššur-nāšir-apli the governor."³⁶ Colophon (rev. line 15) (15) Acc[ording] to Sukuja it was written.³⁷
---	--	--

¹³ The copy seems to show a slightly broken and unintelligible IZ TA(?) ZIZ. The translation given here assumes the regular expression GN itamūš ... harran GN išbat as found in the parallel passage in the annals which reads TA URU kal-ḫi at-ta-muš, "I set forth from Kalhu" (RIMA 2:219 column 3 line 56). Collation is necessary.

¹⁴ Gen 10:11, 12. Present day Nimrud.

¹⁵ Cf. Groneberg 1987:114 "um (seinen Kampf) zu führen, prüfte er (die Stadt)." But see the annals, RIMA 2:216 line 57; 217 line 65. issiniqi in LKA 64 is a synonym of iqterib in the annals. Cf. de Filippi 1977:151:101.

¹⁶ The poem continues here in the voice of the king.

¹⁷ The possessive pronominal suffix has no antecedent.

¹⁸ See CAD N 1:233 s.v. namkūru d).

¹⁹ Groneberg 1987:44 ma-aq-ru, "die kostbare Abbildung meiner Gestalt." See CAD A 2:209 s.v. aqru c 5' and CAD M 1:47 s.v. magru d) for magru = (w)aqru.

²⁰ Placing a royal statue in temples, including those of conquered peoples, was a common practice. See CAD S 80b s.v. šalmu a2' a'-c'.

²¹ The Kummuheans are not mentioned in the annals' account of the western campaigns (RIMA 2:216-219 column 3 lines 56-92). They do occur, however, in the next campaign (RIMA 2:216 column 3 line 96).

²² I.e., people of Patina, formerly read Hattina. For Kummuheans and Patinians see Hawkins 1972-1975, 1980-1983.

²³ See CAD S 33a s.v. šāḫpu 1e).

²⁴ Restoring [i-šu]-tu-ni, "they brought," from šātu.

²⁵ See annals RIMA 2:219 column 3 line 88 for receipt of ebony.

²⁶ Cf. CAD N 1:233 s.v. namkūru d).

²⁷ See annals RIMA 2:218 column 3 line 76 where the king receives the daughter of the brother of Labarna, king of Patinu, along with her rich dowry.

²⁸ See CAD A 1:324-325 s.v. alāku 6 (Gtn) for other uses of this verb. It is frequent in Assurnasirpal's inscriptions as well as in some epic texts and texts of Sargon I.

²⁹ Ha-ma-nu is the Amanus range in western Syria and not the Amanah of the Bible (2 Kgs 5:12; Song 4:6) which is parallel to Akk. Ammananum (Anti-Lebanon.) See Cogan 1984.

³⁰ See annals RIMA 2:219 column 3 line 88. e-ta-ta-li is Gtn perfect of elū (AHW 208a s.v. elū Gtn 1a); cf. Sargon Birth Legend lines 16, 26 (see text 1.133 above). The verbs used here and in the next line indicate numerous campaigns.

³¹ Line 21 begins [x]-ū KAM, probably to be restored [2]-ū KAM, "twice."

³² The upper right corner of the tablet is destroyed and many of the preserved lines are effaced, making continuous translation impossible.

³³ Harran would be a possible restoration geographically and orthographically (cf. KUR KASKAL-ni in Tiglath-pileser I's annals: RIMA 1:26 line 71) but it is not otherwise mentioned in Assurnasirpal II's inscriptions.

³⁴ Reverse lines 7-11 are restored according to the annals RIMA 2:219 column 3 line 90. The restoration is meant to be suggestive of content rather than an exact reconstruction of the text.

³⁵ See CAD N 2:295a s.v. nīšu B 3a1' for nīš ni meaning "look, glance, chosen person or object, choice, discretion."

³⁶ See AHW 1140a s.v. šakkanakkum; CAD Š 1:175b s.v. šakkanaku 2c).

³⁷ See Hunger BAK 262.

REFERENCES

Text LKA 64. No previous editions, translations or studies. Brinkman 1968:393-394; Cogan 1984; Conradie 1989; de Filippi 1977; Groneberg 1987; Hawkins 1972-1975; 1980-1983. Hurowitz and Westenholz 1992; Ikeda 1978; 1984-1985; Lambert 1957-58:43; Livingstone 1989; Pedersén 1986; Reade 1989.

A PRAYER FROM A CORONATION RITUAL OF THE TIME OF TUKULTI-NINURTA I (1.140)

Alasdair Livingstone

- | | |
|--|--|
| (1) May Assur and Ninlil, the lords of your crown, set your crown on your head for a hundred years! (3) May your foot in Ekur and your hands stretched toward the breast of Assur, your god, be agreeable! | (4) May your priesthood and the priesthood of your sons be agreeable to Assur, your god! With your straight scepter widen your land! May Assur give you authority, obedience, concord, justice and peace! |
|--|--|

REFERENCES

Müller 1937:4-89 and obv. col. ii.30-36.

A HYMN TO NANAYA WITH A BLESSING FOR SARGON II (1.141)

Alasdair Livingstone

Obverse

- | | |
|--|--|
| I.1' [... she grasps in her hand] the naked sword, [the emblem of Nergal], and the pointed axe, appropriate to the [Pleiades].
Right and left, battle is set in lines. I.5' She is the foremost of the gods, whose play is combat, she who leads the coalition of the seven demons.
Musicians of wide repertoire are seated before her, performers on the lyre, the harpsichord, the clappers, the flute, the oboe, the long pipes. I.10' The jesters calm her heart with spindles, whiplashes and with sweet [...]s.
[...] ... of loveliness of ...
They wear armbands ... [...]
[...] a bunch of grapes [...]. I.15' [their] hands are weighed down with [...] of the finest gold [...] their noses [...].
Their [...] II.1' [...] Nanaya [...].
The daughter-in-law of Esagil ... [...], the wife of Muati, the darling of Bel, [his] father, whom Belet-ili honored among the goddesses. II.3' Go forth, depart, female warrior of the goddesses, capable one who adorns the function of the warrior, II.7' [...] of the unmerciful, belligerent heart(?), II.8' [...] to the end of days perform their [...]. Reverse I.3' [O world, hearken to the praise of the queen], Nanaya! | a 1 Sam 2:8;
Ps 113:7 [Exalt the beautiful one, magnify the] resonant one! I.5' [Extol the exalted one, adore with praise] the powerful one!
[Beseech her and pray to her constantly!] II.1' Even a capable [...] whom [she does not guide], [...] a gift [...];
The bridal gift of an open [...] , whom she [does not guide], is [...]. II.5' Even a wise exorcist, whom she does not guide, where is his expertise? His perambulations [...]
The hand of even an erudite physician, whom she does not guide, is powerless before his patients!
Without her, who can achieve anything? II.10' Journey far, hasten, learn how she is praised!
Honor the merciful one monthly, for ever, she who can make rich the destitute, bring abundance to the poor! "
Hear, O world, the praise of the queen, Nanaya!
Exalt the beautiful one, magnify the resonant one! II.15' Extol the exalted one, adore with praise the powerful one!
Beseech and pray to her constantly! Calm down, daughter of Sin, settle in your sanctuary! Bless Sargon, who holds fast to the hem of your garment, the shepherd of Assyria, who walks behind you! II.20' Decree for him as his fate a life of long days! Make firm the foundations of his throne, prolong his reign! |
|--|--|

Protect the stallions harnessed to [his] yoke! Keep affliction and weakness distant from his body!		offerings of god and goddess, — Enlil listens to you, Tutu obeys you — may it (the grasshopper) be counted as nought!
II.24' The evil locust which ravages the grain, the malignant grasshopper which dries up the orchards, which would cut off the regular		The genie and protective spirit which stand before you [...]
	II.30'	[...] plains, mountains [...]

REFERENCES

Foster BM 709-711; Livingstone 1989:13-16; Martin 1903:196ff.; MacMillan 1906:564.

ASSURBANIPAL'S CORONATION HYMN (1.142)

Alasdair Livingstone

This text should be read together with the Middle Assyrian Coronation Ritual Prayer and the Late Piece of Constructed Mythology (see text 1.146 below).

(1) May Shamash, king of heaven and earth, raise you to shepherdship over the four regions! May Assur, who gave you the [scepter], pro- long your days and years! Spread your land wide at your feet! May Sherua extol your name to your per- sonal god! ¹		May his reign be renewed and may they firmly establish his royal throne for ever! Daily, monthly and yearly may they bless him and guard his reign!
(5) Just as grain and silver, oil, the cattle of Shakan ² and the salt of Bariku ³ are good, so may Assurbanipal be favored by the gods of his land! May eloquence, understanding, truth and jus- tice be granted him as a gift!	(20)	During his years may rains from heaven and floods from the underground source be steady! Give our lord, Assurbanipal, long [days], copious years, great strength, a long reign, years of abundance, good repute and fame, health and well-being, a pro- pitious oracle and leadership over other kings!
(9) May the [population] of Assur buy thirty kor of grain for one shekel of silver! May the [population] of Assur buy three seah of oil for one shekel of silver! May the [popula- tion] of Assur buy thirty minas of wool for one shekel of silver!		At this point there is the following instruction to a priest:
(12) May the lesser speak and the [greater] listen! May the greater speak and the [lesser] listen! May concord and peace be estab- lished in Assyria!		Reverse
(15) Assur is king — indeed Assur is king! As- surbanipal is the [representative] of Assur, the creation of his hands! May the great gods make his reign firmly established! May they guard the life of Assurbanipal, king of Assyria! May they give him a straight scepter to widen his land and peoples!	(3)	Having pronounced this blessing, he turns round and pronounces a further blessing at the opening of the censer in front of Shamash:
	(5)	Anu gave his crown, ⁴ Enlil his throne; Ni- nurta gave his weapon; Nergal gave his awesome luminance. Nusku made a depu- tation and placed advisers before him.
	(9)	Anyone who speaks with the king deceitfully or falsely, if a notable, will be killed with a weapon, if a rich man, will become im- poverished. As for him who privately plots evil against the king, Erra will call him to account with murderous plague.

¹ By personal god is meant Assur and the idea is that Assurbanipal intercedes through the medium of the god's consort Sherua.

² God of cattle; cf. in a hemerology "On the first of the month Kislim he should libate water before the returning herds; he should prostrate himself before Shakan!" (CT 51 161 // STT 302).

³ A locality famed for its salt.

⁴ The donations agree with the character and symbolism of the gods. Cf. the reference to a crown of "Anu-ship" in a Late Babylonian New Year's festival text, where the donning of the tiara of Anu is brought into a logical relationship with the taking over of the "kingship of Anu" (SBH VIII obv. col. i 24-25).

He who privately utters malicious talk against the king, his property is wind and his garment hem litter. (15) Gather round, all gods of heaven and earth, and bless Assurbanipal, the circumspect		king! Place in his hand the weapon of combat and battle and give him the black-headed peo- ple, that he may rule as their shepherd!
--	--	---

REFERENCES

Foster BM 2:713-714; Livingstone 1989:26-27; Weidner 1939-41:210ff.

AN ASSURBANIPAL HYMN FOR SHAMASH (1.143)

Alasdair Livingstone

(1) Light of the great gods, resplendent illumina- tor of the universe, Lofty judge, shepherd of the celestial and earthly regions, As if they were cuneiform signs you watch over all lands with your light! You are one who does not become tired by divination, daily making the decisions for the denizens of heaven and earth! (5) At your coming out, blazing fire, all the stars of heaven become invisible! You alone are supremely brilliant, no one among the gods can rival with you! You consult with Šin, your father, and then give instructions. Anu and Enlil cannot give counsel without you! Ea, who decides cases, looks up to you from the Apsu! (10) All the gods pay attention at your bright ap- pearance! They smell the incense and accept the pure offerings! Beneath you [kneel] the exorcists, to avert omens of evil! The diviners stand at attention before you, to make their hands fit to receive oracular commands! [I am] your [servant], Assurbanipal, whom by means of divination you commanded to exercise kingship, (15) who praises your bright divinity, honors the symbol of your divinity, [who proclaims] your greatness, makes man-		ifest your praise to the far-flung peoples! Reverse (1) Judge his case, make the decision for him for well-being! May it be appointed for him, that he walk safely in the light of your rising! May he constantly shepherd over your peoples, whom you gave him, in justice. [In the temple] which he set up — and in which he caused you to dwell in joyous- ness — ¹ (5) may his heart be elated, his spirit rejoice, be sated with life! Whoever gives praise, sings this, and names the name of Assurbanipal, may he shepherd the peoples of Enlil in abundance and justice! Whoever learns this text by heart and ho- nors the judge of the gods, Shamash, may he bring into esteem his [words], make good his command over the people! (10) Whoever should nullify this song, or not praise Shamash, the light of the great gods, or who should change the name of Assur- banipal, whom by means of divination Shamash appointed to exercise his kingship, or who names the name of another king, (13) may his string music be painful to those who listen, his exultation as the thorn of a bush.
---	--	--

¹ This line brings the hymn into a definite relationship with actual building activities of Assurbanipal, whether in Assur or elsewhere.

REFERENCES

SAHG 5; ANET 386; Foster, BM 2:725f.

AN ASSURBANIPAL PRAYER FOR MULLISSU (1.144)

Alasdair Livingstone

- | | |
|--|---|
| (1) [.....] ... [.....]
[...] she provides [.....]
[...] ... she is in authority, does not ... [...]
[...], who grants scepter, throne, and a long reign,
(5) [who makes] their offspring abundant, fashions totality,
[...]. at its mention the Igigi tremble.
[At its ...] who made the Anunnaki tremble.
[Humanity], — mankind, the black-headed people, beseech you for their lives!
Merciful, sparing [sovereign], who grants clemency,
(10) [who makes joyful] the wandering vagrant, takes the hand of the one in extremity, [who looks to] the wronged and the one in mortal danger, who restores life to the one on his deathbed, she who can alter the status of the weak and the lowly,
that is you, queen, lady of clemency and peace!
You establish clemency, cause peace to come into being!
(15) Mullissu is the one who give peace and life to whoever enters her shrine!
I am your servant, Assurbanipal, whom your hands created, whom without father and mother you brought up and raised to greatness.
Your [...] ... you blossom constantly with life, and you protected my life!
[...] I recite your glorification, I rejoice in your concord!
(20) [.....] greatly, one who values [...]...
[.....] her [...] is praised. Reverse (1) [.....] lady of kind deeds, the city [...] [.....] and you made me rejoice!
[Mullissu, lady] of the gods, it is to you that | I have turned!
You know both to [save from disaster] and to spare; I have seized the hem of your garment!¹
(5) I have been enduring [...], I cannot bear it! [Through a misdeed] which I am or am not aware of, I have become weak!
[Through an offense, which] I am or am not aware of, may I not come to an end, lady! [Through any crime] which I may have committed since the time of my youth [or] the mentioning of a god, whether knowingly or unknowingly, I express great regret!
(10) May evil be driven away daily, lady! May your pleasant [breeze] waft and the darkness be illuminated!
In the distress and extremity which oppress me, take my hand!
May any detractor of mine who exults over me not prosper!
[May I have life and prosperity], that I may constantly praise the deeds of your divinity!
(15) [...] a spontaneous wish, a prayer for Mullissu, the merciful queen, by one who stands attentively before her. (Colophon) (i) [Palace] of Assurbanipal, king of the universe, king of Assyria, son of Esarhad-don, king of Assyria, grandson of Sennacherib, king of Assyria, who trusts in Assur and Mullissu. [He who] trusts in you will not come to shame, O Assur, king of the gods!
(v) [He who erases my written name or the name of my favorite brother] by any devious action, [...] or they destroy, are hostile to his land, [may Assur] and Mullissu [with rage and fury overthrow him]! |
|--|---|

¹ The fact that the hem of a garment could be used for sealing documents with statements under oath gives greater force to this metaphor.

REFERENCES

OECT 6:pl. xiii 72ff.

DIALOGUE BETWEEN ASSURBANIPAL AND NABU (1.145)

Alasdair Livingstone

- | | |
|--|---|
| (1) In the assembly of the great gods [I constantly] speak in your adulation, Nabu!
May the [assembly] of my detractors not | take control of me!
(3) [In the temple of the Queen of] Nineveh I approach you, hero among the gods, his |
|--|---|

gods, his brothers. You are the eternal trust of Assurbanipal! (5) [Since I was a small] child I have lain at the feet of Nabu! Nabu, do not leave me to the assembly of my detractors! (7) Please listen, Assurbanipal! I am Nabu! Until the end of time your feet shall not falter nor your hands tremble. Your lips shall not tire in praying to me, nor your tongue be twisted on your lips, for I shall give you pleasant speech. I will raise your head and give you great stature in É.MAŠ.MAŠ.¹ (13) Nabu continues to speak: Your pleasant mouth, which prays ever to Ishtar of Uruk! Your figure, which I created, prays for ever to me in É.MAŠ.MAŠ! (16) Your fate, which I created, prays ever to me thus: "Bring order into É.GAŠAN.KALAM.MA!"² "The breath of your life prays ever to me: 'Give long life to Assurbanipal!'" (19) Assurbanipal is kneeling on his knees and prays ever to Nabu, his lord: "Listen please, do not leave me! My life is spelt out before you, my soul safe kept in the lap of Mullissu. Listen please, mighty Nabu, do not leave me amongst my detractors!" (23) There answered a dream god from the presence of Nabu, his lord: "Fear not, Assur-		banipal, I will give you long life! I will entrust favorable winds with the breath of your life! My pleasant mouth shall ever bless you in the assembly of the great gods!" Reverse (1) Assurbanipal opened his fists, ever praying to Nabu, his lord: "May he who grasps the feet of the Queen of Nineveh not come to shame in the assembly of the great gods! May he who kneels by the hem of Ishtar of Uruk not come to shame in the assembly of his detractors. Do not leave me in the assembly of my detractors, O Nabu! Do not leave the breath of my life to the assembly of those who would take issue against me!" (6) "You were a child, Assurbanipal, when I left you with the Queen of Nineveh; you were a baby, Assurbanipal, when you sat on the lap of the Queen of Nineveh! Her four teats were placed in your mouth: two you would suckle and two you would milk before you!" (9) Your detractors, Assurbanipal, will fly away like pollen(?) on the surface of the water! They will be squashed before your feet like fat spring insects! You, Assurbanipal, will stand before the great gods and praise Nabu!
--	--	--

¹ É.MAŠ.MAŠ was the Ishtar temple at Nineveh. Its history reaches back to the Akkad period and major building activity was carried out around 1800 BCE by Shamshi-Adad I. The temple was given attention by Hammurabi who claimed in the prologue to his code of laws (CH iv 61) to have promulgated the rites of Ishtar in É.MAŠ.MAŠ. Its fabric and cult was enhanced by numerous Assyrian kings, not least Esarhaddon and Assurbanipal. In the late period, due to religious syncretism, Ninlil or Mullissu was also worshipped in this temple.

² É.GAŠAN.KALAM.MA was the temple of Ishtar at Arbela. For an edition and translation of and commentary on a tablet describing its cult see MMEW p. 116ff.

REFERENCES

Livingstone 1989:13; SAHG 39:292.

A LATE PIECE OF CONSTRUCTED MYTHOLOGY RELEVANT TO THE NEO-ASSYRIAN AND MIDDLE ASSYRIAN CORONATION HYMN AND PRAYER (1.146)

Alasdair Livingstone

(1) [...] ... [...] Their faces were turned away [...] Bēlet-ilī, their lady, was frightened by their silence; she spoke out to Ea, the exorcist: (5) "The toil of the gods has become wearisome to them! ... [...] . belt . [...]"		Their faces are turned away, and enmity has broken out! Let us create a figure of clay and impose the toil on it and relieve them from their exertions for ever." (10) Ea began to speak, addressing Bēlet-ilī: "You are Bēlet-ilī, the lady of the great gods. [...] ... later [...] [...] ... his hands." Bēlet-ilī pinched off clay for him. (15) Craftily she made clever things. [...] she purified and mixed clay to create him. [...] she decorated his body, [...] his whole stature. She put a ... [...] (20) She put a ... [...] She put a ... [...] [...] she placed on [his] body. Enlil, hero of the great gods, [...] [as soon as he saw him] his own features beamed! (25) [...] took a comprehensive view of [...] in the assembly of the great gods. his [...], he gave final perfection to the created being. Enlil, the hero of the great gods [...] Let me determine his name as [lullū-man],¹ and gave the order to make him bear the toil	of the gods. (30) Ea began to speak, addressing Bēlet-ilī:² "You are Bēlet-ilī, lady of the great gods! It is you who have created lullū-man, now create a king, a man to be in control! Encircle the whole of his body with something fine. (35) Finish perfectly his appearance, make his body beautiful! So Bēlet-ilī created the king, the man to be in control. The great gods gave to the king the power of battle. Anu gave his crown, Enlil his [throne].³ Nergal gave his weapons, Ninurta his [terrifying splendor]. (40) Bēlet-ilī gave [his] beautiful countenance. Nusku gave directions, gave counsel and stood in service [before him]. Anyone who speaks with the king [deceitfully or falsely], if a notable [...]
---	--	---

--	---

¹ This word lullū is used in the Epic of Atrahasis to describe the first human created by the mother goddess from clay and spittle. It is used in the Babylonian Epic of Creation (Enuma Elish) to describe the first human before he is given the name "man" (amēlu), while in the Epic of Gilgamesh it describes Enkidu before he is initiated into the habits of civilization.

² Up to this point the mythological story line agrees closely with that in the Epic of Atrahasis and similar stories or poems of creation. What follows, however, adds a completely new dimension. After man had been created to free the gods from toil, a king is to be created to organize them. Textually, the material in this latter section is evidently based on the Assurbanipal Coronation Hymn or, as is far more likely, on other older material on which this part of the Assurbanipal Coronation Hymn itself was based.

³ The donations made by the individual gods agree broadly with their known attributes and iconography; see the corresponding section in the Coronation Hymn (text 1.142 and note 4).

REFERENCES

Mayer 1987:55ff.

4. FICTIONAL ROYAL AUTOBIOGRAPHY

THE ADAD-GUPPI AUTOBIOGRAPHY (1.147)

Tremper Longman III

In 1906 H. Pognon discovered a much-broken stela at Eski Harran (Nab. H 1, A). The text left many questions unanswered but was identified as composed for either the mother or grandmother of Nabonidus. Happily, D. S. Rice discovered a duplicate in the pavement steps of the northern entrance to the Great Mosque at Harran (Nab. H 2, A). Both texts had been used to construct the steps leading to the mosque. The text has been transliterated and translated by Gadd, but no copy has yet been made.

Introduction (Column I, lines 1-5)

I am ^a Adad-guppi, mother of Nabunaid, king of Babylon, a worshipper¹ of Sin, Ningal, Nusku, and

^a Prov 8:12;
Ecc 1:12

Sadarnunna, my gods, for whose divinity I have cared since my youth.

¹ Akk. pālīhtu is a lay term, cf. von Voightlander 1964:222-223.

Autobiographical Narrative (Column I, line 5 to column III, line 43' [the following extract is through Column II, line 11])

Whereas² in the sixteenth year of Nabopolassar, king of Babylon, Sin, the king of the gods, became angry with his city and his house, and went up to heaven (with the result that) the city and its people were transformed into a ruin.³ During that time I cared for the sanctuaries of Sin, Ningal, Nusku, and Sadarnunna, since I revered their deity. Sin, the king of the gods,⁴ I was constantly⁵ beseeching. I daily, without fail, cared for his great deity. I was a worshipper of Sin, Shamash, Ishtar, and Adad all of my life (whether) in heaven or on earth. My fine possessions that they gave to me,⁶ I gave back to them, daily, nightly, monthly, yearly. I was continually beseeching Sin. Gazing at him⁷ prayerfully and in humility, I knelt before them.⁸ Thus (I said): "May your return to your city take place.⁹ May the black-headed people worship your great divinity." In order to appease the heart of my god and my goddess, I did not put on a garment of excellent wool,¹⁰ silver, gold, a fresh garment; I did not allow perfumes (or) fine oil to touch my body. I was clothed in a torn garment. My fabric was sackcloth.⁷ I proclaimed their praises.⁸ The fame of my god and goddess were set (firmly) in my heart. I stood their watch.⁸ I served them food.⁸

From the twentieth year of Assurbanipal, king of Assur, in which I was born, until the forty-second year of Assurbanipal, the third year of Assur-etillili, his son, the twenty-first year of Nabopolassar, the forty-third year of Nebuchadnezzar,⁷ the second year of Awel-Marduk,⁸ the fourth year of Neriglissar — for ninety-five years I cared for Sin, the king of the gods of heaven and earth,¹ and for the sanctuaries of his great divinity. He looked upon me and my good deeds with joy. Having heard my prayers⁹ and agreeing to my request, the wrath of

b Lam 2:4-8

c Ps 95:3

d Ps 22:30;
95:6

e 1 Sam 6:1-7:1

f Isa 22:12;
32:11; Ps
35:13; 69:12

g Gen 29:35;
Exod 15:2;
Deut 10:21;
Ps 48:2

h Ps 63:6; 119:148

i Lev 21:6,8,
17,22; Ps
50:12-15

j 2 Kgs 24:1ff;
Dan 1:1,18,
etc.

k 2 Kgs 25:27;
Jer 52:31

l Ps 115:15; 121:2

m Ps 34:7; 66:19

n 1 Kgs 11:34;
Ps 78:70

o Lev 9:22;
Ps 141:2

p Ps 5:8

q Ps 124:1-5

r Ps 42:5; 68:25;
118:27

his heart calmed. He was reconciled with Ehulhul, Sin's house, located in the midst of Harran, his favorite dwelling.

Sin, the king of the gods, looked upon me. He called Nabunaid, my only son, my offspring, to kingship.⁹ He personally delivered⁹ the kingship of Sumer and Akkad, from the border of Egypt and the upper sea, to the lower sea, all the land.

I lifted my hands to Sin,⁹ the king of the gods, reverently in prayer:⁹ [Thus (I said): "Nabunaid is (my) son, my offspring, beloved of his mother]. II:1 You are the one who called him to kingship and have spoken his name by your own divine utterance. (Now) may the great gods go at his side.⁹ May they fell his enemies. Do not forget Ehulhul but complete and restore its rites."

When, in my dream, Sin, the king of the gods, had set his hands (on me), he said thus: "Through you I will bring about the return of the gods (to) the dwelling in Harran, by means of Nabunaid your son. He will construct Ehulhul; he will complete its work. He will complete the city Harran greater than it was before and restore it. He will bring Sin, Ningal, Nusku, and Sadarnunna in procession⁹ back into¹⁰ the Ehulhul."

The narrative continues with only minor breaks. The text concludes with an exhortation to observe the worship of Sin.

Final Exhortation (Column III:44'-56')

[Whoever] you are — whether king, prince [] in the land. [Continually stand watch] for Sin, the king [of the gods], the lord of the gods of heaven and earth, his great divinity and reverence [the divinities of heaven and] earth who [] dwell in Esagil and Ehulhul and pray (to the divinities) in heaven and earth and [] the command of Sin and Ishtar who saves [] keep your seed safe forever and ever.

² The use of the relative pronoun ša at the beginning of the Adad-guppi text is difficult. Cf. CT 34, 27:41ff.; see Moran 1959:135-136.

³ Idiomatic rendering of māši u urra; lit., "night and day."

⁴ Taking the second -nu as a first person singular possessive suffix; cf. von Soden, GAG 42 j and k.

⁵ Lit., "my two eyes were with him."

⁶ According to Oppenheim, however, this is "wool of a specific color," ANET 311, n. 3.

⁷ Contra Gadd who translates "my goings-out were noiseless," see CAD M 2:245 for mušû as a type of woven fabric. This translation more clearly fits into the context which is a description of Adad-guppi's mourning the departure of the gods from Harran.

⁸ For feeding the gods, see Oppenheim 1964:183-198.

⁹ "Personally deliver" translates the idiomatic expression mullû qātussu, lit., "fill into his hand"; cf. CAD M 1:187. Also, cf. Moran 1959:136: "G(odd)'s u-rāk-la-a is morphologically very difficult, conventional idiom demands some form of mullû, and epigraphically there is no difficulty with mal..."

¹⁰ Akk. šarubu is a technical term for bringing the divine statue into a temple.

REFERENCES

Gadd 1958; Longman 1991:97-103, 225-228.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF IDRIMI (1.148)

Tremper Longman III

The text is preserved on a statue of Idrimi, discovered by Sir Leonard Woolley in 1939 during his excavations at Tell Atshana (Alalah). Although found in the debris of Level IB (ca. 1200 BCE), the statue was dated by most scholars back to Level IV (1500 BCE). Presently, the statue is housed at the British Museum.

The short statue (1.07 m) represents the king sitting on a throne (which has since been found). It was fashioned from magnesite and dolorite and covered on the front by an inscription of 104 lines. The last few lines run down Idrimi's cheek to his mouth, giving the impression that these words were uttered by the figure represented by the statue.

Introduction (lines 1-2)

(1) I am Idrimi,^a the son of Ilmilimma, the servant of Adad,^b Hepat, and Ishtar, the lady of Alalah, my ladies.

Personal Narration (lines 3-91)

(3) An act of hostility occurred in Aleppo, my ancestral home, and we fled to the people of Emar, my mother's relatives, and we lived in Emar.^c My older brothers lived (there) with me, but none of them were thinking of the matters of which I was thinking.

(10) Thus I (said): "Whoever possesses his father's house is indeed the foremost heir and whoever [does not] is a servant of the citizens of Emar." I [to]ok my horse, my chariot, and my groom and I went into the desert.^d I [en]tered into the midst of Sutean warriors. I spent the night with him (?) in the midst of ...

(17b) I set out the next day. I went to the land of Canaan. The town of Ammiya is situated in the land of Canaan. In the town of Ammiya lived citizens of Halab, Mukiš, Niya, and Amae. (When) they saw that I was their lord's son, they gathered around me. "I have become chief; I have been appointed."¹

(27b) I dwelt in the midst of the Hapiru warriors for seven years. I released birds and examined sheep entrails. The weather god turned to me in the seventh year and I built ships. Soldiers ...² I caused them to board the ships and proceed by sea to the land of Mukiš. I landed at Mount Hazi. I went up, and my land heard of me. They brought oxen and sheep before me. In one day, like one man, Niya, Amae, Mukiš, and Alalah, my city, turned to me. My allies heard and came before me. When they made a treaty with me,³ I established them as my

^a Prov 8:12;
Eccl 1:12

^b Deut 12:7;
2 Sam 7:5;
Job 42:5

^c 1 Sam 22:3-4

^d Judg 11:1-11; 1 Sam 20:30 [David's wilderness wandering]

^e Gen 21:32;
Jos 9:15

^f Gen 21:31; 24:7; 50:5;
Jos 6:26;
Neh 5:12

^g Judg 9:5;
Ps 57:1;
63:7; 91:1;
Isa 51:16;
Lam 4:20

^h Num 21:29;
Ps 68:18;
Jer 40:1;
Ezek 12:11

allies.

(42b) Now for seven years Barrattarna, the strong king, the king of the Hurrian troops, was hostile toward me. In the seventh year I sent (a message) to Barrattarna, the king of the Umman-manda, and I informed (him) of the vassal service of my ancestors when my ancestors made a treaty with them. And our words were pleasing to the (former) kings of the Hurrian troops and a strong agreement existed between them. The mighty king heard of the vassal service of our predecessors and the agreement between them, and he had respect for the oath because of the words of the agreement and because of our vassal service. My greeting he accepted and I increased the sacrifices and returned to him his lost estate. I swore a binding oath⁴ to him concerning my position as a loyal vassal and I was king in Alalah.

(59) Kings on my right and left rose up against me. And like them ...⁴ which my ancestors piled up on the ground and I also heaped up on the ground. Thus I put an end to their warfare.

(64) I took troops and went against Hatti. I destroyed cities under their sovereignty,⁵ (including) Paššahe, Damrut-rē⁶i, Hulahhan, Zise, Ie, Uluzila, and Zarana, these cities were (under) their treaty protection. The land of Hatti did not assemble and come against me. So I did as I pleased: I took them as captives; I took their goods, their possessions and their valuables and divided (them) among my auxiliaries. I took my brothers and my comrades together with them and returned to Mukiš. I entered my city Alalah with captives.⁴

(79) I constructed a house with the property, goods, possessions, and valuables that I had brought down from Hatti. I made my throne like the throne of ¹ This line is extremely difficult. All suggestions are subject to problems. Detailed discussions of this line may be found in Oller 1977a:36-38 and Greenstein and Marcus 1976:75-77.

² The text is not broken, but the word(s) is/are so problematical that it is best to leave the rest of the sentence untranslated. For discussion and suggestions, see Oller 1977a:45-47 and Greenstein and Marcus 1976:79-80.

³ Innaḫū from nāḫū. This is difficult because the N of nāḫū only occurs once. For this reason Greenstein and Marcus posit an "orthographic doubling of the n," and regard the form as a G. Oller's translation based on an N of anāḫū ("My brothers labored with me") is a possible alternative. Dietrich and Loretz (1981:215) assert that it is an N ptc 3rd pl. from aḫū II, a denominative verb. If true, this would be (along with line 48) the only occurrence of the N form.

⁴ This is the most difficult line in the whole composition. Greenstein and Marcus argue for a reading ku-um-ta el ku-fuk]-ma-ti-su-nu, but Oller's collation does not substantiate their transliteration. We leave it untranslated.

⁵ Šalutu (šulutu) may signify (like the biblical šet) the protection offered a vassal by a sovereign in a treaty arrangement.

kings. I made my brothers like the brothers of kings, my sons like their sons and my friends like their friends. I made my inhabitants who were in the midst of my land dwell in better dwellings. Those who (formerly) did not dwell in dwellings, I made them dwell (so). I established my land. I made my cities as they were previously with our fathers. (In accord with?) the signs that the gods of Alalah established and the sacrifices of our father who repeatedly performed them, I repeatedly performed them. I performed them and entrusted them to my son Adad-nirari.

Blessing/Curse Formulas (lines 92-104)

(92) Whoever...this my statue, may his progeny be destroyed. May the heaven-god curse him.⁶ May i Deut 4:2;

12:32; Prov
30:6; Ezra
6:11-12

the earth below destroy his progeny. May the gods of heaven and earth measure out his kingdom. Whoever changes it..., may IM the lord of heaven and earth and the great gods extirpate his name, his seed in his land.

(98b) Šarruwa is the scribe, the servant of IM, UTU, Kušuh, and ANŠUR.⁶ Šarruwa is the scribe who inscribed this statue. May the gods of heaven and earth give him good health, protect him, and favor him. May Shamash, the lord of the upper and lower worlds, the lord of the spirits, give him life.

(102) I reigned as king for 30 years. I have inscribed my labors on a statue. Let one look on them and continually bless me.⁷

⁶ See the translation and the discussion of these lines in Sasson 1981:310ff.

⁷ See Oller 1977b.

REFERENCES

Dietrich and Loretz 1981; Greenstein and Marcus 1976; Kempinski and Na'aman 1973; Longman 1991:60-66, 216-218; Oller 1977a; 1977b; Sasson 1981; Smith 1949.

THE MARDUK PROPHECY (1.149)

Tremper Longman III

The Marduk Prophecy is the most complete and clearest example of fictional autobiography which ends with a prophecy. R. Borger has provided a copy, transliteration, translation into German, and commentary on the text.

(i 1) O Ḫarḫarum, Ḫayyašum,¹ Anum, Enlil, Nudim[mud], Ea, [Muati], Nabium! Let the great gods learn my secrets.² After I gird my loins, I will give my speech.

(i 7) I am Marduk^b the Great Lord. I am always watching,² walking watchfully over the mountains, I watch, a watchman^c roaming the lands. I am he, who in all the lands — from sunrise to sunset — am constantly roaming.

(i 13) I gave the command that I go to Hatti.^d I inquired into Hatti. I set up the throne of my Anu-power in its midst. I dwelt in its midst for [24] years. I established [the trade of the citizens of Babylon [in] its midst. I oversaw its [...], its goods, and its valuables [in] Sippar, Nippur, [and Baby]-lon.

(i 23) [A king of Babylon] arose^e and [led me] ^{3 f} [to] Babylon. [...] were in order (?). Fair was the processional way^g of Ba[bylon.] [...] the crown of my Anu-power [...] and the statue [...] water, a Deut 29:29;

Ps 44:21; Isa
45:19; 48:16

b Prov 8:12;
Ecc 1:12

c Hos 9:8

d 1 Sam 4:1b-11 e Dan 11:7

f Gen 19:16

g Ps 42:4; 68:24

h Exod 19:4;
Ps 55:6

i Job 20:29; 21:17

j Jer 23:33-40 winds [...]. Three days [...] the crown of my Anu-power [...] and statue [...] to my body [did I ...] I went home. [With reference to Babylon, I said:] "Bring [your tribute, O you] la[nds, to Babylon ...]."

[gap]

(i 1') [...] Assur was good [...] Ekur, Assur [...]. [Make its temples shine] like a zaldqu-stone. Abounding [...] I gave [it. Monthly, daily, and yearly [I blessed it]. I girded [the loins] of the people of Enlil with it. I gave [it] wings like a bird.^h I filled all [the lands]. I filled [...]. I blessed Assur. I gave it fates [...]. I gave it strong approval [...]. I went home. With reference to Babylon I said: "Bring your tribute, O you lands, to Babylon [...]."

(i 18') I am Marduk, the great prince. I am Lord of fateⁱ and oracle.^j Who has undertaken this campaign? As I have gone away, I will come back — I have commanded it. I went to Elam — all the gods went — I commanded it. I myself cut off the nindabû-offering of the temples. Shakkan and Nisaba⁴ I caused to go away to heaven. (ii 1) Sirish⁵ made the midst of the land sick.⁶ The corpses of the people block the gates.⁷ Brother consumes brother. Friend strikes his friend with a weapon. Aristocrats stretch out their hands (to beg) from the commoner. The scepter grows short.⁸ Evil lies across the land. [...] kings diminish the land. Lions block off the way.^m Dogs go mad and bite people.ⁿ 'As many as¹ they bite do not live; they die.⁹ I fulfilled my 'days'; I fulfilled my years. Then I carried myself back to my city Babylon and to the Ekur-sagil.^o I called all the goddesses together. I commanded: "Bring your tribute, O you lands, to Babylon [...]."

¹ Two rarely mentioned gods. It is surprising that the Marduk text begins with an invocation to such rarely attested deities.

² LAL.MEŠ is translated as a Gtn of ḫātu (aḫtanatta); see CAD H 159b. Cf. Borger who translates LAL.MEŠ as "der Wanderer," connecting LAL with the root šūd. The tan form is translated as iterative. The use of logograms is frequent in the Marduk Prophecy and imparts an esoteric cast to the composition.

³ Lit., "grasped my hand," which is an idiom for leading the god's statue (šalmu) back to the temple.

(ii 19) A king of Babylon will arise,^p and he will renew the house of announcement, the Ekur-sagil. He will draw the plans of heaven and earth in the Ekur-sagil. He will change its height. He will establish tax exemptions for my city Babylon. He will lead me and bring me into my city Babylon and the Ekur-sagil forever. He will renew the ship Matush. He will inlay its rudder with šariru-metal. He will [cover] its walls with pašallu-metal. He will let sailors who serve on it embark on it. They will face each other on the 'right' and left. 'A k Joel 1:9

l Nah 3:3

m 1 Kgs
13:24-28;
Prov 26:23n Pss 22:16;
59:6, 14o 1 Sam 6:1-7:2

p Dan 11:7

q Ezek 47:9, 10r Pss 67:6; 85:12

s Exod 20:12

king¹ who like (?) the star (?) of the Ekur-sagil [...].

[gap, then some fragmentary lines]

(iii 1') [gap, some fragmentary signs] 'Ningirsu¹ will rule. The rivers will carry fish.^q The fields and plains will be full of yield. The grass of winter (will last) to summer. The grass of summer will last to winter. The harvest of the land will thrive.^r The marketplace will prosper. He will set evil aright. He will clear up the disturbed. He will illumine evil. The clouds will be continually present. Brother will love his brother. A son will fear his father as if he were a god.^s Mother [...] daughter. The bride will marry. She will fear her husband. He will be compassionate toward the people. The man will regularly pay his taxes. That prince will [rule all] the lands.

(iii 21') And I, the god of all, will befriend him. He will destroy Elam. He will destroy its cities. The city and its swamps he will turn away. He causes the great king of Der to arise in his doorframe. He will change its deathly silence. His evil [...]. His hand he will seize. He will ever cause him to enter Der and the Ugal-kalama.

[Break]

⁴ These are gods of cattle and grain respectively, thus the reference is to famine.

⁵ A beer goddess.

⁶ The verbs in this section are explicitly present/future when they are not written in logograms. Borger translates them in the past and wonders why they are written in the present. It may be a case of the "historical" present utilized in order to make the description more vivid.

⁷ The following section describes a situation of total social disorder. A similar theme is found in the Shulgi Prophecy IV, 9' ff.

⁸ See Borger, BiOr 14 (1957) 120b for hattu with araku. Hattu "scepter" is a metonym for "reign."

⁹ Dogs were vicious in Near Eastern towns, and during times of calamity were major problems. Thus the motif of dogs wandering the streets became a literary motif, see "The Curse of Agade."

REFERENCES

Borger 1971; Foster BM 1:304-307; Longman 1991:132-142; 233-235.

THE DYNASTIC PROPHECY (1.150)

Tremper Longman III

The Dynastic Prophecy is the most recent addition to the growing corpus of Akkadian prophecy texts. A. K. Grayson provided an edition of the text in 1975. The text is in a poor state of preservation, not having a single complete line. The Dynastic Prophecy has only one certain exemplar although, as Grayson points out, BM 34903 (= CT 51:122) could possibly be part of the text. The following excerpt excludes the fragmentary introduction which preserves indications of first-person speech. It also omits the fragmentary fourth column. Generically and stylistically, this prophecy bears close resemblance to Daniel 11:2-45.

[Break]¹

i 1' [...] me. [...] me.² [...] left. [...] great. [...]

seed. [...] he sees.

(i 7') [...] a later day. [...] will be overthrown. [...]

¹ There is a lacuna of uncertain length before the first line.

² Lines 1 and 2 end []-in-n[i] and []-ni-in-ni respectively. The interpretation adopted in this translation is that they are ventive endings on verbs. This is an indication that the complete Dynastic Prophecy would have begun with an autobiographical introduction, see Longman 1991:151-152.

will be annihilated. [...] Assyria. [...] silver (?) and [...] will attack and [...] Babylon, will attack and [...] will be overthrown. [...] will lift up and [...] will come/go [...] will seize [...] he will destroy [...] will shroud [...] he will bring ext[ensive booty]^a into Babylon. [...] he will decorate the Esagil and the Ezida.^b [...] he will build the palace of Babylon. [...] Nippur to Babylon. He will exercise kingship [for x year]s.

[Break]

(ii 1') [...] he will go up. [...] he will overthrow [...]. [He will exercise kingship] for three years. Borders and [...]. For his people [...]. After him his son will [sit] on the throne. [...] not [...].

(ii 11') A [rebel] prince will arise.^c [He will establish] the dynasty of Harran. [He will exercise kingship] for seventeen years. He will oppress the land and [he will cancel?] the festival of [Esagil]. [He will build] a fortress in Babylon. He will plot evil against Akkad.³

(ii 17') A king of Elam will arise. The scepter [...]. He will remove him from his throne [...]. He will

^a Gen 34:29;
Exod 3:22;
Deut 13:16;
Jer 20:5;
Dan 11:24

^b 1 Kgs 7:13-51

^c Dan 11:7

^d Judg 3:15-18; 2 Sam 8:2; 2 Kgs 17:3

^e Exod 15:3; 2 Sam 5:22-25

seize the throne and the king who arose from the throne [...]. The king of Elam will change his place [...]. He will cause him to dwell in another land [...]. That king will oppress the land and [...]. All the lands [will bring] tribute [to him].^d During his reign Akkad [will not enjoy] a peaceful abode.⁴

(iii 1) [...] kings [...] of his father [...]. [He will exercise kingship] for two years. A eunuch [will murder] that king. Any prince [will arise]. He will attack and [will seize the throne]. He will [exercise kingship] for five years. [...] army of the Hanaeans [...] will attack [...]. His army [...] will plunder and ro[b him]. Afterward [his ar]my will regroup and [raise] their weapons.^e Enlil, Shamash, and [Marduk] will go at the side of his ar[my]. He will bring about the overthrow of the Hanaean army. He will [carry] off his extensive booty [and bring] it into his palace. The people who had ex[perienced] misfortune [will enjoy] well-being. The mood of the land [...] tax exemption [...].⁵

[Break]

³ This section clearly alludes to Nabonidus (Harran).

⁴ This section alludes to the Achaemenids (Elam).

⁵ This section alludes to the Greeks (Hanaeans; cf. Ionians).

REFERENCES

Grayson 1975:24-37; Longman 1991:149-152; 239-240.

C. INDIVIDUAL FOCUS

This page intentionally left blank

1. JUST SUFFERER COMPOSITIONS

DIALOGUE BETWEEN A MAN AND HIS GOD (1.151)

Benjamin R. Foster

This is the earliest Akkadian treatment of the problem of theodicy, the theme of the just sufferer that reaches a literary climax of sorts in the biblical book of Job. The present treatment is known from a single text of Old Babylonian date. Like later ones, it is primarily concerned with suffering in the form of illness, assumed to be punishment for sins known or unknown, and it concludes with restoration to divine favor, i.e., to health. [WWH]

(i) A young man was imploring his god as a friend, He was constantly supplicating, he was [praying to(?)] him. His heart was seared, he was sickened with his burden, His feelings were sombre from misery. He weakened, fell to the ground, prostrated him- self. His burden had grown too heavy for him, he drew near to weep. He was moaning like a donkey foal separated (from its mother).^a He cried out before his god, his master. His mouth a wild bull, his clamor two mourners, [His] lips bear a lament to his lord. (ii) He recounts the burdens he suffered to his lord, The young man expounds the misery he is suffer- ing: "My Lord, I have debated with myself, and in my feelings [...] of heart: the wrong I did I do not know! ^b Have I [...] a vile forbidden act? Brother does not de[sp]ise his brother, Friend is not calumniator of his friend!" The [...] does not [...] [large gap] (iv) [4 lines lost or fragmentary] "[From] when I was a child until I grew up, (the days?) have been long, when [...]? How much you have been kind to me, how much I have blasphemed you, I have not forgotten. In[stead(?)] of good you revealed evil, O my lord, you made glow ... My bad repute is grown excessive, it ...to (my) feet. It [rains] blows on my skull(?). Its [...] turned my mouth ... to gall."	^a 1 Sam 6:12 ^b Job 9:20f.; 13:23 ^c Prov 25:21 ^d Ps 107:18; Job 38:17	[large gap] (vii) [4 lines lost] [...] he brought him to earth, [...] he has anointed him with medicinal oil, [...] food, and covered his blotch, He attended him and gladdened his heart, He ordered the restoration of his good health to him: (viii) "Your disease is under control, let your heart not be despondent! The years and days you were filled with misery are over. Were you not ordered to live, How could you have lasted the whole of this griev- ous illness? You have seen distress, ... is (now) held back. You have borne its massive load to the end. They have you, (but) the way is open to you, The path is straight for you, mercy is granted you. You must never, till the end of time, forget [your] god Your creator, now that you are favored." (ix) "I am your god, your creator, your trust, My guardians are strong and alert on your behalf. The field will open [to you] its refuge. I will see to it that you have long life. So, without qualms, do you anoint the parched, Feed the hungry, water the thirsty,^c But he who sits there with burning e[yes], Let him look upon your food, melt, flow down, and dis[solve]. The gate of life and well-being is open to you! ^d Going away(?), drawing near, coming in, going out: may you be well!" Make straight his way, open his path: May your servant's supplication reach your heart!
--	--	---

REFERENCES

Text: Nougayrol 1952. Translations and studies: Nougayrol 1952; Lambert 1987; Foster BM 1:75-77, FDD 295-297.

A SUFFERER'S SALVATION (1.152)

Benjamin R. Foster

This treatment of the theme of theodicy bridges the gap between the Old Babylonian ones (in Sumerian and Akkadian) and those of neo-Assyrian date. It comes from Ugarit, where scribal schools adopted and adapted the Mesopotamian curriculum in the Late Bronze Age. It is preserved in a single fragmentary exemplar. [WWH]

[Gap of about 15 lines]

(1') Evil [portents?] were continually set against me [...]

My omens were obscure, they became like [...]

The diviner could not reach a ruling concerning me,

The "Judge" would give no sign.

(5') The omens were confused the oracles mixed up.

Dream interpreters used up the incense, diviners the lambs,

Learned men debated the tablets (about my case),

They could not say when my affliction would run its course.^a

My family gathered round to bend over me before my time, (10') My next of kin stood by ready for the wake.

My brothers were bathed in blood like men possessed,

My sisters sprinkled me with fine(?) oil from the press.

Until the Lord raised my head,

And brought me back to life from the dead,

(15') Until Marduk raised my head

And brought me back to life from the dead,

I could eat scant bread,

I took for my] drink bilge(?) and salt pools.

[When I lay down], sleep would not overcome me,

(20') [I would lie awake my whole night through.

My heart [...] me, my(!) mind ...,

I was wasting away(?) from the sickness I suffered.

[... I] was made most anxious [...]

^a 1 Sam 28:6, 15

^b Pss 42:4, 80:6

^c Ps 113:5f.

My [te]ars [had to serve] as my sustenance.^b

(25') [Lest] Marduk be forgotten,

That Marduk be praised:

Were it not for Marduk, breath had gone from me,

Would not (?) [the mour]ner have cried out 'alas for him!'

I praise, I praise, what the lord Marduk has done I praise!

(30') [I praise, I praise], what the angry (personal) god [has done] I praise!

[I praise, I praise], what the (personal) goddess [has done] I praise!

Praise, praise, do not be bashful, but praise!

[He it] is, Marduk, I entreat(?) him, I entreat(?) him,

[He it] was who smote me, then was merciful to me.

(35') He scuttled(?) me, then moored me,

He dashed me down, then grabbed me (as I fell),

He scattered me wide, then garnered me,

He thrust me away, then gathered me in,

He threw me down, then lifted me high.^c

(40') He snatched the jaw of death,

He raised me up from hell.

He smashed my smiter's weapon,

He wrested the shovel from the digger of my grave.

He opened my shrouded eyes,

(45') He made my [sp]eech intelligible,

He [...] my ears.

(Text breaks off)

REFERENCES

Text: Nougayrol Ugaritica 5:435 No. 162. Translations and studies: Nougayrol 1968:265-273; Dietrich 1993; Foster BM 1:324f., FDD 314f.

THE POEM OF THE RIGHTEOUS SUFFERER (1.153)

Benjamin R. Foster

This is the most elaborate treatment of the theme of theodicy. It includes a veritable thesaurus of medical symptoms (Tablet II) and their cure (Tablet III). Because the sufferer protests not so much innocence as ignorance of his sins, his modern designation could well be "pious sufferer" rather than "just sufferer."¹ He is identified by name in the text (Tablet III, line 43) and was possibly its author. The ancient name of the composition is, as usual, taken from its opening words or incipit.² When complete, the poem had four tablets (chapters) of presumably 120 lines each, for a total of 480 lines. [WWH]

¹ Mattingly 1990.

² Ludlul bel nemeqi, "I will praise the lord of wisdom," sometimes further abbreviated to Ludlul.

Tablet I

I will praise the lord of wisdom, solicitous god,³
 [Fur]ious in the night, growing in the day:
 Marduk! lord of wisdom, solicitous god,
 [Fur]ious in the night, growing in the day:
 Whose anger is like a raging tempest,
 But whose breeze is sweet as the breath of morn.
 In his fury not to be withstood, his rage the deluge,
 Merciful in his feelings, his emotions relenting.
 The skies cannot sustain the weight of his hand,
 His gentle palm rescues the moribund.
 Marduk! The skies cannot sustain the weight of his hand,
 His gentle palm rescues the moribund.
 He it is, in brunt of whose anger, graves are dug,
 At the same moment, raised the fallen from disaster.
 He glowers, protective spirits take flight,
 He regards, the one whose god forsook him returns.
 His severe punishment is harsh and speedy,
 He stops short and quickly returns to his natural state.
 He is bull-headed in his love of mercy,
 Like a cow with a calf, he keeps turning around watchfully.
 His scourge is barbed and punctures the body,
 His bandages are soothing, they heal the doomed.
 He speaks and makes one incur many sins,
 On the day of his justice sin and guilt are dispelled.
 He is the one who afflicts with demons of shaking-disease,
 Through his sacral spell chills and shivering are driven away.
 Who ... the flood of Adad, the blow of Erra,
 Who reconciles the wrathful god [and god]dess,
 The lord divines the gods' inmost thoughts,
 (But) no [god] understands his behavior.
 Marduk divines the gods' inmost thoughts,
 Which god understands his mind?
 As heavy his hand, so compassionate his heart,
 As brutal his weapons, so life-sustaining his feelings.
 Without his consent, who could cure his blow?
 Against his will, who could sin and [escape]?
 I, who touched bottom like a fish, will proclaim his anger,
 He quickly granted me favor, as if reviving the dead.
 I will teach the people that his kindness is nigh,
 May his favorable thought take away their [guilt?].
 From the day the Lord punished me,
 And the warrior Marduk became furious with me,
 My own god threw me over(?) and disap[peared],
 My goddess broke rank and vanished.

He cut off the benevolent angel who (walked) beside [me],
 My protecting spirit was frightened off, to seek out someone else.
 My vigor was taken away, my manly appearance became gloomy,
 My dignity escaped and lit on the roof.
 Terrifying signs beset me:
 I was forced out of my house, I wandered outside.
 My omens were confused, they were contradictory
 every day,
 The prognostication of diviner and dream interpreter could not explain what I was undergoing.
 What was said in the street portended ill for me,
 When I lay down at night, my dream was terrifying.
 The king, incarnation of the gods, sun of his peoples,
 His heart hardened against me and appeasing him was impossible.
 Courtiers were plotting hostile action against me,
 They gathered themselves to instigate base deeds:
 If the first "I will make him end his life"
 Says the second "I ousted (him) from his command!"
 So likewise the third "I will get my hands on his post!"
 "I'll come into property!" vows the fourth
 As the fifth subverts the mind of fifty,
 Sixth and seventh follow on his heels!
 The clique of seven have massed their forces,
 Merciless as fiends, the likeness to demons.
 So one is their body, (but seven) their mouths.
 Their hearts fulminate against me, ablaze like fire.
 Slander and lies they try to lend credence against
 me.
 My eloquent mouth they checked, as with reins,
 My lips, which used to discourse, became those of a deaf man.
 My resounding call struck dumb,
 My proud head bent earthward,
 My stout heart turned feeble for terror,
 My broad breast brushed aside by a novice,
 My far-reaching arms pinned by my clothing,
 I, who walked proudly, learned slinking,
 I, so grand, became servile.
 To my vast family I became a loner,
 As I went through the streets, I was pointed at,
 I would enter the palace, eyes would squint at me,
 My city was glowering at me like an enemy,
 Belligerent and hostile would seem my land!
 My brother became my foe,
 My friend became a malignant demon,
 My comrade would denounce me savagely,

³ I.e., Marduk (line 3). Withholding the precise identity of the (human or divine) protagonist until the second or a subsequent line is a traditional device taken over from Sumerian poetry.

My colleague kept the taint to(?) his weapons for bloodshed,
 My best friend made my life an aspersion.
 My slave cursed me openly in the assembly (of gentlefolk),
 My slave girl defamed me before the rabble.
 An acquaintance would see me and make himself scarce,
 My family disowned me.
 A pit awaited anyone speaking well of me,
 While he who was uttering defamation of me forged ahead.
 One who relayed base things about me had a god for his help,
 For the one who said "What a pity about him!" death came early,
 The one of no help, his life became charmed,
 I had no one to go at my side, nor saw I a champion.
 They parceled my possessions among the riffraff,
 The sources of my watercourses they blocked with muck,
 They chased the harvest song from my fields,
 They left my community deathly still, like that of a (ravaged) foe.
 They let another assume my duties,
 And appointed an outsider to my prerogatives.
 By day sighing, by night lamentation,
 Monthly, trepidation, despair the year.
 I moaned like a dove all my days,
 Like a singer, I moan out my dirge.
 My eyes endure(?) constant crying,
 My cheeks scald from tears, as if eroded(?).
 My face is darkened from the apprehensions of my heart,
 Terror and panic have jaundiced my face.
 The wellsprings of my heart quaked for unremitting anxiety,
 I was changeable(?) as a flickering fire,
 Prayer was disorder, like an exploding flame,
 My entreaty was like the fracas of a brawl.
 My sweet-lipped discourse was murky, obscure,
 When I turned a biting comment, my gambit was stifled.
 "Surely in daylight good will come upon me!
 The new moon will appear, the sun will shine!"

Tablet II

One whole year to the next! The (normal) time passed.
 As I turned around, it was more and more terrible.
 My ill luck was on the increase, I could find no good fortune.
 I called to my god, he did not show his face,
 I prayed to my goddess, she did not raise her head.

a 1 Sam 28:6, 15

b Ex 20:7; Deut 5:11

c Ps 68:25

d Deut 30:11-14

The diviner with his inspection did not get to the bottom of it,
 Nor did the dream interpreter with his incense clear up my case,
 I beseeched a dream spirit, but it did not enlighten me,
 The exorcist with his ritual did not appease divine wrath.^a
 What bizarre actions everywhere!
 I looked behind: persecution, harassment!
 Like one who had not made libations to his god,
 Nor invoked his goddess with a food offering,
 Who was not wont to prostrate, nor seen to bow down,
 From whose mouth supplication and prayer were wanting,
 Who skipped holy days, despised festivals,
 Who was neglectful, omitted the gods' rites,
 Who had not taught his people reverence and worship,
 Who did not invoke his god, but ate his food offering,
 Who snubbed his goddess, brought (her) no flour offering,
 Like one possessed(?), who forgot his lord,
 Who casually swore a solemn oath by his god:^b
 I, indeed, seemed (such a one)!
 I, for my part, was mindful of supplication and prayer,
 Prayer to me was the natural recourse, sacrifice my rule.
 The day for reverencing the gods was a source of satisfaction to me,
 The goddess's procession day was my profit and return.^c
 Praying for the king, that was my joy,
 His sennet was as if for (my own) good omen.
 I instructed my land to observe the god's rites,
 The goddess's name did I drill my people to esteem.
 I made my praises of the king like a god's,
 And taught the populace reverence for the palace.
 I wish I knew that these things were pleasing to a god!
 What seems good to one's self could be an offense to a god,
 What in one's own heart seems abominable could be good to one's god!^d
 Who could learn the reasoning of the gods in heaven?
 Who could grasp the intentions of the gods of the depths?
 Where might human beings have learned the way of a god?^e ^d
 He who lived by (his) brawn died in confinement.

^a This couplet sums up the dilemma posed by the poet.

^b Contrast the biblical view as expressed, e.g., in Deut 30:11-14.

Suddenly one is downcast, in a trice full of cheer,
 One moment he sings in exaltation,
 In a trice he groans like a professional mourner.
 People's motivations change in a twinkling!
 Starving, they become like corpses,
 Full, they would rival their gods.
 In good times, they speak of scaling heaven,
 When it goes badly, they complain of going down to hell.

I have ponde[red] these things; I have made no sense of them.

But as for me, in despair, a whirlwind is driving(?)
 me!

Debilitating disease is let loose upon me:

An evil vapor has blown against me [from the] ends of the earth,

Head pain has surged up upon me from the breast of hell,

A malignant spectre has come forth from its hidden depth,

A relentless [ghost] came out of its dwelling place.
 [A she-demon came] down from the mountain,

Ague set forth [with the] flood [and sea?],
 Debility broke through the ground with the plants.

[They assembled] their host, together they came upon me:

[They struck my he]ad, they closed around my pate,

[My features] were gloomy, my eyes ran a flood,
 They wrenched my muscles, made my neck limp,

They thwacked [my chest], pounded(?) my breast,
 They affected my flesh, threw (me) into convulsions,

They kindled a fire in my epigastrium,

They churned up my bowels, they tw[isted] my entrails(?),

Coughing and hacking infected my lungs,
 They infected(?) my limbs, made my flesh pasty,

My lofty stature they toppled like a wall,
 My robust figure they flattened like a bulrush,

I was dropped like a dried fig, I was tossed on my face.

A demon has clothed himself in my body for a garment,

Drowsiness smothers me like a net,

My eyes stare, they cannot see,

My ears prick up, they cannot hear.

Numbness has spread over my whole body,

Paralysis has fallen upon my flesh.

Stiffness has seized my arms,

Debility has fallen upon my loins,

My feet forgot how to move.

[A stroke] has overcome me, I choke like one fallen,

Signs of death have shrouded my face!

[If someone th]inks of me, I can't respond to the inquirer,

"[Ala]s!" they weep, I have lost consciousness.

A snare is laid on my mouth,

And a bolt bars my lips.

My way in is barred, my point of slaking blocked,

My hunger is chronic, my gullet is constricted.

If it be of grain, I choke it down like stink weed,

Beer, the sustenance of mankind, is sickening to
 me.

Indeed, the malady drags on!

For lack of food my features are unrecognizable,

My flesh is waste, my blood has run dry,

My bones are loose, covered (only) with skin,

My tissues are inflamed, afflicted with gangrene(?).

I took to bed, confined, going out was exhaustion,

My house turned into my prison.

My flesh was a shackle, my arms being useless,

My person was a fetter, my feet having given way.

My afflictions were grievous, the blow was severe!

(ii 100) A scourge full of barbs thrashed me,

A crop lacerated me, cruel with thorns.

All day long tormentor would torment [me],

Nor at night would he let me breathe freely a moment.

From writhing, my joints were separated,

My limbs were splayed and thrust apart.

I spent the night in my dung like an ox,

I wallowed in my excrement like a sheep.

The exorcist recoiled from my symptoms,

While my omens have perplexed the diviner.

The exorcist did not clarify the nature of my complaint,

While the diviner put no time limit on my illness.

No god came to the rescue, nor lent me a hand,

No goddess took pity on me, nor went at my side.

My grave was open, my funerary goods ready,

Before I had died, lamentation for me was done.

All my country said, "How wretched he was!"

When my ill-wisher heard, his face lit up,

When the tidings reached her, my ill-wisher, her mood became radiant.

The day grew dim for my whole family,

For those who knew me, their sun grew dark.

Tablet III

Heavy was his hand upon me, I could not bear it!

Dread of him was oppressive, it [] me].

His fierce [pun]ishment [], the deluge,

His stride was ..., it ... [].

[Ha]rsh, severe illness does not ... [] my person,

I lost sight of [aler]tness, [] make my mind stray.

I gro[an] day and night alike,

Dreaming and waking [I am] equally wretched.

A remarkable young man of extraordinary physique,

Magnificent in body, clothed in new garments,

Because I was only half awake, his features lacked form.

He was clad in splendor, robed in dread —
 He came in upon me, he stood over me.⁶
 [When I saw him, my] flesh grew numb.
 [] "The Lady(?) has sent [me],
 [] ."
 [] I tried to tell [my people],
 "[] sent [] for me."
 They were silent and did not [speak],
 They heard me [in silence and did not answer].
 A second time [I saw a dream].
 In the dream I saw [at night],
 A remarkable purifier [].
 Holding in his hand a tamarisk rod of purification,
 "Laluralimma, resident of Nippur,
 Has sent me to cleanse you."
 He was carrying water, he po[ured it] over me,
 He pronounced the resuscitating incantation, he massaged [my] bo[dy].
 A third time I saw a dream.
 In my dream I saw at night:
 A remarkable young woman of shining countenance,
 Clothed like a person(?), being li[ke] a god,
 A queen among peoples [],
 She entered upon me and [sat down] ... []
 She ordered my deliverance []
 "Fear not!" she said, I [will]
 Whatever one sees(?) of a dream [].
 She ordered my deliverance, "Most wre[tched] indeed is he,
 Whoever he might be, the one who saw the vision at night."
 In the dream (was) Ur-Nindinugga, a Babylonian(?)
 A bearded young man wearing a tiara,
 He was an exorcist, carrying a tablet,
 "Marduk has sent me!
 To Shubshi-meshre-Shakkan I have brought a sw[a-
 the],
 From his pure hands I have brought a sw[athe]."
 He has entru[sted] me into the hands of my mini-strant.
 [In] waking hours he sent a message,
 He reve[aled] his favorable sign to my people.
 I was awake in my sickness, a (healing) serpent slithered by.
 My illness was quickly over, [my fetters] were
 broken.
 After my lord's heart had quiet[ed],
 (And) the feelings of merciful Marduk were ap[peased],
 [And he had] accepted my prayers [],
 His sweet [relen]ting [],
 [He ordered] my deliverance!: "He is g[reatly trie]d!"
 [] to extol []
 [] to worship and []

[] my guilt []
 [] my iniquity []
 [] my transgression []
 He made the wind bear away my offenses.
 [The exact placement of the following lines is unknown.]
 [He applied] to me his spell which binds [debilitating disease],
 [He drove] back the evil vapor to the ends of the earth,
 He bore off [the head pain] to the breast of hell,
 [He sent] down the malignant spectre to its hidden depth,
 The relentless ghost he returned [to] its dwelling,
 He overthrew the she-demon, sending it off to a mountain,
 He replaced the ague in flood and sea.
 He eradicated debility like a plant,
 Uneasy sleep, excessive drowsiness,
 He dissipated like smoke filling the sky.
 The turning towards people(?) with "woe!" and
 "alas!" he drove away like a cloud, earth ...
 []
 The tenacious disease in the head, which was [heavy] as a [mill]stone,
 He raised like dew of night, he removed it from
 me.
 My beclouded eyes, which were wrapped in the shroud of death,
 He drove (the cloud) a thousand leagues away, he brightened [my] vision,
 My ears, which were stopped and clogged like a deaf man's,
 He removed their blockage, he opened my hearing.
 My nose, whose [bre]athing was choked by symptoms of fever,
 He soothed its affliction so I could breathe [freely].
 My babbling lips, which had taken on a h[ard crust?],
 He wiped away their distress(?) and und[id] their deformation.
 My mouth, which was muffled, so that proper speech was diffi[cult],
 He scoured like copper and r[emoved] its filth.
 My teeth, which were clenched and locked together firmly,
 [He op]ened their fastening, fre[ed?] the jaws(?).
 My tongue, which was tied and [could] not converse,
 [He] wiped off its coating and [its] speech became fluent(?).
 My windpipe, which was tight and choking, as though on a gobbet,
 He made well and let it si[ng] its songs like a flute.
 My [gul]let, which was swollen so it could not take

⁶ This is the typical form in which dream reports are cast in cuneiform literature; see Oppenheim 1956:187-190, 250. The allusion may be to the dream-god himself, called Zaqr. See Kutscher 1988.

[food],

Its swelling went down and he opened its blockage.

My [], which []

[] above []

[which] was darkened like []

[three damaged lines, then gap]

[The following lines are known only from the ancient commentary, but must go in the gap here, in sequence but not necessarily seriatim.]

- (a) My intestine, which was ever empty for want, and was coiled (tight) like basketry,
- (b) Accepts nourishment, holds drink.
- (c) My neck, which was limp and twisted at the base,
- (d) He shored up, a hillock, he planted upright like a tree(?).
- (e) He made my body that of a perfect athlete.
- (f) He pared my nails as if to drive out a "vengeance."
- (g) He drove out their illness and made their upper parts well.
- (h) My knees, which were tied and bound like a ... bird's
- (i) The shape of my body [he made] remarkable(?)
- (j) He wiped off the grime, he cleansed its filth
- (k) My gloomy mien began to glow (=120?)

Tablet IV (Episode A)

The Lord [] me,

The Lord took hold of me,

The Lord set me on my feet,

The Lord revived me,

He rescued me [from the p]it,

He summoned me [from destruc]tion,

[] he pulled me from the river of death.

[] he took my hand.

[He who] smote me,

Marduk, he restored me!

He smote the hand of my smiter,

It was Marduk who made him drop his weapon.

[He] the attack of my foe,

It was Marduk who []

[Two fragmentary lines, then gap. Insert here, perhaps, two lines known only from the ancient commentary]:

- (l) At the place of the river ordeal, where people's fates are decided,
- (m) I was struck on the forehead, my slave mark removed.

(Fragment B)

[] which in my prayers []

[With] prostration and supplication [] to Esagila

[]

[I who went] down to the grave have returned to the "Gate of [Sunrise]."

[In the] "Gate of Prosperity" prosperity was [given me].

[In the] "Gate of the Guardian Spirit" a guardian spirit [drew nigh to me].

[In the] "Gate of Well-being" I beheld well-being.

In the "Gate of Life" I was granted life.

In the "Gate of Sunrise" I was reckoned among the living.

In the "Gate of Splendid Wonderment" my signs were plain to see.

In the "Gate of Release from Guilt"⁷

I was released from my bond.

In the "Gate of Praise(?)" my mouth made inquiry.

In the "Gate of Release from Sighing" my sighs were released.

In the "Gate of Pure Water" I was sprinkled with purifying water.

In the "Gate of Conciliation" I appeared with Marduk,

In the "Gate of Joy" I kissed the foot of Sarpanitum.

I was consistent in supplication and prayer before them,

I placed fragrant incense before them,

An offering, a gift, sundry donations I presented,

Many fatted oxen I slaughtered, butchered many [sheep?].⁸

Honey-sweet beer and pure wine I repeatedly libated.

The protecting genius, the guardian spirit, divine attendants of the fabric of Esagila,⁹

I made their feelings glow with libation,

I made them exultant [with] lavish [meals].

[To the threshold, the bolt] socket, the bolt, the doors

[I offered] oil, butterfat, and choicest grain.¹⁰

[] the rites of the temple.

[large gap]

[insert here?]

- (o) I proceeded along Kunush-kadru Street in a state of redemption.

- (p) He who has done wrong by Esagil, let him learn from me.

- (q) It was Marduk who put a muzzle on the mouth of the lion that was devouring me.

- (r) Marduk took away the sling of my pursuer and deflected his slingstone.

(Fragment C)

[] golden grain []

⁷ For a similarly designated gate in a Sum. letter-prayer, see Hallo 1968:86:49.

⁸ This topos, or literary cliché, goes back to Sum. precedent and recurs in the Akk. Gilgamesh Epic (above Text 1.132, lines 70f.).

⁹ E-sag-ila, lit., "house that lifts the head (i.e. to heaven)," the great temple tower (ziggurat) of Marduk at Babylon.

¹⁰ For archival texts recording offerings to temple gates see Levine and Hallo 1967.

[He?] anointed himself with sweet cedar perfume, upon him [] A feast for the Babylonian(s?) [] His tomb he(?) had made [was set up] for a feast! The Babylonians saw how [Marduk] can restore to life, And all mouths proclaimed [his] greatness, "Who (would have) said he would see his sun? Who (would have) imagined that he would pass through his street? Who but Marduk revived him as was dying? Besides Sarpanitum, which goddess bestowed his breath of life? Marduk can restore to life from the grave,¹¹ Sarpanitum knows how to rescue from annihilation. Wherever earth is founded, heavens are stretched wide,	Wherever sun shines, fire blazes, Wherever water runs, wind blows, Those whose bits of clay Aruru pinched off (to form them),¹² Those endowed with life, who walk upright, [Tee]ming mankind, as many as they be, give praise to Marduk! [] those who can speak, [] may he rule all the peoples [] shepherd of all habi[tations] [] floods from the deep [] the gods [] [] the extent of heaven and nether- world, [] [] was getting darker and darker for him."
---	---

¹¹ Sarpanitum (or Zer-banitum), the consort of Marduk.

¹² Aruru, (a manifestation of) the mother goddess, who created humankind from clay.

REFERENCES

Text: Lambert BWL pls. 1-18 and duplicates. Translations and studies: Lambert BWL 21-62; ANET 596-600; Foster BM 1:306-323, FDD 298-313.

THE BABYLONIAN THEODICY (1.154)

Benjamin R. Foster

Formally, this classic statement of the theme of theodicy comes closest to the biblical book of Job, for it is cast in the form of a dialogue, albeit the sufferer has only one "friend" to put up with as interlocutor, and that friend is unnamed. A further formal parallel to biblical poetry in general is provided by the strophic structure which, like Ps. 119, features successive stanzas of equal length whose initial signs spell out a message of their own.¹ In the biblical case, such "acrostics" are exclusively alphabetic, i.e., they list the letters of the alphabet in their traditional order.² Babylonian acrostics cannot be alphabetic, since Mesopotamian cuneiform is involved. The present acrostic reveals (or conceals) the name of the author and his protestation of religious and political correctness — as if to head off any criticism of the rather daring views expressed in his poem.³ [WWH]

I. Sufferer

O sage, [...], come, [let] me speak to you,
[...], let me recount to you,
[...],
[I ...], who have suffered greatly, let me always praise you,
Where is one whose reflective capacity is as great as yours?
Who is he whose knowledge could rival yours?
Wh[ere] is the counsellor to whom I can tell of woe?
I am without recourse, heartache has come upon
me.
I was the youngest child when fate claimed (my) father,
My mother who bore me departed to the land of no return,

My father and mother left me, and with no one my guardian!

II. Friend

Considerate friend, what you tell is a sorrowful tale,
My dear friend, you have let your mind harbor ill.
You make your estimable discretion feeble-minded,
You alter your bright expression to a scowl.
Of course our fathers pay passage to go death's way,
I too will cross the river of the dead,
as is commanded from of old.
When you survey teeming mankind all together,
The poor man's son advanced, someone helped him get rich,

¹ On the assumption of 27 stanzas of 11 lines each, the composition when complete comprised a total of 297 lines.

² On this order see above, text 1.107 (abecedaries) and Brug 1990.

³ He says in effect: "I am Saggil-kinam-ubbib the exorcist, a worshipper of god and king." For this individual see Finkel 1988:144f.

Who did favors for the sleek and wealthy?
He who looks to his god has a protector,
The humble man who reveres his goddess will garner wealth.

III. Sufferer

My friend, your mind is a wellspring of depth unplumbed,
The upsurging swell of the ocean that brooks no inadequacy.

To you, then, let me pose a question, learn [what I would say].

Hearken to me but for a moment, hear my declaration.

My body is shrouded, craving wears me do[wn],
My assets have vanished, my res[ources?] dwindled.
My energies have turned feeble, my prosperity is
 at a standstill,

Moaning and woe have clouded [my] features.

The grain of my mead is nowhere near satisfying [me].

Beer, the sustenance of mankind, is far from being enough.

Can a happy life be a certainty? I wish I knew how that might come about!

IV. Friend

My well-thought-out speech is the ultimate in good advice,

But you [make?] your well-ordered insight [sound] like babble.

You force [your ...] to be [scatter]-brained, irrational,

You render your choicest offerings without conviction.

As to your [ever]lasting, unremitting desire [...],

The [fore]most protection [...] in prayer:

The reconciled goddess returns to [...]

The re[conciled gods] will take pity on the fool(?), the wrong-doer.

Seek constantly after the [rites?] of justice.

Your mighty [...] will surely show kindness,

[...] ... will surely grant mercy.

V. Sufferer

I bow down before you, my [comrade],

 I apprehend your w[isdom],^a

[...] what you say.

Come, let me [tell you],

The on[ager], the wild ass, that had its fill of [...],

Did it pay attention [to] ca[r]ry out? a god's intentions?

The savage lion that devoured the choicest meat,

Did it bring its offerings to appease a goddess's anger?

The parvenu who multiplies his wealth,

Did he weigh out precious gold to the mother goddess for a family?

[Have I] withheld my offerings? I prayed to my

a Job 12:2
etc.

b Job 21:7-16
etc.

god,

[I] said the blessing over my goddess, my speech [...].

VI. Friend

O date palm, wealth-giving tree, my precious brother,

Perfect in all wisdom, O gem of wis[dom],

You are a mere child, the purpose of the gods is remote as the netherworld.

Consider that magnificent wild ass on the [plain],
The arrow will gash that headstrong trampler of the leas!

Come, look at that lion you called to mind, the enemy of livestock,

For the atrocity that lion committed, the pit yawns for him.

The well-heeled parvenu who treasured up possessions,

The king will put him to the flames before his time.

Would you wish to go the way these have gone?
Seek after the lasting reward of (your) god.

VII. Sufferer

Your reasoning is a cool breeze, a breath of fresh air for mankind,

Most particular friend, your advice is e[xc]cellent].

Let me [put] but one matter before you:

Those who seek not after a god can go the road of favor,^b

Those who pray to a goddess have grown poor and destitute.

Indeed, in my youth I tried to find out the will of (my) god,

With prayer and supplication I besought my goddess.

I bore a yoke of profitless servitude:

(My) god decreed (for me) poverty instead of wealth.

A cripple rises above me, a fool is ahead of me,

Rogues are in the ascendant, I am demoted.

VIII. Friend

O just, knowledgeable one, your logic is perverse,
You have cast off justice, you have scorned divine design.

In your emotional state you have an urge to disregard divine ordinances,

[...] the sound rules of your goddess.

The strategy of a god is [as remote as] innermost heaven,

The command of a goddess cannot be dr[awn out].

Teeming humanity well understands trouble,

[fragmentary lines, then large gap]

XIII. Sufferer

I will forsake home [...]

I will crave no property [...]

I will ignore (my) god's regulations, [I will] trample on his rites.

I will slaughter a calf, I will [...] the food,
I will go on the road, I will learn my way around distant places.

I will open a well, I will let loose a flood?,
I will roam about the far outdoors like a bandit.
I will stave off hunger by forcing entry into one house after another,

I will prowl the streets, casting about, ravenous.
Like a beggar I will [...] inside [...],
Good fortune lies afar off [...].

XIV. Friend

My friend, [you have] resolved [upon ...]
The transactions of mankind, which you had no urge to [...],
[...] are in your mind,
Your discretion has forsaken [you ...]

[fragmentary lines]

XV. Sufferer

[four lines lost]

Daughter says [unjust words] to her mother,
The fowler who casts [his net] is fallen (into it):
All in all, which one [will find] profit?
Many are the wild creatures that [...],
Which among them has gotten [...]?
Shall I seek son and daughter [...]?
Shall I not leave behind what I find [...]?

XVI. Friend

O modest, submissive one, who [...] all [...],
Your mind is always receptive, most precious one [...],

[fragmentary lines, then gap]

XVII. Sufferer

The son of a king is clad [in rags?],
The son of the destitute and naked is dressed in [fine raiment?].
The maltster [can pay in] finest gold,
While he who counted red gold bears a [debt?].
He who made do with vegetables [sates himself] at a princely banquet,
While the son of the eminent and wealthy (has only) carob to eat.
The man of substance is fallen, [his income] is removed.

[fragmentary lines, gap]

XX. Friend

You have let your subtle mind wander,
[...] you have overthrown wisdom.
You have spurned propriety, you have besmirched (every) code.
Far will be the workman's basket from him who ...
[...] is established as a person of importance,
[...] he is called a scholar,

c Deut 30:11-14

He is well served, he gets what he wants.
Follow in the way of a god, observe his rites,
[...] be ready for good fortune!

[gap]

XXII. Friend

As for the rascal whose good will you wanted,
The ... of his feet will soon disappear.
The godless swindler who acquires wealth,
A deadly weapon is in pursuit of him.
Unless you serve the will of a god, what will be your profit?
He who bears a god's yoke shall never want for food, though it may be meager.
Seek after the favorable breeze of the gods,
What you lost for a year you will recoup in a moment.

XXIII. Sufferer

I have looked around in society, indications are the contrary:
God does not block the progress of a demon.
A father hauls a boat up a channel,
While his first-born sprawls in bed.
The eldest son makes his way like a lion,
The second son is content to drive a donkey.
The heir struts the street like a peddler,
The younger son makes provision for the destitute.
What has it profited me that I knelt before my god?
It is I who must (now) bow before my inferior!
The riffraff despise me as much as the rich and proud.

XXIV. Friend

Adept scholar, master of erudition,
You blaspheme in the anguish of your thoughts.
Divine purpose is as remote as innermost heaven,
It is too difficult to understand, people cannot understand it.
Among all creatures the birth goddess formed,
Why should offspring be completely unmatched(?)?
The cow's first calf is inferior,
Her subsequent offspring is twice as big.
The first child is born a weakling,
The second is called a capable warrior.
Even if one (tries to) apprehend divine intention, people cannot understand it.

XXV. Sufferer

Pay attention, my friend, learn my (next) parry,
Consider the well-chosen diction of my speech.
They extol the words of an important man who is accomplished in murder,
They denigrate the powerless who has committed no crime.
They esteem truthful the wicked to whom truth is abhorrent,
They reject the truthful man who heeds the will of god.

They fill the oppressor's st[rongroom] with refined gold,
They empty the beggar's larder of [his] provisions.
They shore up the tyrant whose all is crime,
They ruin the weak, they oppress the powerless.
And as for me, without means, a parvenu harasses me.

XXVI. Friend

Enlil, king of the gods, who created teeming mankind,

Majestic Ea, who pinched off their clay,
The queen who fashioned them, mistress Mami,
Gave twisted words to the human race,
They endowed them in perpetuity with lies and falsehood.

Solemnly they speak well of a rich man,
"He's the king," they say, "he has much wealth."
They malign a poor man as a thief,
They lavish mischief upon him, they conspire to kill him.

They make him suffer every evil because he has no wherewithal(?).

They bring him to a horrible end, they snuff him out like an ember.

XXVII. Sufferer

You are sympathetic, my friend, be considerate of (my) misfortune.

Help me, see (my) distress, you should be cognizant of it.

Though I am humble, learned, suppliant,

I have not seen help or succor for an instant.

I would pass unobtrusively through the streets of my city,

My voice was not raised, I kept my speaking low.

I did not hold my head high, I would look at the ground.

I was not given to servile praise among my associates.

May the god who has cast me off grant help,

May the goddess who has [forsaken me] take pity,

The shepherd Shamash will past[ure] people as a god should.

REFERENCES

Text: Lambert BWL pls. 19-26. Translations and studies: Lambert BWL 63-89; ANET 438-440, 601-604; Foster BM 2:790-798, FDD 316-323.

2. DIALOGUE

DIALOGUE OF PESSIMISM OR THE OBLIGING SLAVE (1.155)

Alasdair Livingstone

(1) ["Slave, oblige me again!"] "Here, master! Here!"

["Get a move on and get ready] the chariot and harness up so I can go driving to the palace!"

["Go driving, master, go driving!] You'll achieve your goal!"

["...] will show you preference!"

(5) ["No, slave,] I will not go driving to the palace!"

["Do not go driving, master, do not go driving!"]

[The palace n]otable will send you off on his business and will make you take a [route] you don't know;

day and night he'll expose you to miseries."

(10) "Slave, [oblige] me [again]! "Here, master! Here!"

"Get a move on and get ready for me some hand abluion water and give it to me so I can sup!"

"Sup, master, sup! Having supper regularly makes one content.

[Even ...]. the supper of his god; Shamash approves of clean hands."

"No [slave], I definitely won't sup."

(15) "Don't sup, master, don't sup!"

To be hungry, or to eat, to be thirsty, or to drink, are but human."

"Slave, oblige me again! "Here, master! Here!"

"Get a move on and get ready the chariot and harness it up so I can drive off to the steppe!"

"Drive off master, drive off! The roving man has a full stomach.

(20) Even a prowling dog has a bone to crunch, and the roving raven finds a place to nest. The roaming wild ass finds its fill in the steppe."

"No, slave I will definitely not [drive off] to the steppe."

"Do not drive off, master, do not drive off!"

(25) The roving man may become insane, the prowling dog may break its teeth, as for the dwelling of the raven, it is but in the [crack] of a wall, while the roaming wild ass has its resting place in the wastes."

"Slave, oblige me again!" ["Here, master!
Here!"]

- (30) "I want to build a [house] and found a family!"

"Found one, [master], found one. [The man who builds] a house [...].

(Lines 32 to 38 contain textual disorder and substantial lacunae)

"Slave, oblige me again!" "Here, master!
Here!"

- (40) "See here, I'll go in for skulduggery!" "So go in for it, master, go in for it!

If you don't go in for skulduggery, what will be your finery?

Who will just give you handouts so you can fill your stomach?"

"No, slave, I will definitely not go in for skulduggery!"

"The man who goes in for skulduggery is killed,
flayed,

- (45) blinded, arrested or thrown in jail."

"Slave, oblige me again!" "Here, master!
Here!"

"I'm going to fall in love with a woman!"

"Fall in love, master, fall in love!

The man who falls in love with a woman forgets depression and melancholy."

"No way, slave, I will not fall in love with a woman."

- (50) "Don't fall in love, master, don't fall in love.
Woman is a well, she's a well, a pit, a hole.
Woman is a whetted iron dagger that cuts the throat of a fine man."

"Slave, oblige me again!" "Here, master!
Here!"

"Get a move on and get water for my hands and give it to me

- (55) so that I can make a sacrifice to my personal god!" "Make a sacrifice, master, make a sacrifice!

A man who makes a sacrifice to his personal god will be content.

On trust he is making loan upon loan."

"No way, slave. I will not make a sacrifice to my personal god."

"Don't do it, master, don't do it.

- (60) Can you teach your personal god to run after you like a dog?

He'll just demand of you rites, a votive statue, and many other things."

"Slave, oblige me again!" "Here, master!
Here!"

"I will act as a guarantor!" "So act as one,
master, act as one!

The man who acts as a guarantor: his grain remains his grain but his return is manifold."

- (65) "No way, slave, I will not act as a guarantor."

"Do not make loans, master, do not make loans.

The giving is like love-making, but the return is like childbirth.

They will eat your grain while cursing you again and again

and then make you do without the interest on your grain."

- (70) "Slave, oblige me again!" "Here, master!
Here!"

"I will carry out a good service for my country!" "So carry one out, master, carry one out.

The man who carries out a good service for his country,

his deeds are placed in the carrying basket of Marduk."

"No way, slave, I will not carry out a good service for my country."

- (75) "Don't carry one out, master, don't carry one out.

Go up onto the ancient ruin heaps and walk about!

Search out the skulls of high and low!

Which was a crook and which did good services?"

"Slave, oblige me again!" "Here, master!
Here!"

- (80) "Now then, what is good?"

"What's good is to break my neck and your neck

and to be thrown in the river.

Who is tall enough to ascend to the heavens?

Who is broad enough to encompass the earth?"

- (85) "No way, slave, I'll kill you and send you in advance."

"But my master wouldn't even survive me three days!"

REFERENCES

3. HUMOROUS TEXTS

"AT THE CLEANERS" (1.156)

Alasdair Livingstone

- | | |
|--|---|
| (1) "Come on fuller, let me give you instructions!
Wash my garment!
Don't ignore my instructions and don't carry out your own methods!
You should set the hem and the lining in place;
(5) you should stitch the front to the inside;
you should pick the thread of the border;
you should soak the thin part in beer;
you should carry out a filtering operation with a sieve;
you should loosen the hem of the lining;
(10) you should ... it in clean water;
you should purify it as if it were a fine cloth.
To the part ... like ...
to the edge bit ...
You should mix alkali and gypsum ...
(15) You should slap it on a washing-board.
You should stir it in a beer jug and you should
...
Yes indeed, you should stretch it over a ...,
you ... it and you should comb it out.
You should tap it with a wand of hardwood.
You should ... the fleecy part which has become flattened nap.
(20) The web, the work with the needle ...
You should squeeze the hem ... and let it cool down.
In the early evening, when the web has not yet become dry, you should take it and place it in | a receptacle, in a container.
(25) Then let it cool down! Carry this out and I'll reward you right away!
You will bring it to the house and ten liters of grain will be poured in your lap!"
The fuller answers him: "By Ea, Lord of Wisdom, who keeps me alive!
Cut it out! Not me. As to all you say, it's only the guys who lend me money and collect my taxes that have a nerve like you! And
(30) there's no-one whose hand can achieve the work.
What you instructed me I cannot even repeat, speak,
say, or reiterate.
Come, somewhere upstream from the city, at the outskirts of the city, let me show you a washing place. And then (35) carry out yourself the great exertions which are on you hands!
But dinnertime mustn't go by! Go on in and undo all the many threads done by the fuller!
If you don't compose yourself
there's no fuller who'll pay attention to you!
(40) They'll have contempt for you, you'll get all heated up and give yourself a fit!" |
|--|---|

REFERENCES

Gadd 1963:181-188; Livingstone 1988; George 1993:73 (collations after the tablet had been baked and cleaned); Foster 1992.

This page intentionally left blank

AKKADIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY

- ABUSCH, T.
1985 "Ishtar's Proposal and Gilgamesh's Refusal." History of Religions 26:143-187.
1995 "Etemmu." Pp. 588-593 in DDD.
- ALBERTZ, R.
1978 Persönliche Frömmigkeit und offizielle Religion. Stuttgart: Calwar.
- AL-RAWI, F. N. H.
1990 "Tablet from the Sippar Library, I: The 'Weidner Chronicle.'" Iraq 52:1-14.
- ARNAUD, D.
1986 Emar 6/3.
1987 Emar 6/4.
- ARNOLD, B. T.
1994 "The Weidner Chronicle and the Idea of History in Israel and Mesopotamia." Pp. 129-148 in FTH.
- ATTRIDGE, H. W., and R. A. ODEN.
1976 The Syrian Goddess. Missoula, MT: Scholars Press.
- BAUDOT, M.-P.
1982 "Representations in Glyptic Art of a Preserved Legend: Etana ..." Studies Naster 2:1-10.
- BIGGS, R.
1969 "A propos des textes de libanomancie." RA 63:73-74.
- BORGER, R.
1956 Asarh.
1971 "Gott Marduk und Gott-König Šulgi als Propheten." BiOr 28:3-24.
1979 BAL 3.
- BOTTÉRO, J.
1974 "Symptômes, signes, écritures en mesopotamie ancienne." Pp. 70-197 in Divination et Rationalité. Ed. by J. P. Vernant. Paris: Editions du Seuil.
1977 "Les noms de Marduk" Pp. 5-28 in Studies Finkelstein.
1992 L'Épopée de Gilgameš. Paris: Gallimard.
- BRINKMAN, J. A.
1964 "Merodach-Baladan II." Pp. 6-53 in Studies Oppenheim.
1968 A Political History of Post-Kassite Babylonia, 1158-722 B.C. AnOr 43. Rome.
1984 Prelude to Empire: Babylonian Society and Politics 747-626 BC. BFOP 7. Philadelphia: University Museum.
1990 "The Babylonian Chronicle Revisited." Pp. 73-104 in Studies Moran.
1991 "The Chaldaean Struggle for Independence." In CAH 3/2:26-38.
- BRUG, J. F.
1990 "Biblical Acrostics and their Relationship to Other Ancient Near Eastern Acrostics." Pp. 283-304 in SIC 3.
- BRYCE, G.
1975 "Omen Wisdom in Ancient Israel." JBL 94:19-37.
- BUCCELLATI, G.
1973 "Adapa, Genesis, and the Notion of Faith." UF 5:61-66.
1982 "The Descent of Inanna as a Ritual Journey to Kutha?" Syro-Mesopotamian Studies 4/3. Malibu.
- CAGNI, L.
1969 "L'Épopée di Erra." Studi Semitici 34. Rome.
1977 The Poem of Erra. Sources and Monographs, SANE 1/3. Malibu: Undena.
- CHAVALLAS, M.
1994 "Genealogical History as 'Charter': A Study of Old Babylonian Period Historiography and the Old Testament." Pp. 103-128 in FTH.
- CIVIL, M.
1976 "The Song of the Plowing Oxen." Studies Kramer 83-95.
- COGAN, M.
1984 "... From the Peak of Amanah." IEJ 34:255-259.
- CONRADIE, A. F.
1989 "The Calah Wall Inscriptions." JNSL 15:31-38.
- COOPER, J.
1972-75 "Heilige Hochzeit. B. Archäologisch." RIA 4:259-270.
1980 "Apodotic Death and the Historicity of 'Historical' Omens." Pp. 99-105 in RAI 26.
- CROSS, F. M.
1976 "The Olden Gods in Ancient Near Eastern Creation Myths." Pp. 329-338 in Studies Wright.
- CRYER, F.
1994 Divination in Ancient Israel and its Near Eastern Environment: A Socio-Historical Investigation. JSOTSup 142. Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press.
- DALLEY, S.
1987 Near Eastern Patron Deities of Mining and Smelting. Reports of the Department of Antiquities in Cyprus.
1989 Myths from Mesopotamia. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- DE FILIPPI
1977 "The Royal Inscriptions of Aššur-Nāšir-Apli II (883-859 B.C.): A Study of the Chronology of the Calah Inscriptions Together with an Edition of Two of These Texts." Assur 1/7:123-169. Malibu: Undena.

- DIETRICH, M.
 1989 "Das Einsetzungsritual der Ennu von Emar (Emar VI/3, 369)." UF 21:47-100.
 1993 "The Hymn to Marduk from Ugarit." Pp. 62-67 in Verses in Ancient Near Eastern Prose. Ed. by J. C. de Moor and W. G. E. Watson. AOAT 42. Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag.
- DIETRICH, M., and O. LORETZ.
 1981 "Die Inschrift der Statue des Königs Idrimi von Alalah." UF 13:201-268.
 1990 ALASP 3.
- VAN DIJK, J.
 1980 Texte aus dem Rêš-Heiligtum in Uruk-Warka. BaM Beiheft 2. Berlin: Gebr. Mann.
 1983 Lugal ud me-lâm-bi nir-gál, le récit épique et didactique des Travaux de Ninurta, du Déluge et de la Nouvelle Création. Leiden: E. J. Brill.
- VAN DIJK, J., A. GOETZE, and M. I. HUSSEY.
 1985 Early Mesopotamian Incantations and Rituals. YOS. Babylonian Texts 11. New Haven and London: Yale University Press.
- DOSSIN, G.
 1935 "Prières aux 'dieux de la nuit'." RA 32:179-187.
- DURAND, J.-M.
 1988 Archives épistolaires de Mari I/1. Paris: Éditions Recherche sur les Civilisations.
- EBELING, E.
 1949 "Ein Heldenlied auf Tiglatpileser I und der Anfang einer neuer Version von 'Ištar's Höllenfahrt' nach einer Schülertafel aus Assur." Or 18:30-39.
 1953 LKA.
- EDZARD, D.-O.
 1986 "Review of Kinnier Wilson 1985." ZA 76:134-137.
- ELLIS, M. de Jong
 1989 "Observations on Mesopotamian Oracles and Prophetic Texts: Literary and Historiographic Considerations." JCS 41:127-186.
- FARBER, W.
 1977 Beschwörungsrituale an Ištar und Dumuzi. Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz.
- FINET, A.
 1982 "Un cas de clédonomancie à Mari (ARM X, 4)." Pp. 48-55 in Studies Kraus.
- FINKEL, I. L.
 1983 "A New Piece of Libanomancy." Afo 29:50-57.
 1983-84 "Necromancy in Ancient Mesopotamia." Afo 29-30:1-17.
 1988 "Adad-apla-iddina, Esagil-kin-apli, and the Series SA.GIG." Pp. 143-159 in Studies Sachs.
 1995 "In Black and White, Remarks on the Assyrian Psephomancy Ritual." ZA 85:271-276.
- FINKELSTEIN, J. J.
 1956 "Hebrew hbr and Semitic *HBR." JBL 75:328-331.
 1962 "Mesopotamia." JNES 21:73-92.
 1966 "The Genealogy of the Hammurapi Dynasty." JCS 20:95-118.
- FLEMING, D. E.
 1990 "The NIN.DINGIR/ittu at Emar." NABU 8:5.
 1992 The Installation of Baal's High Priestess at Emar. Atlanta: Scholars Press.
 1993a "Nābū and munabbīātu: Two New Syrian Religious Personnel." JAOS 113:175-183.
 1993b "The Etymological Origins of the Hebrew *nābī*²: The One Who Invokes God." CBQ 55:217-224.
- FOSTER, B. R.
 1983 "Self-Reference of an Akkadian Poet." JAOS 103:123-130 = *Studies Kramer*².
 1992 "Humor and Wit in Mesopotamia." ABD 3:328-330.
 1995 FDD.
 1996 BM.
- GADD, C. J.
 1958 "The Harran Inscriptions of Nabonidus." AnSt 8:35-92.
 1963 "Two Sketches from the Life of Ur." Iraq 25:177-188.
- GALLERY KOVACS, M.
 1989 The Epic of Gilgamesh. Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press.
- GARDNER, J., and J. Maier.
 1984 Gilgamesh. New York: Knopf.
- GEORGE, A. R.
 1985 "Observations on a passage of 'Inanna's Descent.'" JCS 37:109-113.
 1993 "Ninurta-Paqidāt's Dog Bite, and Notes on Other Comic Tales." Iraq 55:73.
- GLASSNER, J.-J.
 1993 Chroniques mésopotamiennes. La roue à livres 19. Paris: Les Belles Lettres.
- GOETZE, A.
 1968 "An Old Babylonian Prayer of the Divination Priest." JCS 22:12-29.
- GRAYSON, A. K.
 1972 ARI.
 1975 Babylonian Historical-Literary Texts. Toronto: University of Toronto.
 1975 ABC.
 1980 "Königslisten und Chroniken. B. Akkadisch." RIA 6:89-101.
 1991 "Sennacherib." In *CAH*² 3/2:103-22.
- GREENBERG, M.
 1991 "Parting of the Ways." Pp. 267-271 in Studies Tadmor.

- GREENFIELD, J., and M. SOKOLOFF.
1989 "Astrological and Related Texts in Jewish Palestinian Aramaic." JNES 48:201-214.
- GREENSTEIN, E. L., and D. MARCUS.
1976 "The Akkadian Inscription of Idrimi." JANES 8:59-96.
- GRONEBERG, B. R. M.
1987 Syntax, Morphologie und Stil der jungbabylonischen "hymnischen" Literatur. 2. Belegsammlung und Textkatalog. FAOS 14/2. Wiesbaden and Stuttgart: Franz Steiner Verlag.
- GUINAN, A.
1989 "The Perils of High Living." Pp. 227-235 in Studies Sjöberg.
1990 "The Human Behavioral Omens: On the Threshold of Psychological Inquiry." BCSMS 19:9-14.
1996a "Social Constructions and Private Designs." Pp. 61-68 in Houses and Households in Ancient Mesopotamia. RAI 40. Ed. by K. R. Veenhof. PIHANS 78. Istanbul.
1996b "Right/Left Symbolism in Mesopotamian Divination." SAAB 9 in press.
- GURNEY, O. R.
1960 "The Sultantepe Tablets." AnSt 10:105-131.
- HAAS, V.
1979 "Remarks on Hurrian Ištar-Sawuska of Nineveh in the Second Millennium BC." Sumer 35:397-401.
- HAAS, V., and G. WILHELM.
1974 Hurritische und luwische Riten aus Kizzuwatna. Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag.
- HALLO, W. W.
1957-71 "Gutium." RIA 3:708-720.
1990 "The Limits of Skepticism." JAOS 110:187-199.
1966 "Akkadian Apocalypses." IEJ 16:231-242.
1968 "Individual Prayer in Sumerian: the Continuity of a Tradition." JAOS (= Studies Speiser) 88:71-89.
1970 "Antediluvian Cities." JCS 23:57-67.
1971a "Akkad." Encyclopaedia Judaica 16:493f.
1971b "Gutium." RIA 3/9:708-720.
1973 "Choice in Sumerian." JANES 5:165-172.
1977 "New Moons and Sabbaths." HUCA 48:1-18.
1978 "Assyrian Historiography Revisited." E-I 14:1*-7*.
1980a "Šullanu." RA 74:94.
1985 "'As the Seal upon thy Heart'." Bible Review 1/1:19-27.
1991a "Information from Before the Flood." Maarav 7:173-181.
1991b BP.
1991c "Death of Kings." Pp. 148-165 in Studies Tadmor.
- HALLO, W. W., and J. J. A. VAN DIJK
1968 The Exaltation of Inanna. YNER 3. New Haven and London: Yale University Press.
- HAWKINS, J. D.
1972-1975 "Hattin." RIA 4:160b-162a.
1980-1983 "Kummuh." RIA 6:338-340.
- HELTZER, M.
1981 The Suteans. Istituto Universitario Orientale, seminario di studi asiatici, series minor 13. Naples.
- HOFFNER, H. A.
1976 "Enki's command to Atrahasis." Pp. 241-245 in Studies Kramer.
- HOROWITZ, W., and V. HUROWITZ.
1992 "Urim and Thummim in Light of a Psephomancy Ritual from Assur (LKA 137)." JANES 21:95-115.
- HUFFMON, H.
1983 "Priestly Divination in Israel." Pp. 355-359 in Studies Freedman.
- HUNGER, H.
1968 Babylonische und assyrische Kolophone. AOAT 2. Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag.
1976 Spätbabylonische Texte aus Uruk I. Berlin: Mann.
- HUROWITZ, V.
1992a "The Expression ūq'sāmim b'yādām (Numbers 22:7) in Light of Divinatory Practices from Mari." HS 33:5-15.
1992b I Have Built You an Exalted House. JSOTSup 115. Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press.
- HUROWITZ, V., and J. G. WESTENHOLTZ.
1992 "LKA 63. A Heroic Poem in Celebration of Tiglath-Pileser I's Muṣru-Qumanu Campaign." JCS 42:1-50.
- IKEDA, Y.
1978 "Hermon, Sirion and Senir." AJBI 4:32-43.
1984-1985 "Assyrian Kings and the Mediterranean Sea — The Twelfth to Ninth Centuries B.C." Abr-Nahrain 23:22-31.
- JACOBSEN, T.
1975 "Religious Drama in Ancient Mesopotamia." Pp. 65-97 in Unity and Diversity.
1976 The Treasures of Darkness. New Haven and London: Yale University Press.
1984 "The Harab Myth." SANE 2/3:99-120.
- JEYES, U.
1978 "The 'Palace Gate' of the Liver: A Study of Terminology and Methods in Babylonian Extispicy." JCS 30:209-233.
1980 "The Act of Extispicy in Ancient Mesopotamia: An Outline." Assyriological Miscellanies 1:13-32. Copenhagen.
1989 Old Babylonian Extispicy: Omen Texts in the British Museum. PIHANS 64. Istanbul.
- KEMPINSKI, A., and N. NA'AMAN.
1973 "The Idrimi Inscription Reconsidered." Pp. 211-220 in Excavations and Studies: Essays in Honor of Shemuel Yeivin. Ed. by Y. Aharoni. Tel Aviv: Carta [Hebrew].

- KILMER, A. D.
 1971 "How Was Queen Ereshkigal Tricked?" UF 3:229-311.
 1987 "The Symbolism of the Flies in the Mesopotamian Flood Myth...." Pp. 175-180 in Studies Reiner.
- KINNIER WILSON, J. V.
 1985 The Legend of Etana. Warminster: Aris & Phillips.
- KLEIN, J.
 1981 "The Royal Hymns of Shulgi, King of Ur." Transactions of the American Philosophical Society. 71/7.
- KLEIN, H.
 1983 "Tudittum." ZA 73:255-284.
- KNUDTZON, J. A.
 1915 EA.
- KÖCHER, F., and A. L. OPPENHEIM.
 1957-58 "The Old-Babylonian Omen Text VAT 7525." Afo 18:62-77.
- KOMORÓCZY, G.
 1976 "Work and Strike of the Gods." Oikumene 1:9-37.
- KRAUS, F.
 1936-37 "Babylonische Omina mit Ausdeutung der Begleiterscheinungen des Sprechens." Afo 11:219-230.
 1939 Texte zur babylonischen Physiognomik. Afo Beiheft 3. Berlin.
- KUTSCHER, R.
 1988 "The Mesopotamian God Zaqr and Jacob's Maššēbāh." Beer-Sheva 3:125-130 (in Hebrew).
- LABAT, R.
 1965 Un Calendrier Babylonien des Travaux des Signes et des Mois. Paris.
- LAMBERT, W. G.
 1957-58 "Three Unpublished Fragments of the Tukulti-Ninurta Epic." Afo 18:38-51.
 1964 "The Reign of Nebuchadnezzar I." Studies Meek 3-13.
 1967 "Enmeduranki and Related Matters." JCS 21:126-139.
 1968 "Another Look at Hammurabi's Ancestors." JCS 22:1-2.
 1969a "New Evidence for the First Line of Atra-hasis." Or 38:533-538.
 1969b "An Eyestone of Esarhaddon's Queen and Other, Similar Gems." RA 63:65-71.
 1983 "A Neo-Babylonian Tammuz Lament." JAOS 103:211-215; rep. in Studies Kramer 2 (1984) 211-215.
 1987 "A further attempt at the Babylonian 'Man and his God'." Pp. 187-202 in Studies Reiner.
- LAMBERT, W. G., and A. R. MILLARD.
 1969 Atra-hasis: the Babylonian Story of the Flood. Oxford: Clarendon Press.
- LAMBERT, W. G., and S. B. PARKER.
 1966 Enuma Elish: The Babylonian Epic of Creation. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- LAMBERT, W. G., and P. WALCOT.
 1965 A New Babylonian Theogony and Hesiod. Offprint of Kadmos 4/1. Berlin: W. de Gruyter.
- LANGDON, S. H.
 1909 Sumerian and Babylonian Psalms. Paris, P. Geuthner.
- LAROCHE, E.
 1976-77 Glossaire de la langue hourrite. RHA 34-35. Paris: Éditions Klincksieck.
- LEICHTY, E.
 1964 "The Colophon." Pp. 147-154 in Studies Oppenheim.
 1970 The Omen Series Šumma Izbu. TCS 4. Locust Valley, New York: J. J. Augustin.
 1977 "Literary Notes." Pp. 147-154 in Studies Finkelstein.
 1993 "Ritual, 'Sacrifice', and Divination in Mesopotamia." Pp. 238-242 in Ritual and Sacrifice in the Ancient Near East. Ed. by J. Quaebeur. OLA 55. Leuven.
- LEIDERER, R.
 1990 Anatomie der Schafsheber im babylonischen Leberorakel: eine makroskopisch-analytische Studie. Bern and San Francisco: W. Zuckschwerdt.
- LEVINE, B. A., and W. W. HALLO.
 1967 "Offerings to the Temple Gates at Ur." HUCA 38:17-58.
- LEWIS, B.
 1980 The Sargon Legend. ASORDS 4.
- LIEBERMAN, S.
 1977 "The Names of Cuneiform Graphemes in Old Babylonian Akkadian." Pp. 147-154 in Studies Finkelstein.
- LIPINSKI, E.
 1970 "Urim and Tummim." VT 20:495-496.
 1988 "Ea, Kothar et El." UF 20:137-143.
- LIVERANI, M.
 1982 "Adapa ospite degli dei." Pp. 55-67 in Religioni e Civiltà. Scritti in memoria di Angelo Brelich. Ed. by V. Lanternari, et al. Bari: Edizione Dedalo.
- LIVINGSTONE, A.
 1980 "A Fragment of a Work Song." ZA 70:55-57.
 1988 "'At the Cleaners' and Notes on Humorous Literature." Pp. 175-187 in Ad bene et fideliter seminandum. Festschrift für Karlheinz Deller. Ed. by G. Mauer and U. Magen. AOAT 220. Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag.
 1989 Court Poetry and Literary Miscellanea. SAA 3. Helsinki: Helsinki University Press.
- LONG, B.
 1973 "The Effect of Divination upon Israelite Literature." JBL 92:489-497.

- LONGMAN, T., III.
1991 Fictional Akkadian Autobiography. Winona Lake, IN: Eisenbrauns.
- MCLAUGHLIN, J. L.
1991 "The marzēaḥ at Ugarit: A Textual and Contextual Study." UF 23:265-281.
- MACMILLAN, K.
1906 "Some Cuneiform Tablets Bearing on the Religion of Babylonia and Assyria." Beiträge zur Assyriologie 5/5:531-712.
- MALAMAT, A.
1968 "King Lists of the Old Babylonian Period and Biblical Genealogies." JAOS 88:163-173 (= Studies Speiser).
- MANN, T. W.
1977 Divine Presence and Guidance in Israelite Tradition: the Typology of Exaltation. Johns Hopkins Near Eastern Studies. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press.
- MARTIN, F.
1903 Textes religieux assyriens et babyloniens, première série. Paris.
- MATSUSHIMA, E.
1987 "Le rituel hiérogamique de Nabû." ActSum 9:131-175.
- MATTINGLY, G. L.
1990 "The Pious Sufferer: Mesopotamia's Traditional; Theodicy and Job's Counselors." Pp. 305-348 in SIC 3.
- MAYER, W.
1987 "Ein Mythos von der Erschaffung des Menschens und des Königs." Or 56:55ff.
- MEIER, S.
1989 "House Fungus: Mesopotamia and Israel (Lev 14:33-53)." RB 96:184-192.
- MEYER, J.-W.
1987 Untersuchungen zu den Tontafelmodellen aus dem Alten Orient. AOAT 39. Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag.
- MICHALOWSKI, P.
1980 "Adapa and the ritual process." Rocznik Orientalistyczny 41:77-82.
- MILGROM, J.
1991 Leviticus 1-16. A New Translation with Introduction and Commentary. AB 3. New York: Doubleday.
- MILLARD, A. R.
1976 "Assyrian Royal Names in Biblical Hebrew." JSS 21:1-14.
1980 "Review of ABC." JAOS 100:364-68.
1994 The Eponyms of the Assyrian Empire 910-612 BC. SAAS 2. Helsinki: University of Helsinki, Neo-Assyrian Text Corpus Project.
- MORAN, W. L.
1959 "Notes on the New Nabonidus Inscriptions." Or 28:135-136.
- MOREN, S. M.
1978 The Omen Series Šumma Ālu: A Preliminary Investigation. Ph.D. Dissertation. University of Pennsylvania. Ann Arbor: University Microfilms.
1980 "Šumma Izbu XIX: New Light on the Animal Omens." Afo 27:53-70.
- MUELLER, H.-P.
1983-84 "Mythus als Gattung archaischen Erzählens und die Geschichte von Adapa." Afo 29-30:75-89.
- MÜLLER, K. Fr.
1937 "Das assyrische Ritual, Teil I." MVAG 41/3:4-89.
- NEUGEBAUER, O.
1947 "The Water Clock in Babylonian Astronomy." Isis 37:37-43; repr. Astronomy and History. New York: Springer, 1983, 239-245.
- NOEGEL, S. B.
1991 "A Janus Parallelism in the Gilgamesh Flood Story." ActSum 13:419-421.
- NÖTSCHER, F.
1928-30 "Die Omen-Serie šumma ālu ina mēlê šakin." Or 31:39-42, 51-54.
- NOUGAYROL, J.
1952 "Un version ancienne du 'juste souffrant'." RB 59:239-250.
1963 "Aleuromancie babylonien." Or 32:318-384.
1968 "Textes suméro-accadiens des archives et bibliothèques privées d'Ugarit." Ugaritica 5:1-446.
- OELSNER,
1964 "Ein Beitrag zu keilschriftlichen Königstitulaturen in hellenistischer Zeit." ZA 56:262-274.
- OLLER, G. H.
1977a The Autobiography of Idrimi: A New Text Edition with Philological and Historical Commentary. Ph.D. diss. University of Pennsylvania.
1977b "A Note on Lines 102-104 of the Idrimi Inscription." JCS 29:167-168.
- OLYAN, S.
1994 "'And With a Male You Shall Not Lie the Lying Down of a Woman': On the Meaning and Significance of Leviticus 18:22 and 20:13." Journal of the History of Sexuality 5/2:179-206.
- OPPENHEIM, A. L.
1954-56 "Sumerian: inim.gar, Akkadian: egirru = Greek: kledon." Afo 17:49-55.
1956 The Interpretation of Dreams in the Ancient Near East. Transactions of the American Philosophical Society 46/3. Philadelphia.
1959 "A New Prayer to the 'Gods of the Night'." AnBib 12:282-301.
1964 Ancient Mesopotamia. Chicago: The University of Chicago Press.
1967 Letters from Mesopotamia. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
1969 "New Fragments of the Assyrian Dream-Book." Iraq 31:153-165.
1977 Ancient Mesopotamia. 2nd ed. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.

- OPPERT, J.
1901 "Une complainte des villes chaldéennes sur la suprématie de Babylone, de l'époque des successeurs d'Alexandre." CRAIB 1901:830-846.
- PARPOLA, S.
1980 "The Murderer of Sennacherib." Pp. 171-182 in RAI 26.
- PEDERSÉN, O.
1986 Archives and Libraries in the City of Assur. A Survey of the Material from the German Excavations. 2. Acta Universitatis Upsaliensis. SSU 8. Uppsala: Almqvist & Wiksel.
- PEEK, P. Editor.
1991 African Divination Systems: Ways of Knowing. Bloomington: Indiana University Press.
- PETTINATO, G.
1966 Die Öhwahrsagung bei den Babyloniern. 2 Vols. Studia Semitica 22-23. Rome.
- PICCHIONI, S. A.
1981 Il Poemetto di Adapa. Assyriologia 6. Budapest: Az Eötvös Loránd Tudományegyetem.
- PINCHES, T. G.
1901 "Assyriological Gleanings, II." PSBA 23:188-210.
1902 The Old Testament in the Light of Historical Records and Legends of Assyria and Babylonia. 2nd Edition. London, S.P.C.K.
- PINGREE, D.
1993 "Venus Phenomenon in Enûma Anu Enlil." Pp. 259-273 in RAKM.
- POPE, M.
1970 "The Saltier of Atargatis Reconsidered." Pp. 178-196 in Studies Glueck.
- PORTER, P.
1983 Metaphors and Monsters: A Literary-Critical Study of Daniel 6-7. Coniectanea Biblica. OT series 20. Uppsala.
- READ, J.
1989 "Shalmaneser or Ashurnasirpal in Ararat." SAAB 3:93-97.
- REINER, E.
1960a "Plague Amulets and House Blessings." JNES 19:148-155.
1960b "Fortune-Telling in Mesopotamia." JNES 19:23-35.
1978 "Die akkadische Literatur." Pp. 151-210 in Altorientalische Literaturen. Neues Handbuch der Literaturwissenschaft 1. Ed. by W. Röllig. Wiesbaden: Akademische Verlagsgesellschaft Athenaion.
1985 Your Thwarts in Pieces Your Mooring Rope Cut: Poetry from Babylonia and Assyria. Michigan Studies in the Humanities 5. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan.
1995 Astral Magic in Babylonia. Philadelphia: The American Philosophical Society.
- ROCHBERG-HALTON, F.
1988 Aspects of Babylonian Celestial Divination: Lunar Eclipse Tablets of Enûma Anu Enlil. AfO Beiheft 22. Horn, Austria: Ferdinand Berger.
- ROTH, W. M. W.
1962 "The Numerical Sequence $x/x+1$ in the Old Testament." VT 12:301-311.
- SASSON, J.
1981 "On Idrimi and Šarruwa, the Scribe." Pp. 309-324 in Nuzi and the Hurrians. Ed. by M. A. Morrison and D. I. Owen. Winona Lake, IN: Eisenbrauns.
1983 "Mari Dreams." JAOS 103:283-293.
1994 "Divine divide: re FM 2:71:5." NABU 1994:39-40.
- SMITH, S.
1949 The Statue of Idri-mi. London: British Institute of Archaeology in Ankara.
- VAN SOLDT, W.
1995 Solar Omens of Enûma Anu Enlil: Tablets 23(24)-29 (30). PIHANS 73. Istanbul.
- STARR, I.
1976 "Notes on Some Technical Terms in Extispicy." JCS 27:241-247.
1983 The Rituals of the Diviner. BiMes 12. Malibu: Undena Publications.
1990 Queries to the Sun God: Divination and Politics in Sargonid Assyria. SAA 4. Helsinki: Helsinki University Press.
- STOL, M.
1988 "Greek Deikterion: the Lying-in-state of Adonis." Pp. 127-128 in Funerary Symbols and Religion. Essays Dedicated to Professor M. S. H. G. Heerma van Voss. Ed. by J. H. Kamstra, H. Milde, and K. Wagtendonk. Kampen.
1992 "The Moon as Seen by the Babylonians." Pp. 245-276 in Natural Phenomena: Their Meaning, Depiction, and Description in the Ancient Near East. Proceedings of the Colloquium, Amsterdam, 6-8 July 1989. Ed. by D. J. W. Meijer. Amsterdam and New York: North-Holland.
- STRONG, S. A.
1894 "On Some Oracles of Esarhaddon and Ašurbanipal." BA 2:627-645.
- TADMOR, H.
1958 "The Campaigns of Sargon II of Assur: a Chronological-Historical Study." JCS 12:22-40.
- THUREAU-DANGIN, F.
1912 Une relation de la huitième campagne de Sargon. TCL 3. Paris.
- TIGAY, J. H.
1982 The Evolution of the Gilgamesh Epic. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press.
1985 Editor. Empirical Models for Biblical Criticism. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press.
- VAN DER TOORN, K.
1985 Sin and Sanction in Israel and Mesopotamia. Assen-Maastricht, The Netherlands: van Gorcum.
1990 "The Nature of the Biblical Teraphim in the Light of the Cuneiform Evidence." CBQ 52:203-222.

- TOURNAY, R. J., and A. SHAFFER.
1994 L'Épopée de Gilgamesh. LAPO 15. Paris: Cerf.
- TSEVAT, M.
1987 "Note brève, Erra IV, 7-10." RA 81:184.
- VAN DAM, C.
1993 The Urim and Thummim. An Old Testament Means of Revelation. Winona Lake, IN: Eisenbrauns.
- VANSTIPHOUT, H., and N. VELDHUIS.
1995 "tuppi ilāni takāltu pirišti šamē u eršetim." Annali 55/1:30-33. Napoli.
- VELDHUIS, N. C.
1990 "The Heart Grass and Related Matters." OLP 21:28-44.
- VON VOIGTLANDER, E. N.
1964 Survey of Neo-Babylonian History. Ann Arbor: University Microfilms.
- WALCOT, P.
1966 Hesiod and the Near East. Cardiff: Wales University Press.
- WALKER, C. B. F., H. GALTER, and B. SCHOLZ.
1993 "Bibliography of Babylonian Astronomy and Astrology." Pp. 274-290 in RAKM.
- WEIDNER, E.
1939-41 "Assurbānīpal in Assur." AfO 13:204-218.
- WEINBERG, J. P.
1973 "Das beir ʿabor im 6.-4. Jh. v.u.Z.." VT 23:400-414.
- WHITCOMB, J. C.
1959 Darius the Mede. Nutley, NJ: Presbyterian and Reformed Publishing Co.
- WISEMAN, D. J.
1965 "Some Historical Problems in the Book of Daniel: A. Darius the Mede." Pp. 9-16 in Notes on Some Problems in the Book of Daniel. Ed. by D. J. Wiseman, et al. London: Tyndale Press.
- WOLTERS, A.
1993 "An Allusion to Libra in Daniel 5." Pp. 291-306 in RAKM.
- ZADOK, R.
1985 Geographical Names According to New- and Late-Babylonian Texts. RG 8.
-

This page intentionally left blank

SUMERIAN CANONICAL COMPOSITIONS

This page intentionally left blank

A. DIVINE FOCUS

This page intentionally left blank

1. MYTHS

THE SONG OF THE HOE (1.157)

Gertrud Farber

The ancient scribe seemingly had a humorous purpose in mind when composing this text. It should probably be categorized as a satirical school text composed for use in the Edubba (= school) and for other learned people.¹ The composition has no coherent topic or theme. The thread winding through the whole text is the syllable /al/ which is a Sumerian logogram meaning hoe but which also occurs as part of other words or as a grammatical element. Thus the text contains sections in which the hoe is the main topic: a mythological section on creation, a hymnical praise of the hoe, or the description of the hoe's use in agriculture or when building temples. These sections are only loosely connected as if they had been examples of scholastic exercises. In addition to that, however, /al/ has been abstracted as a syllable and is used throughout the composition in quite imaginative alliterations and puns, some of which still resist all our attempts of understanding. Such poetic devices unfortunately get completely lost when translated literally. The following translation will try therefore to mark them by adding short explanations in parentheses or in the notes, and by marking all words which contain the syllable /al/ (or sometimes /ar/) with an asterisk.

The text has 109 lines of which 92 have been included here. (....) marks abridged text. So far this text has been preserved in 70 copies from Nippur, 6 from Ur and 13 from other cities. About 12 originally contained the complete composition; all others are excerpts. All sources are from the Old Babylonian period. The exact date of the origin of the text is not known.² But the presence of the goddess Nininsina points to the Isin period and the clearly astral aspect of the god Shulpaca³ does not allow an earlier date.⁴

Creation of the World (lines 1-7)

Not only did the lord who never *changes his promises for the future make the world appear in its correct form,

— Enlil who will make the seed of *mankind rise from the earth — not only did he hasten to separate heaven from earth,

(....) and earth from heaven, but, in order to make it possible for humans to grow "where the flesh sprouts," he first affixed the axis of the world in Duranki.⁵

Introducing the Hoe (lines 8-17)

He did this with the help of the *hoe and (as a result) daylight *broke forth.

By distributing the shares of duty he established daily tasks and for the *hoe and the (carrying) basket even wages were *established.⁶

Then Enlil praised his *hoe:

his *hoe, wrought in gold,⁷ with a top inlaid with lapis lazuli, his *hoe whose blade was tied (to the handle) with a string, which was adorned with silver and gold, whose blade was like a battering ram standing up against a *wall.

The lord evaluated the *hoe. (....)

Creation of Mankind (lines 18-27)

Here, "where the flesh sprouts," he set this very *hoe to work:

he had it place the first model of mankind in the brickmold.⁸

And (according to this model) his *people started to break through the soil towards Enlil,⁹

¹ For the humorous aspect of this text, see Wilcke 1972:37, and Farber forthcoming, with additional bibliography.

² See Wilcke 1972:37. Wilcke compares the irregularities and the many variants of the grammatical elements with those of compositions which are known from older periods. I rather think that the arbitrary use of grammatical elements as well as the high sophistication of the text suggests a later date. It is quite clear, however, that the poet was mainly thinking in the Sum. language, even though some puns and allusions rather fit Akk. words, a fact that also would date this composition into a period after the collapse of the Sum. empire.

³ Falkenstein 1963:21, 33.

⁴ No complete edition of the text has been published yet. For the sources see HKL 1:155; 2:84 ad TCL 16:72. For partial translations and discussion of the text see Kramer 1944:51-53; Jacobsen 1946:134; Civil 1969:70; Wilcke 1972:36-38; Pettinato 1971:82-85.

⁵ "Where the flesh sprouts" is the name of a sacred site in Nippur. Duranki is located in the middle of Enlil's temple complex in Nippur.

⁶ Hoe and basket are tools used for brick making and processing. The hoe stirs the clay and puts it in brick molds. The dried bricks are carried in baskets; see lines 35-58 and line 98.

⁷ The ordinary hoe was made of wood, even with a wooden blade. What is described here is Enlil's hoe.

⁸ The hoe works here (creation) just as it does in brick making; see lines 10 and 96.

⁹ Two different traditions of creation are intertwined here, the creation from seeds where mankind grows like a weed and breaks through the

and he looked approvingly at his "blackheaded people."¹⁰

Now the Anuna-gods¹¹ stepped up to him: (....) they wanted to demand the "blackheaded people" from him.

The lady who (once upon a time) had given birth to the ruler, who had given birth to the king, Ninmena now *set the human reproduction going.

Assignment of Tasks to the Human Race (lines 28-34)
The foremost of heaven and earth, the lord Nunamnir (= Enlil), named the strong and *important leaders (....) and recruited them for the gods to provide (for them).

Now Enki praised (Enlil's) *hoe, and the girl Nidaba was made responsible for (keeping a record of) the decision.

And so (the people) *took the shining *hoes, the pure *hoes into their hands (and started to work):

Building of Temples (lines 35-58)¹²

(The Ekur in Nippur: 35-41; the Abzu in Eridu: 42-45; Ninhursaga's temple in Kesh: 46-48; the Eanna in Uruk: 49-51; Inanna's temple in Zabalam: 52-55; Nidaba's "equal temple": 56-58)

The Ekur, the temple of Enlil, was founded with the hoe, during the day it *was building, during the night it *caused (the temple) to grow.

Into Nippur, the well founded, (....)

into the innermost chamber of the *Tummal entered the hero Ninurta with regular food deliveries into the presence of Enlil, (....)

and so did the pure Nininsina with black kids and fruit offerings for the lord.

(Next comes) the Abzu, the one with the lion face (= its gate), where the divine offices *may not be claimed:¹³

The *hoe wielder (= builder), (....), the lord Nudimmud (= Enki), *was building the Abzu, Eridu having been chosen as a *construction site.

The mother of the gods, Ninhursaga, had the *"mighty light of the lord" live with her in Kesh, had Shulpaea indeed help her with the *construction work.

The temple Eanna was cleaned up by the *hoe.

— (For) the lady of Eanna (= Inanna), the noble *cow, the *hoe stands for (cleaning up) ruins; the *hoe means (removing) weeds. —

Concerning the city of *Zabalam the *hoe is Inanna's work force. (....)

With (her) *building project Utu was ready to help her.

(....)

The lady with the *intelligent mind, Nidaba, ordered the measuring of the Eanna as (part of) a *construction project and (according to the result) designed (her own) "Equal Temple" for *construction.

Other Gods and their Relationship with the Hoe or the Syllable /al/ (lines 59-70)

The *king who has measured (or: counted) the *hoe(s), who has *spent the day in the tracks (made by the hoe), the hero Ninurta has introduced working with the *hoe in the *rebellious land:

he *subdues¹⁴ the city that does not obey (its) lord.

Towards heaven he *roars like a storm, earthwards he *strikes like a *dragon.

Shara sat down on Enlil's knees,¹⁵ and (Enlil) gave him what he had *desired:

mace, weapon, arrow, quiver, and the *hoe he had mentioned.

Dumuzi is the one who makes the "upper land" *fertile.

Gibil made his *hoe lift its head towards heaven, the *hoe, the pure one indeed, he had refined with fire.

The Anuna were *rejoicing.

The Syllable /al/ Occurs in Sumerian Words in all Aspects of Life (lines 71-93)

The temple of Geshitinanna resembled an *alġarsur-instrument, (....) which had a beautiful sound.

The lord (= Enlil) bellowed at his *hoe like a bull.¹⁶

(Concerning) the *grave: the *hoe buries people, but the dead body is also brought up from the earth by the *hoe.¹⁷

The hero honored by An, the younger brother of *Nergal, soil, and the creation through the molding of a clay model.

¹⁰ The blackheaded people are the Sumerians.

¹¹ Anuna gods refers to all senior gods, here excluding Enlil who is the highest Anuna.

¹² As explained above, see note 6, the hoe was an important tool in the brick making process and therefore was used in the building of temples.

¹³ This refers to the composition "Inanna and Enki" (see text 1.161 below), in which the goddess Inanna takes the ME (= divine offices) from Enki, in front of the lion gate of the Abzu.

¹⁴ The hoe is here used either as a weapon (see also line 97), or as a stirring tool (see note 6), thus creating chaos in the enemy country.

¹⁵ This denotes a begging position.

¹⁶ Enlil's bellowing must be understood as affectionate.

¹⁷ Digging up a dead body may refer to the composition "Gilgamesh, Enkidu, and the Netherworld" where the shadow of the dead Enkidu is brought up through a hole to bring news about the underworld, see Civil 1969:70.

the warrior Gilgamesh: with the *hoe he is (as powerful as) a hunting net.

The son of Ninsun: with the *oars he is foremost, with the hoe he is the great *barber of the river.¹⁸
(....)

In the sky (/al/) is the *ALTRIKU-bird, the bird of the god, for the earth (/al/) is the *hoe, in the canebrake it is a *dog, in the forest it is a *dragon.

On the battle field it is the *DURALLUL-ax.

At the city wall it is the *warfare net.

At the dining table it is the *maltum-bowl.

At the carriage it is the *majaltum-sledge.

In the donkey stable it is the *ARGIBIL-structure.

It is the *hoe! Its name (= the sound of this word) which is sweet, also *occurs in the mountains:

the wood of the mountains is the *allānum-oak,

the fragrance of the mountains is the *argānum-balm,

the rock of the mountains is the *ALGAMEŠUM-steatite.

The Practical Use of the Hoe (lines 94-106)

The *hoe makes (everything) prosper, the *hoe makes (everything) grow lush, the *hoe (means) good barley, the *hoe (works like) a hunting net.¹⁹

The *hoe (has to do with) the brickmold, the *hoe has made mankind *appear.²⁰

It is the *hoe that is the arm of young manhood.²¹

The *hoe and the basket are the tools for building cities.²²

It *builds the right kind of house, it *cultivates the right kind of field.

You (oh hoe!) are the one who *makes the good field fertile.

The field that has *rebelled against its *owner, the field that has not submitted to its *owner, the *hoe makes it subdue to its *master: it smashes off the heads from the halfa-grass, at its roots it extracts it, it tears off its stalks, the *hoe (also) *subdues the HURIN-weed.

Doxology to the Hoe and Nidaba Follows.

¹⁸ This refers to the cutting of weeds in the waterways for better boating.

¹⁹ The hoe is compared to the net as a means of chasing birds away from the crop.

²⁰ For this see notes 6 and 8.

²¹ Is the hoe thought of as a weapon in this case? See note 14.

²² See note 6.

REFERENCES

HLK 1:155; 2:84 ad TCL 16:72 = de Genouillac 1930; Civil 1969; Falkenstein 1963; Farber forthcoming; Jacobsen 1946; Kramer 1944:51-53; Pettinato 1971:82-85; Wilcke 1972.

THE ERIDU GENESIS (1.158)

Thorkild Jacobsen

The fragment here translated was written at some time around 1600 B.C. It constitutes the lower third of a six-column tablet, the upper part of which, containing roughly some 36 lines per column, is lost. The content of the lost sections can be restored to some extent from other versions of the same tradition, most of which are of later date. By the time of the Assyrian Empire the tradition in somewhat shortened form had been included in the so-called Babylonian Chronicle (cf. Text 1.137 above), heading it.

The story, which has a structure much like that of the biblical stories in Genesis, dealt with the creation of men and animals, the antediluvian cities and their rulers, and finally the Deluge, paralleling in order the creation, the antediluvian patriarchs, and the story of the Deluge in the Bible. It may conceivably have served as model or inspiration for the biblical account.

(long lacuna)

Mother Goddess Pities the Nomad Existence of Man [Nintur¹] was paying [attention:]

"Let me bethink myself of my humankind,
(all) forgotten as they are;

and mind[ful] of mine, Nintur's, creatures

let me bring them back,

let me lead the people back from their trails."

"May they come and build cities and cult places, that I may cool myself in their shade;

may they lay the bricks for the cult cities in pure spots, and may they found places for divination

in pure spots!"

She gave directions for purification, and cries for clemency, the things that cool (divine) wrath,

¹ Goddess of birth and creatrix of man.

(10') perfected the divine service and the august offices, said to the (surrounding) regions: "Let me institute peace there!"

When An, Enlil, Enki, and Ninhursaga² fashioned the dark-headed (people),³ they had made the small animals (that come up) from (out of) the earth come from the earth in abundance and had let there be, as befits (it), gazelles, (wild) donkeys, and four-footed beasts in the desert.

[...]

(Lost account of first attempt at city-building failing for lack of leadership[?])

Mother Goddess Institutes Kingship

["..."] and let me have [h]im [a]dvise;
let me have him overse[e] their [la]bor, and let him [teach] the nation to follow along unerringly like [cat]tle!"

When the royal [sce]pter was com[ing] down from heaven, the august [cr]own and the royal [th]rone being already down from heaven, he (the king) [regularly] performed to perfection the august divine services and offices, laid [the bricks] of those cities [in pure spots.]

(40') They were [n]amed by name and [allotted] [ha]lf-bushel baskets.⁴

First Cities

The firstling of those cities, Eridu, she gave to the leader Nudimmud,⁵ the second, Bad-Tibira,⁶ she gave to the prince and the sacred one⁷

the third, Larak, she gave to Pahilsag,⁸

the fourth, Sippar, she gave to the gallant, Utu.⁹

the fifth, Shuruppak, she gave to Ansud.¹⁰

These cities, which had been named by names, and had been allotted half-bushel baskets,

dredged the canals, which were blocked with purplish

(wind-borne) clay, and they carried water.

Their cleaning of the smaller canals established abundant growth.

[...]

(Lost account of the antediluvian rulers,¹¹ and of how human noises vexed the chief god Enlil so much that he persuaded the divine assembly to vote the destruction of man by the deluge.)

That day Nin[tur] wept over her creatures and holy Inanna¹² [was full] of grief over their people;

but Enki to[ok] counsel with his own heart.

An, Enlil, Enki,¹³ and Ninhursaga had the gods of heaven and earth [swear¹⁴] by the names An and Enlil.

Ziusudra's Vision of the Gods Assembling

At that time Ziusudra was king and lustration priest.

He fashioned, being a seer,

the god of giddiness¹⁵

and [stood] in awe beside it, wording his wishes humbly.

[As he] stood there regularly day after day

(90') something that was not a dream was appearing: conversa[tion]

² The triad An, Enlil, and Ninhursaga constituted originally the highest deities. Ninhursaga, "mistress of the foothills," who was normally considered identical with Nintur, is here apparently seen as a different goddess.

³ A standing epithet for mankind, specifically for the Sumerians themselves.

⁴ Half-bushel baskets seem to have been used to pay workers the grain rations that constituted their wages. Apparently they serve here as symbols of the major centers of the economy. The word for them was also used to denote a standard measure used as a check.

⁵ A name for Enki.

⁶ The present mound Medinah.

⁷ "The prince" is presumably the god Dumuzi. "The sacred one" is an epithet of Inanna's.

⁸ Larak has not yet been located. Its city god Pabilsag is a god of trees.

⁹ Sippar is the present mound of Abu-Habba. Its city god, Utu — Akkadian Shamash — was god of the sun and of righteousness.

¹⁰ Shuruppak is the present mound Fara. Its city goddess Sud or Ansud "the lush ear of grain" was a grain goddess. As consort of Enlil she was known as Ninlil.

¹¹ The list as found in parallel accounts differs on minor points. The form in which it appeared in the Dynastic Chronicle probably read "in Eridu Ahulim reigned 36,000 years, Alagar ruled 10,800 years. Two kings reigned 46,000 years, Eridu's term. Eridu's term was commuted. In Bad-Tibira Enmenluanna reigned 46,800 years, Enmengalanna reigned 64,800 years. Dumuzi, the shepherd, reigned 36,000 years. Three kings reigned 147,600 years, Bad-Tibira's term. Bad-Tibira's term was commuted. In Sippar Enmeduranki reigned 64,800 years. One king reigned 64,800 years. Sippar's term. Sippar's term was commuted. In Larak Ensipadzianna reigned 36,000 years. One king reigned 36,000 years, Larak's term. Larak's term was commuted. In Shuruppak Ubaratutu reigned 28,800 years. Ziusudra reigned 64,800 years. Two kings reigned 93,600 years, Shuruppak's term. Five individual cities, nine kings reigned 352,800 years, their terms. Enlil took a dislike to mankind, the clamor they made kept him sleepless."

The reigns were extraordinarily long. A similar feature is the long life of the biblical antediluvian patriarchs. For Mesopotamia, a document called "The Lagash King List" indicates that these early people were thought to have developed very slowly. The idea is also found in Greece, where the childhood of the people of Hesiod's silver age lasted a hundred years.

¹² A many-sided deity, among other things goddess of love and war.

¹³ God of the waters in rivers and marshes and god of practical wisdom.

¹⁴ The oath was one of abiding by the decisions of the assembly.

¹⁵ Ecstasy was apparently induced — as in the modern dancing dervishes — by giddiness, which was why Ziusudra made a statue of the god inducing it. The ancient rulers combined administrative, military, and priestly functions. To the last mentioned belonged divination, because it a swearing (of) oaths by heaven and earth, [a touching of throats]¹⁶ and the gods [bringing their] thwar[ts] (up) to [K]iur.¹⁷

Enki's Advice

And as Ziusudra stood there beside it, he [went on he]aring:

"Step up to the wall to my left and listen!
Let me speak a word to you at the wall
[and may you grasp] what [I] say,
May you he[ed] my advice!
By our hand a flood will sweep over (the cities of) the half-bushel bas[kets, and the country;]
[the decision,] that mankind is to be destroyed, has been made.
a verdict, a command of the assemb[ly cannot be revoked,]
(100') an order of An and En[lil is not known ever to have been countermanded,] their kingship, their term, [has been uprooted they must bethink themselves of that]

Now [...]

What I ha[ve to say to you ..."]

[...]

(Lost account of Enki's advice to build a boat and load it with pairs of living things and Ziusudra's compliance.)

The Deluge

All the evil winds, all stormy winds gathered into one and with them, then, the Flood was sweeping over (the cities of)
the half-bushel baskets
for seven days and seven nights.
After the flood had swept over the country, after the evil wind had tossed the big boat about on the great waters,
the sun came out spreading light over heaven and
earth.

Ziusudra's Offering at End of Flood

All the evil winds, all stormy winds gathered into one and with them, then, the Flood was sweeping over (the cities of)
the half-bushel baskets
for seven days and seven nights.
After the flood had swept over the country,
after the evil wind had tossed the big boat about on the great waters, the sun came out spreading light over heaven and earth.

Ziusudra's Offering at End of Flood

Ziusudra then drilled an opening in the big boat.
and the gallant Utu sent his light into the interior of the big boat.

(140') Ziusudra, being the king, stepped up before Utu kissing the ground (before him).

The king was butchering oxen, was being lavish with the sheep

[barley cak]es, crescents together with [...]

[...] he was crumbling for him

[...]

[juniper, the pure plant of the mountains] he filled [on the fire] and with a [...] clasped to

[the breast he ...]

[...]

(Lost account of Enlil's wrath at finding survivors and his mollification by Enki.)

End of Enki's Speech

"You here have sworn by the life's breath of heaven

the life's breath of earth

that he verily is allied with you yourself;

you there, An and Enlil, have sworn by the life's breath of heaven,

the life's breath of earth,

that he is allied with all of you.

He will disembark the small animals that come up from the earth!"

Ziusudra Rewarded

Ziusudra, being king, stepped up before An and Enlil

kissing the ground,

And An and Enlil after hono[r]ing him]

(180') were granting him life like a god's, were making lasting breath of life, like a god's,

descend into him.

That day they made Ziusudra, preserver, as king, of the name of the small animals and the seed of mankind, live toward the east over the mountains

in Mount Dilmun.¹⁸

was essential for a ruler to know the will of the gods and to act in conformity to it.

¹⁶ The touching of the throat symbolized a wish that it be cut if the person doing it broke his or her oath.

¹⁷ Kiur (KI-UR) was the forecourt of Enlil's temple in Nippur. The divine assembly met in a corner of it called Ubshu³ukkinna. The gods would arrive by boat on a canal flowing close by.

¹⁸ Dilmun was the present Bahrain. Here in the tale it seems to have been considered a faraway, half-mythical place.

REFERENCES

ENKI AND NINMAH (1.159)

Jacob Klein

This archaic and still partly incomprehensible myth praises Enki, the god of the subterranean fresh waters, wisdom and magic, for having planned and directed the creation of mankind and for having devised ways in which the physically handicapped could adjust to society. The myth seems to consist of two originally independent stories. The first part tells the story of the creation of man rather briefly (lines 1-43). Man was created from pieces of clay, placed in the womb of the mother-goddesses where he obtained his form and was given birth. He was created for the purpose of relieving the gods from their hard labor, and especially from digging canals for irrigation agriculture. The second part (lines 44-139) tells of a contest between the mother-goddess Ninmah and Enki during a feast celebrating man's creation. At first Ninmah creates a number of crippled and handicapped human beings, challenging Enki to solve their problem. Enki cleverly "decrees their fate," assigning them a function in society whereby they earn their living in an honorable way. When Ninmah gives up, it is Enki's turn to create an abnormal creature. Enki creates a human wreck, whose nature cannot be precisely determined (either an aborted fetus or an old man),¹ and with which Ninmah is unable to cope. The end of the second part is damaged and obscure, but it is clear that Enki prevails over Ninmah in the contest. The myth concludes with the following statement (lines 140-141): "Ninmah did not equal the great lord Enki/ Father Enki, your praise is sweet." In spite of its fragmentary state of preservation, the myth is highly important from the point of view of the history of religion because it is the earliest composition dealing with the theme of man's creation, and as such it is a forerunner to the First Tablet of the Babylonian Story of the Flood (see text 1.130), as well as to the two parallel stories of creation of man in the Bible (Gen 1-2).²

Genesis and the Labor of the Gods (lines 1-11)

In those days, in the days when heaven and earth were [created],
In those nights, in the nights when heaven and earth were [created],^a
In those [years], in the years when the fates [were decreed],³
When the Anunna-gods⁴ were born,
(5) When the goddesses⁵ were taken in marriage,
When the goddesses were distributed in heaven and earth,
When the goddesses were inseminated, became pregnant and gave birth,⁶
The gods who baked their daily-bread,
(and) set therewith their tables —
The senior gods did oversee the work, while the minor gods were bearing the toil.⁶
(10) The gods were digging the canals,

^a Gen 1:1;

2:4

^b Gen 6:1-4^c Gen 2:5^d 1 Kgs 18:27-29; Ps 44:24; Ps 121:4^e Gen 3:20were piling up their silt in Harali;⁷The gods were dredging the clay, they were complaining about their (hard) life.^{8 c}Rebellion of the Gods Against Enki (lines 12-23)

At that time, the one of immense wisdom, the creator of all the senior gods,
Enki,⁹ in the deep E-engura,¹⁰ in the flowing water, a place whose inside no god has ever seen, Lay on his bed, would not arise from (his) sleep.^d
(15) The gods were weeping and were saying:
"He brought about this misery!"
To the sleeping one who lay at rest,
(to him who) would not arise from his sleep,
Nammu,¹¹ the primeval mother,
the bearer of the senior gods,^e
Brought the tears of the gods to her son:

¹ This creature, which is totally unable to function, is called U₄-MU-UL ("the-day-was-far-off" or "my-day-is-far-off"). The name may refer to a prematurely born baby or to a very old man, born long ago. See generally Kilmer 1976.

² The following translation of the two most comprehensible episodes from this myth is based on Benito's critical edition (1969). Benito's renderings were considerably modified in the light of Jacobsen's translation of the myth (1987a:151-166) and of further study of the text.

³ "In those days" etc., i.e., in days of yore etc.

⁴ The Anunna-gods (Sum. 'A-NUN-NA-KE₄-NE) usually refer to the gods of the universe, and occasionally to the gods of a local pantheon.

⁵ In lines 5-7, the text uses for "goddess" the rare and somewhat obscure term amalu (= AMA.⁴INANNA), which was translated into Akk. amalu(k)tu and istaritu (see Steinkeller, JCS 32 [1980]:30, note 38). Jacobsen translates "goddess-mothers." The term is used here to avoid ambiguity as to the sex of these divine beings, since the regular Sum. word for "god" (DINGIR) refers to both male and female deities.

⁶ Reading DU-LUM (for normal DU-LUM) "suffering," "toil."

⁷ Originally probably a remote country, from where gold was imported to Sumer (cf. Enki and Ninhursag, 51a). Later it was mythologized and regarded as the dwelling place of the gods before they created man (cf. G. Komoróczy, Acta Orientalia Hungarica 26 [1972] 113-123; Iraq 39 [1977] 67-68).

⁸ Engaged in irrigation agriculture, the gods had to clean the rivers and canals of accumulated silt — a rather strenuous task.

⁹ The god of the subterranean sweet waters, wisdom and magic, creator of mankind.

¹⁰ E-ENGUR (literally: "The-House-the-Watery-Deep") was the name of Enki's temple in Eridu (cf. Å. Sjöberg, TCS III 54-55). Here it is a cosmic location beneath the earth in days of yore.

¹¹ Elsewhere, Nammu, the primeval mother, is called "The Bearer (birthgiver) of Heaven and Earth." This goddess seems to be the personification of the subterranean depths, the source of the sweet waters, the dwelling of Enki. Accordingly, her name is written with the logogram for Engur "subterranean (sweet) water."

"You are verily slumbering(?),
 you are verily sleeping,
 (20) [You(?)] of(?) yourself(?)
 would [not(?)] arise;
 The gods, your 'handiwork,' are smashing their equipment(?)!
 My son, arise from your bed;
 and when you have searched out wise counsel with your ingenuity,
 When you have fashioned a worker comparable(?) to the gods, may they relax from their toil!"^f

Enki's Plan as to the Creation of Man (lines 24-37)
 Enki, at the word of his mother,
 Nammu, arose from his bed,
 (25) In Ḫalankug,¹² his room of taking counsel,
 he smote(?) his thigh,¹³
 The wise and intelligent one,
 the custodian of heaven(?) and earth(?),
 the-fashioner-of-the-forms of every being,
 created two(?) birth-goddesses.¹⁴
 Enki stationed them at his side, examining them carefully.
 And when Enki, the-fashioner-of-the-forms, pondered by himself their nature,¹⁵
 He said to his mother, Nammu:
 (30) "My mother, the creature which you named(?), will verily exist; impose (on him)
 the burden¹⁶ of the gods!¹⁸
 When you have mixed the 'heart' of

f Gen 2:5, 15; 3:17-19

g Gen 1:28-
 30; 2:15;
 3:17-19

h Gen 1:27;
 3:19;
 Pss 30:10;
 103:14;
 Job 10:9;
 Eccl 3:20

i Gen 1:27; 2:21-23

j Gen 1:28;
 2:23-24; 4:1;
 Jer 30:6

k Ezek 16:4, 9

the clay on top of the Abzu,¹⁷
 The two(?) birth-goddesses shall nip off pieces of clay.¹⁸ When you yourself have given (it) form,¹⁹ h
 Let Ninmah serve as your helper.²⁰
 And let Ninimma, Shuzianna, Ninmada, Ninbara,
 (35) Ninmug, Musardu and Ningunna
 Assist you²¹ as you activate birthgiving.²²
 My mother, after you decree his fate,
 let Ninmah impose on him the burden.²³

Creation of Man according to Enki's Plan
 (lines 38-43)
 [Thus(?)] she created mankind
 ma[le and female(?)]ⁱ
 By the male inseminating [the female(?)], mankind [will beget(?)] an offspring,²⁴
 (40) [After(?) nine(?) months(?) of(?)] pregnancy(?)
 a man(?) will be [born(?)]²⁵ j ...
 she placed it on alfa-grass,
 purified its delivery.²⁶ k

Ninmah Challenges Enki during a Banquet
 (lines 52-57)

Enki and Ninmah were drinking beer, and their heart became elated.
 Ninmah said to Enki:
 "What(ever) makes the form of man good or bad — it is within my power;
 (55) As my heart prompts me, I can make
 (its) 'fate' good or bad!"²⁷

¹² HAL-AN-KUG is equated with apsūm "deep" in an OB school-tablet. In the godlist An-Anum, it is an epithet of both Enki and his wife, Damgalnunna (Green 1975:205).

¹³ A gesture of deep distress and pondering.

¹⁴ Lit., "he caused the SIG₇-EN-SIG₇-DU₁₀ to emerge." The Sum. compound SIG₇-EN-SIG₇-DU₁₀ appears also in line 32, where the late bilingual version replaces it with SA-TUR (= Akk. šassūru) "womb(s)." Our text refers probably to a pair of birth-goddesses (i.e., divine wombs, matrices), wherein two male and female clay figures were planted, developed and given birth. These correspond to the fourteen (seven and seven) šassūratum of the OB Atra-ḫasis myth, which produced seven males and seven females (Tablet I 277; S iii 9-10; see Lambert and Millard 1969:62) when man was created. Jacobsen (1987a:156, n. 7) reads the Sum. compound IMMA-EN and IMMA-ŠAR, seeing in these two names, personifications of the female ovaries (see also nn. 20, 22 and 27 below).

¹⁵ Or "its (= the project's) nature."

¹⁶ So Benito and Kramer, who assume that the hapax ZUB-SIG is a Sum. form of the Akk. tupšikku "earth-basket," "mortar-board," "corvée." Jacobsen takes ZUB-SIG to mean "birth-chair."

¹⁷ The subterranean sweet water ocean (see n. 10 above).

¹⁸ Jacobsen translates: "Imma-en and Imma-sar can make the foetus bigger."

¹⁹ Jacobsen: "And when you have put limbs on it."

²⁰ Ninmah ("The Lofty Lady") is one of the epithets or manifestations of the Sum. birth-goddess par excellence, Nintu. She acts here as the midwife, assisting Nammu in giving birth/creating man. In the second part of this myth, she competes with Enki and creates a number of crippled human beings.

²¹ The minor goddesses listed in lines 34-35 seem not to be connected to birth-giving or midwifery as such. Possibly they represent friends and neighbors of the woman in labor who come to help the midwife in her task (see further Jacobsen 1987a:157, n. 10).

²² Nammu's role in this myth seems to be that of the chief-midwife, who activated and assisted the "birth-goddesses" in giving birth to Man. Others assume that Nammu actually gave birth to man, translating the Sum. phrase TU-TU-A-ZU "at your giving birth."

²³ See line 30 and n. 16 above.

²⁴ The restoration of these two lines is highly conjectural. Jacobsen assumes that these lines express the idea that Nammu gave birth to primeval man without the need for a male sperm. He translates accordingly: "And when, [without any m]ale, you have built it up in it, [may you give birth] to manki[nd]!" [Without] the sperm of a ma[le] she gave [birth] to offspr[ing], to the [em]bryo of mankind." However, in view of the Atra-ḫasis myth, which reports the creation of seven males and seven females (see n. 14 above) and Gen 1:27 ("male and female created He them"), our reconstruction of the story seems to be preferable.

²⁵ It is assumed here that lines 39-40 are anthropological observations by the mythographer as to the nature of mankind in general (for similar notes cf. Atra-ḫasis I 271-276; S iii 15-21; Lambert and Millard 1969:62). For a radically different interpretation of these lines, see Jacobsen.

²⁶ First man was created pure, amidst purification rites (cf. Atra-ḫasis I 204-207; Lambert and Millard 1969:56).

²⁷ As the mother-goddess par excellence, who represents all females in whose wombs the embryo develops and takes its form, Ninmah boasts that she can give birth to any form of human being. The empirical fact that all human beings, including cripples and deformed ones, are formed

Enki answered Ninmah:

"Let me counterbalance the 'fate', desired by your heart — good or bad!"

Contest Between Ninmah and Enki: The Creation of Cripples and their Social Status (lines 58-78)

Ninmah took in her hand clay from the top of the Abzu;²⁸

She fashioned from it the first man:
one (who) could not bend his stiffened(?)
hands to reach out (for anything).²⁹

(60) Enki — upon seeing the first man
(who) could not bend his stiffened(?)
hands to reach out (for anything),

Decreed its fate: he made him stand in attention at the head of the king.

Second — she fashioned from it one 'deprived of light,' a blind(?) man.³⁰

Enki — upon seeing the one 'deprived of light,' the blind(?) man,

Decreed its fate: he allotted to it the musical art,

(65) And seated it (as) chief-[musician]³¹ in a place of honor,³² before the king.

Third — [she fashioned from it one] lame as to [both feet],³³ crippled of feet.

Enki — [upon seeing the one lame
as to both feet, crippled of feet,

He taught(?) it³⁴ the work of [the metal-caster] and silver-smith, his Fourth — she fashioned from it

1 Lev 21:18;
2 Sam 5:6-8

11 2 Sam 9:13

n Lev 15:2 et passim

o Gen 11:30;
1 Sam 2:5;
Isa 54:1

p Gen 40:2;
1 Kgs 22:9;
2 Kgs 20:18;
Isa 56:4-5;
Jer 38:7;
Esa 1:10

a man discharging semen.³⁵

(70) Enki — upon seeing the man
discharging semen,

Bathed him in water (blessed) with incantation, and removed Death³⁶ from his body.

Fifth — she fashioned from it a woman who could not give birth.

Enki — upon seeing the woman who could not give birth,^o

Decreed her fate, he assigned her to do work in the Women's Quarter.³⁷

(75) Sixth — she fashioned from it a man,
in whose body neither male organ
nor female organ was placed.

Enki — upon seeing the man
in whose body neither male organ
nor female organ was placed,³⁸

He called him: "Nippurean(?)—the-courtier,"³⁹

And decreed him as his fate to stand in attendance before the king.^p

Ninmah threw the pinch of clay in her hand on the ground, and a great silence fell.

(80) The great lord, Enki, said to Ninmah:

"I have decreed the fate for those whom you have fashioned,
and given them (their daily) bread.

Now come, let me fashion (one) for you;
and do you decree the fate of that newborn!"

in the female's womb is reflected here.

²⁸ See n. 17 above.

²⁹ Reading with Kramer: ŠU ŠU-ŠU ŠA-ŠA-DE NU-GAM. For a radically different rendering of this line, see Jacobsen 1987a:159.

³⁰ Lit., perhaps: "a seeing man," possibly a euphemism for blindness.

³¹ Restoring [NAR]-GAL.

³² For ZA-GU-LA, lit., "the great side," see Sjöberg 1960:63, n. 3.

³³ Restoring [GIR-MIN H]UM, lit., "two feet broken" (see Jacobsen 1987a:160; Hallo 1969).

³⁴ Restoring MI-NI-IN-ZU.

³⁵ Or "a man leaking urine" (Jacobsen).

³⁶ Lit., "Fate" (a demon of fatal sickness).

³⁷ Lit., "The Women's House," normally the queen's household, but according to another version, the reference is to the work of weaving.

"The Women's House" could also refer to the royal harem (cf. Esth 2:3 et passim).

³⁸ The text refers to a eunuch.

³⁹ So Jacobsen. By a slight emendation of the text one can render: "Enki(?) called his name: 'courtier.'"

REFERENCES

Benito 1969:1-81; Green 1975:170-174; Jacobsen 1987a:151-166; Kramer 1989:188-198; Lambert and Millard 1969:42-70; Pettinato 1971; Sauren 1993.

THE EXALTATION OF INANNA (1.160)

William W. Hallo

This is one of three hymns to the goddess Inanna attributed to Enheduanna in its own text. All three are listed together at the beginning of a literary catalogue, with this composition last (Cohen 1976:131f.). The cycle is a counterpart to The Collection of the Temple Hymns, another cycle attributed to the same author (Sjöberg and Bergmann 1969). If the latter reflects on Sargon, the author's father, founder of the first documented empire in Asia, at peace, the former cycle describes him at war. But it does so in highly metaphoric terms, crediting the victories of the Sargonic dynasty to Inanna, its patron deity. Enheduanna emerges from these and other works (Westenholz 1989) as a genuine creative talent, a poetess as well as a princess, a priestess and a prophetess. She is, in fact, the first non-anonymous and non-legendary author in history. As such she has found her way into contemporary anthologies, especially of women's literature (Barnstone and Barnstone 1980:1-8; Kilmer in Bankier and Lashgari 1983:111-117).

A. Exordium¹

(i) Inanna and the divine attributes

Lady of all the divine attributes,² resplendent light,
Righteous woman clothed in radiance, beloved of Heaven and Earth,
Hierodule of An,
(you) of all the great ornaments,
Enamored of the appropriate tiara,
suitable for the high-priesthood,
(5) Whose hand has attained
(all) the "seven" divine attributes,³
Oh my lady, you are the guardian of all the great divine attributes!
You have picked up the divine attributes, you have hung the divine attributes on your
hand,
You have gathered up the divine attributes, you have clasped the divine attributes to your breast.

(ii) Inanna and An (Heaven)

Like a dragon you have deposited venom on the foreign land.
(10) When you roar at the earth like Thunder, no vegetation can stand up to you.
A flood descending from its mountain,
Oh foremost one, you are the Inanna of heaven and earth!
Raining the flaming fire down upon the nation,
Endowed with divine attributes by An,
lady mounted on a beast,
(15) Who makes decisions at the holy command of An.
(You) of all the great rites, who can fathom what is yours?

(iii) Inanna and Enlil

Devastatrix of the lands,
you are lent wings by the storm.
Beloved of Enlil,
you fly about in the nation.
You are at the service of the decrees of An.

α Gen 4:24 et passim

(20) Oh my lady, at the sound of you you make the foreign lands bow down.
At (your) tempestuous radiance, mankind
In fear and trembling
when it comes before you,
Receives from you its just deserts.
A song of lamentation it begins for you.
(25) It walks toward you along the path of the house of all the great sighs.

(iv) Inanna and Ishkur⁴

In the van of battle everything is struck down by you.
Oh my lady, (propelled) on your own wings,
you peck away (at the land).⁵
In the guise of a charging storm you charge
With a roaring storm you roar.
(30) With Thunder you continually thunder.
With all the evil winds you snort.
Your feet are filled with restlessness.
To (the accompaniment of) the harp of sighs
you give vent to a dirge.

(v) Inanna and the Anunna⁶

Oh my lady, the Anunna, the great gods,
(35) Fluttering like bats
Fly off from before you to the clefts,
They who dare not walk in your terrible glance,
Who dare not proceed before your terrible countenance.
Who can temper your raging heart?
Your malevolent heart is beyond tempering.
(40) Lady (who) soothes the reins, lady (who) gladdens the heart,
Whose rage is not tempered, oh great daughter of Suen!
Lady supreme over the foreign land,
who has (ever) denied (you) homage?

(vi) Inanna and Mt. Ebih⁷

In the mountain where homage is withheld from you vegetation is accursed.
Its grand entrance you have reduced to ashes.

¹ The rhetorical and other structural divisions imposed on the text are in part modern constructs; they are defended in Hallo and van Dijk 1968, chs. 4-5, and in Hallo 1996, ch. V/3. They are reflected in the current translation as far as possible; for further details see Hallo and van Dijk 1968, ch. 2.

² Or: "essences" (ME), from the Sum. verb "to be." They are thought of in physical terms as symbols to be worn or carried. The myth of Inanna and Enki (Text 1.161 below) lists over 125 of them, including many of the "arts of civilization"; it may well be alluded to in this stanza.

³ "Seven" is here used in the sense of a large, round number, as frequently in BH.

⁴ Storm god and embodiment of thunder (cf. above, line 10).

⁵ For the winged Inanna in other texts and in art, cf. already lines 17f. (differently Heimpel 1971:233) and Hallo and van Dijk 1968:51.

⁶ The deities in general, later conceived as subordinate or chthonic (netherworld) deities in particular.

⁷ Presumably this stanza refers to the mountain range marking the northern border of Sumer and Akkad, and later of Babylonia, identified with the Jebel Hamrin, and subject of another of Enheduanna's hymns to Inanna, alluding to Sargonic triumphs on this frontier.

(45) Blood rises in its rivers for you, its people have nought to drink.
It leads its army captive before you of its own accord.⁸
It disbands its regiments before you of its own accord.⁸
It makes its able-bodied young men parade before you of their own accord.⁸
A tempest has filled the dancing places of its city.
(50) It drives its young adults before you as captives,

(vii) Inanna and Uruk(?)

Because the city has not declared
"The land is yours,"
Because they have not declared
"It is your father's, your begetter's,"⁹
You have spoken your holy command, have verily turned it back from your path,
Have verily removed your foot from out of its byre.
(55) Its woman no longer speaks of love with her husband.
At night they no longer have intercourse.
She no longer reveals to him her inmost treasures.
Impetuous wild cow, great daughter of Suen, Lady supreme over An,
who has (ever) denied (you) homage?

(viii) Invocation of Inanna

(60) You of the appropriate divine attributes, great lady of ladies,
Issued from the holy womb,
supreme over the mother who bore you,
Omniscient sage, lady of all the foreign lands,
Sustenance of the multitudes,
I have verily recited your sacred song!
True goddess, fit for the divine attributes,
it is exalting to acclaim you.
(65) Merciful one, brilliant, righteous woman,
I have verily recited your divine attributes for
you!

B. The Argument

(ix) The Banishment from Ur

Verily I had entered my holy cloister¹⁰ at your behest,
I, the high-priestess, I, Enheduanna!

I carried the ritual basket, I intoned the acclaim.
(But now) one has placed me in the leper's ward,¹¹
I, even I, can no longer live with you!
(70) They approach the light of day,
the light is obscured about me,
The shadows approach the light of day,
it is covered (as) with a (sand)storm.
My mellifluous mouth is cast into confusion.
My choices features are turned to dust.

(x) The Appeal to Inanna(?)

My fate — it concerns Suen and Lugalanne — ¹²
(75) Report it to An! May An release me!
Say but to An "Now!" and An will release me (saying):
"This woman will carry off the fate of Lugalanne.
Mountain (and) flood lie at her feet.
That woman is as exalted (as he) — she will make the city abandon him."
(80) Surely she will assuage her heartfelt rage for
me.
Let me, Enheduanna, recite a prayer to her.
My tears like sweet drink
Let me give free vent to for the holy Inanna,
Let me say "Hail!" to her!

(xi) The Indictment of Lugalanne(?)

I cannot appease Ashimbabbar.¹³
(85) He (Lugalanne?) has altered the lustrations of holy An and all his (rites) whatsoever.
He has verily carried off from An (his temple)
Eanna.
He has not stood in awe of King An.
That sanctuary whose attractions are irresistible,
whose beauty is endless,
That sanctuary he has verily brought to destruction.

(90) When he began to enter there,
he became jealous of him.¹⁴
Oh my divine impetuous wild cow, drive out this man, capture this man!

(xii) The Curse of Uruk¹⁵

In the "Place of Sustenance" what am I, even I?
(Uruk) is a malevolent rebel against your Nanna — may An make it surrender!¹⁶
This city — may it be sundered by An!
(95) May it be cursed by Enlil!
May its plaintive child not be placated by his ⁸ Or: "one by one, one after the other"; cf. B. L. Eichler, JAOS 103 (1983) 97 and n. 19.

⁹ Translating with D. O. Edzard, ZA 66 (1976) 47, n. 190.

¹⁰ I.e., the gip̄aru, the residence of the high-priestess.

¹¹ Variant: "in a good place" (euphemism?). Note that "grave" uses the same logogram (plus "house").

¹² Enheduanna is the first of a long line of princesses appointed by their royal fathers as high-priestesses of Nanna, the moon-god at Ur, equated with the Akk. Suen. Lugalanne is a rebel against Sargonic rule and a pretender to the rule of Uruk, known also from other sources. The translation follows Wilcke 1976a:88.

¹³ Another manifestation of the moon-god.

¹⁴ For TAB-KU, cf. CAD S s.v. šurrū. The second half of the line follows Civil 1990b.

¹⁵ For Uruk as the "Place of Sustenance" see Hallo and van Dijk 1968:58 and n. 52. Other cities may share this epithet; see e.g. Shulgi B 41 (Castellino 1972:34f.).

¹⁶ Against the astral reinterpretation of this line by B. Alster, cf. Hallo, JNES 37 (1978) 273.

mother!
 Oh lady, the (harp of) mourning is placed on the ground.
 One had verily beached your ship of mourning on a hostile shore.
 At (the sound of) my sacred song
 I am are ready to die.

(xiii) The Indictment of Nanna

(100) As for me, my Nanna takes no heed of me.
 In murderous straits,
 he has verily given me over to destruction.
 Ashimbabbar has not pronounced my judgment.
 Had he pronounced it: what is it to me?
 Had he not pronounced it: what is it to me?
 (Me) who once sat triumphant he has driven out of the sanctuary.
 (105) Like a swallow he made me fly from the window, my life is consumed.
 In the bramble of the mountain he made me walk.
 The crown appropriate for the high-priesthood
 he carried off from me.
 He gave me dagger and sword —
 "it becomes you," he said to me.

(xiv) Second(?) Appeal to Inanna

Most precious lady, beloved of An,
 (110) Your holy heart is lofty,
 may it be assuaged on my behalf!
 Beloved bride of Ushungal-anna¹⁷
 Of the heavenly foundations and zenith
 you are the "senior" queen.
 The Anunna have submitted to you.
 From birth on you were the "junior" queen.
 (115) Over the great gods, the Anunna, how supreme you are!
 The Anunna with their lips kiss the ground (in obeisance) to you.
 (But) my own sentence is not concluded, a hostile judgment appears before my eyes as my judgment.
 (My) hands are no longer folded on the ritual couch.
 The pronouncements of Ningal
 I may no longer reveal to man.¹⁸
 (120) (Yet) I am the brilliant high-priestess of Nanna,
 Oh my lady beloved of An,
 may your heart take pity on me!
 (xv) *The Exaltation of Inanna*¹⁹
 That one has not recited as a "Known! Be it known!" of Nanna,

that one has recited as a "Tis Thine!":

"That you are lofty as Heaven (An) —
 be it known!
 That you are broad as Earth —
 be it known!
 (125) That you devastate the rebellious land —
 be it known!
 (125a) That you roar at the land —
 be it known!
 That you smite the heads —
 be it known!
 That you devour cadavers like a dog —
 be it known!
 That your glance is terrible —
 be it known!
 That you lift your terrible glance —
 be it known!
 (130) That your glance is flashing —
 be it known!
 That you are ill-disposed toward the defiant —²⁰
 be it known!"
 That one has not recited (this) of Nanna, that one has recited it as a "Tis Thine!" — (That,) oh my lady, has made you great,
 you alone are exalted!
 (135) Oh my lady beloved of An,
 I have verily recounted your fury!

C. Peroration

(xvi) The Composition of the Hymn

One has heaped up the coals (in the censer), prepared the lustration.
 The nuptial chamber awaits you,
 let your heart be appeased!
 With "It is enough for me, it is too much for me!"
 I have given birth, oh exalted lady,
 to (this song) for you.
 That which I recited to you at (mid)night
 (140) May the singer repeat it to you at noon!
 (Only) on account of your captive spouse, on account of your captive child,
 Your rage is increased,
 your heart unassuaged.

(xvii) The Restoration of Enheduanna

The first lady, the reliance of the throne-room,
 Has accepted her offerings.
 Inanna's heart has been restored.
 The day was favorable for her,
 she was clothed sumptuously,
 she was garbed in womanly beauty.

¹⁷ Short form of Ama-ushungal-anna, a manifestation of Dumuzi.

¹⁸ Ningal is the consort of the Moon-god at Ur, and a patroness of dream-interpretation (oneiromancy). In her prophetic function, Enheduanna was apparently an oneiromancer (ENS = ša'iltu).

¹⁹ In this "magnificat," the Argument reaches its climax as the crucial divine attributes are attributed to Inanna, not Nanna. Her triumph is signalled similarly in another hymn by Enheduanna, and in the historiographic tradition about Sargon's defeat of the great rebellion in his old age. Note that after its opening couplet (lines 123f.), the remainder of the magnificat has a different (i.e., indifferent) sequence of lines in every exemplar.

²⁰ Cf. CAD s.v. šapsu.

Like the light of the rising moon,
 how she was sumptuously attired!
 When Nanna (Moon) appeared in proper view,
 They (all) blessed her (Inanna's) mother Ningal.
 (150) The heavenly doorsill called "Hail!"

(xviii) Doxology

For that her (Enheduanna's) speaking to the Hiero-dule (Inanna)

 was exalted —
 (To) the devastatrix of the foreign lands, endowed with divine attributes from An,
 (To) my lady wrapped in beauty,
 (to) Inanna: Praise!

REFERENCES

Texts: numerous whole or partial duplicates as listed in Hallo and van Dijk 1968:36f. and subsequent reviews. Translations and studies: Barnstone and Barnstone 1980; Hallo and van Dijk 1968; Heimpel 1971; Kilmer 1983; Kramer ANET 579-582; Römer 1972; Sauren 1970; Westenholz 1989; Wilcke 1976a.

INANNA AND ENKI (1.161)

Gertrud Farber

The exact date of the origin of this composition is unknown. It has come down to us in only very few sources, all of which stem from the Old Babylonian scribal school of Nippur.¹

The main topic of the myth is the love goddess Inanna's attempt to increase her city Uruk's and her own power and influence. She therefore wants to bring into her possession the ME, the cultural norms which are the basis of Sumerian civilization and all aspects of life.² These cultural norms are stored like concrete objects in Enki's underwater temple in Eridu. During Inanna's visit to Eridu, Enki, the god of wisdom, bestows the ME on her, while he is drunk. She manages to escape with them and securely brings them to her hometown Uruk despite several attempts by Enki to stop her. Unfortunately, the last lines of the text are poorly preserved, and it is still unclear how the conflict between Inanna and Enki is settled.³

The importance of "Inanna and Enki" lies in the detailed listing of the ME, which gives us some insight into Sumerian thinking — how they looked on life and how they understood the world.

The composition originally had some 820 lines. Repetitions and unclear lines are not included in the following translation; (...) marks abridged text.

Introduction: Inanna's praise of her sex appeal and her plan to visit Enki in order to increase her power (Tablet I i and SLTNi 32+) [.... Inanna] placed the ŠUGURRA, the crown of the steppe, on her head.

As she went outside to the shepherd, to the sheepfold,

[....] was bent down, her vulva was to be wondered at,

[....] was righteously bent down, her vulva was to be admired.⁴

Rejoicing at her wonderful vulva, she started to praise herself.

" (....)

When I will have directed my foot towards god Enki and the Abzu and Eridu,
 I will speak coaxingly to Enki, to the Abzu and Eridu. (....)

I, the lady, I, the queen of heaven, I want to go to the Abzu, to the lord Enki I shall speak a prayer.

Like the sweet oil of the cedar [....]

(....).

On that day, the maid Inanna

directed her step all by herself towards Enki's Abzu in Eridu.

On that day, the one who has overpowering knowledge, who knows the divine decrees in ¹ For the first identification of the text see Kramer 1944:64-68. For a complete edition see Farber 1973. For collations and new text material see Waetzoldt 1975 and Farber 1995. Other important studies include Alster 1974a and Kramer 1989:57-68, 222-225, with a new translation. The free rendering of the myth by Wolkstein and Kramer 1983:11-27 is not true to the Sum. text and should not be regarded as a scholarly translation.

² For a discussion of the ME see Farber 1973:116-213 and Farber 1990:610-613. In some instances in this volume translated "divine attributes," "divine powers," "divine offices."

³ I still support my original interpretation which is based on grammatical forms and the structure of the dialogue, that Inanna has to give the cultural norms back to Enki. For different and in my opinion grammatically problematic interpretations see Alster 1974a:26, who assumes that although the ME remain in Uruk, both Inanna and her city are severely punished by Enki, and Kramer 1989:68 who thinks that Enki accepts the fact that the ME are no longer in his possession and that everybody is rejoicing.

⁴ She is probably having sex with her lover, the shepherd-god Dumuzi.

heaven and earth,
 who just from his dwelling knows about the plans
 of the gods,
 knew everything (about the plot) even before the radiant Inanna had approached the temple in Eridu by a mile.

Inanna's visit in Eridu and her acquisition of the cultural norms, the ME (SLTNi 32+ and Tablet I ii - iii)

So Enki, the king of the Abzu, spoke to his man and gave him instructions:
 "Come here, man, listen to my word!
 When the young girl Inanna has entered the Abzu and Eridu,
 have her eat butter-cake,
 let her be served cool water which refreshes the soul,
 at the lion gate⁵ pour beer for her,
 treat her like a friend and a colleague.
 At the pure table, at the table of An,
 you shall greet the radiant Inanna."
 According to these instructions
 Isimud, the vizier, follows his king's commands.
 He allows the maid Inanna to enter the Abzu and Eridu,

(...)

where she gets butter-cake to eat.
 Cool water, refreshing to the soul, is poured for her,
 at the lion gate she is served beer.
 He treats her like a friend and a colleague.
 At the pure table, the table of An,
 he greets her.
 Enki and Inanna drink beer together in the Abzu,
 enjoy the taste of sweet wine.
 The bronze AGA-vessels are filled to the rim, they have a competition, (drinking from the) bronze vessels of Uraš.

[Break of 35 to 40 lines]

Enki apparently gets drunk and presents all the divine norms, or ME, which are stored in his care in the Abzu to his daughter Inanna. The presentation of several items at a time, follows the pattern:

"In the name of my power, in the name of my Abzu,

I will give them all to my daughter, the radiant Inanna, and (this) shall not be [contested]."

The ... (5 to 8 items each time)

the radiant Inanna accepted.

This pattern is repeated fifteen times, of which only six, containing the ME no. 53-94, are preserved. The final listing seems to have more items. The main 94 ME are:

I (1-5) EN-ship, LAGAL-priesthood, godship, the mighty legitimate crown, the throne of kingship,

II (6-10) the noble scepter, staff and rein, the noble dress, shepherdship, kingship,

III (11-15) EGIZI-priestess-ship, NINDINGIR-pries-tess-ship, IŠIB-priesthood, LUMAḤ-priesthood,
 GUDU-priesthood,

IV (16-21) truth, ..., ..., descending into the Netherworld, having ascended from the Nether-world, the KURĜARRA-priest,

V (22-27) sword and club, the temple servant SAĜ-URSAG, the black dress, the colorful dress, the
 ... hair, the ... hair,

VI (28-34) [7 mainly broken ME]

VII (35-40) the standard, the quiver, love making, kissing, prostitution, running (?),

VIII (41-46) speech, slander, cajoling, ..., the cultprostitute, the pure tavern,

IX (47-52) the holy NIGINĜAR shrine, ..., the hierodule of heaven, the resounding lute, the art of singing, the (wise) state of old age,

X (53-59) heroism, possession of power, dishonesty, righteousness, plundering of cities, singing of lamentations, rejoicing,

XI (60-64) deceit, the rebellious land, kindness, traveling around, the permanent home,

XII (65-72) the craft of the carpenter, the craft of the copper-smith, the art of the scribe, the craft of the smith, the craft of the leather-worker, the craft of the fuller, the craft of the builder,
 the craft of the mat-weaver,

XIII (73-81) understanding, knowledge, purifying washing rites, the house of the shepherd (?), heaping up of coals, the sheepfold, fear, awe,
 reverent silence,

XIV (82-88) the bitter toothed ..., kindling of fire, extinguishing of fire, hard work, ..., the assembled family, descendants,

XV (89-94) dispute, triumph, counseling, deliberation, jurisdiction, decision-making.

[Break of approximately 80 lines]

*Inanna's departure by boat and Enki's regret (Tablet
 I iv - vi)*

After having received the ME from Enki, Inanna leaves the Abzu while Enki seems to have fallen asleep. While she is (apparently) loading the ME on to her ship, she is listing them again, one by one,
 following the pattern:

"... he has given to me."

In this section the ME no. 56-91 are preserved. It seems that she is explaining her behavior to somebody who may have objected that she removed the ME from the Abzu.⁶

[Break of approximately 35 lines]

Enki has woken up and gradually becomes sober again.

[Enki now addresses his vizier Isimud:]

⁵ This may refer to the lion dating from the Ur III period which has been excavated in Eridu.

⁶ Alster has suggested that this may have been the mysterious frog guarding the entrance to the Abzu who occurs in I vi, 4; 6, see Alster 1974a:24.

["My vizier Isimud, my sweet name of heaven!"]
 ["My king,] Enki! I am at your service, what is your wish?"

"If she has not yet left for Uruk and Kulab, if she has not yet left for the place (...) where the sun rises,

I need to get hold of her, because of what I have said."⁷

"The radiant Inanna has already gathered up all the ME, she has boarded the 'boat of heaven,' and the 'boat of heaven' has left the quay."

When the one who had drunk beer, who had drunk (too much) beer, had thrown up all the beer, when father Enki, the one who had drunk (too much) beer, had thrown up the beer, the great lord Enki gave all his attention to [...]. The lord (now) looks thoroughly at his Abzu and then speaks to his vizier Isimud:

"My vizier Isimud, my sweet name of heaven!"

"My king Enki, I am at your service, what is your wish?"

The sobered Enki now asks Isimud where all his ME have disappeared to. He names them all in groups, following the pattern:

"The ..., where are they?"

Nine of the groups are preserved, listing ME no. 1-52.

[Break of approximately 35 lines]

The 20 poorly preserved lines of column vi can still not be restored properly. They tell about a frog sitting at the entrance door of Enki's temple. Perhaps the frog is being blamed for having let Inanna escape through the door with all her presents.⁸

[Break of 10 to 15 lines]

Enki's futile attempts to retrieve the ME (Tablet II i-iv 17)

The prince speaks to his vizier Isimud,

Enki addresses his "sweet name of heaven":

"My vizier Isimud, my sweet name of heaven!"

"My king Enki, I am at your service, what is your wish?"

"The 'boat of heaven,' how far has it traveled?"

"Right now, it has reached the [...] quay."

"Go! The Enkum shall seize the boat from her!"

The vizier Isimud speaks to the radiant Inanna:

"My lady, your father has sent me to you.

What your father has said is sublime,

what Enki has remarked is sublime.

His important words may not be disregarded."

To this the radiant Inanna answers:

"What did my father say to you? What did he remark to you?"

Why may his important speech not be disregarded?"

"My king has said to me,

Enki has instructed me:

'Inanna shall return to Uruk, but you, escort the 'boat of heaven' to Eridu!'"

The radiant Inanna answers the vizier Isimud:

"Why has my father changed his word to me?

Why has he overturned his honest speech to me?

Why has he disgraced his important words to me?

My father has spoken dishonestly to me, he has spoken insincerely to me.

Untruthfully he has made his promises in the name of his power and in the name of his Abzu, cheatingly he has sent you to me as a messenger!"

Hardly has she finished this speech,

when the Enkum try to seize the "boat of heaven."

The radiant Inanna now says to her vizier Ninshubura:

"Come here, my faithful vizier of the Eanna,

my vizier of good tidings,

my messenger of truthful words!

Water has not touched your hand, water has not touched your foot."⁹

After Inanna has thus saved the ME which had been given to her, and the "boat of heaven,"

the prince speaks to his vizier Isimud a second time,

Enki addresses his "sweet name of heaven."

(...)

In the next 170 lines Enki tries five more times to retrieve the "boat of heaven" loaded with the ME. At the pure [...] the 50 "Giants of Eridu" shall seize the boat, at the hill ULMA the 50 "LAHAMA-demons of the Ocean" fail to capture the boat. At the hill "Field" all "Big Fish" are sent out to get the boat. At the [...] the "Guardians of Uruk" are unsuccessful, and at the Iurungal River the "[...] of the Iurungal" fail once more. And so Inanna arrives safely in Uruk, bringing the ME with her.

Inanna's Arrival in Uruk and the Ensuing Celebration (Tablet II iv 18 - 58)

[11 lines mostly destroyed]

Ninshubura does something concerning the "boat of heaven" with her foot and her [hand], then something happens for the seventh time, while Inanna "completes something else to perfection."

Her vizier Ninshubura

[addresses] the radiant Inanna:

"My lady, on the day you [bring] the 'boat of heaven' to the gate ['Joy,' to Uruk-Kulab], our city will [revel] in abundance,

⁷ I think that Enki wants to prevent her from leaving, but Kramer assumed that Enki, being still drunk, was actually assisting her in her departure; see Kramer 1989:64.

⁸ For this interpretation see Alster 1974a:24; see also n. 6.

⁹ Unfortunately we do not understand the magic procedure used by Ninshubura to save the boat.

(...),

on our [canals] cargo-boats [will ...]."

To that the radiant Inanna answers her:

"On the day I [bring] the 'boat of heaven' to the gate 'Joy,' to Uruk-Kulab, it shall pass along the [street] magnificently.

[The people] shall stand in the street full of awe.¹⁰

(...)

The old men [shall receive] prudence, the old women [shall receive] wise counsel, to the young men [I will give] the strength [of weapons], the little children [shall be happy!]

[Break of 6 lines]

[...] the 'boat of heaven,' [there shall be a] festival!

The king shall slaughter oxen, [many sheep he shall bring], beer he shall pour into the cups.

May he [sound] the drums and timpani, may he skilfully [play] the sweet TIGI-instruments.

All the lands shall [proclaim] my sublimity,

my people shall praise my glory!"

On the day she brought the "boat of heaven" to the gate "Joy," to Uruk-Kulab, it passed along the streets magnificently [...].

It reached the house of the maid, and [she determined] its place.

[It passed] the pure well, her main well.

Inanna had the ME which had been bestowed on her and the "boat of heaven" [land] at the gate of the ĠIPAR, she had them [...] at the entrance of the AGRUN (a divine dwelling).¹¹

Shining brightly, the radiant Inanna then [blessed] the place [where] the "boat of heaven" [had docked].

The narrative moves back to Eridu.

The prince now [says] to his vizier Isimud,

Enki [addresses] his "sweet name of heaven":

"My vizier Isimud, my sweet name [of heaven]!"

"My king Enki, I am at your service, [what is your wish]?"

"The 'boat of heaven,' how far has it traveled?"

"It has arrived at the 'White Quay.'"

"Go! admiration shall be [...],

[...] admire the 'boat of heaven.'"

[Break of approximately 5 lines]

The Unloading of the ME in Uruk (Tablet II iv 59 - vi 50)

Isimud has apparently arrived in Uruk at the "White Quay" and is taking part in the festivities. Inanna now starts unloading the ME, and it may be Isimud who lists them individually (line by line)¹² as she takes them from the "boat of heaven," following the pattern:

"The ... you have brought with you."

Following this enumeration of the 94 cultural norms are 16 more items which are only partly preserved.

They can either be additional ME or represent a more general description of the goods¹³ brought home by Inanna.

"To place [...] on the ground, the charm of all women you have brought with you.

[The ability (?) to use the ME correctly, you have brought.

[Two lines or items broken.]

The holy percussion instruments TIGI, LILIS, UB, MEZE, and ALA, [and six more items] of An you have brought,

[...] the magnificent [...], as many as there are, while he was preparing beer,¹⁴ you have brought with you."

[Break of 8 lines]

Full of joy, the woman gave the [...]

the name "the house of the Netherworld has been built."

Like the merchant who had said "fifty shekel," then brought them, and there were less,¹⁵ the place (where this happened) she called "potsherd and rubbish."

The place where the boat had (almost) been turned around she called "(his) mind has changed."

The place where the boat had docked

she called "the white quay."

The place where she had unloaded [the ME], one by one,

she called "the lapis lazuli quay."

The Settling of the Conflict between Enki and Inanna, perhaps by Enlil (Tablet II vi 51 - 67)

In the meantime Enki has arrived in Uruk. But it seems from the way Enki and Inanna are talking that they are addressing a third person, someone else who has arrived as a deus ex machina to settle the conflict. The only arbiter both gods might accept would probably be Enlil.¹⁶

Enki addresses the radiant Inanna:

"In the name of my power, in the name of my Abzu, for this woman (here he addresses somebody else, not Inanna) I will place [...] in my Abzu."

¹⁰ Kramer's interpretation of "high waters sweeping over the street" makes little sense and is grammatically untenable, see Kramer 1989:67.

¹¹ For AGRUN as the entrance to a private place see Alster 1972:354 and 1973:102.

¹² For this interpretation see Alster 1974a:25 with n. 7.

¹³ See Green 1976:284.

¹⁴ Does this refer to Enki?

¹⁵ The merchant seemingly had been cheating. Is this an allusion to Enki's breach of promise?

¹⁶ For this interpretation, see Farber 1973:94-95; for other interpretations see the discussion in n. 3.

¹⁷ The word missing here might have been crucial for the interpretation of the end of the story.

"Why has this man (Inanna talks about an intruder, not about Enki) now entered here, [...] taking the ME from me?"

Enlil (?) answers by giving orders including some punishment like the crushing of some women's vulvas. But he also creates a festival.

[7 lines are largely destroyed]

Enlil (?) continues:

"At the gate of the ĜIPAR [your people shall] spend their days,

[at the entrance to the AGRUN], the inhabitants of your city, the inhabitants of Uruk shall live (happily).

And concerning you (addressing Enki), to your city Eridu she has already added [the ME (?)], she has indeed returned them to their original location."

REFERENCES

Alster 1972; 1973; 1974a; Farber 1973; 1990; 1995; Green 1976; Kramer 1944; Kramer and Maier 1989; Waetzoldt 1975; Wolkstein and Kramer 1983.

2. HYMNS

TO NANSHE (1.162)

Wolfgang Heimpel

Is it not the city, is it not the city, are its divine powers not proclaimed?	...
Is it not the city Nina, are its divine powers not proclaimed?	20 She knows the orphan, she knows the widow. She knows that person oppresses person. A mother for the orphan,
Is it not the city, the pure city, are its divine powers not proclaimed?	Nanshe, a caretaker for the widow, finding a way for houses in debt,
Is it not a mountain carried above water, the city, are its divine powers not proclaimed?	the lady shelters the abducted person, ³
5 Does not the day of the good house appear, has not its destiny been determined?	25 seeks a place for the weak, swells him his collecting basket, ⁴
Does not propriety shine in the city?	(and) makes his collecting vat profitable.
Are not the rites ¹ of mother Nanshe organized?	For an honest maid who seized her feet
Is not its lady, the child born in Eridu,	Nanshe counts a man of good means;
Nanshe, the lady of precious divine powers, restoring (them)?	30 (and) it is the widow that Nanshe endows with an unmarried person
10 The mother — is it not resin? —, the mother — is it not yeast? —,	(who is for her) like a roof in a good house.
Is not Nanshe mother of great things?	Does not propriety shine in presence of the lady?
In the living quarters of the land heavy (things) exist in her presence.	Did not Nanshe — in her presence "hands" are tripled in plenty in Lagash —
In the stores honey ... like resin. ²	call the lord to the holy heart? ⁵
Vases with everflowing water stood before her.	35 The lion of Nanshe, the beloved lord of Lagash, filled the dais in her presence. ⁶
15 Boxes with the storables of the land covered like silt, the thing of the river, the ground before Nanshe.	She gave the shepherd the mighty scepter. She perfected Gudea with her precious powers.

¹ PA.AN in line 65 is spelled syllabically bi-lu-da in line 65 and elsewhere. It is an old loan from Akk. bēlātum. The context of lines 123 and 125 relates it with the expectations of Nanshe of certain priests, and seems to designate the rule of Nanshe and the rules by which her priests act. In line 65, where the context is incompatible with the meaning "rule," and "rite," Jacobsen's translation is used. This meaning is confirmed by the logogram PA.AN "executive + divinity."

² Cf. ELS 718-720.

³ My old translation and Jacobsen's "fugitive" would be LÚ-ZAH. KAR = ekēmu = "to take by force, to abduct," generally in war.

⁴ ŠU-DU = kašūsum. OB Nīg-gur₁₁ makkāru 152 (MSL 13, 119).

⁵ The particular title of the lord of Nanshe here and elsewhere is šennu.

⁶ So after Jacobsen. Cf. H. Steible FAOS 9/2 (1991) 51:1.

Her shepherd, whom she had called to the holy heart, Gudea, governor of Lagash, 40 set (the lyre) Cow Plenty among the drums, set the silver drum at its side. While holy songs, harmonious songs, were performed for her, small copper sickles praise the house. The chief musician plays her the ibex horn. 45 The "Has not the house been granted divine powers from Abzu?"⁷ was performed through princely powers of the holy songs of house Sirara. The dream interpreter⁸ brought her the (utensils) of the first fruit (festival);⁹ held the glittering silver cups out to her. The temple cook []; 50 hot and cold things he brings straight before her. He brought the ... of the oven before her. [] the great shovel resounds before her. When meat cuts were brought in large bowls, when cool water was brought from the Sirara river, 55 when the festival trappings were brought from (the city) Lagash,⁹ when liquor was brought from the countryside, her large oven which matches the large hall, Nanshe's sanctuary of bread distribution,¹⁰ hums. The lady, the elder woman of Enlil, 60 Nanshe, the lady who lives in plenty in the land, ..., the child of Enki, places a person, a good woman for a good house. After she placed a person, a good woman for a good house, the daily provisions of the house came straight from the Bursag.¹¹ 65 For these rites the barley does not suffice.	^a Num 28:26, etc.	The vases were empty, poured no water. The person who helped with its regular provisions does not receive extra. What was distributed over and above food and water, what was left of the regular provisions, what was not used by the house, 70 what was expended as first item of fish of the tax,¹² allowing a measure of one acre¹³ of canebrake for each of its (the house's) servants, what was received in nuts and green plants within the garden, after it (the above) passed (to the house) no mouth¹⁴ touches it. Bread of the neighborhood shrines are not carried as bread distribution. 75 (Before,) a person came for a gift of prime beer: (now) he did not collect¹⁵ cool water. Its (the house's) established first fruit (festival) is reorganized, (so as) not to cease (again). There was (now) indeed a fat carrier who passes fat to the house. There was (now) indeed a cheese carrier who passes cheese to the house, (and) a courier with fish, a person of daily assignment. 82 Standing in the corners (or) on the sides (instead of helping) 80 when the firewood carrier passed by with what he brought from the steppe 81 to the house of his lady; 83 concealing something,¹⁶ saying something else (will not be effective): Entering the house of Nanshe from the outside (means) not leaving it from inside. 85 The caretaker of the house of Nanshe, the child born by Utu, lord Hendursaga ...
--	-------------------------------------	--

⁷ The same as line 232. Both times the title of a composition (incipit) may be involved.

⁸ A. L. Oppenheim, AOS 32 C 14, quoted TUT 256 which records the receipt of barley by Nin-sal-la ensi; that a dream interpreter should be female agrees with the fact that Nanshe herself was the "dream interpreter of the gods" and actually interpreted Gudea's dream (Cyl. A II 1-VI 13). For the translation of ne-sag cf. NABU 1994 4:72f. No. 83.

⁹ In Ur III, Nina and Lagash lie on opposite ends of the district Kinunir-Nina of the province of Lagash. It is conceivable that Ganumdu was joined by the gods along the route to Nina, i.e., Lugal-URUXGANA-tené, Dumuzi-Abzu, and Lugal-Dara, and that the New Year was celebrated in Nina for the whole district.

¹⁰ LSU 31: URI₅ EŠ NIDBA-GAL-GAL-LA. NIDBA and nindabū designate offerings. According to the etymology, it means "bread distribution." I assume that it was a kind of offering which was prepared in large quantities and redistributed.

¹¹ The BUR-SAG was a storage-house, or possibly a brewery (Á-SIKIL); see PSD s. vv. [WWH]

¹² In BBVO 10 (1990) 185f., R. Englund pointed to a fish tax which was collected by the enku (ZĀ.HA) for the provincial administration of Umma of which 10% was deducted and sent to Nippur as nisag. It is conceivable that similarly fishes were deducted for the nisag of Nanshe within the district Kinunir-Nina.

¹³ The Sumerian IKU was a little smaller than the English acre.

¹⁴ ELS 374 s.v. "du₁₁-ge," referring to W. H. Ph. Römer, reads KA-GE "mouth" + agentive.

¹⁵ See note 4 above.

¹⁶ For EME-TA ĜĀL-LA cf. the description of Sargon concealing something: "he made it known to his heart, does not let it be on his tongue (EME-NA NU-ĜĀ-ĜĀ), does not talk about it with anyone (JAOS 103 [1983]). INIM-KÜR-DI "saying something different" (KÜR = loan translation of Akk. nakāru). References and discussion ELS 590-593.

The king recognized that which is said (with) good (intention),¹⁷ recognized that which is said (with) bad (intention);
 Hendursaga recognized that which is said (with) good (intention), recognized that which is said (with) bad (intention).
 Those [] ... which (could) be obstructed by evil ones he planted her (firmly as) a tree.
 90 Ningublaga, heroic child of noble Sin, plants it for Nanshe (straight as) a reed in (the face of potential) destructive claims (against) it.
 May the lady of right utterance and inalienable divine powers, may Nanshe be praised in all lands!
 On the edge¹⁸ of the year, the day of rites,
 95 the lady poured water in the holy outside.
 On the day when the bowls of allotments are inspected
 Nanshe inspects the reviewing of servants.
 Did not her chief scribe Nisaba place precious tablets on (her) knees?
 100 She took the gold stylus in hand.
 For Nanshe she organized the servants in single file.
 The skin-clad enters before her according to his skin;
 the linen-clad passes before her according to his linen.
 A skin-clad does not enter before her according to his skin, 105 a linen-clad does not pass before her according to his linen, a person, registered and ... hired,
 about whom eye or ear witnesses,
 witnesses of his having disappeared from the house, have spoken, is terminated in his position at 'the first (stroke) of the drum.'¹⁹ 110 The king who inquires about the good servants,

Haya, man of tablets, puts on clay the good servant of his lady who was mentioned, deletes from clay the maid of his lady who was not mentioned.
 Vases not pouring water, 'feet not proceeding straight,' troughs of dough not cleaned, 115 fire having gone out in the house of night, spells interrupted in the house of day — her prebendary²⁰ who serves his term (and is responsible for these functions) is terminated in his position.
 When to a prebendary²¹ serving his term as person of food allotments against whom a complaint was lodged, 120 or to a bishop who while living in the house (of Nanshe) did not let the holy song and her concerns shine, when to him — he may acknowledge it, he may not acknowledge it — further allotting is denied, then the rules of mother Nanshe are made to appear brightly.
 No more than this word of words will be established,
 125 nor added to this rule.
 No one will superimpose any divine power on this divine power;
 No one shall superimpose anything on it.
 Superimposing will not enter the house of Nanshe.²²
 ...
 130 The ordeal river in the house of Nanshe clears a person.
 After the decision has emerged from the holy song, the word of Abzu,
 ...²³
 (Even) a casually spoken (word), set in excess

¹⁷ Or perhaps: "he kept track of these matters."

¹⁸ ZĀ-MU (zagmukku) means "side," or "edge," or "border of the year." It is supposed to designate the New Year. Note, however, that grain rations of the "edge of the year" (ŠE-BA ZĀ-MU-KA) were recorded in Ur III Umma in months I (TPTS 1, 262), V (TENUS 390), VI (SET 175), VII (often, e.g. MVN 13, 191), VIII (SET 169), IX (TENUS 266), X (SET 170), XI (MVN 14, 195), XII (TENUS 372), XIII (Hirose Collection 357). As noted by M. E. Cohen, The Cultic Calendars of the Near East (1993) 17, and KKU 1:237, offerings for the festival of the 4th month, ITI-NISAG "First Fruit month," are designated as ŠĀ-DU₁₁, ZĀ-MU "ŠĀRA" "regular offerings (of) the 'side of the year' (of) Shara" (SNAT 409). The administrative year of Umma in the Ur III period started with the harvest month (ITI ŠE-GUR₁₀-KU₃), yet several texts indeed mark off the year between the 3rd and the 4th month (e.g. YOS 4, 207). Considering the name First Fruit month, the local start of the year seems to have fallen between month III and IV, i.e. in July, so that in this case the "edge of the year" may indeed have been the New Year. The "edge of the year" in Nina is mentioned in the Hendursag hymn (D. O. Edzard and C. I. Wilcke, Studies Kramer 144, 28), as here without clue to its timing.

¹⁹ This translation of BALAG is not secure. Cf. also line 41.

²⁰ The prebendary has the title ŠITA-AB-A.

²¹ This prebendary has the title SUSBU (Akk. susbū).

²² The transliteration in JCS 33 is inaccurate. The line should read as follows:

M [x x x x] UN-DIB-BA
 T KAR-RA [x] LÚ MU-UN-X-BÉ
 U [x x x L] MU-UN-DIB-[x]
 W KAR x x L[0] MU-U[N-x-x]

²³ D. Charpin, Clergé 389: "ENKUM et NINKUM choisissent les rites de purification."

on the lips,
 135 will not be added to this word of words.²⁴
 Refusal and threats did not arise.²⁵
 A rapacious hand, stretching out a forceful hand,²⁶
 a hand that keeps up with the mouth,²⁷ committing violence,
 (the case) that (someone) overturned an established line, (the incidence of) an altered demarcation,^{28 b}
 140 going ahead²⁹ (when one should not) to a place of oath,
 a first (loaf?) of 2 peck bread which was levied as tax, (of) 2 peck bread that had been distributed,³⁰
 (the case) that Small Stone lifted the hand for Larger Stone,^c that Small Peck lifted the hand for Larger Peck,^{31 c}
 that (someone) wants bread who has bread, 145 that (someone) who just ate does not state "I ate,"
 that (someone) who just drank does not state "I drank," (prompting one to say) "let me set a bowl before you, let me filter beer for you,"

b Deut 19:14;
 27:17

c Lev 19:35;
 Deut 25:13-
 16; Amos 8:5;
 Mic 6:10;
 Prov 11:1; 20:10

a maid of the deity who was lazy, (and) rebuked (for it) by the house,³²
 an untrustworthy (person) who ... while living in the house,
 150 when (a person responsible for any of the above) said "serve (me)! I want to eat," said "serve (me)! I want to drink," 153 Nanshe does not allow the person to eat³³ 152 from bread of fat and white eggs because of the violation.
 154 If the violator was allowed to eat he/(Nanshe) will not 'carry the word about it.'
 155 With ... eyes, paralyzed mouth, shuffling feet,³⁴ he does not fit in, he is no match:
 the powerful one [] over a person,
 the rich one in a reed hut by the street,
 one with wife [gave] away his wife for a widow,
 160 who laughed one day in his rage, makes fun another day of his calamity.
 Before the lady he cannot raise his ... word.
 The lady, caretaker of the provinces,
 Innin, mother Nanshe, sees into their hearts.
 165 Getting the better³⁵ of an orphan, ... a widow, placing a homeless man below a rich man,

²⁴ Cf. Gudea Cyl. A VII 3 according to which Nanshe, having instructed Gudea what do do on behalf of Ningirsu, predicts: TUR DU₁₁-GA-ZU MAH DU₁₁-GA-AM ŠU BA-A-ŠI-IB-TI "he will accept from you your 'small uttered' (word) as a 'large uttered' (word)," which means possibly that Gudea may say anything, even something insignificant, and it will be listened to as if it were something of importance.

²⁵ Cf. ELS 628-629.

²⁶ See note 4 above.

²⁷ Hand matched with mouth = skillful, experienced (said of the scribe who can write as fast as one talks) = routinely; or: who is prone to commit violence; quick to jump to action; premeditated. I.e., spoke about it (mouth) and did it (hand).

²⁸ The context of misdeeds of individuals does not suggest that the two actions in this line are major undertakings, as overturning a foundation (UŠ) would be. It may rather be the line (UŠ) of demarcation (see below) which determined a plot on a field. Nanshe was the "lady of the IN-DUB" (FAOS 9/2, 35 note 108). IN-DUB, and IM-DUB, are equated, among other things, with palāku ša pilki "to delimit, said of a division of land" or šapāku ša epri = "to pile up (said of dirt)." Combining both meanings, DUB may designate piling up and compacting of mud in a line of demarcation between plots. A more elaborate form of this is IM-DUB-A DUB, the "built up," pišē, mud walls surrounding gardens (cf. MSL 1, 61:30).

²⁹ SAĜ-GID-I = šarārum SAG A I 24 (OB). šarāru = GÜ SUM MSL 1:77, 74 (K texts): NÍ IN-NA-TE-MA MU-DIĜIR-RA GÜ³⁰ LI-BÍ-IN-SUM NAM-ÉRIM NU-UN-KU, = iplah-ma ana nš ili ul išrur mamītam ul itma — CAD s.v. šarāru suggests, for one group of references, the meaning "to go ahead." The present context suggests "to go ahead when one should not," in connection with the asseverative oath possibly "to perjure oneself."

³⁰ Jacobsen reads: SAĜ NINDA-2(BAN)-KA NÍĜ-KU, AK-A NINDA 2 (BAN) ÍB-TA-BA-A. He suggests that SAĜ designates here "weight adjustment" as in the Ur III wool weighing texts for which he has clarified the term. Assuming that the ban measure of the taxed person was smaller, for example ¾ that of the taxing authority, the weight adjustment would have been 5 quarts. If these 5 quarts were tax exempt, as Jacobsen suggests, the taxing authority would have encouraged tax payers to use small ban measures and harmed itself in the process. My translation implies that the temple taxed bread which it gave out as rations, thereby actually, but not nominally, reducing wages, and that this was seen as an unfair practice. A peck is 8 quarts while the Sumerian ban is 10 quarts.

³¹ The occurrence of the dative requires that stone weight and peck were animate beings. The motif of a someone small edging on his larger companion is known from the demonic constables (GALLA) that pursue Dumuzi.

³² (a) My old translation derived from equation with lu²²tu, Jacobsen's from qāpu, the new translation from uššulu (AHw s.v. "gelähmt"), and is based on the assumption that the word does not just describe a person who cannot, but also one who will not, use the hands; lit., "with hanging hands." (b) Lit., "(on whom) word (was) returned from the house." É-TA INIM GI₄-A is also known from Gudea Statue B I 13-19: ÉNSI INIM BÍ-ÍB-GI₄-A ME "NIN-ĜIR-SU-KA BA-NI-ÍB-LÁ-A SÁ-DU₁₁-NA É "NIN-ĜIR-SU-KA-TA INIM HÉ-ÉB-GI₄ KA-KA-NI HÉ-KÉŠ "a governor who causes the word to return on them (the previously listed regular provisions for the upkeep of statue B)," i.e., ceases continuation of the endowment, and (thus) "subtracts from the power of Ningirsu — may the word from the house of Ningirsu be returned on his regular provisions."

³³ Lit., "at the place of violation." If the transfer from a spatial to a temporal meaning of KI + genitive + locative is not accepted, we must assume that KI designates the area of jurisdiction of Nanshe.

³⁴ SAG B 135f. KIRI-HUM = hu-um-mu-su and ha-am-šu. Both Akk. words are obscure.

³⁵ SAĜ-ĜÁ AKA = to act in/on/over a head = "to get the better of someone."

placing a rich man below a poor man,³⁶ d a mother who screamed violently³⁷ at her child, a child who spoke stubbornly³⁸ to its mother, 170 a younger brother who snarled at his older brother, talked back at the father — the lady, ...
 Nanshe, ... sees into the heart of the land as if it were a split reed.
 ...
 175 Her herald, lord Hendursag, made the contracts for her.
 Her angel Old Small Child did not let silence³⁹ come over it.
 The demon, standing ..., watching ...
 [] her house Sirara where water is sprinkled,
 ...
 181 Did not the one adorned with the staff, trusted in Abzu's interior, who has no opponent in the high temple⁴⁰ (and)
 house of Nanshe?
 184 the king, lord Hendursag, bring forth
 183 its command from the house of Nanshe?
 185 Like heavy smoke it covers the ground.
 Its word spreads over the sky as ... clouds.
 The BULUG⁴¹ of spouseship he ... together,
 the king, lord Hendursag, he ... together.
 He places a good person among good persons,
 190 Hands over a bad person to a bad place.
 He renders judgement for an orphan,
 he also renders judgement for a widow,⁴²
 (and) he sets right the judgement of a child's mother.
 If a mother shared food with her child, 195 shared⁴² drink with it, removed chaff⁴³ from its mouth:
 (By her) whom its (the temple's) person of regular provisions seated by its (the temple's) side,
 by its (the child's) mother, the firewood carrier did not pass with what he brought from the steppe, (and) he did not talk to (such
 a) mother who had given birth in the great city

d Lev 19:15

e Exod 22:21;
Deut 10:18,
etc.

200 with dry eyes and shrugging shoulders.

If a mother
 screamed violently at her child,
 a mother ripped its ...
 (but) let it drink from her milk filled breast:
 205 She, who searches the matter of that mother, searches the matter;
 the lady of ...
 When the king who loves things straight, Hen-dursag,
 has set the issues straight (and) [x-ed] the eye
 on its judgement,
 (if) he places the blame on the mother of the child, 210 she will not be able to bear the weight of heavy blame, and such person will have no god to pray to.
 If a mother did not share food with her child,
 did not share drink with it,
 did not remove chaff from its mouth:
 215 (By her) whom its (the temple's) person of regular provisions did not seat on its (the temple's) seat,
 by its (the child's) mother, the fire wood carrier passed with her share of what he brought from the steppe,
 (and) he talked to (such a) mother who had given birth in the great city
 with dry eyes and shrugging shoulders.
 The king who hates violence, Hendursag, 220 treats such a human being as if she were water in a treacherous place,⁴⁴ rejects her for that child as if she were barley in sterile/soil.
 The lady who [determines] the destiny like En-lil,
 230 [who] on the dais of Sirara, has her eyes on her divine powers, the pure.
 "Has not the house been granted divine powers from Abzu?"
 The gods of Lagash assemble before her in Sirara.
 The true stone for weighing silver, the setting

³⁶ The opposite is expected.³⁷ Lit., "talked at her child with raised arm."³⁸ KA-DÜ-A = pām wašum (MSL 13:244). Cf. for possible alternative interpretations ELS 669.³⁹ ĠİŠ-LÁ = qātu "silence," or = tuqumu "battle." The choice of the equation in this context is defended in my 1981 commentary. ĠİŠ seems to stand for two words that are distinguished morphemically in Emesal as MU or MU-UŠ. The first is the Emesal word, respectively spelling of the word, "wood," the second occurs as first element of ĠĒŠTU and ĠĪZZAL (Emesal II 183-184 = MSL 4:24). ĠİŠ in ĠİŠ-LÁ = Emesal MU-UŠ (Ur Lamentation 101).⁴⁰ I follow AHw gegunū for GI-GUN₄-NA. Accordingly it is the shrine on top of a ziqqurat. As Jacobsen notes, it was surrounded by trees. These are the trees that were planted, presumably in containers, on temple towers to give them the look of mountains.⁴¹ "The needle of matrimony" according to PSD 2:274; possibly related to Akk. mulūgu, Aram. m'lōg; see Levine 1968. [WWH]⁴² I assume that IN-TUK is a frozen form finite verbal form used as noun.⁴³ IN-BU₃-BU, Proto Izi I 448 (MSL 13:31). BU, means "to blow," IN-BU₃-BU, "blowing straw," i.e., a product of winnowing, chaff. It consists mainly of bracts of flowers and glumes of the ears of grain. It was inevitable that the breeze that was necessary for winnowing dispersed these parts. I assume that at such occasions, but also at other times, a glume or bract, both of which are often hooked, could get into the mouth of a baby, and that mothers were judged on how they reacted.⁴⁴ For more examples of this idiom cf. ELS 587. In the context of the prayer quoted there, the meaning suggested here fits well.

up the true basket, 235 the peck of true word she presents to all lands. The shepherd, leader of the land, ... of the provinces, Ishtaran who lives for straight judgments in the land, ... Ningishzida ...		powers]. Nanshe, your divine powers are not matched by any other divine powers. King An looks on with joy. He who sits with Enlil on the dais of destiny determination, Father Enki, has determined your destiny.
250 My lady, your divine powers are great divine powers, are surpassing [(other) divine		255 Nanshe, child born in Eridu, to praise you is good.

REFERENCES

Text: Heimpel 1981a. Translations and Studies: Jacobsen 1987a:125-142; Charpin 1986; Gomi and Sigrist 1991:81-95; ELS; KKU.

THE BLESSING OF NISABA BY ENKI (1.163)

(NIN-MUL-AN-GIM)

William W. Hallo

This hymn in honor of Enki, "the crafty god" (Kramer and Maier 1989), seems to commemorate his blessing of Nisaba, perhaps on the occasion of her (annual ?) visit, in the guise of her statue, to his sanctuary at Eridu. As the personification of both reed and grain, Nisaba was patron-goddess of both scribal art and agriculture, and both characteristics are celebrated in this hymn.

Oh lady, shining like the stars of Heaven, holding the lapis lazuli tablet, Nisaba, born in the great sheepfold by the divine Earth, Wild kid nourished (as) on good milk with pure vegetation, Mouth-opened by the seven flutes, ^{1 a} (5) Perfected with (all) the fifty great divine attributes. Oh my lady, the most powerful one in the Ekur — ² Dragon, emerging brightly on the festival ³ Mother-goddess ⁴ of the nation, biting off a piece from the clay, ^b Pacifying the habitat with cool water, (10) Providing the foreign land with plenty, Born in wisdom by the great mountain (Enlil), Righteous woman, chief scribe of Heaven (An), record-keeper of Enlil, All-knowing sage of the gods — In order to make grain and vegetables grow in the furrow,	^a Prov 9:1 ^b Job 33:6	(15) So that the excellent corn can be marvelled at, That is, to provide for the seven great throne-daises By making vegetables shoot forth, making grain shoot forth, At harvest, the great festival of Enlil, ⁵ She in her great princely role has verily cleansed (her) body, (20) Has verily put the holy priestly garment on (her) torso. In order to establish oblations where none existed, And to pour forth great libations of wine So as to appease X, to appease End[agara], To appease merciful Kusu and Ezina, ⁶ (25) She will appoint a great high-priest, will appoint a festival, Will appoint a great high-priest of the nation. Oh virgin Nisaba, he blesses you in prayer. He has verily prepared the pure oblation, Has verily opened the House of Learning of Nisaba, ⁷ (30) Has verily placed the lapis lazuli tablet on
---	--	---

¹ Variants: counting-reeds; baskets. Perhaps an allusion to the "seven (branches of) learning" alluded to in some royal hymns (e.g. Shulgi C 30; Ishme-Dagan A 73), hence comparable to the "seven pillars of wisdom" (differently Greenfield 1985).

² The temple of Enlil at Nippur; became in Akk. a generic term for any temple (see CAD s.v. ekurru).

³ Variant: in the assembly.

⁴ Lit., Aruru. For this goddess and her maternal functions, see Wilcke 1976b:235-239; Hallo 1989. For the concept of (her) pinching off clay to create mankind, see CAD s.v. karāšu, kiršu.

⁵ The entire line is a topos, or literary cliché, recurring in other contexts such as line 52 of "The Instructions of Ur-Ninurta" (Alster 1991; cf. below, text 1.177), line 60 of "The Disputation between Summer and Winter" (below, text 1.183), and line 164(a) of the myth of "The Marriage of Sud" (Civil 1983).

⁶ Kusu is a purification goddess associated with the censer, Endagara or Indagra (if correctly restored) is her consort (and sometimes identified with Nisaba's consort Haya), and Ezina or Ashnan is the grain goddess. All belong in the circle of Nisaba. (Michalowski 1985:222; 1993:158f.).

⁷ Temple of Nisaba at Eridu (and Uruk); later her shrine in the great temple of Marduk in Babylon. See George 1993:91 s.v. É-GESTU-NISSABA.

(her) knee. Taking counsel with the holy tablet of the heavenly stars, (As) in Aratta he has placed Ezagin at her disposal,⁸ Eresh he has constructed in abundance. She is created out of pure little bricks, (35) She is granted wisdom in the highest degree. In the Abzu,⁹ the great crown(?) of Eridu, (where) sanctuaries are apportioned, [In ...], (where) offices(?) are apportioned, The great princely plowman of the resplendent temple, the craftsman of Eridu, The king of lustrations, the lord of the mask of the great high-priest, Enki — (40) The Engur-house⁹ when he occupies it, The Abzu of Eridu when he builds it, The Halanku¹⁰ when he takes counsel in it, The house of the box-tree when he fells it, The sage when his hair is loosened behind him,¹¹ d (45) The House of Learning when he opens it,	c 1 Kgs 7:23; 2 Chr 4:2 d Judg 5:2; cf. Ezek 44:20	The door of learning when he stands in its street, The great kettle-drum of cedar when he finishes(?) it, The ... of date-palm when he perfects (var. holds) it The drum of ... when he strikes it with the ... — ¹² (50) On Nisaba, the great ..., he invokes seven [blessings(?)]:¹³ Oh Nisaba, (be) a righteous woman, a good woman, a woman born in the mountain! Oh Nisaba, in the stall may you be the fat! In the pen may you be the milk! In the treasure-house may you be the keeper of the seal! In the palace may you be the honest steward! (55) May you heap up grain-piles (as large as) a mound, grain-piles (as small as) a māšu-measure!¹⁴ For the fact that a blessing was invoked on Nisaba by the Prince, Oh father Enki, your praise is sweet!
---	--	--

Comparable lines already occur in Cylinder A of Gudea (xvii 15f.), and in "Enmerkar and the Lord of Aratta" 321 (text 1.170 below), where Jacobsen weighs a translation by "library" (1987a:301, n. 49).

⁸ Lit., "lapis lazuli house" or "blue house," sacred to Nisaba at Eresh but to Ishtar/Inanna at Susa in Iran and at Aratta in Afghanistan(?), source of ancient lapis lazuli; cf. George 1993:158f. s.v. É-ZA-GIN-(NA).

⁹ Lit., "Sea," the temple of Enki at Eridu, sometimes compared to the "molten sea" of Solomon's temple; cf. ABD 5:1061f. s.v. "Sea, molten"; George 1993:65 s.v. (É)-ABZU. Also known as "House of the Sweet Waters"; ib. s.v. É-ENGUR.RA.

¹⁰ Another name for Enki's temple at Eridu, or for "his room of taking counsel" there according to line 25 of the myth of "Enki and Ninmah"; see above, text 1.159, with note 12.

¹¹ This characteristic hairdo was later the mark of certain priests (see CAD s.v. luḫšū, sigbarrū) among others (Jacobsen 1988:127 and n. 13) and in Israel apparently of dedicated warriors.

¹² For these musical instruments in association with Enki, cf. S. N. Kramer, ActSum 3 (1981) 5:23.

¹³ The restoration is based in part on the seven blessings of the foundations pronounced by Gudea in Cylinder A xx-xxi, although this interpretation of the Gudea passage has been questioned (Suter 1996a; 1996b).

¹⁴ Translation follows CAD M/1:401c s.v. māšu.

REFERENCES

Text: Hallo 1970a. Translations and studies: Hallo 1970a; Alster 1976:119 and n. 31; Selz, 1989:495.

3. PRAYERS AND LETTER-PRAYERS

LETTER-PRAYER OF KING SIN-IDDINAM TO NIN-ISINA (1.164)

William W. Hallo

The genre of letter-prayer combines the format of a letter with the function of a prayer. It is attested first for private petitions in Sumerian, and then developed into a royal mode of communication with the divine, as here. Later examples of the genre occur in Akkadian and perhaps even in Hebrew, notably the "writing" or "letter" of Hezekiah in Isaiah 38. Like that letter, this one is concerned with royal illness; it is addressed to the healing goddess called "lady of Isin," patron deity of the kingdom of Isin, by a king of its chief rival, the kingdom of Larsa.

To Nin-isina, beloved daughter of lofty An (Heaven), mistress of Egalmah,¹ speak!^a
 To the chair-bearer of the Orient, the counselor of the netherworld,
 The beloved (chief) wife of the warrior Pabilsag,
 the senior daughter-in-law of Ki'ur,²
 The senior record-keeper of An and Enlil, proudest of goddesses,
 (5) Who perfects the attributes of Duranki³ in Nippur,
 Who makes their exaltation appear in Egalmah,
 the house of her queenship,
 Who has founded (in) Larak the Enigingar (and) the (E)ashte, the Esabad and the Esasumma,⁴ Great healer whose incantation is life, whose spells restore the sick man,
 Mother of the nation, merciful one,
 who loves prayer and supplication,
 (10) My lady, say furthermore to her —
 This is what Sin-iddinam, the king of Larsa, your servant, says:
 Since the day of my birth, after you spoke to Utu⁵
 (and) he gave me the shepherdship over his nation,
 I do not neglect my duties, I myself have been unable to sleep sweetly,
 I have sought health (in vain?).
 For the gods greatly in my worship
 (15) I perform prayers and sacrifices,
 I have withheld nothing from them.
 (But) Asarluhi spends time (with) the king of Babylon, the son of Ilurugu (the Ordeal-River) with [...].⁶
 Their city against my city daily overruns the land,
 Their king seeks out the king of Larsa as an evildoer.
 (Though) I, not being the shepherd over their nation, have not coveted(?) their sacrifices,
 (20) A young man stationed himself at my feet at night in the guise of a dream,
 He stood at my head, I myself saw his terrible glance,

a Isa 38:9-20

Carrying a river-oar(?), having cast a spell most evilly.⁷
 Since that day, my manhood is not in order,
 his hand has seized me.
 There is no escaping from my fears by myself,
 I am seized by an evil sickness.
 (25) My sickness is an unlit darkness, not visible to man.
 The physician will not look upon it,
 will not soothe it with a bandage.
 The exorcists will not recite the spell,
 assuredly my sickness has no diagnosis.
 My sickness: its (healing) herb has not sprouted forth on plain (or) mountain, no one gets it for me.
 Healing my sickness is with you (alone),
 let me declare your exaltation:
 (30) "As my [mother] has abandoned me since my childhood,
 I am one who has no [mother],
 no one recites my lament to you,
 you are my mother!
 Except [for you], I do not have another personal goddess,
 no one pleads for mercy to you on my behalf.
 No one seeks [for mercy?] from you for me,
 you are my personal goddess!"
 I am verily your constable (and) dog,⁸
 I do not cease from being tied to you.
 (35) Damu, your beloved son:
 I am verily his private soldier (and) weapon holder,
 May you plead for mercy for me before him!⁹
 My sickness has been changed into (worse) sickness, one does not know how to rectify it.
 At midday I cannot be given any sustenance,
 by night I cannot sleep.
 May you be my very own mot[her?], holy Ninisina, merciful lady!
 (40) With my not sleeping,
 let me bring my wailing to you at night:
 "Let me behold your favorable glance,
 give me sweet life!
 [As for me], like a bird fleeing from a falcon,

¹ Lit., "the lofty palace," chief temple of Nin-isina in Isin. This and subsequent temple-names are translated following George 1993, s. v.

² Lit., "the levelled place," the temple of Ninlil, whose son Pabilsag was Nin-isina's consort, at Nippur.

³ "Bond of Heaven and Earth," temple of Inanna at Nippur.

⁴ "The established chamber," "the throne house," "the house of the open ear" (or: "the grave"; cf. CAD s.v. qubāru), and ? respectively.

⁵ Sun-god (equated with Akk. Shamash) and patron-deity of Larsa.

⁶ Asarluhi is a deity of Kuara near Eridu, a son of Enki, and associated with both the deified Ordeal-River and Marduk, the patron-deity of Babylon.

⁷ This difficult line occurs in only one exemplar.

⁸ Variant: your little lap dog (lit. chair-dog). Perhaps an allusion to the iconography of Nin-isina (or Gula) enthroned on or beside her sacred dog.

⁹ Damu is a healing deity, like his mother. There is an unpublished letter or "address by Nin-isina to Damu on behalf of Sin-iddinam" which seems like the veritable answer to Sin-iddinam's prayer! See Michalowski 1988:266; Keller 1991:310, n. 8.

I am seeking to save my life. As for me, let me enter your lap in the face of Death, save me from (its) hand! I am a young man, I set up lamentation in the face of Death, my life ebbs away from me." (45) Like a mother-cow, have mercy on me! Like a [...], have mercy on me! Like the mother who bore me, who verily took me from the womb(?),	have mercy on me! Hear the ..., (you who are) ill disposed toward the Damu, your beloved son, the great healer of Enlil, (50) He knows the plant of life, he knows the water of life. ¹⁰ [...] the command of the god who created me, who [can change? it] against you? Asarluhi, the son of Ilurugu, has verily spoken: "Let him live!"
--	--

¹⁰ The plant of life and water of life are familiar topoi from Sum. and Akk. myths and epics. Cf. e.g. lines 258-263 of "Lugalbanda in the Cave of the Mountain."

REFERENCES

Text: OECT 5:30 and duplicates. Translations and studies: Hallo 1976; Keller 1991; Michalowski 1988.

LETTER-PRAYER OF KING SIN-IDDINAM TO UTU (1.165)

William W. Hallo

Like the preceding letter-prayer, this one is written (as if) by Sin-iddinam, king of Larsa (ca. 1849-1843 BCE) to complain about illness and seek relief. But unlike the former, this one (a) deals with collective illness, (b) addresses Utu, the patron-deity of the dynasty, and (c) survives into Middle Babylonian times in a copy from Emar (Arnaud 1991 No. 101) and into neo-Assyrian times in a copy from Nineveh. The latter substitutes Babylon for Larsa and a royal name, now lost, for Sin-iddinam, and it is a bilingual, i.e., it adds an interlinear translation into Akkadian. But it remains recognizably the old text, and provides at least a chronological bridge to the comparable Biblical genre.

To Utu, my king, lord, senior judge of Heaven and Earth, ¹ Protector of the nation who renders verdicts, Righteous god who loves to preserve people alive, who hears prayer, Long on mercy, who knows clemency, (5) Loving justice, choosing righteousness - speak! To the bearded son of Ningal, (who) wears a lapis lazuli beard, ² Opener of the locks of Heaven and Earth, who makes the dark places bright, ³ Lord who alone is a resplendent leader, whose exaltation is unequalled,	Warrior, son born by Ningal, who guards and gathers together the divine attributes, (10) Righteous god, prince who determines all fates, father of the black-headed ones — ⁴ say furthermore! This is what Sin-iddinam, the king of Larsa, your servant, says. The body of the letter includes a long complaint about the plague which has ravaged Larsa for seven (variant: five) years, protests the king's innocence and cultic fastidiousness, contrasts it with the godlessness of the Shimashkians from Iran who for all that have been spared, and prays for deliverance.
---	--

¹ This line, omitting at most "lord," is entered as an incipit in an OB catalogue of literary letters; see van Dijk 1989:444:13.

² As wife of the moon-god Nanna (Suen/Sin), Ningal was mother of the sun-god Utu (Shamash). The lapis lazuli beard helps show that the reference is to the deity in the form of a statue, with eyes, beard and other portions often inlaid in semi-precious stone such as the prized blue lapis lazuli imported from as far away as Afghanistan.

³ For the sun-god as opening the locks of heaven by day and illuminating the netherworld by night, see CAD s.v. namzaqu and esp. Heimpel 1986.

⁴ The conventional designation by which the Sumerians (and later the Babylonians) referred to themselves; see CAD s.v. šalmāt qaqqadi.

REFERENCES

Text: OECT 5:25:15-58 and duplicates. Translations and studies: Arnaud 1991:No. 101; Borger 1991; Civil 1996; Hallo 1982; Heimpel 1986.

4. LAMENTATIONS

LAMENTATION OVER THE DESTRUCTION OF SUMER AND UR (1.166)

Jacob Klein

Out of the five early Sumerian lamentations hitherto published, two laments commemorate the destruction of Ur, the capital of the Ur III empire. The Third Dynasty of Ur fell in the reign of Ibbi-Sin, its fifth king (ca. 2028-2004 BCE), as a result of a joint attack by the Elamites from the east and the Amorites from the west. The laments were composed not long after the events they record, probably at the initiative of one of the early kings of the Isin Dynasty, which inherited the hegemony over Sumer and began restoring the former capital. The purpose of these laments most probably was to soothe the heart of the city-god, Nanna, so that he allow the restoration of his temple, an undertaking which involved the razing and removal of the ruins of the old temple. The laments also were intended to ensure that the god would prevent the recurrence of the disaster in the future.¹

The First Ur Lament, parts of which are translated below,² seems to have been dedicated to Ninlil, the wife of the city-god Nanna, for she is the dominant figure in the composition: She is pleading for her city in the divine assembly, where its destruction has been decreed; and she laments over it after its destruction. The Second Ur Lament,³ on the other hand, seems to have been dedicated to the city god, Nanna, for in this poem he is the dominant hero; he pleads for his city to his father, Enlil, in the divine assembly, and when he is informed that his city is doomed, he abandons it, and enables the enemy to take over.

The First Ur Lament is a 436-line long, beautiful poem, divided into eleven cantos.⁴ It opens with the enumeration of the major cities and temples of the land which were abandoned by their respective gods and devastated (Canto 1). Subsequently, the poet addresses the city, uttering a bitter lament over it (Canto 2). Next, the goddess Ningal is introduced, pleading for her city to her husband, Nanna, and to the heads of the pantheon. In her plea she complains that the supreme gods, An and Enlil, doomed her city to destruction and refused to heed her prayer and to take back their decision (Cantos 3-4). At this point, the poet describes the invasion of Sumer by the enemy. On the mythological level, the enemy is described as a merciless "storm" sent by Enlil to destroy the city and annihilate its inhabitants; on the mundane level, we are informed of the attack of the people of Simashki and Elam, who tore down the city and the temple with their axes, slew or exiled its inhabitants, despoiled its treasures and disrupted its economic and cultural life (Cantos 5-6). Ningal flees from her temple like a bird flying away from her ravaged nest, and continues to lament over the city and its people, whom she calls "my beloved children" (Canto 7). Here the poet utters a call to Ningal to return to her abandoned city and temple, and to appeal again to the chief gods to stop the destruction and to put an end to the people's suffering (Canto 8). The lamentation ends with a passionate prayer to Nanna, the city god, that he return to his city and temple, and restore its ruins; that he accept favorably the offerings of the people and purify their hearts; and that he make sure that the destructive "storm" may never come back (Cantos 9-11).⁵

The Gods of Sumer Abandon their Temples (lines 1-6; 13-16; 37-39)

He has abandoned his stable,⁶ his sheepfold⁶ (became) haunted,⁷

The wild ox⁸ has abandoned his stable,

his sheepfold (became) haunted,

The lord of all lands has abandoned it,

a Judg 6:13;
2 Kgs 21:14;
Isa 32:13-14;
Jer 12:7;
25:37-38; Pss
78:60-61;
94:14;
Lam 2:7

his sheepfold (became) haunted,
Enlil⁹ has abandoned the shrine (of) Nippur,
his sheepfold (became) haunted;
(5) His consort, Ninlil, has abandoned it,
her sheepfold (became) haunted,
Ninlil has abandoned their house, the Kiur,¹⁰
her sheepfold (became) haunted ...

¹ For a summary of the rise and fall of the Ur III empire, see Hallo and Simpson 1971:77-93. For a general survey of Mesopotamian lamentations, see Green 1975:277-371; Krecher 1980-83; Hallo 1995.

² See note 5 below.

³ Michalowski 1989:36-69. See also Kramer, ANET 611-619.

⁴ The Sum. term for canto or stanza is KI-RU-GU, lit., "prostration" (translated freely with Akk. šēru "song"). Each canto ends with a one or two-line refrain (Sum. ĜIŠ-GI, ĜÁL).

⁵ For a critical edition of the lament, see Kramer 1940:16-71. For additional duplicates, not incorporated in this edition, see Gadd and Kramer, UET 6/2 (1966) Nos. 135-139; Kramer and Bernhardt TMH NF IV (1967) Nos. 18-25. For translations into German and English, see Falkenstein and von Soden 1953:192-213; Kramer, *ANET*² 1955:455-463; Jacobsen 1987a:447-477.

⁶ In lines 1-38, the poet uses a widespread metaphor, likening the temples to stables and sheepfolds, their gods to shepherds, and the people to cattle (see line 38). The gods having abandoned the temples, these are destroyed and turned into ruins haunted by ghosts.

⁷ Defective sentence, lacking the predicate, which appears only in line 37 below.

⁸ An epithet of Enlil. Jacobsen translates "herder."

⁹ The supreme god of the Sumerian pantheon. In the Second Ur Lament he is the one who decrees the destruction of Ur, and the transfer of its hegemony to Isin.

¹⁰ The forecourt of Enlil's temple, where Ninlil's shrine was located.

Nanna has abandoned Ur,
 his sheepfold (became) haunted,
 Suen¹¹ has abandoned the Ekishnugal,¹²
 his sheepfold (became) haunted;
 (15) His consort, Ningal, has abandoned it,
 her sheepfold (became) haunted,
 Ningal has abandoned her Agrunkug,¹³
 her sheepfold (became) haunted ...

Antiphone:

(37) His sheepfold became haunted,¹⁴
 he is grievously groaning over it.
 O cow, your lowing does not sound any more in the stable, the stable does not cause(?) joy(?) to the Prince!¹⁵

Ningal Pleads for her City to An and Enlil (lines 137-151; 162-172)

"On that day, when that storm¹⁶ had pounded again and again,
 When in the presence of the lady her city was destroyed,¹⁷
 On that day, when the storm had done(?)
 it(?) again and again,
 (140) When they¹⁸ ordered the utter destruction of my city,
 When they ordered the utter destruction of Ur,
 When they gave instructions that its people be killed —
 On that day, I verily did not forsake my city,
 I verily did not neglect my Land;
 (145) Truly I shed my tears before An,
 Truly, I myself uttered supplication before Enlil:^b
 'May the city not be destroyed!'
 I said indeed to them,
 'May Ur not be destroyed!'
 I said indeed to them,
 'May an end not be put to its people!'
 I said indeed to them.^c
 (150) But An never changed that word, Enlil never soothed my heart with that
 'It is good; so be it!'

b Jer 4:31;
 Lam 1:2, 16-17; 2:18-19

c Pss 74:19-22; 79:6-11; 83:11-14

d Lam 1:17; 2:1-3, 22

e Num 23:19; 1 Sam 15:29; Isa 40:8; 55:11; Jer 4:27-28; 23:20

f Jer 23:19-20; 25:32; 30:23-24; Amos 1:14; Ps 83:16

g Jer 8:2; 9:21; 16:4; Lam 4:2

h Lam 1:4; 5:14-15

Verily they gave instructions
 that my city be utterly destroyed,
 Verily they gave instructions
 that Ur be utterly destroyed,
 Verily they decreed its destiny that its people be killed.^d
 (165) Me — in return for that
 I gave them my food —
 Me they verily also lumped with my city,
 My Ur they verily also lumped with me.
 An is never to change his word,
 Enlil is never to alter
 the word he utters!"^e

Antiphone:

Her city has been destroyed in her face,
 her offices were alienated from her!

The Aftermath of the Destructive Storm (lines 208-228; 240-246)

On that day, the storm¹⁹ was removed from the city, and that city was in ruins.
 O father Nanna, from that city, all in ruins, it was removed —
 the people groan!
 (210) On that day, the storm was removed from the Land, and that city was in ruins!^f
 Its people like potsherds²⁰
 littered its sides.^g
 In its walls breaches were made -
 the people groan!
 In its high gates where they were wont to promenade, corpses were piled,
 In its boulevards, where feasts were celebrated, heads lay in heaps(?), (215) In its streets, where they were wont to promenade, corpses were piled,
 In its places where the country's dances took place, people were stacked in heaps.^h
 The Land's blood filled all holes like copper or tin,²¹
 Their dead bodies melted away of themselves, like sheep fat left in the sun.
 Its men who were slain with ¹¹ The Semitic name of the moon-god Nanna.

¹² "The-House-which-Generates-Light-to-Earth" — Nanna's temple in Ur.

¹³ "The-Pure-Storehouse" — Ningal's temple in Ur.

¹⁴ Lit., perhaps "phantoms were placed in his/her sheepfold" or "his/her sheepfold was made into a phantom" (CAD Z 58-60, sub zaqlu; Michalowski 1989:98). Others render: "his sheepfold has been delivered to the wind" (Kramer); "in his sheepfold he has had the wind settle" (Jacobsen).

¹⁵ "The Prince" may refer to Nanna, the god of Ur, or to each and every deity mentioned in the preceding lament.

¹⁶ It is assumed that "storm" is here a poetic-theological metaphor for the onslaught of the enemy and the destruction of the city. Further on (lines 173-204), the dispatch of this storm is ascribed to Enlil, and its horrible effects are vividly described. Since, however, the word for "storm" is the same as the word for "day" (Sum. UD), other renderings are possible. Jacobsen translates our line: "In those days, when such (disaster) was being conceived" (see note 31 below).

¹⁷ If the text is not corrupt, than we have here a case of enallage: i.e. Ningal refers to herself exceptionally in the third person, as from a distance.

¹⁸ That is the leaders of the pantheon, An and Enlil, and the assembly of the great gods.

¹⁹ For this metaphoric use of "storm," see notes 16 and 31.

²⁰ Lit., "(although) not being potsherds."

²¹ The poet probably refers to copper and tin ore filling the crevices, or else to melted copper and tin in molds (Jacobsen).

the axe, (their) heads were not covered with a cloth.	i Ps 79:3; Lam 4:14	my city has verily been destroyed before me!
(220) Like gazelles caught in a trap, (their) mouths bit the dust.	j Ps 79:2-3; Lam 1:15; 4:9	Enlil has verily changed (the destiny) of my house, ²⁶ it has verily been smitten by pickaxes!
Its men whom the spear had struck down were not bound with bandages, As if in the place where their mother gave birth to them, they lay in their blood. ⁱ	k Deut 28:53- 57; Lam 1:11; 2:11- 13; 4:4-5, 8- 10	On my ones coming from the south he verily hurled fire; alas, my city has verily been destroyed before me!
Its men who were brought to end by the battle-mace, were not bandaged with new(?) cloth Although they were not beer drinkers, they drooped neck over shoulder.	l Ps 74:7-8; 79:17; Lam 1:13; 2:3; 4:11	(260) Enlil — on my ones coming from the north he verily hurled flames! ^o Outside the city, the outskirts of the city were verily destroyed before me; let me cry 'Alas, my city!'
(225) He who stood up to the weapon, was crushed by the weapon — the people groan!	m Ps 74:4-6; 79:1; Lam 2:1-2	Inside the city, the inner city was verily destroyed before me; let me cry 'Alas, my house!' ^p ...
He who ran away from it, was overwhelmed(?) by the storm — the people groan! ⁱ	n Lam 2:19- 22	(265) My city no more multiplied for me like a fecund ewe, its faithful shepherd is gone,
In Ur weak and strong both perished in the famine, ^k	o Lam 1:13	Ur no more multiplied for me like a fecund ewe, its shepherd boy is gone,
The old men and old women, who could not leave the house, were consumed by fire ...	p Deut 32:25; Jer 14:18; Ezek 7:15; Lam 1:20	My ox no more crouches in its stable, gone is its oxherd, My sheep no more crouches in its sheepfold, gone is its herdsman.
(240) In the storehouses, abounding in the land, fires were lit, In its ponds, ²² Gibil, ²³ the purifier, relentlessly did (his) work. ⁱ	r Isa 34:13; Jer 9:10; 49:33; Ezek 13:4; Lam 5:18	In the river of my city dust has gathered, it has verily been made into foxholes, ^r
The lofty, untouchable mountain, the Ekishnugal ²⁴ —	s Isa 33:9; Jer 23:10; 51:21-23; Joel 1:10-12; Amos 1:2	(270) In its midst no flowing water is carried, its tax-collector is gone.
Its faithful house is entirely devoured by large axes.	t Lam 1:10; 4:1	In the fields of my city there is no grain, their farmer is gone,
The people of Simashki and Elam, the wreckers, counted its worth thirty shekels. ²⁵		My fields, like fields devastated(?) by the hoe, have verily grown tangled(?) weed, My orchards and gardens, full of honey and wine, have verily grown mountain thorn.
(245) They tear down the faithful house — the people groan!		My plain, covered with its luxurious verdure, ²⁷ have become verily parched ²⁸ like an oven ^s ...
They make the city a mound of ruins — the people groan! ^m		(275) My silver, gems and lapis-lazuli have verily been scattered about — let me cry: 'O my possessions!'
Ningal's Lament over her Ruined City (lines 254-274; 278-291)		My treasures the swamp has verily swallowed up — let me cry: 'O my possessions!'
Mother Ningal, like an enemy, stands outside her city;		(280) My silver - men who had never known silver have verily filled their hands with it,
(255) The woman bitterly laments over her ravaged house,		My gems — men who had never known gems have verily hung them around their necks. ^t
The princess bitterly laments over her ravaged shrine (of) Ur: ^u		My birds and fowl have verily flown away — let me cry: 'Alas, my city!'
"An has verily cursed my city,

²² Sum. A-NIGIN.²³ The god of fire.²⁴ See note 12 above.²⁵ Lit., "made it thirty shekels" — that is treated it with contempt, or destroyed it easily. See Reiner 1968; 1980.²⁶ Or "has verily exchanged my house (with another)" (Jacobsen).²⁷ For GIRI₁-ZAL = taššitu, urqutu, see Å. Sjöberg, ZA 55 (1962):3-4.²⁸ Or "cracked."

My daughters and sons²⁹ have verily been carried off as captives in ships³⁰
— let me cry: 'Alas, my city!' ...
[Woe is me! My city] which ceased to exist
— I am no longer its queen,
(285) [Nanna], Ur which ceased to exist
— I am no longer its queen!
Upon the ruins into which my house verily has been made, upon my city which has verily been destroyed,
I, the faithful woman - in place of my city
a strange city verily has been built.³¹
(290) Upon the ruins, into which my city verily has been made, upon my house which has verily been destroyed,
I, Ningal - in place of my house
a strange house verily has been built!

Curse against the Destructive 'Storm' (lines 388-392; 400-417)

Woe! Storm after storm swept the Land together.
The great storm of heaven, the ever roaring storm, (390) The malicious storm which swept through the Land³¹ —

The city-ravaging storm, the house-ravaging storm,
The stable-ravaging storm,
the sheepfold-burning storm" ...

(400) The storm which knows no mother, the storm which knows no father —

The storm which knows no wife, the storm which knows no child —

The storm which knows no sister, the storm which knows no brother —

The storm which knows no neighbor, the storm which knows no confidant³² —

The storm which caused the wife to be abandoned, the storm which caused the child to be abandoned

(405) The storm which caused the Land to perish —
The storm which swept (through the Land)
at Enlil's hateful command —

O Father Nanna, may that storm swoop down no more upon your city,
May your black-headed people

u Isa 1:7; Jer
51:51; Hos
7:9; Lam 5:2

v Isa 13:6-
10; Jer 23:19-20; 25:32;
30:23-24;
Joel 2:1-3;
Amos 1:14;
Zeph 1:7;
Ps 83:16;
Lam 1:12

w Jer 20:14-
18; Job 3:3-9

x Jer 33:8;
Ps 51:12;
Lam 5:21

not see(?) it(?) (again)!³³

May that stormy day, like rain pouring down from heaven, never recur!

(410) That which smote all living beings of heaven and earth, the black-headed people,
That storm — may it be entirely destroyed!

Like the great city-gate at night,
may the door be closed tight on it!

May that stormy-day not be placed in the reckoning,

May its number be taken down from the peg in Enlil's Temple!^{34w}

Antiphone:

Unto distant days, other days,
to the end of the days!

Concluding Penitential Prayer to Nanna (lines 418-424; 430-436)

From days of yore, when the Land was founded,
O Nanna, the humble men,
who lay hold of your feet,

(420) Have brought to you their tears over the silenced temple, their chanting (intoned) before you;³⁵

May your black-headed people, who have been cast away,
make obeisance to you,

In your city, which has been made into ruins,
may a wail be set up unto you!

O Nanna, may your restored city
radiate before you,

Like a bright heavenly star,
may it never be destroyed,
may it (always) walk in your sight! ...

(430) May (your) heart relent toward 'the man' who uttered a prayer for it!³⁶

And having looked faithfully upon the 'man of supplication'
who stands here for it,

O Nanna, (you) whose penetrating gaze searches the bowels,

May the hearts of its people that committed evil,³⁷
be purified before you!

²⁹ GI₁-IN (Akk. ardatu) is rendered (here and in the next line) as "young girls," "daughters"; it may refer to "slave-girls" (Jacobsen).

³⁰ Collation of the text points to má-e.

³¹ The Sum. word, translated in lines 388-414 as "storm," is UD, usually meaning "day," "weather." Hence, a translation like "stormy-day" would be more accurate (see below lines 409-413). Note further that the expression UD ... BA-E-ZAL-LA-RI, translated in this line as "The storm ... which swept over the land," may also be rendered: "A day ... which dawned." Accordingly, Jacobsen translates this line: "The griveous day that dawned for the country."

³² The description of the storm in lines 400-404 resembles closely the typological description of various malicious demons in Sum. mythology (see Alster 1972b:104-106).

³³ Translation is based on the deletion of -ZU in IGI-ZU. Kramer translates, maintaining -ZU, as follows: "May you not look (unfavorably) upon your black-headed people!"

³⁴ Translation follows Jacobsen, who adds the following comment: "The days were thought of as personified and imbued with propensity for good or evil. Removing this (stormy) day from the reckoning, taking it out of the calendar, would mean that it never could be sent out again, would be totally destroyed" (1987a:473, note 36). Other possible translations: "May its (final) account hang on a peg in the house of Enlil" (Falkenstein 1953); or "May its account be hung from a nail outside the temple of Enlil" (Gragg 1973b:35; following Kramer 1940:69).

³⁵ The "humble man" who represents the people and brings their lament before the god may be the king or the high-priest.

³⁶ That is: for the city.

³⁷ Others: "that suffered evil" (Falkenstein and Jacobsen).

May the hearts of your (people) who dwell in the land be good to you!	y Pss 44:8; 74:21; 79:13	O Nanna, in your city again restored, may (your) praise be sung!
--	-----------------------------	---

REFERENCES

Cohen 1981; 1988; Falkenstein and von Soden 1953:192-213; Green 1975; 1978; 1984; Gwaltney 1983; Hallo 1995; Hillers 1992:XXVIII-XXIX; Jacobsen 1987a:447-477; Kramer 1940; 1991; Kraus 1968:8-13; Krecher 1980-83; McDaniel 1968; Michalowski 1989.

5. INCANTATIONS

A "NON-CANONICAL" INCANTATION (1.167)

William W. Hallo

Incantations were among the earliest literary genres to be fixed in writing. Before they were collected into major canonical series, they circulated in individual formulations, as needed. Sometimes, as here, these were quite short, and to the point, even specifying the source of the problem by name. The name of the client who used the spell was inserted at the appropriate point. The concern here is with the perennial problem of improper burial of a deceased person, which exposed his survivors to the danger of his ghost coming back to haunt them and — worse — to cause them to fall sick.

Moving about by day(?) like a cow in the midst of heaven, a fire(?) rained down from above, Lu-Sukkal, son of Gudea, descended alive into the midst of the watery deep. ^{1 a} (5) "Let me not be made to descend!" let him not say before Utu!	a 1 Kgs 7:23 etc.	Let him not be one who returns to me! Of So-and-so son of So-and-so whose (personal) god is Enki, (10) and whose personal goddess is Geshtin- anna — ² Let him not afflict the stomach! ³ Conjuration, spell, incantation against colic. ⁴
--	----------------------	--

¹ I.e., he drowned; see CAD s.v. apsû. Alternatively: "into the inner sanctum of the temple"; see CAD s.v. šapsukku and above, text 1.163, n. 9.

² For the concept of the personal or protective goddess, see CAD s.v. amalûtu and esp. ištaru. Geshtin-anna, the sister of Dumuzi, is equated with Belit-seri in Akk.

³ Alternatively: "distress the heart." There is a whole class of incantations for appeasing the "angered heart" of a deity (Lambert 1974), but here the reference is to distressing the client, and the words used carefully echo those in the "narrative" portion of the incantation (lines 1-4).

⁴ So e.g. Cohen 1988:243, 17. Both ŠA-GIG in the rubric and ŠA-DIB in the text are translated by Akk. kis libbi; see CAD s.v. kīsu B; the latter also by murūš libbi, "distress"; see CAD s.v. muršu.

REFERENCES

Text: Gurney and Kramer OECT 5 (1976) No. 20. Translations and studies: Scheil 1927; Gurney and Kramer OECT 5 (1976) 31f.; Kutscher 1982.

FROM "EVIL SPIRITS" (1.168)

W. W. Hallo

The formation of systematic ("canonical") series of incantations began as early as Old Babylonian times in the case of the "Evil Spirits" (UDUG-HUL = utukku lemnūtu). Again, the concern was with improper burial and its baneful consequences. The present example is a brief incantation out of a reconstruction of second millennium forerunners running to nearly 1000 lines, and these in turn are vastly exceeded in size by the canonical versions of the first millennium.

Oh evil spirit, ghost appearing in the desert, Oh Namtar, when you touch something evil, ¹ Oh tongue which in its malice binds a man to you, May you be broken like a pitcher, ² may you be split like a measuring vessel! (5) May you not cross through the door-frame or over the door-sill! May you not cross over the threshold(?)!	Oh evil spirit, to your desert! Oh evil apparition, to your desert! ³ Oh (good ?) spirit dwelling in the house, ... Oh personal deity, (10) May the evil spirit and the evil apparition, like (sherds of) the potter's burzi -bowl, be smashed in the square! It is an incantation of the evil spirit.
--	---

¹ Generically a word for "destiny" or "fate," esp. an evil fate, hence "death," Namtar became a proper name for a demon or virtual "angel of death"; see CAD s.v. namtaru.

² The same image is used of Ur-Nammu, the king of Ur left for dead on the field of battle "like a broken pitcher" and thus perhaps the most famous example of potentially improper burial; see Kramer 1969a:118:59; 1969b:8 and n. 24.

³ See CAD s.v. alû.

REFERENCES

Text: PBS I/2:128 ii 8-22. Translations and studies: Falkenstein 1931:87-89; Geller 1985:48-51, 511-522.

6. LOVE POEMS

DUMUZI-INANNA SONGS (1.169)

Yitschak Sefati

The three poems translated below belong to the Sumerian love poetry composed during the Third Dynasty of Ur and early Old Babylonian periods (ca. 2100-1800 BCE). This poetry which is mainly cultic deals with the love affair and marriage of the divine couple, the gods of love and fertility, Dumuzi (the Sumerian name for Tammuz) and Inanna (the Sumerian name for Ishtar). This symbolic marriage commonly known as the "sacred marriage rite" (hieros gamos) was believed, according to the Sumerian mythographers and poets, to bring about the fertility of the soil and the fecundity of the womb. It took place, apparently, during the New Year festival. The king, representing Dumuzi, wedded one of the priestesses of high rank, representing Inanna, the alluring fertility goddess. The questions whether the rite took place annually or only occasionally, and who actually represented Inanna during the celebration, remain unanswered.

As in most of Sumerian poetic works, the following poems are ascribed to their appropriate categories by the ancient poets themselves with a special subscript at the end of the composition, resembling the superscript of the biblical psalter. The first two poems are each designated as a "BALBALE (of Inanna)"; the exact meaning of this designation is still unknown, but it seems to indicate that these poems were to be recited, perhaps antiphonally, and heard during certain court or temple festivities. The third poem is designated as TIGI ("kettledrum"), a drum-accompanied hymn; it is subdivided into two sections bearing the labels SA-GID-DA and SA-GAR-RA, which seem to refer to the tightening or loosening of the skin of the percussion instruments or, if string instruments are involved, to the tuning of the strings (Sumerian SA).

THE WOMEN'S OATH (1.169A) ¹

This poem may be divided into two parts. The first and shorter part (lines 1-12) is in the form of an address (written in the main dialect of Sumerian called Emegir) by Dumuzi to Inanna, the "sister," consisting of epithets of endearment for his beloved. The second part (lines 13-32, written in the Emesal-dialect of Sumerian) consists of Inanna's response, the main point of which is asking her lover to swear that he had no love affairs with other women. The oath is administered by Dumuzi, placing his right hand on her genitals, laying his left hand on her head, bringing his mouth close to her mouth and taking her lips into his mouth. The poem concludes with the same motif with which it began, i.e., the metaphoric description of the beloved. But this time it is Inanna who extols her lover's charms.

Lover (lines 1-12) My lubi , ² my lubi , my lubi ,	^a Prov 4:3; Cant 6:9	My labi , my labi , my honey of the mother who bore her, ^a
--	------------------------------------	---

¹ Source: Ni 2489 (SRT 31). Edition: Alster 1985:142-146; Jacobsen 1987b:60-63; Sefati 1990. Translation: Jacobsen 1987a:97-98; Kramer 1969c:104-106.

² The exact meaning of the words LABI/LUBI is uncertain. In view of the context they seem to be onomatopoeic terms of endearment.

My sappy vine, ^b my honey-sweet, my mellifluous mouth of her mother.	b Ps 128:3	(your) head on an alien (woman).
Your eyes — their gaze delights me, come ^c my beloved sister! ^d	c Cant 2:10, 13	My one who dons(?) the fine garment for me, ^e My beloved, the man of [my heart], [I will make you] take an oath, ^f oh my brother ^g of [beautiful eyes]!
(5) Your mouth — its utterance delights me, ^e my honey-sweet mellifluous mouth of her mother, Your lips — their kiss delights me, ^f come my beloved sister!	d Cant 4:9 et passim e Cant 4:9, 10, 12; 5:1, 2	(20) My brother, I will make you take an oath, oh my brother of beautiful eyes!
My sister, your barley — its beer is delicious, my mellifluous mouth of her mother, Your wort — its liquor(?) is delicious, come my beloved sister!	f Cant 4:3 g Cant 8:1	Your right hand on my nakedness should be placed, ^h
In the house — your charms [are irresistible], my mellifluous mouth of her mother, (10) Your charms, my sister, [are irresistible ...] my beloved, Your house — the storeho[use ...], m[y mellifluous] mouth of her mother, You, the Princess ... my ...	h Gen 24:2-9; 47:29 i Cant 2:6; 8:3 j Cant 1:4; 4:10	Your left on my head ⁱ should be laid; When you have brought your mouth close to my mouth, When you have seized my lips in your mouth, (25) By so (doing) you will take an oath to me, Thus is the "oath(?) ^g of the women," oh my brother of beautiful eyes!
		My blossoming one, my blossoming one, sweet is your allure! ^j My blossoming garden of apple trees, sweet is your allure! My fruitful garden of celtis -trees, sweet is your allure!
		(30) My(?) "Dumuzi-abzu by his own virtue"(?), sweet is your allure! My pure figurine, my pure figurine, sweet is your allure! Alabaster figurine, adorned with the lapis lazuli diadem, sweet is your allure!
		(It is a BALBALE-song of Inanna)

^a "Giving life" here is perhaps to be taken as meaning "to bring joy," "to revive the spirit."^b It is assumed that the lover (Dumuzi) lives outside the city.^c The rendering of the line is uncertain. Perhaps better: "My one who raises the veil(?) of (my) nakedness for me."^d Lit., "I will set the oath for you."^e Cf. the comparable gesture in connection with oaths in the patriarchal narratives; see Jacobsen 1987a:98, n. 2.^f The reading of the Sum. sign is somewhat uncertain.BRIDEGROOM, SPEND THE NIGHT IN OUR HOUSE TILL DAWN (I.169B)¹

This poem is a monologue by King Shu-Sin's beloved in which she yearns for him with words of love and expresses her longing for him in requests and wishes. At the conclusion of the song (lines 27-29) there is apparently an invitation to sexual union but in language not adequately clear to us.

Bridegroom ² of my heart, [my beloved] one, Your allure is a sweet thing, [is as sweet as] honey; ^a Dear(?) ³ of my heart, my beloved one, Your allure is a sweet thing, is as sweet as honey. (5) You have captivated(?) me, of my own will(?) I will come to you, Bridegroom, let me run after you to the couch; ^b	a Judg 14:18; Ezek 3:3; Ps 19:11; 119:103; Prov 24:13; Cant 4:11 b Cant 1:4 c Prov 7:17	You have captivated(?) me, of my own will(?) I will come to you, Dear(?), let me run after you to the couch. Bridegroom, I will do to you all the sweet things, (10) My precious sweet, honey I will bring(?) to you, In the bedchamber dripping with honey — ^c Let us enjoy your sweet allure, the sweet things!
---	--	---

¹ Source: Ni 2461 (ISET 1 90, pl. 32 = Belleten 16, pl. 66). Edition: Kramer 1952:360-363; Alster 1985:135-138; Sefati 1985:400-406. Translation: Kramer 1969c:92-93; Jacobsen 1976:171 (lines 1-15); Jacobsen 1987a:88-89; Alster 1993b:22 No. 11 (lines 11-17).² The present rendering "bridegroom" here (as well as in lines 6, 9, 15 and 19) is based on the assumption that the Sum. MU-TI-IN (or perhaps MU-DI-IN) is a secondary form derived from the Emesal word MU-UD-NA (NITADAM in Emegir) "beloved, husband." However, MU-TI-IN could alternatively be viewed as a dialectal form of ĠESTIN, "grapevine, grapes," in Emesal. Or else, it could be interpreted as "man" (Akk. zikaru), see Jacobsen 1987a:88.³ The Sum. word GI-RU, which recurs here (in lines 3, 8, 13, 21 and 23) and elsewhere in similar contexts of the Dumuzi-Inanna songs as a parallel to MU-TI-IN (see the previous note), is most probably an epithet of affection for the lover, although its exact meaning and etymology is

Dear(?), I will do to you all the sweet things, My precious sweet, honey I will bring(?) to you. (15) Bridegroom, you who have fallen in love with me, Speak to my mother, (and) I shall offer myself to you, (Speak) to my father, he will give (me to you) as a gift. Soothing the reins,^d the place which soothes the reins,^e I know, Bridegroom,^f spend the night in our house till dawn. (20) Of your heart, its place which gladdens the heart,^g I know,	d Prov 23:16 e Ps 19:9; Prov 15:30; 27:9, 11	Dear(?), spend the night in our house till dawn. You, since you have fallen in love with me, Dear(?), if only you would do to me your sweet things! The lord my god, the lord my guardian-angel, (25) My Shu-sin, who cheers Enlil's heart, If only you would do to me your sweet things^(h)! Your "place" (is) sweet as honey — if only you would lay hand on it! Lay (your) hand upon it for me like a cap(?) on a measuring cup, Spread(?) (your) hand over it for me like a cap(?) on an old measuring cup. (It is a BALBALE-song of Inanna)
---	--	--

quite obscure.

^a The translation assumes that the "place" (KI sign) preceding "your sweet" (ZÉ-BA-ZU) is most probably a scribal error for "things" (ĒM); cf. line 23. The terms "place" (line 27), and "hand" (lines 27-29), are apparently euphemistic expressions, and this closing passage seems to refer to an invitation to sexual union.

LOVE BY THE LIGHT OF THE MOON (I.169C)

This poem¹ is a dialogue between Inanna and Dumuzi/Ama-ushumgalanna, who woo each other as a young couple prior to their marriage.

The song opens with Inanna's monologue, in which she tells of her chance meeting with Dumuzi and about Dumuzi holding her hand and embracing her (obverse lines 1-8) when spending the previous day in song and dance. Then a dialogue with Dumuzi develops (obverse lines 9-22): Inanna, who is unusually portrayed here as a young and inexperienced maiden, pleads with Dumuzi to let her go home. Apparently she feared the angry reaction of her mother, Ningal, when the latter would realize that she had spent the night away from home in the company of a stranger. Dumuzi, who is revealed here as an enterprising suitor, teaches her "women's deceits"; in other words, he plants deceitful words in her mouth intended to justify her tardiness. Thus they will be able to make love together all night by moonlight. The beginning of the second part (obv. 24 - rev. 3) is highly fragmentary, and we do not know what happened between the couple. One cannot tell whether Inanna responded to Dumuzi's courting or whether, as is more likely, she refused to acquiesce to him like a prostitute, standing in the street. Instead she invited him to her home so that he would properly ask for her hand. When the text becomes intelligible (rev. 4-7), Inanna expresses the wish that Dumuzi turn aside to the gate of her mother Ningal's house where she, too, will joyfully run. Similarly, she expresses a wish (rev. 8-11) that her mother be informed of Dumuzi's arrival so that she would prepare the house for receiving this important guest and sprinkle water on the floor. The song concludes with praise (rev. 14-21), presumably by Inanna's mother, Ningal, for Dumuzi, the future son-in-law. She calls him "the son-in-law of Sin," who makes plants grow abundantly in the plain, and hence he is fit and worthy of Inanna's pure lap. It should be noted that but for the liturgical annotations therein, we would assume it to be a song of purely secular, literary character that was not connected with any cultic ritual but which served as a diverting song for women, to be hummed while they were spinning or weaving or engaged in other chores, in order to while away the time.

Inanna (obverse lines 1-12)

As I, the lady, was passing the day yesterday,
As I, Inanna, was passing the day yesterday,
As I was passing the day, as I was dancing about,
As I was singing songs (from) morning till evening —
(5) He met me, he met me,
The lord, the companion of An met me,
The lord seized me in his hands,
Ushumgalanna² embraced me.

"Wild bull(?), set me free, that I may go home!
(10) Companion of Enlil, set me free, that I may go home!
What can I set before my mother as false words?
What can I set before my mother, Ningal, as false words?"
Dumuzi (obverse lines 13-22)
"Let me teach you, let me teach you!
Inanna, let me teach you the women's false words:
(15) 'My girlfriend was dancing with me in the

¹ Source: HS 1486 (Bernhardt-Kramer, TMH NF III, No. 25). Edition: Kramer 1963:499-500; Sefati:1985, 209-217. Translation: Kramer 1969c:77-78 (obv. 1-22; rev. 4-17); Jacobsen 1976:28-30; 1987a:10-12; Alster 1993b:21-22. No. 10 (rev.6-14)

² Ushumgalanna is an abbreviated form of Ama-ushumgalanna, a by-name of Dumuzi.

square, ^a	a Cant 3:2	(5) I, in joy I am running around;
She ran around with me, playing the tambourine	b Prov 7:18	He is indeed standing at Ningal's gate,
and the recorder,		I, in joy I am running around.
Her chants, being sweet, she sang for me,	c Cant 3:4;	Oh, that someone would tell my mother!
In rejoicing, being sweet, I passed the day there	8:2	May our neighbor sprinkle water on the floor! ³
with her' —		(10) Oh, that someone would tell my mother,
This as false words you set before your own		Ningal!
mother,		May our neighbor sprinkle water on the floor!
(20) As for us — let me make love with you ^b by the		Her dwelling ¹ — its fragrance is sweet,
moonlight!		Her words (will) be joyful ones:
Let me loosen your combs on the pure and		Ningal, Inanna's mother (lines 14-21)
luxuriant couch!		"My lord is seemly for the holy lap,
May you pass there a sweet day with me in		(15) Amaushumgalanna, the son-in-law of Sin,
abundance and joy!"		The lord Dumuzi is seemly for the holy lap,
(It is the sagidda)		Amaushumgalanna, the son-in-law of Sin.
Inanna (obverse lines 24 - reverse 13)		My lord, how sweet is your abundance!
... I, the maid(?), in the alleys(?) ...		How tasty are your herbs and plants in the plain!
(25) With the wild bull, by day, I ...,		(20) Amaushumgalanna, how sweet is your (about eleven lines of the obverse and the first three lines of the		abundance!
reverse are broken away)		How tasty are your herbs and plants in the plain!"
He is indeed standing at our mother's gate, ^c		(It is the sagarra . It is a tigi -song of Inanna)

³ The exact significance of the neighbor sprinkling water is not clear. Alster (1993b:20-21 No. 10) interprets the act of the neighbor as a ritual for purification or apotropaic purposes, to secure happiness for the young couple.

REFERENCES

Alster 1985; 1993b; Civil 1990a; Jacobsen 1975; 1976; 1987a; 1987b; Kramer 1952; 1963; 1969c; Sefati 1985; 1990; Wilcke 1970.

This page intentionally left blank

B. ROYAL FOCUS

This page intentionally left blank

1. EPIC

ENMERKAR AND THE LORD OF ARATTA (1.170)

Thorkild Jacobsen

The story of Enmerkar and the Lord of Aratta begins in legendary times, before many of the inventions of civilization — such as written communication by letter. Enmerkar ruled in Uruk as “priest-king” (EN), and was the human husband of Inanna, with whom he united yearly in the rite of the sacred marriage. The lord of Aratta ruled in the fabled city of Aratta which lay in the mountains far away to the east. He also was the spouse of Inanna with the responsibilities for the city’s prosperity. But Inanna, we are told, loved Enmerkar best.

Enmerkar used this to his advantage in attempting to force the submission of Aratta and the provision of precious stones and other building materials for a temple in Uruk. A drought was brought on the land of Aratta by Inanna. The lord of Aratta, after realizing his dilemma, challenged Enmerkar intellectually. Although the lord of Aratta posed a series of seemingly insurmountable problems, Enmerkar solved them each time. In one particular instance, when his message was too long for his envoy’s memory, Enmerkar invented the letter for his envoy to take with him to Aratta. By accident, however, Ishkur (Inanna’s brother) happened to bring rain to Aratta which ended the drought. At this the lord of Aratta celebrated and revealed the miraculous origins of his people. Though somewhat fragmentary, the story ends with Enmerkar listing his achievements.

[lines 1-134, omitted here]

Nudimmud’s Spell (135-155)

Recite Nudimmud’s spell¹

to him:

“In those days,

there being no snakes,

there being no scorpions,

there being no hyenas,

there being no lions,

there being no dogs or wolves,

there being no(thing) fearful or hair-raising, mankind had no opponents —

in those days

in the countries Subartu,²

Hamazi,³

a Gen 11:1

bilingual Sumer

being the great country of princely office,

the region Uri⁴

being a country

in which was what was appropriate,

the country Mardu⁵

lying in safe pastures,

(in) the (whole) compass

of heaven and earth

the people entrusted (to him)

could address Enlil, verily, in but a single tongue.”

In those days,

(having) lordly bouts,

princely bouts, and royal bouts —

¹ “Nudimmud’s spell” quoted at this point in the tale seems gratuitous. It has no bearing on the situation, is mentioned only, is not repeated later on by the envoy, and plays no role whatever in the plot. Most likely it was a separate, independent myth added by some copyist who thought it might fit.

As it stands, it has been so severely abbreviated that it is difficult to determine either occasion or reason for the act of Enki/Nudimmud which it celebrates; that when mankind had one common language Enki replaced it with the present multiplicity of tongues. Presumably, since Enki is regularly presented as the protector of man — and very particularly so as Nudimmud, man’s creator — this act of his will have served to shield mankind. One may conjecture, therefore, that a unilingual mankind somehow had become a threat or a nuisance to Enlil, so that he planned to wipe man out, a catastrophe averted by Enki’s clever solution. This would put the story in line with the biblical story of the confusion of languages, where the building of the tower represents a threat to God, and with the myth of Atrahasis, where the noise made by proliferating mankind bothers Enlil to such an extent that he seeks recourse in sending the Deluge.

Here the mass of proliferating unilingual mankind’s appeals to Enlil may have become too much for him and Enki, by instituting wars and by dispersing man by his confusion of tongues, will have forestalled a Deluge. See Jacobsen 1992.

² In modern terms, approximately northern Iraq.

³ Not located with any certainty.

⁴ The northern part of southern Mesopotamia. The Akk. term for it was Akkad.

⁵ The region east of Mesopotamia, also called Amurru.

(did) Enki, (having) lordly bouts,
 princely bouts, and royal bouts —
 having lordly bouts fought, having princely bouts fought,
 and having royal bouts fought,
 (150) did Enki, lord of abundance, lord of effective command,
 did the lord of intelligence,
 the country's clever one,
 did the leader of the gods,
 did the sagacious omen-revealed⁶
 lord of Eridu
 estrange the tongues in their mouths
 as many as were put there.
 The tongues of men which were one."

[lines 156-497, omitted here]

The Letter Invented (498)

That day the words of the lord [...]
 seated on [...]
 the seed of princes,
 [a mēsu tree (?)]
 grown up singly,
 were difficult,
 their meaning not to fathom,
 and, his words being difficult,
 the envoy
 was unable to render them.
 Since the envoy
 — his words being difficult —
 was unable to render them,
 the lord of Kullab
 smoothed clay with the hand and set down the words on it in the manner of a tablet.
 While up to then there had been no one setting down words on clay,
 now, on that day,
 under that sun,
 thus it verily
 came to be;
 the lord of Kullab
 set down wo[rds on clay,]
 thus it verily
 came to be!
 The envoy, like a bird,
 was beating the wings,

like a wolf
 closing in on a buck
 he was hurrying to the kill.
 Five mountain ranges,
 six mountain ranges,
 seven mountain ranges,
 he crossed over,
 lifted up the eyes,
 he was approaching Aratta;
 and joyfully he set foot in Aratta's courtyard.

His master's preeminence
 he proclaimed,
 and was decorously speaking the words he had by heart, the envoy was translating them
 for the Lord of Aratta:
 "It being that your father,
 [my] master,
 has sent me [to you,]
 it being that the lord of Uruk, and lord of Kullab,
 has sent me to you ..."

The Lord of Aratta Interrupts

"What is to me
 your master's wo[rds?]
 What is to me
 what he said further?"
 "My master — [what] did he say?
 what did he say further?
 My master,
 [des]cendant (?) of Enlil,⁷ grown as high as [...] abutting [...] the [... of ...]
 who is outstanding in lordship and kingship, Enmerkar, son of Utu,
 has given me a tablet.
 When the Lord of Aratta has looked at the clay, and understood from it
 the meaning of the words, and you have told me
 what you have to say to me about it,⁸
 let me unto the scion
 wearing a lapis lazuli beard, unto him who was horn
 by his sturdy cow(-mother)
 in the highland

⁶ The accepted candidate for the office of EN was revealed by the taking of omens.

⁷ Enlil would be Enmerkar's great-grandfather as father of Suen, the moon god, who in turn was father to Enmerkar's father, Utu.

⁸ The messenger addresses the lord of Aratta with his titles and in the third person as a matter of politeness. Thereafter he changes to second person.

of immaculate offices,
 unto him who was reared on Uruk's⁹ soil, unto him who was suckled with milk
 at a good cow's udder, unto him, who befits
 lordship in Kullab, country of great sacred office,
 unto Enmerkar,
 son of Utu,
 in the Eanna close announce that message,
 in his gipāru,
 bearing flowers
 like the new shoots
 of a mēsu tree,
 let me report
 to my master
 the lord of Kullab."

After thus he had been telling him, the Lord of Aratta took the envoy's piece of clay.
 The Lord of Aratta
 looked at the clay.
 The words were fierce words,
 were frowning,
 the Lord of Aratta
 kept looking at his piece of clay —

Ishkur Brings Rain

That day
 did the crowned lord,
 fit for lordship,
 Enlil's son,
 Ishkur,¹⁰
 the thunderer
 of heaven and earth,
 the whirling storm,
 the great lion,
 see fit to come by.

The mountains were shaking,
 the mountain ranges
 roaring with him
 in laughter.

As they met his awe and [g]lory
 the mountain ranges lifted their heads
 in delightful verdure, and on Aratta's parched flanks,
 in midst the mountains,
 wheat was sprouting of itself,
 and vines also were sprouting of themselves.
 The wheat, that had sprouted of itself, they [piled] in piles and heaps and bro[ught] it in to the Lord of Aratta, piled it up before him

 in Aratta courtyard.

Rains Attributed to Inanna

The Lord of Aratta
 took a look at the wheat, and in front of all his overseers was twitting the envoy,
 the Lord of Aratta
 said to the envoy:
 "Most magnificently
 Inanna,
 queen of all lands,
 has not abandoned
 her home, Aratta,
 has not delivered it up to Uruk
 has not abandoned
 her lapis lazuli house,
 has not delivered it up to the Eanna close,
 has not abandoned
 the mountain
 of immaculate offices,
 has not delivered it up
 to Kullab's brickwork,
 has not abandoned
 the ornate bed,
 has not delivered it up to the girin-flowered bed,
 the lord,
 her one of the clean hands,
 she has not abandoned,
 has not delivered him up to the lord of Uruk,
 to the lord of Kullab!
 Aratta, right and left,
 has Inanna,
 queen of all lands,
 surrounded for him
 as with the waters of a mighty
 burst of a dam.

Miraculous Origins of Aratta's People

Its men are men chosen from out of men, are men whom Dumuzi picked out from men, they carry out
 holy Inanna's commands,
 alert champions,
 house born slaves of Dumuzi,
 they verily are,
 Inanna, queen of all lands,

⁹ Most likely an ancient scribal mistake for "Aratta's."

¹⁰ The storm god Ishkur usually counted as Inanna's brother and grandson of Enlil, so "son" may here stand for "grandson."

for great love of Dumuzi, sprinkled them
with the water of life, and subjected the country to them.¹¹

¹¹ A section of the text was apparently lost here in the course of its transmission.

REFERENCES

Jacobsen 1987a:275-319; 1992.

GILGAMESH AND AKKA (1.171)

Dina Katz

The short narrative describes a conflict between two Mesopotamian cities Kish and Uruk. Akka, the ruler of Kish, demanded of the Urukians to dig wells. Gilgamesh, Akka's dependent lord of Uruk, determined to rebel, ignored the advice of Uruk's assembly of elders and, with the support of his army, freed Uruk from the dominance of Kish and established himself as the independent ruler of Uruk. The copies of this composition, written in Sumerian, date to the Old Babylonian period, and most of them were found in Nippur.¹

Introduction: Geographical Setting (Lines 1-2)
Akka,² the son of Enmebaragesi, sent envoys
From Kish to Gilgamesh, to Uruk.

Gilgamesh Delivers Akka's Message to the Assembly of Elders and Calls on them to Rebel (Lines 3-8)
Gilgamesh, before the elders of his city
Laid the matter, seeking for words:
(5) "To finish the wells, to finish all the wells of the land,
To finish all the shallow wells of the land,
To finish all the deep wells with hoisting ropes,³
Let us not submit to the house of Kish
let us smite it with weapons"

The Elders' Assembly Rejects Gilgamesh's Decision to Rebel (lines 9-14)
The convoked assembly of his city's elders
(10) Answered Gilgamesh:
"To finish the wells, to finish all the wells of the land,
To finish all the shallow wells of the land,
To finish all the deep wells with hoisting ropes,
Let us submit to the house of Kish let us not smite it with weapons."

a 1 Kgs 12:6-15

b 1 Kgs 22:26
(The king's son "bene-hamelech")
2 Chr 18:25;
28:7;
Jer 36:26

c Isa 2:22

Gilgamesh Does Not Give up and Turns to the Young, Able-bodied, Men (lines 15-23)⁴

(15) Since Gilgamesh, the lord of Kulaba,
Had placed his trust in Inanna,
He did not take to heart the words of his city's elders.^a Gilgamesh before the able-bodied men of his city again
Laid the matter, seeking for words:
(20) "To finish the wells, to finish all the wells of the land,
To finish all the shallow wells of the land,
To finish all the deep wells with hoisting ropes,
Let us not submit to the house of Kish
let us smite it with weapons."

The Young, Able-bodied, Men Decide to Rebel (line 24-29)

The convoked assembly of his city's able-bodied men answered Gilgamesh:
(25) "As they say: to stand up, and to sit down,
To protect the king's son,^b
And to hold back⁵ the donkeys,
Who has breath for that?^{6 c}
Let us not submit to the house of Kish

¹ For the most recent discussion, see Katz 1993.

² The reading Akka rather than Agga is supported by some manuscripts which have A-KA or AKA. This name is prevalent in Early Dynastic Fara texts; see Jacobsen 1939:84, n. 99.

³ This passage, repeated in the speeches of the elders and the able-bodied men, probably contains Akka's demand, since otherwise the reason for this war does not appear in the composition. The verb "finish" is a literal translation, meaning to "drain dry"; however, other translations are possible.

⁴ The literary pattern used here, a parallelism between assemblies, one of elders and other of the young, is comparable to the episode narrated in 1 Kgs 12:6-16; see Malamet 1963; Falkenstein 1966. Note that in both cases turning down the advice of the elders and following the advice of the young is justified by divine will.

Whereas the elders' assembly is widely documented in the Mesopotamian sources, an assembly of young (or able-bodied men) is not attested. Therefore, the assembly of the able-bodied men may have been created here as a fictional literary device to parallel the actual elders' assembly. Through this parallelism Gilgamesh's rebellion seem to have the public's legitimation, in addition to the support he supposedly had from the goddess Inanna. For a detailed discussion, see Katz 1993:23-27.

⁵ Or "to spur on."

⁶ These three lines constitute a proverb; see below text 1.174 number 1.

let us smite it with weapons.

The Able-bodied Men Nominate Gilgamesh as King
(Lines 30-39)

(30) Uruk, the handiwork of the gods,
Eanna, the temple descended from heaven
Whose parts the great gods created,
Its great wall standing on the ground (like) a cloud,
Its lofty abode established by An,
(35) They are entrusted to you, you are king and warrior.⁷

One smashing heads, a prince beloved of An,
His coming would inspire such fear
That its (Kish's) army will dwindle, and scatter in retreat,
And its (Kish's) men be unable to confront him."

The Preparations for the War against Kish (Lines 40-47)

(40) Then Gilgamesh, the lord of Kulaba,
His heart rejoiced at the words of his city's able-bodied men, his spirit brightened.
He said to his servant Enkidu:
"Now let the implements and arms of battle be made ready,
Let the battle mace return to your side,
(45) May they create great fear, terrifying splendor,
That when he comes my great terror overwhelm him,
That his wits become confused^d and his judgement falter."

The First Confrontation with the Kishite Army
(Lines 48-59)

Not five days, not ten days had passed,
When Akka, the son of Enmebaragesi, (and his army) laid siege to Uruk.
(50) Uruk's wits were confused,^d
And Gilgamesh, the lord of Kulaba,
To its warriors said:
"My warriors, you look alarmed,
(but) let one stout of heart stand up (and say) 'I will go to Akka.'
(55) Birhurtur, his royal bodyguard,
Praised his king (and said):
"I will go to Akka,
That his wits become confused^d and his judgement falter."
And Birhurtur went out through the city gate.

The Second Confrontation with the Kishite Army
(Lines 60-83)

(60) As soon as Birhurtur went out through the city gate,
They captured him at the entrance of the gate,
And gave Birhurtur a thorough beating.

d 1 Sam
21:14;
Ps 34:1

e 2 Kgs 9:24

He was brought before Akka,
And to Akka he spoke,
(65) (but) before he had finished speaking the cup-bearer of Uruk mounted the wall
And peered out over the wall.
Akka saw him,
And said to Birhurtur:
"Slave, is that man your king?"
(70) "That man is not my king!
Were that man my king,
Were that his dreadful brow,
Were those his bison eyes,
Were that his lapis lazuli beard,
(75) Were those his delicate fingers,
Would not multitudes be cast down, multitudes be raised,
Would not multitudes be smeared with dust,
And would not all the foreign troops be overwhelmed,
Would the mouths of the land not be filled with dust,
(80) Would the prows of the ships not be cut,
And would Akka, the king of Kish, not be taken captive in the midst of his troops?"
They hit him, they strike him,
And give Birhurtur a thorough beating.

The Actual War (Lines 84-99)⁸

After the cup-bearer of Uruk, Gilgamesh climbed up the wall,
(85) The terrifying splendor overwhelmed young and old of Kulaba.
It made the able-bodied men of Uruk take up the battle mace,^e
And throw wide open the city gate's doors.
Enkidu went out through the city gate alone,
Gilgamesh peered out over the wall.
(90) When he looked, Akka saw him (and said to Enkidu):
"Slave, is that man your king?"
"That man is indeed my king (Enkidu answered)."
Just as he (Enkidu) said that,
Indeed multitudes were cast down, multitudes were raised,
(95) multitudes were smeared with dust;
And indeed all foreign troops were overwhelmed,
The mouths of the land were filled with dust,
The prows of the ships were cut,
And Akka, the king of Kish, was taken captive in the midst of his troops.

Gilgamesh Acknowledges his Dependence on Akka in the Past (Lines 100-106)

(100) Gilgamesh, the lord of Kulaba,
Said to Akka:
"Akka my lieutenant, Akka my captain,

⁷ The last five lines are understood as a formula for nominating a king. They are partly repeated at the end of the narrative by Akka in his speech acknowledging Gilgamesh as an independent king of Uruk.

⁸ For a discussion of the historicity of the composition and the literary traditions concerning the war, see Katz 1993:11-21.

(102a) <Akka my governor, Akka my general,> Akka my Army commander, Akka, you have given me breath, Akka you have given me life,	f Num 11:12	Its great wall standing on the ground (like) a cloud, Its lofty abode established by An,
(105) Akka, you have taken the refugee on your lap, Akka, you have nourished the fleeing bird with grain."		(110) They are entrusted to you. [Repay me m]y favor!"
Akka Endorses the Independence of Uruk and Gilgamesh its Ruler (Lines 107-114)		(Gilgamesh:) "By Utu, I now repay you the former favor."
(Akka:) "Uruk, the handiwork of the gods,		He set Akka free (to go) to Kish. Gilgamesh, lord of Kulaba, Praising you is sweet.

REFERENCES

Cooper 1981; Edzard 1959; Falkenstein 1966; Heimpel 1981b; Jacobsen 1970a; 1970b; 1987a:345-355; Katz 1987; 1993; Klein 1976; 1983; Kramer 1949; Lambert 1980; Malamat 1963; Michalowski 1982; Römer 1980; Vanstiphout 1986; 1987a.

2. ROYAL HYMNS

THE BIRTH OF SHULGI IN THE TEMPLE OF NIPPUR (1.172)

Jacob Klein

This hymn¹ is part of a rich corpus of Neo-Sumerian "royal hymns" pertaining to Shulgi (ca. 2094-2047 BCE), the second and most important king of the Third Dynasty of Ur.² The hymn is dedicated to Enlil, the supreme god of the Sumerian pantheon, and it falls into two main parts: the first part opens with a hymnic praise of Enlil, which is followed by a description of Shulgi's birth and investiture in the Ekur temple; the second part contains blessings and prayers on behalf of Shulgi and the capital city of Ur, both hailed as generous providers of the temple. A three-line epilogue to the hymn reiterates Shulgi's selection by Enlil for a good reign.³ The hymn was no doubt composed during Shulgi's reign, on the occasion of Shulgi's coronation in Nippur. Subsequently, it may have been put to periodical use in the cult. From the point of view of the history of religion, it is of particular interest that whereas in the first part of the hymn Shulgi is invested with royal insignia, in the second part he fulfills the function of high-priest (EN), offering Enlil and Ninlil their evening meal.⁴

Prologue: Praise to Enlil (lines 1-8) Enlil, the eminent one, the sovereign (god), whose utterance is trustworthy, Nunamnir, the eternal shepherd of the Land, who hails from the Great Mountain, The great counselor, the leader of heaven and earth, who is in control of all the divine offices, The lord who in accordance with his nobility is laden with awesome splendor, a perfected heavenly star,	(5) He who takes care of the primeval divine offices, the choice divine offices, who alone is the lofty god, The lord, the life-giving light, who guides the multitudes in a single track, to the whole extent of the earth, The huge net, spread over heaven and earth, a rope, stretched over all the lands — Who ever gave Enlil instructions, or who ever rivalled him?
---	--

¹ The following translation covers only about the first half of the hymn; the rest of it is fragmentary and cannot be fully translated (see Klein 1991:304).

² For the Sum. "royal hymns" in general, see Hallo 1963; Römer 1965. For the Shulgi hymns, see Klein 1981a:36-49; 1981b:1-21. For a full edition of the above hymn, see Klein 1991.

³ Our hymn is designated by the scribe as an ADAB. ADAB-hymns are basically divine prayers. As a rule, they begin with a hymnal address to a deity; the central part of the hymn recounts the divine blessings bestowed upon the king; the hymn usually ends with a three-line prayer to the deity for the king. [The two major parts and the epilogue of our hymn are designated respectively by the following common cultic rubrics: SAGIDDA ("stretched string"), SAGARRA ("loosened string") and URUNE. For these generic subscripts and cultic rubrics, see Wilcke 1975: 252-262].

⁴ Apparently Sum. kings, and especially deified kings, could claim the prerogative of high-priesthood, which they exercised on certain cultic festivals or other special occasions. Cf. Ps 110:3-4; 2 Sam 6:14; 1 Kgs 3:4.

The Oracle Predicting Shulgi's Birth (lines 9-14)

He (= Enlil) uttered a great (statement). What is that which his heart, "the mighty river," has carried?

(10) The hidden(?) plans⁵ of his holy word he brought out from the temple.⁶

That matter is a holy matter, it is a pure matter, it concerns the offices of the Ekur —

The true cornerstone, (embedded) in the bottom of the deep, — something most precious:

"A 'faithful man' will rebuild the Ekur

(to earn) a lasting name;

The son of (that) 'faithful man' will long hold the scepter, their throne will not (ever) be overthrown!"^{6 d}

Shulgi's Birth (lines 15-20)

(15) To that end, Ashimbabbar⁷ "shone"(?) in the Ekur,

He pleaded(?) with his father, Enlil,

he approached(?) the mother who gave(?) birth(?) to him,⁸

In the "good house" made Nanna,

the noble son, (his) request,

(And) the high-priestess gave birth to a "faithful man," from (the semen) which had been placed in her womb.

Enlil, the powerful shepherd, caused the young man to appear,

a Isa 2:3;
Mic 4:2

b Gen 15:1-
6; 2 Sam 7:4-
17; Isa 9:5-6

c Isa 9:5-6

d 2 Sam 5:2;
7:7; Isa
44:28; Ps
78:70-72

e Gen 49:10

f 1 Kgs 2:12;
3:6; 9:5;
Pss 2:8-9;
45:7; 110:2-
3, 5; 1 Chr
29:23

(20) A child, most suitable for kingship (and) throne-dais — it was king Shulgi!⁹

Shulgi's Coronation (lines 21-27)

"A lion's seed, who provides the 'highland' generously,

the belo[ved of Nin]lil,

He who was granted authority in the Ekur, the king of Ur,

(He of) the radiant heart, the shepherd, the (protective) spirit of the Land" — gave(?) him(?) (Enlil) as his good name.^{10 c}

Enlil chose Shulgi in (his) pure heart, he entrusted the people to him.

(25) The lead-rope and the staff he hung on his arm —

he is (henceforth) the shepherd of all the lands.^d

The immutable scepter of Nanna he placed in his hand,^e

Upon a royal seat, which may not be overthrown, he let him raise (his) head heavenward.^f

Shulgi's Praise of Enlil (lines 28-30)

The day is a blessing, the night is an enchantment,¹¹

The Land is a (peaceful) pasture;

Shulgi, the "shepherd of prosperity," he of the lasting name, the "king of the festival,"

(30) The mighty one, the seed engendered by "a faithful man," praises Enlil.

⁵ Sum. LAL-GAR = Akk. giššuru "plan," "design" etc.

⁶ In lines 9-14, the poet refers to a divine plan uttered by the god Enlil and announced in the temple in the form of a Delphian oracle: a "faithful man" will restore the Ekur; as a reward, he will acquire a successor who will secure the continuation of his dynasty. The identity of this successor, namely Shulgi, is revealed in the following passage, which describes his birth in the temple; hence, the "faithful man" must be Ur-Nammu, the founder of the dynasty. The above oracle and the subsequent semi-mythological birth-episode were intended to affirm Shulgi's legitimate right to the throne in view of the political crisis that arose with his father's untimely death in battle, and Shulgi's young age at the time of his coronation.

⁷ Epithet of the moon-god Nanna.

⁸ I.e., Ninlil, Enlil's wife.

⁹ The above birth-episode is beset with philological difficulties, and scholars disagree as to its religious and historical background. According to one opinion, Shulgi was engendered on a high-priestess of the moon-god Nanna in Nippur, in the image of Enlil, during the celebration of the "sacred marriage" rite, in which king Ur-Nammu himself embodied Nanna, the divine bridegroom (Jacobsen, ZA 52 [1957], 126-127, note 80; reprint in Jacobsen 1970:387f.). According to another opinion, it is Enlil who engendered Shulgi on his divine spouse, Ninlil, upon the request of Nanna (Kramer, Iraq 36 [1974] 93-94). Both of these hypotheses run counter to Ur III royal literature, which consistently mention Lugalbanda and Ninsun as Shulgi's divine parents. According to a third opinion, a major purpose of the "sacred marriage" rite was the engendering of the crown-prince and accordingly Shulgi was engendered in the Ekur, by Ur-Nammu and his first wife, the queen (Hallo 1987:48-52). In our opinion too, Shulgi's birth, in this hymn, takes place only on the human level, ignoring his otherwise professed divine parentage. His birth is requested from Enlil and Ninlil by his city-god, Nanna, and is engendered by Ur-Nammu, his human father, in the temple, on a high-priestess (Klein 1987:101-105).

¹⁰ The long "name" given by Enlil to the new-born crownprince is actually a series of poetic, ad hoc, royal epithets, including the real political title "King of Ur."

¹¹ The poet seems to stress the bliss and harmony that prevailed on the day of Shulgi's birth and/or coronation.

REFERENCES

Hallo 1963; 1987; Klein 1981a; 1981b; 1987; 1991; Römer 1965; Wilcke 1975:252-262.

THE SACRED MARRIAGE OF IDDIN-DAGAN AND INANNA (1.173)

Thorkild Jacobsen

This hymn was apparently written under Iddin-Dagan, the third king of the dynasty of Isin, for he is mentioned by name in it. It may even be that it was meant for use at the yearly rite of the sacred marriage in which the king took on the identity of the god Ama-ushumgal-anna and as such married Inanna, who was almost certainly incarnated in the reigning queen, as shown by the epithet Nin-egala(k), "queen of the palace," by which she is called in connection with this rite.

The hymn opens with an address to the goddess as morning and evening star followed, in a second canto, by a statement of her powers of office in heaven, on earth, and in the Apsû. From these introductory matters the hymn then moves, with the third canto, into a description of a monthly ritual victory parade in her honor, celebrating her as warrior and goddess of war.

The parade is made up of cult personnel in her service and groups of guards, both of these groups representing warriors and acting out war games in which they cut themselves and each other with knives. In the parade march also young men in neck stocks representing captives, and young and old women who have curled their hair like harlots. They may represent camp followers or women whose providers have fallen in battle and who have had to turn harlots to survive. Beside the parade, or possibly as part of it, march solid citizens of the town, carrying harps and other implements designed to soothe and pacify the goddess.

The end of the sixth canto leads into a new section praising the goddess in her manifestation as the evening star; as such she marks the end of the workday and the quieting down and going to rest of all, men and animals alike. As they sleep, their dream souls appear before her with their requests, and Inanna discerns who is good, who evil.

With the ninth canto the hymn changes its image of the goddess from evening to morning star, and describes the morning offerings to her by people everywhere. Finally, with the tenth canto she is celebrated as the bride in the new year rite of the sacred marriage, in which the king — here Iddin-Dagan-incarnates the bridegroom, Ama-ushumgal-anna — and she, as mentioned, in all likelihood is embodied in the queen. The preparations for the wedding are described, the setting up and readying of the wedding bed, the bride's pre-nuptial bath, the consummation of the marriage, and the magnificent wedding banquet the next morning.

The hymn closes with an envoi with repeated praise of the goddess ending "Great she is, and august, in heroism surpassing." ^a

Proem: Star-rise

The one come forth on high,
the one come forth on high,
I will hail!
The [h]oly one,¹ come forth on high,
I will hail!
The great [queen] of heaven,
Inanna,
I will hail!
The pure torch lit in the sky,
the heavenly light, lighting like day,
the great queen of heaven, Inanna,
I will hail!
The holy one,
queen awe-laden
of the Anunnaki,
noblest one in heaven and earth, crowned with great horns,²

a Ps 45

oldest child of the Moon,³

Inanna,
I will hail!

(10) Of her grandeur, of her greatness, of her exceeding nobility,
of her brilliant coming forth in the evening sky,
of her lighting up in the sky,
a pure torch,
of her stepping up onto the sky
like Moon and Sun,
noted by all lands from south to north,
of the greatness of the holy one of heaven,
to the young lady I will sing!

FIRST PLACE OF COUNTERING⁴

"Her coming forth is (that of) a warrior"

¹ The Sum. term NU-GIG means lit., "sacred"/"taboo" person. It designates a class of women the function and character of which is not clear. Inanna belonged to this class and typified the women belonging to it. The badge of these women was inlaid with the gems called SHUBA.

² The horned crown was an emblem of divinity.

³ The text treats the moon as divine, as the moon god "Suen. We translate "Moon" to retain the cosmic implications. Similarly we render "Utu as "Sun."

⁴ The cantos of the composition are — as usual with Sum. antiphonal works — marked off by the rubric "place of countering," and the countering antiphon that follows has at the end the rubric "is its antiphon." In this composition antiphons are specifically indicated only after the first and the eighth cantos. Presumably that means that the first antiphon was to be repeated after each successive canto until, with the eighth canto, the second antiphon replaced it and served to the end.

(is its antiphon)

Powers of Office

(20) She likes wandering in the sky, being truly Heaven's wild cow,
 on earth she is noble, queen of all lands,
 in the Deep,⁵ in Eridu, she took office, her father Enki conferred it on her,
 laid to her hand lordship and kingship.
 With An she has taken her seat on the great throne dais, with Enlil she will be making the decisions for her country.
 Monthly, at new moon,
 that the offices be carried out properly,
 the country's gods gather unto her.
 The great Anunnaki, having bowed to her,
 (30) are stepping up for prayer, petition, and plaint, able to voice unto her
 the pleas of all lands,
 and Milady decides the country's cases, settling them.
 [Inanna] makes the decisions for the country,
 having them carried out.
 The dark-headed people⁶ are parading before her.

SECOND PLACE OF COUNTERING

Warrior: Monthly Ritual Triumphal Parade

Algar-instruments,⁷ silver inwrought,
 they are beating for her,
 — before holy Inanna, before her eyes,
 they are parading —
 The great queen of heaven, Inanna,
 I will hail!
 Holy tambourines and holy kettledrums
 they are beating for her,
 — before holy Inanna, before her eyes,
 they are parading —
 The great queen of heaven, Inanna,
 I will hail!
 Holy harps and holy kettledrums
 they are smiting for her,
 — before holy Inanna, before her eyes,
 they are parading —
 The oldest child of the Moon,
 Inanna,
 I will hail!

THIRD PLACE OF COUNTERING

The guardsmen⁸ have combed (their hair) for her,
 — before holy Inanna, before her eyes
 they are parading —
 they have made colorful for her the back hair with colored ribbons,
 — before holy Inanna, before her eyes
 they are parading —
 (50) on their bodies are (sheep)skin (robes)
 (the dress) of divinities,⁹
 — before holy Inanna, before her eyes,
 they are parading —
 Fine men, eminent ladies,
 the doyenne of the women sages,
 — before holy Inanna, before her eyes
 they are parading —
 who hold harps and calming instruments,
 march beside them.
 — Before holy Inanna, before her eyes,
 they are parading

They (themselves) are girt with implements of battle,
 — before holy Inanna, before her eyes,
 they are parading —
 spears, the arms of battle,
 are in their hands,
 — before holy Inanna, before her eyes,
 they are parading

FOURTH PLACE OF COUNTERING

(60) Their right arms are clothed with cloth in male fashion,¹⁰
 — before holy Inanna, before her eyes
 they are parading —
 the great queen of heaven, Inanna,
 I will hail!
 On their left arms they have pulled the cloth down and off (63a) — before holy Inanna, before her eyes
 they are parading —
 (63b) the great queen of heaven, Inanna,
 I will hail!
 Playfully, with painted buttocks,
 they engage in single combat
 — before holy Inanna, before her eyes,
 they are parading —
 the oldest child of the Moon,

⁵ The deep (Apsû) refers to the freshwater ocean which the ancients thought underlay the earth, thus forming a triad with the heaven and earth of the preceding lines. It was the domain of Enki, who resided in Eridu, and it surfaced there in Enki's temple and the nearby marshes. A separate myth tells how Inanna received her offices from Enki in Eridu by taking advantage of his generosity when he was in his cups (see text 1.161).

⁶ The Sumerians referred to themselves as "the dark-headed people." Why, and in contrast to whom, is not known.

⁷ A musical instrument, most likely a small harp with the sides of the sound box covered with drumheads.

⁸ The term translated "guardsmen" is the Sum. SAĜ-URSAĜ, which denotes a class of cult personnel in the service of Inanna. Originally apparently a corps of warriors, they developed into actors in ritual performances such as the one here.

⁹ The precise meaning of this is not clear. Conceivably by the time the poem was written the old sheepskin mantles, were no longer in common use but were still shown on representations of gods.

¹⁰ This is a reversal of normal usage. Both men and women covered the left shoulder; women also frequently kept both shoulders covered. Leaving the right arm and shoulder bare gave the right arm needed freedom. The significance of the reversal here described is not clear.

Inanna,
I will hail!

FIFTH PLAGE OF COUNTERING

(Captive) lads in neck stocks bewail to her (their fate)
— before holy Inanna, before her eyes,
they are parading —
maidens and crones, curling the(ir) hair (as harlots)
— before holy Inanna, before her eyes,
they are parading —
daggers and clubs rage before her
— before holy Inanna, before her eyes
they are parading —
the kurgarû's¹¹ mounted (on chariots), swing the clubs
— before holy Inanna, before her eyes,
they are parading —
gore is covering the daggers,
blood sprinkles,
— before holy Inanna, before her eyes,
they are parading —
in the courtyard, the (place of) assembly of the temple administrators,¹²
they are shedding blood,
(as) loudly resounds there
(gay music of) TIGI-harps, tambourines, and lyres.

Inanna as Evening Star

The holy one has seen fit to step up lone on the clear sky,
and on all lands, teaming
like the nation's dark-headed people, from heaven's midst Milady
looks kindly down.
August is the queen, the evening star, Inanna.
Fitly (therefore) they praise the maiden Inanna.
August is the queen, the evening star, Inanna,
unto the borders of heaven!

SIXTH PLAGE OF COUNTERING

Nightfall

The evening star, the brilliantly rising star, shedding great light over holy heaven,
the queen, the evening star, has seen fit to come forth on high,
warrior-like in the sky,
and in all lands the people are lifting up their faces toward her, (90) the man is cheering up, the woman is brightening,

the ox in its yoke is turning the head (homewards), sheep and goats (?) (shuffling back)
make the dust settle (thick) in their folds.
The numerous (wild) goats and asses of Shakan,¹³
the animals of the desert,
the far-flung four-footed beasts,
the orchard pits, the garden beds,
the green canebrake,
the fish of the deep, the birds of heaven,
Milady is making wend their way to their lairs.
(All) living beings, the numerous people,
are bending (their) knees to her.

Called by Milady, the old women
(100) are providing plentifully for great eating and drinking.
(Then) Milady calms down everything in her country,
the playgrounds of the nation,
the holiday makers;
and the young brave holds converse with the wife heart (to heart).¹⁴

From heaven's midst Milady
looks kindly down,
before holy Inanna, before her eyes,
they walk —
August is the queen, the evening star in the sky,
Inanna.
Fitly (therefore) they praise the maiden Inanna.
August is the queen, the evening star in the sky
unto the borders of heaven!

SEVENTH PLAGE OF COUNTERING

(110) Preeminent in the (rose-)tinted sky the alluring one, befitting broad heaven, has risen like moonlight at night,
has risen like sunlight at high noon.
Having imposed sweet sleep
on the nation's homes,
— while all lands, the dark-headed ones,
the nation in its entirety,
sleep on roofs, sleep on city walls — eloquent dream-soul afflati step up to her,
bring her their cases.

Then she discerns the righteous one,
discerns the wicked one.
The wicked one she will hand over

¹¹ The KURGARÛS, likewise cult personnel, also appear to have been warriors originally. The term may be abbreviated from KURGUGARA "the subjected lands" so that the KURGARÛS symbolized warriors taken captive.

¹² The Sum. term means "the gathering of ENS." Since EN basically denotes "productive manager" and since it forms part of the names for a great many professions of workers on an estate, farmer, head of the plowing teams, cook and baker, washermen, etc., we take "the gathering of ENS" to mean specifically an assembly of administrators in which work plans and other matters relating to the successful functioning of an estate would be discussed and agreed on.

¹³ God of goats, gazelles, and wild asses.

¹⁴ A literary stereotype. The quiet talking the day's events over by husband and wife takes place in bed after the day's work is over, for it is almost the only time they have to themselves.

to (serve) a wicked sentence,
the evil one she will do evil to.
On the just one she looks truly, determines a good fate for him.
(120) From heaven's midst Milady
looks kindly down.
Before holy Inanna, before her eyes,
they walk.
August is the queen
hovering where heaven is founded,
Inanna.
Fitly (therefore) they praise
the maiden Inanna.
August is the queen
going (down) where heaven is founded unto the borders of heaven!

EIGHTH PLACE OF COUNTERING

Dawn: Inanna as Morning Star

The queen preeminent, the alluring one of heaven, has seen fit to come out, warrior-like, on high, lovely is she at An's¹⁵ radiant side, with An on his august couch
she holds converse heart (to heart).¹⁶

"May she be found to be the young brave's and the warrior's only
one!"

(130) (is its antiphon)

She is mighty! She is noble! She is elevated to high rank!
Great she is and august, surpassing in heroism!

(is what is sung at its middle)

The queen marveled at by the nation,
the lone star, the morning star,
the queen hovering where heaven is founded,
has seen fit
to come forth warrior-like on high,
and all lands do tremble before her.

Morning Rites

The dark-headed people get up for her.
the young brave traveling the road sets his course by her,
the ox lifts up its head eagerly in its yoke.
While at the same time, in the nation's homes they provide everything aplenty,
(140) hasten to holy Inanna,

and put it out in goodly fashion for Milady (up in) heaven's midst.
In the clean places, the clear places of the desert,
on the roofs, on the wall-tops,
[of the dwellers on] wall-tops,
on mankind's smoothed-out spots (for offerings),
they bring her incense
(fragrant) like a cedar forest.
Fine sheep, maned sheep, and grain-fed sheep
they offer up.
For the holy one they clean up a place,
set up handwashing (things) for her.¹⁷
Ghee, dates, cheese, seven kinds of fruits,
they fill as breakfast,
onto the country's table for her.
(150) Dark beer they pour for her,
light beer [they pour] for her.
With dark beer and [emmer] beer for Milady with (barley) beer and [emmer] beer SHAGGUBBE-pot¹⁸ and the fermenting vat bubble, one as the other.
Of paste, liberally enriched with honey and ghee,
and of honey and dates, on cakes,
they make loaves for her,
wine at dawn. Finely ground flour, honeyed flour,
honey and wine at sunrise they libate for her.
The tutelary gods of the humans step, as their part,
up to her with the food and drink,
(160) and the holy one eats in the pure places,
the clean places.

From heaven's midst Milady
looks kindly down,
before holy Inanna, before her eyes,
they wander.
August where heaven is founded,
is the queen, Inanna.
Fitly (therefore) they praise
the maiden Inanna.
August is the queen
hovering where heaven is founded
unto the borders of heaven!

NINTH PLACE OF COUNTERING

New Year's Sacred Marriage: Inanna as Bride

In the palace,
the house that advises the country and is a (restraining) yoke¹⁹ on all foreign lands,

¹⁵ I.e., heaven's.

¹⁶ The morning star appearing in the sky is seen as the goddess chatting in bed with the god of heaven before getting up. The line may reflect a momentary lapse into a variant theology which saw Inanna as the wife of An rather than of Dumuzi/Ama-ushumgal-anna. We assume that the term KIMAH, "high place," later used for sepulcher, originally denoted simply a dais on which one would place one's bedding and sleep. We translate it therefore as "couch."

¹⁷ For washing her hands before eating the offerings.

¹⁸ Apparently a vessel used in brewing. Its precise character and use are still to be determined.

¹⁹ Lit., a neck stock.

the house that is the river ordeal²⁰
 of the dark-headed people,
 the nation in its entirety,
 a dais has been founded for Ninegalla,
 (170) the king, being a god, will sojourn with her on it.

That she may take in charge
 the life of all lands,
 has on New Year's Day,
 the day for rites
 for reviewing loyal servants²¹ and performing correctly
 the rites of the last day of the month,
 a bed been set up for Milady.
 Halfa-straw they have been purifying with cedar perfume,
 have been putting it on that bed for Milady.
 Over it a bedspread has been pulled straight for
 her,
 a bedspread of heart's delight to make the bed comfortable.

(180) Milady bathes in water the holy loins, for the loins of the king
 she bathes them in water.
 For the loins of Iddin-Dagan
 she bathes them in water.

Holy Inanna rubs (herself) with soap, sprinkles the floor with cedar perfume.

The king goes with (eagerly) lifted head to the holy loins, goes with (eagerly) lifted head to the loins of Inanna.

Ama-ushumgal-anna goes to bed with her:

"O my holy loins! O my holy Inanna!"

After he on the bed, in the holy loins,
 has made the queen rejoice,
 after he on the bed, in the holy loins
 has made holy Inanna rejoice, she in turn soothes the heart for him
 there on the bed:

"Iddin-Dagan, you are verily my beloved!"

Wedding Banquet

To pure libations, lavers set up, to gently wafted incense vapors,
 to lighted juniper incense,
 to food portions standing ready,
 to jars standing ready
 into his august palace
 she enters with him.
 His loving consort has the arm around his shoulders,

 holy Inanna has the arm around his shoulders.
 shines forth on the arm-lean²² throne like the dawn.
 With her radiates there, on the long side of the table,
 sunlike the king.
 Abundance, delicacies, plenty,
 they bring straight to her,
 a banquet of sweet things
 they lay out,
 the dark-headed people
 bring it straight to her.
 The bard has the lute,
 that gives tongue from the podium,
 the sweet-sounding ALGAR-instruments, and the lyre, which belongs where mankind is gay, prove themselves
 in his song of joy of heart.

The king has reached out for food and drink,
 Ama-ushumgal-anna has reached out for food and drink.

The palace is in festive mood,
 the king is joyous,
 the nation spends the time amid plenty,
 Ama-ushumgal-anna is come in joy,
 long may he live on this pure throne!
 On the royal throne dais she has
 (her) head on (his) shoulder.

Envoi

O Milady, you are given praise to the borders
 of heaven and earth!
 You being a holy one,
 engendered with heaven and earth, holy passages, pure passages for a holy one are put in song!
 O (you), chief ornament of the night,
 befitting the assembly,
 Inanna, oldest child of the Moon,
 Queen, evening star, to praise you is sweet!

TENTH PLACE OF COUNTERING

From heaven's midst Milady looks kindly down —
 before holy Inanna, before her eyes,
 they walk.
 August is the queen, the evening star,
 unto the borders of Heaven!
 Mighty she is, noble, elevated to high rank,
 great she is and august,
 in heroism surpassing.

²⁰ The river ordeal was used as a means to arrive at a divine decision in cases where there was, or could be, no decisive evidence. In metaphoric use, as here, it implies superhuman power to get at the truth and judge rightly.

²¹ New Year's Day was a day for reviewing the work of the staff of a temple or estate.

²² A chair with armrests was comfortable, and so suitable for a throne. Such chairs, used as divine or royal thrones, are often pictured on the monuments.

(is its antiphon)		A song of valor pertaining to Ninsianna. ²³
-------------------	--	--

²³ A name for Inanna as morning and evening Star, it means "heaven's radiant queen."

REFERENCES

Jacobsen 1987a:112-124.

This page intentionally left blank

C. INDIVIDUAL FOCUS

This page intentionally left blank

1. PROVERBS

SUMERIAN PROVERB COLLECTION 3 (1.174)

*Bendt Alster

This collection of Sumerian proverbs is known from 40 duplicating cuneiform tablets, most of which come from Nippur, and they (i.e., the tablets, not necessarily the proverbs) date ca. 1900-1800 BCE. As is the case with other major Sumerian proverb collections, this one is known from fragments of multicolumn tablets inscribed with a complete collection, as well as from tablets only containing excerpts. In addition, single entries or very short excerpts are found on small school tablets. These sometimes contain the teacher's handwritten master copy with the pupil's imitated copy, and sometimes lexical or mathematical exercises on the reverse.¹ Yet the proverbs or sayings were unquestionably used for instruction beyond the technical skills of cuneiform writing. The origin of the phrases was not uniform, but many of them were undoubtedly genuine proverbs, that is, anonymous phrases at home in the spoken language and recognized as such by a group of speakers. The daily activities of secular life are in focus rather than those of religion and cult. Unlike the biblical proverbs, there is no clearly expressed concept of "wisdom" embedded in the collections, nor is a clear compositional or ideological principle apparent. Since in origin true proverbs belong to situations arising in a spoken language, they are unsystematic and may well be contradictory, and they are not expressions of coherent philosophical thinking. It was their pregnant linguistic formulation combined with the implicit support of the authority of tradition that made them useful for didactic purposes. In this function, the Sumerian proverbs, like those of other cultures, represent a rather conservative type of social view that basically advises people to remain in the social groups where they belong in society.²

1. To stand up and to sit down, to spur the don-keys, to take care of the king's son, who has the breath for that? ³	a Prov 11:29	boy says, but "let me go" is "let me go," and the time passes.
2. The nurse glances toward the parapet as if she were a child of the king's.		7. Possessions are close to the wind. The ITERDUM-milk, although it is no river mud, cleaves the ground. ⁵
3. No matter how much water one draws, the swamps (where it comes from) will still provide water to drink.		8. To serve beer with unwashed hands, to spit without trampling upon it, to sneeze without covering it up with dust, to kiss with the tongue at midday without providing shade, are abominations ⁶ to Utu.
4. Unpleasant DULDIN-plants grow toward the good field.		9a. The shepherd his penis, the gardener his hair- do. ⁷
5. Since you are a TIRIGAL-bird, I feed you. Since you are an TIRIGAL-bird, I give you something to drink, you are my son, your luck has changed. ⁴		9b. The unjust heir who does not support a wife, who does not support a son, is not raised to prosperity. ^{8 a}
6. "Let me go today" is what the herdsman says, "let me go tomorrow" is what the shepherd		10. Because the shepherd departed, his sheep did

* Some Sum. terms whose exact identity is unknown, such as the DULDIN-plant, the TIRIGAL-bird, and ITERDUM-milk, have not been translated.

¹ Cf. Gordon's edition of Collections 1 and 2: Gordon 1959.

² Cf. Alster 1993a.

³ This saying is quoted in the Sum. Epic tale Gilgamesh and Akka, lines 25-28 (see text 1.171). Cf. below, text 1.175 nn. 1f.

⁴ It may be assumed that the sound produced by the TIRIGAL-bird reminds of the Sum. words for "I feed you" (ERIBGUE), as well as for "I give you something to drink" (ERIBNAGE). However, the implication of the saying as a whole remains obscure.

⁵ This apparently hints at cracks that appeared on top of the milk presumably used for cheese production.

⁶ The Sum. term for "abomination", NIG-GIG, also means what is "sacred" to a someone, or "reserved" for someone, especially a god. Cf. Geller 1990. As used in the proverbs, it can be used simply as a synonym for "misconduct, offense, or aberration," but it can also relate to the "sacred and inviolable nature of deity"; cf. Hallo 1985; Klein and Sefati 1988. They translate the fourth abomination by lehizdawweg "to copulate"). For other "abominations," see Nos. 118, 161, 168-171, 175 below.

⁷ A pure guess is that this means that the sexual manners of the gardener were considered more civilized than those of the shepherd.

⁸ A first millennium BCE translation reads as follows: "A man who does <not> support a wife, a man who does <not> support a son, is not come back into his custody. 11. Because the clever shepherd got confused, his sheep did not come back into his custody.^b 12. The herdsman in his weariness cannot recognize his own mother. 13. As long as you have light, grind the flour. 14. The wild bull has detestation for the plough. 15a. To eat modestly does not kill a man, but coveting murders. 15b. To eat a little is to live splendidly. When you walk around, keep your feet on the ground! 16. As long as he is alive, he is his friend. When he is dying, he is his nether-world deputy.⁹ 17. Friendship lasts only one day, but the relations of colleagues are eternal. 18. Quarreling belongs to the place of colleagues.¹⁰ Slander finds its way to the place of purification. 19. When travelling a man does not get tired of eating. He picks up food till the end of the day. 20. There are bitter tears in human flesh. 22. A hand will be stretched out toward a hand stretched out. A hand will be opened toward an open hand. 23. He who has money is happy, he who has grain feels comfortable, but he who has live stock cannot sleep. 24. My Enlil, when you rise, my loin cloth is gone.¹¹ 25. What did Enlil make? Chaff! The lance struck. It went into the flesh.¹² 26. When it is getting dark outside, so that you cannot see a hand in front of you, come in unnoticed! 31. Nanne estimated his old age highly:¹³ He built Enlil's temple, but did not complete it.	b Prov 12:27	He built a wall around Nippur, but ... He built Eanna, but after it had fallen into neglect he left it. He captured Simurru, but did not destroy its wall.¹⁴ He never saw mighty kingship. Thus Nanne descended to the underworld with a depressed heart. 33. (He who says) "Let me live today" is bound like a bull to a leash.¹⁵ 34. Ur-Namma [installed] the large mirrors in Enlil's temple.¹⁶ 35. Nanne estimated his old age highly: "It is the 'I' of a man of old age" he said.¹⁷ 37. A slave girl is one who ... the door. A palace-slave-girl is inconsiderate. A palace-slave devours goodwill.¹⁸ 38. A slave girl carried her ransom money with her. She lost(?) thirty mana (pounds). 39. You grind with the pestle like a fearful slave girl. 40. The slave girl who neglected to fill the container with barley, grumbled, "it does not fill to the top, it does not fill to the middle."¹⁹ 41. When (the lady) left the house, and (the slave girl) entered from the street, in the absence of her lady the slave girl sat down at a banquet. 42. If there is a dispute at the mill, the slave girl reveals what she has stolen. 44. The pleasure of a daughter-in-law is anger. 55. (As long as you are) alive you should not increase evil by lying, to succumb is your lot. 59. The lord decides in Uruk, but the lady of Eanna decides for him.²⁰ 60. I am a loyal steward with strong arms. 61. Let the sides be separated, [let] the sides [be united(?)]. 62. It is (my) foremanship that makes you charge a liar who does not support himself," cf. Lambert 1960:255. An Early Dynastic version reads: "He who does not support a wife, he who does not support a child, his mischief is double bad for him. He grinds flour, he has no rushes (i.e., to sleep on?), he is not reckoned among people"; cf. Alster 1992a:20, 43-48.

--	---------------------	---

⁹ The saying quoted here also occurs in a fragmentary historical inscription related to the coronation of a ruler (PBS 5.76). The precise implication and identity of the persons are unknown; cf. Alster 1975:206f.

¹⁰ Var. instead of "colleagues": "big brothers", i.e., the school comrades. So too in the previous proverbs, both of which are also preserved in late bilingual versions; see Lambert 1960:9-15. The Akk. of No. 17 provided the title of Studies Kutscher (1993).

¹¹ The god Enlil is here seen as the wind personified. See no. 23 cf. below, p. 568, n. 8.

¹² Akk. version: "Toward a woman who carried out the ordinances of the gods and multiplied the rules of kingship forever, how did Enlil, the great lord, act? He despised her foundations like chaff." This seems to be an allusion to an unknown woman who acted as king.

¹³ Nanne is a name for the eternal loser. Cf. entry No. 35 below.

¹⁴ Var. "but did not subdue it." Perhaps an allusion to the semi-legendary Aanne-pada, king of Ur in the second ED period; see Hallo 1978:73.

¹⁵ Akk. version: "(He who says) 'Let me live one day' (is) a bull upon whom a leash has been thrown."

¹⁶ This allusion to Ur-Namma, the founder of the 3rd Dyn. of Ur, remains obscure.

¹⁷ Cf. entry No. 31 above.

¹⁸ The implication is that those slaves and slave girls who grew up in a palace were less suitable for hard work. Cf. Shuruppak's Instructions 157, quoted below (text 1.176).

¹⁹ This is a so-called wellerism, i.e., a proverb that consists of a quoted cliché plus an implied story.

²⁰ The lord is the god An, and the lady of Eanna is the goddess Inanna. In other words, "the woman behind the man."

- at me.²¹
63. Let the head drop down to the neck with bickering like a swaying reed.
64. The balance set with sinews is a pitfall for the feet.
A man should not take a merchant for his friend.
65. The merchant - how he minimized the silver! [How he minimized] the oil and the barley!²²
67. One cannot drag out the weak, one cannot put the strong to a halt.
68. The smell bitter to us, let it be the smell of leeks, let it not be the smell of beans!²³
69. The insulter will be insulted.
The snickerer will be snickered at.
70. A lion caught in the trap of the storehouse is mine in this way:
The owner removes the wood (of the trap).
71. If one cuts a "let-me-stride," its feet will walk to the edge of the desert.²⁴
72. A chameleon follows like a snake, like a "let-me-stride."
73. As (if he were) a minor tenant, keeping watch is not what is (most) on his mind.
74. A tenant established a house, ploughing established the field.
75. "I am getting up on my haunches for you," (says) the man (who) is lifting sesame oil.²⁵
76. The oath of Ishkur destroys mountains, and yet, it does not overturn a boat.²⁶
77. Ishkur splits the mountains, and yet, he does not split the water sack.
79. The run-away slave girl sleeps badly.
82. He moves like a lion toward a louse, but when he has to do a job he moves like a mongoose.
83. By sunrise decisions are made.
When the Sun is up, kingship is assigned.
84. Let not the cudgel find your name, let it find your flesh!²⁷
85. If our smell from plucked leeks is sweet, then it is a stranger that brought them to me.²⁸
86. "Give me!" is what the king says.
"Do well!" is what the cupbearer says.
87. What characterizes the carpenter is the chisel.
What characterizes the reed weaver is the basket.
What characterizes the smith is the making of "little sides."
What characterizes the singer(?) is UA ALA-LA.
88. He who tosses his head will cross the river.²⁹
89. If the foreman does not know how to assign work, his folk will not stop tossing their heads.
91. Enlil's temple is a summation of accounts.
The administration-priest is its foreman.
92. Enlil's temple is totalling(?) wages.
93. Enlil's great punishment is hunger.
94. (If) one does not give the dog something, it will bark at every woman.
95. She grumbles like a dog beaten with a throw stick.
96. That which is made of evil threads grumbles.
97. "Let me speak a word" walks as if it had feet.³⁰
Who compares with someone who has a (boasting) mouth?
99. [You], speak to [me], and I will speak to you!
100. In order to do [a job you have] to eat something.
101. You speak with me, and I speak with you.
102. Fools are the lives of the heroes.
103. A fool has a (boasting) mouth.
104. A dog moves, a scorpion moves, but my man does not move.
106. Where there is no grain, it is vengeance turned toward a city.
Where there are no reeds, it is worse than poverty.
107. "I promise!" does not mean "I promised!"
"Something is finished" does not mean "It is finished." Things do not change.
108. A vagabond flays (the skin) of the open hand.
109. The two of them are like one man.
110. (If) one finds the place of my refuse heap (one will say): "Do not trespass on it!"
111. Although it never went there, the goat knows the waste land.
112. My mouth cools the hot soup for you.

²¹ I.e., presumably, in case one among equals is raised to superiority, it results in animosity among friends.

²² Variants: Sum. Proverb Collection 1.165: "The merchant - how he carried the silver away! and how he carried the grain away!" Sum. Proverb Collection 17 Sec. B 9: "You merchant, how you minimized the silver, [and] how you minimized the grain!" Aspersions on merchants were frequent in the proverbs; see Hallo 1992:354f. Aspersions on merchants were frequent in the proverbs; see Hallo 1992:534f.

²³ I.e., bitter smell is natural to leeks, but suspicious if it comes from beans. Cf. entry No. 85 below. For the persistent aversion to leeks in the cuneiform tradition, see Hallo 1985:32f.

²⁴ It may be assumed that "let-me-stride" denotes a type of animal. This also applies to the next entry. For the chameleon, see Sjöberg 1984.

²⁵ To "lift sesame oil" seems to have been an expression for making a strong effort to the best of one's abilities.

²⁶ Ishkur is the storm god. Cf. entries Nos. 77 and 136 below.

²⁷ I.e., let it hit anonymously.

²⁸ I.e., presumably, if the smell of leeks is sweet, then there is something suspicious about the giver. Cf. entry No. 68 above.

²⁹ I.e., presumably, the man who shows his impatience will be accepted first on the ferry boat.

³⁰ Var. "walks on feet".

- I pick the bones from the fish for you.³¹
113. My mouth, every month I fill (you, my) mouth.
114. My tongue, like a runaway donkey, does not turn backwards.
115. All day long my food ration is kept away from me, my heart [aches(?)], but even a dog can satisfy its hunger. For me (when) it's over, I am happy. My mother did not allot a second food ration.
117. One should lift in pieces, and one should put down in a block.
118. (He who says:) "Let me tell you about it" when he knows nothing, and comes forward as a witness in a case he knows nothing about, is an abomination to Suen.
119. Flies enter the open mouth.
120. Offerings create life.
121. Punishment is assigned to the quarrelsome one, he is afflicted with diseases.
122. Let him go out.
123. May you hold a kid in your right arm, and may you hold a bribe in your left arm.³²
124. The manicurist is himself dressed in dirty rags.
125. He came, he dwelt, he finished, and did not stand on the ground.³³
126. He who spoke, but did not [keep his promise(?)], his mouth is a liar.
127. My finger nail that hurts is in my loin. My foot that hurts is in my sandal. But who finds my heart that hurts?
128. May Inanna pour oil on my heart that hurts!³⁴
129. The sail on the mast blocks the river.
130. (When engaged) in a quarrel may an insult reveal itself to you. (When engaged) in a dispute may a word (of reason) reveal itself to you.
131. If it is too sweet for him, let him eat salt. If it is not too sweet for him, let him eat "bitter plants."
132. Before the fire has gone out, write your exercise tablet.
134. A man's personal god is a shepherd who finds a grazing ground for him. Let him lead him like a sheep to the grass he can eat.
135. Until the boasters leave, their(?) mouths bring me "turning eyes."
136. The heavens are destroyed, the earth is shaken. After the heavens were destroyed, and after the earth was shaken, the people stood by themselves.³⁵
137. The rigging is not ship-shape, and its stern is not seaworthy.
138. He who entered Elam, his mouth is bound.³⁶
139. (He who has to live in) Elam, his life is not good.³⁷
140. A cake (was) made of GUNIDA-wheat instead of honey. The nomad (lit., Amorite) ate it, and did not recognize what was in it.
141. He (who) keeps fleeing flees from his own past.
142. The south wind fills my eyes with its sand. Why does it not strike behind me?
143. Between the basket and the boat are the fields of Simurru.
144. You keep walking around the storehouse like a pig that has a morsel in its mouth.
145. He who is overwhelmed by Inanna, to forget is what he dreams about.³⁸
146. My grain, whether roasted or not roasted, you have to pour it out.
147. It is characteristic of your harvesting, it is characteristic of your gleaning that they say, "he is gone, he is gone."
148. "You should serve me," (is what) the purification priests (say). "Let me turn on your thigh," (is what) the leather workers (say),³⁹ To stand in the corners, (is what the) courtesans (do), "Let me assist you," (is what) the gardener (says), "I swear by Enki that your garments will not stay long in the house," (is what) the fullers (say).
149. The day became dark, but it did not rain. It rained, but the sandals were not untied. The Tigris was confused in its outlet, but no water filled the fields.⁴⁰
150. In Eridu, built in abundance, the monkey sits with longing eyes.
151. Cream and milk are mixed with an axe(?).

³¹ Spoken by a husband to his spouse.

³² The kid was presented as an offering to a temple.

³³ This seems to refer to a restless person, who was unable to settle permanently anywhere.

³⁴ Inanna is the goddess of love. Cf. entry No. 145 below.

³⁵ Cf. entry No. 76 above.

³⁶ I.e., because another language was spoken in Elam. This may refer to a travelling merchant, or possibly to a prisoner of war.

³⁷ The reference might be to any prisoner of war, or perhaps specifically to King Ibbit-Sin, who was taken captive by the Elamites.

³⁸ Cf. entry No. 138 above.

³⁹ Var. "I bow in (my) hips" (is what) the leather workers (say)."

⁴⁰ This is a riddle whose solution seems to be the clouds which produce rain that falls over the rivers, but not on dry land. Cf. Civil 1987:31-32.

- | | |
|--|--|
| 152. No matter how unique this one is, its appearances change. 153. The goat spoke in the manner of a (wise) old woman, but acted in the manner of an unclean woman. 154. The clod on the one hand, the furrow on the other hand, I am their third. 155. Let me drink diluted beer, let me sit in the seat of honor! 156. Although it was not dear to him, he attended the festival. 157. The time passes, what did you gain? 158. The statue is good. The father-in-law rejoices over it: "It is as if it were a human being." 159. A good word is a friend to numerous men. 160. A destructive word is a yoke of four oxen. 161. Putting unwashed hands in the mouth is an abomination. 162. May a clever farmer live with you in the house. 163. What I drink is a river.
The place where I sleep is a place of reed mats. 164. The gekko has a tiara tied to it.⁴¹ 165. "Let me go home" is what he prefers. 166. From my heart which is greater than a garden, the sun does not rise. 167. Bearing up the sky, the earth is hanging in his hands. 168. "Bitter" barley is an abomination to the "ghost-man."⁴² 169. Wheat flour is an abomination to his god. 170. If a man sailing downstream demands an inspection,⁴³ | and if the hand touches the vulva on top of the clothes, it is an abomination to Utu. 171. To [put(?)] a loaf in the oven while a song is sung is an abomination to Inanna. 174. If the sieve is not shaken, his flour will not drop from it. 175. Coveting and reaching out (in greediness) are abominations to Ninurta.⁴⁴ 176. I am confronting Fate:
(Whether I) speak in the way of a just man,
(or I) speak in the way of a wicked man
(it makes no difference).⁴⁵ 177. What comes out of one's mouth is not in one's hand.⁴⁶ 179. He said "Woe". The boat sank with him.
He said "Hurrah," and the rudder broke.⁴⁷ 180. He is walking with his neck "pierced."⁴⁸ 181. He makes the turning edge out of the lower edge.⁴⁹ 182. He devours (everything) like a field (devoured) by locusts. 183. A released weaver (equals) two slave girls.
A released UNGUR-worker (equals) three slaves. 185. My mouth makes me comparable with men. 186. What is this after you split it?
And this after you split it? 187. When present it is (considered) a loin cloth, when lost it is (considered fine) clothing. 188. When a leader is being devoured by fire, those behind him do not say, "Where is the leader?" 189. To cry out louder than(?) the people. 190. When straightforwardness is cut off, injustice is raised. |
|--|--|

⁴¹ There is a pun on the words denoting gekko: MUŠDAGUR, and tiara: MUŠ.

⁴² The reference is to funeral offerings. "Bitter" barley was a specific type of barley apparently not used for funeral offerings. The "ghost-man" is the ghost of the deceased. This and the next proverb occur together in the incantation series "Evil Ghosts"; see Hallo 1985:29.

⁴³ The text has been variously interpreted by a number of scholars. The translation suggested here follows M. Civil 1994:158-163.

⁴⁴ Var. Coveting and spying, etc. For similar sentiment in line 55 of the Hymn to Enlil (Enlil-suraše), see Jacobsen 1987a:105.

⁴⁵ If the logical continuation, "it makes no difference," is justified, the implication is that one cannot avoid Fate.

⁴⁶ I.e., the spoken word cannot be recalled.

⁴⁷ Cf. Sum. Proverb Collection 7.77: "He said 'Woe.' The boat sank with him. He said 'Hurrah,' and the rudder broke. The young man said 'Oh god,' and the boat reached its destination." Akk. translation: "The young man said 'Woe,' and his boat sank. He said 'Hurrah,' and his rudder broke. The young(?) man said 'Woe,' and his boat reached the bank." There seems to be no inner logic connecting the utterances and their effects. Rather, the point seems to be the joke that an utterance may have totally irrational effects.

⁴⁸ The reference may be to a prisoner of war.

⁴⁹ The reference is to a cuneiform tablet turned along the incorrect edge by a pupil when passing from the obverse to the reverse.

REFERENCES

Previous edition: Falkowitz 1980; For a complete edition of the Sum. proverbs see Alster 1997. Studies: Alster 1992a; 1993a; Civil 1987; Geller 1990; Gordon 1959; Hallo 1985; Lambert 1960.

PROVERBS QUOTED IN OTHER GENRES (1.175)

Bendt Alster

The proverbs quoted in the Sumerian proverb collections are usually devoid of context indicative of the situations to which they were normally applied. Yet, in some lucky cases, the proverbs listed in the proverb collections coincide with those quoted in literary compositions.¹ On the other hand, a number of proverbs found in literary compositions, in particular in Shuruppak's Instructions (cf. below), were not included in the proverb collections known to us. The presence of proverbs in school dialogues and literary debates suggests that the proverb collections were used as source books which could supply the pupils with a stock of phrases useful for rhetorical debates. Some examples of proverbs quoted in various compositions are listed here.²

In the Epic Lugalbanda in Hurrumkurra, the following lines, 158-160, are addressed to the Sun god Utu by the hero Lugalbanda left alone in the unknown mountains. He appeals to the god for help:

An unknown dog is bad, an unknown man is terrible.
But on an unknown road at the verge of the mountains,
Oh Utu, an unknown man is an even worse bad man.³

There is an allusion to this proverb in Shuruppak's Instructions, lines 266-268:

An unknown dog is bad, an unknown man is terrible.
On the verge of the mountains, the gods of the mountains eat men!

Sumerian hymns sometimes contain allusions to proverbs. An example is Nanshe Hymn, line 144:

(The man who) after he has acquired something demands more.⁴

This alludes to a proverb quoted elsewhere as follows:

To have and demand more is an abomination to god.⁵

An example of religious instruction is found in the following short didactic poem:⁶

A man without a god does not procure much food, does not procure a little food.
Descending to the river, he does not catch a fish.
Descending to a field, he does not catch a gazelle.
When he boasts, he obtains nothing.
When he runs, he obtains nothing.
However, if his god becomes favorable toward him, anything that he names will be provided for him.⁷

The function of proverbs to settle a dispute or even a legal issue is illustrated by the disputation between Mother Sheep and Grain, in which the grain takes precedence after the quotation of the following proverb:

He who has silver, he who has precious stones, he who has oxen, he who has sheep, must wait in the city gate for the man who has grain.⁸

¹ This is the case with the following entries of Collection 3 (translated above, previous text): SP 3.1; SP 3.16; SP 3.123; SP 3.134; SP 3.149 (riddle); SP 3.163-169.

² Other examples are discussed by Hallo 1990.

³ Cf. Wilcke 1969:80.

⁴ Text 1.162, above (reading NINDA, "bread," instead of NIG, "something"). See also Heimpel 1981a:90.

⁵ UET 6/2 261 and 262.

⁶ UET 6/2 251 and 252.

⁷ The text translated here is that of UET 6/2 251. There are a number of variants. The briefest form occurs in the poem Man and his God: "a man without a god obtains no food." The whole poem is quoted in a hymn to the deity Hendursage. Cf. Hallo 1990:210, with notes 59 and 60.

⁸ Cf. Alster and Vanstiphout 1987:29-30. The implication is that grain is more important than anything else, because he who has grain has something to eat. There are a number of attestations of this proverb: UET 6/2 263 and 266; the love song Ni 4569 with duplicates (Alster, RA 79:157); the folktale "Enlil and Namzitarra" 13-18 (Civil 1974 A/O 25:65-71); Cohen 1981:64).

REFERENCES

Hallo 1990; Wilcke 1969.

2. INSTRUCTIONS

SHURUPPAK (1.176)

Bendt Alster

In addition to the standard version of this composition, dating around 1900-1800 BCE, an Early Dynastic version dating as early as 2600-2500 BCE, and two partly preserved Akkadian translations, one dating around 1500 BCE, and one dating around 1100 BCE, are known. The excerpts translated here are from the standard version, attested in approximately 80 fragments from Nippur and Ur as well as some other locations. The composition pretends to be addressed by the ante-diluvian ruler Shuruppak to his son Ziusudra, the hero of the flood story who, like Noah, survived the destruction of mankind and became the favorite of the gods. Pertinent to the teaching of Shuruppak are matters relating to secular life, that is, the management of a household, animal husbandry, agricultural work, and social behavior in general, with little emphasis on cult and religion. Many of the sayings quoted preserve the character of genuine proverbs. The imagery referring to daily life with no traces of abstract generalization is noteworthy. The moral perspective is one of modest egoism, in other words, one should not treat others in a way that may instigate them to retaliate to one's own disadvantage. A characteristic type of saying consists of two parts, the first of which contains the advice itself. The second is a motivation clause, similar to those of proverbs in the Hebrew Bible, which makes the consequences of the action described in the first part explicit, frequently in terms of a humorous or exaggerated statement.¹

The basic edition is by Alster 1974b, with additions by Alster 1987, 1990, 1992a. Cf. Civil 1984 and Wilcke 1978. For a completely revised edition, see Alster 1997.

- | | | |
|--|--------------------------------------|---|
| 14. Do not buy a donkey that brays; it will split your people. 15. Do not place a field on a road; ... 16. Do not plow a field where a path begins; ... 17. Do not dig a well in your field; the people will cause you to suffer damage. 18. Do not place your house close to a public square; the heaviest traffic(?) is there. 19. Do not vouch for someone; that man will have a hold on you.^a 20. And you, let nobody vouch for you; the man will despise you. 21. Do not spy upon a man; the town will make you pay back. 22. Do not loiter about where there is a dispute. 23. Do not appear as a witness in a dispute. 28. Do not steal something; do not kill yourself. 29. Do not break into a house; do not demand the money chest(?). 30. The thief is a dragon, he who has received (what is stolen) is a slave. 31. My son, do not commit robbery, do not cut yourself with an axe. 32. Do not act as the bridegroom's friend in a wedding, do not ... yourself. 33. Do not laugh with a girl who is married; the slander is strong. 34. My son, do not sit (alone) in a chamber with a woman who is married. 35. Do not pick a quarrel; do not humiliate yourself. 36. Do not spit out lies; it causes disrespect. | a Prov 6:1-5; 22:26-27 | 37. Do not boast; your word stands (forever). 38. Do not give ill advice; you cannot bear a "heavy" eye. 39-41. Do not eat stolen food with a thief; do not sprinkle your hands with blood; after you have apportioned the bones, they will make you restore the ox, they will make you restore the sheep. 42-43. Do not utter nonsense; in the end it will reach out for you like a trap. 44. Do not scatter your sheep into untested grazing grounds. 45. If the "foundation" is not safe, do not hire a man's ox. 46. A safe foundation is a safe road. 47. Do not travel at night; its "heart" is both good and bad. 48. Do not buy an onager; it lasts only one day.² 49. Do not have sexual intercourse with your slave girl; she will name you with disrespect. 50. Do not curse with powerful means; they will turn round to your hands. 153. Do not beat a peasant's son; he will "beat" your irrigation canal. 154. Do not buy a prostitute; she is the sharp edge of a sickle. 155. Do not buy a house-born slave; he is an herb that causes stomach-ache.³ 156. Do not buy a free-born man; he will lean against a wall. 157. Do not buy a palace-slave-girl; the house will be on a bad track. |
|--|--------------------------------------|---|

¹ Cf. Alster 1987:204.

² Onagers were too unstable to be tamed, yet they were used for breeding with tame horses.

³ The point here, as well as in 156-157, is that a slave who grew up as a free man or was used to the good manners of the palace would be 158-164. After you have bought a slave from a foreign country, and after you have taken him home from his unknown place, my son, he will pour water for you, and walk in front of you till sunrise.

Since he has no house, he will not go to his house; since he has no town, he will not go to his town; he will not argue with you, he will not be quarrelsome.

unsuitable for hard work. This indicates that the point of view of the sayings is that of ordinary household owners. Cf. Sum. Proverb Collection 3.37, quoted above, text 1.174.

REFERENCES

Alster 1974b; 1987; 1990; 1992a; Civil 1984; Wülke 1978.

UR-NINURTA (1.177)

Bendt Alster

This composition is best known from a tablet found at Tell Harmal (Baghdad), with two small duplicating fragments from Nippur and two of unknown provenance. The main source is written in a very difficult syllabic orthography, which makes the interpretation of a non-stereotype composition such as this one very difficult. The translation provided here is therefore very tentative. The sections dealing with the just man and the unjust one give the impression that the specific reference is to the king. What is expressed is the royal ideology, according to which a ruler who implements justice in his country and observes the cult of his gods will enjoy a long life, to the benefit of himself as well as his subjects.

Introduction: Ur-Ninurta's kingship (lines 1-17)

1. In days of yore, in days completed long ago,
2. after nights had been become far remote from those distant nights,
3. after years had become remote from remote years,
4. after the flood had swept (the land),
5. the one given wisdom by Enki,
6. the one ... by Nisaba,
7. the one who takes counsel with ... Inanna,
8. — in order to organize the plans of Sumer,
9. in order to abolish wickedness, to implement righteousness,
10. in order to settle the people in their dwelling places,
11. in order to reinforce the foundation of Ur-Ninurta's shepherd[ship],
12. [(Ninurta?),] the king of Eshumesha, born in Nippur,
13. Suen's(?) ...,
14. so that the [(royal throne?)] of [Ur]-Ninurta,
15. could be installed until distant days
16. from Nippur his beloved city,
17. he established it¹ until distant days, forever.

The just man (lines 18-29)

18. So that the days should not [(cease?)] for the

a Ps 1

b Prov 10:27

- sons(?) of the country,^a
19. The man who knows fear of god,
20. he himself ...
21. [daily(?)] ... he will bring offerings,
22. the god's "name" is dear to him,
23. he keeps(?) (idle?) swearing away from his house.
24. he walks straight from the cult place,
25. what he gives out(?) is satisfactory.
26. Days will be added to his days,^b
27. the name he has will become even greater,
28. after his death the people will be consolidated.²
29. A son will be born to him.³

The unjust man (lines 30-37)

30. The man who does not fear the gods,
31. to whom their prayers are not dear,
32. who after he has sworn does not concern himself,
33. his old age will not last long.^b
34. His inheritance will not be dear to him(?).
35. A son will not be born to him.
36. A man who does not show fear of god, [who has ever] seen him attaining old age? ^a 37. These are the instructions of ...

¹ I.e., Ur-Ninurta's kingship, cf. line 11.

² Variants add: "His old age will last long."

³ Variants add: "His god will look (with favor) upon him." Further additions not clear.

REFERENCES

Alster 1991; 1992b, No. 83.

3. FABLES

THE HERON AND THE TURTLE (1.178)

Gene B. Gragg

The following composition is contained on a four-column tablet excavated at Nippur in the 1951-1952 season. On this tablet it ends in the middle of the fourth column with a double-ruled line and a colophon giving the number of lines (namely, 115). The composition is similar in style to the literary disputations, but since it contains the story of a quarrel rather than the text of a debate, it may be more properly assigned to the genre of fable. As such it bears comparison with fable-like pericopes identified in the Bible.^a The conclusion is unfortunately not clear. Two other large tablets had our composition on the obverse, and either a long (at least 90-line) but poorly preserved continuation or related composition, concerning the turtle but with no mention of the heron, on the reverse.¹

Prologue 1: The Marshlands of Sumer (lines 1-9)

What does the canebrake say? Its growth is good!
The broad canebrake of Tutub² Its growth is good!

The marsh of Kiritab³ Its growth is good!
The swamp of Akšak⁴ Its growth is good!
(5) The dense swamp of Enki⁵ Its growth is good!
The small swamp of Eridu⁶ Its growth is good!
The *barbar*⁷ reeds of Enki Its growth is good!
Ur, the small zi-reeds Its growth is good!
Ur, where cows and calves abound Its growth is good!

Prologue 2: The Flora of the Marshlands (lines 10-21)

(10) On that day the water drained from the reeds, and a pen appeared.
The ardadillu-plant spreading its seed from the canebreak,
The small kumul-plants came out of the earth —
they are good little ones.
The small enbar-reed grooms her hair, she is a good young maiden.
The ubzal-reed goes about the city, he is a good young man.
(15) The pella-reed is covered from bottom to top, she is a good daughter-in-law.
The pella-reed turns from bottom to top, he is a good young son.
The "artisan"-reed digs the earth, he is a good old man.
The zi-reed covers? herself over, she is a good old woman.
(20) The canebreak beautifully raises his head, he is a good Gudea⁸
The poplar tree raises his head by the orchard canal, he is a good king.
The ... with shining branches, he is a good

a Judg 9:8-15
1 Kgs 14:9 =
2 Chr 25:18

prince.

The Villain Appears (lines 22-31)

On that day, beside the canebrake, one sitting on the bank pleads:

"The heron — I will snatch away her eggs, I will take them away ...

The bird, the gift-giver, will not make a gift.

(25) The heron, the gift-giver, will not make a gift."

This one seized the fish, collected the eggs, he shoved them aside.

The carp in the honey-plant, he shoved them
aside.

The marsh-carp in the small zi-reeds, he shoved them aside.

The toads in the liqiliqi-grass, he shoved them
aside.

(30) The agargara-fish on the outskirts and its offspring, he shoved them aside.

The heron, he smashed her eggs, he dashed them in the sea.

The Heron Asks for a Safe Place to Lay Eggs (lines 32-47)

The bird, the gift-giver pleads.

[The heron] enters the temple of King Enki and speaks to him:

"[...] a broad place give me, so that I can lay eggs."

(35) [...] he gave to her.

[...] may he do for her.

[...] it is indeed a ...

[...] in the reed of the bird.

In the [canebrake] she laid eggs.

(40) In the [canebrake of Tutub] she laid eggs.

In the marsh of Kiritab she laid eggs.

In the swamp of Akšak she laid eggs.

In the dense swamp of Enki she laid eggs.

¹ Edition and commentary will be found in Gragg 1973a.

² Diyala site now known as Hafāgi.

³ Unidentified site west of Kish.

⁴ A small northeastern frontier kingdom.

⁵ God of the southern city of Eridu, closely associated with marshes and the underground watery abyss.

⁶ Of all the ancient major urban centers, this was the site most closely associated with marshy regions at the head of the Persian Gulf.

⁷ No sure identifications can be given for the many types of reeds and other marsh flora mentioned in this text.

⁸ Sum. ruler of Lagash, ca. 2175 BCE. His mention here is possibly important for dating the composition.

In the small swamp, the swamp of Eridu she laid eggs.

(45) In the barbar-reeds of Enki she laid eggs.
In Ur, among the small zi-reeds she laid eggs.
In Ur, where cows and calves abound she laid eggs.

The Turtle Attacks the Heron (lines 48-71)

On that day, the turtle, the quarreler, the man of the cursed way, (said):

(50) "With the heron, with the heron, I will indeed pick a quarrel.

I, the turtle, with the heron, I will indeed pick a quarrel."

He whose eyes are the eyes of a snake, "I will indeed pick a quarrel."

Whose tooth is the tooth of a snake, "I will indeed pick a quarrel."

Whose tongue is the tongue of a snake, "I will indeed pick a quarrel."

Whose bite is the bite of a puppy, "I will indeed pick a quarrel."

(55) (With) dainty hands and dainty feet, "I will indeed pick a quarrel."

The turtle, an oven brick, "I will indeed pick a quarrel."

(Who lives) in the drainage ditch, "I will indeed pick a quarrel."

Who passes his time in the mud like a hoe, "I will indeed pick a quarrel."

An unwashed dirt basket, "I will indeed pick a quarrel."

(60) The turtle, the bird-trapper, the net setter, Overthrew the heron's reed-construction.

He turned her nest upside down.

He threw her children into the water.

The bird, the dark-eyed one,

(65) The turtle scratched her forehead with his claws.

Its blood covered her chest.

The heron cried, grew pale:

"I, the bird, the ... nest [...]"

May my king judge my case, may he decide in my favor!

(70) May Enki judge my case, may he decide in my favor!

(May) the lord of Eridu [...]"

The Turtle (Again) Attacks the Heron (lines 72-105)

For a second time: "The bird, the gift-giver, will not make a gift.

The heron, the gift-giver, will not make a gift."

This one seized the fish, collected the eggs, he shoved them aside.

The carp in the honey-plant, he shoved them aside.

(75) The marsh-carp in the small zi-reeds, he shoved them aside.

The toads in the ligiligi-grass, he shoved them aside.

The agargara-fish on the outskirts and its offspring, he shoved them aside.

... [...] head on high [...].

She cries out to king Enki:

(80) "My king, you have given (your) broad canebrake, there I have laid eggs.

In the broad canebrake of Tutub there I have laid eggs.

In the marsh of Kiritab there I have laid eggs.

In the swamp of Akšak there I have laid eggs.

in the dense swamp of Enki there I have laid eggs.

(85) In the small swamp, the swamp of Eridu, there I have laid eggs.

In the barbar-reeds of Enki there I have laid eggs.

In Ur, among the small zi-reeds there I have laid eggs.

In Ur, where cows and calves abound there I have laid eggs.

On that day, the turtle, the quarreler, the one of the accursed way,

(90) He whose eyes are the eyes of a snake, the one of the accursed way,

Whose tooth is the tooth of a snake, the one of the accursed way,

Whose tongue is the tongue of a snake, the one of the accursed way,

Whose bite is the bite of a puppy, the one of the accursed way,

(With) dainty hands and dainty feet, the one of the accursed way,

(95) The turtle, an oven brick, the one of the accursed way,

(Who lives) in the drainage ditch, the one of the accursed way,

Who passes his time in the mud like a hoe, the one of the accursed way,

An unwashed dirt basket, the one of the accursed way,

The turtle, the bird-trapper, the net setter,

(100) Overthrew my, the heron's, reed-construction. He turned my nest upside down.

He threw my children into the water.

I, the bird, the dark-eyed one,

The turtle scratched my forehead with his claws.

(105) My blood covered my chest."

Conclusion: Justice Is Rendered (lines 106-115)

The prince said to (his) vizier, Isimud⁹:

(106a) "My vizier Isimud, my ...

Who stands (in waiting) for King Enki, my perpetual prayer (offerer),

[...] when you have pressed out on the left side,

[...] when you have poured it,

⁹ Minor divinity given role of assistant to Enki, pictured on early cylinder seals as two-faced; see RIA s.v. Isimu.

(110) [...], you will cover it. [...] when you have wound, [...] when you have ... [...] when you have brought it ...	When you have placed it in the dense swamp of Enki, (115) On that day ... may it sit."
--	--

REFERENCES

Gragg 1973a:51-72.

4. PIOUS SUFFERER COMPOSITIONS

"MAN AND HIS GOD" (1.179)

Jacob Klein

This Sumerian poem, of about 140 lines, tells a didactic story of a righteous sufferer who remains faithful to his personal god and ultimately is rehabilitated and restored to his former happy status. The poem opens with a brief didactic exhortation, that a man should faithfully praise his god, soothing his heart with lamentations, for "a man without a god would not have anything to eat" (lines 1-10). The rest of the poem is a (fictitious) illustration of this general truth. First the poet introduces the righteous, anonymous, sufferer, describing briefly the various diseases that befell him, whereupon the man utters a bitter lament to his god and pays him homage reverently (lines 11-27). This is followed by the sufferer's lengthy penitential lament, which constitutes the bulk of the composition (lines 28-119). The sufferer begins his lament, describing the ill treatment accorded to him by his fellow men (lines 28-56). Next he expresses the wish that everyone of his friends and family lament ceaselessly on his behalf before his god (lines 64-68). Then he complains about his physical illness and depression (lines 69-81). The sufferer concludes his prayer with a confession of his sins and a heartrending plea for mercy, forgiveness and restoration (lines 82-119). As expected, the drama comes to a happy end: the poet tells us that the god accepted the sufferer's prayer, restored his health, turned his suffering into joy and granted him benevolent guardian angels (lines 120-132). The poem concludes with a thanksgiving praise, uttered by the saved man to his personal god, in which he vows that he will constantly glorify him as long as he lives (lines 133-143).¹

In many respects, the poem resembles the biblical book of Job. The main difference between the two sources is that the Sumerian composition lacks elements of dialogue. Instead, the complaints and reflections of the hero are expressed in a long personal lamenting monologue, addressed to the deity. And after the hero is restored to health, he utters a short thanksgiving to his merciful and benevolent god. Further, unlike Job, the sufferer has some feelings of guilt, although he is not aware of his sins.²

Social Rejection of the Sufferer (lines 28-30; 33-40; 46-47)

I, the young-man,³ the learned one — my know[ledge] is of no avail to me;
The truth which I speak
is turned into a lie.
(30) The man of deceit overwhelms me (like) a storm, I (am forced to) serve him ...^a
When I enter the house, heavy is the spirit;

a Ps 35:11-17, 22-26;
Job 16:9-11;
19:18-19;
30:1-14

I, the young-man — when I go out to the street, oppressed is the heart.
(35) I, the valiant⁴ — my loyal shepherd becomes angry with me, (and) looks upon me with an evil eye.
My herdsman maltreats me, who am not hostile (toward him),
My companion says not a true word to me,
My friend renders my words,

¹ For an edition of the poem, see Kramer 1955. The selections translated below are based on a revised edition of the text which is in preparation by the author. See for the time being Kramer's slightly revised translation in ANET 589-591; for translation of selected portions, see further Jacobsen 1976:153-155.

² Hence he can better be described as a "pious sufferer"; see Mattingly 1990. All the manuscripts (cuneiform tablets) from which this poem is reconstructed, can be dated to the later Old Babylonian period (18th-17th centuries BCE). However, many literary elements incorporated in the poem can be traced back to the Old Sumerian period (such as e.g., the wisdom proverbs and the penitential lament formulas). Therefore the possibility cannot be excluded that our poem was composed before the Old-Babylonian period, perhaps in the Isin-Larsa period (beginning of the 2nd millennium BCE); see discussion in Hallo 1968:71-82; Jacobsen 1976:152; Klein 1982:297-302.

³ Sum. GURUŠ, in administrative texts, refers to an adult male, capable of military service or civil work. Here it is the usual poetic, impersonal and typological epithet of the righteous sufferer. In this sense, it is parallel to biblical geber (cf. Job 3:3; 4:17; 14:14 et passim; Lam 3:1). Further on, it is occasionally paralleled by the synonymous ŠUL "hero," "valiant." Both Sum. words were translated by Akk. etlu. A third, parallel, expression used by the poet to refer to the sufferer is LÚ-ULU, "man."

⁴ For the Sum. word ŠUL "valiant," see note 3.

truthfully spoken, a lie.^b
 The man of deceit speaks insulting words to me;^c
 (40) (But) you, my god,
 do not thwart them! ...
 Food is all about, (yet) my food is hunger,
 On the day shares were allotted to all,
 my allotted share was suffering!^d

Complaining of Sickness and Depression (lines 69-80)^e
 "My god, the day shines bright over
 The Land, (but) for me the day has darkened, (70) The bright day has dawned(?) upon(?) me(?) like a misty(?) day.^f Tears, lament, anguish and depression are lodged within me, Suffering overwhelms me
 like a weeping child.
 In the hands of Fate,^g
 (my) features had been changed, my breath of life had been carried off,
 Asag,^h the evil one, bathes in my body.
 (75) In the bitterness and misfortune of my path,
 I never see a good dream;
 Daily false dreams do not cease (haunting) me!
 Anguish embraced me — who am not its spouse,
 Wailing spread wide (its) arms (around) me
 — who am not its small child,
 (80) Lamentation swept over me like a crushing(?) storm ..."

Confession of Sins and Plea for Mercy (lines 98-119)
 "My god, to you, who are my father that begot me,ⁱ let me [lift] my eyes,^j
 'Good Cow,'^k god(?) of mercy (and acceptance of) supplication, let me [acquire(?) through(?) you] lofty strength!
 (100) How long will you not care for me, will you not look after me?
 Like an ox I would like to rise toward you,
 but you do not let me rise,
 You do not let me take the right course.
 They say — the wise men
 — a word true and right:

b Pss 31:12;
 38:12-13;
 69:9; 88:19;
 Job 6:15-21, 27; 19:14-17

c Ps 22:7-9

d Job 3:24-26; 7:3-6

e Pss 38:7-11; 88:4-7;
 Job 7:4-6;
 9:25; 14:22;
 16:16; 17:1-
 2, 7; 19:7-11; 30:15-19, 26-31

f Pss 27:10;
 22:10-11;
 71:5-6

g Gen 6:5-7;
 Ps 51:7; Job
 4:17-18;
 7:20-21;
 15:17-18;

h Pss 38:3-7, 19; 25:7, 11;
 31:11; Job
 13:23

i Pss 6:1;
 38:2; 39:14;
 102:11

'Never has a sinless child
 been born to its mother,
 (105) A mortal(?) has never been perfect(?), a sinless man has never existed from old' ...^k
 My god, ... after you will have let my eyes recognize my sins,
 I shall recount at the city(?) gate^l
 those of them that have been forgotten, and those of them which are visible(?);^l
 (115) I, the young man, shall publicly declare my sins before you!^h
 In the assembly let tears(?) fall, like a heavy downpour (of rain)!
 In your temple, let my merciful mother continuously weep for me!
 I, the valiant, may your holy [heart have] mercy and take pity on me!
 I, the young man — may your heart,
 'the terrifying (flood) wave,' be assuaged toward me!^{l2 i}

Acceptance of the Sufferer's Prayer and his Restoration (lines 120-132)

(120) The man — his god verily heard his bitter weeping;
 After the heart of his god became soothed toward the young man at his prolonged lamentation and wailing,
 The true words, the artless words, uttered by him, his god accepted.
 His words of supplication, which the young man expressed,
 (And) the pure prayers(?) — pleased the flesh of his god like fine oil.
 (125) (Thereupon) his god withdrew his hand from the evil matter:
 Anguish, which embraced him,
 who was not its spouse,
 (And) wailing, which spread out wide its arm (around him) — he annihilated;^{l3} Lamentation, which swept over him like a crushing(?) storm — he dissipated;^{l4} Fate, which had been lodged in his body,
 he eradicated(?).^{l5}
 (130) He turned the young man's suffering

^b Reading tentatively U₄-HI-DA¹-GIM, lit., "like an alloyed/mixed day" (see Hallo 1968:85, n. 106).

^c Sum. NAM-TAR (Akk. namtaru); a netherworld demon of fatal sickness, the harbinger of death.

^d A demon of sickness, especially causing headaches, and the sickness it causes.

^e It is hard to assume that the Sumerians considered themselves genetic descendents of their "personal god" (so Jacobsen 1976:157-160). Rather, we take this as a hyperbolic metaphor.

^f "Good cow" is a frequently attested epithet of mother-goddesses, especially when their mercifulness is stressed; it also refers to divine mothers of Sum. kings (see Sjöberg, OrSuec 21 1972:99). Here, exceptionally, it seems to refer to the personal god of the sufferer.

^g Reading tentatively KÁ-URU(?)—KA. The city-gate served, in the ANE as the place for public assemblies (Sum. UNKEN) and court-trials.

^h I.e., those sins which were committed unawares, and those which were committed intentionally.

ⁱ These two lines (lines 118-119), and especially the expression ŠA-ZU KI-BÉ HA-MA-GI-GI, "may your heart be assuaged toward me!" represent a standard concluding formula of personal laments and 'letter-prayers,' attested from the Ur III period on; and it appears already in a hymn, written by Enheduanna, the daughter of Sargon of Akkad, in honor of the goddess Inanna (cf. Klein 1982:300-301; text 1.160, above).

^j Lit., "he scattered them to the wind."

^k Lit., "he let them to be devoured by the marshes."

^l See note 6 above.

into joy, A benevolent UDUG-spirit, ¹⁶ that watches at the (door) opening(?),	j Job 42:10-17; Ps 91:11	set by him (as) a guardian, He (also) gave him / LAMMA-spirits ¹⁷ (of) "good eyes."
--	--------------------------	--

¹⁶ Sum. UDUG (Akk. utukku or šēdu) denotes a demon, which may be either "good" (i.e., protective and benevolent) or "bad" (i.e., evil and harming).

¹⁷ Sum. LAMMA (Akk. lamassatu) denotes an anonymous, female protective deity.

REFERENCES

Van Dijk 1953; Hallo 1968; Jacobsen 1976:152-164; Klein 1982; Kramer 1955; ANET 589-591; Mattingly 1990; Weinfeld 1988.

5. DISPUTATIONS

THE DISPUTATION BETWEEN EWE AND WHEAT (1.180)

H. L. J. Vanstiphout

This composition is presently the most accessible of the group of poetic disputations, a genre which was very popular in the Old Babylonian scribal schools and, according to the texts themselves, also at the royal court. This piece is remarkable for three reasons: it starts with a very long "cosmogonical" introduction,¹ it is apparently occasioned by a festival (a banquet at harvest time?), and it is a prime example of a consciously poetic stance in composition as well as in performance.² The text is available in a provisional edition which utilized the 39 published manuscripts.³

(1) When upon the Hill of Heaven and Earth ⁴ An had spawned the divine Godlings, — Since godly Wheat had not been spawned or created with them, Nor had the yarn of the godly Weaver ⁵ been fashioned in the Land, (5) Nor had the loom of the godly Weaver even been pegged out, For Ewe had not yet appeared, nor were there numerous lambs, And there was as yet no goat, nor numerous kids, For Ewe did not drop her twin lambs And Goat did not drop her triplet kids, — (10) The very names of Wheat, the holy blade, and of Ewe Were yet unknown to the Godlings and the greater Divinities. ⁶ There was no wheat-of-thirty-days; There was no wheat-of-forty-days; There was no wheat-of-fifty-days, (15) Nor small wheat, nor mountain wheat, nor wheat of the goodly village; Also there was no cloth to wear;	a Gen 1:11; Deut 32:2 b Gen 3:18; Exod 10:12 c Exod 16:13	The godly Weaver not having been born, no royal cap was worn; Lord herald, the precious lord, had not been born; Shakan ⁶ did not go out to the arid lands. (20) The people of those distant days ⁷ Knew not bread to eat, They knew not cloth to wear; They went about in the Land with naked limbs Eating grass with their mouths like sheep, (25) And drinking water from the ditches. ^b At that time, at the birthplace of the Gods, In their home, the Holy Hill, they (the gods) fashioned Ewe and Wheat. Gathering in the divine dining hall, Of the bounty of Ewe and Wheat (30) The Godlings of the Holy Hill Partook, but were not sated; Of the sweet milk of their goodly sheepfold The Godlings of the Holy Hill Then drank, but were not sated. (35) And so, for their own well-being in the goodly sheepfold They gave them to Mankind as sustenance. ^c
--	---	--

¹ For the status of these introductions see Van Dijk 1953:39; Pettinato 1971; Vanstiphout 1990a:289-295; Bottéro 1991:20-21; Clifford 1994:25-32.

² Vanstiphout 1992b.

³ Alster and Vanstiphout 1987.

⁴ The Hill of Heaven and Earth is the primeval birth and dwelling place of the gods. See in general Van Dijk 1964 and Pettinato 1971.

⁵ The Weaver is the goddess Uttu. See Vanstiphout 1990b.

⁶ The god of the wild animals of the plains.

⁷ Where do these people come from?

Then Enki spoke to Enlil:
 Father Enlil, Ewe and Wheat
 Were well settled on the Holy Hill; (40) Let us now send Ewe and Wheat down from the Holy Hill."
 Enki and Enlil, having agreed on this, their sacred word,
 Sent down Ewe and Wheat from the Holy Hill.
 Ewe, fenced in by her sheepfold,
 They richly endowed in grass and herbs.
 (45) For Wheat they made a field
 And bestowed on her Plow and Yoke and Team.
 Ewe, standing in her sheepfold,
 Was a shepherd full of the sheepfold's splendor;
 Wheat, standing in her furrow,
 (50) Was a shapely girl radiating beauty ^d
 Lifting her noble head high above the field
 She was suffused with bounty from the skies.
 Thus both Ewe and Wheat were radiant in appearance
 And among the gathered people they caused abundance,
 (55) And in the Land⁸ they brought well-being.
 The ordinances of the Gods they fulfill with care;
 The store-rooms of the Land they fill with abundance,
 So that the barns of the Land are bulging with
 them.
 Even in the home of the needy, who are crouching
 in the dust,
 (60) When they enter there, they bring about wealth.
 Both of them, wherever they direct their steps,
 Add to the riches of the household;
 Wherever they stand, they bring satisfaction;
 Wherever they sit, they are embellishment.⁹
 And so they gladden the heart of An and the heart of Enlil.
 (65) They drank sweet wine,
 They drank tasty beer;
 And when they had drunk sweet wine
 And sated themselves on tasty beer
 They started a quarrel in the midst of the watered fields;
 (70) They held a wrangle in the Dining Hall.^{10 e}
 Wheat calls out to Ewe:
 "Sister, I am your better; I take precedence!
 I am the most splendid of the jewels of the Land!
 I give strength to the Chief Warrior

d Cant 7:3

e Hab 2:15

f Ps 78:25;
Hos 9:4;
Prov 12:9g Lev 16:4;
16:32;
Num 4:6-8h Jer 11:19;
Isa 5:37;
Ps 44:23

(75) So that he fills the palace with awe,
 And people spread his fame to the confines of the Land!
 I am a gift of the Gods;
 I am the strength of princes!
 When I grant my power to the warrior
 (80) And he enters the lists,
 He knows not fear nor faltering,
 For I make him march out as to a playing field.
 Yet I also foster neighborliness and friendship,
 As I sort out neighbors' quarrels.^f
 (85) And when I come out to the captive youth,
 And give him my blessing,
 He forgets his despondent heart
 As if I broke his fetters and shackles.
 I, I am wheat, the Holy Blade; I am Enlil's daughter (everywhere),
 (90) In the shacks, in the shepherds' huts,
 scattered over the plain,
 What can you put against this? What can you reply? Answer me that!"
 Thereupon Ewe replied to Wheat:
 "Sister, what are you saying?
 An, king of the Gods,
 (95) Made me descend from the holy and most precious place!
 All the yarns of the divine Weaver, the splendor of royalty, are mine! Shakan, lord of the Mountain,
 Adorns the king's emblem with incrustations,
 And puts his implements in order.
 (100) Against the mighty peaks of the rebel land
 he twists a rope,¹¹
 He readies the big sling, the quiver and the long-bow.
 Also the watch over the elite troops is mine,
 As is the sustenance of the workers in the field,
 And the water-skin of refreshing drink and the sandals — all that is mine!
 (105) Sweet oil, the fragrance of the Gods, Mixed oil, pressed oil, herbal oil, cedar oil of the offerings — these are mine!
 In his gown, which is my cloth of shining wool,
 The king rejoices on the throne
 My sides gleam on the flesh of the Great gods!^g (110) Together with the bathed purification and incantation priests
 When they have dressed for purifying me,
 I walk to my holy meal!^h

⁸ The Land (Sumerian KALAM) always refers to Babylonia (or Sumer and Akkad).

⁹ The pair "to sit/to stand" is a frequent expression denoting the totality of all possible situations and actions.

¹⁰ Apparently the banquet is held at the same time in heaven (the gods partake) and sur l'herbe, in the midst of the fields. Was the actual festival also held in the fields?

¹¹ Very probably an allusion to Mount Ebikh, the first line of mountains to the east of the Mesopotamian plain, which is said to contain the rebellious mountaineers. It is also a mythological being in its own right. See Vansitphout 1991b.

But your harrow, plowshare, rein —
 These are but tools of the all-devouring bog!
 (115) What can you put against this? What can you reply? Answer me that!"

Again Wheat addressed Ewe:

"When the beer bread has been well cooked in the oven,
 Yea, when the mash has been prepared in the oven, . . .

Ninkasi¹² herself mixes them for me.

(120) Your big billy-goats and rams
 Are then finished for my banquet.

On their thick legs they stand apart from my produce,

And even your shepherd from the desert lifts his eyes towards my things!

As to me, when I stand in the furrow in the midst of the field

(125) My farmer chases away your shepherd's lad with his cudgel.

When they are looking for you in fields and desolate places,

Fear does not leave you.

Snakes, scorpions, robbers that dwell in the plain —

They all threaten your life in the high desert!

(130) Every day your number is totalled
 And your tally-stick put up,
 So that your shepherd can tell how many ewes are left, and how many lambs;

How many goats and how many kids!

When the breeze passes through the towns,

(135) And the strong winds are buffeting,

They have to construct a shed for you.

But when the breeze passes through the towns,

And the strong winds are buffeting,

Then I, as an equal, stand up to Ishkur!¹³

(140) I, I am Wheat, born for the warrior; I do not give up!

The churn, the vat on legs, those adornments of herding, these are your attributes!

What can you put against this? What can you reply? Answer me that!"

Again Ewe replied to Wheat:

"You, like heavenly holy Inana,

(145) You love horses!¹⁴

The criminal and his mate, the foreign slave,

And the forced laborer, those of the poor wives and indigent children,

When, bound with the elbow-rope,

They come to the threshing floor,

(150) Or are taken away from the threshing-floor,
 When their flail hits your face, strikes your mouth,

Then your ears ... like a pestle ...

And you are carried away by the south or the north wind.

The millstone ...

(155) It makes your body into flour as if it were pumice,

In order to fill the kneading trough.

Then the baker's girl flattens you out broadly,

And you are put in the oven

And taken out of the oven again.

(160) "When you are finally put on the table,
 I come before you, and you are behind!

Wheat, watch yourself!

You, just as I, are meant to be eaten.

Therefore, looking at what you really are,

(165) Why should I come second?

The miller, is he not evil to you?

What can you put against this? What can you reply?"

Then wheat was hurt in her pride; she bowed her head for another attack.

Wheat replied to Ewe:

(170) "You, Ishkur is your master, Shakan your herdsman, and your bed is the arid wasteland!

Like fires beaten out in houses and fields,

Like sparrows chased from the door of a house,

You are turned into the lame and the weak of the Land!

I can indeed bow my neck to the ground;

(175) But you are put into various containers;

When your innards are taken away by the buyers
 in the market,

And your neck is wrapped with your very own loin-cloth,

One man says to the other: 'Fill the measure with grain for my sheep!'"

Thereupon Enki spoke to Enlil:

(180) "Father Enlil, Ewe and Wheat, both of them,
 Should walk together!

Of their combined metal [the alloy] should never cease;

Yet of these two Wheat should be the greater!

May the other one kneel before Wheat;

(185) May ... kiss her feet!

And from sunrise to sunset

The name of Wheat be praised!"

¹² The goddess of beer.

¹³ God of wind and storm.

¹⁴ See Gilgamesh Epic VI ii 53-56.

[May you put Ewe's neck to the yoke] of Ashnan! For whosoever has gold, or silver, or cattle, or sheep, (190) Shall ever wait at the door of him who has grain, and so pass his days!" ¹⁵	Dispute of Ewe and Wheat Because Ewe is left behind and Wheat comes out (winning), Praise be to father Enki!
--	---

¹⁵ These lines are known as an independent proverb. See Alster 1975:155 and above text 1.175 and n. 8.

REFERENCES

Alster and Vanstiphout 1987; Bottéro 1991:7-22; Clifford 1994; Pettinato 1971; van Dijk 1953; 1964; Vanstiphout 1990a; 1990b; 1991b; 1992a; 1992b.

THE DISPUTATION BETWEEN THE HOE AND THE PLOW (1.181)

H. L. J. Vanstiphout

This piece is undoubtedly the finest example of the genre. It has long been recognized as one of the first poetic, if heavily rhetorical, statements of the case of the common man against the rich and mighty.¹ But its most striking qualities are the sheer excellence of the argumentation (plow is deftly hoist with its own petard),² the heavy satire on the pretences of the mighty, the earthy but clever humor,³ and most of all the irreverent but highly effective "reworking" of the format: the traditional cosmogonic introduction is turned into a story the workmen tell at night, when resting and drinking! It is to be regretted that we still have no adequate edition.⁴ The present translation is based upon all published texts⁵ and some quotes from secondary literature.

(1) Hey! Hoe, Hoe, Hoe, tied up with string; Hoe, made from poplar, with a tooth of ash; Hoe, made from tamarisk, with a tooth of sea- thorn; Hoe, double-toothed, four-toothed; (5) Hoe, child of the poor, bereft even of a loin- cloth ; Hoe picked a quarrel with Plow. Hoe and Plow — this is their dispute. Hoe cried out to Plow "O Plow, you draw furrows — what is your fur- rowing to me? (10) You make clods — what is your clod making to me?" ^a You cannot dam up water when it escapes. You cannot heap up earth in the basket. You cannot press clay or make bricks. You cannot lay foundations or build a house. (15) You cannot strengthen an old wall's base. You cannot put a roof on a man's house. O Plow, you cannot straighten a street! ^b O Plow, you draw furrows — what is your fur- rowing to me? You make clods — what is your clod making to me?"	a Ezek 17:14; 29:14-15; Dan 7:24 b Isa 32:19 c Ps 96:11; Prov 8:16; 1 Chr 16:31	(20) The Plow cries out to the Hoe "I, I am Plow, I was fashioned by the great powers, assembled by noblest hands! I am the mighty registrar of the god Enlil! I am the faithful farmer of Mankind! At the celebration of my harvest-festival in the fields, (25) Even the King slaughters cattle for me, adding sheep! He pours out libations for me, and offers the collected liquids! Drums and tympan sound! (30) The king himself takes hold of my handle-bars; My oxen he harnesses to the yoke; Great noblemen walk at my side; The nations gaze at me in admiration, The Land watches me in joy! ^{6 c} (35) The furrow I draw is set upon the plain as an adornment; Before my sheaves, erected in the fields, Even the teeming herds of Shakan kneel down! Before my ripened grain, ready for harvesting ... (40) ... ⁷
---	---	---

¹ See Kramer 1981:342-347 and Vanstiphout 1992a:344-347.

² See Vanstiphout 1984 passim.

³ See Vanstiphout 1991a passim.

⁴ M. Civil's 1960 dissertation remains unpublished. Provisionally the fullest rendering is Kramer 1975.

⁵ See Vanstiphout 1984:239. All known material can be found in Artinger 1993:38-39.

⁶ This passage apparently alludes to a ceremony, probably at the beginning of the plowing season, and alluded to in a calendrical text. The point is that Hoe will turn the cameo into its opposite image in lines 91ff.

⁷ These two lines I cannot understand on the basis of the published material.

The shepherd's churn is filled to the brim;
With my sheaves scattered over the fields
The sheep of Dumuzi are sated.

My stacks adorning the plains
(45) Are like so many yellow hillocks inspiring awe.^d

Stacks and mounds I pile up for Enlil;
Dark emmer I amass for him.
I fill the storehouses of Mankind;
Even the orphans, the widows and the destitute
(50) Take their reed baskets
And glean my scattered grains.^e
My straw, piled up in the fields
People even come to collect that,
While the beasts of Shakan go about.

(55) O Hoe, miserable hole-digger, with your pathetic long tooth,
O Hoe, always burrowing in the mud,
O Hoe, whose head is always in the dust,
O Hoe-and-brickmold, you spend your days in mud, nobody ever cleans you!

Dig holes! Dig crevices! O navel-man, dig!
(60) O Hoe, you of the poor man's hand, you are not fit for the hand of the noble!
The slave's hand is adorned with your head!
And you dare to insult me?
You dare to compare yourself to me?
When I go out to the plains, every eye is full of admiration,

(65) ...
...⁸

Then the Hoe cried out to the Plow

"O Plow, my smallness — what is that to me? My humble state — what is that to me? ^f
My dwelling at the river bank - what is that to me?
At Enlil's place, I precede you!
In Enlil's temple, I stand in front of you!

(70) I make ditches, I make canals;
I fill the meadows with water;
And when the water floods the canebrake,
My small baskets carry it away.
When a canal is cut, or a ditch,

(75) And the water rushes out as a rising flood,
Making everything into a swamp,
I, the Hoe, dam it in,
So that neither southern nor northern storm can blow it away.

The fowler samples eggs;
(80) The fisherman catches fish;
And they all empty bird-traps

^d Deut 24:19;
Cant 7:3

^e Exod 22:21;
Ruth 2:7;
2:15

^f Isa 10:33;
Prov 16:11;
29:23

Thus is wealth spread everywhere by my doing.

Moreover, after the water is drained from the meadows

And the work in the moist earth is to be taken in hand,

(85) O Hoe, I come out to the field before you!
The opening up of the field — I start that before
you!

The sides and the bottom of the dyke I clean for
you!

The weeds in the field I heap up for you!

Stumps and roots I heap up for you!

(90) Only then you work the field, you have your go!

Your oxen are six, your people four — you yourself are merely the eleventh!

The side-boards take away the field.

And you want to compare yourself with me?

When you finally come down to the field after me,
Your single furrow already gladdens your eye!

(95) When you finally put your head to the task,
Your tongue gets caught by brambles and thorns.
Your tooth breaks, and your tooth is renewed;
You will not keep it for long.

Your plowman calls you "This Plow is broken again!"⁹

(100) And, again, carpenters have to be hired,
people ...

The whole chapter of workers is milling around
you.

The harness-makers scrape another green hide for
you,

Twisting it with pegs for you.

Without stopping they turn the tourniquet for you, (105) And finally a foul hide is put upon your head.¹⁰

Your work is slight, though your ways are great!

My turn of duty is twelve months;

Your effective term is four months;

The time you are idle is eight months;

(110) So you are absent twice as long as you are present!

And then, on the boat you make a hut;

When you are put aboard, your 'hands' sever the boards

So that your face has to be pulled out of the water like a wine-jar.

And only after I have made a pile of logs

(115) Can my smoke and fire dry you out!

Your seeding-funnel — what is then its importance?

Your 'important ones' are thrown upon a pile

⁸ See previous note.

⁹ For the passage 95-99 see Civil 1994:74-75.

¹⁰ For 103-105 see now Civil 1994:73.

As implements to be destroyed.
 But I, I am the Hoe, and live in your city!
 (120) No one is more honored than I am.
 I am but a servant following his master;
 I am but the one who builds the house for his king;
 I am but the one who broadens the stalls, who expands the sheepfolds!

I press clay, I make bricks;
 (125) I lay foundations, I build houses;
 I strengthen the base of an old wall;
 I repair the roof of the honest man;
 I, I am Hoe, I lay out the streets!

When I have thus gone through the city and built its solid walls,
 (130) And have made appear the temples of the great gods therein,
 Embellished them with red, yellow and streaked wash,
 I go to construct the royal dwelling in the city,
 Where overseers and captains dwell.

When the weakened clay has been built up, the fragile clay buttressed, (135) They can rest because of me in a cool, well-built dwelling.

And when the fire-side makes the hoe gleam, and they lie on their side,
 You are not to go to their feast!
 They eat and drink;
 Their wages are paid out to them
 (140) Thus I enable the laborer to support his wife and children.⁸

For the boat-man I make an oven, I heat pitch for
 him;
 And when I have fashioned Magur and Magilum boats,
 I have enabled the boatman to support his wife and children.

For the householder I plant the garden;
 (145) And when the garden has been encircled, the fences been put up,
 the agreements reached,
 People again take up the hoe.

When wells have been dug, and poles set up,
 The bucket-bar hung, I straighten the beds
 And fill their ditches with water.

(150) When the apple-tree has blossomed and the fruits appear,
 These fruits are put up as an ornament in the temples of the gods.

Thus I enable the gardener to support wife and children!

When I work at the river with the plow, strengthening the banks,

g Prov 12:11

Building a hut on its banks,
 (155) Those who have passed the day in the fields
 And the shift which has done the same at night,
 They enter their huts.
 They revive themselves as in a well-built city;
 The water-skins I made they use to pour water
 (160) And so they put life into their hearts again.

And you, Plow, think to insult me (by saying) 'Go, dig a hole!?'
 On the plains, where no moisture is found,
 When I have dug up the sweet water,
 The thirsty ones come back to life at the side of my wells!

(165) And what then says the one to the other?
 What do they tell one another?¹¹
 'The shepherd's hoe is surely set up as an ornament on the plains!

For when An had ordered his punishment,
 And the bitterness had been ordained over Sumer,
 And the waters of the well-built house had collected in the swamp,

(170) And Enlil had frowned upon the Land,
 Even the shepherd's crook of Enlil had been made felt,

When great Enlil had acted thus,
 Enlil did not restrain his hand.
 Then the Hoe, with its single tooth, struck the dry
 earth!

(175) As for us, the winter's cold, as the locust swarm, you lift!
 The heavy hand of summer as of winter you take away.

O Hoe, you binder, you bind the sheaf!
 O bird-trap, you binder, you bind the reed-basket!
 The lone workman, even the destitute, is provided for;

(180) The grains ... are spread."
 Then the Storm¹² spoke a word

"The millstone lies still, while the pestle pounds!
 From side-plate and foot-plate good results may be had!

Why should the sieve quarrel with the strainer?
 (185) Why make another angry?
 Ashnan, can a single one reap your neck?
 Ripe grain, why should you compare?"

Then Enlil spoke to the Hoe

"O Hoe, do not be so angry!
 (190) Do not cry out so loud!
 Of the Hoe, is not Nisaba its overseer, its captain?
 Hoe, whether five or ten shekel make your price,
 Or whether one-third or one half mina,
 (195) Like a maid-servant, always ready, you will ¹¹ Civil 1994:140 interprets this passage as referring to "a catastrophic flood, menacing the harvest." This is almost certainly right as it stands; but the point is that the workmen interpret it as a cosmic or primeval flood at the same time.

¹² Probably here an epithet for Enlil.

fulfill your task!"
Dispute of the Hoe and the Plow.

Because the Hoe was greater than the Plow,
Praise be to Nisaba.

REFERENCES

Attinger 1993; Civil 1994; Kramer 1975; 1981; Vanstiphout 1984; 1991a; 1992a.

THE DISPUTATION BETWEEN BIRD AND FISH (1.182)

H. L. J. Vanstiphout

This composition is remarkable not only because it stresses the importance of pleasant and beautiful things in life over dour seriousness,¹ but also because of its peculiar format. It intentionally mixes the generic features of the disputation with those of a fable.² Since fish is unable to win by force of argument, it attempts to do so by force tout court. Fish's violent attack introduces an element of narrativity which breaks through the argumentative structure. The burden seems to be that stern moral righteousness can never excuse violence anyway. Apart from a couple of more or less complete translations³ there is no edition, though barring a few possibly crucial lines at the end the text can be reconstructed almost completely. The present translation is based upon an edition prepared for the PSD project, and uses unpublished material.⁴

(1) [In long gone, far off days], after the kind fate had been decreed, [After An and Enlil] had set up the rules of heaven and earth, ^a	a Ps 139:24	(15) [In the lagoons?] he gave all kinds of living creatures as their sustenance, [...] and so placed the abundance of the gods in their charge.
[Nudimmud, ⁵ noble prince], the lord of broad insight, — [Lord Enki,] decreeing [the fates], their third one he surely is! —	b 2 Sam 7:7	Nudimmud, noble prince, the lord of broad insight, When he had fashioned Bird and Fish, He filled canebrake and marsh with Fish and Bird, (20) Selected their stations
(5) [The waters ...] he collected, founded dwelling-places; [Life-giving (waters)?] which beget fecund seed he held in hand;	c Ps 89	And made them acquainted ⁶ with their rules. Upon that time Fish laid its eggs in the swamp; Bird built its nest in an opening of the thicket. But Bird frightened Fish (dwelling) among its property.
[Tigris and] Euphrates he laid out side by side, and brought in them (the water of) the mountains; [The smaller] streams he scoured, and put in ditches too.		(25) [Fish to Bird] cried out; [...] started a wrangle. [Fish ...] stood up in pride, ⁷ [...] shouted at him, turning up his nose:
[Father] Enki also made wide pens and stalls, and provided shepherd and herdsman; (10) He founded cities and villages, and so made mankind thrive;		"[...] who knows no peace; (30) [...] constantly wailing; [...] face? [...] heart dripping with evil!
A king he gave them for shepherd, and raised him to sovereignty over them; ^b The king rose as daylight over the countries.		Standing on the plain you keep picking — they chase you away!
[Father] Enki tied up the marshes, growing there reeds young and old; ^{5a}		In the furrows the farmer's sons lay a snare for your neck;
[In ...] ponds and large lakes he made birds and fishes teem; ^c		The gardener in garden and orchard sets up a net against you!

¹ See Vanstiphout 1992a:347-348.

² There should be no longer a misunderstanding about the difference between a fable, which is essentially a narrative form, and a disputation, which is essentially a rhetorical form. Therefore the chapter heading "Fables or Contest Literature" in Lambert (1960) is misleading, doubly so since in that chapter we find only disputations, while the real fables appear in the two subsequent chapters ("Popular Sayings" and "Proverbs").

³ Kramer 1964 and Krispijn 1993:138-144.

⁴ For the material see Attinger 1993:49-50 and Vanstiphout 1991c.

⁵ An epithet of the god Enki.

^{5a} See the "Epic of Creation," text 1.111, p. 390 above.

⁶ Lit., perhaps "made them face the rules."

⁷ Perhaps better "in an overbearing manner."

(35) He cannot rest his arm from the sling, cannot sit down in peace!

For in the vegetable rows you cause damage; you are displeasing;

On the fields along the banks there are your unpleasing⁸ footprints.

Bird, you know no shame; you fill the courtyard with your droppings

The sweeper-boy, who cleans the courtyard, chases you with ropes!

(40) By your call the household is disturbed; they flee from your din;^d

And enter the house of the shrine!

Mooring like cattle, bleating like sheep

They pour out cool water in narrow jugs for you

And then drag you away to the daily sacrifice!

(45) The fowler carries you away with fettered wings,

(The fisherman brings you to the palace;)

Having bound your wings and beak.

Chatterer, whose mooring has no ...; what are you flapping about?

With your ugly screech you disturb⁹ the night; no one sleeps sweetly.

(...)¹⁰

(52) Bird, get out of the swamp! Take this racket of yours off my back!

Go, creep into your hole on top of the rubbish heap — this befits you!

Thus did Fish insult Bird on that day.

(55) But Bird, with dappled coat and glittering face, and convinced of its own beauty,^e

Took not to heart the insults Fish had hurled at it.

As if it had been but a nursemaid singing a lullaby,

It did not give in to that speech, but still angry words rose from it.¹¹

And then did Bird answer Fish:

(60) "How has your heart become so arrogant, while you yourself are so lowly?

Your mouth is a hillock; your mouth goes all the way round, but you cannot see behind you.

Your hips are cut off, as are your arms, hands and feet — try to put your neck to your feet!

Your smell is awful; you make people throw up, they wrinkle their nose at you!

No trough would hold the kind of prepared food you eat;

(65) And he who has carried you dares not let his hand touch his skin!

^d Ezek 3:12;
Job 39:24

^e Isa 33:17;
Ezek 28:12;
28:17;
Ps 45:12

In the great swamp and the broad marshes, I am your persecuting demon;

The sweet plants there you cannot eat, they are near to my mouth!

You cannot travel with safety in the river, my storm-cloud covers you.

Underneath my eyes you wriggle through all the reeds!

(70) Your young, every one of them, constitute my daily allotment; you give them to me for my food.

Your big ones are just as certain my provision at my banqueting hall.

While I, I am beautiful Bird, the wise one!

Beautiful artistry was put into (the finishing of) my adornment

But no skill has been applied even to begin your rough shaping!

(75) Strutting about in the Royal Palace befits me; My warbling is as a decoration in the courtyard;

The sound I produce, the sweet chanting of my voice,

Is made into a delicious ornament for Shulgi's¹² person!

Produce and fruits of all orchard and gardens are my plentiful daily ration;

(80) Finest groats, peeled barley, emmer wheat and dates are sweet things to my mouth.

How do you not recognize my greatness? Bow your neck to the ground!"

Thus Bird insulted Fish on that day.

Fish became angry and, trusting in its heroic strength and worthiness, Swept over the bottom like a heavy rain cloud. It took up the quarrel.

(85) It took not to heart the insults Bird had hurled at it.

"Upon your own neck be it!" it spoke unrestrainedly,

And again did Fish reply to Bird:

"Long beak, long legs, dwarfed feet, cleft bill, slit mouth!

You are clattering from ignorance; you have not reflected!

(90) Glutton, freak(?), filling the courtyard with droppings —

The little sweeper-boy sets nets in the house and chases you with ropes! —

^a A sly hint in reverse? We know that Fish will be the loser because it is much too proud and self-opinionated; is this an allusion to the chicken-track aspect of cuneiform signs?

^b Lit., "you frighten." But since there is no personal direct object the literal translation ["you frighten the night"] would be nonsense.

^c Study by autopsy of the tablets has revealed that the line numbering of the translations and consequently also that of quotes in secondary literature is out by two numbers from line 48 onwards. Still, since there is no edition it is better provisionally to keep to the traditional numbering.

^d I.e. from Bird.

^e Shulgi is the greatest king of the Third Dynasty of Ur.

The baker, the brewer, the porter, all those who live in the house are annoyed with you!¹³

Bird, you did not examine(?) the case of my greatness, you did not take due account of its nature;

My weakness and my strength you did not consider; yet you spoke inflammatory words!

(95) Once you have really looked into my achievements, you will humble yourself exceedingly!

Now your speech contains grave errors; you have not thought about it!

I, I am Fish; I deliver altogether the abundance of the pure shrine,

Even to the great offerings to lustrous Ekur — I stand proudly with my head raised high!

Just like Ashnan I am here to satisfy the hunger of the Land — I am her aide!

(100) And therefore people pay attention to me, they keep their eyes upon me!

As at the harvest festival, they always rejoice over me, and take care of me!

Bird, whatever great deeds you may have done, I will teach you their pretense!

The harshness and evil speech you held, I shall hand back to you!"

Thereupon Fish conceived an evil plot against Bird.^f

(105) Silently, furtively, it slithered alongside And when Bird arose from its nest to fetch food for its young

Fish searched for the most discreet of the silent places.

Its well-built nest, made from brushwood it made into a derelict house;

Its well-built house it destroyed, tore down the storeroom;

(110) The eggs it had laid it smashed, and threw them into the sea.

Thus did Fish strike at Bird — and then fled into the waters.

Then came Bird, lion-faced, and with an eagle's talons,

Winging towards its nest. It stops in mid-flight; Like a hurricane whirling in the midst of heaven, it circles in the sky;

(115) Bird, looking about for its nest spreads open wings and legs.

Its well-built nest, made from brushwood, it now tramples over it as if it were the broad plain.

Its mouth cries out in the midst of heaven as does the priestess!

^fExod 15:7;
Zech 10:11

Bird now seeks around for Fish, searching the marshes;

Bird peers into the river, watches it closely.

(120) As if snatching into the water, it stretched out its legs,

Clasped its *claws*² together and did not open them again.

Thus Bird took vengeance.

Again did Bird reply to Fish:

"Utter fool, dumb one, muddle-headed one, Fish, you are out of your mind!

(125) Those who circle the quay — their mouths never eat enough; you spend your day with fodder!

Swine, rascal, gorging yourself upon your own dung, freak!

You are like a watchman living on top(?)¹⁴ of a house, dripping(?) by itself!

Fish, you kindled something like fire against me, you planted henbane;

Your stupidity caused devastation; you have sprinkled your hands with blood!

(130) Your arrogant heart, by its own deeds, will destroy itself!

But I, I am Bird, flying in heaven and walking upon earth;

Wherever I travel, I am there for the joy of everyone¹⁵ under the sky;

[...] o Fish, the greatest princes gave them.

[...] New Year(?) [...] my [...] it is the first born young; [...] to [...] of Enlil.

(135) [...] walks with uplifted head;

[...] ... until distant days.

[...] ... he speaks to the multitudes.

[How] can you not recognize my pre-eminence? Bow your neck to the ground!"

Thus again Bird had hurled insults at Fish.

(140) Then did Fish shout at Bird, looking at it in anger:

"Let not words ...! Our judge should take it up!"

To our judge and umpire, to Enki, let us take our case!"

And so the two of them, jostling and continuing the evil quarrel,

In order to establish, the one over the other, his pre-eminence,

(145) In ... Eridu (they?) registered the litigation, and, having performed the argumentation, [...] confused(?), as if by their (own) noise,

[...] crept (before him) like ...;

¹³ Or perhaps "are fleeing from you"?

¹⁴ "Top" or "roof" is normally UR, while the text has UR "base." I do not understand the second hemistich, and the translation is merely an (unlikely) approximation.

¹⁵ Lit., "everyone named."

[From Shulgi], son of Enlil,
 (149) [...] peace, they request a verdict.
 (150) ["You (Enki),¹⁶ whose] speech is true —
 Please, your ear to my words!
 I had placed [my nest in the marshes]; eggs had been laid.
 [Food(?) of the marshes(?)] was given for free, was put there for their sustenance.
 [After Fish] had set up [the quarrel(?)]
 [...] it has destroyed my house;
 (155) [My well-built nest] made from brushwood he made into a derelict house;
 [My well-built house he destroy]ed, my storeroom
 he tore down;
 [The eggs I laid he] smashed and threw them into the sea.
 [O judge ...¹⁷] examine my speech, return my verdict!"

[Before(?) the judge who was(?)] looking closely into [the matter, he] prostrated himself to the ground.
 (160) Now [their judge] announces(?) the word;
 [He whose word is] great, spoke from the heart
 ["... I am accepting their appeal!"¹⁸
 [The contestants,] quarrelling, come along.
 Like one passing (?) a [...], (one) came out supreme.
 (165) Like goring [oxen(?)] they jostled each other.

"[Whatever word you speak], let it be favorable to
 me!

You know the rules and ordinances of the broad
 earth!

When you search for the right decision, you are immensely wise in knowing the (right) word for that!"

He answered Bird and Fish

(170) "To stand in the Ekur is fitting for Bird, its voice is sweet [indeed].

At Enlil's holy table, Bird should take precedence over you [...]

In the temple of all the great gods (Bird's) voice is pleasing;

The Anunna-gods rejoice in its voice.

It is suitable for the banquets in the great dining hall of the gods;

(175) It [provides] good cheer in Shulgi's palace.
 It should stand with raised head, in the [house] of Shulgi, son of Enlil!"

King Shulgi¹⁹ [...]

[...]

Fish [...]

(180) Thereupon²⁰ [...] ...²¹

(190) In the dispute held by Bird and Fish,
 Because Bird was victorious over Fish,
 Father Enki be praised!

¹⁶ Or perhaps (Shulgi)?

¹⁷ Or perhaps (Shulgi)?

¹⁸ Lit., "[...] their appeal is surely sweet to my mouth!"

¹⁹ Direct speech or narrative?

²⁰ Clearly a new and final narrative episode.

²¹ There are a number of missing lines. The tablet which contained the immediately preceding lines could easily have had ten lines before the end.

REFERENCES

Attinger 1993:49-50; Kramer 1964; Krispijn 1993:131-148; Lambert 1960; Vanstiphout 1991c; 1992a.

THE DISPUTATION BETWEEN SUMMER AND WINTER (I.183)

H. L. J. Vanstiphout

As far as we know, this altercation between the two most natural opposites imaginable, was the longest of all Sumerian disputations.¹ But it is in a much worse state of preservation than the previous three pieces.² Here also there is a mixture of generic features: the text starts with a long list of "destinies" or proprieties allotted to the contestants by the gods. It is obvious from the start that basically the two contestants are equal in value, and that the quarrel can only start because of unwarranted jealousy (indeed, it starts on a point of procedure, or literally precedence). The dispute as such remains unresolved, since the verdict insists that they are complementary and should remain so. Yet the matter is resolved on a point of simple justice: Winter (Enten) ought not to be jealous of Summer (Emesh), but Summer should not be allowed to profit from Winter's efforts. So the main feature of this piece is that it is about undue rivalry resolved.³

¹ 318 lines have been calculated.

² For the published material see Vanstiphout 1987b.

³ See Vanstiphout 1992a.

(1) The Lord lifted his head in pride, bountiful days arrived. Heaven and earth he regulated, and the population spread wide; Enlil, like a mighty bull, placed his feet on the earth. To make bountiful times of abundance,^a (5) To make manifest ... nights of splendor, To make legumes grow, to make wheat spread out, To make 'the carp-flood' appear regularly at the quays, To make the people lengthen their days in abundance, To make Emesh bind the dykes of heaven, (10) To make Enten show regularly the abundant waters at the quays, — This was what Enlil, king of the Mountainland, wanted to achieve.⁵ With the great Hursag-hill he copulated, yes, gave that mountain her share; He thus made her pregnant with Emesh and Enten, welfare and life of the Nation; Enlil, when he copulated, roared like a bull; (15) Hursag spent the day at that place, and at night she opened her loins.⁶ Emesh and Enten she bore as (smoothly as with) princely oil;^b As great bulls (s)he made them eat pure plants in the enclosures of the hills; (S)he reared them in the mountain meadows. Then Enlil cast the lots for Emesh and Enten⁷ (20) To Emesh the founding of settlements; The bringing in of abundant harvests to great mountain Enlil;^c To send out laborers to the great fields; to make settle the ox on the acre. To Enten abundance, the early flooding, the bounty and life of the Nation;^c The placing of wheat on the fruitful acres; to gather in everything. (25) This Enlil decided for Emesh and Enten as their destiny. Enten, from the brink of the hill country Took in hand the early flooding, bounty and life of the Nation. He set his foot upon Tigris and Euphrates like a big bull, And let them free upon the fruitful fields of Enlil. (30) The sea he fashioned (into)	a Prov 3:10 b Ps 74:17 c Prov 10:5 d Deut 28:4-5; Ezek 16:13	Enten (also) brought forth The bull (he) surrounded with reeds both young and old (...). Ninurta, Enlil's heroic son, Took away the water from the great fields (35-45 broken) (46) The ox shakes its head in the yoke. (47-49 broken) (50) ... the goat (bore) kids. Cows and calves he made teem; he gathered ghee and milk; In the high steppe deer and buck rejoice. The birds of heaven build their nests all over. The fish of the swamps lay their eggs in the reed thickets. (55) In the orchards honey and wine are dripping onto the ground;^d The orchards are in full fruit. The gardens grow legumes and sprout vegetables. The grain becomes heavy in the furrow Ashnan appears as a fair young maid⁸; (60) And thus did the Harvest, the great feast of Enlil, raise its head towards heaven. Emesh made a barn; he widened sheepfold and stall; He added to the abundance in the great fields; And all the produce he put aside The abundant harvest he brought into the estate, he gathered the heaps of grain. (65) He founded cities and villages; he built the temple of the Nation. He caused the House of the gods to appear like a hill on a pure place. The House-of-Life, holy abode of kingship, fit for the lofty dais, He founded in abundance for great mountain Enlil. Emesh, heroic son of Enlil, (70) Then decided to bring offerings to the House-of-Life, Enlil's abode. Wild animals, cattle and sheep of the hill country, Wild rams, deer and buck, all fully grown, Mountain sheep, noble sheep, fat-tailed sheep he brought. Pigs grown fat in the midst of the reed thicket, porcupine and tortoise, (75) Birds on their nest, brooding their eggs. All harvest produce, flour and malt for mixing, ghee and milk from sheepfold and stall; Rye, egg-beans, small beans, large beans in
--	--	---

^a The traditional name of the all-important flooding at the beginning of the agricultural cycle.

⁵ In a way this is somewhat strange. Usually it is the god Enki who explains the purpose behind his creative acts.

⁶ For this motif (and the lines 12-15) see Cooper 1989.

⁷ The following passage is reminiscent of Enki's actions in the programmatic piece "Enki Orders the World," for which see most recently Bottéro and Kramer 1989:165-188.

⁸ See the Disputation between Ewe and Wheat (text 1.180 above) lines 49-52.

basketfuls;
Onions which took sweetness when in their furrows, garlic and shallots,
Beet, cress,
(80-89 broken)
(90) Enten, proud son of Enlil,
(91 broken)
(92) For the sheep which is being disputed — it is fattened but at its side there is a scorpion⁹
(93-98 broken)
The fattened Bibra-bird, the Esig-bird, the Shurrabird and the Ushtur-bird,¹⁰
(100) The carp ... which Enlil made grow up;
The pomegranates which he gathered ...;
Large beets, a large GUG-loaf cut, garlic cut with the cleaver;
Enten himself carried the offerings he brought.
Emesh, heroic son of Enlil
(105) Then decided to bring offerings to the Houseof-Life, Enlil's abode
Bucks and lambs of the mountain-sheep.
Emesh and Enten drove together the gift of young cattle;
The two of them, like butting bulls they reared themselves for battle.
Enten, because of his tired arms and shoulders
(110) From all the grain grown heavy in the furrow which he had been watering, Turned from them as (from) a stranger; he did not want to draw near.
Anger overcame Enten, and he started a quarrel with Emesh.⁶
"Emesh, my brother, do not praise yourself!"
Whatever you carry to the Palace as a gift
(115) Has not been made through your effort - Do not brag!
As if you yourself had done the hard work;
As if you yourself had done the farming work;
As if your own water-inspection at the early flood had brought life to the Nation;
As if you yourself had caused grain to appear on the fields with the dew from the skies —
(120) You are about to enter the Palace in this way with my efforts!
As if you yourself had brought ... the wild animals,
the cattle and sheep from the hill country";
(122-139 broken; 140-152 very fragmentary)
Thus had Enten then insulted Emesh.
Emesh, the hero whom one does not ..., he

e Amos 3:15

searched for rude insults;
(155) On harvest day he trusted in his heart, he left;
Like a mighty bull, he ate hay, and raised his head.
Emesh thereupon replied to Enten:
"Enten, do stay at the side of the oven ...; when ...
their words;
You should not place these heavy insults (against one?) who does not lead a sitting life;
(160) For carrying out the task, with its difficulties, of furrowing the Nation
You do not raise the cry in the GUNE, you do not inspect the estate.
The young scribe is absent, which is an abomination; no grass is pulled out for the bed.
The singer does not embellish the banquet; at its side
Enten, do not speak insults; to the steppe
(165) I shall reveal my force to the estate, so that even you may perceive it!
In my working tour of seven months in a year
... does not whisper softly to (168-171 broken)
(173) Enten, do not ... noise
When you have taken away the water from the fields, when the tubs are placed,
(175) When you have made ready the fishing places, and heaped up the fish,
I am Enlil's great comptroller;
And I harrow the field into a fruitful field!
When the oxen have stopped working the field
When I have put force to the damp earth; when I have fulfilled the necessary assignment, (180) I do not work for you in the fields and plantations early in the season.¹²
The early grain will bend its neck in the hollow of the furrow; but no one makes a fence.
Your plowboy, wherever he walks the ox, will not make the ox angry with me."
(183-188 fragmentary)
Enten thereupon replied to Emesh:
(190) "Emesh, the mule grazing on the harvest-field makes an ear-splitting noise!
(191 broken)
The harvest ox which chafes its neck at the yoke-block shakes its head!
The ale-seller going down to the harvest field is holding the jug!
The flour-roaster ...
(195) The laborer though constantly boasting does

⁹ Note that in the Disputation between Ewe and Wheat the same notion occurs; see above, text 1.180, line 127.

¹⁰ We do not know exactly which birds these are.

¹¹ Note that Emesh has not been bragging so far.

¹² See Civil 1994:79 and 83 for this line and the next.

not know the extent of the field!¹³ Emesh, my brother, after you have boasted with my exertions,
 At the end of the year the grain is brought in to the estate, and the granaries are filled up.
 After you have brought the excess, and your Bardul and your Niglam¹³ garments are woven,
 An axe ... to your strength?
 (200) Emesh, opening up the field, do not forget the wet earth!
 (201-207 broken)
 (208) Reed-cutter about to prune with the Barhuda,¹⁴ split the grown reed!
 (209 broken)
 (210) Potter, dig up clay, light the fire, carry faggots, and ... the pot!
 Weaver, weave your Bardul garment with the strength⁷ of your Aktum cloth!
 Brewer, bake beer bread at the harvest place as is your assignment!
 ... let Emesh leave!
 ... he threw
 (215) Men wear boots and sandals Emesh, my brother, as long as you go with⁷ my own tour of duty,
 Small and great order you about; your string is never cut.
 Though you have gathered all things in the Nation,
 and filled the granaries,
 It is with my effort of your capital², I am completely the rightful owner!
 (220) When the clouds brought abundance down from the skies,
 And the water for the first greening had descended from the hillsides;
 When the new grain, being added to the old grain,
 is put in the granary;
 The good farmer, having seen to his fields, shouts
 for joy,
 Harnesses his carrier donkeys, and sets out proudly for the city.
 (225) My brother, when you have put away the holy plow in the barn,
 The granary, all that you have gathered, you make roar like fire⁷;
 You sit down to plentiful food and drink;
 You obtain the choicest goods from the Nation.
 The king named by Nanna, son of Enlil, (230) Ibbi-Sin,¹⁵ when you have clothed him with the Shutur and the Hursag¹⁶ garments, Adorned him with the Bardul and the Niglam gar-

f Isa 10:15;
 60:21

g Amos 3:15

ments,
 When you have made a perfect feast for the gods,
 The Anuna clothe their holy bodies with a garment.
 And in his House-of-Life, the holy abode of kingship founded by An,
 (235) When you have prepared at that place of heart's content a succulent banquet;
 With tambourine, drum, trumpet and lute playing for him as by themselves,
 And Tigi and Zamzam¹⁷, they who gladden your heart, while away the day,
 It is I who have made the plentiful wine, who deliver lots of drink;
 I who perfect the garments with fine oil;
 (240) I who bring out the [...], the Shutur and the Aktum cloths!
 In order to safeguard⁷ them for Emesh, the first in Sumer, at the heavy
 That resting place in the bosom of the Blackheads,
 where they were put away,
 Moths have destroyed the blankets, eaten the Aktum carpet for you!
 (244-253 fragmentary; 254-256 broken)
 (257) The gardener does not know how to grow purslain, your basket for cut (vegetables) ...;
 You, how can you compare with me, while seeking a roof for resting?"
 Thus had Enten then insulted Emesh.
 (260) Emesh, heroic son of Enlil
 Was convinced of his own power, and trusted in his heart.
 To the insults Enten had spoken to him
 It was as if he acted friendly.
 Emesh thereupon replied to Enten:
 (265) "Enten, do not yourself praise your overriding force after you have explained your importance!
 In the city I shall speak about your abode, which I shall always protect⁷;
 You may seem a chief, but you are a helpless one.
 Your faggot is for brazier, hearth and oven,
 So shepherd's boy and shepherd with your heavy sheep
 (270) The helpless ones, from brazier to oven, from oven to brazier
 They run about like sheep in your
 In sunshine you lay your plans ...;
 But now in the city teeth are chattering because of you.⁸
 When the day is only half, nobody walks the streets.

¹³ We do not know precisely what kinds of garment these are.

¹⁴ An agricultural implement; mattock?

¹⁵ Last king of the Ur III Dynasty.

¹⁶ Unknown garments.

¹⁷ Musical instruments.

(275) The servant, glad of his oven, (remains) in the house till the sun sets. The maid, not employed in the flooded fields, passes the day with (making?) garments; In the field, which Enten does not work,¹⁸ Where no furrows have been cut, Its grain, not being put in its wholesome place, is taken away by the fat crow; (280) The produce of the vegetable cutter — of these vegetables the market-price is bad; Bearing only old reeds, the reed-bearers get cuts in their bare feet. Do not speak about overriding power — I will make known its shape and essence!" Emesh thus replied to Enten. Then ... Sumer in abundance, (285) Both of them stretch their legs, stand up as for a fight. (285a) Enten ... a word ... raises his head: "Father Enki, you gave me the control of the watership, you brought me the water of abundance!" (287-290 fragmentary) The grain grew heavy in the furrows. (292-295 broken) (296) Enten admires the heart of your ... in words." Emesh collects everything in his head, and calms down. Emesh speaks respectfully to Enlil: "Enlil, your judgment is overpowering, your word	h Job 42:11 i Zech 14:8	is the highest. (300) Your verdict cannot be altered - who could change it? Brother has started a quarrel with brother, but now they are calm again. As long as you enter the palace the people will speak their awe. When you live there, I shall not mock anything, but praise everything." Enlil replies to Emesh and Enten: (305) "Of the life-giving waters from the midst of the mountains, Enten is the director. The farmer of the gods, who gathers everything. Emesh, my son, how can you compare with Enten, your brother?" Enlil — the gist of his mighty word is perfect; The verdict he pronounced cannot be altered — who could change it? (310) Emesh bowed before Enten, said prayers to him. In his house he prepared beer and wine for him. At its side they pass the day with a succulent banquet. Emesh gives gold and silver to Enten;^h In brotherly love and friendship they will alternate (315) And they shall comfort their minds by speaking sweet words, and so gratify each other.ⁱ In the disputation between Emesh and Enten Enten, the farmer of the gods, was greater than Emesh; Therefore great mountain Enlil be praised.
---	---------------------------------------	--

¹⁸ Obviously, which are not worked in winter; see Civil 1994:79.

REFERENCES

Bottero and Kramer 1989; Civil 1994; Cooper 1989:87-89; van Dijk 1957b; Vanstiphout 1987b:15-16; 1992a.

6. SCHOOL DIALOGUES

This section has been included for a very special reason. The Scriptural parallels here might be few in number, and inherently vacuous, if not nugatory. And that is precisely the point: the rich 'school literature' in Sumerian from Old Babylonian Mesopotamia shows a striking and very meaningful contrast between the two cultures. In the Mesopotamian case the perception, ordering and evaluation of conscious culture is governed by an organized system of education in the scribal school, or Eduba, as is shown by its structure, its curriculum, and its products. What is more, in a significant number of compositions they have laid down — though mostly in a jocular vein — their attitudes towards this system, including that of intellectual freedom, with its consequent cynicism, within the closed group of literati. This unexpectedly 'modern' idea is absent from the neighboring cultures, and only represented in a much watered down version in Mesopotamia itself after the Kassite period. The only meaningful point(s) of comparison would be some periods in Egyptian cultural history. And this is all the more reason for including, by way of stark contrast, some samples in this collection.¹ The three pieces have been chosen because each of them highlights a different aspect, not only of the school, but of the internal and external implications of being a "scholar"; furthermore, they present a marked gradation in subject matter and seriousness for the pupils involved.

¹ On the schools in general, their curriculum and their methods, see Van Dijk 1953:21-27; Gadd 1956; Sjöberg 1975; Römer 1977; Vanstiphout 1979 with earlier literature; Civil 1985; Waetzoldt 1986, 1988 and 1989.

THE DIALOGUE BETWEEN TWO SCRIBES (1.184)

H. L. J. Vanstiphout

This provisionally fragmentary¹ composition focuses on the competition between two scribes, one being more advanced than the other, and using his seniority to bully and insult the younger one — after which the teacher, apparently a stickler for school tradition, takes the side of the senior student (the "Big Brother"). But in the meantime we learn a number of practical and methodological details about schooling, its aims and its eventual rewards. The two opponents in this quarrel are identified by name. And the piece cleverly takes over some of the structural features of a poetical disputation.²

(GIRINE-ISAG)

(1) "Well fellow student, what shall we write today on the back of our tablet³?"

(ENKI-MANSUM)

"Today we will not even write a single word from our lesson!"

(GIRINE-ISAG)

"But then surely the teacher will know and be angry with us because of you!

What will we say to him?"

(ENKI-MANSUM)

(5) "Come now, I shall write what I want! I will set the task!"

(GIRINE-ISAG)

"If you set the task, I am not your 'big brother'! Why do you encroach on my status of 'big brother'?"

I have become excellent in the scribal art; I have fulfilled the function of 'big brother' to perfection!

You are slow of understanding and hard of hearing; you are but a novice in the school!

(10) You are deaf to the scribal art, and silent in Sumerian!

Your hand is crippled; it is unfit for the writing reed

And unfit for the clay; (your) hand cannot keep up with the mouth.

And you would be a scribe like me?"

(ENKI-MANSUM)

"[Why should I] not be a scribe like you?"

(15-18 lost or fragmentary)

(GIRINE-ISAG)

"You wrote a tablet, but you cannot grasp its

a [Talmud:
sin^a at chin-nam!]

meaning.

(20) You wrote a letter, but that is the limit for you!

Go to divide a plot, and you are not able to divide the plot;

Go to apportion a field, and you cannot even hold the tape and rod properly.

The field pegs you are unable to place; you cannot figure out its shape,

So that when wronged men have a quarrel you are not able to bring peace,

(25) But you allow brother to attack brother.^a

Among the scribes, you (alone) are unfit for the clay.

What are you fit for? Can anybody [tell] us?"

(ENKI-MANSUM)

"Why should I be good for nothing?

When I go to divide a plot, I can divide it;

(30) When I go to apportion a field, I can apportion the pieces,

So that when wronged men have a quarrel, I soothe their hearts and [...].

Brother will be at peace with brother, the(ir) hearts [...]."

(33-58 lost or fragmentary)

(GIRINE-ISAG) (?)

"As to subtracting and adding the daily quota of the weaving girls,

(60) And the finished order of the apprentice smith⁴ of his master — I know its procedure.

My father speaks Sumerian; I am the son of a scribe;

But you are the son of a vile one, a barbarian.

You cannot shape a tablet, nor knead an exercise tablet.

You cannot even write your own name; the clay is ¹ For the published material, see Römer 1988:235. He gives a partial edition of the text based on the published manuscripts, and cites earlier studies.

² More or less balanced speaking time; arguments which are answered point for point in places; intervention of a "judge" — although his decision seems to be left in abeyance.

³ Also possible "after our tablet." But since the back of exercise tablets is regularly used for other texts than the front this translation seems to make better sense.

⁴ The meaning is probably that he is able to calculate the relation in weight or value between the raw material the apprentice smith has received and the finished product.

not suited to your hand.	(145) And cursed and insulted him?"
(65) Stop hacking away! Is it a hoe you are wielding? ⁵	The teacher, who knew about everything Frowned sternly (saying) "Do as you wish!"
Clever fool, cover your ears, cover them!	(GIRINE-ISAG?)
Do you pretend to speak Sumerian as I do?"	"If I could really do as I wished,
(ENKI-MANSUM) (?)	Then a fellow acting like you, attacking his 'big brother,'
"Why do you keep repeating to me 'cover your ears, cover them?'"	(150) After I had given him 60 strokes with the cane,
(68-133 lost or fragmentary)	Put his feet in fetters,
"Why do you act like this?" ⁶	Confined him to the house so that he cannot go out for two months,
(135) Why do you push one another, and hurl insults at one another?	Your (his!) crime would certainly not yet have been expiated!" ⁷
You raise a clamor in the school!	As from this day, their eyes keep staring (in hatred).
I have been teaching Sumerian as required,"	(155) The one acts meanly towards the other.
(138-139 fragmentary)	Brother fights with brother, takes him on.
(140) "Even in those long gone days, when you were still beaten and ...,	Since between the quarreling Enki-Mansum and Girine-Isag, both of them,
No shouting reached me (like this)!	The teacher will give the verdict,
Why, to him who is your 'big brother,'	Praise be to Nisaba!
Who knows more about the scribal art than you,
Why have you spoken to him so arrogantly,

⁵ This seems a clever allusion to the Dispute between the Hoe and the Plow (text 1.181 above), where one of the underlying ideas may have been that the work of the Hoe in the soft earth is to be compared (also in importance) to that of the stylus on clay!

⁶ Perhaps the teacher himself or one of his senior staff is speaking now. But it is also possible, and perhaps more plausible in view of lines 146-147, that this is the Big Brother upbraiding the pupil in front of the teacher.

⁷ The different manuscripts show some hesitation between the 2nd and the 3rd person in these lines.

THE DIALOGUE BETWEEN A SUPERVISOR AND A SCRIBE (1.185)

H. L. J. Vanstiphout

This piece is not unlike the preceding one in that it consists of an altercation between a senior and a junior member of the Eduba. Still, the relationship is subtly different: the senior one is not just a more mature student, but a regular supervisor (an UGULA). He submits the pupil, who is obviously aspiring to higher things at this moment, to a kind of examination which deals not only with the capabilities ensuing from the pupil's schooling, but also with his moral stance within the Eduba system. If one were to posit a background or location in reality, the examination could represent a test of Sumerian style and rhetoric. The final part consists of a eulogy of the pupil, who has apparently done well. There is no edition as yet; this translation is based upon the published material, with the proviso that unpublished material shows the existence of another and appreciably longer version.¹

(Supervisor)	a 1Kgs 14:15	plied myself to the work.
(1) "(Old) schoolboy, come here, come to me quickly!		The [word] of my master I did not forget; I did not ...
What my teacher taught me, I will teach you.		My big brother was delighted with my (work at the) assignment.
Like you, I was once a youth, who had a big brother.		My humility made him so happy that he spoke ...
[The teacher] selected me from the other men, and assigned me a task.		Whatever I was ordered to do, I did; and everything was always in its place.
(5) Like the trembling reed I trembled, ^a but I ap-		(10) From his counsels only a fool would deviate.
		He guided my hand properly on the clay, and kept

¹ The published texts are A: HS 1546+1582 = TMH NF III 38 + IV 77; B: Ni 4243 + Ni 4092 = SLTNi 114 + ISET, 84; C: Ni 2507 = SRT 28; D: HS 1441 = TMH NF III 37; E: CBS 13106 = HAV 19; F: CBS 14070 = SEM 59; G: Ni 2506 = SRT 27; H: Ni 4133 = ISET 1, 135; I: Ni 9679 = ISET 2, 84; a: 3N-T 917, 388 = SLFN 47; b: 3N-T 917, 399 = SLFN 47; c: 3N-T 906, 231 = SLFN 47; d: 3N-T 927, 517 = SLFN 47.

me on the straight line.

He opened my mouth to all the words; he showed me the (wisest) counsels.

He filled my eyes with the rules of him who correctly fulfills the assignment.

Zeal is the lot of the assignee; time-wasting is a shame.

(15) He who tarries (on his way) to the place of work neglects his duty.

One should not not exalt one's knowledge, but should control one's speech.

When one exalts one's knowledge in splendor, people raise their eyes in astonishment.^b

Do not idle away the day! Do not rest in the evening! Go to work this moment!

[Neither graduate nor] freshman may give himself over to levity!

(20) ... your words must be serious.

Again, do not put your trust in your own unopened eyes

Thus you would greatly scorn obedience, which is the honor of humanity.

[A modest man] has a peaceful heart; his sins are absolved.

A poor man's gift is honorable to all minds.

(25) Even he who has nothing still kneels and holds the sacrificial kid to his breast

Bowing to the powers that be, and containing myself — that is what gratifies me!

These things my teacher taught me, I recited them to you; do not scorn them!

Pay attention; take these thing to heart; this will be to your profit."

The learned scribe respectfully answered his master:

(Scribe)

(30) "Now you have recited, incantation-like, I shall give you the response thereto.²

And to your bullish "sweet chant" its rebuttal.

You shall not turn me into a know-nothing; I shall answer but once.

Once a puppy, my eyes are wide open now, I act with humanity.

So why is it that you keep setting up rules for me, as if I were a shirker?

(35) Those who hear your words will revile me!

Whatever you showed me from the scribal art has been given back to you!

You appointed me over your household; you cannot accuse me of a single instance of neglect.³

I always assigned the tasks of the slave girls, the slaves and other personnel of your household.

I soothed their hearts with rations of food, clothing and oil.

^b Prov 15:12

(40) I assigned the order of their tasks. It is said "Do not pursue the servant in the house of the master!"

But every morning I did — I followed them like sheep.

You ordered the preparations for the offerings; and on the same day I performed them for you.

I prepared the sheep and the banquets expertly, so that your god was overjoyed.

The day when the ship of your god arrived it was greeted with great respect.

(45) You ordered me to the edge of the field; the work force was already toiling there.

In the contest of labor there was no rest, night or day.

The journeymen, sons of the plowmen, were strongest.

I brought back quality to your field; but the people admire [you!]

However great the assignment for the oxen, I always brought in more; their burden [...]

(50) Since my youth you have watched me, and inspected my ways.

I am polished like fine metal; a better product [there is not?]

I do not use big words, as is your mistake; I wait upon you.

Belittling oneself is what causes people to be ignored; therefore I want to make (my true worth?) apparent for you: learn this!"⁴

(Supervisor)

"Earlier, you were but a child. Now, hold up your head!

(55) Your hands were turned to the grown-ups; now fulfill (your own) task!

Accept this prayer of blessing; [a good?] fate [I will proclaim?]

Your counsels have penetrated my body as if I had taken milk and oil.

[Your] unceasing service [...]

May the good results thereof be regular; the bad results [...]

(60) May the teachers, these wise men, encourage you (further).

In this house, that foremost place, may [...]

Your name may be elected with honor; its power and excellence [...]

The cattlemen may [fight for?] for your pleasurable songs;

I myself want to fight for your pleasurable song; I want to [...]

(65) The teacher with joyous heart will bless you.

² See Vanstiphout 1996:1-2 for this and the next two lines.

³ See Vanstiphout 1996:2.

⁴ See Vanstiphout 1996:2.

You are a young man who listened to my words;
my heart is glad.
The worthiness of Nisaba which the teacher has placed in your hands (Makes you) into the good hand of Nisaba; [lift up?] your head to heaven!

Let this become (your) fate with a joyous heart; let downheartedness [lift?].
(70) The Eduba, the place of all wisdom there is [...]⁵

⁵ There follow half a dozen fragmentary lines.

THE DIALOGUE BETWEEN AN EXAMINER AND A STUDENT (1.186)

H. L. J. Vanstiphout

In this composition we again have a dialogue, but now it takes the form of a viva voce examination. One might say that it looks like a final examination, wherein the student may be said to try for graduation. Apparently it takes place before an external examiner: the student keeps referring to his teacher. In a second part, not translated here, the piece takes on the format of a flyting — which in various guises can also be found in other, related compositions. There is a very good edition of the first part of the text.¹

(Examiner and Student)

(1) "Young man, [are you a student?" — "Yes, I am a student."]

(Examiner)

"If you are a student
Do you know Sumerian?"

(Student)

"Yes, I can speak Sumerian."

(Examiner)

(5) "You are so young; how is it you can speak so well?"

(Student)

"I have listened constantly to the words of my teacher;
So I can answer you."

(Examiner)

"All right, you may be able to answer me, but what do you write?"

(Student)

"If you would just examine what I write!

(10) [The time] I still have to spend in school is less than three months.

The [texts] in Sumerian and Akkadian, from A-A ME-ME²

[To ...] I can read and write.

All lines from ⁴INANA-TEŠ₂³

Till the 'beings of the plain' at the end/beginning of LU₂-šū I wrote.⁴

(15) I can show you my signs,

Their writing and their interpretation; and this is how I pronounce them."

(Examiner)

"Right, follow me!

I will not give you things that are too complicated."

(Student)

"Even if I am assigned LU₂=šū on an exercise tablet
(20) I can give the 600 LU₂ entries in their correct sequence.⁵

The schedule of my schooling was like this:

My holidays were three every month;

Various feasts averaged three per month;

With all that, there were 24 days per month

(25) That I spent in school. But this time never seemed long.

In a single day the teacher would give me the same pensum four times.

In the final reckoning, what I know of the scribal art will not be taken away!

So now I am master of the meaning of tablets, of mathematics, of budgeting,

Of the whole scribal art, of the disposition of lines, of evading omissions, of

(30) My teacher approved (my) beautiful speech.

The companionship (in the school) was a joyful thing.

I know my scribal art perfectly;

Nothing flusters me.

My teacher had to show me a sign only once,

(35) And I could add several from memory.

¹ Civil 1985.

² A beginner's sign list.

³ A lexical list.

⁴ A lexical list. See Civil 1985:74 for this line.

⁵ There are no 600 entries in the lexical series LU-šū(ša)!

Having been in school for the required period,
I am now an expert in Sumerian, in the scribal art,
in interpretation, and in budgeting.
I can even speak Sumerian."

(Examiner)

"That may be so, but the sense of the Sumerian is hidden from you!"

(Student)

(40) "I desire to start writing tablets (professionally);

Tablets of one measure of grain till those of 600
measures;

Tablets of one shekel till those of twenty minas;
Also any marriage contracts they may bring;
And partnership contracts — I can specify verified weights up to a talent,

(45) And also deeds for the sale of houses, gardens, slaves,

Financial guarantees, field hire contracts, ...

Palm growing contracts, ...

Adoption contracts — all those I can draw up."

(49-55 fragmentary)

(Examiner? Student?)

"We are of the same birth, we are⁶

He and I have [compared] our hand tablets

Both have drawn up budgets ...

And regarding the budget ...

(60) The budget ...

He who cannot understand the accounts like scribes

....

About the tablets' meaning, the scribal art, the signs with difficult readings,

Let them have a fight.

If he wins, he shall take whatever is mine;

(65) But if I win, what shall I get?"

(66-69 fragmentary)

(70) "We will shout insults at one another!

One will exchange insults with the other!"

⁶ It is certainly possible that the real or imaginary situation is that the pupil of our text is applying for a job at an administrative center, and that in the lines lost just before the examiner has told him that there is another candidate — whence the sudden change of tack in the composition which ends in a string of insults.

REFERENCES

Civil 1985; Gadd 1956; Römer 1977; 1988; Sjöberg 1975; Van Dijk 1953; Vanstiphout 1979; 1996; Waetzoldt 1986; 1988; 1989.

This page intentionally left blank

SUMERIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY

- ALSTER, B.
 1972a "A Sumerian Incantation against Gall." Or 41:349-358.
 1972b Dumuzi's Dream. Copenhagen: Akademisk Forlag.
 1973 "An Aspect of 'Enmerkar and the Lord of Aratta.'" RA 67:101-110.
 1974a "On the Interpretation of the Sumerian Myth 'Inanna and Enki.'" ZA 64:20-34.
 1974b The Instructions of Šuruppak. Mesopotamia. Copenhagen Studies in Assyriology 2. Copenhagen: Akademisk Forlag.
 1975 "Paradoxical Proverbs and Satire in Sumerian Literature." JCS 27:201-230.
 1976 "On the Earliest Sumerian Literary Tradition." JCS 28:109-126.
 1985 "Sumerian Love Songs." RA 79:127-159.
 1987 "Additional Fragments of the Instructions of Šuruppak." AO 5:199-206.
 1990 "Additional Lines Identified in the Early Dynastic Version." ZA 80:15-19.
 1991 "The Instructions of Ur-Ninurta and Related Compositions." Or 60:141-157.
 1992a "Early Dynastic Proverbs and Other Contributions to the Study of Literary Texts from Abū Šalābikh." AFO 38:1-51.
 1992b "Corrections to The Instructions of Urninnurta and Related Compositions." NABU 3:63, No. 83.
 1993a "Proverbs From Ancient Mesopotamia: Their History and Social Implications." In Proverbium. Yearbook of International Proverb Scholarship. University of Vermont, 10:1-19.
 1993b "Marriage and Love in the Sumerian Love Songs." Pp. 15-27 in Studies Hallo.
 1997 Proverbs of Ancient Sumer: The World's Earliest Proverb Collections. Bethesda, MD: CDL Press.
- ALSTER, B., and H. L. J. VANSTIPHOUT.
 1987 "Lahar and Ashnan. Presentation and Analysis of a Sumerian Disputation." ActSum 9:1-43.
- ARNAUD, D.
 1991 Textes syriens de l'âge du bronze récent. AOSup 1.
- ATTINGER, P.
 1993 Éléments de linguistique sumérienne. OBO Sonderband. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht.
- BARNSTONE, A., and W. BARNSTONE, editors.
 1980 A Book of Women Poets from Antiquity to Now. New York: Schocken.
- BENITO, C. A.
 1969 "Enki and Ninmah" and "Enki and the World Order". Ph.D. Dissertation. University of Pennsylvania. Philadelphia.
- BORGER, R.
 1991 "Ein Brief Sin-idinnams von Larsa an den Sonnengott" Nachrichten der Akademie der Wissenschaften in Göttingen I. Phil.-hist. Kl. 1991/2:39-81 + 2 pls.
- BOTTÉRO, J.
 1991 "La 'tenson' et la réflexion sur les choses en Mésopotamie." Pp. 7-22 in Dispute Poems and Dialogues in the Ancient and Mediaeval Near East. Ed. by G. Reinink and H. Vanstiphout. OLA 42. Leuven: Peeters.
- BOTTÉRO, J. and S. N. KRAMER.
 1989 Lorsque les dieux faisaient l'homme: Mythologie mésopotamienne. Bibliothèque des histoires. Paris: Gallimard/NRF.
- CASTELLINO, G. R.
 1972 Two Šulgi Hymns (BC). Studi Semitici 42.
- CHARPIN, D.
 1986 Le Clergé d'Ur au siècle d'Hammurapi. Geneva and Paris: Droz.
- CIVIL, M.
 1969 "Review of CT 44." JNES 28:70-72.
 1976 "The Song of the Plowing Oxen." Pp. 83-95 in Studies Kramer.
 1983 "Enlil and Ninlil: the Marriage of Sud." JAOS 103:43-66; republ. in *Studies Kramer*² (1984) 43-66.
 1984 "Notes on the 'Instructions of Šuruppak.'" JNES 43:281-298.
 1985 "Sur les 'livres d'écolier' à l'époque paléo-babylonienne." Pp. 67-78 in Miscellanea Babylonica. Ed. by J.-M. Durand. Paris: Éditions Recherche sur les Civilisations.
 1987 "Sumerian Riddles: a Corpus." AO 5:17-37.
 1990a "From Vienna to Manchester." NABU 14-15.
 1990b "Ninmešarra 90 and Qinu 'Jealousy, Anger.'" NABU 1990:44f.
 1994 The Farmer's Instructions. A Sumerian Agricultural Manual. AOSup 5. Sabadell: Editorial Ausa.
 1996 "Sin-iddinam in Emar and SU.A = Šimaški." NABU 1996:3-8.
- CLIFFORD, R. J.
 1994 Creation Accounts in the Ancient Near East and in the Bible. CBQMS 26. Washington DC: Catholic Biblical Association of America.
- COHEN, M. E.
 1976 "Literary Texts from the Andrews University Archaeological Museum." RA 70:129-144.
 1981 Sumerian Hymnology, the Eršemma. Cincinnati: Hebrew Union College.
 1988 The Canonical Lamentations of Ancient Mesopotamia. 2 vols. Potomac, MD: CDL.
- COOPER, J. C.
 1981 "Gilgamesh and Akka: A Review Article." JCS 33:224-239.
 1989 "Enki's Member: Eros and Irrigation in Sumerian Literature." Pp. 87-89 in Studies Sjöberg.
- VAN DIJK, J.
 1953 La sagesse suméro-accadienne. Leiden: Brill.
 1957 "La découverte de la culture littéraire sumérienne" Orientalia et Biblica Lovaniensia 1:5-28.
 1964 "Le motif cosmique dans la pensée sumérienne." ActOr 28:1-59.
 1980 Texte aus dem Reġ-Heiligtum in Uruk-Warka. BAm Beiheft 2. Berlin: Gebr. Mann.
 1989 "Ein spätbabylonischer Katalog einer Sammlung sumerische Briefe." Or 58:411-452.

- EDZARD, D. O.
1959 "Enmebaragesi von Kish." ZA 53:9-26.
- EICHLER, B. L.
1983 "Of slings and shields, throw-sticks and javelins." JAOS 103:95-102; republ. in *Studies Kramer*² (1984) 95-102.
- FALKENSTEIN, A.
1931 Die Haupttypen der sumerischen Beschwörung literarisch untersucht. LSS n.F. 1.
1963 "Sumerische religiöse Texte." ZA 55:11-67.
1966 "Zu Gilgamesh und Agga." Afo 21:47-50.
- FALKENSTEIN, A., and W. VON SODEN.
1953 Sumerische und Akkadische Hymnen und Gebete. Zürich and Stuttgart: Artemis.
- FALKOWITZ, R. S.
1980 The Sumerian Rhetoric Collections. Ph.D. Dissertation. University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia.
- FARBER, G.
1973 (published under double name Farber-Flügge) Der Mythos "Inanna und Enki" unter besonderer Berücksichtigung der Liste der me. Studia Pohl 10. Rome: Biblical Institute Press.
1990 "me (garza, paršu)." RLA 7:610-613.
1995 "'Inanna and Enki' in Geneva: a Sumerian Myth Revisited." JNES 54:287-292. forthcoming "'Das Lied von der Hacke,' ein literarischer Spaß?" In "Berliner Beiträge zum Vorderen Orient": paper read at the Rencontre Assyriologique Internationale, 1994, Berlin.
- FOSTER, B. R.
1983 "Self-Reference of an Akkadian Poet." JAOS 103:123-130; republ. in *Studies Kramer*² (1984) 123-130.
1993 BM.
1995 FDD.
- GADD, C. J.
1956 Teachers and Students in the Oldest Schools. London: School of Oriental and African Studies.
- GELLER, M. J.
1985 Forerunners to Udug-hul: Sumerian Exorcistic Incantations. FAS 12.
1990 "Taboo in Mesopotamia." JCS 42:105-117.
- DE GENOUILLAC, H.
1930 Textes religieux sumériens du Louvre 2. TCL 16. Paris: Geuthner.
- GEORGE, A. R.
1993 House Most High: the Temples of Ancient Mesopotamia. Winona Lake, IN: Eisenbrauns.
- GOMI T., and M. SIGRIST.
1991 The Comprehensive Catalogue of Published Ur III Tablets.
- GORDON, E. I.
1959 Sumerian Proverbs. Glimpses of Everyday Life in Ancient Mesopotamia. With a Chapter by Th. Jacobsen. University Monographs. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania.
- GRAGG, G.
1973a "The Fable of the Heron and the Turtle." Afo 24:51-72.
1973b Sumerian Dimensional Infixes. AOATS 5. Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag.
- GREEN, M. W.
1975 Eridu in Sumerian Literature. Ph.D. Dissertation University of Chicago, 1975.
1976 "Review of Farber 1973." JAOS 96:283-286.
1978 "The Eridu Lament." JCS 30:127-167.
1984 "The Uruk Lament." JAOS 104:253-279.
- GREENFIELD, J. R.
1985 "The Seven Pillars of Wisdom (Prov 9:1) — a Mistranslation." JQR 76:13-20.
- GURNEY, O. R., and S. N. KRAMER.
1982 Sumerian Literary Texts in the Ashmolean Museum. OECT 5.
- GWALTNEY, W. C., JR.
1983 "The Biblical Book of Lamentations in the Context of Near Eastern Lament Literature." Pp. 191-211 in SIC 2.
- HALLO, W. W.
1963 "Royal Hymns and Mesopotamian Unity." JCS 17:112-118.
1968 "Individual Prayer in Sumerian: the Continuity of a Tradition." JAOS 88:71-89; repr. in Studies Speiser.
1969 "The Lame and the Halt." EF 9:66-70 (Albright Volume).
1970a "Antediluvian Cities." JCS 23:57-67.
1970b "The Cultic Setting of Sumerian Poetry." RAI 17:116-134.
1971 "Gutium." RLA 3/9:708-720.
1973 "Choice in Sumerian." JANES 5:165-172.
1976 "The Royal Correspondence of Larsa: I. A Sumerian Prototype for the Prayer of Hezekiah?" Pp. 209-224 in Studies Kramer.
1978 "Simurum and the Hurrian Frontier." RHA 36:71-83.
1982 "The Royal Correspondence of Larsa: I. The Appeal to Uru." Pp. 95-109 in Studies Kraus.
1985 "Biblical Abominations and Sumerian Taboos." JQR 76:21-40.
1987 "The Birth of Kings." Pp. 45-52 in Studies Pope.
1989 "Nippur Originals." Pp. 237-247 in Studies Sjöberg.
1990 "Proverbs Quoted in Epic." Pp. 203-217 in Studies Moran.
1991 BP.
1992 "Trade and Traders in the Ancient Near East: Some New Perspectives." RAI 38:351-356.
1995 "Lamentations and Prayers in Sumer and Akkad." in CANE 3:1876-1881.
1996 Origins. Leiden: Brill.

- HALLO W. W., AND J. J. A. VAN DIJK.
1968 The Exaltation of Inanna. YNER 3. New Haven/London: Yale University Press. repr. 1982. New York: AMS Press.
- HALLO, W. W., AND W. K. SIMPSON.
1971 The Ancient Near East: A History. New York: Harcourt and Brace.
- HEIMPEL, W.
1971 "Review of Hallo and van Dijk 1968." JNES 30:232-236.
1981a "The Nanshe Hymn." JCS 33:65-139.
1981b "A Note on Gilgamesh and Agga." JCS 33:242-243.
1986 "The Sun at Night and the Doors of Heaven in Babylonian Texts." JCS 38:127-151.
- HUNGER, H.
1968 Babylonische und assyrische Kolophone. AOAT 2.
- JACOBSEN, T.
1939 The Sumerian King List. AS 11. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
1946 "Sumerian Mythology, a Review Article." JNES 5:128-152.
1970a "Primitive Democracy in Ancient Mesopotamia." Republished in W. L. Moran, ed., Jacobsen, Th. Toward the Image of Tammuz and other Essays on Mesopotamian History and Culture. Cambridge, Mass.: 157-170 (first published in 1943).
1970b "Early political Development in Mesopotamia." Reprint, Ibid., 132-157 (first published in 1957).
1975 "Religious Drama in Ancient Mesopotamia." Pp. 65-97 in Unity and Diversity.
1976 The Treasures of Darkness. A History of Mesopotamian Religion. New Haven and London: Yale University Press.
1984 "The Harab Myth." SANE 2:99-120.
1987a The Harps that Once Sumerian Poetry in Translation. New Haven and London: Yale University Press.
1987b "Two bal-bal-e Dialogues." Pp. 57-63 in Studies Pope.
1988 "God or Worshipper." Pp. 125-130 in Studies Kantor.
1992 "The Spell of Nudimmud." Pp. 403-416 in Studies Talmon.
- KATZ, D.
1987 "Gilgamesh and Akka: Was Uruk Ruled by Two Assemblies?" RA 81:105-114.
1993 Gilgamesh and Akka. Groningen: STYX.
- KELLER, S.
1991 "Written Communications Between the Human and Divine Spheres in Mesopotamia and Israel." Pp. 299-309 in SIC 4.
- KILMER, A. D.
1976 "Speculations on Umul, the First Baby." Pp. 265-270 in Studies Kramer.
1983 Women Poets of the World. Ed. by J. Bankier and D. Lashgari. New York: Macmillan.
- KLEIN, J.
1976 "Šulgi and Gilgamesh: Two Brother Peers (Šulgi hymn O)." Pp. 271-292 in Studies Kramer.
1981a Three Šulgi Hymns: Sumerian Royal Hymns Glorifying King Šulgi of Ur. Ramat-Gan: Bar-Ilan University Press.
1981b The Royal Hymns of Šulgi King of Ur: Man's Quest for Immortal Fame. Transactions of the American Philosophical Society 71/7. Philadelphia.
1982 "Personal God and Individual Prayer in Sumerian Religion." AfO 19:295-306.
1983 "The Capture of Akka by Gilgamesh (GA 81 and 99)." JAOS 103:201-203.
1987 "The Birth of a Crownprince in the Temple: A Neo-Sumerian Literary Topos." Pp. 97-106 in La femme dans le Proche-Orient Antique. RAI 33. Ed. by J.-M. Durand. Paris: Éditions Recherche sur les Civilisations.
1991 "The Coronation and Consecration of Šulgi in the Ekur (Šulgi G)." Pp. 292-313 in Studies Tadmor.
- KLEIN, J., and Y. SEFATI.
1988 "The Concept of 'Abomination' in Mesopotamian Literature and the Bible." Beer-Sheva 3:131-148 (in Hebrew with English Summary pp. 12*-13*).
- KRAMER, S. N.
1940 Lamentation Over the Destruction of Ur. AS 12. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
1944 Sumerian Mythology. Philadelphia: The American Philosophical Society.
1949 "Gilgamesh and Akka." AJA 53:1-18.
1952 "Five New Sumerian Literary Texts." Belleten 16:345-365.
1955 "Man and his God: a Sumerian Variation on the 'Job' Motif." Pp. 170-182 + pls. i-iv in Studies Rowley.
1963 "Cuneiform Studies and the History of Literature: The Sumerian Sacred Marriage Texts." PAPS 107:485-527.
1964 "Sumerische Literaire Teksten uit Ur." Phoenix 10/1:99-108.
1969a "The Death of Ur-Nammu and his Descent to the Netherworld." JCS 21:104-122.
1969b "Sumerian Similes." JAOS 89:1-10.
1969c The Sacred Marriage Rite: Aspect of Faith, Myth, and Ritual in Ancient Sumer. Bloomington: Indiana University Press.
1969d "Hymnal Prayer of Enheduanna: the Adoration of Inanna in Ur." ANET, 579-582.
1975 Sumerian Culture and Society. Menlo Park (14-16)
1981 History Begins at Sumer. 3rd Revised Edition. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press.
- KRAMER, S. N., and J. MAIER.
1989 Myths of Enki, the Crafty God. New York and Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- KRAUS, H.-J.
1968 *Klagelieder (Threni)*³. BKAT. Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag.
- KRECHER, J.
1980-83 "Klagelied." RIA 6:1-8.
- KRISPIN, Th. J. H.
1993 "Dierenfabels in het oude Mesopotamië." Pp. 131-148 in Mijn naam is haas. Dierenverhalen in verschillende culturen. Ed. by E. L. Idema, et al. Baarn: Ambo.
- KUTSCHER, R.
1982 "Review of OECT 5." BiOr 39:583-590.

- LAMBERT, W. G.
 1960 BWL.
 1974 "Dingir.ša.dib.ba Incantations." JNES 33:267-322.
 1980 "Akka's Threat." Or 49:339-340.
- LAMBERT, W. G., and A. R. MILLARD.
 1969 Atra-Hasis: The Babylonian Story of the Flood. Oxford: Clarendon Press.
- LEICHTY, Erle
 1964 "The Colophon." Pp. 147-154 in Studies Oppenheim.
- LEVINE, B. A.
 1968 "Mulġu/Melûg: the Origins of a Talmudic Legal Institution." JAOS 88:271-285.
- LIPINSKI, E.
 1988 "Ea, Kothar et El." UF 20:137-143.
- LIVINGSTONE, A.
 1980 "A Fragment of a Work Song." ZA 70:55-57.
 1989 Court Poetry and Literary Miscellanea. SAA 3.
- LONGMAN, T. III
 1991 Fictional Akkadian Autobiography. Winona Lake, IN: Eisenbrauns.
- MALAMAT, A.
 1963 "Kingship and Council in Israel and Sumer: a Parallel." JNES 22:247-252.
- MATTINGLY, G. L.
 1990 "The Pious Sufferer: Mesopotamia's Traditional Theodicy and Job's Counselors." Pp. 305-348 in SIC 3.
- MCDANIEL, T. F.
 1968 "The Alleged Sumerian Influence upon Lamentations." VT 18:198-209.
- MICHALOWSKI, P.
 1982 "Review of Römer 1980." BSOAS 45:557-578.
 1985 "On Some Early Sumerian Magical Texts." Or 54:216-225.
 1988 "Sin-iddinam and Iškur." Pp. 265-527 in Studies Sachs.
 1989 The Lamentation Over the Destruction of Sumer and Ur. Mesopotamian Civilizations 2. Winona Lake, IN: Eisenbrauns.
 1993 "The Torch and the Censer." Pp. 152-162 in Studies Hallo.
- PETTINATO, G.
 1971 Das altorientalische Menschenbild und die sumerischen und akkadischen Schöpfungsmythen. Heidelberg: Winter.
- REINER, E.
 1968 "Thirty Pieces of Silver." JAOS 88:186-190; repr. in Studies Speiser.
 1980 "Thirty Pieces of Silver." University of Chicago Record 14:172-184.
 1985 Your Thwarts in Pieces Your Mooring Rope Cut: Poetry from Babylonia and Assyria. Michigan Studies in the Humanities 5. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan.
- RÖMER, W. H. Ph.
 1965 Sumerische 'Königshymnen' der Isin-Zeit. Leiden: E. J. Brill.
 1972 "Review of Hallo and van Dijk 1968." UF 4:173-206.
 1977 Iets over School en Schoolonderricht in het Oude Mesopotamië. Assen.
 1980 Das Sumerische Kurzepos "Gilgamesh und Akka". AOAT 290/1. Neukirchen-Vluyn.
 1988 "Aus einem Schulstreitsgespräch in sumerischer Sprache." UF 20:233-245.
- SAUREN, H.
 1970 "Review of Hallo and van Dijk 1968." BiOr 27:38-41.
 1993 "Nammu and Enki." Pp. 198-208 in Studies Hallo.
- SCHEIL, V.
 1927 "Formule magique avec allusion historique." RA 24:42.
- SEFATI, Y.
 1985 Love Songs in Sumerian Literature: Critical Edition of the Dumuzi-Inanna Songs. Ph.D. Dissertation. Bar-Ilan University. (in Hebrew).
 1990 "An Oath of Chastity in a Sumerian Love Song (SRT 31)?" Pp. 45-63 in Bar-Ilan Studies in Assyriology Dedicated to Pinhas Artzi. Ed. by J. Klein and A. Skaist. Ramat-Gan: Bar-Ilan University Press.
- SELZ, G. J.
 1989 "Nissaba(k), 'die Herrin der Getreidezuteilungen'." Pp. 491-497 in Studies Sjöberg.
- SJÖBERG, Å.
 1960 Der Mondgott Nanna-Suen in der sumerischen Überlieferung, I. Teil: Texte. Stockholm: Almqvist & Wiksell.
 1975 "The Old Babylonian Edubba." Pp. 159-179 in Studies Jacobsen.
 1984 "Eve and the Chameleon." Pp. 217-225 in Studies Ahlström.
- SJÖBERG, Å. W. AND E. BERGMANN, S. J.
 1969 The Collection of the Sumerian Temple Hymns. TCS 3. Locust Valley, NY: J. J. Augustin.
- SUTER, Claudia E.
 1996a "Blessings of Ziggurat?" American Oriental Society meeting 206 (unpubl.)
 1996b "Gudea's Segnung des Eninnu." RAI 43 (unpubl.).
- VANSTIPHOUT, H.
 1979 "How Did They Learn Sumerian?" JCS 31:118-126.
 1984 "On the Sumerian Disputation between the Hoe and the Plough." AO 2:239-251.
 1986 "Towards a Reading of 'Gilgamesh and Agga,' Part II: Construction." OLP 17:33-50.
 1987a "Towards a Reading of 'Gilgamesh and Agga.'" AO 5:129-141.
 1987b "Joins proposed in Sumerian Literary Compositions." NABU 1987/3 87:46-47.
 1990a "The Mesopotamian Debate Poems. A General Presentation (Part I)." ASJ 12:271-318.

- 1990b "A double entendre Concerning Utu." NABU 1990/2 57:40-44.
- 1991a "Lore, Learning and Levity in the Sumerian Disputations: a Matter of Form, or Substance?" Pp. 23-46 in Dispute Poems and Dialogues in the Ancient and Mediaeval Near East. Ed. by G. Reinink and H. Vanstiphout. OLA 42. Leuven: Peeters.
- 1991b "A Further Note on Ebih." NABU 1991/4 103:71-72.
- 1991c "A Note on the Format of 'Bird and Fish'." NABU 1991/4 104:72-73.
- 1992a "The Mesopotamian Debate Poems. A General Presentation. Part II. The Subject." ASJ 14:339-367.
- 1992b "The Banquet Scene in the Sumerian Debate Poems." Res Orientales 4:37-63.
- 1996 "Remarks on 'Supervisor and Scribe' (or Dialogue 4, or Eduba C)." NABU 1996/1 1:1-2.
- WAETZOLDT, H.
- 1975 "Review of Farber 1973." BiOr 32:382-384.
- 1986 "Keilschrift und Schulen in Mesopotamien und Ebla." Pp. 36-49 in Erziehungs- und Unterrichtsmethoden im historischen Wandel. Ed. by L. Kriss-Rettenbeck and M. Liedtke. Bad Heilbrunn: Klinkhardt.
- 1988 "Die Entwicklung der Naturwissenschaften und des naturwissenschaftlichen Unterrichts in Mesopotamien." Pp. 31-49 in Naturwissenschaftlicher Unterricht und Wissenskumulation. Ed. by J. G. Prinz von Hohenzollern and M. Liedtke. Bad Heilbrunn: Klinkhardt.
- 1989 "Der Schreiber als Lehrer in Mesopotamien." Pp. 33-50 in Schreiber, Magister, Lehrer. Ed. by J. G. Prinz von Hohenzollern and M. Liedtke. Bad Heilbrunn: Klinkhardt.
- WEINFELD, M.
- 1988 "Job and its Mesopotamian Parallels." Pp. 217-226 in Studies Fensham.
- WESTENHOLZ, J. G.
- 1989 "Enheduanna, en-priestess, hen of Nanna, spouse of Nanna." Pp. 539-556 in Studies Sjöberg.
- WILCKE, C.
- 1969 Das Lugalbandaepos. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz.
- 1970 "Die akkadischen Glossen in TMF NF 3 no. 25 und eine neue Interpretation des Textes." AfO 23:84-87.
- 1972 "Hacke - B. Philologisch." RLA 4:33-38.
- 1975 "Formale Gesichtspunkte in der sumerischen Literatur." Pp. 205-316 in Studies Jacobsen.
- 1976a "Nin-me-sar-ra - Probleme der Interpretation." WZKM 68:79-92 + 1 pl.
- 1976b "Formale Gesichtspunkte in der sumerischen Literatur." Pp. 205-316 in Studies Jacobsen.
- 1978 "Philologische Bemerkungen zum Rat des Šuruppak." ZA 68:196-232.
- WOLKSTEIN, D., and S. N. KRAMER.
- 1983 Inanna, Queen of Heaven and Earth. New York: Harper and Row.

THE CONTEXT OF SCRIPTURE

VOLUME II

Monumental Inscriptions from the Biblical World

THE CONTEXT OF SCRIPTURE

Canonical Compositions, Monumental Inscriptions, and Archival Documents from the Biblical World

General Editor	William W. Hallo
Associate Editor	K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

The Context of Scripture

VOLUME II

Monumental Inscriptions from the Biblical World

Editor

WILLIAM W. HALLO

Associate Editor

K. LAWSON YOUNGER, JR.

Consultants

HARRY A. HOFFNER, JR.

ROBERT K. RITNER

BRILL
LEIDEN · BOSTON
2003

This book is printed on acid-free paper.

Cover: The Israel Stela of Merneptah (Text 2.6). Courtesy of the Cairo Museum.
For a photograph of the entire stela, with highlighting of "Israel" see H. Shanks, ed. Ancient Israel (2nd ed.; Washington, Biblical Archaeology Society, 1999), p. 78.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

The context of Scripture / editor, William W. Hallo ; associate editor, K. Lawson Younger.

p. cm.

Includes bibliographical references and index.

Contents: v. I. Canonical compositions from the biblical world.

ISBN 9004135685 (pbk.: v. 2)

1. Bible. O.T.—Extra-canonical parallels. 2. Middle Eastern literature—Relation to the Old Testament. 3. Bible. O.T.—History of contemporary events—Sources. 4. Middle Eastern literature – Translations into English. I. Hallo, William W. II. Younger, K.
Lawson.

BSn80.C+ 2003

2003052060

ISBN 90 04 135685 (Vol. II)

ISBN 90 04 131051 (Set)

© Copyright 2003 by Koninklijke Brill NV, Leiden, The Netherlands

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, translated, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording or otherwise, without prior written permission from the publisher.

*Authorization to photocopy items for internal or personal use is granted by Brill provided that the appropriate fees are paid directly to The Copyright Clearance Center, 222 Rosewood Drive, Suite 910
Danvers MA 01923, U.S.A.
Fees are subject to change.*

PRINTED IN THE NETHERLANDS

CONTENTS

Preface	xiii
Acknowledgements	xiv
Abbreviations and Symbols	xv
List of Contributors	xix
Introduction: The Bible and the Monuments	xxi

EGYPTIAN MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS

ROYAL INSCRIPTIONS	3
1. EIGHTEENTH DYNASTY INSCRIPTIONS	5
The Tomb Biography of Ahmose of Nekheb (2.1)	5
Thutmose III (2.2)	7
The Annals of Thutmose III (2.2A)	7
The Gebel Barkal Stela of Thutmose III (2.2B)	14
The Armant Stela of Thutmose III (2.2C)	18
The Memphis and Karnak Stelae of Amenhotep II (2.3)	19
2. NINETEENTH DYNASTY INSCRIPTIONS	23
Sethos I (2.4)	23
Karnak, Campaign from Sile to Pa-Canaan, Year 1 (2.4A)	23
First Beth-Shan Stela, Year 1 (2.4B)	25
Karnak, Campaign to Yenoam and Lebanon (Year 1 or Later) (2.4C)	26
Second Beth-Shan Stela, Year Lost (2.4D)	27
Karnak, Campaign Against the Hittites (Undated) (2.4E)	28
Karnak, Campaign Against the Libyans (Undated) (2.4F)	30
Karnak, Campaign Against Qadesh and Amurru (Undated) (2.4G)	31
Ramesses II (2.5)	32
The Battle of Qadesh — the Poem, or Literary Record (2.5A)	32
The Battle of Qadesh — the "Bulletin" Text (2.5B)	38
The (Israel) Stela of Merneptah (2.6)	40
3. LATE INSCRIPTIONS	42
The Victory Stela of King Piye (Piankhy) (2.7)	42
MORTUARY INSCRIPTIONS	53
1. PYRAMID TEXTS	55
Pyramid Texts 213 and 219 (2.8)	55
2. COFFIN TEXTS	57
Coffin Text 261 (2.9)	57
Coffin Text 159 (2.10)	58
3. THE BOOK OF THE DEAD	59
Book of the Dead 109 (2.11)	59
Book of the Dead 125 (2.12)	59
4. HARPER SONGS	64
Contrasting Harper Songs from the Tomb of Neferhotep (2.13)	64
5. GRAVE INSCRIPTIONS	66
Hymn from the Tomb of Ay (2.14)	66
EGYPTIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY	69

HITTITE MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS

ROYAL INSCRIPTIONS	77
1. EDICTS AND PROCLAMATIONS	79
Bilingual Edict of Hattušili I (2.15)	79

2. ANNALS	82
The Ten Year Annals of Great King Muṣṣili II of Ḫatti (2.16)	82
“FUNCTIONAL” INSCRIPTIONS	91
1. TREATIES	93
The Treaties Between Ḫatti and Amurru (2.17)	93
Treaty Between Šuppiluliuma and Aziru (2.17A)	93
Treaty Between Muṣṣili and Duppi-Tešub (2.17B)	96
Treaty Between Tudḫaliya and Šaušgamuwa (2.17C)	98
The Treaty of Tudḫaliya IV with Kurunta of Tarḫuntašša (2.18)	100
2. LAWS	106
Hittite Laws (2.19)	106
HIEROGLYPHIC INSCRIPTIONS	121
1. “IDEAL PRICES” (2.20)	123
Karkamiš A2 (+3) (2.20A)	123
2. ROYAL INSCRIPTIONS	124
Azatiwata (2.21)	124
3. FUNERARY INSCRIPTIONS (2.22)	126
Maraş 4 (2.22A)	126
Kululu 4 (2.22B)	127
HITTITE BIBLIOGRAPHY	129
WEST SEMITIC MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS
BUILDING AND MEMORIAL INSCRIPTIONS	135
1. MOABITE INSCRIPTIONS	137
The Inscription of King Mesha (2.23)	137
2. AMMONITE INSCRIPTIONS	139
The Amman Citadel Inscription (2.24)	139
The Tell Sīrān Inscription (2.25)	139
The Amman Theatre Inscription (2.26)	140
3. DEIR ‘ALLA	140
The Deir ‘Alla Plaster Inscription (2.27)	140
4. HEBREW INSCRIPTIONS	145
The Siloam Tunnel Inscription (2.28)	145
5. PHOENICIAN INSCRIPTIONS	146
The Inscription of King Yaḥimilk (2.29)	146
The Kulamuwa Inscription (2.30)	147
The Azatiwada Inscription (2.31)	148
The Inscription of King Yehawmilk (2.32)	151
6. OLD ARAMAIC INSCRIPTIONS	152
The Melqart Stela (2.33)	152
Hadad-yith‘i (2.34)	153
The Inscription of Zakkur, King of Hamath (2.35)	155
The Hadad Inscription (2.36)	156
The Panamuwa Inscription (2.37)	158
The Bar-Rakib Inscription (2.38)	160
The Tell Dan Stele (2.39)	161
The Hazael Booty Inscriptions (2.40)	162
7. ARAMAIC DEDICATORY INSCRIPTIONS	163
The Aswan Dedicatory Inscription (2.41)	163
8. PHILISTINE INSCRIPTIONS	164
The Ekron Inscription of Akhayus (2.42)	164

9. NABATAEAN INSCRIPTIONS	164
A Nabataean Commemorative Inscription from ʿAvdat (2.43)	164
The Dedication of a Statue to the Divinised Nabataean King (2.44)	165
A Nabataean Inscription Containing Religious Laws from the Atargatis Temple at Petra (2.45)	166
A Nabataean Shrine Inscription from Egypt (2.46)	166
VOTIVE INSCRIPTIONS	169
1. HEBREW INSCRIPTIONS	171
Kuntillet ʿAjrud (2.47)	171
Kuntillet ʿAjrud: Inscribed Pithos 1 (2.47A)	171
Kuntillet ʿAjrud: Inscribed Pithos 2 (2.47B)	171
Kuntillet ʿAjrud: the Two-line Inscription (2.47C)	172
Kuntillet ʿAjrud: Plaster Wall Inscription (2.47D)	173
The Jerusalem Pomegranate (2.48)	173
Jerusalem Ostrakon (2.49)	174
The Temple of the Lord Ostrakon (2.50)	174
2. ARAMAIC INSCRIPTIONS	175
Tell el-Maskhuṭa Libation Bowls (2.51)	175
Silver Bowl (Brooklyn Museum 54.50.36) (2.51A)	175
Silver Bowl (Brooklyn Museum 57.121) (2.51B)	176
Silver Bowl (Brooklyn Museum 54.50.32) (2.51C)	176
MORTUARY INSCRIPTIONS	177
1. HEBREW INSCRIPTIONS	179
Khirbet el-Qom (2.52)	179
The Khirbet Beit Lei Cave Inscriptions (2.53)	179
The Royal Steward Inscription (2.54)	180
2. PHOENICIAN INSCRIPTIONS	181
The Sarcophagus Inscription of ʔAhirom, King of Byblos (2.55)	181
The Sarcophagus Inscription of Tabnit, King of Sidon (2.56)	181
The Sarcophagus Inscription of ʔEshmunʿazor, King of Sidon (2.57)	182
The Funerary Inscription from Pyrgi (2.58)	184
3. ARAMAIC INSCRIPTIONS	184
The Tomb Inscription of Siṯgabbar, Priest of Sahar (2.59)	184
Offering Table from the Memphis Serapeum (2.60)	186
Funerary Stela (Brussels E. 4716) (2.61)	187
Funerary Stela from Saqqarah (2.62)	188
Funerary Stela Saqqarah (2.63)	189
Funerary Stela (Carpentras) (2.64)	189
Funerary Stela (Vatican Museum 1 ^o Sala 22787) (2.65)	190
Tombstone Inscription (Greco-Roman Museum 18361) (2.66)	190
4. NABATAEAN INSCRIPTIONS	191
The Nabataean Tomb Inscription of Kamkam at Madāʔin Ṣāliḥ (2.67)	191
The Nabataean Tomb Inscription of Ḥalafu at Madāʔin Ṣāliḥ (2.68)	192
A Nabataean Funerary Inscription from Madeba (2.69)	193
SEAL AND STAMP INSCRIPTIONS	195
1. SEALS AND SEAL IMPRESSIONS	197
Hebrew (2.70)	197
Ammonite (2.71)	201
Moabite (2.72)	201
Edomite (2.73)	201
Phoenician (2.74)	202
Philistine (2.75)	202
Early Aramaic (2.76)	202
Royal Judaean Seal Impressions (2.77)	202
Persian Period (2.78)	203
The Seal of ʿAṣayāḥū (2.79)	204

2. STAMPS	205
Stamps (2.80)	205
WEIGHT INSCRIPTIONS	207
1. HEBREW WEIGHT INSCRIPTIONS (2.81)	209
"FUNCTIONAL" INSCRIPTIONS	211
1. TREATIES	213
The Inscriptions of Bar-Ga'yah and Mati'el from Sefire (2.82)	213
MISCELLANEOUS INSCRIPTIONS	219
The Ketef Hinnom Amulets (2.83)	221
The El Khadr Arrowheads (2.84)	221
The Gezer Calendar (2.85)	222
An Amulet from Arslan Tash (2.86)	222
The Tel Dan Bowl (2.87)	223
Inscribed Nimrud Ivories (2.88)	224
WEST SEMITIC BIBLIOGRAPHY	225
AKKADIAN MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS
BUILDING AND DISPLAY INSCRIPTIONS (Akkadian and Sumerian)	241
1. OLD AKKADIAN INSCRIPTIONS	243
Inscription of Sargon: Foundation of the Akkadian Empire (2.89)	243
Inscription of Narāmsin: Deification of the King (2.90)	244
Inscription of Narāmsin: Campaign Against Armānum and Ebla (2.91)	244
2. EARLY OLD BABYLONIAN INSCRIPTIONS	246
Isin Dynasty	246
Ishbi-erra (2.92)	246
Shu-ilishu (2.93)	246
Ishme-Dagan (2.94)	247
Lipit-Eshtar (2.95)	247
Ur-Ninurta (2.96)	248
Ur-dukuga (2.97)	248
Larsa Dynasty	248
Gungunum (2.98)	249
Nur-Adad (2.99A)	249
Nur-Adad (2.99B)	249
Sin-iddinam (2.100)	250
Warad-Sin (2.101A)	251
Warad-Sin (2.101B)	251
Rim-Sin (2.102A)	252
Rim-Sin (2.102B)	253
Rim-Sin (2.102C)	253
Rim-Sin (2.102D)	253
Eshnunna Dynasty	254
Ipiq-Adad II (2.103)	254
Uruk	254
Sin-kashid (2.104)	255
Anam (2.105)	255
Simurram (2.106)	255
3. LATE OLD BABYLONIAN INSCRIPTIONS	256
Babylon	256
Hammu-rapi (2.107A)	256
Hammu-rapi (2.107B)	257
Hammu-rapi (2.107C)	257
Hammu-rapi (2.107D)	257
Samsu-iluna (2.108)	258

Ammi-ditana (2.109)	258
Ekallatum — Shamshi-Addu (2.110)	259
Mari	260
Iahdun-lim (2.111)	260
Zimri-lim (2.112)	261
4. NEO-ASSYRIAN INSCRIPTIONS	261
Shalmaneser III (2.113)	261
Kurkh Monolith (2.113A)	261
Annals: Aššur Clay Tablets (2.113B)	264
Annals: Calah Bulls (2.113C)	266
Annals: Marble Slab (2.113D)	267
Kurbaʿil Statue (2.113E)	268
Black Obelisk (2.113F)	269
Aššur Basalt Statue (2.113G)	270
Black Stone Cylinder (2.113H)	271
The Die (Pāru) of Yaḥali (2.113I)	271
Adad-nirari III (2.114)	272
Antakya Stela (2.114A)	272
Pazarcik / Maraş Stela (2.114B)	273
Orthostat Slab of Unknown Provenance (2.114C)	273
Tell Sheik Hammad (2.114D)	274
Sabaʿa Stela (2.114E)	274
Tell al Rimah Stela (2.114F)	275
Calah Orthostat Slab (2.114G)	276
Stela of Samsuramat (Semiramis) (2.114H)	277
Officials' Inscriptions (2.115)	277
Šamši-ilu — Stone Lions Inscription (2.115A)	278
Ninurta-kudurri-ušur — Suhu Annals #2 (2.115B)	279
Ninurta-kudurri-ušur — Suhu Annals #18 (2.115C)	282
Ninurta-kudurri-ušur — Suhu Annals #17 (2.115D)	283
Shalmaneser IV — Pazaricik / Maraş Stela (2.116)	283
Tiglath-pileser III (2.117)	284
The Calah Annals (2.117A)	284
The Iran Stela (2.117B)	287
Summary Inscription 4 (2.117C)	287
Summary Inscription 7 (2.117D)	289
Summary Inscription 8 (2.117E)	290
Summary Inscription 9-10 (2.117F)	291
Summary Inscription 13 (2.117G)	292
Sargon II (2.118)	293
The Annals (2.118A)	293
The Borowski Stela (2.118B)	294
The Aššur "Charter" (2.118C)	295
Nimrud Prisms D & E (2.118D)	295
The Great "Summary" Inscription (2.118E)	296
The Small "Summary" Inscription (2.118F)	297
Pavement Inscription 4 (2.118G)	298
The Cylinder Inscription (2.118H)	298
The Nimrud Inscription (2.118I)	298
The Tang-i Var Inscription (2.118J)	299
Sennacherib (2.119)	300
Sennacherib's First Campaign: Against Merodach-baladan (2.119A)	300
Sennacherib's Siege of Jerusalem (2.119B)	302
Sennacherib — Lachish Relief Inscription (2.119C)	304
Sennacherib: the "Azekah" Inscription (2.119D)	304
Sennacherib: the Capture and Destruction of Babylon (2.119E)	305
Esarhaddon (2.120)	306

5. NEO-BABYLONIAN INSCRIPTIONS	306
Nabopolassar (2.121)	307
Nabopolassar's Restoration of Imgur-Enlil (2.121)	307
Nebuchadnezzar II (2.122)	308
Nebuchadnezzar II'S Restoration of the Ebabbar Temple (2.122A)	308
Nebuchadnezzar II'S Restoration of E-urimin-ankia (2.122B)	309
Nabonidus 2.123	310
The Sippar Cylinder of Nabonidus (2.123A)	310
Nabonidus' Rebuilding of E-lugal-galga-sisa (2.123B)	313
6. ACHAEMEND INSCRIPTIONS	314
Cyrus	314
Cyrus Cylinder (2.124)	314
VOTIVE SEAL INSCRIPTIONS	317
Votive Seal Inscriptions (2.125)	319
WEIGHT INSCRIPTIONS	321
Weight Inscriptions (2.126)	323
"FUNCTIONAL" INSCRIPTIONS	327
1. Treaties	329
Abbael's Gift of Alalakh (AT 1) (2.127)	329
The Agreement Between Ir-addu and Niqmepa (AT 2) (2.128)	329
Agreement Between Pillia and Idrimi (AT 3) (2.129)	331
2. Laws	332
The Laws of Eshnunna (2.130)	332
The Laws of Hammurabi (2.131)	335
The Middle Assyrian Laws (2.132)	353
The Neo-Babylonian Laws (2.133)	360
3. Edicts	362
The Edicts of Samsu-iluna and his Successors (2.134)	362
4. Boundary stones	364
The "Sun Disk" Tablet of Nabû-apla-iddina (2.135)	364
5. Royal grants	368
Will of Ammitaku Leader of Alalakh (2.136)	368
Land Grant AT 456 (2.137)	369
AKKADIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY	371

SUMERIAN MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS

BUILDING AND DISPLAY INSCRIPTIONS	385
1. Neo-Sumerian Inscriptions	387
Ur-Nammu (2.138A)	387
Ur-Nammu (2.138B)	387
Ur-Nammu (2.138C)	388
Ur-Nammu (2.138D)	388
Shulgi (2.139A)	388
Shulgi (2.139B)	389
Shulgi (2.139C)	389
Shulgi (2.139D)	389
Amar-Suena (2.140A)	390
Amar-Suena (2.140B)	390
Ibbi-Sin (2.141A)	390
Ibbi-Sin (2.141B)	391
2. Old Babylonian Inscriptions	391

VOTIVE INSCRIPTIONS	393
Ibbi-Sin (2.142)	395
Lugal-murube Son of Zuzu (2.143)	395
SEAL INSCRIPTIONS	397
Babati (2.144)	399
Servants of Kings (2.145)	399
WEIGHT INSCRIPTIONS	401
Weight Inscriptions (2.146-151)	403
"FUNCTIONAL" INSCRIPTIONS	405
1. Laws	407
Reforms of Uru-inimgina (2.152)	407
The Laws of Ur-Namma (2.153)	408
The Laws of Lipit-Ishtar (2.154)	410
TEMPLE HYMNS OF GUDEA	415
The Cylinders of Gudea (2.155)	417
SUMERIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY	435

This page intentionally left blank

PREFACE

The second volume of The Context of Scripture appears at the beginning of the new millennium rather than the end of the old one as planned but it has benefitted from the interval by incorporating some of the desiderata voiced by the reviewers of the first volume. They have, on the whole, been generous in their praise, both of the goals of the project and of the extent to which these goals have been met. Some of them have questioned the title and subtitles as to their meaning¹ — a matter addressed to a certain extent in the Introduction to the present volume — or their validity,² or both.³

In particular, it has been asked why comparison or contrast with biblical passages should dictate the choice of ancient Near Eastern texts here presented. To rephrase the question: what is the relevance, not of the ancient Near Eastern texts for the Hebrew Bible — a matter addressed in the Introduction to Volume I — but of the Bible for the study of (other) ancient Near Eastern texts.

Methodologically, this question could be answered by stressing the value of avoiding the approach of obscurum per obscurius or, to put it more positively, of approaching the less familiar via the more familiar — and the Bible remains by far the most familiar ancient Near Eastern text in wide circles of the English-speaking or English-reading world. A fuller answer to the question must be reserved for the Introduction to Volume III. In the meantime, it may be pointed out that, in fact, the scope of the project extends to many texts which display no obvious parallels to the Bible. A glance at the column of biblical comparisons (positive and negative) will reveal many such texts.⁴ They were chosen for other reasons, some of them listed in the Preface to Volume I.

While the procedural outlines of the first volume have continued to characterize the second, there is a noticeable disparity in size between the two. This disparity was planned from the beginning, though both volumes have grown beyond initial estimates. Within the present volume, there is a further disparity between the Akkadian and the Sumerian sections, though it is (slightly) more apparent than real. Given the resort to both languages in the monumental inscriptions of some dynasties, especially in the Old Babylonian period, sometimes involving bilingual versions of one and the same inscription, it was decided to accommodate all the building and display inscriptions of the dynasties of Isin I, Larsa, Uruk and Babylon I in the Akkadian section regardless of their language(s).

Other bilingual inscriptions have been dealt with variously: the bilingual edict of Hattushili I (2.15) in the Hittite section without special reference to the Akkadian version; the treaties between Hatti and Amurru (2.17A-C) in the Hittite section with significant variants from the Akkadian versions in the footnotes; the Hadad-yith^ci stele (2.34) on the basis of its Aramaic version, with variants from the Akkadian noted in the footnotes; and the Azatiwada inscriptions separately in the (hieroglyphic) Hittite and Phoenician sections respectively (2.21 and 2.31).

The third and concluding volume will include full indices that will illustrate further connections, not only between the biblical text and the various other corpora, but among the different corpora themselves. The reader's patience is asked as we move to consummate these efforts.

It remains to thank the many people who have helped to keep this project on track: the contributors, the consultants, David Orton who first conceived the project and Marijke Wiersma who took it over when Dr. Orton left Brill to begin his own publishing enterprise, Mattie Kuiper who coordinated Brill's efforts, and, above all, K. Lawson Younger, Jr., without whose tireless labors at every stage this project could not have been realized.

William W. Hallo
February 9, 2000

¹ See e.g. D. I. Block, Review and Expositor 94 (1997) 607f.

² See e.g. O. Loretz, UF 28 (1996) 791-793.

³ See e.g. N. Wyatt, JSOT 79 (1998) 168f.

⁴ So noted e.g. by R. S. Hendel, BR 14/4 (1998) 14f.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The following publishers permitted the reprinting of portions of books:

Texts 2.7 (pp. 42-51): Miriam Lichtheim, Ancient Egyptian Literature. 3 Volumes. The University of California Press, © 1973-1980. Regents of The University of California.

Texts 2.4A-G and 2.5A-B (pp. 23-39): K. A. Kitchen, Ramesside Inscriptions Translated & Annotated, Translations. I. Oxford: Blackwell Reference, 1993; and Ramesside Inscriptions Translated & Annotated, Notes & Comments, II. Oxford: Blackwell Reference, 1996.

Texts 2.130; 2.131; 2.132; 2.133; 2.153; 2.154; (pp. 332-361, 408-414): Martha T. Roth, Law Collections from Mesopotamia and Asia Minor. SBLWAW 6. Atlanta, GA: Scholars Press, 1995.

ADDITIONAL ABBREVIATIONS AND SYMBOLS

(* For abbreviations not listed here, please consult volume 1)

AaG	S. Segert. Altaramäische Grammatik. Mit Bibliographie, Glossar. Leipzig: Verlag Enzyklopädie, 1975.	DMOA	Documenta et Monumenta Orientis Antiqui. Leiden: E. J. Brill.
ABAW	Abhandlungen der Bayerischen Akademie der Wissenschaften.	DP	F.-M. Allotte de la Fuyé, Editor. Documents présargoniques. Paris, E. Leroux, 1908-1920.
AbB 13	W. H. van Soldt. Letters in the British Museum. Part 2. Altbabylonische Briefe in Umschrift und Übersetzung 13. Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1994.	EAEHL	M. Avi-Yonah, Editor. Encyclopedia of Archaeological Excavations in the Holy Land. Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice-Hall, 1975.
AC	J. J. Koopmans, Editor. Aramäische Chrestomathie. Ausgewählte Texte (Inschriften, Ostraka und Papyri) bis zum 3. Jahrhundert v. Chr. Leiden: Nederlands Instituut voor het Nabije Oosten, 1962.	EMRT	W. W. Hallo. Early Mesopotamia Royal Titles: a Philologic and Historical Analysis. AOS 43. New Haven: American Oriental Society, 1957.
AHI	G. I. Davies. Ancient Hebrew Inscriptions. Corpus and Concordance. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1991.	ENES	B. Buchanan. Early Near Eastern Seals in the Yale Babylonian Collection. Introduction and Seal Inscriptions by W. W. Hallo. New Haven and London: Yale University Press, 1981.
AJBI	The Annual of the Japanese Biblical Institute.	EPE	B. Porten. Elephantine Papyri in English: Three Millennia of Cross-Cultural Continuity and Change. Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1996.
AKM	Abhandlungen für die Kunde des Morgenlandes.	ESE	M. Lidzbarski. Ephemeris für semitische Epigraphik. Giessen: Alfred Töpelmann, 1902, 1915.
AMI	Archäologische Mitteilungen aus Iran.	EVO	Egitto e Vicino Oriente.
ANE	Ancient Near East(ern).	Glossar	W. Erichsen. Demotisches Glossar. Copenhagen: E. Munksgaard, 1954.
ANEP ²	J. B. Pritchard. The Ancient Near East in Pictures Relating to the Old Testament. 2nd Edition. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1969.	GPP	S. Segert. A Grammar of Phoenician and Punic. München: Beck, 1976.
ARINH	F. M. Fales, Editor. Assyrian Royal Inscriptions: New Horizons in Literary, Ideological and Historical Analysis. Oriens Antiqui Collectio 17. Rome: Istituto per l'Oriente.	HAL	W. Baumgartner, et al. Hebräisches und Aramäisches Lexikon zum alten Testament. Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1967-.
ARRIM	Annual Review of the Royal Inscriptions of Mesopotamia Project. Toronto, 1983-1991.	HAR	Hebrew Annual Review.
Assyria 1995	S. Parpola and R. M. Whiting, Editors. Assyria 1995. Proceedings of the 10th Anniversary Symposium of the Neo-Assyrian Text Corpus Project, Helsinki, September 7-11, 1995. Helsinki: The Neo-Assyrian Text Corpus Project, 1997.	HdO	Handbuch der Orientalistik.
AT	D. J. Wiseman. The Alalakh Texts. Occasional Publications of the British Institute of Archaeology at Ankara 2. London: British Institute of Archaeology, 1953.	HML 1	Paul Åström, Editor. High, Middle or Low? Acts of an International Colloquium on Absolute Chronology Held at the University of Gothenburg 20th - 22nd August 1987. Part 1. Gothenburg: Paul Åströms Förlag, 1987.
BAT 1990	A. Biran, et al., Editors. Biblical Archaeology Today 1990. Jerusalem: Israel Exploration Society, 1993.	HML 3	Paul Åström, Editor. High, Middle or Low? Acts of an International Colloquium on Absolute Chronology Held at the University of Gothenburg 20th - 22nd August 1987. Part 3. Gothenburg: Paul Åströms Förlag, 1989.
Bib	Biblica.	HNE	M. Lidzbarski. Handbuch der Nordsemitischen Epigraphik. Weimar: E. Felber, 1898.
BiMes 6	M. Gibson and R. D. Biggs, Editors. Seals and Sealing in the Ancient Near East. BiMes 6.	IAK	E. Ebeling, B. Meissner, and E. F. Weidner. Die Inschriften der altassyrischen Könige. Leipzig: Quelle and Meyer, 1924.
BIN	Babylonian Inscriptions in the Collection of J. B. Nies.	Ist. Mit.	Istanbuler Mitteilungen.
BMB	Bulletin du Musée de Beyrouth.	ITP	H. Tadmor. The Inscriptions of Tiglath-Pileser III King of Assyria. Jerusalem: The Israel Academy of Sciences and Humanities, 1994.
BN	Biblische Notizen.	JA	Journal Asiatique.
BSMS	Bulletin of the Society for Mesopotamian Studies. Toronto.	Mariette, Mon. div.	A. Mariette. Monuments divers recueillis en Égypte et en Nubie. Paris: F. Viewig, E. Bouillon, 1872-1889.
CAI	W. E. Auffrecht. A Corpus of Ammonite Inscriptions. Ancient Near Eastern Texts and Studies 4. Lewiston/Queenston/Lampster: The Edwin Mellen Press, 1989.	MDAIA	Mitteilungen des deutschen archäologischen Instituts, Athenische Abteilung.
CHLI 1	Corpus of Hieroglyphic Luwian Inscriptions. Volume 1: J. D. Hawkins. The Hieroglyphic Luwian Inscriptions of the Iron Age. UISK 8.1. Berlin and New York: Walter de Gruyter, 2000.	MDP	Mémoires (de la) Délégation en Perse. Paris: E. Leroux.
CHLI 2	Corpus of Hieroglyphic Luwian Inscriptions. Volume 2: H. Çambel. With a contribution by W. Röllig and tables by J. D. Hawkins. Karatepe-Aslantaş. The Inscriptions: Facsimile Edition. UISK 8.2. Berlin and New York: Walter de Gruyter, 1999.	MFA	Boston Museum of Fine Arts.
DAE	P. Grelot. Documents araméens d'Égypte. LAPO 5. Paris: Éditions du Cerf, 1972.	Moscatti	S. Moscati, Editor. The Phoenicians. New York: Abbeville Press, 1988.
DCPP	E. Lipiński, Editor. Dictionnaire de la civilisation phénicienne et punique. Leuven: Peeters, 1992.	MPAIBL	Mémoires présentées par divers savants à l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres.
DISO	C. F. Jean and J. Hoftijzer. Dictionnaire des inscriptions sémitiques de l'ouest. Leiden: Brill, 1965.	NAG	M. Liverani, Editor. Neo-Assyrian Geography. Quaderni di Geografia Storica 5. Rome: Università di Roma "La Sapienza," 1995.
DLE	L. Lesko. A Dictionary of Late Egyptian. 5 vols. Providence: BC Scribe, 1982-1990.	NBK	P.-R. Berger. Die neubabylonischen Königsinschriften. AOAT 4/1. Kevelaer: Butzon & Bercker; Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag, 1973.
		NDB	J. D. Douglas, Editor. New Bible Dictionary. Wheaton, IL: Tyndale House Publishers, 1982.

- NEAEHL E. Stern, Editor. The New Encyclopedia of Archaeological Excavations in the Holy Land. Jerusalem: The Israel Exploration Society & Carta, 1993.
- NEASB Near Eastern Archaeology Society Bulletin.
- NSI G. A. Cooke. A Textbook of North-Semitic Inscriptions. Oxford: The Clarendon Press, 1903.
- OEANE E. M. Meyers, Editor. The Oxford Encyclopedia of Archaeology in the Near East. 5 volumes. New York and Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1997.
- Origins W. W. Hallo. Origins: the Ancient Near Eastern Background of Some Modern Western Institutions. SHCANE 6. Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1996.
- PNA K. Radner, Editor. The Prosopography of the Neo-Assyrian Empire. Helsinki: The Neo-Assyrian Text Corpus Project, 1998.
- POANE K. Watanabe, Editor. Priests and Officials in the Ancient Near East. Papers of the Second Colloquium on the Ancient Near East — The City and its Life held at the Middle Eastern Culture Center in Japan (Mitaka, Tokyo). Heidelberg: C. Winter, 1999.
- PPG J. Friedrich and W. Röllig. Phönizisch-punische Grammatik. AnOr 46. Rome: Pontificium Institutum Biblicum, 1970.
- RAJ 33 J.-M. Durand, Editor. La Femme dans le Proche-Orient Antique. Paris: Editions Recherche sur les Civilisations, 1987.
- RAJ 39 H. Waezoldt and H. Hauptmann, Editors. Assyrien im Wandel der Zeiten. Heidelberger Studien zum Alten Orient 6. Heidelberg: Heidelberger Orientverlag, 1997.
- RIMA 3 The Royal Inscriptions of Mesopotamia. Assyrian Periods. Volume 3. A. K. Grayson. Assyrian Rulers of the Early First Millennium BC II (858-745 BC). Toronto: University of Toronto, 1996.
- RIMB 2 The Royal Inscriptions of Mesopotamia. Babylonian Periods. Volume 2. G. Frame. Rulers of Babylonia from the Second Dynasty of Isin to the End of Assyrian Domination (157-612 BC). Toronto: University of Toronto, 1995.
- RIME 2 Royal Inscriptions of Mesopotamia: Early Periods. Volume 2. D. Frayne. Sargonic and Gutian Periods. Toronto: University of Toronto, 1993.
- RIME 3/1 The Royal Inscriptions of Mesopotamia: Early Periods. Volume 3/1. D. O. Edzard. Gudea and His Dynasty. Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1997.
- RIME 3/2 Royal Inscriptions of Mesopotamia: Early Periods. Volume 3/2. D. Frayne. Ur III Period (2112-2004 BC). Toronto: University of Toronto, 1997.
- RIME 4 Royal Inscriptions of Mesopotamia: Early Periods. Volume 4. D. Frayne. Old Babylonian Period (2003-1595 BC). Toronto: University of Toronto, 1990.
- RTC F. Thureau-Dangin. Recueil de tablettes chaldéennes. Paris: E. Leroux, 1903.
- RTAT W. Beyerlin, et al. Religionsgeschichtliches Textbuch zum Alten Testament. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1975.
- SBLMS SBL Monograph Series.
- SD Studia et Documenta ad Iura Orientis Antiqui Pertinentia.
- SHCANE Studies in the History and Culture of the Ancient Near East. Leiden: Brill.
- SJOT Scandinavian Journal of the Old Testament.
- SO Samaria Ostraca. G. A. Reisner, et al., Harvard Excavations at Samaria. 2 Vols. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1924, and idem, Israelite Ostraca from Samaria. Harvard University, Palestinian (sic) Expedition. Boston, n.d.
- Studies Albright H. Goedicke, Editor. Near Eastern Studies in Honor of W. F. Albright. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 1971.
- Studies Altheim R. Stiehl and H. E. Stier, Editors. Beiträge zur alten Geschichte und deren Nachleben: Festschrift für Franz Altheim zum 6.10.1968. 2 vols. Berlin: De Gruyter, 1969.
- Studies Anderson J. T. Buder, E. W. Conrad, and B. C. Ollenburger, Editors. Understanding the Word: Essays in Honour of Bernhard W. Anderson. JSOTSup 37. Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1985.
- Studies Artzi P. Artzi, J. Klein and A. J. Skaist, Editors. Bar-Ilan Studies in Assyriology dedicated to Pinhas Artzi. Bar-Ilan Studies in Near Eastern Languages and Culture. Ramat Gan: Bar-Ilan University Press, 1990.
- Studies Astour G. D. Young, M. W. Chavalas, and R. E. Averbeck, Editors. Crossing Boundaries and Linking Horizons: Studies in Honor of Michael C. Astour on His 80th Birthday. Bethesda, Maryland: CDL, 1997.
- Studies Böhl M. A. Beek, et al., Editors. Symbolae Biblicae et Mesopotamicae Francisco Mario Theodoro De Liagre Böhl Dedicatae. Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1973.
- Studies Borger S. M. Maul, Editor. Festschrift für Rytke Borger zu seinem 65. Geburtstag am 24. Mai 1994: tikip santakki mala basmu. Groningen: SytX, 1998.
- Studies Carratelli Ed. by F. Inparati, Editor. Studi di storia e di filologia anatolica dedicati a Giovanni Pugliese Carratelli. Firenze: Elite, 1988.
- Studies Cross P. D. Miller, P. D. Hanson, and S. D. McBride, Editors. Ancient Israelite Religion: Essays in Honor of Frank Moore Cross. Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1987.
- Studies Daumas Hommages à François Daumas. Institut d'Égyptologie, Université Paul Valéry. Montpellier: Université de Montpellier, 1986.
- Studies David Symbolae iuridicae et historicae Martino David dedicatae 2 Vols. Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1968.
- Studies Driver D. Winton Thomas, Editor. Hebrew and Semitic Studies Presented to G. R. Driver. Oxford: Clarendon, 1963.
- Studies Dupont-Sommer Hommages à André Dupont-Sommer. Paris: Maisonneuve, 1971.
- Studies Edel M. Görg and E. B. Pusch, Editors. Festschrift Elmar Edel, 12. März 1979. AAT 1. Bamberg: M. Görg, 1979.
- Studies Ehrman Y. L. Arbeitman, Editor. Fucus. A Semitic/Afrasian Gathering in Remembrance of Albert Ehrman. Current Issues in Linguistic Theory 58. Amsterdam/Philadelphia: John Benjamins, 1988.
- Studies Frerichs J. Magness and S. Gitin, Editors. Hesed ve-Emet: Studies in Honor of Ernest S. Frerichs. Brown Judaic Studies 320. Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1998.
- Studies Gallig A. Kuschke and E. Kutsch, Editors. Archäologie und Altes Testament. Festschrift für Kurt Gallig, zum 8. Januar 1970. Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr (Paul Siebeck), 1970.
- Studies Garelli D. Charpin and F. Joannès, Editors. Marchands, Diplomates et empereurs: Études sur la civilisation mésopotamienne offertes à P. Garelli. Paris: Éditions Recherche sur les Civilisations, 1991.
- Studies Glueck J. A. Sanders, Editor. Near Eastern Archaeology in the Twentieth Century. Essays in Honor of Nelson Glueck. Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1970.
- Studies Greenfield Z. Zevit, S. Gitin, and M. Sokoloff, Editors. Solving Riddles and Untying Knots: Biblical, Epigraphic and Semitic Studies in Honor of Jonas C. Greenfield. Winona Lake, IN: Eisenbrauns, 1995.
- Studies Grelot La Vie de la parole: de l'ancien au nouveau testament: études d'exégèse et d'herméneutique bibliques offertes à Pierre Grelot. Paris: Desclée, 1987.
- Studies Horn L. T. Geraty and L. G. Herr, Editors. The Archaeology of Jordan and Other Studies Presented to Siegfried H. Horn. Berrien Springs: Andrews University Press,

- 1986.
- Studies Kantor* A. Leonard, Jr. and B. Beyer Williams, Editors. Essays in Ancient Civilization Presented to Helene I. Kantor. Chicago: The Oriental Institute, 1989.
- Studies Karageorghis* G. C. Ioannides, Editor. Studies in Honour of Vassos Karageorghis. Nicosia: The Society of Cypriot Studies, 1992.
- Studies King* M. D. Coogan, J. C. Exum, and L. E. Stager, Editors. Scripture and Other Artifacts: Essays on the Bible and Archaeology in Honor of Philip J. King. Louisville: Westminster/John Knox, 1994.
- Studies Kutscher* G. B. Sarfati, P. Artzi, J. C. Greenfield and M. Kaddari, Editors. Studies in Hebrew and Semitic Languages Dedicated to the Memory of Yechezkel Kutscher. Ramat-Gan: Bar-Ilan University Press, 1980.
- Studies Landsberger* H. G. Güterbock and T. Jacobsen, Editors. Studies in Honor of Benno Landsberger on his Seventy-fifth Birthday April 21, 1965. AS 16. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1965.
- Studies Levine* R. Chazan, W.W. Hallo, and L.H. Schiffman, Editors. Ki Baruch Hu: Ancient Near Eastern, Biblical, and Judaic Studies in Honor of Baruch A. Levine. Winona Lake, IN: Eisenbrauns, 1999.
- Studies McNamara* K. J. Cathcart and M. Maher, Editors. Targumic and Cognate Studies. Essays in Honour of Martin McNamara. JSOTSup 230. Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1996.
- Studies Macuch* M. Macuch, C. Müller-Kessler, B. G. Fagner, Editors. Studia Semitica necnon Iranica: Rudolpho Macuch septuagenario ab amicis et discipulis dedicata. Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz, 1989.
- Studies Maspero* J. Sainte Fare Garnot, Editor. Mélanges Maspero. Volume 1: Orient ancien. Mémoires publiés par les membres de l'Institut français d'archéologie orientale du Caire 66/4. Cairo: Institut français d'archéologie orientale, 1961.
- Studies Mellink* J. V. Canby, et al. editors. Ancient Anatolia, Aspects of Change and Cultural Development. Essays in Honor of Machteld J. Mellink. Madison: University of Wisconsin, 1986.
- Studies Meriggi* O. Carruba, editor. Studia mediterranea Piero Meriggi dicata. Studia mediterranea 1. Pavia: Aurora Edizione, 1979.
- Studies Milik* Z. J. Kapera, Editor. Intertestamental Essays in Honour of Józef Tadeusz Milik. Kraków: Enigma Press, 1992.
- Studies Myers* H. N. Bream, Editor. A Light unto My Path: Old Testament Studies in Honor of Jacob M. Myers. Philadelphia: Temple University Press, 1974.
- Studies Otten* E. Neu and C. Rüster, editors. Documentum Asiae Minoris Antiquae. Festschrift für Heinrich Otten zum 75. Geburtstag. Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz, 1988.
- Studies Özgüç* K. Emre, et al., editors. Anatolia and the Ancient Near East. Studies in Honor of Tahsin Özgüç. Ankara: Türk Tarih Kurumu Basımevi, 1989.
- Studies van der Ploeg* W. C. Delsman, et al. Editors. Von Canaan bis Kerala: Festschrift für Professor Mag. Dr. Dr. J. P. M. van der Ploeg O.P. AOAT 211. Kevelaer: Verlag Butzon & Bercker and Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag, 1982.
- Studies Puhvel* D. Disterheft, M. Huld and J. Greppin, editors. Studies in Honor of Jaan Puhvel: Part One. Ancient Languages and Philology. Washington, DC: Institute for the Study of Man, 1997.
- Studies Sarna* M. Brettler and M. Fishbane, Editors. Minhah le-Nahum: Biblical and Other Studies Presented to Nahum N. Sarna in Honour of his 70th Birthday. JSOTSup 154. Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1993.
- Studies Smith* E. Robbins and S. Sandahl, Editors. Corolla Torontonensis. Studies in Honour of Ronald Morison Smith. Toronto: TSAR, 1994.
- Studies von Soden* M. Dietrich and O. Loretz, Editors. Vom Alten Orient zum Alten Testament. Festschrift für Wolfram Freiherrn von Soden zum 85. Geburtstag am 19. Juni 1993. AOAT. Kevelaer: Butzon & Bercker; Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag, 1995.
- Studies Soggin* D. Garrone and F. Israel, Editors. Storia e tradizioni di Israele. Scritti in onore di J. Alberto Soggin. Brescia: Paideia, 1991.
- Studies Spycket* Collectanea Orientalia. Histoire, arts de l'espace et industrie de la terre. Études offertes en hommage à Agnes Spycket. Civilisations du proche-orient. Serie 1. Archéologie et environnement 3. Neuchâtel-Paris: Recherches et publications, 1996.
- Studies Tufnell* J. N. Tubb, Editor. Palestine in the Bronze and Iron Ages. Papers in Honour of Olga Tufnell. London: Institute of Archaeology, 1985.
- Studies Young* J. Coleson and V. Matthews, Editors. "Go to the land I will show you": Studies in Honor of Dwight W. Young. Winona Lake, IN: Eisenbrauns, 1996.
- Symposia* F. M. Cross, Editor. Symposia Celebrating the Seventy-Fifth Anniversary of the Founding of the American Schools of Oriental Research (1900-1975). Cambridge, MA: ASOR, 1979.
- TAD* B. Porten and A. Yardeni. Textbook of Aramaic Documents from Ancient Egypt. 4 Volumes. Jerusalem: The Hebrew University, 1986-1999.
- TAPhS* Transactions of the American Philosophical Society. Philadelphia.
- TRE* Theologische Realenzyklopädie. Berlin/New York: Walter de Gruyter, 1971-.
- TGI²* K. Gallig, editor. Textbuch zur Geschichte Israels. 2nd Edition. Tübingen, 1968.
- UIISK* Untersuchungen zur indogermanischen Sprach- und Kulturwissenschaft. N.F.
- Urk. III* H. Schäfer, Editor. Urkunden des ägyptischen Altertums. Abteilung III: Urkunden der älteren Äthiopienkönige. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs, 1905, 1908.
- VAB 4* S. Langdon. Die neubabylonischen Königsinschriften. Vorderasiatische Bibliothek 4. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs, 1912.
- VS 1* Vorderasiatische Schriftendeknaler der Königlichen Museen zu Berlin 1. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs, 1907.
- VS 14* W. Förtsch. Altbabylonische Wirtschaftstexte aus der Zeit Lugalanda's und Urugagina's. Vorderasiatische Schriftendeknaler der Königlichen Museen zu Berlin 14/1. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs, 1916.
- WAI* K. A. D. Smelik. Writings from Ancient Israel: A Handbook of Historical and Religious Documents. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1991.
- YNER* Yale Near Eastern Researches.
- 1 R* H. C. Rawlinson and E. Norris. The Cuneiform Inscriptions of Western Asia. Volume 1: A Selection from the Historical Inscriptions of Chaldea, Assyria, & Babylonia. London, 1861.
- 3 R* H. C. Rawlinson and G. Smith. The Cuneiform Inscriptions of Western Asia. Volume 3: A Selection from the Miscellaneous Inscriptions of Assyria. London, 1870.
- 5 R* H. C. Rawlinson and Th. G. Pinches. The Cuneiform Inscriptions of Western Asia. Volume 5: A Selection from the Miscellaneous Inscriptions of Assyria. London, 1880.

OTHER ABBREVIATIONS

(* For abbreviations not listed here, please consult volume I)

BH	Biblical Hebrew
MT	Masoretic Text
NH	New Hittite

LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS

- WALTER E. AUFRECHT
University of Lethbridge
- RICHARD E. AVERBECK
Trinity International University — Divinity School
- RICHARD H. BEAL
University of Chicago
- PAUL-ALAIN BEAULIEU
Harvard University
- GARY BECKMAN
University of Michigan
- MORDECHAI COGAN
The Hebrew University, Jerusalem
- JOSEPH A. FITZMYER, S.J.
Georgetown University
- DOUGLAS FRAYNE
University of Toronto
- WILLIAM W. HALLO
Yale University
- GORDON HAMILTON
Huron College
- J. D. HAWKINS
University of London
- J. F. HEALEY
University of Manchester
- MICHAEL HELTZER
University of Haifa
- RICHARD S. HESS
Denver Seminary
- JAMES K. HOFFMEIER
Trinity International University — Divinity School
- HARRY A. HOFFNER, JR.
University of Chicago
- VICTOR HUROWITZ
Ben Gurion University of the Negev
- BURKHART KIENAST
Albert-Ludwigs-Universität, Freiburg im Breisgau
- K. A. KITCHEN
University of Liverpool, emeritus
- BARUCH A. LEVINE
New York University
- MIRIAM LICHTHEIM
University of California, Berkley, emerita
- P. KYLE MCCARTER
Johns Hopkins University
- ALAN MILLARD
University of Liverpool
- WAYNE T. PITARD
University of Illinois
- BEZALEL PORTEN
The Hebrew University, Jerusalem
- MARVIN A. POWELL
Northern Illinois University
- ROBERT K. RITNER
University of Chicago
- MARTHA ROTH
University of Chicago
- STANISLAV SEGERT
University of California, Los Angeles, emeritus
- ITAMAR SINGER
Tel Aviv University
- K. A. D. SMELIK
Universitaire Faculteit voor Protestantse Godgeleerdheid te Brussel
- JEFFREY H. TIGAY
University of Pennsylvania
- K. LAWSON YOUNGER, JR.
Trinity International University — Divinity School

This page intentionally left blank

INTRODUCTION

THE BIBLE AND THE MONUMENTS

William W. Hallo¹

More than a century ago, a book appeared under the title of The Bible and the Monuments. It was subtitled The Primitive Hebrew Records in the Light of Modern Research, and its author bore the impressive name of William Saint Chad Boscawen.² His was only one in a long line of books that capitalized on the fruits of archaeological exploration of the Near East to bring new life to biblical history and literature. But in common with other works of its time and type, it used the term "monuments" loosely to describe whatever in the way of written or artistic evidence had been turned up by the spade of the excavator. Thus he dealt in one chapter with creation legends, in another with the Deluge, and in a third with the Egyptian Book of the Dead and other evidence of beliefs in an afterlife. When students of the ancient Near East speak of monuments today, they tend to have a more restricted category of evidence in mind. In my case, I have developed a particular taxonomy of documentation based on the cuneiform writings of Mesopotamia, which the projected three volumes of The Context of Scripture proposes to extend to the Egyptian, Hittite and West Semitic evidence as well. It has been defended in print in several places,³ but needs to be presented here afresh.

In ancient Mesopotamia, clay was abundantly available and was thus the writing medium of choice. If a document was intended to be preserved for a limited length of time, it was typically inscribed on a clay tablet in one or at most two copies and deposited in an archive for subsequent retrieval. Such documents as letters, accounts, contracts, and court-cases answer these descriptions and may be called archival. If, on the other hand, a composition was intended for long-time preservation, it might still be inscribed in clay, either on a tablet shaped much like an archival text, or on a variety of other shapes such as cylinders, prisms, round or square "school-tablets" or extract tablets which were wider than they were long; but regardless of their shape, such compositions typically appear in multiple copies. They were ultimately the product of the scribal schools, and constituted their curriculum or canon. They may therefore be labelled canonical, though not in the sense in which that term is usually employed in biblical scholarship, that is to say with the implications of divine inspiration or binding authority attached to the biblical canon. Rather, the term is here used in its more general, literary sense, as when literary critics speak of the Chaucer canon to identify all the works that can safely be attributed to that author, or of the Western canon to identify the different authors whose works constitute by general consent the shared literary heritage of the Western tradition.

When using the term in this sense, one can detect several successive canons in the millennial literary tradition of ancient Mesopotamia. The individual compositions that make up those successive canons exhibit certain common distinctive traits, a dozen of which I have summarized elsewhere.⁴ They include the standardization of such external features as the length of each composition, its division into lines and chapters, the ordering of separate compositions in a fixed sequence, their study in that sequence in the schools, whether in whole or in part, the creation of commentaries and other scholastic explanatory texts, their augmentation with other compositions copied from archival or monumental sources, and above all their replication in numerous exemplars as a result of their use in the school curriculum or, occasionally, for private libraries.

Multiple copies in clay also served to preserve another sort of text, namely bricks and cones, typically employed in temples, palaces and other public buildings. Clay was, however, not the only medium for writing, even in Mesopotamia. Thus other building inscriptions, such as foundation deposits and door-sockets, resorted to imported stone or even metal to achieve durability. So did additional genres such as votive inscriptions, weights, and seals. From the largest to the smallest, these genres all alike constitute monuments — structures or objects intended to last for all time as memorials to those kings and other mortals who built or dedicated them, or to those deities to whom they were

¹ The essence of this paper was first presented to Kenrick Theological Seminary, St. Louis, November 11, 1999, Anne Marie Kitz presiding. It was revised for presentation to the Midwest meeting of the Society of Biblical Literature/American Oriental Society, Chicago, February 13, 2000.

² 2nd ed. (London/New York, Eyre and Spottiswoode, 1895). For some of Boscawen's other publications, see F. H. Weissbach, RIA 2 (1938) 60; R. Borger, Handbuch der Keilschriftliteratur 1 (1967) 32, 2 (1975) 22; D. B. Weisberg, YOS 17 (1980) xix and n. 18.

³ Notably W. W. Hallo, The Ancient Near East: a History (New York, Harcourt Brace, 1971) 154-158; 2nd. ed. (1998) 154-157.

⁴ W. W. Hallo, "The Concept of Canonicity in Cuneiform and Biblical Literature: A Comparative Appraisal," in SFC 4 (1991) 1-19.

dedicated. All became parts of the structures or objects which they commemorate. They may therefore be called monumental inscriptions. In special cases, uninscribed monuments may also be added to this category if their iconography bore mute witness to a comparable commemoration.

While thus carefully delineating the three principal categories of documentation from each other by the combined criteria of form and function, the proposed taxonomy allows for some intermediate genres. Thus for example the ancient records of land sales which are sometimes designated in modern terminology as "boundary-stones" (kudurrû) are formally monumental in that they are inscribed on stone but functionally archival in that they deal with real estate transactions.⁵ The taxonomy also leaves room for transitions from one category to another. More specifically, the curriculum included instruction in the writing of archival texts, and for this purpose drew on the archives to create textbooks of contracts, court cases, letters, including royal correspondence, etc. And the curriculum specifically included the copying of monuments, as attested in descriptions of the life of the Old Babylonian scribal schools.⁶ Such monuments thus often found their way into the canon as can be demonstrated for royal inscriptions, "law codes," cadastres, treaties and other genres preserved either as models of good style or for their intrinsic value. Often enough, archival or monumental texts are preserved for us only in their canonical guise. They may nevertheless be legitimately included among the archives and monuments to which they presumably go back rather than among the canonical texts with which they have been found.

To what extent do these classifications apply beyond the borders of Mesopotamia? On the face of it, it should not be difficult to do so in the case of the Hittites, who essentially adopted the cuneiform writing conventions of Mesopotamia. It must, however, be added at once that the discoveries in Hattusha have been overwhelmingly of canonical compositions. Only the more recent excavations at Hittite sites outside the capital city have begun to turn up archival documents in significant numbers; this has notably been the case at Maşat.⁷ As for monumental texts, these are nearly all clay tablet copies of what must have been originally inscriptions on stone or metal. This is presumably true of the Hittite Laws, and is certainly true of some or all of the Hittite treaties, as most dramatically shown by the bronze version of the treaty between Tudhaliya IV and his cousin Kurunta, the ruler of the petty kingdom of Tarhuntashsha.⁸ According to the end of this text, it was prepared in seven copies, one for Kurunta and the others deposited before various deities, i.e., presumably, their statues. None of the other copies, whether on metal or clay, has survived.

The Egyptian situation is different but also capable of being correlated with the Mesopotamian taxonomy. Whether Mesopotamia inspired the first attempts at writing in Egypt or not, certain it is that Egypt used clay tablets as a writing surface only much later when, in the Amarna period, Akkadian became the lingua franca of the Near East. Rather, Egypt discovered papyrus as an ideal medium for its archival documents and canonical compositions, with clay potsherds or ostraca as a distinctly less popular alternative. As for monuments, there was no lack of stone or metal to preserve these for all time. Much the same situation prevailed in most of the West Semitic speaking area — with one notable exception, namely Israel.

What then of the Israelites? As far as the biblical text itself is concerned, it is of course quintessentially canonical in its entirety — and that in both senses of the term. But a closer look suggests at least the hypothetical possibility that its present canonical shape may have developed out of other categories, as demonstrably happened often in Mesopotamia. In other words, it may harbor what in some cases may be regarded as originally archival and monumental texts. Long ago, James A. Montgomery wrote an article on what he called "Archival data in the Book of Kings."⁹ He was referring to passages in the Books of Kings which seemed to emanate from royal archives, such as the lists of Solomon's officers and provincial lieutenants (1 Kgs 4), or of the cities he built (1 Kgs 9:15, 17), or of his building activities in Jerusalem (1 Kgs 7:2-8). More recently, Baruch A. Levine identified what he called "The descriptive ritual texts of the Pentateuch,"¹⁰ using a term which he and I had previously applied to certain Ugaritic and Mesopotamian account texts.¹¹ His parade example was Numbers 7, a chapter often consigned to oblivion because of its seemingly endless and pointless repetition of identical entries in the long list of offerings brought by the leaders of the twelve tribes at the dedication of the desert tabernacle.¹² Levine showed graphically that the material could be represented in two-dimensional format and then resembled comparable account texts from Babylonia. If it was not a genuine copy of an archival document, it certainly suggested the existence of such texts as a model for the biblical author.

⁵ I. J. Gelb, P. Steinkeller and R. M. Whiting, Jr., Earliest Land Tenure Systems in the Near East: Ancient Kudurrus (OIP 104) (1991).

⁶ Hallo, SIC 3 (1990) 9-11; SIC 4 (1991) 8 and 17, nn. 79f.

⁷ J. Klinger, "Das Corpus der Maşat-Briefe," ZA 85 (1995) 74-108.

⁸ Below, COS 2.18. Cf. the review article of Otten's edition by Dietrich Sörenhagen, OLZ 87 (1992) 341-371.

⁹ JBL 53 (1934) 46-52.

¹⁰ JAOs 83 (1965) 307-318.

¹¹ Hallo, SIC 3 (1990) 9f.

¹² Cf. also J. Milgrom, "The Chieftain's Gifts: Numbers, Chapter 7," HAR 9 (1985) 221-225.

What is true of archival origins is equally valid, mutatis mutandis, for monumental origins. I am not suggesting the Decalogue in this connection. But analogies have been drawn, again some time ago, between certain biblical psalm genres, notably the psalms of thanksgiving, and West Semitic inscriptions on steles such as the Aramaic stele of King Zakkur of Hamath; Zobel, Ginsberg and Greenfield all commented on this analogy.¹³ More recently I entered the lists with a proposal to add the prayer of Hezekiah in Isaiah 38 to the list.¹⁴ It is called a "writing" (mktb) in the Hebrew text, and a proseuché in the Septuagint, but it may be related to the Psalm genre (16, 56-60) called a mkam in Hebrew, and consistently rendered by "writing on a stele" (stélographia) in the Greek versions. If so, these six historical or rather biographical psalms of the Psalter may be added to the roster. It may be noted that most modern translations leave the word mktm untranslated, but the New Jerusalem Bible ventures "In a quiet voice," while Buber and Rosenzweig proposed "Sühngedicht," a prayer about sin. Perhaps these translations were influenced by the root meaning of ktm in Akkadian and Arabic, i.e. to cover, conceal.

The appeal to the Zakkur Stele reminds us that the finite corpus of the biblical canon has been supplemented and illuminated by a ceaseless accretion of other West Semitic writings in the form of monuments from all over the soil of Israel and its immediate neighbors. Since the very beginnings of modern exploration of the Levant, these have furnished evidence in Ugaritic, Phoenician, Aramaic and every other kind of West Semitic language and dialect. The majority of them have involved royal inscriptions.

We may cite by way of illustration the famous Mesha Stele found at Dhiban in Jordan in 1868 and recording the triumph of that Moabite king over his Israelite oppressor, presumably Ahab (874-853) and/or his son Joram (Jehoram) (852-841).¹⁵ More recently the record has been enriched by a find from the same period (i.e. the late ninth century BCE) but from the northern frontier of Israel. There the ongoing excavations at Tell Dan have unearthed two fragments of an Aramaic stele celebrating the triumph of a Syrian king, probably Hazael of Damascus, over the combined forces of the kings of Israel and Judah, the latter referred to there, interestingly enough, as "[the kin]g of the house of David."¹⁶ (This phrase has now also been tentatively identified in the Mesha Stele by the simple restoration of a single lost letter.)¹⁷ And it is only a couple of years since the excavation at Eqrn, once one of the five principal Philistine cities, turned up an inscription of Achish son of Padi king of Eqrn that fits into the history of the seventh century as recorded both in the Bible¹⁸ and the Assyrian monuments, where both Padi and Achish appear, the latter as Ikausu.¹⁹ The Assyrian inscriptions have mostly been found in Assyria itself, of course, but it is worth recalling that some were erected in Palestine and have turned up there; for example fragments of standard victory steles of Sargon II from Samaria and Ashdod.²⁰ Similarly, Egyptian royal inscriptions were erected in Palestine to commemorate Egyptian triumphs there. One may mention in this connection two steles of Seti I (1289-1278 BCE) found at Beth Shan.²¹ The second of these even mentions Apiru in conflict with Asiatics (amu) of *rh*m, sometimes interpreted as the basis for an assumed tribe of banu rahāmi with an eponymous ancestor called Abu-Rahāmi = Abraham!²²

What then of the comparable harvest, from the biblical period, of Hebrew monuments in general, and of royal inscriptions in particular? Here we come up against the curious fact that it has been meager to the point of non-existence! Let us look at the evidence. Probably the single most familiar Hebrew monument is the so-called Siloam Inscription.²³ It was found in 1880 when Palestine was still under Ottoman rule, and to this day the original remains housed in the Archaeological Museum in Istanbul despite all attempts to reclaim it for Israel.²⁴ It records the completion of the tunnel whereby water was to be brought securely from the Pool of Siloam into the walled city of Jerusalem, presumably in the event of a siege.²⁵

Because of its unique character as virtually the only monumental inscription of its kind from Israel or Judah in the ¹³ See the references in Hallo, Studies Kramer (1976) 209f. and below, 2.35.

¹⁴ W. W. Hallo, "The Royal Correspondence of Larsa: I. A Sumerian Prototype for the Prayer of Hezekiah?" in Studies Kramer (1976) 209-224.

¹⁵ Below, 2.23.

¹⁶ Below, 2.39.

¹⁷ A. Lemaire, "'House of David' restored in Moabite inscription," BAR 20/3 (1994) 30-37; idem, "La dynastie Davidique (Byt Dwd) dans deux inscriptions ouest-sémitiques du IX^e S. Av. J.-C." SEL 11 (1994) 17-19.

¹⁸ Achish is familiar as king of Gath in the time of Saul (1 Sam 21:27-29) and Solomon (1 Kgs 2:30f.)

¹⁹ Below, 2.42. S. Gitin, T. Dothan and J. Naveh, "A Royal Dedicatory Inscription from Eqrn," IEJ 47 (1997) 1-16. Cf. A. Demsky, BAR 24/5 (1998) 56; V. Sasson, "The Inscription of Achish, Governor of Ekron, and Philistine Dialect, Cult and Culture," UF 29 (1997b) 627-639.

²⁰ See the illustrations in Mordechai Cogan and Hayim Tadmor, II Kings. A New Translation with Introduction and Commentary (Garden City, NY: Doubleday & Company, 1988) pl. 11.

²¹ Below, 2.4B and 2.4D.

²² Mario Liverani, "Un'ipotesi sul nome di Abramo," Henoch 1 (1979) 9-18; ref. courtesy Oded Tammuz.

²³ Below, 2.28.

²⁴ H. Shanks, "Returning Cultural Artifacts — Turkey Is All Take, No Give," BAR 17/3 (1991) 12; "Please Return the Siloam Inscription to Jerusalem," BAR 17/3 (1991) 58-60.

²⁵ Cf. J. A. Hackett, BAR 23/2 (Mar/Apr 1997) 42f.

biblical period, there have been recent attempts to reassign it to the early post-biblical period, when such inscriptions become more common. But these attempts have been decisively refuted by the palaeographic evidence. In fact, there is general consensus that the inscription belongs to the reign of Hezekiah who, as the Book of Chronicles informs us (II Chr 32:30; cf. 2 Kgs 20:20), "stopped the upper outlet of the waters of Gihon and directed them straight down on the West side of the City of David. He said in effect: why should the king of Assyria come and find much water?" (cf. 2 Chr 32:4). The siege envisaged was that of Sennacherib and the Assyrian army in 701 BCE. Granted all this, it becomes all the more curious that the king is mentioned neither by name nor by title in the entire inscription! It seems to be the exception that proves the rule!

Another exception is provided by the mortuary inscription of King Uzziah (= Azariah) of Judah (792-740).²⁶ Mortuary inscriptions are fairly standard in the biblical world. Both kings and commoners have left us examples; those in cuneiform have been conveniently catalogued and described by Bottero,²⁷ those in West Semitic by Müller.²⁸ It has even been suggested that the Bible preserves an allusion to an epitaph in Job 19:23-27.²⁹ But the funerary inscription of Uzziah turns out to be something else: the record of a reburial. Dating to the first century BCE and inscribed in Aramaic, it says in effect: "Here were brought the bones of Uzziah, king of Judah. Do not open!"³⁰ Whether this had something to do with his leprosy as implied by the Chronicler (2 Chr 26:23) I leave for others to ponder.

There is, it is true, a class of inscriptions that mentions the king by title, and another that mentions him by name. In the former category are the stone stamp seals inscribed "Belonging to the king" (lmlk) which are presumed to have existed (though none have ever been found) on the basis of the impressions they have left on the handles of numerous clay jars which were used to hold and transport wine or olive oil during the period of the Divided Monarchy, more specifically during the reign of — again — Hezekiah.³¹ More than 1700 such impressions have been found from some 65 different sites, nearly all adding one of four place-names.³²

In the latter category are all those stamp seals and seal impressions inscribed by servants of such Judahite kings as Azariah, Ahaz and Hezekiah, and such Israelite kings as Jeroboam.³³ Such inscriptions are typically of the form "belonging to Ushna servant of Ahaz";³⁴ we can recognize the royal name but it is never accompanied by the royal title. This is in conformity with long-standing Near Eastern usage, but it also seems to fit neatly into a recognizable Israelite pattern. It is almost as if to the Decalogue had been added an eleventh commandment: thou shalt not commemorate the royal name and title in a monumental inscription! There is not even a word for royal inscription in biblical Hebrew, as there is in Sumerian (MU-SAR) and Akkadian (musarû, šumu šatru).

Of course there was one form of monument identified by name and specifically condemned and that was the commemorative stele or maššeba.³⁵ It was originally regarded as a legitimate sign of the divine presence, as in the case of Jacob's maššeba at Bethel (Gen 28:18 etc.)³⁶ and as the designation of a Jewish gravestone to this day. But it was proscribed elsewhere in the Pentateuch and was seen under the monarchy as a symbol of Canaanite idol worship, on a par with the image (pesel) of the decalogue with which it was often paired.³⁷

The peculiarities of the Israelite situation can be adduced to account for the absence of certain other elements familiar from the Mesopotamian repertoire of royal monuments.³⁸ The Israelites did not normally build in clay, the favorite medium for bricks and cones; they did not use pivot stones for the doors of monumental buildings, nor construct ²⁶ Cogan and Tadmor, II Kings, 167 and pl. 11.

²⁷ "Les inscriptions funéraires cunéiformes," in La Mort, les morts dans les sociétés anciennes (Actes du Colloque sur l'Idéologie Funéraire, Ischia, 1977) (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1981).

²⁸ Hans-Peter Müller, "Die phönizische Grabinschrift aus dem Zypern-Museum KAI 30 und die Formgeschichte des nordwestsemitischen Epitaphs," ZA 65 (1975) 104-132.

²⁹ Kurt Gallig, "Die Grabinschrift Hiobs," WO 2 (1954) 3-6.

³⁰ Cogan and Tadmor, II Kings 167 and fig. 5.

³¹ This date is suggested, i.e., by "the fact that most of these jars were found in destruction levels caused by the retaliatory Assyrian invasion of 701 BCE" according to J. H. Tigay, below, 2.77.

³² Hebron and Ziph in Judah, Socho in the Shephelah, and an otherwise unknown place mmš; cf. Tigay, below, p. 202 and n. 67.

³³ A. R. Millard below, 2.70R.

³⁴ N. Avigad and B. Sass, Corpus of West Semitic Stamp Seals (Revised and completed by B. Sass, Jerusalem: Israel Academy of Sciences and Humanities, Israel Exploration Society, and Institute of Archaeology, Hebrew University of Jerusalem, 1997) No. 5 and frontispiece.

³⁵ My thanks to John Ahn for reminding me of this fact.

³⁶ R. Kutscher, "The Mesopotamian god Zaqar and Jacob's Maššebāh," Beer Sheva 3 (1988) 125-130 (in Hebrew).

³⁷ See Roland de Vaux, Ancient Israel: Its Life and Institutions, tr. John McHugh (New York etc., McGraw-Hill, 1961) 285f.; Trygve N. D. Mettinger, No Graven Image? Israelite Aniconism in its Ancient Near Eastern Context (Coniectanea Biblica, Old Testament Series 42; Stockholm: Almqvist & Wiksell International, 1995) esp. p. 24.

³⁸ Hallo, "The Royal Inscriptions of Ur: A Typology," HUCA 33 (1962) 1-43; E. Sollberger and J.-R. Kupper, Inscriptions Royales Sumeriennes et Akkadiennes (Paris: Cerf, 1971) 25-36: "L'inscription royale comme genre littéraire."

elaborate foundation boxes filled with inscribed stone foundation tablets (in the guise of model bricks) and other foundation deposits. But that still leaves room for other royal monuments: building inscriptions in stone; votive dedications; seals inscribed to or by the king; weights royally authorized and guaranteed, mortuary inscriptions and others. Their total absence remains to be explained.

If there has been little attention paid to the fact of this absence, there is even less discussion of its possible cause or causes. Perhaps the question has been ignored on the grounds of the old truism that absence of evidence is not evidence of absence. Most scholars feel safer explaining the presence of phenomena than their absence. Perhaps that would be my safest course too. But I have long preached the contextual approach, in which contrast is as important as comparison, and here is a contrast worthy of the name. Scholars have periodically assembled great compendia of monuments from Egypt, Syria, Assyria and Babylonia, culminating in such stately series of volumes as The Royal Inscriptions of Mesopotamia from the University of Toronto. But there is never going to be even a single volume of "The Royal Inscriptions of Judah and Israel." Even the most recent and comprehensive Handbook of Ancient Hebrew Inscriptions is mostly devoted to seals and ostraca, the latter more properly at home among archival texts.³⁹ Why are there no royal inscriptions among them?

We can rule out the accidents of discovery. The soil of the Holy Land is the most carefully and thoroughly excavated real estate on the face of the earth, and has been such for over a century. (This is assuming we date the beginnings of scientific excavation no earlier than Sir Flinders Petrie in 1890.)⁴⁰ The chance that future discoveries will turn up a whole genre of Hebrew (or Aramaic) inscriptions overlooked so far is remote at best, especially given the many discoveries of non-Israelite monuments already made. Nor need we be long detained by a second possibility, namely that all traces of such inscriptions have been destroyed by the many wars the land of Israel has experienced and the many enemies it has faced. Other peoples of the biblical world faced just as much conflict and hostility yet their monuments have survived or reemerged.

A third possible explanation is equally unconvincing, namely that the period of the monarchy was so short on literacy that monumental inscriptions would have lacked a readership. But this is, to begin with, the wrong way to phrase matters. Monumental inscriptions are not addressed to a literate readership but rather to a largely illiterate audience, who would be read to by the minority of trained scribes and other literate alumni of the scribal schools. This is well known from Babylonia where literacy was limited to the elite classes even in periods such as that of Hammurapi's when such schooling was more widely available than at other periods. In the famous stele(s) inscribed with his laws, Hammurapi specifically says:

Let any wronged man who has a lawsuit come before the statue of me (šalmia), the king of justice, and let him have my inscribed stela (nart šatram) read aloud to him, thus may he hear my precious pronouncements and let my stela reveal his lawsuit for him.⁴¹

Moreover literacy was vastly easier to achieve in areas of West Semitic speech using "alphabetic" writing than it had ever been in the areas of cuneiform (and hieroglyphic) writing. Investigations by Aaron Demsky and others have shown that Israel, in particular, did not lag behind in the spread of literacy, and even the biblical text preserves traces of a spelling lesson, albeit in sarcastic form, when the prophet is mocked as a would-be school teacher, with "šaw for šaw, qaw for qaw, a little one here a little one there" (Isa 28:9-13).⁴²

The real reason for the absence of royal monuments from Israel must be sought elsewhere. Again the contextual approach can guide us. One of the most salient contrasts between Israel and its Near Eastern context is seen in the role of the king in the respective spheres. In the high civilizations of Mesopotamia and Egypt and in the Syrian, Anatolian and other areas in contact with them, kingship had arrived on the scene together with the other chief ingredients of civilization — urbanism, capital formation, writing, and metallurgy. In Egypt, the early kings were put on a virtual par with the gods themselves; in Mesopotamia, there was only a reluctant and temporary flirtation with the notion of divine kingship; among the Hittites, royalty had to die before being accorded divine honors.⁴³ But everywhere kingship was held in high honor; the king was the warrant for his country's weal or woe; his cultic leadership was a prerequisite; his death meant disaster,⁴⁴ especially if premature, as for instance in the case of Sargon II of Assyria.⁴⁵

³⁹ Shmuel Ahituv, Handbook of Ancient Hebrew Inscriptions (The Biblical Encyclopaedia Library 7; Jerusalem: Mosad Bialik, 1992) (in Hebrew).

⁴⁰ W. F. Albright, The Archaeology of Palestine (Hammondsworth: Penguin Books, 1949) 29.

⁴¹ M. T. Roth, Law Collections from Mesopotamia and Asia Minor (SBLWAW 6; Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1995) 134; below p. 352.

⁴² A. Demsky, "Abecedaries," COS 1 (1997) 362-365; Hallo, "Isaiah 28:9-13 and the Ugaritic Abecedaries," JBL 77 (1958) 324-338; Origins: the Ancient Near Eastern Background of Some Modern Western Institutions (SHCANE 6; Leiden: Brill, 1996) 37f.

⁴³ Hallo, Origins 207.

⁴⁴ W. W. Hallo, "The Death of Kings: Traditional Historiography in Contextual Perspective," Studies Tadmor (1991) 148-165.

⁴⁵ Cf. ibid., 162; Hallo, "Disturbing the Dead," Studies Sarna (1993) 185-192, esp. pp. 190f.

Not so in Israel. There the norm was theocracy: God was the only legitimate king ever since the exaltation of God celebrated in the archaic Song of the Sea (Exod 15; esp. v. 18). He assumed most of the roles played by the king, and especially the divine king, in the surrounding cultures; the other royal roles were shared in Israel by priesthood and laity. Only the military role was not so easily assigned elsewhere. When Samuel reluctantly agreed to institute a mortal kingship — more reluctantly, according to the biblical record, than God himself — it was in response to the popular demand: “Give us a king to judge us, like the other nations” (1 Sam 8:5). So far from being an institution coeval with the beginnings of (its) history, kingship was regarded as a late aberration, an accommodation to foreign norms forced on the people by external circumstances such as the threat of annihilation at the hands of enemies under more permanent dynastic leadership and more united than the disparate tribes of Israel. Samuel’s warnings of the excesses of kingship were so nearly fulfilled already in the United Monarchy, specifically under Solomon, that critics tend to regard them as inspired by that experience. And when the monarchical experiment had run its course after the failure of the divided monarchy, first in the North then in the South, it was not long before theocracy was reestablished. There were attempts to restore the Davidic monarchy as well but they ended in abject failure, and the hopes for a future restoration were relegated to a distant Messianic time which in Jewish belief is yet to come, despite or perhaps because of periodic attempts to hasten its arrival or even to declare it arrived.

In such an essentially anti-monarchic setting, there was little or no room for the type of royal propaganda that emanated from the royal chanceries elsewhere in the ancient Near East. In Israel, kings were well advised to ruffle as few feathers as possible. Other Near Eastern kings celebrated their achievements and the “sacraments” of their own lifetimes not only in monumental inscriptions but also in royal hymns, date formulas, and statuary. The bombastic tones in which they glorified their roles is unmistakable even when they assigned due credit to their deities. Israel may have tolerated an occasional hymn thought to be in honor of an unnamed king such as Psalm 45. But the lion’s share of its hymns were composed in honor of God, including the Psalms which began “The Lord reigneth” (yhwh mlk) as if in defiant assertion of the theocratic ideal.

In fact, Israel kept a critical eye on its monarchs: the northern kingdom which favored a kind of charismatic kingship was ever ready to throw over an unsatisfactory monarch in favor of a whole new dynasty; the southern kingdom, while it adhered to the dynastic principle of succession, passed severe judgement on its kings and, if the Deuteronomic point of view is taken as a guide, found the great majority of them wanting. Bombastic royal inscriptions, or other monuments to royal pride, might only have jeopardized the whole idea of monarchy, fanning the flames of distrust of and dissent from it that simmered just below the surface.

Was there, finally, room for some uninscribed or non-royal monuments? The recent discovery of a prototype of the priestly blessing, familiar from Numbers 6:24-26, inscribed on two small silver amulets in the form of scrolls from the cemetery at Ketef Hinnom, and dating to the mid-seventh or early sixth century alerts us to this possibility.⁴⁶ One may also cite the occasional weight inscribed with its size though never with the authority of a king or other official who had established that weight as in the ancient Near Eastern pattern.⁴⁷ References to ʔšyw and ʔšyh the king in newly published votive inscriptions have been tentatively linked to Joash of Israel and Joash of Judah respectively.⁴⁸ But we virtually lack the votive inscriptions or even the mortuary inscriptions which are the most common examples of private monuments in the Near Eastern context.⁴⁹

So to return to our starting point: when we speak today of “the Bible and the monuments,” we are no longer referring indiscriminately, like Saint Chad Boscawen a century ago, to all the evidence that archaeology has unearthed from the ancient Near East. Nor, certainly, do we refer to monuments of biblical Israel itself turned up by the spade on Israel’s own soil — seeing that these are virtually non-existent. Rather we mean those inscriptions from the surrounding cultures which were intended by their authors for all time, whether royal or private, building or votive or mortuary, weights or seals, rediscovered on their original stone and metal surfaces or preserved in copies on clay and papyrus. These monuments often throw welcome new light on the biblical record; they form a significant part of “the context of scripture.”

⁴⁶ G. Barkay, “The Divine Name Found in Jerusalem,” BAR 9/2 (1983) 14-19. Below, 2.83.

⁴⁷ Below, 2.81.

⁴⁸ Below, 2.47 and 2.50.

⁴⁹ For some examples, see below, 2.47B-D, 48, 52-54.

EGYPTIAN MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS

This page intentionally left blank

A. ROYAL INSCRIPTIONS

This page intentionally left blank

1. EIGHTEENTH DYNASTY INSCRIPTIONS

THE TOMB BIOGRAPHY OF AHMOSE OF NEKHEB (2.1)

James K. Hoffmeier

Ahmoose, the son of Baba and Abena, was a highly decorated naval officer from ancient Nekheb. In his tomb biography, he offers one of the most important historical witnesses to the rise of the 18th Dynasty. His distinguished career lasted from the reign of King Ahmose (1550-1525 BCE) into that of Thutmose I (1504-1492 BCE). Most significantly, his references to the battles against Avaris remain the only surviving records of the so-called "expulsion of the Hyksos." Following the fall of Avaris, Ahmoose speaks of besieging the city of Sharuhén in southern Canaan, thought to be the place to which the Hyksos elite fled. The three-year campaign in Canaan appears to have laid the foundation for Egypt's empire in the Levant upon which Thutmose I and III built.

The text of this biography has a number of grammatical complexities because the standard rules of Middle Egyptian grammar are not always followed, while Late Egyptian is not as yet in full bloom.

Introduction (lines 1-4a)

The naval commander, Ahmoose son of Abena, the justified (i.e. deceased), says, "let me speak to you, everyone and let me inform you of the honors that happened to me. I was rewarded with gold seven times in the presence of the entire land, and (given) male and female servants likewise. I was endowed with many great fields. The name of the brave is in that which he has done.¹ It will not perish from this land forever."

Service under Ahmoose (lines 4b-8)

He spoke the following: "I was reared in the city of Nekheb.² My father was a soldier of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Seqenenre,³ the justified, whose name is Baba, son of Rainet. Then I was made a soldier in order to replace him on the boat, 'Wild Bull,' during the lifetime of the Lord of the

Two Lands, Nebpehtyre,⁴ the justified. While I was a lad, before I had taken a wife, I slept in a net hammock.⁵

After this, I established a home. Subsequently I was taken to the northern fleet because of my bravery. Then I accompanied the Sovereign, life, prosperity, and health,⁶ on foot,⁷ following his travels on chariot."⁸

War against the Hyksos (lines 8-14)

"When the city of Avaris⁹ was besieged, I was brave on foot in his majesty's presence. Subsequently I was assigned to the boat 'Coronation in Memphis.'¹⁰ Then there was fighting on the water of Pajdku¹¹ of Avaris. Subsequently I made a capture, I having carried off a hand which was reported¹² to the Royal Herald. Then the gold of valor

¹ Rather than being a relative form (irt.n.f), this could be perfective pass. part., i.e. "what is done for him." Goedicke (1974:33) has argued for this understanding.

² Ancient Nekheb is located near modern el-Kab, south of Luxor.

³ Seqenenre Tao is the 17th Dynasty Theban ruler who apparently initiated the conflict with the Hyksos, and may have died in the process. His two sons, Kamose and Ahmoose followed him to the throne, the latter being the one credited with ousting the Hyksos and founding the 18th Dynasty.

⁴ The pre-nomen of Ahmoose, the first king of the Dynasty 18th according to Manetho's reconstruction.

⁵ The translation of smi šnw is problematic. "Hammock" is the translation first proffered by Gardiner (Gardiner and Gunn 1918:49) and has been followed by several subsequent translators (ANET 233; CDME 225). This rendering has been questioned by Goedicke (1974:34-35) who argues that Gardiner read into the Egyptian terms "a quaint projection of traditions of H. M. Navy onto ancient Egypt." He suggests this sentence might be translated: "I spent the night in clothing the ropes," acknowledging he is not certain what it means.

⁶ "life, prosperity, and health." This is the standard blessing after allusions to the living Pharaoh [Ed.]

⁷ Lit., "on my feet." Ahmoose might be considered a "marine." Once he sailed to the point of conflict, he fought on land.

⁸ This is the first occurrence of the word wrrt, "chariot," in an Egyptian text (Hoffmeier 1999:193).

⁹ The Greek vocalization of Egyptian Hwt w'rt, Avaris, the capital of the Hyksos, is identified with the site of Tell el-Dab'a (Bietak 1996).

¹⁰ Goedicke (1974:38) may be correct in proposing that h'm Mn-nfr refers to a secondary coronation ceremony for King Ahmoose at Memphis. However, his idea that the boat determinative after this expression refers to the journey to Memphis for this event rather than the name of the boat to which Ahmoose was assigned is not particularly convincing. Alternatively, perhaps, the name of the boat simply commemorates the coronation ceremony in Memphis.

¹¹ Recent investigations at Tell el-Dab'a have revealed that in ancient times, the Pelusiac branch of the Nile, a number of tributaries, canals and pools were in proximity to the city. "The water of Pajdku" is likely one of these phenomena.

¹² The grammatical form of "report," smi, is problematic. Below in line 13 of this text, the same construction occurs, but smiw is written. In the case of the first example, the i ending is peculiar, and may be an archaic writing for t. In which case, an inf. (Gardiner 1969 §281) or was given to me. Subsequently there was more fighting in this (same) place and I again made a capture there and carried off a hand. Then the gold of valor was given to me again. Then there was fighting in the south of Egypt¹³ in this city. Subsequently I carried off a prisoner of war after I went down to the water. Look, he was carried off as a prisoner on that course¹⁴ of the city, after I carried him across the water. It was reported to the Royal Herald. Subsequently¹⁵ I was rewarded with gold again. Then Avaris was plundered and I carried off plunder from there: a man, three maidservants, for a total of four, and his majesty gave them to me as servants."

Campaign to Canaan (lines 15-16a)

"Then Sharuhen¹⁶ was besieged for three years.¹⁷ Then his majesty plundered it. Subsequently I carried off plunder from there: two maid servants and a hand. Then the gold of valor was given to me. Look, the plunder of the men servants was given to me."

Nubian Campaigns (lines 16b-24a)

"After his majesty slew Asian Bedouin,¹⁸ he then sailed south to Khenet-hen-nefer¹⁹ in order to destroy Nubian tribesmen.²⁰ Then his majesty made a great heap of corpses from them. Subsequently I carried off plunder from there: two live men and three hands. Then I was rewarded with gold again.

a Josh 19:6

b Gen 10:6-7; 2 Kgs 19:9; Esth 1:1; 1 Chr 1:8; Isa 18:1; 20:3; Ezek 29:10, 30:4

c Josh 10:20

Look, two maid-servants were given to me. His majesty sailed north,²¹ he being joyful at the bravery and victory, because he had seized southerners and northerners.

Then Aata came to the South, his fate bringing about his doom, the gods of Upper Egypt taking hold of him. He was found by his majesty in Tenet-taa.²² His majesty carried him off as the prisoner-of-war, and all his people being easy prey. Subsequently, I carried off two Nubian fighters²³ as captives from the boat of Aata. Then one gave to me five persons as shares and a field of five *str*²⁴ in my city. The same was done for all the sailors.

Subsequently that enemy, whose name is Tetian, came, after he had gathered to himself trouble makers.²⁵ Then his majesty slaughtered him and his crew was annihilated.²⁶ Subsequently three people and a field of five str in my city were given to me."

Service under Amenhotep I (lines 24b-29a)

Then I transported the king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Djeserkare,²⁷ the justified. He sailed to Kush²⁸ b in order to expand the border of Egypt. His majesty struck down that Nubian tribesman in the midst of his army. They were carried off in neck constraints, without losing one of them.²⁹ The one who fled was laid low like those who did not exist.³⁰ c perfective pass. part. (Gardiner 1969 §361) are possibilities. For this translation, the latter option is followed. The w ending in the second occurrence might indicate the pass. sdm.f form, with the subject, "it" being understood. While the sense of both sentences is fairly evident, the precise grammatical understanding is uncertain.

¹³ Knu.

¹⁴ W^{et} usually means path, but could mean a water course (Wb 1:246-247). Ahmose's bravery is particularly noteworthy because he crossed over this canal (or tributary) to capture the prisoner who would have been closer to the city of Avaris.

¹⁵ This line (13) reads, "h^c. n rw mk. The placement of the particle mk after the initial element in the sentence is a problem, since it should stand at the beginning of a sentence (Gardiner 1969 §234). In lines 16 and 18, the formula wn.in rw begins the sentences followed by one beginning with mk. Perhaps a scribal error occurred in line 13 in which two lines, like those in 16 and 18, were conflated.

¹⁶ Sharuhen is located in southern Canaan to judge from Josh 19:6 which locates it within Simeon, the southernmost Israelite tribal territory. Albright (1929:7) proposed that Tell el-Farah (S) was Sharuhen. This identification has been challenged by a number of archaeologists in recent years who prefer Tell el-'Ajjul. Those arguing for this position include Kempinski (1974:145-152), Stewart (1974) and Weinstein (1981:241; 1991:106). Despite the compelling case that has been made for Tell el-'Ajjul, the case remains to be settled, as the archaeological evidence is too ambiguous (Hoffmeier 1989:182-184; 1991:117-120). It will likely take an inscription from one of these sites to confirm the identification of Sharuhen. [Rainey (1993) suggests the possibility of locating Sharuhen at Tell Abū Hurcira (Tel Haror).] (KLY) ¹⁷ Goedicke (1974:40-41) argues that m rnpwt hmt should be read as "in three years." For him this does not represent a three year long siege, but three consecutive years of campaigning. His reason for doing so is that the preposition m is not typically used to indicate duration of time. Gardiner (1969 §162.2), however, points to this very text to illustrate that m can be used to express time duration.

¹⁸ I.e. Mntyw str.

¹⁹ A region within Nubia (Gardiner AEO 1:48).

²⁰ I.e. hwnw-stryw.

²¹ Lit., "Sailing north by his majesty."

²² The determinative used with this toponym is the water sign, suggestive of a body of water, but its location is uncertain.

²³ These are Mg², apparently a tribal name that subsequently came to refer to a specific para-military fighting force (Schulman 1964:25).

²⁴ Approximately 3.3 acres.

²⁵ I.e. h^ckw ibw, "disaffected ones" (CDME 200).

²⁶ Lit., "into that which does not exist."

²⁷ The pre-nomen of Amenhotep I, the second king of the 18th Dynasty.

²⁸ During the New Kingdom, Kush is situated south of the Third Cataract (Trigger, Kemp, O'Connor and Lloyd 1983:256).

²⁹ Lit., "without a loss of them."

³⁰ Line 25 ends by saying that none were lost, followed immediately by "the one who fled." While to a western audience, such statements appear to be contradictory, clearly it was not to the Egyptians. A similar juxtaposition regarding enemies is present in Josh 10:20 where reference is made to the total annihilation of the populace of Makkedah, followed immediately by the mention of survivors. For further discussion of this phenomenon, see Hoffmeier 1997:41.

Now I was at the head of our army. I fought truly well, his majesty having seen my bravery. I carried off two hands which were presented to his majesty. Then his people and his cattle were sought out. Subsequently I carried off a prisoner of war who was presented to his majesty. From the 'Upper Well' I brought him back to Egypt in two days. Subsequently I was rewarded with gold. I carried off two maid servants as plunder, besides these which I had presented to him. Then I was appointed as a 'Warrior of the Ruler'."

Thutmose I's Nubian Campaign (lines 29b-35)

"Then I transported the king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Aakheperkare,³¹ the justified. He sailed south to Khenet-hen-nefer in order to destroy insurrection throughout foreign lands and to subdue those who enter from the dessert region.

I was brave in his presence in the rough water while pushing boats over the rapids.³² Then I was appointed as crew commander. Then his majesty, life, prosperity, and health, [...] Then his majesty raged like a panther concerning it. His majesty fired his first arrow, sticking in the neck of that enemy. Then these [enemies (?) [...]] fled, weakened by his Uraeus³³ which in a moment turned them

*d Gen 24:10;
Deut 23:4;
Judg 3:8;
Ps 60:2;
1 Chr 19:6*

into carnage. Their subjects were carried off as prisoners-of-war. His majesty sailed north with foreign lands in his grip. That feeble Nubian tribesman was hung upside down at the bow of his majesty's boat. They docked at Karnak."

Thutmose I's Euphrates Campaign (lines 36-39)

"After these things, there was an expedition to Retenu³⁴ in order to take vengeance throughout foreign lands. His majesty arrived at Naharin.³⁵ His majesty, life, prosperity, and health, discovered that enemy rallying troops. His majesty made a great heap of them. Countless were the prisoners-of-war which his majesty carried off from his victories.

Now I was at the head of our army. His majesty saw how brave I was when I carried off a chariot, its horse, and the rider³⁶ as a prisoner-of-war who was presented to his majesty. Then I was rewarded with gold again."

Conclusion (line 40)

"I am (now) elderly, having reached old age. My honors are before (me) a second time. [Bel]oved by my [lord?]. I [rest] in the tomb that I myself made."

³¹ The prenomen of Thutmose I, successor to Amenhotep I.

³² Sailing through the hazardous waters of the 1st and 2nd cataracts was notoriously dangerous. There was always the potential for loss of ships and human life. Hence, Ahmose's courage at this point of the journey was noteworthy.

³³ This is the cobra that is perched on the brow of king or attached to his crown.

³⁴ Retenu is a general term that include the area of Lebanon and Syria. Egyptian scribes could distinguish between upper and lower Retenu, but the dividing line between the two regions is unclear (Gardiner AEO 2:142*-149*).

³⁵ Aram Naharaim is attested in the Bible (see d above), referring to the land between the Euphrates and Balih or Habur. Nahar is a Semitic word for river, attested in Heb., Ug. and Akk. (KB 599).

³⁶ Lit., "the one who was on it."

REFERENCES

Text: Loret 1910; Sethe Urk. IV:1-11. Translations and studies: Albright 1929; ANET 233-234; Bietak 1996. Gardiner and Gunn 1918; Goedicke 1974; Hoffmeier 1989; 1991; 1997; 1999; Kempinski 1974; Lichtheim AEL 2:12-15; Schulman 1964; Stewart 1974; Trigger, Kemp, O'Connor and Lloyd 1983.

THUTMOSE III (2.2)

THE ANNALS OF THUTMOSE III (2.2A)

James K. Hoffmeier

These annals are among the most celebrated of ancient Egyptian historical texts. The annals are carved in raised relief on walls that surrounded the bark shrine of Amun which likewise was erected by Thutmose III. K. Sethe's collation of the annals (Urk. IV:625-756), despite its predisposition to offer speculative restorations, has served as the standard transcription. The historical and geographical aspects of the annals have been widely studied, and so have the forms and sources used in the composition of the annals. Earlier studies by M. Noth (1943) and H. Grapow (1947) laid the foundation for the more recent investigations of A. J. Spalinger (1974; 1977; 1982) and Redford (1986). Grapow believed that the principal source behind the annals was the daybook. Surviving daybooks date back to the Middle Kingdom and continue to be found through the New Kingdom. Redford (1986:103-121) was able to identify 16 examples of daybooks for study. The Tagebuchstil or "daybook style" is rather mundane with log-like records, characterized by the use of bare infinitives. A good example of this form is found in the 6th campaign, a translation of which is offered below.

Spalinger argued for the existence of a second source along with the daybook, viz. "the scribal war diary." Lines 93-94 of the annals refers to daily recording of the events of the campaign on a leather scroll. Unfortunately for Spalinger's ingenious suggestion, the scroll is not given a name. The fact that no Egyptian text mentions a "scribal war diary" leads Redford (1986:122) to reject Spalinger's hypothesis. Instead, Redford suggests that behind the detailed record of the first campaign stands a special document that complemented the daybook, "the Daybook (hrwyt) of the King's Palace" (1986:124-125). There is little doubt that military scribes recorded the acts of the king and other significant events while on the campaign, even "daily" as suggested by the statement in line 93. Additionally, the military scribe (ss mscw) Tjaneny reports that he followed Thutmose III on his campaigns, and states: "I saw the victories of the king which he made over every foreign land ... It was I who recorded the victories which he achieved over all foreign lands, it being put into writing according to what was done" (Urk. IV, 4, 9-10). Thus it is evident that whatever the name of the source or sources behind the annals may be, they were based upon eye-witnesses who immediately recorded salient details for future editing, expansions and recording on stelae and temple walls.

The same combination of long, detailed reports, like the Megiddo expedition, and short terse accounts, like most of the succeeding campaigns (cf. the 5th and 6th campaigns), is a feature also attested in Israel's military narratives in the book of Joshua (see Hoffmeier 1994). Joshua 1-8 contain lengthy, detailed reports about the initial Israelite campaigns in Canaan, whereas Joshua 10:28-11:14 is recorded in very stylized, repetitive expressions that look intriguingly like the Tagbuchstil. In a comprehensive, comparative study of ancient Near Eastern military writings of the 2nd Millennium BCE, Younger (1990) has shown that features they exhibit are very similar to those found in Hebrew military reports found in the Bible. This work, along with a study comparing the Joshua narratives with the Annals of Thutmose III (Hoffmeier 1994), demonstrates that the style and structuring of Hebrew military writings was influenced by ancient Near Eastern scribal tradition rather than an Israelite innovation by the Deuteronomistic Historian as some biblical scholars have opined (e.g. Weinfeld 1972; Van Seters 1990).

The First Asiatic Campaign

Introduction (lines 1-6a)

Horus, Strong Bull arising in Thebes; [Two Ladies, Enduring of Kingship like Re in the Sky; Horus of Gold, Mighty in Strength and of Holy Diadem]; the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Lord of the Two Lands, Menkheperre; Bodily [Son of Re, Thutmose (III), of Beautiful Form, given life forever].

His majesty commanded that the [victories which his father Amun gave him be recorded as]¹ an inscription in the temple which his majesty had made for [his father Amun in order to record] each campaign along with the booty [which his majesty]

a Josh 19:6

brought [from it and the tribute of] every [foreign land] which his father Re gave to him.²

The Initiation of the First Campaign (lines 6b-13a)

Regnal year 22, fourth month of winter, day 25: [His majesty passed by the fortress of] Tjaru³ on the first victorious campaign, [in order to drive off the attackers] of Egypt's borders in bravery, [in victory, in strength and justice].⁴ Now for a [great] period of years [...] anarchy, every one [showing hostility towards]⁶ his [neighbor] [...].⁷ Now it happened in other times that the troops which were there are (now) in the city of Sharuhem,⁸ while ¹ Throughout the Annals, the names of Amun and Amun-Re have been deliberately expunged by the iconoclasts of the Amarna period.

² The name of the sun-god Re is not obliterated here as with the case of Amun throughout this text. Clearly, Re's name was not offensive to the Aten iconoclasts.

³ Traditionally, Tjaru has been identified with Tell Abu-Sefeh, a few km east of Qantara East. Recent excavations at the site have revealed an impressive fort. However, only remains of the Greco-Roman periods have surfaced thus far. Around five kilometers north of Tell Abu Sefeh, excavations at Tell Hebua have unearthed a major New Kingdom site, including a massive fort. Hebua now appears to be the more likely site for Tjaru, Egypt's frontier town. For a recent discussion of these sites and the identity of Tjaru, see Hoffmeier 1997:83-188 and Abd El-Maksoud 1999.

⁴ This line can be restored with some certainty because of its appearance in lines 15-16.

⁵ The reading of this critical lacuna is disputed. Its importance lies in the description of the condition of the empire in Syria-Palestine that prompted Thutmose's immediate attention after his gaining full control of the throne upon the death of Hatshepsut. Redford (1979:338) made a careful study of this text and rejected Sethe's restoration (hḳꜣꜣ.n.sn ꜥꜣ pn wn m — "they ruled this land which was in"). Instead he proposes the reading to be iw rṯnw hṯyt — "Retenu was terrified." More recently still, Murnane (1989) has questioned the restoration of Retenu because the ꜥ sign is not clear, but still thinks the provenance for the unrest is Asia. He restores Sṯr later in the line.

⁶ This is Redford's restoration (1979:339).

⁷ This lacuna, like the one in the previous line, is very critical because it gives details about the conditions in Canaan that prompted Thutmose's military action. A number of different readings have been offered for the partially legible text. Sethe (Urk. IV, 648.4) restored it as wr.sn nty m hwt ꜣꜣꜣ, "their chieftains who had been in Avaris." This reading lays the blame for the current rebellion on descendants of Hyksos chieftains who had lived in Egypt until ca. 1540 BCE. While it is true that Hatshepsut in the Speos Artemidos inscription at a slightly earlier date blamed the Hyksos for the conditions of temples in Egypt, it seems unlikely that a century later, and several generations removed from the expulsion of the Hyksos, the current crisis in Canaan could be connected with the "chieftains who had been in Avaris." Because of the speculative nature of Sethe's restoration, it is now largely rejected, although for many decades, his understanding influenced some Egyptologist and Syro-Palestinian archaeologists into thinking that the destruction of MB II sites in Canaan resulted from systematic, vengeful attacks on cities associated with the Hyksos (for a recent defense of this views, see Weinstein 1981; 1991; for a critique of this position, see Hoffmeier 1989).

beginning at Yursa⁸ to the farthest northlands are in rebellion against his majesty.⁹

Celebration of the anniversary of the king's coronation at Gaza (lines 13b-18a)

Regnal year 23, the first month of summer, day four, the day of the Festival of the King's Coronation at the city "That which the Ruler Captured," [whose Syrian name] is Gaza.¹⁰ [Regnal year 23], first month of summer, day five, departing from this place in bravery, [in victory], in strength and justice, in order to overthrow that feeble enemy and in order to expand the borders of Egypt¹⁰ according to what his [brave] and victorious father [Amun-Re] ordained that he conquer.

War Counsel at Yehem (lines 18b-56a)

Regnal year 23, first month of summer, day 16 at the city of Yehem.¹¹ [His majesty] ordered a consultation with his victorious army in order to say the following: "That feeble enemy of Kadesh¹² has entered Megiddo,¹³ and he is [there] at this moment, having rallied to himself the chieftains of [every] foreign land [who had been] allies of Egypt,¹³ as well as (those) from as far away as Naharin in (or being) [...], Kharu¹⁴ and Kedy,¹⁵ their horses, their armies and [their people].¹⁶

b Gen 10:19;
Deut 2:23;
Josh 11:22;
13:3; 15:47;
Judg 1:8;
1 Sam 6:17

c 2 Sam 24:6

d Josh 12:21,
etc.

e Josh 12:21;
17:11; 21:25;
Judg 1:27;
5:19; 1 Kgs
4:12; 1 Chr
7:29

f Num 14:21;
14:28; Deut
32:4; Pss
63:4; 104:33;
116:2; Isa
49:18; Jer
22:24; 46:18;
Ezek 5:11;
14:16

And he says, so it is rumored, "I will take a stand to [fight against his majesty here] at Megiddo. (Now) tell me [what is your opinion?]"¹⁷ They said to his majesty, "What is it like, traveling on this road which becomes narrow, since it is reported, the enemies are there, standing [outside],¹⁸ [and they are] becoming more numerous? Will not the horses have to go in single file¹⁹ and [the army] and people likewise? Will our lead troops²⁰ be fighting (there) while those at the rear are standing around here in Aruna,²¹ not able to fight. Now there are two (other) [roads] here. One of the roads, it [is favorable to (?)]²² our [lord] and it comes [out] at Taanach?²³ The other is at the road north of Djefii,²⁴ so that we would come out north of Megiddo. Now then, let our victorious lord proceed on whichever of [them] is bes[t in] his opinion,²⁵ but do not make us go on th[at difficult²⁶ road."

Then intelligence reports [were brought] concern[ing that feeble enemy],²⁷ [...] concerning [that] plan which they had discussed previously.²⁸ What was said in the majesty of the palace,²⁹ "I [swear]³⁰ as Re loves me and my father [Amun] praises me, as my nose is refreshed by life and ⁸ Identified with Tell Jemmeh, located around 13 km. south of Gaza (Ahituv 1984:202-203).

⁹ This statement is somewhat obscure, but it appears to be reporting that the garrison which had been stationed at a point further north had been forced to retreat to the south, viz. Sharuh. It might be that when the Prince of Kadesh, the ringleader of the rebellion, occupied Megiddo (cf. line 20), he ousted the Egyptian troops.

¹⁰ Kmt.

¹¹ Yehem's name is preserved in the Arabic toponym Khirbet Yamma, situated 3 km. north of Sochoh, Tell er-Ras (Ahituv 1984:198). The distance traveled by Thutmose III and his army since the departure from Gaza is 72 km. in eleven days. Subsequently, Amenhotep II camped at this site.

¹² Not to be confused with Kadesh-Barnea in northeastern Sinai, but northern Kadesh, on the Orontes River, in Syria. The site is identified with Tell Nebi Mend (Gardiner AEO 1:137).

¹³ Lit. "who had been on the water of Egypt."

¹⁴ A general term for Syria, perhaps equivalent to Retenu (Gardiner AEO 1:180-183).

¹⁵ The land north of Alalakh and Aleppo, and west of Carchemish, running to the Mediterranean (Gardiner AEO 1:132-136).

¹⁶ The expression "army and people (rmj)" occurs several times in the Annals. "People" apparently refers to non-combat, support personnel essential to the mission.

¹⁷ This line was restored by Sethe as ntt m ib.tn, lit. "what is in your heart."

¹⁸ It is unclear whether this means the rebel forces are waiting at the other end of the Kina Valley, or in a general sense, outside of Megiddo. Regarding the former, Faulkner (1942:14) argued "'standing ready at its mouth'" (his translation) should not be taken too literally, "because Thutmose was able to lead this troops through the valley "virtually unopposed."

¹⁹ Lit. "horse after [horse]."

²⁰ Hf lit. means in front, and here "those in front," and hence has been translated "vanguard" (CDME 162; Lichtheim AEL 2:31).

²¹ The king's strategy session occurs at Yehem. Aruna, where the narrow pass begins, was still approximately 20 km ahead. Thus "here" (°) does not mean "here in Yehem," but at Aruna. Aruna is identified with Khirbet 'Arah, situated near the modern village by the same name (Ahituv 1984:67).

²² Sethe restored this break as "[beneficial to] our lord," a reading rejected as "certainly wrong" by Faulkner (1942:5), but he offers no alternative. Lichtheim (AEL 2:31) speculates a reading "[to our east]."

²³ Taanach is identified with Tell Ta'innik, located about 8 km southeast of Megiddo (Ahituv 1984:184-185), guarding one of the entrances to the Jezreel Valley. The close relationship between Megiddo and Taanach is well reflected in the Bible. Of the seven references to Taanach cited in note e, only Josh 21:25 does not also mention Megiddo.

²⁴ For Hebrew sphath, a town located at Khirbet Sitt Leila which looks out upon the northern road proposed by Thutmose's general (Ahituv 1984:204-205).

²⁵ Lit. "on the best for his heart of them."

²⁶ The word used here is šr, most commonly meaning secret or mysterious, but also difficult or hard, "schwierig" (Wb 4:551).

²⁷ Faulkner (1942:5 n. g) believes that Sethe's restoration is quite plausible.

²⁸ Apparently Thutmose's spies returned with a report on the placement of the rebel forces, which apparently influenced the king's decision on the route to take.

²⁹ šp s is an expression meaning protection (Wb 4:339), with the addition of the house determinative for the royal court or palace (Wb 4:340-341). Faulkner (1942:3) renders šp s as "royal tent," since on a military campaign, the king's tent was his traveling palace, ³⁰ Lit. "As I live." This oath formula is the same one used in Israel (cf. references in note f).

dominion. My majesty will proceed on this Aruna road. Let whoever desires among you to go on those roads of which you speak, and let whoever desires among you to come in the following of my majesty. Do not let them say,³¹ those enemies who are an abomination to Re, 'Has his majesty proceeded on another road because he is afraid of us,' so they will say."

They said to him, "May your father Amun, lord of the thrones of the Two Lands who is foremost at Karnak, do [what is in your heart]. See here, we are followers of your majesty: anywhere that [your majesty] goes, there a servant will be, behind [his] lord."

[His majesty gave the] (following) command to his whole army: ["Your victorious lord will] protect³² [your march on th]at road which becomes narrow[er]."] [His majesty had made] an oath, saying, "I will not let [my victorious army] go out in front of my majesty in [this place]." Now his majesty had determined³³ that he would go out leading his army in person. [Everyone] was briefed³⁴ on the marching orders, horses in single file, [his majesty] being at the head of his army.

The Stop-over at Aruna (lines 56b-82)

Regnal year 23, first month of summer, day 19,³⁵ awaking in [life] in the tent of life,³⁶ prosperity, and health at the city of Aruna. Journeying northwards by my majesty under <my> father [Amun-Re Lord of the thrones of the two lands] that he may [blaze the trail]³⁷ in front of me, Re-horakhty encourag[ing]³⁸ my victorious army], <my> father [Amun s]trengthened the powerful ar[m of my majesty]. [... Horus(?) as protection]³⁹ over my majesty.

Exiting (the narrow pass) by [his majesty] [at the front of] his [army], organized in many divisions, [without encountering] a single [enemy].⁴⁰ [Their] southern flanks were in Taanach, [while their] northern flank was in the sou[thern] bend [of ...].⁴¹ [Then] his majesty cried out concerning [this] r[oad] [...] "They are defeated," while that [feeble] enemy [...] ⁴² [text is virtually unreadable through the end of line 69] [Give] praise to him, [extol the power] of his majesty on account of the greatness of his powerful arm more than [any king].⁴³ [...] of⁴⁴ the army of his majesty in Aruna. Now the rear of the victorious army of his majesty was (still) at the [city] of Aruna, while the front was coming out into the Valley of Kina, they having filled the mouth of this valley.

Then they said to his majesty (life, prosperity, and health), "Look here, his majesty and his victorious army have come out and have filled the valley. Let our victorious lord listen to us this time. Let our lord guard for us the rear of his army and his people. When the rear of our army comes outside (the valley) to us, then we will fight against these foreigners and we will not be concerned for the rear of our army." His majesty secured the outside. [He] sat [...] there, guarding the rear of his victorious army. Now when the [le]ad troops had

³¹ Here this line is understood as m di k² sn, the negative m + negational complement, di, "do not let" (cf. Gardiner 1969 §341). Lichtheim (AEL 2:31) and Faulkner (1942:3) understand the first two signs to read as ink, "behold."

³² This word is partially preserved, the first sign, n, is preserved, while the smaller sign beneath it is obliterated. Sethe (Urk. IV 652 n. a) indicates that a number of signs could fit, including h, but he opts for h reading the word as nhm, meaning, "guard and protect" (Wb 2:296). Alternatively, if h is the missing sign, the word would be nh, also meaning "protect" (Wb 2:304). Either reading makes good sense in view of the fear of Thutmose's officers to go through the Aruna pass.

³³ If Sethe's restoration is correct, the line lit. reads, "his majesty placed in his heart," hence the meaning "determined" (CDME 155).

³⁴ Lit. "caused to know."

³⁵ Three days had passed since the consultation had taken place in Yehem. This distance from Yehem to Aruna should only have taken a day to travel. Since this date marks the beginning of day 19, Thutmose and his army might have arrived the night before.

³⁶ It has been suggested that this formula, which occurs elsewhere in the annals, as well as in the military documents of Amenhotep II and Ramesses II (see Hoffmeier 1977:16-17 for references and discussion), signaled the beginning of a new day in the daybook which served as the source for the Annals (Spalinger 1975:222). See also COS 2.1, note 6.

³⁷ The idiom, wpt w²wt (lit. "open the ways") occurs in the Armant Stela (line 12), but it is the king who blazes the trail whereas here in the Annals, it is Amun-Re who "blazes the trail."

³⁸ Lit. "making firm the heart."

³⁹ The falcon on the standard, a determinative that often accompanies the writing of Horus, is visible. The appearance of Horus here makes sense since the falcon usually flies over the head of the king in the iconography.

⁴⁰ Sethe's restoration is possible, but, in the absence of evidence, was rejected by Faulkner (1942:7). Lichtheim (AEL 2:31), however, follows it.

⁴¹ Understanding this critical line is problematic because of two lacunae. Sethe posits "of the Kina Valley" for the second break. It is hard to believe, however, that Thutmose could lead his troops right by the coalition's forces in the narrow pass without a skirmish. Lichtheim (AEL 2:35 n. 6) thinks that restoring Kina Valley may be erroneous.

⁴² The break at this critical juncture prevents one from knowing with certainty why the king was so elated. Thutmose's excitement may stem from either seeing no defenders as he exits the ravine, hence, "they are as good as defeated," or, there was such a small force posted that they were quickly overwhelmed. This latter point is preferred by Faulkner (1942:9 n. v) because he finds it unlikely that the Prince of Kadesh would not have placed some troops at this possible point of egress.

⁴³ Sethe restores this as [ntrw nbw] "all the gods." This reading is unlikely because the king is never described in terms superior to deity.

⁴⁴ Sethe's restoration reads: "[He guarded the rear of] the army of his majesty ..." Faulkner (1942:9 n. y) left this space blank, while acknowledging that the reading is possible. Lichtheim (AEL 2:31) adopts the reading.

finished coming out on this road, it was noon.⁴⁵

Setting up camp at Megiddo (lines 83-84a)

His majesty arrived south of Megiddo, on the banks of the Kina Brook, at seven in the evening. Then the camp was set up there for his majesty. Then he made the following command to the entire army, [saying]: "Make your preparations, get your weapons ready because one will engage in fighting with that feeble enemy in the morning,⁴⁶ because one [...]"

Resting in the enclosure⁴⁷ of life, prosperity, and health.⁴⁸ Making provisions for the officers and distributing rations to the attendants. Sentries were posted for the army, saying to them: "Be courageous, be courageous, keep awake, keep awake!"

Awaking in life in the tent of life, prosperity, and health. One came to brief his majesty,⁴⁹ "the coast is clear⁵⁰ and the troops north and south are also (safe)."

The Battle at Megiddo (lines 84b-89)

Year 23, first month of summer, day 21.⁵¹ The exact day of the festival of the new moon.⁵² The appearance of the king at dawn. Now orders were given to the entire army to deploy⁵³ [...]. His majesty set off on his electrum chariot, equipped with an impressive array of weapons, like a strong-armed Horus, Lord of Action, like Montu of Thebes, his father [Amun] making his arms victorious. The southern flank of his majesty's army was at the southern mountain [by?] the Kina [brook], and the northern flank was northwest of Megiddo, while his majesty was in the middle of them, [Amun] protecting his body in the melee and the strength of [Seth fills] his limbs. Then his majesty overpowered them while leading his army. They saw his majesty overpower them. They fled, falling headlong [toward] Megiddo with fearful faces, they having abandoned their horses and chariots of gold and silver in order that they be dragged and hoisted by their clothes into this city.

Now because the people had sealed this city against th[em],⁵⁴ they let down garments in order to hoist them up into this city. Now if only the army of his majesty had not set their minds to looting the possessions of those enemies,⁵⁵ th[ey] would have [taken] Megiddo at that time. Now (even) the feeble enemy of Kadesh and the feeble enemy of this city were being dragged, scrambling, to get them into their city. The fear of his majesty had penetrated [their limbs], their arms were exhausted, [for (?)] his Uraeus overpowered them.

Meanwhile, their horses and chariots of gold and silver were taken easily as [booty].⁵⁶ Their troo[ps] were lying around on (their) backs⁵⁷ like fish in the bight of a net as his majesty's victorious army tallied their possessions.

Now the tent belonging to [that] feeble [enemy] which was dec[orated with gold]⁵⁸ was plundered.⁵⁹ [...] The whole army was shouting, giving praise to [Amun for the victor]ies which he gave to his son [today, and they gave thanks] to his majesty, extolling his victory. They presented the plunder which they had carried off, hands, prisoners of war, horses, gold and silver chariots and pla[ti]

⁴⁵ Lit. "the shadow turned."

⁴⁶ Lit. "seven hours from the turning of the day," i.e. seven hours after noon, since the king and the lead battalion reached the exiting point of the valley at noon. In his commentary on this passage, Faulkner (1942:10 n. bb) proposes that Thutmose and the lead battalion departed Aruna around 7:30 A.M., arriving at noon, and the last battalion would have departed around 2:30 P.M. in order to cover the ca. 15-16 km by 7:00 P.M.

⁴⁷ The word here is ḥny. Three different words are used to describe the royal camp and tent. hy (line 83), ḥny (line 84) and im (lines 57 and 84) which apparently reflects a tripartite structure. When this terminology is viewed in the light of Ramesses II's camp at Kadesh, depicted at Luxor and Abu Simbel Temples (Wrezinski 1938-41:82, 170), the three-fold structure is evident. An outer wall marks the perimeter of the camp. hy appears to be the general term for this enclosure. The ḥny is possibly a smaller enclosure within the camp in which the king's tent (im) is located (Hoffmeier 1977:16, 18).

⁴⁸ This formula is the opposite of "awaking the tent" which pointed to the beginning of the day in the daybook (cf. note 36 above). The "resting" formula, which also occurs in the Memphis Stela of Amenhotep II (see COS 2.3 below), could be denoting the end of the daybook entry (Hoffmeier 1977:17).

⁴⁹ Lit. "one came to say." The formula "one came" (iw.nw) is a standard formula for introducing a report (Spalinger 1982:1-33).

⁵⁰ Lit. "the desert or waste-land is safe." Faulkner's translation, "the coast is clear," beautifully captures the meaning of this expression (1942:11 n. gg).

⁵¹ The reading "day 21" has been questioned by Faulkner (1942:11 n. hh) and others (e.g. Parker 1957) because if Thutmose's army had passed through the Aruna Valley on the 19th, they could not possibly have stayed undetected for another day before the battle began on the morning of the 21st. There is no doubt that this missing day poses a problem.

⁵² This lunar date is a pivotal datum in establishing Thutmose III's accession date, with 1504 BCE and 1490 BCE being favored by some (cf. Parker, 1957; Lello 1978; Casperson 1986), while others prefer 1479 BCE (Kitchen 1987; 1989; Hornung 1987).

⁵³ The verb ss, or smi, assuming the walking legs sign is lost in the lacuna, means "pass" or "spread out" (CDME 246; Wb 3:454). In the "Tale of Sinuhe" (B 123), in a military setting, this word appears to mean "draw" weapons. Hence, "deploy" here makes good sense.

⁵⁴ ḥr.s is visible, but there appears to be room for the n over the plural strokes. The reading would be sn, the third pl. suffix-pronoun.

⁵⁵ i.e. from the camp outside the city and the chariotry that was abandoned.

⁵⁶ Lit. "taken, made as easy prey." Faulkner (CDME 29) considered the expression ḥ²ḥ to mean "easy prey."

⁵⁷ Lit. "lying down in prostration." The determinative for both words shows a figure lying on its back.

⁵⁸ This restoration is likely correct, based upon the booty list. Line 97 mentions the seven tent poles that were decorated in silver.

⁵⁹ The seizure of the enemy's tent may have special military significance in Near Eastern context (cf. Hoffmeier 1991:18-19).

ones].⁶⁰

The Siege of Megiddo (lines 90-94a)

[...] [His majesty gave] orders to his army, saying, "Capture w[ell], capture w[ell], Oh my v[ic]torious [army!] Look, [all foreign lands are] placed [in this city according to the decree] of Re today, because every chieftain of all [northe]rn lands is bottled up within it, and because the capture of Megiddo is the capture of 1000 cities, so capture firmly, capture firmly. Lo[ok ...] [...] troop [comman]ders to equi[p their army in order to inform] every [man] of his position, they having measured [this] city, encircling (it) with a ditch, enclosing (it) with fresh branches of all their fruit trees.⁶¹ His majesty himself was at a fort east of th[is] city, [keeping wa]tch [over it, night and day]. [...] its enclo]sure being a thick wall [...] was its thickness. It was named "Menkheperre-Trapper-of-Asiatics." People were put on guard at his majesty's enclosure.⁶² They were told, "Be courageous, be courageous, keep awake, keep awake!" [Now] his majesty [...] Not o]ne of them [was allowed to go] out beyond this wall, except to come in order to knock on the door of their fortress.⁶³

As a matter of fact, everything which his majesty did to this city, to that feeble enemy and his feeble army, was recorded daily by its name, by the name of the expedition, and [by the] name[s] of the tr[oo]p commanders. [...] in order to put it into writing according to this command]. They are recorded on a leather scroll that is in the temple of [Amun] today.

The Surrender of Megiddo (lines 94b-95)

Now the chieftains of this foreign land came on their bellies in order to kiss the ground because of the awe of his majesty, in order to beg for the breath of their nostril because of the greatness of his powerful arm and the vastness of the awe [of Amu]n over every foreign land [...] foreign land. Now [all] the chieftains, [ca]rried off by the awe of his majesty, bore their tribute of silver, gold, lapis lazuli and copper, bearing grain, wine, cattle and flocks for the army of his majesty; one company of them carried tribute on the journey south. Now his majesty reappointed the chieftains of [every city ...].

g Deut 20:19-20

h 1 Kgs 22:34; 2 Chr 18:33

The Booty List (lines 96-102a)

[The list of booty which his majesty carried off from the city of] Megiddo:

3400 prisoners-of-war
83 hands
2041 horses
191 foals
6 stallions
... colts
The gold decorated chariot and golden (chariot) pole of that enemy.
The fine, gold decorated chariot of the chieftain of [Megiddo].
[...]
892 chariots of his feeble army, totalling 924.
The fine, bronze mail coat⁶⁴ of that enemy.
The fine bronze mail coat of the chieftain of Megiddo.
20 mail [...] coats of his feeble army.
502 bows
7 fine silver decorated tent poles of the tent of that enemy.
Now [his majesty's] army captured [the livestock of this city]
[...]
387 [...] cows
1929 cows
2000 goats
20,500 sheep

The list of that which was carried away afterwards by the king of the possessions of the palace of that enemy from Yenoam,⁶⁵ from Inuges, from Herenkaru,⁶⁶ and the property of those cities which had been loyal to him which were carried away because of [the awe of his majesty].

[...]
[the wives of that enemy along with those who were with him ...]
and 38 [Marayanu]⁶⁷ belonging to them.
87 children of that enemy and the chieftains who were with him and 5 Marayanu belonging to them.
1796 male, female servants and their children.
103 who surrendered and defected from that enemy because of hunger.
A total of 2503.

⁶⁰ The reading ncc seems certain (Faulkner 1942:14 n. rr), and means "smooth" or "undecorated" (CDME 126; Wb 2:208), and seems to refer to undecorated or plain chariots over against decorated types used by the kings or highest ranking officers.

⁶¹ The mention of "fruit trees" is especially interesting in that the Egyptians felt no obligation to preserve fruit bearing trees as a humanitarian gesture to the local population whereas the Hebrews are specifically instructed to discriminate between fruit and non-fruit bearing trees for siege equipment (Deut 20:19-20). They were not to cut down the former. Cf. also COS 2.2B, note 19a. and COS 2.113C, note 3.

⁶² Cf. note 47.

⁶³ This expression apparently means to surrender (cf. Lichtheim AEL 2:35, n. 8).

⁶⁴ Lit. "bronze tunic for fighting." The word "tunic" (mss) is written with a leather hide determinative, suggesting that the leather coat had small bronze plates attached to it. This type of armor is depicted on a Canaanite charioteer in the scene on Thutmose IV's chariot body.

⁶⁵ Located in southern Bashan (Ahituv 1984:199), possibly el-'Abadiyeh (Aharoni 1979:443). See COS 2.6, note 4.

⁶⁶ A city-state in Upper Retenu, Syria (Gardiner AEO 1:169).

⁶⁷ An Indo-European word for an elite chariot warrior (Gardiner 1961:203).

Additionally, precious stones, gold, bowls, and a variety of vessels. [...], a large jar of Syrian workmanship, vases, bowls, plates, a variety of drinking cups, large vessels, [x +]27 knives, adding up to 1784 deben.⁶⁸ Golden disks which were hand crafted and many silver disks, adding up to 966 deben and one kite.⁶⁹ A silver statue being formed [... statue of that enemy who] was there (?). A (statue) head of gold. 3 human-headed staves. 6 carrying chairs of that enemy (made) of ivory, ebony, ssndm-wood and decorated in gold. 6 footstools⁷⁰ of theirs. 6 large offering tables (made) of ebony and ssndm-wood. A bed of ssndm-wood decorated with gold and gems, (made) in the form of a bed⁷¹ belonging to that enemy, and decorated with gold entirely. An ebony statue of that enemy which was decorated with gold, the head of which is (made) of lapis lazuli. [...] bronze vessels, and many clothes of that enemy.

Harvesting the Fields of Megiddo (lines 102b-103a)

Now the fields were divided into plots and assigned to royal agents⁷² in order to reap their harvest. A list of the harvest which was taken away for his majesty from the fields of Megiddo: 207,300 [x + x] sacks of wheat, apart from gleanings taken⁷³ by the army of his majesty. [...]

The Fifth Asiatic Campaign (lines 3-5)⁷⁴

Regnal year 29. Now [his] majesty[was in Dja]hy⁷⁵ destroying foreign nations which had been rebellious towards him on his fifth victorious campaign. Now his majesty plundered the city of War[t]jet. [...] Giving praise to his majesty by his army. Giving adoration to [Amun] for the victories [which he] had given to his son. They were happy and pleased with his majesty more than anything. Thereafter, his majesty proceeded to the offering storehouse. Giving offerings to [Amun]-Re-Harakhty consisting of oxen, fowl, short-horned cattle [...] [on behalf of, life, prosperity, and health, the king of Upper and Lower Egypt], Menkheper[re], given life forever.

The list of the plunder which was brought from this city and from the troops of that enemy of Tunip:⁷⁶ 1 chieftain of this city; 329 Syrian warriors, 100 deben of fine gold, lapis lazuli, turquoise, and vessels of bronze and copper ...

The Sixth Asiatic Campaign (lines 9-10)⁷⁷

Regnal year 30. Now his majesty was in the foreign land of Retenu⁷⁸ on this 6th victorious campaign of his majesty. Arriving at the city of Kadesh, destroying it, cutting down its trees and plucking its barley. Proceeding from Shesryt,⁷⁹ arriving at the City of Djamer,⁸⁰ arriving at the city of Irtjet (Irtwt).⁸¹ Doing likewise against it.

The list of the gifts⁸² which were brought by the chieftain of Retenu because of the awe of his majesty ...

⁶⁸ One deben weighs 91 grams.

⁶⁹ This measurement is a tenth of a deben.

⁷⁰ The Egyptian word is hdm, a Semitic loan word (KB 225).

⁷¹ Apparently this word refers to a type of couch or bed (DLE 4:44). This word survives into Coptic where it means "bed, bier" (Černý 1976:330).

⁷² Lit. "agents of the palace, life, prosperity, and health."

⁷³ Lit. "cuttings which were taken."

⁷⁴ Text in Urk. IV, 685-687.

⁷⁵ This term seems to generally apply to the area of Palestine/Canaan, as compared with Syria, Hrw (Gardiner AEO 1:182*), but it is admittedly vague (Redford 1992:255).

⁷⁶ Located in Naharin (Gardiner AEO 1:179*).

⁷⁷ Text in Urk IV, 689-690.

⁷⁸ See COS 2.1, note 34.

⁷⁹ A north Syrian city in the region of Kadesh.

⁸⁰ A coastal city in North Syria (Gardiner AEO 1:136*).

⁸¹ A north Syrian city in the region of Kadesh.

⁸² The word used here is inw, lit. "that which is brought." Bleiberg (1996) has argued that the traditional translations, tribute and booty, do not take into account ancient economic considerations, and thus he opts for the meaning "official gift."

REFERENCES

Text: Urk. IV, 647-667, 685-687, 689-690. Translations and studies: ANET 234-238; Lichtheim AEL 2:12-15.

THE GEBEL BARKAL STELA OF THUTMOSE III (2.2B)

James K. Hoffmeier

Found in the temple built by Thutmose III at Gebel Barkal in the Fourth Cataract region, this stela offers an overview of Pharaoh's military accomplishments and hunting heroics. While much of what is reported on the stela is recorded in the Annals, it does, nevertheless, provide important supplemental information. For instance, the duration of the siege of Megiddo, not mentioned in the Annals, is given as seven months (line 20). The text moves back and forth between sober historical statements and grandiose claims, a common historiographic practice in Egyptian royal inscriptions (Hoffmeier 1992).

Of special interest is the mention of a miraculous star (a shooting star?) which appeared while on a foreign campaign. This "miracle" (bi(?)yr) overwhelmed the enemy, and spooked the horses, resulting in an impressive victory for Thutmose III. This miracle is clearly attributed to Amun-Re who was acting on the king's behalf (lines 36-37). On the use of divine intervention in ancient Near Eastern historiography, as well as the use of hyperbolic statements about military prowess and success, see Hoffmeier 1994; 1997:38-43; Weinfeld 1983:121-147; Younger 1990:165-266.

Royal titles (line 1a)

Regnal year 47, third month of the inundation season, day 10 under the majesty of Horus, Strong Bull arising in Thebes; Two Ladies, Enduring of Kingship like Re in the Sky; Horus of Gold, of Holy Diadem, Mighty in Strength; the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Menkheperre; the Beloved, Bodily Son of Re, Lord of Every Foreign Land, Thutmose (III), of Beautiful Form.

The king's bravery and might reviewed (lines 1b-8a)

He made it as his monument for his father [Amun-Re],¹ Lord of the Thrones of the Two Lands in the fortress (called) "Destroying Foreigners," making for him an eternal dwelling since he magnifies the victories of my majesty more than any king who ever existed, I having seized Southerners through the order of his *Ka*² and Northerners in accordance with his governance.

He created the Son of Re, Thutmose, Ruler of Thebes, may he be granted life like Re forever, the good god who captures with his powerful arm, smiting southerners and beheading northerners, who shatters the heads of evil characters, slaughtering Asian Bedouin³ and overthrowing defiant desert dwellers, who subdues the marshlands and strikes down the tribesmen of Ta-Seti,⁴ and vanquishes the foreign lands who attacked him.

He is one who faces aggressively the battlefield in a state of rage, all foreign lands being united, standing as one prepared to fight; there is no coward⁵ (among them) because of trust in (their) numerous squadrons, and no end of people and horses. With fearless hearts they came, their hearts being charged. The mighty powerful one overthrew them, the strong-armed one⁶ who tramples his enemies.

He is a king who fights alone, without a multitude to back him up. He is more effective than a myriad of numerous armies. An equal to him has not been, (he is) a warrior who extends his arm⁷ on the battlefield, no one can touch him.⁸ He is one who immediately overwhelms all foreign lands while at the head of his army, as he shoots between the two divisions of troops, like a star he crosses the sky, entering into the throng, [while a bl]ast⁹ of his flame is against them¹⁰ with fire, turning into nothing¹¹ those who lie prostrate in their blood. It

¹ Throughout this stela, the name and epithets of Amun-Re were erased during the period of Akhenaten's iconoclasm.

² The kꜣ or ku is one of the attributes of humans and deities. The traditional translation "spirit" is inadequate for it assumes Greek or Judeo-Christian anthropology. Some prefer rendering it as alter ego.

³ Šꜣt mntyw šft.

⁴ This is the name of the first southern nome of Egypt that included the area of present day Aswan (Montet 1961:13-14). This area served as the dividing line between Egypt and Nubia, and in earlier periods, Ta-Seti may have been considered to be within Nubia, and hence, during the New Kingdom, the name appears to include Nubia. Thutmose was hunting in the hꜣst of Ta-seti, either the desert or highlands region, the area away from the Nile Valley.

⁵ The word bhw means "fugitive," i.e. one who flees (Wb 1:467). In this military context, the word "coward" seems appropriate.

⁶ Tmꜣꜣ.

⁷ Prꜣ, lit. "extending the arm." This idiom may have its counterpart in the Bible; viz. Heb. š'roa' n'tūyā, "outstretched arm" in the Exodus narratives (Hoffmeier 1986:378-387; Görg 1986:323-330). The use of this expression, and its counterpart, yād h'zāqāh, "strong hand, to describe the struggle between Yahweh and Pharaoh, may deliberately have been chosen because of the Egyptian symbolic significance.

⁸ Lit. "there is not standing in his vicinity."

⁹ There is a small break in the text, which almost certainly reads wn thy.

¹⁰ The pronoun is feminine singular, referring back to wnu which we have rendered as "throng."

¹¹ Ir st m tm wn, lit. "making them into that which does not exist."

is his uraeus¹² that overthrows them for him, his flaming serpent that subdues his enemies, with the result that numerous armies of Mitanni were overthrown in the space of an hour, annihilated completely like those who had not existed, in the manner of those who are burned, because of that which the arms of the good god performed, great of might in the mêlée, who slaughters everyone, by himself alone, the king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Menkheperre, may he live forever.

He is Horus, the strong-armed one, an excellent fortress for his armies, a refuge for the people,^a one who subdues all lands when they invade,¹³ one who rescues^b Egypt on the field of battle, a defender who is not afraid of ravenous ones. He is a stout-hearted bull. His southern border is to the Horns of the Earth,¹⁴ to the southernmost part of this land, and the northern to the far reaches of Asia,¹⁵ towards the supports of heaven.^c With heads bowed they come to him in quest of his breath of life.¹⁶

Campaign to Mesopotamia (lines 8b-16a)

He is a king who is valorous like Montu,¹⁷ who captures but no one captures from his hand, who tramples all rebellious foreign lands, there was no one to protect them in that land of Naharin¹⁸ because its lord had fled out of fear. I hacked up his cities and villages¹⁹ and set fire to them, my majesty having reduced them to mounds. They will not be repopulated, my majesty having carried off all their people as prisoners of war and their cattle without limit and their property as well. From it I took grain and plucked their barley. I cut down all their orchards and all their fruit trees.^{19a} Their territory has been cut off, my majesty demolished it, it having turned into [...] on which there are no trees. Now my majesty traveled to the far reaches of Asia. I had many boats built of Ash-wood²⁰ on the moun-

^a Deut 33:27;
Pss 9:10[9];
46:2[1]; 62:8

^b Pss 18:17;
22:8; 143:9

^c 2 Sam 2:8;
Job 26:11

^d Jer 1:18;
Ezek 4:3

tains of the god's land²¹ in the vicinity of the Lady of Byblos²² which were placed on wagons²³ and oxen carted (them). They traveled in fro[nt ...] of my majesty in order to cross that great river which flows in between this foreign land and Naharin. But he is a king to be hailed because of his arms in the mêlée, who crossed the Euphrates after the one who had attacked him, at the head of his armies seeking that feeble enemy [from] the land of Mitanni. Now he is the one who flees in fear before his majesty to another distant land.

Then, my majesty set up my siela on that mountain of Naharin being hewn from the mountain on the western side of the Euphrates. There is no opponent of mine in the southern lands, northerners come bowing because of my awe. It was Re who ordained it concerning me, I having surrounded that which his eye has encircled. He gave to me the length and breadth of the land, I having bound together the Nine Bows,²⁴ the islands in the midst of the sea, the Aegean and rebellious foreign lands. I turned back in a southerly direction to Egypt,²⁵ having strong-armed Naharin, great was the terror in the mouths of the desert dwellers, their gates being sealing because of it, and they do not come outside in fear of the bull. He is a king who is a champion,²⁶ an excellent fortress for his armies, a rampart of iron^d [...], he attacks every land with his powerful arm, without a myriad of men to back him up, who shoots to hit each time he takes aim, his arrows do not miss, a strong arm, its like has not existed, a Montu who is brave on the battlefield.

Hunting Elephants in Syria (lines 16b-18a)

Here is another act of victory which Re ordained for me. He repeated for me great acts of bravery by the Lake of Ny.²⁷ He allowed me to corral a (herd) of elephants. My majesty fought them, a herd ¹² The cobra that regularly appears on the king's crown.

¹³ Lit. "when smiting the land before his face" (m hwi r² r hr f).

¹⁴ Also in line 28. The location and identity of this designation is uncertain, but it clearly represents the southern counterpart to the "supports of heaven" in the north. These expressions likely mean the northern and southern extremities of the earth.

¹⁵ The term used here is Sr.

¹⁶ Williams (1969:93-94) suggested that the Heb. expression "breath of life" (e.g. Gen 2:7; Lam 4:20; 2 Chr 35:25) was an Egyptianism.

¹⁷ War-god of Thebes whose cult gained prominence beginning with the 11th Dynasty.

¹⁸ See COS 2.1, note 35 above.

¹⁹ Wrry when written with the people determinative usually means "family" or "tribe" as is the case here. However, when the city-sign is used, the meaning is "village." We have rendered why as villages, despite the fact that the "peoples" sign is used, because of the parallelism with "cities" which immediately precedes it.

^{19a} See COS 2.2A, note 61.

²⁰ Traditionally, ʿš was thought to be "cedar" (Wb 1:228; CDME 49), although juniper has also been suggested (Gardiner AEO 1:8 n. 1).

²¹ This expression is often used for the land of Punt (Wb 5:225; CDME 293). Here, however, a Phoenician context is obvious. "God's land" seems to signify a place where exotic goods are obtained.

²² The local deity associated with the Egyptian goddess Hathor (Bleeker 1973:72).

²³ Wrry is the common word for chariot. Given the light frame and thin wheels of Egyptian chariots, their value for transporting heavy materials would have been limited. Clearly a cart is the vehicle in question.

²⁴ A popular expression for the enemies of Egypt.

²⁵ T² mri.

²⁶ Pr^c, lit. "one who extends his arm," i.e. is active, athletic.

²⁷ This land is located in Syria, somewhere south of Alalakh and north of Kadesh (Gardiner AEO 2:167*).

of 120! Never had the like been done by any king since the time of god, those who had worn the white crown. It is without exaggeration and without falsehood that I have said this. <I> did it in accordance with that which [Amun-Re, lord of the thrones of the Two Lands] ordained for me, who leads my majesty on the right path according to his excellent plans. For me he has united the Black Land and Red Land,²⁸ and that which the sun-disc²⁹ encircles is in my grasp.

The First Asian Campaign (lines 18b-27a)

Now let me report to you, pay attention folks! On the first campaign, he ordained for me the lands of Retenu³⁰ when they came in order to engage (in battle) with my majesty with a myriad of men, hundreds of thousands with the headmen of all foreign lands, standing on their chariots, comprising 330 chieftains, each one with their armies.

Now they were in the Kina Valley,³¹ ready, indeed, in a narrow pass. A fortunate thing occurred by my hand against them. My majesty attacked them. Whereupon they immediately fled, falling headlong. They entered Megiddo³² and my majesty shut them up for a period of seven months before they came out, imploring my majesty, saying "Give us your breath O our Lord. The people³³ of Retenu will never again rebel against you."

Then that feeble enemy and his chieftains who were with him, had all their children sent out³⁴ to my majesty with gifts and bearing much tribute of gold and silver, all their horses which were with them, their magnificent chariots of gold and silver, and those which were undecorated, all their mail armor,³⁵ their bows, their arrows and all their weapons of combat. It is these with which they came bearing (arms) in order to fight from afar against his majesty. Instead they brought them as tribute to my majesty. Now they were standing on their walls, giving praise to my majesty, seeking that the breath of life be given to them. Then my majesty had an oath of allegiance administered,³⁴

e Josh 12:21;
17:11; Judg
1:27; 5:19;
etc.

J Gen 33:4-9

g Gen 10:6-
7; 2 Kgs 19:9;
Esth 1:1;
1 Chr 1:8;
Isa 18:1;
20:3; Ezek
29:10; 30:4

saying, "Never again will we do evil against Menkheperre, may he live for ever, our lord in our lifetime, since we have seen his awe. It was because of his love that he gave us breath. It was his father [Amun-Re, lord of the thrones of the two lands?] who performed it, it was indeed not a human hand." Then my majesty permitted them to set out on the roads to their cities. Since I had taken their chariotry, they all set out on donkeys. I carried off their citizens to Egypt and their property also. It was my father who gave them to me, [Amun-Re] the magnificent god, the one who accomplishes successfully, whose plans do not fail, who sent my majesty in order to seize lands. All foreigners who were united, I overthrew them in accordance with his decree in the way he is accustomed to doing. He caused me to smite all foreigners without there being one to challenge him. It was my mace which overthrew the Asiatics,³⁵ my club which smote the Nine Bows. My majesty subdued all lands, Retenu being under my sandals, and Nubians being the vassals of my majesty.

Nubian and Levantine Tribute (lines 27b-32)

They pay me taxes as a unity, a levy of millions of taxes of numerous products of the Horns of the Earth, abundant gold of Wawat,³⁶ there being no limit to its amount. (Boats) were built there for the palace (life prosperity and health), each and every year, viz. Khementy-w-ships and boats, more than (the available) crews of sailors, besides the tribute of the Nubians which consisted of ivory and ebony.³⁷ An abundance of timber comes to me from Kush,³⁸ including beams of dome-palm, limitless furniture made of acacia from the Southland. My armies in Kush which are there in great number, hewed them [...] the multitude of dome-palm boats which my majesty brought in victory. [Timber] is also hewed for me in Djahy³⁹ each and every year, including real 'Ash-wood of Lebanon which was brought to the palace (life prosperity and health). An abundance of timber comes to me in Egypt⁴⁰

²⁸ I.e. Egypt.

²⁹ I.e. aten, the Aten.

³⁰ See COS 2.1, note 34.

³¹ This valley is identified with Wadi es-Sitt which leads into the Jezreel Valley (Ahluv 1984:159).

³² Lit. "foreigners."

³³ Lit. "all their tunics for fighting."

³⁴ Merschauer (1988:93-103) has made a compelling case for the expression sdf tryt meaning "to pardon"; however, the traditional interpretation remains a viable option.

³⁵ mw.

³⁶ During the New Kingdom, Wawat is located south of the First Cataract, and probably included the Second Cataract region (Trigger, Kemp, O'Connor and Lloyd 1983:256).

³⁷ The Egyptian word is hby, the source of the English word, ebony.

³⁸ During the New Kingdom, Kush is situated south of the Third Cataract (Trigger, Kemp, O'Connor and Lloyd 1983:256).

³⁹ This term seems to generally apply to the area of Palestine/Canaan, as compared with Syria, h³rw (Gardiner AEO 1:182*), but it is admittedly vague (Redford 1992:255).

⁴⁰ Kmt, lit., "the Black Land," a reference to Egypt's Nile Valley.

which is shipped south, real [...] of Negu⁴¹ with the choicest of the God's Land,⁴² sturdy [...] timber] reaching the palace without its season passing each and every year. My troops which are from the garrisons in Ullaza⁴³ come [...] which consist of 'Ash-wood from victories of my majesty according to the plan of my father [Amun-re] who ordained for me all foreigners. I let none (remain) of it for the Asiatics;⁴⁴ it is wood that he loves. He subdues in order that they testify to my lordship, they being troubled so that [...] might be pacified.⁴⁵

The Miraculous Star (lines 33-37a)

[...] my [majesty]. Pay attention, oh people of the south land, who are in the pure mountain, which is called "Thrones of the Two Lands"⁴⁶ among people, (yet) it is unknown; then you will know the miracle of [Amun-Re] in the presence of the Two Lands.⁴⁷ [...] not [...] sentries were in the very act of being posted at night in order to do their regular watch. There were two astronomers (present). A star approached, coming to the south of them. The like had not happened before. It shot straight toward them (the enemy), not one of them could stand [...] falling headlong. Now then [...] was behind them with fire in their faces. Not one of them retaliated;⁴⁸ no one looked back. Their chariotry is gone, they (the horses?) having bolted⁴⁹ in [...] in order that all foreigners might see the awe of my majesty.

With joyful heart I turned back in a southerly direction, having celebrated for my lord [Amun-Re] who had ordained the victories and who put the dread [of me?] [...] in my life time. Among the foreigners he placed the fear of me so that they might flee far from me. Everyone on whom the sun shines is bound under my sandals.

The king addresses his courtiers (lines 37b-42a)⁵⁰

My majesty myself says: [...] victory, that I was greatly skilled because of the valor and victory which my august father, Amun[-Re], Lord of the Thrones of the Two Lands, gave to me, he having made me lord of the five divisions, the ruler of that which the sun-disc encircles. Victory [...] the northerners, dread of my majesty to the southern territories. There is no road against me, he having sealed up for me the entire land. There was no limit to what accrued to me because of victory, he having placed my awe in Upper Retenu. [...] they [brought (?)] their gifts every season to me at the place where my majesty is. The mountainous areas mine for me what is in them comprising every fine product. What it concealed from other kings has revealed itself [for me (?) ...] every valuable precious stone, all kinds of sweet smelling plants which flourish in Punt, every fine product of the southland. Everything arriving as trade for my majesty belongs to him that I might fill his house and that I might compensate him (for) his protection. [...] on the battlefield. Moreover, I will put wonderful gifts of all lands from [...] which his valorous arm had taken, he having ordained it for me from every foreigner.

The courtiers respond (lines 42b-44a)

These courtiers [replied? ... Amun-Re, Lord] of the thrones of the Two Lands, the Great God of the beginning of time,⁵¹ the Primeval One who created your beauty and gave to you every land. Govern it for him, knowing that you have come from him. It is he, moreover, who led your majesty on the [right]⁵² path [...]

The king speaks (lines 44b-48a)

[I have placed] dread of me in the farthest reaches of Asia, without my messenger being hindered. It was my army who cut down the flag poles of the terraced-foothills of 'Ash-wood [...]. [...] for the monuments of my fathers, all the gods of Upper and Lower Egypt. My majesty hewed rowing boats of 'Ash-wood [...] on the shore of Lebanon in the fort [...] All of the chieftains of Lebanon [made ?]

⁴¹ The geographical area in which the city of Byblos (kpn) was situated (Redford 1992:43).

⁴² This expression is elsewhere used for Punt and the Byblos area, and thus seems to refer to a distant land from which exotic and precious materials and objects were obtained.

⁴³ A Levantine coastal city (Redford 1992:91).

⁴⁴ Stryw.

⁴⁵ The lacuna at the beginning of line 33 makes the translation of this sentence uncertain. An alternative to the translation offered here is "[their crime (?)] is pardoned." Faulkner also offers the meaning "pardon" for hnp (CDME 179), a meaning that could fit this context.

⁴⁶ This is the Egyptian name of the mountain called in Arabic "Gebel Barkal."

⁴⁷ Tmw is an imperfective pass. part. of the negative verb tm. Helck suggested a likely restoration for the lacuna — "the like of which had never been seen before" (1955:7).

⁴⁸ N gm = drt.f lit. means "could not find his hand," i.e. could not respond, and thus, retaliate.

⁴⁹ The word h²rw is extremely rare. It is not listed in Wb. Faulkner (CDME 184) includes it as a hapax, rendering it "bolt?"

⁵⁰ The following is an address by Thutmose, apparently to his courtiers, judging by the fact that the smrw appear to respond beginning at the end of line 43. Unfortunately, the verb associated with smrw hnp, "these courtiers," is also missing.

⁵¹ The reading of this lacuna is uncertain. Helck offered the meaning "the finest," but offered no explanation for the reading (Cummings 1982:5).

⁵² Lit. "the first occasion," sp tpy, a synonym for creation.

⁵³ In line 18 it is stated that "(Amun-Re) leads my majesty on the right path according to his excellent plans" — šm hm.i hr mn nfr m šrw.f mnj. In some form this line is apparently being repeated by the courtiers.

⁵⁴ Believing that Egyptian naval operations were based at Byblos, Helck thought that this city might have been named in the lacuna (1961:11).

the royal boats in order that their workers⁵⁵ sail south in order to bring all the wonderful things [...] belonging to the [...] ⁵⁶ land to the Palace (life, prosperity, and health). The chieftains of [...]. [It is] the chieftains of Retenu who drag the flagpoles with oxen to the shore; it is they who come with tribute to the place where his majesty is, the Royal Residence in [...] bearing all the fine products which are brought as wonderful things of [the south], being taxed from the required, annual tribute just like all the underlings of my majesty.

The people extol the king (lines 48b-50)

What the people said [...] [...]. Foreigners [...] your awe. Your battle-cry reaches to the Horns of the Earth, respect of you makes their hearts quiver, reaching (?) [...] the people [...] [...] all [Nub(?)]ians who would transgress your plans. It is your father [...]. His majesty was in [...].

n. 3).

⁵⁵ Lit. "those with them," int(y).sn. "Them" must refer back to the chieftains of Lebanon, a reference to their servants or workers who transported the tribute back to Egypt.

⁵⁶ The sign is unclear.

REFERENCES

Text: MFA 23.733; Reisner 1933:24-29, pls. iii-v; Helck 1955: §§1227-1243 and de Buck 1970:56-63; Translations: ANET 238; Cummings 1982:1-7.

THE ARMANT STELA OF THUTMOSE III (2.2C)

James K. Hoffmeier

The Armant Stela of Thutmose III was discovered in the temple of Montu at Armant, near ancient Thebes. The inscription can be classified as a summary or collection (shwy) of the king's athletic prowess, and it recalls the heroic events of the first campaign. "Summaries" are well attested as a scribal reporting device.¹ As with the Annals and the Gebel Barkal Stela, reference is specifically made to the narrow Kina Valley through which Thutmose led his troops to attack the rebel alliance at Megiddo. Mention is also made to the Euphrates campaign, the king's eighth which occurred in year 33. While there are two year 22 dates in the text, towards the end of the stela, year 29 also appears. The span of time covered by the collection of reports, then, is at least eleven years. The Armant Stela does not provide historical information beyond what is known from the Annals and Gebel Barkal Stela, but its reports on the king's hunting exploits are the most thorough, and references to shooting arrows through a copper target set the standard for Amenhotep II to emulate.

Introduction (lines 1-3)

Long live the Horus: Strong Bull arising in Thebes; Two Ladies, Enduring of Kingship like Re in the Sky; Horus of Gold, of Holy Diadem, Mighty in Strength; the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Lord of Action, Menkheperre; the Bodily Son of Re, Thutmose (III) Ruler of Truth, who is loved by Montu of Thebes who resides in Armant,² may he live eternally. Regnal year twenty-two, second month of winter, day 10. A summary of the acts of bravery and victory of that which this good god performed comprising every act of athleticism³ beginning with the first generation of that which the Lord of the gods and the Lord of Armant, who exulted in his victories, did for him in order to have his bravery recounted for millions of years to come, besides the acts of athleticism which his majesty performed through time. If they were reported specifically by occurrence,⁴ they would be too many to record.

Body (lines 4-17)

When he fired (arrows) at a metal ingot, every shaft was split like marsh papyrus. Subsequently he placed an example of it in the temple of Amun, (it) being a target of hammered copper three fingers thick,⁵ his arrow in it, it having passed through it, he causing three palms⁶ to come out the back in order to cause his followers to pray for the strength of his arms in valor and victory. It is without

¹ See Younger 1990:249-253.

² Egyptian Int mnt, the temple site where this stela was discovered. The present day town of Armant is located 13.5 km south of Luxor (Gardiner AEO 2:22*).

³ See The Gebel Barkal Stela" (COS 2.4), note 7 above.

⁴ Lit. "according to its name."

⁵ Approximately 56 mm.

⁶ Approximately 225 mm.

deception and fabrication, and without exaggerated claims that I state the truth regarding that which he performs among and in front of his whole army. Should he take time for recreation in (the form of) hunting in any foreign land, more numerous is the amount which he bags than the take of his entire army! He slew seven lions by shooting arrows in an instant and carried off a herd of twelve wild bulls in one hour after breakfast time occurred, their tails being (displayed) behind him.⁷ As he was returning from Naharin,⁸ he finished off 120 elephants in the highlands of Ny.⁹ He ferried across the Euphrates River¹⁰ and trampled the cities on both sides, they being destroyed forever with fire. On the [east] side he erected a victory stela. He felled a rhino by shooting (arrows) on the southern highland of Ta-Seti,¹¹ after he proceeded to Miu¹² in order to search for the one who had rebelled against him in that land. He set up a stela there, just as he had down in the farthest reaches of [Asia]. His majesty didn't delay in going to the land of Djahy¹³ in order to slay the rebels who

a Gen 24:10;
Deut 23:5;
Judg 3:8;
Ps 60:2[1];
1 Chr 19:6

b Josh 12:21;
17:11; Judg
1:27, 5:19

were there and to give gifts to those who are loyal to him. Indeed, the names attest [...] every [...] at its season. His majesty returns each occasion, his attack happens in bravery and victory, he causing that Egypt be in its (original) state, just as it was when Re was in it as king.¹⁴ [Regnal year 22, fourth month of winter, day 20(?)] from Memphis¹⁵ in order to slay the lands of feeble Retenu¹⁶ on the first occasion of victory. It was his majesty who blazed the trail and broke open all its roads for his army after [...] made [...] Megjiddo.¹⁶ At the head of his whole army, his majesty entered on that road which narrows greatly, while all foreign lands gathered and were standing ready at its opening [...] falling exhausted, fleeing headlong toward their cities along with the chieftain who was in [...] for them, begging [...], bearing their gifts on their back. With a joyful heart, his majesty returned, this entire land having become [his] vassal [...] Asiatic[s] at one time bearing tribute [...] Regnal year 29, 4th month of winter, day [...] [the rest of the text is completely lost]

⁷ From the earliest portrayals of Egyptian kings, e.g., the Scorpion and Narmer mace heads, they are shown wearing a bulls tail behind them. Even earlier, on the "Hunters Palette," each hunter is shown with a tail attached to the back of their kilts. Apparently, this very early practice was continued in the New Kingdom too.

⁸ See COS 2.1, note 35 above.

⁹ Thutmose I had also hunted elephants in the land of Ny. This land is located in Syria, somewhere south of Alalakh and north of Kadesh (Gardiner AEO 2:167*).

¹⁰ Eg. irw ph r wr.

¹¹ See COS 2.2B, note 4.

¹² An unidentified Nubian site in the Third Cataract region (Trigger, Kemp, O'Connor and Lloyd 1983:257).

¹³ This term seems to generally apply to the area of Palestine/Canaan, as compared with Syria, h³rw (Gardiner AEO 1:182*), but it is admittedly vague (Redford 1992:255).

¹⁴ In column I of the Turin Canon (COS 1:37D) the pre-dynastic rulers are listed, and they are the gods, including Osiris, Seth, Horus and Thoth. Re may well have been the first god listed, but the top of column I is completely lost. It appears that the statement used here alludes to this glorious age when the gods ruled on earth.

¹⁵ Lit. "White Walls," another name for Memphis (Montet 1957:27-29).

¹⁶ See COS 2.1, note 34.

REFERENCES

Text: Mond and Myers 1940:182, pls. ciii, lxxxviii; Helck 1955 §§1244-1247; de Buck 1970:64-65. Translations and studies: ANET 234; Cummings 1982:7-9.

THE MEMPHIS AND KARNAK STELAE OF AMENHOTEP II (2.3)

James K. Hoffmeier

Amenhotep II (1427-1400 BCE) succeeded his father, Thutmose III, and continued his father's military policy in Syria-Palestine. In so doing, Amenhotep assured that the empire he received would be successfully maintained by his successors. He conducted at least two military campaigns into the Levant which are reported on two nearly identical stelae, the one discovered at Karnak, and the other at Memphis. The translation offered here is based upon the Memphis text. The campaigns are dated to regnal years 7 and 9, and are especially of interest to students of historical geography of Syria-Palestine. The content of the stela combines the more sober reports of the annalistic style, mingled with some of the exaggerated claims of accomplishment, like those of Thutmose III in his Gebel Barkal stela. For a discussion of the differences in style and implications for Biblical studies, see the introductory comments on the Annals of Thutmose III.

Date and introduction (lines 1-3a)

Regnal year 7, 1st month of summer, day 25 under the majesty of Horus, Strong Bull with Sharp Horns; Two Ladies, of Mighty Splendor who was coronated in Thebes; Golden Horus, Who Conquers with His Might in all lands; The King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Lord of the Two Lands, Aakherperu-re; Son of Re, Lord of Diadems, Possessor of a Powerful Arm,¹ Amenhotep, Divine Ruler of Heliopolis,² may he be given life forever.

The Good God, the likeness of Re, the Son of Amun upon his throne. He formed him with strength and might more than that which exists. His mace struck Naharin,³ while his bow trampled Nubia,⁴ who conquered with strength and might like Montu,⁵ being armed with his weapons. His heart is satisfied when he sees them after he decapitated the trouble makers.

Campaign to Shamashu-Adom (lines 3b-4a)

His majesty went to Retenu⁶ on his first victorious campaign in order to widen his border and to give gifts to those who were loyal to him. His face was powerful like Bastet,⁷ like Seth⁸ in his moment of rage. His majesty arrived at Shamashu-Adom.⁹ He hacked it up in a brief moment like a lion roaming the hills, his majesty being in his chariot which is called, "Amun is Valiant ..."¹⁰

A record of that which [his majesty] captured [on that day]: 35 live Asiatics and 22 bulls.

Campaign in Syria (lines 4b-15a)

His majesty crossed the Orontes (River) on water, a Exod 6:25, etc.

b Ezek 30:17

c Deut 32:24, etc.

wading like Resheph.¹¹ Subsequently he turned himself around to view the rear guard of his army. He noticed a few Asiatics¹² coming, creeping forward, equipped with weapons for fighting in order to attack the army of the king. His majesty charged after them like the swoop of the divine falcon. They halt, their hearts becoming weak, as one after the other fell on his companion, including their commander. There was no one with his majesty except himself with his valiant, powerful arm.¹³ His majesty slew them with arrows.

It was in a state of elation that he returned, like valiant Montu he celebrated. A record of that which his majesty captured on that day: 2 chieftains, 6 Maryanu,¹⁴ including their chariots, horses and all their weapons of war.

Journeying south, his majesty arrived at Ny.¹⁵ Its chieftain and all his people, male and female alike surrendered to his majesty, their eyes fixed on staring.

His majesty arrived at Ugarit.¹⁶ He surrounded all those who defied him. He slew them like those who did not exist, being placed beside those who lay prostrate. Resting in the tent¹⁷ of his majesty in the area of Tjarkha¹⁸ on the east of Shasherem. Mendjat was plundered.

His majesty arrived at Hatjera.¹⁹ Its chieftain surrendered²⁰ to his majesty, with his children and his possessions. Peace offerings were presented to his majesty by (the land) of Inka.

¹ Nb hps. The use of this expression may have a counterpart in the Bible, viz. yad k'zakah, "strong hand." It is used to describe the struggle between Yahweh and Pharaoh in the Exodus narrative, and may deliberately have been chosen because of the Egyptian symbolic significance (Hofmeier 1986:378-387; Görg 1986:323-330).

² Eg. imnw, the cult center of the sun-god Atum-Re, located north of Memphis. The biblical writers were aware of this important city (Gen 41:45, 50; 46:20), calling it ḥn, and symbolically "house of the sun" (Jer 19:8).

³ See COS 2.1, note 35 above.

⁴ nhsy, "land of Nehesy." The name Phinehas, Aaron's grandson, is derived from this word (Exod 6:25; Num 31:6; Judg 20:28; etc.) (Kitchen 1982a).

⁵ Cf. above, COS 2.2B, note 17.

⁶ COS 2.1, note 34.

⁷ Cat goddess whose name is reflected in her cult center, Bubastis, a northeast Delta city. This name is attested as Pi-Beseth (Ezek 30:17).

⁸ The deity who was associated with storm (and hence identified with Canaanite Baal) and the desert regions.

⁹ While attested with some frequency in Egyptian texts, the identity of this site remains uncertain. It has been identified with Beth-Shemesh of Josh 19:22 in northeastern Issachar which might be Tell el Abeidiyeh (Ahituv 1984:174-176).

¹⁰ The remainder of the name appears to be corrupt. While several different readings have been proposed, there is no consensus about the reading (see Helck's note on Urk. IV, 1302.3 in Cummings 1982:32).

¹¹ A Levantine storm-god who is also associated with warfare.

¹² Sryw.

¹³ Cf. note 1.

¹⁴ See COS 2.2A, note 67.

¹⁵ See COS 2.2B, note 27.

¹⁶ Read ik²fy, but is thought by some to be the famous coastal city of northern Syria (Cummings 1982:30; Gardiner AEO 1:164*), while recognizing that the 'r' is omitted. Ugarit is located at modern Ras Shamra on the coast of Syria, north of Byblos.

¹⁷ This formula is the opposite of "awaking the tent" which pointed to the beginning of the day in the daybook (cf. COS 2.2A, note 36). The "resting" formula, which also occurs in the Annals, line 49, could be noting the end of the day book entry (Hofmeier 1977:17).

¹⁸ The identity of the toponyms in line 9 are not known, but they appear to be in the vicinity of Ugarit.

¹⁹ The location of Hatjera and Inka is uncertain; however, Amenhotep appears to be moving from Ugarit and the coastal area of Syria-Lebanon in a southwesterly direction towards Kadesh (cf. n. 21).

²⁰ Lit., "came out in peace."

His majesty arrived at Kadesh.²¹ " Its chieftain surrendered. They were made to swear an oath of allegiance.²² and all their children [likewise]. Then his majesty shot (arrows) at a target of hammered copper in their presence on the south side of this town. Then one (i.e. the king) went hunting in woods of Lebiu.²³ Gazelles, m²swt,²⁴ hares, an endless number of wild ass were bagged.

His majesty went by chariot²⁵ to Khasbu, alone, without a companion. In just a short time he returned from there. He carried off 16 live Maryanu at the rear of his chariot, 20 hands at the foreheads of his horses, and 60 bulls being led in front of him. Gifts were given²⁶ to his majesty by this city.

Now at that time, his majesty traveled south within the Valley of Sharon.²⁷ He discovered a messenger of the chieftain of Naharin carrying a document around his neck. He carried him off as a prisoner-of-war at the rear of the chariot. His majesty went from Sibyn²⁸ on chariot²⁹ to Egypt,³⁰ a Marya(n)u being a prisoner-of-war on his horse alone with him.³⁰

The Arrival at Memphis and the Record of the Booty (lines 15b-17a)

His majesty arrived at Memphis, he being elated [as] a strong bull.³¹ A record of this booty: 550 Maryanu, 240 of their wives; 640 Canaanites; 232 sons of chieftains; 323 daughters of chieftains; 270

2 Sam 24:6

6 Isa 33:9;
35:2; 1 Chr
5:16; 27:29

6 Josh 12:18;
13:4; 19:30;
1 Sam 4:1;
29:1; 1 Kgs
20:26, 30;
2 Kgs 13:17

concubines of the chieftains of every foreign land, including 2214 of their festive, silver and gold arm jewelry; 820 horses, 730 chariots including all their weapons of war. Now at that time the divine wife, the queen and princ[ess] [...] were watching the victories of his majesty.

Second Asiatic Campaign (lines 17b-20a)

Regnal year 9, 3rd month of winter, day 25. His majesty went to Retenu on his second victorious campaign to the city of Aphek.³² " It (i.e. the people of the city) came out with gifts because of the great victories of pharaoh,³³ life, prosperity, and health. His majesty [we]nt on his chariot, equipped with weapons of combat to the city of Yehem.³⁴ At this time his majesty plundered the villages of Mapesin³⁵ and the villages of Khatjen and the two cities on the west of Socho.³⁶

Now at that time the ruler raged like a divine falcon, his chariots were shooting like a star in the sky. His majesty entered (the fray). Its chieftains, children and wives were carried off as prisoners-of-war, and all its inhabitants likewise, and all its property without end: its cattle, its chariots, and all the herds in front of him.

The King's Dream (lines 20b-22a)

A Pleasant thing which happened to his majesty: The majesty of this august god, Amun-Re, Lord of the Throne of the Two Lands came before his ²¹ COS 2.2A, note 12.

²² Morschauser (1988:93-103) has made a compelling case for the expression stf tryt meaning "to pardon"; however, the traditional interpretation remains a viable option.

²³ Situated near one of the sources of the Orontes river in Syria. The name is preserved in the Arab village of Labwe (Ahituv 1984:131).

²⁴ An unidentifiable wild animal.

²⁵ Only the horse sign is written, leading Helck to translate this line as "His majesty set out on horseback" (Cummings 1982:31). The fact that he returns from this solo mission with captives behind his chariot (wrrt) suggests that rather than reading ssm, for horse, it is an abbreviation for hry, chariot. Edel (1953:116) also reads the horse sign as hry. This interpretation makes sense in view of the fact that horseback riding during the New Kingdom was rather limited (Schulman 1957).

²⁶ Read rdi.t(w) htpw. This could mean "peace was offered," i.e. they surrendered, or, as we have rendered it "gifts were given." Htpw can mean both gifts or offerings, and peace (CDME 179-180). There are numerous examples in the Bible of kings presenting gifts, usually gold and silver, to an advancing king as a sign of capitulation. Toi of Hamath sent his son, Joram, to David after the Israelites had defeated Hadadezer of Damascus. 2 Sam 8:10 mentions that utensils of silver, gold and bronze were offered. Similarly, Ahaz of Judah sent "silver and gold" as a present to Tiglath-pileser III (2 Kgs 16:8), thus becoming his vassal so that the Assyrian would fight against Israel and Damascus who had been attacking Jerusalem. Likewise, Hezekiah of Judah gave gold and silver to Sennacherib to prevent him from further destruction of his kingdom (2 Kgs 18:14-15). Based on this practice, the ruler of Khasbu may have been doing the same to Amenhotep II.

²⁷ It is unclear whether this is the name of a settlement, which is otherwise unattested, or a geographical feature of some sort.

²⁸ Cf. n. 25.

²⁹ T² nri.

³⁰ In this case the horse sign could actually be read ssm. On a stela showing the triumphant Amenhotep III returning from a Nubian campaign in his chariot (Petrie 1897 pl. x), four Nubian captives are depicted on backs of the two horses, and another prisoner is riding on the chariot pole between the chariot body and the rear ends of the horses. Based upon this scene, Amenhotep II may have been displaying his captives similarly.

³¹ The epithet "strong bull" plays on the king's Horus name (cf. line 1).

³² Located in the Valley of Acco, south of the city of Acco, and north of the Carmel range (Ahituv 1984:62).

³³ The title, Pharaoh, pr ², lit. "great house," is an epithet that initially applied to the palace as early as the Old Kingdom (WB 1:516) and only becomes attached to the king sometime in middle of the 18th Dynasty. From Genesis onwards in the Bible, the title "Pharaoh" is the Heb. vocalization of this Eg. expression.

³⁴ Yehem's name is preserved in the Arabic toponym Khirbet Yamma, situated 3 km. north of Sochoh which is found at Tell er-Ras (Ahituv 1984:198). Thutmose III mentions stopping over at this site on his way to Megiddo. Cf. COS 2.2A, note 11.

³⁵ Villages were scattered throughout the land of Canaan; most of their names have not survived. In Amenhotep's records he mentions several. Villages were linked to urban centers, a point not missed in the Bible (Num 21:25, 32; Deut 2:23; 3:5; Josh 13:28; 15:32-62; Judg 1:27).

³⁶ Socho is an important site on the Via Maris. It is identified with Tell er-Ras/Khirbet Shuweikat (Ahituv 1984:178).

majesty during sleep, in order to encourage³⁷ his son, Aakheperure. His father Amun-Re was the guardian of his body, while protecting the ruler.

Military Campaign in the Levant (lines 22b-29a)

His majesty went out on his chariot at dawn to the city of Iturn and Migdalen.³⁸ Subsequently, his majesty, life, prosperity, and health, was powerful like the power of Sakhmet³⁹ and Theban Montu. He carried off 34 of their chieftains, 57 Maryanu, 231 living Asiatics, 372 hands, 54 horses, 54 chariots, including all their weapons of war, all their champions of Retenu, their children, their wives and all their property. After his majesty reviewed the very great amount of booty, they were turned into prisoners-of-war. Two trenches were made all around them and, look, they were filled with fire. His majesty watched over them until the break of day, his battle axe being in his right hand, he being alone with no one with him. At that time, the army was far from him, except for the personal servants of pharaoh.

Now after daybreak of the second day, his majesty set out on his chariot at dawn, equipped with the power and panoply of Montu on the anniversary of his majesty's coronation.

Then Anakharat⁴⁰ was plundered. A record of that which his majesty alone captured on that day: 17 living Maryanu, 6 children of the chieftains, 68 living Asiatics, 123 hands, 7 teams of horses, 7 chariots of silver and gold including their weapons of war, 443 bulls, 370 cows, and all sorts of cattle beyond counting. His entire army was

d Josh 19:19

e Josh 1:3;
Ps 110:1

f Gen 10:10;
11:2; Josh
7:21; Isa
11:11; Dan
1:2; etc.

bringing away very much booty beyond counting.

His majesty arrived <at> Hukti. The chieftain of Giboa-Shemen,⁴¹ whose name is Kaka, his wife, his children and all his subjects likewise were carried off. Another⁴² chieftain was appointed in his place.

Return to Memphis (lines 29b-33)

His majesty arrived at the city of Memphis, he being satisfied because every foreign country and every land is under his sandals.⁴³ A record of the plunder which his majesty carried off: 127 chieftain <s> of Retenu, 179 brother <s> of the chieftains, 3600 Apiru,⁴⁴ 15,200 live Shasu,⁴⁵ 36,000 Syrians,⁴⁶ 15,070 live Nagasutes,⁴⁶ 30,652 of their family members, totaling 89,600⁴⁷ and their endless property likewise. All their herds and all their endless cattle, 60 gold and silver chariots, 1032 painted chariots, including all their weapons of war being 13,500, through the might of Amun-Re, his august father who loves him and who is your protection, and who decreed valor for him.

Now at that time the chieftain of Naharin, the chieftain of Hatti,⁴⁸ and the chieftain of Sangar⁴⁹ heard of the great victories which <his majesty> had accomplished. Each one tried to outdo his counterpart with gifts of every foreign land. They thought on account of their grandfathers to implore his majesty, to go that the breath of life⁵⁰ be given to them. "We shall carry our taxes to your palace, Son of Re, Amenhotep, divine ruler of Heliopolis, ruler of rulers, a panther who rages in every foreign land and in this land forever."

³⁷ Lit., "in order to give valor or bravery to his son." Dreams were seen as a vehicle of divine communication throughout the Near East (e.g. see the Gudea cylinders below, COS 2.155) as well as among the Hebrews.

³⁸ Identified with Khirbet el-Majdal, which preserves the ancient name, in the northern end of the Sharon Plain. However, there is no corresponding archaeological evidence from this site. Nearby Tell edh-Dhūr does have evidence for the Late Bronze Age, and evidence of multiple destructions during this period (Ahluv 1984:142).

³⁹ Sakhmet is the leonine goddess who is known for her violent outbursts and sending plagues, as well as being a protectress against plague.

⁴⁰ This site is identified with Anaharat of Josh 19:19, within the tribal territory of Issachar. Tell el-Ajjul (N) and Tell Mukharkhash have been suggested as the location of this site, with the latter being more likely (Ahluv 1982:59).

⁴¹ Could mean "Hill of Eight," (Rainey 1973:74-75) or "Hill of Oil" which is thought to be identified with Tell es-Samn, by the Kishon Brook, just south of the Carmel Range (Ahluv 1984:100).

⁴² The text reads dhnw.k, which makes no sense. Edel (1953:123) rightly emends k (2nd person suffix) to ky (demonstrative adjective).

⁴³ This is the Eg. writing for the Akk. habiru/hapiru of the Amarna letters. Earlier generations of biblical scholars believed that this word was to be equated with ḥbrī, Hebrew. This equation has been largely rejected on the grounds that habiru appears to have a sociological rather than ethnic application. Moreover, the Habiru are found at different locations and times around the Near East, proving that the term could not be limited to the Hebrews of the Bible ("Habiru" ABD 3:6-10). Scholars have not completely abandoned the idea that the term habiru could be applied to the Israelites (Lemche 1985:421-429). It could be that habiru originally designated groups of outlaws or was a derogatory expression, and yet it is clear from the occurrence in the stela of Amenhotep II that they were identified as a specific group like the other ethnic groups taken prisoners by the king. If the large numbers are to be believed, Apiru/Habiru were not just small bands of marauders in Amenhotep's day.

⁴⁴ A generic term used by the Egyptians of desert dwellers, bedouin (WB 4:412).

⁴⁵ I.e. h³rw.

⁴⁶ Nabasse of the Amarna letters, located within Upper Retenu, not far from Aleppo (Gardiner AEO 1:146*).

⁴⁷ The total given, 89,600, is actually wrong, the correct total being 101,128! The use of large numbers in this section has given rise to a number of explanations: 1. The figures are exaggerated and thus not reliable. 2. They represent a grand total for all the king's expeditions. 3. The large figures represent a change in strategy by Amenhotep from selective to mass deportations like the Neo-Assyrians. For a review of the different views see, Hoffmeier 1997:113.

⁴⁸ Hatti is the term from which the English term "Hittites" is derived. Hatti is located in central Turkey, the capital being Hattusa. The people of Hatti may be one and the same as the b'nē ḥet of the Bible (Gen 10:14; 15:20; 23:3; Josh 1:4; Judg 3:5).

⁴⁹ Sangar is equated with Sanhar, i.e. Babylonia, Shin'ar of the Bible (Gardiner AEO 1:209*).

⁵⁰ See COS 2.2B, note 16 above.

REFERENCES

Text: Urk. IV., 1300-1309; Edel 1953:97-175. Translations: Edel 1953:97-175; Helck 1961:1300-1309; ANET 245-247; Cummings 1982:29-33.

2. NINETEENTH DYNASTY INSCRIPTIONS

SETHOS I (2.4)

KARNAK, CAMPAIGN FROM SILE TO PA-CANAAN, YEAR 1 (2.4A)
(East Side, Lower Register)

K. A. Kitchen

To celebrate his northern wars, about 1294/85 BCE, Sethos I placed three registers of scenes on either side of the north doorway into the Great Hypostyle Hall at Karnak temple in Thebes. On the east side, the registers read from bottom to top (normal in the New Kingdom), but the top register is lost. On the west side opinions differ as to whether one should read also from bottom to top or the reverse. Here, in the east side's bottom register, the scenes divide from the middle. Very appropriately, the first three scenes move left/eastward, along the north-Sinai coast road (clearing off the wandering Shasu folk on the way), then to tribute at a town [name lost], and finally action near "the city of Canaan," probably Gaza. Then, from the mid-point to the right/westward, the king returns to Egypt in triumph, then offers to the gods in gratitude. In each scene, rhetorical praise of the king accompanies his figure. As appropriate, topographical data are given (settlements, wells, etc.).

Defeat of the Shasu tribesmen (KRI I 6.15-7.9)

(i. Rhetorical text over king)

The Good god, Sun^a of Egypt, Moon^b of all lands,
Montu in the foreign lands, who is not repulsed,
Bold-hearted like Baal,

there is none who can retreat from him,
on the day of marshalling for the battle.

He has extended the boundaries of Egypt to the limits of heaven on every side.

(As for) the hil[ls of the] rebels, — none could [get pas]t them, because of the fallen ones of Shasu¹ who had attacked [him?]. His Majesty cap[tured th]em totally, so that none escaped.

(ii. Minor epigraphs: a. cartouches)

Menmare, Sethos I Merenamun.

(b. Vulture)

Nekhbet, White One of Nekhen.

(c. Over the horses [... lost ...].

(iii. Forts and wells at bottom of scene)

(Fort I) The Stronghold of Menmare, "The ... is his Protection."

(Below I at J) The Fort of Sethos I [Merenptah].

(Fort K) Settlement [which] His Majesty [built] a[new].

^a Ps 84:12
[11]

^b Ps 89:37-38 [36-37];
Cant 6:10

^c Gen 49:24

(Water L) The Well Ibseqeb (²*Ibsqb*)²

(Below fort M) The Well of Sethos I Merenptah.

(At right edge of scene) [...]mat.

Receipt of tribute at town [X] (KRI 7.10-8.4)

(i. Rhetorical text over the king)

The Good god, achieving with his arms, archer^c like Montu who resides in Thebes, [strong bull, sharp-horned, bold-heart]ed, who tramples Asia, setting his boundaries according as his heart dictates; his arm is not repulsed in all lands.

Victorious King who protects Egypt, who breaches the wall(s) in rebellious foreign lands. He causes the chiefs of Khurru (i.e. Syria-Palestine) to cease from all boasting by their mouths; his strong arm³ is mighty in valor and victory, and his power like (that of) the Son of Nut.

(ii. Minor epigraphs: a. cartouches) Lord of Both Lands, Menmare, Lord of Crowns, Sethos I [Mer]jena[mun].

(b. Over the horses) First Great (Chariot-)Span of His Majesty, "Amun decrees him Valor," which is (also) named "Anath is Content."

¹ The Shasu were encountered by the Egyptians all the way from the margins of the East Delta along the North Sinai coastal zone through the eastern fringes of Palestine and Syria. For the main documentation on them, see Givón 1971; but their name is not Semitic (or the s would have appeared as š — it is most easily taken as deriving from Egyptian š(ʿ)š, "to wander," hence "wanderers." It is not an ethnic term, but was applied to semi-nomadic groups (such as the Edomites of Papyrus Anastasi VI:54-56), but not provenly to early Israel.

² The name of this well may be NW Semitic, e.g. ²*eb segub*, "exalted greenery," perhaps referring to its surrounding vegetation.

³ The "strong arm" of Pharaoh seems to be reflected in biblical usage, esp. the phrase "outstretched arm" found mostly in Exod-Deut, with later echoes in Pss and the prophets. See Hoffmeier 1986; 1997:151; and Görg 1986 for discussions.

(iii. Forts and wells)
 (Below fort N) The Well, "Menmare Great of Victories."
 (Water O) The Well, "Sweet (Water)."^d
 (Upper fort P) Settlement which His Majesty built anew, with/at the Well Hu[.]ututi (h-f.jwrtwti)
 (Below P fort at Q) The Fort of Menmare, Heir of Re. (Circular feature R) "Wide Pool" ([y]m rbr).^e (Lower left fort S) The Well (of) Menmare.
 (Water T) Nhs of the Chief.^f
 (Upper left fort U) Settlement of [Raphia??]

Victory near the city of Pa-Canaan, Year 1 (KRI I 8.5-8.15)

(i. Dated rhetorical text over fallen foes)

Year 1 (of) the King of Southern and Northern Egypt, Menmare. The destruction which the sturdy arm of Pharaoh, LPH,^g made <among> the fallen foes of Shasu, beginning from the fortress of Sile as far as Pa-Canaan.

His Majesty seized upon them like a terrifying lion,^h turning them into corpses throughout their valleys, wallowing in their blood as if (they) had never existed. Any who slip through his fingers tell of his power to (far-)distant foreign countries — "it is the might of Father Amun who has decreed for you valor and victory over every foreign country."

(ii. Minor epigraphs: a. cartouches) King of Southern and Northern Egypt, Menmare, Son of Re, Sethos I Merenptah, given life like Re, and beloved of Montu (and) Astarte.

(b. Horus-Falcon) The Behdetite, Lord of heaven — may he give life, stability, dominion and health like Re. (c. Vulture) Nekhbet, White One of Nekhen — may she give life.

(d. Over the horses) First Great (Chariot-)Span of His Majesty, "Victory in Thebes."

(iii. Fort, upper left) Settlement of Pa-Canaan.

Triumphal return to Egypt (KRI I 9.1-10.9)

(i. Rhetorical text over king)

Year 1, "Renaissance," (of) the King of Southern and Northern Egypt, Lord of Both Lands, Menmare, given life.

Now, one came to tell His Majesty: "The fallen (foemen) of Shasu are plotting rebellion. Their tribal chiefs are united in one place, stationed on the mountain ridges of Khurru. They have lapsed into confusion and quarrelling; each slays his fellow. They disregard the edicts of the Palace."

The heart of His Majesty, LPH, was pleased at it.

Exod 15:25

* Num 20:11; 24:7

f Gen 49:9; Num 24:9; Deut 33:20; 22; Jer 49:19

g Josh 10:24

Now, as for the Good god, he rejoices at beginning a fight, he is glad about his attacker, his heart is satisfied at seeing blood — he cuts off the heads of the dissidents. More than a day of jubilation loves he a moment of trampling (such) down. His Majesty slays them all at once, he leaves no heirs among them. Who(ever) escapes his hand is (but) a prisoner brought to Nile-land.

(ii. Minor epigraphs: a. cartouches) King of Southern and Northern Egypt, Lord of Both Lands, Menmare, Son of Re, Lord of Crowns, Sethos I Merenamun, given life like Re.

(b. Vulture) Nekhbet, the White One of Nekhen; may she give life, stability and dominion like Re.

(c. Over horses) First Great (Chariot-)Span of His Majesty, LPH, "Amun, he gives strength."

(iii. Prince behind the king) Following the King at his forays in the foreign countries of Syria (Retenu), by the Hereditary Noble and Count, grandee of who[se name] one boasts, true King's Scribe, beloved of him, [General?], bodily King's Son, beloved of him, [Ramesse]s,⁷ [justified?].

(iv. Canal, forts and wells [from right to left, i.e., west to east]) (Canal A) The (boundary) Canal.

(Building before canal B) The Fortress of Sile.

(Fort D) The Dwelling of the Lion.

(Middle fort E) The Keep (migdol)⁸ of Menmare.

(Well F) The Well of Hapan/Hatjan (Hpn/H₁n).⁹

(Fort G) Udjo of Sethos I Merenptah.

(Well H) The Well of the District of Imy-^ca(?).

(v. Dignitaries welcoming the king) The prophet <s>, grandees, leaders of the South and North are come to acclaim the Good god on his return from the land of Retenu (Syria) bringing great and abundant plunder, the like of which has never been seen since the time of the god.

[They] say in adoring His Majesty, in magnifying his might: "Welcome you are, from the foreign countries, your attack has succeeded! You are triumphant, your enemies are beneath you.⁸ Your duration as King is like Re in heaven, in slaking your heart <against> the Nine Bows. Re has set your boundaries, his arms are (magical) protection around you. Your mace was upon the head(s) of every foreign land, the <ir> chiefs are fallen to your sword!"

Presentation of prisoners and spoil to Amun (KRI I 10.10-11.9)

(i. Text over the spoils)

[Presentation] of tribute by His Majesty [to his father] Amun, when he returned from the foreign land of despised Retenu (Syria): "The chiefs of the ^d Cp. Heb. and Ug. ym, "sea/lake," and Common Semitic rb(b), "great/wide"; or render as "many waters," and cf. Num 20:11, 24:7.

^e The word nhs may be related to Akk. nūḫṣu, "abundance" (here, of water), for the "chief."

^f LPH is the abbreviation for the blessing formula, "life, prosperity, health."

^g Replacing an earlier (non-royal) name and epithets: "[X, who traverses] foreign [count]ries [for] his lord?"

^h Using a term for "tower/keep," familiar also in BH, used as, and as part of, place-names, including in the East Delta.

⁹ The name "Hatjan" may be related to Heb. ḥṣn, "wealth/abundance," again of water and/or surrounding vegetation at the well so named.

foreign lands are prisoners, with their tribute on their backs — of every sort of precious vessel from their lands, of silver, gold, real lapis-lazuli, through the valor that you gave me over every foreign land." ^h (ii. Cartouches) Lord of Both Lands, Menmare, Lord of Crowns, Sethos I Merenamun. (Vulture) [Udjo]. (iii. Text over upper row of prisoners) The chiefs of the foreign countries who knew not Egypt, whom His Majesty brought (back) by his victory from the land of despised Retenu. They said, in magnifying His Majesty, in praising his victories: "Hail to you! How great is your name, how powerful your strength! The (foreign) land that is loyal to you has joy; who(ever) infringes your	^h Josh 6:19, 24	boundaries is fettered(?). As your Spirit endures! We knew not Egypt, and our fathers did not tread it. Grant us the breath of your giving!" (iv. Text over lower row of prisoners) The spoils which His Majesty brought (back) from the Shasu, whom His Majesty himself vanquished in Year 1, "Renaissance." (v. Speech of Amun) [Words spoken by Am]un-Re, Lord of the Thrones of the Two Lands: "My bodily S[on], (my) beloved, Lord of Both Lands, Menmare! I put the fear of you into every foreign land, your mace is upon the head(s) of their chiefs. They come to you, united as one, with a (tribute) load on their backs because of your war-cry."
--	-----------------------------------	--

REFERENCES

Text-editions: definitive, Epigraphic Survey 1986 pls. 2-8; handbook ed., KRI 1:6-11; 7:422-423. Translations: Epigraphic Survey 1986:3-26; Kitchen 1993a:6-9. Older references plus notes, Kitchen 1993b:12-17.

FIRST BETH-SHAN STELA, YEAR 1 (2.4B)
(Palestine Archaeological Museum, Jerusalem, S.884)

K. A. Kitchen

On his campaign in Year 1 (1294 or 1290 BCE), Sethos I probably penetrated as far as Phoenicia. Then on his return southward, he found disturbances in the Beth-Shan district, just south of the Sea of Galilee. The local chiefs of Hammath and Pella (W and E of the Jordan) had blockaded nearby Rehob and seized the important center of Beth-Shan. So the pharaoh sent out three strike-forces: against rebel Hammath, the captured Beth-Shan, and neighboring Yenoam. Beth-Shan is Tell Husn (at modern Beisan), where this stela was found.

Scene (KRI I 11.10-14)

(Winged disc at top) The Behdetite, great god, with dappled plumage, Lord of heaven.

(King offers incense and libation to Re-Harakhti)

(Over king) The Good god, Lord of Both Lands, Menmare, given life like Re.

(Behind king) All protection and life attend him!

(Between king and deity) Performing incense^a and libation.

(Over deity) Re-Harakhti, great god, Lord of heaven; may he give all life.

Main text (KRI I 11.15-12.14)

Year 1, 3rd month of Shomu, Day 10. (Long) live: Horus-Falcon, Strong Bull, Appearing in Thebes, Bringing life to Both Lands;

Nebry-Ruler, Renewing birth, Powerful of arm, Subduing the Nine Bows;

Golden Horus, Repeating epiphanies, Rich in forces in all lands;

King of Southern and Northern Egypt, Lord of Both Lands, Menmare Made by Re, Son of Re, Lord of Crowns, Sethos I Merenptah, beloved of Re-Harakhti, the great god.

^a Deut 33:10

^b Isa 52:15

The Good god, sturdy in wielding his sword, hero valiant like Montu; abounding in captures(?), knowing his ability, skilled wherever he is;

who speaks with his mouth and acts with his arms.

Valiant leader of his army, valiant warrior amid the battle, a Bast who grasps as a warrior, who enters into the mass of Asiatics, who makes them prostrate, who tramples down the chiefs of Retenu (Syria), who vanquishes who(ever) transgresses his path.

He causes the chiefs of Khurru to go back on all the boasting of their mouth(s);^b every foreign land of the far north, their chiefs (say): "Where can we (go)?"

They spend nights, made witness(?) in his name, frantic(?) in their minds.

It is the power of his father Amun which decrees for him valor and victory.

On this day, one came to inform His Majesty thus:

"The despicable chief who is in the town of Hammath¹ has gathered to himself many people, seizing the town of Beth-Shan, and is joined up with those from Pahil (Pella)²; he is preventing the chief of Rehob³ from coming out."

Then His Majesty sent out the First Division of Amun, "Rich in Bows," against the town of Hammath; the First Division of Re, "Abounding in Valor," against the town of Beth-Shan; and the First Division of Sutekh, "Strong of Bows," against the town of Yenoam.⁴ And so, when the span of a day had elapsed, they were (all) fallen to the might of His Majesty, the King of Southern and Northern Egypt, Menmare, Son of Re, Sethos I Merenptah, given life.

¹ Ancient Hammath is the present large Tell el-Hammeh (not excavated), some 15 miles south of Beth-Shan.

² Pahil (classical Pella) is to be located at Khirbet Fahil, some 7 miles south-east of Beth-Shan, across the Jordan; for excavations there, cf. NEAEHL 3:1174-1180.

³ Rehob is at modern Tell es-Sarem, some 4 miles due south of Beth-Shan; for excavations there, see Mazar 1999.

⁴ Yenoam's location is much discussed. The likeliest site is still Tell el-Abeidiyeh (or Ubeidiyeh), about 15 miles north of Beth-Shan, at a fitting distance, in a loop of the Jordan with trees, rather like the setting by water with trees in the Sethos relief-scene (references, Kitchen 1993b:18). The proposal by Na'aman (1977) to place it nearly 30 miles away across the Jordan at Tell esh-Shihab is theoretically possible, but the supposed evidence is not watertight.

REFERENCES

TEXT: Rowe 1930:26-29, pls. 41, 47:3; KRI 1:11-12. Translation: Kitchen 1993a:9-10, and notes and older references, Kitchen 1993b:17-19.

KARNAK, CAMPAIGN TO YENOAM AND LEBANON (YEAR 1 OR LATER) (2.4C) (East Side, Middle Register)

K. A. Kitchen

In this register, two successive war-scenes have Sethos I conquering Yenoam and [X-1], then Qdr in a land Hnm and [X-2] in [Lebanon]. Lebanese chiefs fell timber for him. The mention of Yenoam may link the scenes with Year 1 (cf. Yenoam on the Year 1 stela, just above), but there is no guarantee that Yenoam did not feature in a later campaign. Qdr and Hnm are geographically obscure; Qdr might possibly be Gadara on the Yarmuk river (east of the Jordan), on the way to Tell esh-Shihab, where a stela of Sethos I was found.

Victory at Yenoam (KRI I 13.1-4)

(i. City of Yenoam) Town of Yenoam.

(ii. Over the horses) (1st Version): First Great (Chariot-) Span of His Majesty, "Amun [subdu]es the Nine Bows [for] him."

(2nd Version): First Great (Chariot-)Span of His Majesty, "Amun [silenc]es(?) the Nine Bows."

(All other texts in this scene are lost).

Submission by the chiefs of Lebanon (KRI I 13.5-14.9)

(i. Main texts above king and chariot)

(a. Before the king) [The chiefs of] Lebanon, they cut [timbers "for] the great river-barge U[serha]t, and likewise for the great flagstaves of Amun.

(b. Cartouches) [King of Southern and Northern Egypt, M]en[ma]re, Son of Re, Sethos I Merenptah], given life. (c.i. [Vulture]). [Nekhbet ...], may she endow him [with ...], with life and dominion, [... like] Re every day.

(c.ii. Over the horses and chariot) [(Long) live:]

[Falcon-King, Strong Bull, Appearing in Thebes, Bringing life to Both Lands:]

Nebty-Ruler, Renewing birth, [Powerful of arm, Subduing the Nine Bows:]

a 2 Sam 5:11;
1 Kgs 5:6, 10

[Golden Horus], Repeating [epiphanies], Rich in forces [in all lands:]

[King of Southern and Northern Egypt, Menmare, S]on of [Re], Sethos I Merenptah, given life.

[The Good god ..., Sovereign] satisfied with victory; mighty [in power, like the Son of Nut? ...] [strong-]armed, who achieves [with his arms, ..., who protects?] his army.

[Hero? ... (etc.) ...]; one [breath]es [the breath of his giving; ...]. More than a day [of jubilation, he loves tramp]ling (them) down. [... a Montu?] when he sees the battle-line, [...] his heart is satisfied at making [slaughter? (in) extending] the boundaries of Egypt. [He takes Asiatics as servant]s(?), to fill the workshops, [...] conifers [...].

(ii. Speech of fanbearer) Said by the Fanbearer on the King's Right Hand, (in) his reply to the Good god: "It is done according to all that you say, O Horus who brings life to Both Lands! You are like Montu against every foreign country. The chiefs of Retenu behold you, and your renown (pervades) their (very) bodies."

(iii. Speech of the Lebanese chiefs)

The great chiefs of Lebanon, they say in adoring the Lord of Both Lands, in magnifying his power: "You are seen like your father Re, and one lives by beholding you."

(iv. Forts: a. Over the chiefs' speech) [Town of X, in the land of ?Lebano]n.

(b. Below the horses) Town of Qader, in the land of Hinuma.

King binds captives (KRI I 14.10-12)

(i. Before the king)

[Captures] which His Majesty has [brought] off, on his own two feet. Every foreign country, he has brought them off as prisoners — Menmare, Sethos I Merenamun.

(ii. Behind the king)

Horus, strong in arm, Lord who performs the rituals, and who overthrows his enemies.

King returns, carrying and leading captives (KRI I 14.13-16)

(i. Rhetorical text) [... val]lor and [victory? ...] Nine Bows.

[...] he has/to him [...] seized? [...] Montju [...].

(ii. Over the horses) First Great (Chariot-)Span of His Majesty, "Great of Victories."

(iii. Over lower group of prisoners)

Great chiefs of Retenu, whom His Majesty brought off as prisoners.

Presentation of Prisoners and Spoils to the Theban Triad (KRI I 15.1-14)

(i. Speech of Amun) Words spoken by Amun-Re, Lord

b Josh 6:19, 24

of the Thrones of Both Lands:

"Welcome in peace, O Good god, Lord of Both Lands, Menmare! I set your victories over every foreign country, and the fear of you in the hearts of the Nine Bows. Their chiefs come to you as one, with a (tribute) load on their backs. I grant you the lands in fear of you, and the Nine Bows bowing down at your war-cry."

(ii. Mut and Khons) Mut the Mighty, Lady of Asheru, Lady of heaven, Mistress of all the Gods, — may she give all life like Re.

Khons-in-Thebes, Neferhotep, the great god, Lord of heaven.

(iii. Vulture and king) Nekhbet. King of Southern and Northern Egypt, Menmare, Son of Re, Sethos I Merenamun, given life like Re forever.

(iv. Presentation of gifts) Presentation of tribute by His Majesty to his father Amun, when he returned from the land of despicable Retenu, (consisting) of silver, gold, lapis-lazuli, turquoise, red jasper, and every (kind of) precious stone.^b The chiefs of the foreign lands are enclosed in his grasp, to fill the workshops of his father Amun — "by the valor that you granted me!"

(v. Upper file of prisoners) His Majesty returned from Upper Retenu, after extending the boundaries of Egypt, [and after?] destroying [the land of the Men]tiu(?), [their chiefs] being [prisoners], with [their] tribute [on their backs ...] [... rest lost ...]

(vi. Lower file of prisoners) Chiefs of foreign countries that knew not Egypt, whom His Majesty brought off as prisoners, [their] tribute [on their backs? ...].

REFERENCES

Text: definitive, Epigraphic Survey 1986: pls. 9-14; handbook ed., KRI 1:13-15; 7:423-424. Translations: Epigraphic Survey 1986:27-43, and Kitchen 1993a:10-12, with notes and older references in Kitchen 1993b:19-20.

SECOND BETH-SHAN STELA, [YEAR LOST] (2.4D) (Palestine Archaeological Museum, Jerusalem, S.885A/B)

K. A. Kitchen

Regrettably, the year-date is broken away on this monument, but is likely to have been [Year 2 or later]. Again, on his way back south, the king was obliged to quell dissidents, seemingly in Lower Galilee, as his troops "turned back" to deal with the matter. The 'Apiru are here given the determinative of an armed man; so they were regarded in this case as armed bands by the Egyptians.

Scenes (KRI I 15.15)

(lost - king worships deity, either side)

Main text (KRI I 16.1-15)

[Year x, month/season y, Day z. (Long) live:]

Horus-Falcon, Strong Bull, Appearing in Thebes, [Bringing life to Both Lands;]

[Ne]bty-Ruler, Renewing birth, Powerful of] arm, [Subduing the Nine Bows;]

[Golden Horus], Repeating epiphanies, Rich in forces in all lands;

King of Southern and Northern Egypt, Lord of Both Lands, Menmare Heir of Re, [Bodily Son of Re, his beloved], Lord of Crowns, [Sethos I Merenptah], beloved of Amun-Re, Lord of the Thrones of Both Lands, and given life like Re [forever].

[The Good god who achieves with] his arms, an iron rampart ^a on the field on the day of battle, [who calms(?) the heart] of the people, who knows his ability, resolute on behalf of his army on the day of battle like a young bull;^b powerful lion,^c falcon of Khepri in the Mansion of the Prince, Son of Sekhmet, beloved of Bast.

Sphinxlike image¹ amid the foreign countries that infringe his boundary, he has curbed all lands by reason of the dread [of him in the]ir [hearts]. He causes the Asiatics to retreat, who had drawn their bows — a king to [be boasted of] to the height of heaven, a master to be bragged about forever.

On this day, now, [one came to inform His Majesty, LPH, thus:

“The ^aApiru of the mountain of Yarmutu,² along with the Tayaru³ [folk, they] are arisen, attacking the Asiatics of Ruhma.”

Then said [His Majesty]: “Who [do they] think

^a Jer 1:18;
Ezek 4:3

^b Deut 33:17

^c Gen 49:9;
Deut 33:20, 22

^d Job 40:18;
Isa 48:4

they are, these despicable Asiatics, in [taking up] their [arms] for yet more trouble? They shall find out about him whom they did not know — [the Ruler val]iant like a falcon and a strong bull wide-striding and sharp-horned, [spreading his wings (firm)] as flint, and every limb as iron,^d to hack up the [entire] land of Dja[hy]!” ⁴

Then His Majesty, LPH, commanded a detachment of men from his ample [infantry and ch]ariotry to turn back against the land of Djahy. When a period of two days had elapsed, [they returned in peace] from the land(?)/mountain(?) of Yarmutu, bringing the impost [?from these Asiatics?, and] prisoner(s) as plunder [wrought by His Majesty?] — it was/by the power of his father Amun-Re that decreed for him valor and vic[tory [forever?] — (even) the King of Southern and Northern Egypt, Lord of Both Lands, Menmare Heir of Re, Son of Re, Lord of [Crowns], Sethos I Merenptah, like Re.

¹ Cp. the pharaoh shown as a sphinx with kingly head, vanquishing foes, as of Tutmosis IV (ca. 1390 BCE; ANEP no. 393) and Tutankhamun (ca. 1330 BCE; Desroches-Noblecourt 1963:61, pl. xix), with derived motif on gold bowl at Syrian Ugarit (14th/13th centuries BCE; Smith 1965: fig. 48), as well as in earlier and later periods.

² Yarmutu may be related to the northern Yarmuth, Josh 21:29 (with its possible name-variants, Remeth, Ramoth, in Josh 19:21, and 1 Chr 6:65), near the later “Belvoir” of the crusaders.

³ Tayaru and Ruhma are (so far) unknown entities; Albright (1952:30-31) did compare Tayaru with the Tiria of 1 Chr 4:16, in name but not location (much further south).

⁴ Djahy is a rather elastic term in Egyptian, covering a fair-sized area including Canaan and up into Lebanon (cf. Gardiner AEO 1:145'-146').

REFERENCES

Text: Rowe 1930: pls. 42-44, 45:1; Grdseloff 1949; Albright 1952; handbook edition, KRI 1:15-16. Translation, notes, other references: Kitchen 1993a:12-13, and 1993b:20-21.

KARNAK, CAMPAIGN AGAINST THE HITTITES (UNDATED) (2.4E)
(West Side, Lower Register)

K. A. Kitchen

Originally, two whole registers on the west half of this wall dealt with northern wars of Sethos I: the bottom one, a clash with the Hittites, and the top one the king's attack on Qadesh and Amurru. It is significant that the two are separated by a middle register that focuses on a wholly different locale — a war in the west with the Libyans. This suggests that the top and bottom registers may commemorate two separate campaigns, before and after a Libyan war. Which came first is uncertain. Artistic convention would favor bottom-to-top (Hatti, then Qadesh/Amurru), but allusions in the texts, and geographical progression may rather favor a clash in Amurru and Qadesh first, then with Hatti from the north.

(Scene hidden behind 22nd-Dynasty Wall — not accessible.)

Sethos I in battle with the Hittites (KRI 1 17.10-18.4)
(i. Over the Hittites) The despicable land of Hatti, amongst whom His Majesty, LPH, has wrought great slaughter.

(ii. Rhetorical text)

Horus-Falcon, Strong Bull, Appearing in Thebes, Bringing life to Both Lands, King of Southern and Northern Egypt, Lord of Both Lands, Menmare, Son of Re, Sethos I Merenamun.

The Good god, strong in power, a hero valiant like Montu;

Powerful one, powerful like him who begot him, illuminating Both Lands like Him of the Horizon.

Mighty in strength like the Son of Nut,

the strength of the Two Lords is in his actions;

Who stalks the battlefield like Him of Ombos, great of terror like Baal against the foreign lands.

Uniter of Both Lands, (even) while he was in the nest, his power has protected Egypt.

Re has made his boundary for him to the limits of what the Sun-Disc illumines;

Divine Falcon of dappled plumage, traversing the heaven(s) like the majesty of Re.

Southern jackal, fast, circling this land in an hour;
Fearsome Lion who travels the difficult paths of every foreign land.

Strong Bull,^a sharp-horned, stout-hearted, who treads down the Asiatics, who tramples the Hittites, who slays their chiefs, (left) wallowing in their blood, who enters among them like a fiery flame, reducing them to non-existence.

(iii. Minor epigraphs: a. Falcon) The Behdetite, great god — may he give [all] valor [and victory ...]; may he give [all] life, stability and dominion, [... rest lost ...].

(b. King) The Good god, powerful and res[olute?], Lord of Both Lands, [Menmare], Lord of Crowns, Sethos I Merenamun, Image of Re at the head of Both Lands.

(c. Winged disc) The Behdetite. (d. Vulture) Nekhebet, the White One of Nekhen; — may she give life and dominion. (e. Behind king) (Magical) protection, life, stability and dominion. [(f. Over horses) lost].

Triumphal return with prisoners (KRI I 18.5-19.6)

(i. Rhetorical text over prisoners and king's chariot)

The Good god, in strength manifest, mighty in power like Montu residing in Thebes;

Young Bull,^a the sharp-horned, resolute, trampling down hundreds of thousands;

Strong Lion,^b
roaming the difficult paths of every foreign land;

Southern jackal, speeding and roaming, circling this land in an hour, seeking out his foes in every foreign land.

Valiant warrior without equal, archer^c who knows his ability;

who projects his might like a mountain of copper;

(when) he is pacified, they can breathe his breath (of life).

There comes Retenu to him in obeisance,

(and) the land of Lib<ya>¹ on their feet.

He lets go(?) seed as he wishes, in this despicable land of Hatti, their chiefs are fallen to his sword, reduced to non-existence.

How mighty is his power against them,

a Deut 33:17

(just) like fire when he destroys their towns.

(ii. Further text behind the king)

Victorious King, mighty in power, whose battle-cry is like the Son of Nut's; he has returned triumphant, he has hacked up the foreign lands, he has trampled down the Hatti-land. He puts an end to the rebels, and every foreign land languishes, becoming peaceable as dread of His Majesty has entered into them. His scourge(?) has broken their will ("heart"), and the foreign lands are bound before him; he cares nothing for even hundreds of thousands gathered (together).

(iii. Cartouches) Lord of Both Lands, Menmare, Lord of Crowns, Sethos I Merenamun.

(iv. Over the horses) First Great (Chariot-)Span of His Majesty, "Amun grants him the strong arm."

(v. Over lower row of prisoners) Chiefs of foreign lands who knew not Egypt, whom His Majesty has brought as prisoners (with) their tribute on their backs, (it) being all the choicest of their countries.

Presentation of prisoners and spoils to Amun and the Gods (KRI I 19.7-20.11)

(i. Presentation by the king) [Presentation] of tribute by the Good god to his father Amun-Re, Lord of [the Throne]s of Both Lands, [when] he returned from the land of Hatti — hacking up the rebels and trampling down the Asiatics in their places — with silver and gold, lapis-lazuli and turquoise, [with every kind of] noble [gemstone],^d according as he decreed for him valor and victory over all foreign lands.

(ii. Vulture and cartouches) Udjo; may she give life and dominion. King of Southern and Northern Egypt, Menmare, Son of Re, Sethos I Merenamun, chosen by Re in the Bark of <millions>.

(iii. Over upper file of prisoners) The great chiefs of despicable Retenu, whom His Majesty has brought off by his victories from the land of Hatti, so to fill the storehouse(s)^e of [his] noble [father] Amun-Re, Lord of the Thrones of Both Lands, according as he has granted (him) valor against the South and victory over the North.

The chiefs of the foreign countries, they say in extolling His Majesty, LPH, and in magnifying his strength: "Hail to you, King of Egypt, Sun of the Nine Bows! Mighty is your power, Lord of the Gods! You have brought (captive) the (far) limit(s) of the foreign lands, and you have bound them under the feet^f of your son, the Horus-falcon who brings life to the Two Lands."

(iv. Over lower row of prisoners) Mighty is your power, O Victorious King! How great is your power! You are like Montu over every foreign land, your force is (just) like his.

¹ The mentions here of Syria ("Retenu") and of Libya might be held to indicate that campaigns in Syria and Libya carved above this register had occurred earlier than the Hittite conflict shown here; however, there is always the possibility that we simply have a flight of rhetorical language normal in these label-texts to war-scenes.

(v. Speech of Amun) Words spoken: "I grant you all valor and all victory. I grant you all flat lands and all foreign countries under your sandals. I grant you the lifespan of Re and the years of Atum. I grant you an eternity in jubilees like Re. I grant you all food and provision. I grant you all life, stability and dominion, and all health." — (So), Amun-Re, Lord of the Thrones of Both Lands, presiding over Karnak.

(vi. The other gods: a. Mut-Bastet) Mut the Mighty, [Lady] of Asheru, Bast Mistress of Karnak, Lady of charm, sweet of love: — "I grant you the [thro]ne of Geb, and the lifespan of Re in heaven." (b. Khons) Khons in Thebes, Neferhotep, Falcon (or Horus), Lord of joy.

(c. Maat) Words spoken by Maat Daughter of Re: "My bodily son, (my) beloved, Lord of Both Lands, Lord of the strong arm, Menmare — I grant you an eternity in jubilees like Re."

REFERENCES

Text-editions: definitive, Epigraphic Survey 1986: pls. 33-36; handbook ed., KRI 1:17-20; 7:424-425. Translations and notes: Epigraphic Survey 1986:103-114; and Kitchen 1993a:14-17; 1993b:22-23.

KARNAK, CAMPAIGN AGAINST THE LIBYANS (UNDATED) (2.4F) (West Side, Middle Register)

K. A. Kitchen

As with all three registers on this western side, an initial scene is now hidden away around the corner, under later (22nd Dynasty) stonework that was part of the masonry for the great forecourt built by Shoshenq I, ca. 925 BCE. The visible scenes are limited to a victorious battle, the king killing a Libyan leader, and the triumphal return to Egypt.

(Scene hidden behind 22nd-Dynasty Wall - not accessible.)

Sethos I in Battle with the Libyans (KRI 120.15-21.4)

(i. Minor epigraphs: a. cartouches) Lord of Both Lands, Menmare, Lord of Crowns, Sethos I Merenamun.

(b. Over the horses) First Great (Chariot-)Span of His Majesty, "Trampling down the Foreign Lands."

(c. Behind the king) Horus strong in arm, Lord who performs the rituals — may all protection, life, stability and dominion attend him!

(ii. Rhetorical text) [The Good god ...], [the strong arm]ed,¹ Lo[r]d of po[w]er, val[ia]nt li[ke] Montu, who fights and captures in every foreign land; a hero without equal, who achieves with his strong arm, so that the Two Lands know, and so that the entire land shall see (it).

He is like Baal¹ (as) he treads the mountains. Dread of him has crushed the foreign lands, his name is victorious, and his power is strong; there is none who can withstand him.

Sethos I spears a Libyan Chief (KRI 121.6-17)

(i. Rhetorical text) [The Good god ...], who overthrows those who rebel against him, who smites the tribesfolk and tramples down the Mentiu/Beduin and the distant foreign lands of Libya (Tehenu), [?making a great slaughter] amongst them, [... fall]en, their chiefs, [... under] the feet of the Falcon.

a Exod 3:19-20; 6:1

b Exod 3:19-20; 6:1

(ii. Before the king) Striking down the chiefs of Libya.

(iii. Minor epigraphs: a. cartouches) [...], Men[mare], [...], Sethos I [Merenamun], given dominion like Re. (b. Falcon) May he give life and dominion.

(c. Fan) May all protection, life, stability and dominion attend him like Re!

(d. Above and behind the king) Horus strong in arm, Lord of Both Lands, Lord who performs the rituals, smiting every foreign land, Lord of the strong arm, trampling down the Nine Bows.

(e. Terminal text) Shall endure the King, Lord of Both Lands, Lord of the strong arm,² Menmare, trampling down the chiefs of the foreign lands of Lib[ya] (Temehu) like Re.

(iv. Prince Ramesses added behind king at left) Hereditary Prince, Senior King's Son, of his (own) body, beloved of him, Ramesses.

(v. Prince [formerly, an official] behind Libyan chief at right) (Original text [KRI VII 425:6]): Troop-Commander and Fanbearer, Mehy.]

(Added text of prince): Hereditary Prince, Eldest King's Son, of his (own) body, [...].

Triumphal Return with Prisoners (KRI 122.1-13)

(i. Rhetorical text, before and above the prisoners)

[The Good god who returns, having triumphed over the chiefs of every land; he has trampled down the rebellious foreign countries] who had transgressed his boundaries. He is like Montu, [he has taken up the mace, like Horus in his panoply], his bow is with [him like Bast], his arrow is like (that of) the Son of Nut. No foreign land can stand before him, the dread of him is in their hearts, all foreign lands ..., have become at peace — he causes them to cease standing on the battlefield, (as) they forget (even how) to draw the bow, spending the day in the caves,^c hidden away like foxes. Dread of His Majesty [is in all lands, pervading their hearts, [?inasmuch as his father Amun has given him] valor and victory.

¹ Comparisons of the pharaoh with Baal are quite frequent in the Ramesside period, as here and above COS 2.4A, (i). Likewise with the goddess

² Astarte, as in COS 2.4A.

(ii. Text above lower file of prisoners) [Chiefs of the foreign lands that knew not Egypt, whom His Majesty brought off as] prisoner(s) from the [foreign land]^d of Lib<ya>, by the power of his father Amun.

(iii. Minor epigraphs. a. Over the horses) First Great (Chariot-)Span <of> His Majesty, "Valiant is Amun."

(b. Cartouches) Lord of Both Lands, Menmare, Lord of Crowns, Sethos I Merenamun, given life.

(c. Vultures at right): Nekhet, White One of Nekhen. (At left): [... lost ...].

Presentation of prisoners and spoil to the Theban triad (KRI I 23.1-24.4)

(i. Text above the spoils) Presentation of tribute by His Majesty to his father Amun-Re, (consisting) of silver and gold, lapis-lazuli and turquoise, and of every noble gemstone^e — "by the valor which you give me over every foreign land."

(ii. Text before the king) Presentation of tribute by the Good god to his father Amun, from the rebellious chiefs of the foreign lands ignorant of Egypt, (with) their tribute on their backs, to fill every workshop with slaves male and female — "by the victories which you gave me over every land."

(iii. Text above upper file of prisoners) His Majesty has

c Josh 10:16

d Josh 6:19, 24

returned from the foreign lands, his at[tack] having succeeded. He has plundered Retenu (Syria), he has slain their chiefs. He has caused the Asiatics to say: "Who is this? He is like a flame in its shooting forth, unchecked by water!" He causes all rebels to desist from all boasting with their mouths — he has taken away the (very) breath of their nostrils.

(iv. Text above lower file of prisoners) Chiefs of the foreign lands of Libya (Tehenu) [...].

(v. Minor epigraphs: a. cartouches) King of Southern and Northern Egypt, Lord who performs the rituals, Menmare, Son of Re, Lord of Crowns, Sethos I Merenamun, given life like Re.

(b. Vultures, at left) May she give life, stability and dominion like Re. (At right): Nekhet, White One of Nekhen; may she give all valor.

(vi. Speech of Amun)

Words spoken by Amun-Re, Lord of the Thrones of Both Lands: "(My) bodily son whom I love, Lord of Both Lands, Menmare! My heart is glad through love for you, and I rejoice at the sight of your beauty. I set the war-cry of Your Majesty upon every foreign land. [Your mace] is upon the head(s) of their chiefs — [they] come to you in unison, to Nile-land, carrying all their goods loaded on their backs."

(vii. Mut) Mut, Lady of Asheru, Lady of heaven, Mistress of all the Gods: "[I grant to you] eternity as King of the Two Lands, you having appeared like Re."

(viii. Khons-Thoth) Khons in Thebes, Neferhotep, Horus, Lord of joy, Thoth Lord of Karnak: "I give to you valor against the South and victory over the North" — may all protection, life, stability and dominion attend him like Re.

REFERENCES

Texts: definitive, Epigraphic Survey 1986: pls. 27-32; handbook ed., KRI 1:20-24. Translations with notes and older references: Epigraphic Survey 1986:87-101; Kitchen 1993a:17-19, 1993b:23-25.

KARNAK, CAMPAIGN AGAINST QADESH AND AMURRU (UNDATED) (2.4G)

(West Side, Top Register)

K. A. Kitchen

Here, except for an inaccessible scene round the corner (walled-over in the 22nd Dynasty), only one scene remains, of the king in battle, the scenes of his return to Egypt and presentation to the gods being now lost. But the remaining scene has him vanquishing Amurru, a kingdom in the Lebanon mountains that bears the name of the Amorites, and Qadesh, focus of an epic battle in his son's reign (COS 2.5 below).

(Scene hidden behind 22nd-Dynasty wall — not accessible)

Sethos I attacks Qadesh and Amurru (KRI I 24)

(i. Rhetorical text) [The Good god who slays] te[ns of thousands],^a raging [like the Son of] Nut, (with

a 1 Sam 18:7; 21:12; 29:5

b Jer 1:18; Ezek 4:3

Montu at [his right and Seth] at his left, a hero [without his equal], a warrior worth ("of") millions, [who protects] his army, a rampart^b for myriads; [stout-hearted?] (when) he sees multitudes,

[he cares] nothing for myriads en masse; one who enters [into the mass of Asiatics, and who makes them [prostra]te, who tramples down [their] settlements, [and devas]tates [their] villages [upon] his paths, [a strong bull, sharp-horned?] who crushes [myriads ...].

(ii. Text on the fort) The ascent which Pharaoh, LPH, made to destroy the land of Qadesh (and) the land of Amurru.¹

(iii. Text at right of fort) Town of Qadesh.

(iv. Over the horses) <First> Great Chariot-Span [of] His majesty, ["..."].

(v. Terminal line at right; KRI VII 426) [Shall endure the King, Lord of Both Lands, Menmare, arisen upon the] Horus-throne, and destroying the rebellious foreign lands [...].

Text of obliterated official (KRI VII 426)

The Troop-commander and Fanbearer, Me[hy, justified].²

Triumphal return (KRI VII 425)

[...] according as he gives him valor against every foreign land.

Prisoners to the gods (KRI VII 425)

(i. Amun): [...] to see me.

(ii. Mut): [... I give you ...] everlasting as joyful ruler.

(iii. Behind Mut): [... all ...] attend her like Re.

¹ Qadesh and Amurru are here close neighbors, as is geographically true; Qadesh-on-Orontes closely adjoined the north-east border of the mountain-state of Amurru. The text here speaks of "the land of the Amurru"; or probably better, of "him of Amurru," meaning the Amurrite ruler, which foreshadows well-attested usage in the Qadesh-texts of Ramesses II. Originally, "Amurru" had been a Mesopotamian term for the area of Syria west of the River Euphrates and Gebel Bishri, and for people in that area ("Amorites"); but already in texts from Mari and Alalakh (early 2nd millennium BCE) it had begun to have a more restricted use, culminating in the specific 14th/13th-century kingdom of Amurru in Lebanon envisaged in the Amarna letters, in Hittite and Ugaritic records and in these texts of Sethos I and Ramesses II. See Klengel 1969:178-183; 1992:39-43, 160-161, with references.

² The high official Mehy was originally present in three scenes on these walls — in the Year I (bottom) register, west side; in the Libyan war series and in this series (east side), in each case replaced by a figure of Ramesses II as Prince (not king). Mehy must have played an important role at court and probably in these wars, to be honored with a place in these great temple-scenes; on his emergence into a political role next to his father (as prince-regent), young Ramesses evidently considered that he (not a mere commoner) should feature here, especially if he went on his father's later campaigns.

REFERENCES

Texts: definitive, Epigraphic Survey 1986: pls. 22-26; handbook ed., KRI I:24; 7:425. Translations, notes and older references: Epigraphic Survey 1986:79-85; Kitchen 1993a:19-20; 1993b:25-26.

RAMESSES II (2.5)

THE BATTLE OF QADESH — THE POEM, OR LITERARY RECORD (2.5A)

K. A. Kitchen

In this epic clash of arms between Muwatallis II of Hatti and Ramesses II of Egypt in the latter's Year 5 (1275 BC), it is now clear that Ramesses won the battle on the day, but Egypt lost politically by its results: Qadesh was not taken, Amurru returned to Hatti, and the Egyptian province of Upe (around Damascus) fell into Hittite control temporarily. However, as his personal valor had in some measure saved the day (but aided by the timely arrival of reinforcements), the pharaoh felt justified in presenting his narrow personal triumph to Egypt and its gods in a suitably grandiose composition in both image and word. Thus, two great tableaux were carved upon the temple walls, one of the Egyptian camp as attacked by the Hittites as the Egyptian relief-force arrived, and one of the king triumphantly pushing back the Hittite forces into and over the River Orontes. Alongside these scenes was engraved a 'literary record', the so-called Poem (most of it actually poetical, but with prose segments as needed), and in the first tableau a supplementary text, now known as the Bulletin, mainly prose but with a touch of poetry as needed. The entire work was inscribed on major temples in Egypt and Nubia: so, at Thebes (Karnak, Luxor, Ramesseum), at Abydos, at Abu Simbel in Nubia; northern temples are too destroyed to preserve copies. The Poem also was copied as a purely literary piece (without the scenes) on papyrus.

(1-6)¹ Beginning of the Triumph of the King of Southern and Northern Egypt, Usimare Setepenre, Son of Re, {beloved of the Gods}, Ramesses II Meriamun,² given life forever, which he achieved: against the Hatti-land, Naharina, and against the land of Arzawa; against Pidassa, (and) against the Dardanaya (land);
 against the land of Masa, against the land of Qarqisha, and Lukka;
 against Carchemish, Qode, (and the) land of Qadesh;
 against the land of Ugarit, (and) Mushnatu.³

(7-24) Now, His Majesty was a youthful lord, a hero without peer; arms were powerful, his heart bold,
 his strength (was) like Montu's in his hour:
 Fine in appearance like Atum,
 at seeing his beauty, one rejoices.

Mighty in victories over all foreign countries,
 one never knows when he may begin to fight.

Strong rampart ^a around his army, their shield on the day of fighting.

An archer unequalled,^b more valiant than hundred-thousands rolled into one.

Going straight ahead, entering the throng,
 his heart confident in his strength.

Ruthless in the hour of combat,
 like fire in the instant that it devours.

Determined like a bull poised in the arena,
 he thinks nothing (even) of every land combined.

Even a thousand men ^c cannot withstand him, hundred-thousands despair just at the sight of him.

Master (through) fear, great of war-cry,
 in the hearts of all lands.

Mighty in renown, rich in splendour, like Sutekh on the mountain-tops.

[Dreaded] in the hearts of foreigners, like a fierce lion in a valley of wild game.

Going forth bravely,
 returning after triumphing personally,
 without speaking boastfully.

Effective in counsel,
 good at planning,
 one finds (the needful) in his first reply.

^a Jer 1:18;
 Ezek 4:3

^b Gen 49:24

^c 1 Sam 18:7;
 21:12; 29:5

Rescuer of his infantry on the day of battle, great protector of his chariotry.

Bringing his followers (safe home), saving his troops, his heart (steady) as a mountain of copper.

(Such is) the King of Southern and Northern Egypt, Usimare Setepenre,
 the Son of Re,⁴ Ramesses II, given life.⁵

(25-40) So now, His Majesty issued supplies to his infantry and chariotry, (and the) Sherden-warriors that His Majesty had captured, when he brought them in by the triumph of his strong arm; they being kitted-out with all their weapons, and the plan of campaign given to them.

Thus, His Majesty travelled north, his infantry and chariotry accompanying him. He made a good start to the march in Year 5, 2nd month of Shomu, Day 9, {to the despised land of Syria, on his 2nd campaign of victory}.

His Majesty passed the fortress of Sile, he being strong as Montu at his forays. All foreign lands trembled before him, their chiefs presenting their tribute; and every (would-be) rebel submitting through fear of the wrath of His Majesty. His army went through the (narrow) passes just like someone on the (open) roads of Egypt.

Some time after this, see, His Majesty was in Ramesses II the Town, which is in the Valley of the Conifers. His Majesty travelled on northwards. Now when His Majesty had reached the ridge of Qadesh, then His Majesty went straight on, like his father Montu, Lord of Thebes; and he crossed the ford of (the river) Orontes, with the 1st Army-Division of Amun who gives victory to Usimare Setepenre.⁶ (Thus) His Majesty arrived at the town of Qadesh.

(41-55) Now, the despicable Fallen (chief) of Hatti had come; he had gathered round himself all foreign countries to the (furthest) limits of the sea: The entire land of Hatti had come; that of Naharina likewise, and that of Arzawa;

Dardanaya, that of Gasgas, that (var.: those) of Masa;
 those of Pidassa, that of Arwanna, that of Qarqisha, (and) Lukku;

¹ The "line-numbers" given in the text are the modern P(oem) paragraph-numbers applied to the text since Kuentz's edition; for typographical neatness, the cipher "P" is omitted.

² Hereinafter abbreviated to "Ramesses II."

³ The home locations of most of the Hittite allies can be defined, even if sometimes only broadly. Naharina is the Eg. term for Mitanni/Hanigalbat in the great west bend of the Euphrates. Arzawa is in the south part of Anatolia, and Pidassa to the north of Arzawa. Dardanaya, Masa, Qarqisha and Lukka (cf. Lycia) were all in the western parts of Anatolia. Qode is an Eg. term that loosely embraces north Syria and perhaps Cilicia (Kizzuwatna). North-Syrian Carchemish on the Euphrates was the Hittite administrative capital for their Syrian vassals; Ugarit was the seaport city-state near modern Latakia; Mushnatu (for Mushanipa?) was also probably in north Syria.

⁴ P. Ch. Beatty adds: {Beloved of the Gods} here.

⁵ P. Ch. Beatty adds: {forever and eternally, like his father Re}.

⁶ P. Ch. Beatty here adds {L.P.H., [Son of Re, Ramesses II, L.P.H.]}

Kizzuwatna, Carchemish, Ugarit, Qode; the entire land of Nuhasse; Mushnatu; (and) Qadesh;⁷

he left not (even one) country which was not brought, of every distant land.

Their rulers were there with him, each man with his forces;

their chariotry was vast in extent, unequalled;
they covered hill and valley, they were like the locust-swarm in their multitude;^d he left no money ("silver") in his land, he had stripped himself of all his property;

he gave it to all the(se) countries, to bring them with him, to fight.^e

Now, the despicable Fallen (chief) of Hatti, along with the many lands that were with him, stood hidden and ready, on the North-East of the (town) of Qadesh.

(56-74) Now, His Majesty was all alone, with (just) his followers,

the division of Amun marching behind him;

the division of Pre crossing the ford, in the area

South⁸ of the town of Shabtuna, at a distance of 1 iter from where His Majesty was;

the division of Ptah being to the South of the town of Arnam;

(and) the division of Seth (still) marching along the road.

His Majesty had drawn the first battle-line from all the leaders of his army.

Now, they were on the shore (or bank) in the land of Amurru.

Now, the despicable Ruler of Hatti stood amidst the army which was with him,

he could not come out to fight, for fear of His Majesty.

So, he sent out men and chariotry, abundant, exceedingly numerous like the sand,

they being three men to a chariot-span,^f

{they formed their units of three, every runner of the land of of the fallen ones of Hatti}, they being armed with every (kind of) weapon of war.

See, they had been made to stand hidden behind the town of Qadesh. Then they emerged on the South side of Qadesh, and attacked the division of Pre at its middle, as they were marching, unaware, and not prepared for fighting. Then His Majesty's troops and chariotry collapsed before them.

(75-91) Now His Majesty was established on the North of the town of Qadesh, on the West side of ^d Judg 6:5;

Joel 1:4-7

^e 1 Kgs 15:18-
19; 2 Kgs
16:7-9

^f Exod 14:7;
Josh 11:4

^g 1 Kgs 8:20

^h 1 Kgs 8:62-
64 the Orontes. Then one came to report it to His Majesty. Then His Majesty appeared (gloriously) like his father Montu, he took his panoply of war, and girded himself in his coat of mail; he was like Baal in his hour. The great (chariot)-span which bore His Majesty was (named) Victory in Thebes, of the Great Stable of Usimare Setepenre, Beloved of Amun, of the Residence.

Then His Majesty set forth at a gallop, he plunged into the midst of the forces of the Hittite foe, he being entirely on his own, no-one else with him.

So, His Majesty went on to look around him; he found 2,500 chariot-spans hemming him in, all around him, even all the champions ("runners") of the Hittite foe, along with the numerous foreign countries who were with them:

from Arzawa, Masa and Pidassa; {from Gasgas, Arwanna and Qizzuwatna; from Aleppo, Ugarit, Qadesh and Lukka;} they were three men to a chariot-span, acting as a unit. But there was no high officer with me, no charioteer, no army-soldier, no shield-bearer. But my army and my chariotry melted away before them, none could withstand them, to fight with them.

(92-120) Then said His Majesty:

"Indeed, what's up with you, my father Amun?

Has a father ever ignored his son?

Now, have I done anything without you?

Do I not go and stop at your word?

I have not disobeyed a(ny) plan that you commanded!⁹

How (much) great(er) is he, the great Lord of Egypt,

(than) to allow foreigners to approach his path!

What are they to you, O Amun,

these Asiatics, despicable and ignorant of God!

Have I not made for you monuments in great multitude?

I have filled your temple with my captures!

I built for you my Memorial Temple,¹⁰ ^g and I assigned you all my property by testament.

I presented to you every land in (its) entirety, to supply your sacred offerings.

I caused to be offered to you myriads of cattle, with all sweet-smelling herbs.^h

I neglected no good deed, to fail to do them in your courts.

I built for you great {stone} pylon-towers, and erected their flagstaves myself.

I brought for you obelisks from Elephantine,

⁷ The Gasgas or Gasgaeans were unruly tribesfolk who lived north of the Hittite central homeland, and Arwanna adjoined the Gasgaean zone. Kizzuwatna was a former kingdom centered on Cilicia (around Tarsus), while Nuhasse comprised lesser Syrian states neighboring on the northern course of the Orontes.

⁸ Raïfé: "West."

⁹ In his devotion to the god Amun, Ramesses II was the perfect "Deuteronomist"! He repeatedly emphasizes his obedience to the divine will and commands (here; and Poem. 108-110, 120ff.), cf. Deut. passim. Cf. Kitchen 1970:16-19.

¹⁰ Lit., "my Temple of Millions of Years."

it being I who acted as stone-carrier.
 I directed for you ships on the sea, to ferry for you the products of foreign countries.
 What will people think, if (even) a minor mishap befalls him that depended on your counsel? Do good to him who counts on you — then people will serve you with a will.
 I have called on you, O Amun,
 while I am amidst multitudes whom I know not.
 All the foreign countries have united against me,
 I being (left) entirely alone, no one else with me.
 My regular troops have abandoned me, not one of them has looked for me, from my chariotry.
 When I kept on shouting out to them,
 none of them heeded me, as I called out.
 Amun I found more help to me than millions of troops,
 than hundred-thousands of chariotry, than ten-thousands of men, whether brothers or offspring,
 (even) if united in one will.
 There is no achievement of (however) many men,
 but Amun is more help than them!
 I have attained this (much), O Amun, by the counsels of your mouth;
 I have never ("not") overstepped your counsel.
 (121-127) See, I made petition from the back of beyond,¹¹
 my voice echoing in Thebes.¹²
 The moment I called to him, I found Amun came, he gave me his hand, being with me, and I was happy.
 As (close as) face to face, he spoke out (from) behind me:
 "Forward! I am with you, I am your father, my hand is with you!
 I am more useful to you than hundred-thousands of men,
 I am the Lord of Victory, who loves bravery."
 (128-142) My heart I found strong, my mind joyful,
 All I did came off (well), I was just like Montu.
 I shot to my right, and captured to my left,
 I was like Seth in his moment,¹³ in their sight.
 I found that the 2,500 chariots, in whose midst I was, fell prostrate before my horses.
 None of them was able to fight, their hearts quailed in their bodies through fear of me.
 All their arms were weak, they could not shoot, they could not steady their minds, to seize their javelins.

J 1 Kgs 8:29-
 30, 42, 44

I made them plunge into the water, as crocodiles plunge,
 so, they fell on their faces, one on (top of) another.
 I slaughtered them just as I wished,
 none looked behind him, no other turned around,
 whoever of them fell, he did not rise again.
 (143-165) Now, the despicable Ruler of Hatti was standing amidst his infantry and chariotry, watching the attack by His Majesty, alone, on his own,
 having with him neither his infantry nor his chariotry;
 so he [=the Hittite] just stood, — turning back,
 cringing, fearful.
 Then he sent forth many chiefs, each of them with his chariot-spans,
 equipped with their weapons of war:
 the Ruler of Arzawa and the one of Masa;
 the Ruler of Arwana, the one of Lukku, the one of Dardanaya;¹³
 the Ruler of Carchemish, the Ruler of Qarqisha, and the one of Aleppo;
 the brothers of Him of Hatti, all assembled as one.
 They united as one thousand chariot-spans,
 and came straight on forward into the fire!
 I launched myself against them, being like Montu;
 I gave them a taste of my fist ("hand") in the space of a moment.
 I wrought mayhem among them, slain on the spot.
 One cried out to another amongst them, (saying):
 "He is no mere man, he that is among us!
 (it's) Seth great of power, (very) Baal in person!
 Not the acts of a mere man are the things that he does,
 they belong to one utterly unique!
 One who defeats myriads, no troops with him,
 no chariotry.
 Let's come away quickly, let's flee before him,
 let's seek life for ourselves, that we may breathe
 air!
 See, he who would venture out to approach him,
 at once, his hand and all his limbs go weak.
 None can draw a bow or even (wield) a spear, when they see him coming, striding in from a distance."
 (166-204) Now, His Majesty was after them like a griffon,
 I slaughtered among them, without letting up.
 I raised my voice to call out to my troops, saying:
 "Stand firm, be bold-hearted, my troops,¹⁴
 see my triumph, (all) on my own, with only Amun to be my protector, his hand

¹¹ Lit., "from the furthest end of the foreign lands."

¹² In some versions, Montu (at Abydos) and Baal (P. Sallier) are substituted for Seth.

¹³ P. Sallier adds: "the one of Gasgas."

¹⁴ P. Sallier adds (wrongly): "and my chariotry" (who are addressed in P173).

with me.
 And how cowardly are your hearts, my chariotry,
 it's no use trusting in you either!
 Was there not one of you, for whom I did good in my land?
 Did I not arise as Lord, when you were poor?
 I caused you to become great men by my beneficence daily.
 I set a son over his father's property, I expelled all evil that had been in this land.
 I left your servants for you(r use), I gave you (back) others who had been taken from you.
 (As for) anyone who requested petitions, "I'll do
 (it, — here) I am," I said to him daily.
 No master has done for his army, the things that I have done at your wish.
 I allowed you to dwell in your towns, without doing military service.
 My chariotry equally, I sent home on the road to their towns, saying:
 'I shall find them just as (easily as) today, in the hour of meeting for battle.'
 Now see — you did a rotten trick, all together as
 one:
 Not a man of you stood firm to give me a hand
 as I fought.
 As the spirit of my father Amun endures, O that I were in Egypt!
 Like the Forefather of my forefathers, they who saw no Syrians,
 (who never fought Him, even remotely!)
 And not one of you having come to boast of your ('his') service, in the land of Egypt."
 How much better, (just) to raise many monuments for Thebes, city of Amun!
 The wrong that my troops and chariotry did is greater than can be told.
 See, Amun has given me his victory,
 no troops being with me, and no chariotry.
 He has caused every distant land to see my victory
 by my strong arm,¹⁵
 I being alone, no high officer with me, no charioteer, no soldier of the infantry, no groom.
 The foreign lands that beheld me shall tell of my fame ("name")
 as far as distant lands yet unknown.
 As for any of them that escaped my hand, they stood, turning back, looking at what I had done.
 If I penetrated amid millions of them, their legs could not stay firm, and they fled.
 All those who shot in my direction, their arrows
 then scattered when they reached me.
 (205-213) Now when Menna my shield-bearer saw

J Exod 3:20;
 6:1

that a huge number of chariots hemmed me in, then he was dismayed, his heart sank, and stark fear possessed his body.
 Then he said to His Majesty:
 "My good Lord, O mighty Ruler, great Protector of Egypt on the day of battle,
 we stand alone in the midst of the foe!
 See, the troops and chariotry have abandoned us,
 why do you stay to save them?
 Let's get clear, save us, O Usimare Setepenre!"
 (214-223) Then said His Majesty to his shieldbearer:
 "Be firm, be bold-hearted, my shield-bearer!
 I shall go into them like the pounce of a falcon, killing, slaughtering, felling to the ground.
 What are these effeminate weaklings to you,
 for millions of whom I care nothing?"
 Then His Majesty set off quickly, and he went off
 at a gallop, into the midst of the foe, for the 6th time of attacking them.
 I was like Baal in the moment of his power,
 I killed among them, I did not let up.¹⁵
 (224-250) Then, when my troops and my chariotry saw me,
 that I was like Montu, my arm strong,
 Amun my father being with me instantly, turning all the foreign lands into straw before
 me,
 then they presented themselves one by one,
 to approach the camp at evening time.
 They found all the foreign lands, amongst which I had gone,
 lying overthrown in their blood,
 namely all the fine(st) warriors of the Hatti-(land),
 the children and brethren of their ruler.
 I had made white the countryside of the land of Qadesh,
 None could find space to tread, by reason of their sheer number.
 Then my army came to praise me,¹⁶ their faces [amazed/averted], at seeing what I had done.
 My officers came to extol my strong arm,¹
 And likewise my chariotry, boasting of my name, thus:
 "What a fine warrior, who stiffens morale,
 that you should rescue your troops and chariotry!
 You are the son of Amun, achieving with his arms, you devastate the land of Hatti by your valiant arm.
 You are the fine(st) warrior, without your peer, the king who fights on his army's behalf, on the day of conflict.
 You are great-hearted, foremost in the battle-line,

¹⁵ P. Sallier adds (wrongly, P. 223 bis & ter): "Then His Majesty called to his troops and chariotry, likewise (to) his chiefs who could not fight; and His Majesty said to them:"

¹⁶ Or possibly, "to thank me" (praise me because of them).

you did not bother about any of the lands, (even) united as one.

You are great in victory in front of your army, in the presence of the entire land, without boastful claims.

O Protector of Egypt, who curbs the foreign lands, You have broken the back of Hatti forever!"

(251-276) Then said His Majesty to his troops and his officers, and likewise (to) his chariotry:

"What's wrong with you, my officers, my troops and my chariotry, who do not know (how to) fight?

Does a man not make himself honored in his city, at his return, when he has played the hero before his lord?

Fair indeed is fame ("name") won in battle, over and over, from of old, a man is respected because of his strong arm.

Have I done no good to (even) one of you, (for) your abandoning me, alone amidst the strife?

How lucky, indeed, is he among who is alive, (for) your sniffing the air, while I was (left) on my own!

Don't you know in your minds, that I am your rampart of iron? ^k

What will be said in gossip, when it is heard of, your abandoning me, I being (left) alone, without companion?

And neither high officer, chariot-warrior nor soldier came, to give me a hand, as I fought!

I repulsed a million foreign lands, on my own, with (only) Victory in Thebes and Mut is Content, my great chariot-steeds.

It was they whom I found to help me, when all alone I fought with multitudinous foreign lands!

I shall stoop to feeding them myself, personally, every day that I am in the Palace!

It was they whom I found amidst the strife, with the charioteer Menna, my shield-bearer, and with my household butlers who were at my side, those who are my witnesses regarding the fighting.

See, I found them!"

My Majesty desisted from (further) valor and triumph,

(for) I had overthrown myriads by my strong arm.

(277-326) When dawn came, I marshalled the battle-line in the fight,

I was prepared to fight like an eager bull.

^k Jer 1:18;
Ezek 4:3

^l Gen 15:17

^m Jos 10:24

I appeared against them like Montu, arrayed in the accoutrements of valor and victory.

I entered into the battle-lines, fighting like the pounce of a falcon, my Uraeus-serpent overthrowing my enemies for me, she spat her fiery flame in the face(s) of my foes.

I was like Re, in his appearing at the dawn, my rays, they burned up the bodies of the rebels.

One of them called out to his fellows:

"Look out, beware, don't approach him!

See, Sekhmet the Mighty is she who is with him, she's along with him, on his horse, her hand with him!

As for anyone who goes to approach him, then a fiery flame comes to burn up his body!"

Then they took (their) stand at a distance, doing homage with their hands before me.

Thereupon My Majesty seized them, killing among them, without letting up, (as) they sprawled before my horses, lying overthrown together in their blood.

Thereupon the despicable, defeated Ruler of Hatti sent (a message), honoring my name like (that of) Re, saying:

"You are (very) Sutekh, Baal in person, dread of you is like a torch-brand ' in the land of Hatti."

Then he despatched his envoy, bearing a letter in his hand, in the mighty name of My Majesty, sending greetings to the majesty of the palace of: Horus-Falcon, Strong Bull, Beloved of Maat,

Sovereign who protects his army, valiant through his strong arm;

Rampart for his troops on the day of battle;

King of Southern and Northern Egypt, Usimare Setepenre,

Son of Re, Lion, possessor of the strong arm, Ramesses II, given life forever.

This (humble) servant speaks, he makes it known that:¹⁷

You are the (very) Son of Re, who came forth from his body;

he assigned to you all lands together, united as one.

As for the land of Egypt and the land of Hatti, they are yours, your servants — they are under your feet,"

Pre your august father has granted them to you.

Do not overwhelm us!

See, your power is great.

your might lies heavy upon the land of Hatti.

Is it good that you kill your servants,

¹⁷ P. Sallier here needlessly adds: "O Pharaoh, my good Lord, fine son of Pre-Harakhiti."

your face fierce against them, without your pity (on them)?
See, you spent yesterday, slaughtering myriads."
You came today, and you left no heirs!
Do not be (so) harsh in your words, O Victorious king!
Peace is better than war; grant us breath!"
(321-330) So, My Majesty desisted in life and dominion.
I being like Montu his moment (of triumph), when his attack has succeeded.

Then My Majesty had brought in to me all the leaders of my infantry and my chariotry, and all my high officers, assembled all together, in order to let them hear the matter about which he [= Hittite king] had sent word. Then I caused them to hear the words that the despicable Ruler of Hatti had sent to me.

Then they spoke out in unison: "Excellent, indeed, is peace, O Sovereign our Lord! There is no dishonor ('blame') in peace, when you make it. Who shall resist you on the day of your wrath?"
(331-343) Then His [var.: My] Majesty decreed that his word be heeded.
I [var.: he] turned peacefully southwards.
His Majesty set off back to Egypt peacefully, with his troops and chariotry, all life, stability and dominion being with him, the gods and goddesses being the talismanic protection for his body,

■ 1 Sam 18:7; 21:12; 29:5

○ Exod 1:11

and subduing for him all lands, through fear of him.
It was the might of His Majesty that protected his army, all foreign lands praising his fair countenance.
Arrival peacefully in Egypt, at Pi-Ramesse Great-in-Victories,⁹ and resting in his Palace of life and dominion, like Re who is in his horizon.
The gods of the land <come> to him in greeting, saying:
"Welcome, our beloved Son, King of Southern and Northern Egypt, Usimare Setepenre, Son of Re, Ramesses II, given life! — according as they have granted him a million jubilees and eternity upon the throne of Re, all lands and all foreign lands being overthrown and slain beneath his sandals, eternally and forever.

(P. Salier, Colophon)
This text [was written] in Year 9, 2nd month of Shomu, Day <1>, of the King of Southern and Northern Egypt, Usima[re] Setepenre, LPH, Son of Re, Ramesses II, LPH, given life eternally and forever like his father Re.

It has come to completion successfully ... For the spirit of the Chief Archivist [of the Treasury of Pharaoh, LPH, Amenemone,] the Scribe of the Treasury of Pharaoh, [LPH], A[men]emwia, and [the Scribe of] the Treasury of Pharaoh, [LPH ...]. Made by the Scribe Pentaweret [...].

REFERENCES

Texts: Kuentz 1928-34; KRI 1:2-147. Translations: Gardiner 1960; Kitchen 1996:2-26; Davies 1997:55-96. Latest commentary: Kitchen 1999:3-55 with extensive bibliography.

THE BATTLE OF QADESH — THE "BULLETIN" TEXT (2.5B)

K. A. Kitchen

The so-called "Bulletin" is a compact text that gives details supplementary to the main account in the "Poem." By its position in the first great tableau-scene, it functions as a label-text to that part of the scene (the king interrogating two Hittite spies). But its length and cohesion also ranks it as almost an independent text within the overall composition.

(1-2)¹ Year 5, 3rd month of Shomu, Day 9, under the Majesty of:
Horus-Falcon, Strong Bull, Beloved of Maat;
King of Southern and Northern Egypt, Usimare Setepenre, Son of Re, Ramesses II, given life forever.
(3-6) Now, His Majesty was in Syria (Djahy) on his 2nd victorious campaign. A happy awakening in life, prosperity and health, in His Majesty's tent, on the ridge South of Qadesh. After this, in the early morning, His Majesty appeared as when Re shines, and he assumed the accoutrements of his father Montu.

(7-28) The Lord [=the King] proceeded North, and (His Majesty) reached the area South of the town of Shabtuna. There came two Shasu, from the Shasu tribesfolk, to say to His Majesty:

¹ The "line-numbers" given in the text are the modern B(ulletin) paragraph-numbers used since Kuentz's edition; for typographical neatness.

"It is our brothers, who are tribal chiefs with the Fallen One of Hatti, who have sent us to His Majesty, saying: 'We shall become servants of Pharaoh, LPH, and we shall separate ourselves from the Ruler of Hatti.'"

Then said His Majesty to them: "Where are they, your brothers who [se]nt you to speak of this matter to His Majesty?"

Then said they to His Majesty: "They are where the despicable Chief of Hatti is, for the Fallen One of Hatti is in the land of Aleppo, to the North of Tunip. He feared Pharaoh, LPH, too much to come southward, when he heard that Pharaoh, LPH, was coming northward."

Now, these (two) Shasu said these things, and lied ^a to His Majesty. (For) it was the Fallen One of Hatti who had sent them, to find out ("see") where His Majesty was, so as to prevent His Majesty's army from being prepared to fight with the Fallen One of Hatti.

Now, the Fallen One of Hatti had sent the Shasu to say these things to His Majesty, having come with his troops and chariotry, along with the rulers of every land that was in the territory of the land of Hatti, and their troops and chariotry, which he had brought with him as allies, to fight with His Majesty's army, he standing ready and prepared behind Old Qadesh — but His Majesty did not know that they were there. The two Shasu who were in the (royal) presence were interrogated(?).

(29-32) So, His Majesty travelled on northward, arriving at the North-West of Qadesh. The camp of His Majesty's army was pitched there, and His Majesty sat on the throne of electrum, to the North of Qadesh, on the West side of the (river) Orontes.

(33-51) Then came a scout ^b who was in His Majesty's service, bringing in two scouts of the Fallen One of Hatti; they were ushered into the (royal) presence.

Then said His Majesty to them: "What are you?" What they said: "We belong <to> the Ruler of Hatti — he it is who sent us, to see where His Majesty is."

His Majesty said to them: "Where is he himself, the Ruler of Hatti? See, I have heard that he is in the land of Aleppo, to the North of Tunip."

They said [to] His Majesty: "See, the despicable Ruler of Hatti has (already) come, along with the

^a Josh 9

^b Num 13;
1 Kgs 20:17

^c Josh 11:4

many foreign lands that accompany him, whom he has brought with him as allies, [from all the foreign lands who belong to the area of Hatti]:²

[the land of Dardanaya],³ the land of Naharina; that of Gasgas, those of Masa, those of Pidassa; the land of Qarqisa, and Lukku, (and) the land of Carchemish;

the land of Arzawa, the land of Ugarit, that of Arwanna;

the land of Alshe, Mushnatu, and Qadesh;

Aleppo, and the entire land of Qode.

They are furnished with their infantry and chariotry, [bearing their combat-weapons];⁴ they are more numerous than the sands of the seashore.⁵ See, they stand equipped, ready to fight, behind Old Qadesh!"

(52-80) Then His Majesty had the high officers summoned into the (royal) presence, to let them hear all the words that the Fallen One of Hatti's two spies had spoken.

Then said His Majesty to them: "You see the situation (in) which are the garrison-commanders and governors of foreign territories, together with the chiefs of the lands of Pharaoh, LPH, (that) they stand (there) saying daily to Pharaoh, LPH: 'The despicable Ruler of Hatti is in the land of Aleppo, north of Tunip, having fled before His Majesty, when he heard (the report): "See, Pharaoh has come!" — so they say, speaking to His Majesty daily!' But see, I have heard this very hour, from these two spies from the Fallen One of Hatti, that the despicable Fallen One of Hatti has (already) come, with the numerous foreign countries accompanying him, with men and chariotry, as many as the sand (of the shore).⁶ See, they stand hidden behind Old Qadesh — [so, it is said]⁵ — and my governors of foreign territories and my chiefs, in whose charge are the lands of Pharaoh, LPH, could not tell us that they [= Hatti] had arrived!"

The high officers who were in the (royal) presence spoke and replied to the Good [god] thus: "(This is) a great crime that the governors of foreign territories and chiefs (of Pharaoh, LPH) have committed, (in) not causing (the location) of the Fallen One of Hatti, wherever he is, to be reported to them, that they might report it to Pharaoh, LPH, daily."

Then the Vizier was ordered to hurry up His Majesty's army that was (still) marching (from) South of the town of Shabtuna, in order to fetch them to where His Majesty was.

the cipher "B" is here omitted.

² Bracketed wording in Luxor texts, omitted at Ramesseum and Abu Simbel.

³ Bracketed wording at Ramesseum and Abu Simbel, omitted at Luxor.

⁴ Bracketed wording at Ramesseum and Abu Simbel (omitted at Luxor), which omit Aleppo (included at Luxor).

⁵ Bracketed words in Ramesseum and Abu Simbel texts; omitted at Luxor.

But (even) as His Majesty sat talking with the high officers, the despicable Fallen One of Hatti came with his troops and his chariotry, and also the numerous foreign lands that were accompanying him. They crossed the ford (just) South of Qadesh, then they entered in amongst His Majesty's troops as they marched unawares.

(81-83) Then His Majesty's troops and chariotry quailed before them, on their way North, to where His Majesty was. Then the foes from the Fallen One of Hatti surrounded His Majesty's subordinates who were by his side.

(84-105) Then His Majesty caught sight of them, so he arose quickly.

(Then) he raged against them, like his father Montu (Lord of Thebes).

He took up his panoply of war, he girded himself with his coat of mail,

— he was like Sutekh [var.: Baal] in his moment of power.

Then he mounted ("Victory-in-Thebes"),⁶ his chariot-span [var.: horses], he setting off quickly, being all alone.

His Majesty was strong, and his heart firm, none could stand before him.

All his patch blazed with fire, he burnt up every foreign land with his hot breath.

His eyes became savage when he saw them, his might flared like fire against them.

He paid no heed to (even) a million aliens, he looked upon them as on chaff.

Then His Majesty entered into the hostile ranks of the fallen ones of Hatti, along with the many foreign lands who were with them,

His Majesty being like Sutekh great in strength, like Sekhmet in the moment of her fury.

His Majesty slew all the hostile ranks of the despicable Fallen One of Hatti, along with all of his great chiefs and his brothers, likewise all the rulers of all the foreign lands that came with him, and their troops and chariotry, fallen on their faces, one upon another.

His Majesty slaughtered and slew them, fallen on the spot,

as they (lay) sprawling before his horses,

His Majesty being alone, none other with him.

So His Majesty forced the hostile ranks of the fallen ones of Hatti to plunge on their faces, sprawling, one upon another, plunging like crocodiles, into the waters of Orontes.

(106-110) "I was after them like a griffon, I defeated all the foreign lands, being alone, my troops and chariotry abandoned me, none of them stood looking back.

As Re lives for me and loves me, and as my father Atum favours me, regarding everything of which My Majesty has spoken,

— I truly did them, in the presence of my troops and my chariotry."

(Luxor palimpsest continues — fragmentary):

[...] I was like Montu, his strength [being with me? ...] all [... much lost ...]

[...] like serpents [... very large loss ...] [...] them, alighting [...]

[remainder very fragmentary]

⁶ Name of chariot-span, in Luxor text, omitted in Ramesseum and Abu Simbel texts; the latter have "Baal" for "Sutekh," and Abu Simbel "horses" for "span."

REFERENCES

Text: Kuentz 1928-34; KRI 2:102-124. Translations: Gardiner 1960; Kitchen 1996:14-18; Davies 1997:86-96; and latest commentary, Kitchen 1999:3-55 passim, with extensive earlier references.

THE (ISRAEL) STELA OF MERNEPTAH (2.6)

James K. Hoffmeier

Discovered in 1896 by Sir Flinders Petrie in western Thebes, the Merneptah Stela instantly became one of the most important documents from the ancient Near East, thanks to the appearance on it of the name "Israel" (Petrie 1897, pl. 13-14). Now over a century later, this reference remains the earliest occurrence of Israel outside of the Bible. In recent years, as more minimalist readings of the Hebrew scriptures have increased, this stela's reference to Israel has considerable interest for biblical historians as they attempt to explain Israel's origins in Canaan apart from the Bible.

Merneptah, the thirteenth son of Ramesses II, reigned a decade, beginning in 1213 BCE. According to Kenneth Kitchen (1982b:215), a major military campaign against Libyan tribes occurred in summer of year 5. Thus the stela, which is dated to regnal year 5, was set up to celebrate this triumph. Hence the Libyan campaign occupies the majority of the stela. This means that the king's sortie to the Levant, in which the Israelites were encountered, must have occurred no earlier than year 2 and before the Libyan campaign (1211-1208 BCE). Consequently the earlier campaign to Canaan did not receive as much notice on this stela as the recently concluded victory over the Libyans. In all, the stela has 28 lines, 23 of which deal with the battle with the Libyans, while the closing paean in which Israel occurs, begins towards the end of line 26 and runs to the very end of line 27. Since this short hymn mentions Tehenu (the main Libyan tribe) first among the eight toponyms, the hymn must be regarded as celebrating all the king's victories, from his first campaign into the Levant up to the most recent victory against the Libyans. These factors must be kept in view because it was not the writer's intent to give a full report on the events in Asia. It could well be that earlier annals or victory stelae, which have not survived or await discovery, documented this campaign.

The stela as a whole is generally recognized to be hymnic in nature. John Wilson called it a "Hymn of Victory" (ANET 376), while Ronald J. Williams saw it as "a series of hymns" (DOTT 137), and Miriam Lichtheim refers to it as "The Poetical Stela of Merneptah" (AEL 2:73). Both the literary structure of the stela as well as that of the final paean, have attracted considerable scholarly study in recent years. While there is general agreement that the Israel pericope is chiastic in structure, and may reflect on Israel's geo-political status in the Levant, there is no consensus regarding how to relate the toponyms to each other. A number of scholars, however, believe that Israel and Hurru (a general term for Syria-Canaan) are used in parallelism. This association suggests that the Israelites are a significant enough presence to be compared with Hurru. It has long been noted that the writing of Israel uses the determinative (semantic indicator) for an ethnic group, and not for a geographic region or city. This scenario is in complete agreement with the picture portrayed in the books of Joshua and Judges, viz. the Israelites had no clearly defined political capital city, but were distributed over a region.

A concluding historiographic note needs to be made. In the "origins of Israel" debate of the 1980's and 1990's, many critical scholars rejected the historical value of the Joshua narratives on the grounds that they are tendentious, as well as theological and ideological in nature. These same tendencies permeate the Merneptah Stela. Nevertheless, these same scholars readily accept the historical value of this important text.

The (foreign) chieftains lie prostrate, saying "Peace."¹ Not one lifts his head among the Nine Bows.²

Libya is captured,³ while Hatti^a is pacified.

Canaan is plundered, Ashkelon^b is carried off, and Gezer^c is captured.

a Gen 15:20;
23:3; 25:9;
Exod 3:8;
13:5; Josh
1:4; 3:10;
8 Josh 13:3;
Judg 1:18;
14:19; 1 Sam
6:17
c Josh 10:33; 12:12; Judg 1:29; 2 Sam 5:25; 1 Kgs 9:15, 16, 17

Yenoam⁴ is made into non-existence; Israel is wasted, its seed⁵ is not; and Hurru⁶ is become a widow because of Egypt.

All lands united themselves in peace. Those who went about are subdued by the king of Upper and Lower Egypt ... Merneptah.

¹ The Semitic word, shalom is written.

² A longstanding Eg. expression for its enemies.

³ The line reads, ḥꜥ n thnw. The problem with this text is the function of the preposition, n, which makes no sense grammatically, esp. given that all the verbs in this paean are either passive sgm.f forms or old perfectives, neither of which are written with n after the verb. This appears to be a scribal error (cf. Hoffmeier 1997:45, n. 27).

⁴ Identified with Tell el-Ubeidiya, south of the Sea of Galilee (Ahituv 1984:206-208). See also COS 2.2A, note 65; 2.4B, note 4.

⁵ The Eg. word pṛt can apply equally to seeds, i.e. grain, as to human offspring. The latter interpretation has been generally accepted. The former position has recently been advocated by Hasel (1994:48-50), but the traditional understanding seems to fit the context better (Stager 1985:61*; Hoffmeier 1997:28, 45 n. 26).

⁶ A generic, Egyptian term for Syria.

REFERENCES

Text: Petrie, 1887; KRI 4:12-19. Translations: ANET 376-378; Williams in DOTT 137-141; Lichtheim AEL 2:73-77. Studies: Fecht 1983; Ahlström and Edelman 1985; Stager 1985; Bimson 1991; Hasel 1994; Kitchen 1994-97; Hoffmeier 1997:27-31; Niccacci 1997.

3. LATE INSCRIPTIONS

THE VICTORY STELA OF KING PIYE (PIANKHY) (2.7)

Miriam Lichtheim

The great "Victory Stela of King Piye,"¹ on which the king narrates his conquest of all of Egypt, is the foremost historical inscription of the Late Period. It equals the New Kingdom Annals of Thutmose III in factualness and surpasses them in vividness. It also paints the portrait of a Nubian king who was forceful, shrewd, and generous. He meant to rule Egypt but he preferred treaties to warfare, and when he fought he did not glory in the slaughter of his adversaries in the manner of an Assyrian king. Like all members of his egyptianized dynasty, he was extremely pious and especially devoted to Amun, whom he worshiped in his Nubian residence, Napata, and of course in the god's own hallowed city, Thebes.

The large round-topped stela of gray granite was discovered in 1862 in the ruins of the temple of Amun at Napata, the Nubian capital at the foot of Gebel Barkal. The temple of Amun, erected in the New Kingdom, had been much enlarged by Piye. The stela measures 1.80 by 1.84 m and the sides are 0.43 m thick. It is inscribed on all four sides with a total of one hundred and fifty-nine lines.

The relief in the lunette shows on the left Amun enthroned, with Mut standing behind him and King Piye before him. Behind Piye, King Namart of Hermopolis leads up a horse. With him is his wife whose right arm is raised in a gesture of prayer. In the register below are the prostrate figures of Kings Osorkon IV, Iuput II, and Peftuaubast. Behind them, also kissing the ground, are five rulers: the prince Pediese and four chiefs of the Libyan Ma (or, Meshwesh): Patjenfi, Pemail, Akanosh, and Djedamenefankh. The words inscribed before these subjected rulers are mostly destroyed.

Piye, King of Nubia, was in control of Upper Egypt, with an army of his stationed there. While at Napata, the news reached him that Tefnakht of Sais, the Great Chief of the Ma, who ruled the entire western Delta, was extending his conquests southward. He had formed an alliance with a number of chiefs, including King Namart of Hermopolis, and had turned south to besiege Heracleopolis whose ruler, Peftuaubast, was allied with Piye. Piye first decided to send reinforcements to his army in Egypt, and when this army failed to win decisive victories, he himself led another army into Egypt.

In the twentieth year of his reign, ca. 734 BCE, Piye^{1a} sailed to Egypt. After halting at Thebes to celebrate the Opet festival of Amun, he tightened the siege of Hermopolis until King Namart surrendered. He then rescued the besieged Peftuaubast at Heracleopolis and received his homage. Thereafter he proceeded to capture the strongholds that stood between him and Memphis. The great walled city of Memphis, which refused to surrender, was stormed in heavy fighting. Then the rulers of the Delta hastened to surrender; only Tefnakht of Sais still held out. Eventually Tefnakht admitted defeat and, treating through an envoy, made his submission. Loaded with booty, a triumphant Piye sailed home to Napata.

The direct factual style of the inscription makes it a historical document of the first order. It is also the most important in a series of royal inscriptions of the Nubian Twenty-fifth Dynasty.

Introduction

(1) Year 21, first month of the first season, under the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Piye (Piankhy) [beloved-of-Amun], ever living. Command spoken by my majesty:

"Hear what I did, exceeding the ancestors,

I the King, image of god,
Living likeness of Atum!
Who left the womb marked as ruler,
Feared by those greater than he!
His father knew, his mother perceived:
He would be ruler from the egg.²

¹ In recent years several scholars reached the conclusion that the name of the king, hitherto read Piankhy, was really Pi or Piye. In the latest discussion of the name Vittmann proposed that, whereas the Nubian form was Pi or Piye, the Egyptians understood it as Piankhy. Thus some scholars now write Pi(ankhy). I have after some hesitation chosen Piye. The reading of the king's name: von Beckerath 1969; Janssen 1968:172; Leclant 1966:152; Parker 1966:111-114; Priese 1968:166-175; Vittmann 1974:12-16.

^{1a} [It is within this general historical context that the enigmatic "So" king of Egypt is mentioned in 2 Kgs 17:4. The identification of So is still debated. The following are the possibilities:

- 1) $\dot{S}d^p$ = Osorkon IV. The name "So" is a hypocoristic of Osorkon. See Kitchen 1986:372-374; Yoyotte 1961.
- 2) $\dot{S}d^p$ = Sais. $\dot{S}d^p$ is a rendering of "Sais" or perhaps a nisbe derived from the toponym. Hence the king would be Tefnakhte I of Sais. See most recently Redford 1992:346; Christensen 1989; Day 1992.
- 3) $\dot{S}d^p$ = a title. A) = $\dot{r}^p$ "vizier." See Yeivin 1952; B) nsw — "king." See Krauss 1978; Donner 1977:433.
- 4) $\dot{S}d^p$ = Pi(hanky). King $\dot{S}d^p$ is to be identified with Pi(hanky), the father of Shabako, the founder of the 25th Nubian Dynasty. See Green 1993; Na'aman (1990:216) uses the argument of option 3B above and identifies the king as Pi(hanky).] [KLY]

² I.e., born to be a ruler. [Gilula 1967 sees in these lines a close parallel to Jer 1:4, 5.] [WWH]

The good god, beloved of gods,
The Son of Re, who acts with his arms,
Piye beloved-of-Amun."

Tefnakht's advance

One came to say to his majesty: "The Chief of the West, the count and grandee in Netjer,³ Tefnakht, is in the nome of ...,⁴ (3) in the nome of Xoïs,⁵ in Hapy,⁶ in ...,⁷ in Ayn,⁸ in Pernub,⁹ and in the nome of Memphis. He has conquered the entire West from the coastal marshes to Itj-tawy,¹⁰ sailing south with a numerous army, with the Two Lands united behind him, and the counts and rulers of domains are as dogs at his feet.

"No stronghold has closed [its gates in] the nomes of Upper Egypt. Mer-Atum,¹¹ Per-Sekhem-kheperre,¹² Hut-Sobk,¹³ Permedjed,¹⁴ Tjeknesh,¹⁵ all towns of the West¹⁶ have opened the gates for fear of him. When he turned around to the nomes of the East they opened to him also: Hut-benu,¹⁷ Teudjoi,¹⁸ Hut-nesut,¹⁹ Per-nebtepih.²⁰

Now [he is] (5) besieging Hnes.²¹ He has encircled it completely,²² not letting goers go, not letting entrants enter," and fighting every day. He has measured it in its whole circuit. Every count knows his wall.²³ He has made every man besiege his portion, to wit the counts and rulers of domains." His majesty heard [it] with delight, laughing joyously.

Then those chiefs, the counts and generals who were in their towns,²⁴ sent to his majesty daily, saying: "Have you been silent in order to forget the Southland, the nomes of Upper Egypt, while Tefnakht conquers (all) before him and finds no resistance? Narmart,²⁵ [ruler of Hermopolis], (7) count of Hutweret,²⁶ has demolished the wall of Nefrusi.²⁷ He has thrown down his own town²⁸ out of fear of him who would seize it for himself in order to besiege another town. Now he has gone to be at his (Tefnakht's) feet; he has rejected the water of his majesty.²⁹ He stays with him like one of [his men in] the nome of Oxyrhynchos. He (Tefnakht) gives him gifts to his heart's content of everything he has found."

a Josh 6:1

Piye orders his troops in Egypt to attack and sends reinforcements

His majesty wrote to the counts and generals who were in Egypt, the commander Purem, and the commander Lemersekny, and every commander of his majesty who was in Egypt: "Enter combat, engage in battle; surround ..., (9) capture its people, its cattle, its ships on the river! Let not the farmers go to the field, let not the plowmen plow. Beset the Hare nome; fight against it daily!" Then they did so.

Then his majesty sent an army to Egypt and charged them strictly:³⁰ "Do not attack by night in the manner of draughts-playing; fight when one can see.³¹ Challenge him to battle from afar. If he proposes to await the infantry and chariotry of ³ Netjer, not identified with certainty, may be the region of Buto; see Yoyotte 1961:154-155.

⁴ The scribe did not fill in the nome sign. Probably the Harpoon nome, the 7th nome of Lower Egypt, in the northwest corner of the Delta, was meant; see Yoyotte 1961:154.

⁵ The 6th nome of Lower Egypt.

⁶ A name for the double nome of Saïs; see Yoyotte 1961:155.

⁷ The sign is destroyed; a territory adjacent to Hapy must be meant.

⁸ A name for the marshy regions of Imau (or: Iamu), the metropolis of the 3rd nome of Lower Egypt.

⁹ This town has not been identified.

¹⁰ The old residence of the Middle Kingdom, south of Memphis. It marked the southern boundary of Tefnakht's domains at the beginning of his new campaign.

¹¹ Meidum in the Fayyum.

¹² "House of Osorkon I," near El-Lahun and Gurob; see Yoyotte 1961:135, n. 1.

¹³ Crocodilopolis, the capital of the Fayyum.

¹⁴ Oxyrhynchos, the metropolis of the 19th nome of Upper Egypt.

¹⁵ A town in the 19th nome of Upper Egypt.

¹⁶ I.e., on the west bank of the Nile. The towns are listed from north to south.

¹⁷ A town in the 18th nome of Upper Egypt.

¹⁸ Town in the 18th nome of Upper Egypt, modern El-Hiba.

¹⁹ Another town in the 18th nome.

²⁰ Aphroditopolis (modern Atfih), the metropolis of the 22nd nome of Upper Egypt. These four towns on the east bank are listed from south to north, thus showing that Tefnakht had made a circular sweep.

²¹ Heracleopolis Magna, the metropolis of the 20th nome of Upper Egypt.

²² Lit., "He made himself into a tail-in-the-mouth," i.e., he encircled the town like a coiled snake.

²³ I.e., each chief allied with him was encamped before a section of the wall.

²⁴ I.e., the Eg. petty rulers of Upper Egypt who were loyal to Piye.

²⁵ Narmart of Hermopolis was one of four Eg. rulers who claimed the title "king" at this time. His domain was the Hare nome, the 15th nome of Upper Egypt.

²⁶ Hutweret is Herwer, an important town in the Hare nome.

²⁷ Another town in the Hare nome.

²⁸ The fortress of Nefrusi.

²⁹ I.e., Narmart has joined Tefnakht and repudiated his allegiance to Piye.

³⁰ Piye's charge to his army was explained by Gardiner 1935.

³¹ I.e., they should not attack by stealth as in a game where one party tries to outwit the other.

another town, then sit still until his troops come. Fight when he proposes. Also if he has allies in another town, let (11) them be awaited. The counts whom he brings to help him, and any trusted Libyan troops, let them be challenged to battle in advance, saying: 'You whose name we do not know, who musters the troops! Harness the best steeds of your stable, form your battle line, and know that Amun is the god who sent us!'"³²

"When you have reached Thebes at Ipet-sut, go into the water. Cleanse yourselves in the river; wear the best linen.³³ Rest the bow; loosen the arrow. Boast not (13) to the lord of might, for the brave has no might without him.³⁴ He makes the weak-armed strong-armed, so that the many flee before the few, and a single one conquers a thousand men! Sprinkle yourselves with water of his altars; kiss the earth before his face. Say to him:

'Give us the way,
May we fight in the shade of your arm!
The troop you sent, when it charges,
May the many tremble before it!'"

Then they placed themselves on their bellies before his majesty:

"It is your name that makes our strength,
Your counsel brings your army into port;
Your bread is in our bellies on every way,
Your beer (15) quenches our thirst.
It is your valor that gives us strength,
There is dread when your name is recalled;
No army wins with a cowardly leader,
Who is your equal there?

You are the mighty King who acts with his arms,
The chief of the work of war!"

They sailed north and arrived at Thebes; they did as his majesty had said.

Sailing north on the river they met many ships going south with soldiers and sailors, all kinds of fighting troops from Lower Egypt, equipped with weapons of warfare, (17) to fight against his majesty's army. Then a great slaughter was made of them, whose number is unknown. Their troops

b 1 Kgs 11:40,
etc.

c Josh 6:1

and ships were captured, and taken as prisoners to where his majesty was.³⁵

Battle at Heracleopolis

They proceeded toward Hnes and challenged to battle. List of the counts and kings of Lower Egypt: check spelling of Hnes King Namart and King Iuput.

Chief of the Ma, Sheshonq^b of Per-Usirnebdjedu³⁶
And Great Chief of the Ma, Djedamnefankh of Per-Banebdjedet³⁷

And his eldest son, the commander of Per-Thothweprehwy.³⁸

The troops of Prince Bakennefi and his eldest son, the Count and Chief of the Ma, (19) Nesnaisu of Hesbu.³⁹

Every plume-wearing chief of Lower Egypt.

And King Osorkon of Perbast⁴⁰ and the district of Ranofer.⁴¹

All the counts, all the rulers of domains in the west, in the east, and in the isles of the midst were united in their allegiance at the feet of the great Chief of the West, the Ruler of the domains of Lower Egypt, the prophet of Neith, mistress of Sais, the setem-priest of Ptah, Tefnakht.

They went forth against them; they made a great slaughter of them, exceedingly great. Their ships on the river were captured. The remnant made a crossing and landed on the west side in the vicinity of Perpeg. At dawn of the next day the troops of his majesty crossed over (21) against them and troops mingled with troops. They slew many of their men and countless horses. Terror befell the remnant and they fled to Lower Egypt from the blow that was great and exceedingly painful.

List of the slaughter made of them. Men: [...]⁴²

King Namart fled upstream southward when he was told, "Khmun is faced with war from the troops of his majesty; its people and its cattle are being captured." He entered into Un,⁴³ while his majesty's army was on the river and on the riverbanks (23) of the Hare nome. They heard it and surrounded the Hare nome on its four sides, not letting goers go, not letting entrants enter.⁴

³² The aim of Piye's charge was that his troops should fight a few large decisive battles rather than many small skirmishes. And he was confident that Amun was on his side.

³³ I take this to be the word tpy of Wb. 5:292.15-16, rather than Wb. 5:291.17.

³⁴ Gardiner rendered, "Boast not of being lords of might." But nb, "lord," is in the sing., and the "lord of might" is Amun, who is referred to in the next sentence.

³⁵ I.e., to Napata.

³⁶ Busiris, the metropolis of the 9th nome of Lower Egypt.

³⁷ Mendes, the metropolis of the 16th nome of Lower Egypt.

³⁸ Hermopolis Parva, the metropolis of the 15th nome of Lower Egypt.

³⁹ The 11th nome of Lower Egypt.

⁴⁰ King Osorkon IV of Bubastis.

⁴¹ Ranofer has not been definitely localized; see Gomaà 1974:132-134.

⁴² A blank space.

⁴³ Khmun and Un together formed Hermopolis Magna.

Piye resolves to go to Egypt

They wrote to report to the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Piye beloved of Amun, given life, on every attack they had made, on every victory of his majesty. His majesty raged about it like a panther: "Have they left a remnant of the army of Lower Egypt, so as to let some of them escape to report the campaign, instead of killing and destroying the last of them? I swear, as Re loves me, as my father Amun favors me, I shall go north myself! I shall tear down (25) his works. I shall make him abandon fighting forever!"

"When the rites of New Year are performed, and I offer to my father Amun at his beautiful feast, when he makes his beautiful appearance of the New Year, he shall send me in peace to view Amun at his beautiful feast of Ipet.⁴⁴ I shall convey him in his processional bark to Southern Ipet at his beautiful feast of 'Night of Ipet,' and the feast of 'Abiding in Thebes,' which Re made for him in the beginning. I shall convey him to his house, to rest on his throne, on the day of 'Bringing in the God,' in the third month of the inundation, second day. And I shall let Lower Egypt taste the taste of my fingers!"

Then the army that was here in (27) Egypt heard of the anger his majesty held against them. They fought against Permedjed of the Oxyrhynchite nome; they captured it like a cloudburst. They wrote to his majesty — his heart was not appeased by it.

Then they fought against "the Crag Great-of-Victories."⁴⁵ They found it filled with troops, all kinds of fighters of Lower Egypt. A siege tower was made against it; its wall was overthrown. A great slaughter was made of them, countless numbers, including a son of the Chief of the Ma, Tefnakht. They wrote of it to his majesty — his heart was not appeased by it.

(20) Then they fought against Hut-benu; its interior was opened; his majesty's troops entered it. They wrote to his majesty — his heart was not appeased by it.

d Judg 9:15

Piye goes to Egypt and besieges Hermopolis

First month of the first season, day 9, his majesty went north to Thebes. He performed the feast of Amun at the feast of Ipet. His majesty sailed north to the harbor of the Hare nome. His majesty came out of the cabin of the ship. The horses were yoked, the chariot was mounted, while the grandeur of his majesty attained the Asiatics and every heart trembled before him.

His majesty burst out to (31) revile his troops, raging at them like a panther: "Are you continuing to fight while delaying my orders? It is the year for making an end, for putting fear of me in Lower Egypt, and inflicting on them a great and severe beating!"

He set up camp on the southwest of Khmun. He pressed against it every day. An embankment was made to enclose the wall. A siege tower was set up to elevate the archers as they shot, and the slingers as they hurled stones and killed people there each day.

Days passed, and Un was a stench to the nose, for lack of air to (33) breathe.⁴⁶ Then Un threw itself on its belly, to plead before the king. Messengers came and went with all kinds of things beautiful to behold: gold, precious stones, clothes in a chest, the diadem from his head, the uraeus that cast his power,⁴⁷ without ceasing for many days to implore his crown.

Then they sent his wife, the royal wife and royal daughter, Nestent, to implore the royal wives, the royal concubines, the royal daughters, and the royal sisters. She threw herself on her belly in the women's house before the royal women: "Come to me, royal wives, royal daughters, royal sisters, that you may appease Horus, lord of the palace, great of power, great of triumph! Grant (35) ..."⁴⁸

(51) "Lo, who guides you, who guides you?⁴⁹ Who then guides you, who guides you? [You have abandoned] the way of life! Was it the case that heaven rained arrows?⁵⁰ I was [content] that Southerners bowed down and Northerners (said), 'Place us in your shade!' Was it bad that ... with ⁴⁴ I.e., after celebrating the New Year's feast at Napata, Piye would proceed to Thebes in time for the feast of Ipet (Opet), one of the principal feasts of Amun at Thebes.

⁴⁵ A fortress in the 18th nome; cf. Gardiner AEO 2:93*.

⁴⁶ Priese 1972:124, discussed the various translations of this sentence and proposed to render: "When the third day had begun — Hermopolis having become rotten to the nose in that it lacked the free breath of its nose — Hermopolis placed itself on its belly." I do not find this convincing. Neither the reading "three days" is probable, nor the reading m sp n ndm fnd.s, which is too wordy to suit the terseness and economy of this narrative style. I read m hnm fnd.s. Furthermore, it is not likely that the decisive result of the siege, i.e., the town's turning too foul to be habitable, would be told in a parenthesis; and hw probably introduces the main clause, since this is classical Eg.

⁴⁷ I.e., King Namart's crown.

⁴⁸ A long lacuna: lines 35-50 are almost entirely destroyed. This missing portion contained the intercession of Piye's women, Piye's acceptance of the surrender of Hermopolis, and King Namart's appearance before him.

⁴⁹ Piye is speaking.

⁵⁰ Piye makes the point that his rule of Egypt had been benign. He had not oppressed the people and had contented himself with the loyalty of their rulers.

his gifts?⁵¹ The heart is the rudder. It capsize its owner through that which comes from the wrath of god. It sees fires as coolness (55) He is not grown old who is seen with his father. Your nomes are full of children."

He⁵² threw himself on his belly before his majesty, [saying: "Be appeased], Horus, lord of the palace! It is your power that has done it to me. I am one of the King's servants who pays taxes into the treasury. ... (57) their taxes. I have done for you more than they." Then he presented silver, gold, lapis lazuli, turquoise, copper, and all kinds of precious stones. The treasury was filled with this tribute. He brought a horse with his right hand, and in his left hand a sistrum of gold and lapis lazuli.⁵³

His majesty arose in splendor (59) from his palace and proceeded to the temple of Thoth, lord of Khmun. He sacrificed oxen, shorthorns, and fowl to his father Thoth, lord of Khmun, and the Ogdoad in the temple of the Ogdoad.⁵⁴ And the troops of the Hare nome shouted and sang, saying:

"How good is Horus at peace in (61) his town,
The Son of Re, Piye!
You make for us a jubilee,
As you protect the Hare nome!"

His majesty proceeded to the house of King Namart. He went through all the rooms of the palace, his treasury and his storehouse. He (Namart) presented (63) the royal wives and royal daughters to him. They saluted his majesty in the manner of women, while his majesty did not direct his gaze at them.

His majesty proceeded to the stable of the horses and the quarters of the foals. When he saw they had been [left] (65) to hunger he said: "I swear, as Re loves me, as my nose is refreshed by life: that my horses were made to hunger pains me more than any other crime you committed in your recklessness!⁵⁵ I would teach you to respect your neighbors. (67) Do you not know god's shade is above me and does not let my action fail? Would that another, whoever he might be, had done it for me! I would not have to reprimand him for it.⁵⁶ I was fashioned in the womb, created in the egg of the god! (69) The seed of the god is in me! By his ka, I act not without him; it is he who commands me to act!"

* 2 Sam 22:6;
Ps 18:6

f Judg 9:15

Then his goods were assigned to the treasury, and his granary to the endowment of Amun in Ipet-sut.⁵⁷

Heracleopolis reaffirms its loyalty, other towns surrender

There came the ruler of Hnes Peftuaubast,⁵⁸ bearing tribute (71) to Pharaoh: gold, silver, all kinds of precious stones, and the best horses of the stable. He threw himself on his belly before his majesty and said: check spelling of Hnes above and below

"Hail to you, Horus, mighty King,
Bull attacking bulls!
The netherworld seized me,⁶
I foundered in darkness,
O you who give me (73) the rays of his face!
I could find no friend on the day of distress,
Who would stand up on battle day,
Except you, O mighty King.
You drove the darkness from me!
I shall serve with my property,
Hnes (75) owes to your dwelling;
You are Harakhti above the immortal stars!
As he is king so are you,
As he is immortal you are immortal;
King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Piye ever living!"

His majesty sailed north to the entrance of the canal beside Re-hone,⁵⁹ and found Per-Sekhempheperre with its wall raised, its gate closed, and filled with all kinds of fighters of Lower Egypt. Then his majesty sent to them, saying: "O you who live in death, you who live in death; you poor wretches, you who live in death! If the moment passes without your opening to me, you will be counted slain according to the King's judgment. Do not bar the gates of your life, so as to be brought to the block this day! Do not desire death and reject life! (79) ... before the whole land."

Then they sent to his majesty, saying:

"Lo, god's shade^f is above you,
Nut's Son gave you his arms!
Your heart's plan happens instantly,
Like the word of mouth of god.
Truly, you are born of god,
For we see (it) by the work of your arms!
Lo, your town and its gates
[...];

⁵¹ Perhaps restore: "Was it bad that the King of the Hare nome came with gifts?"

⁵² King Namart.

⁵³ This is how Namart is depicted on the scene at the top of the stela, only the hands are reversed.

⁵⁴ The eight primeval gods whose cult center was Hermopolis.

⁵⁵ Hornung (1962:115-116) discussed the meaning of kꜣ-ib and proposed "profligacy, recklessness" for this instance. This is suitable here but not in some other cases. I have suggested that two different roots of kꜣ may be involved. See Lichtheim AEL 1:77-78, n. 27.

⁵⁶ If this is the correct translation, the meaning is obscure.

⁵⁷ In all conquered towns Piye allocated part of the booty to Amun of Thebes.

⁵⁸ The ruler of Heracleopolis was one of the four rulers who claimed the title "king" and the only one who had remained loyal to Piye.

⁵⁹ Modern El-Lahun; cf. Gardiner AEO 2:116*.

May entrants enter, goers go,
May his majesty do as he wishes!"

They came out with a son of the Chief of the Ma, Tefnakht. The troops of his majesty entered it, and he did not slay one of all the people he found. (81) [...] and treasurers, in order to seal its possessions. Its treasures were allocated to the treasury, its granaries as endowment to his father Amun-Re, lord of Thrones-of-the-Two-Lands.

His majesty sailed north. He found Mer-Atum, the house of Sokar, lord of Sehedj, closed and unapproachable. It had resolved to fight. [...]; fear of (his) grandeur sealed their mouth. His majesty sent to them, saying: "Look, two ways are before you; choose as you wish. Open, you live; close, you die.⁶⁰ My majesty will not pass by a closed town!" Then they opened immediately. His majesty entered the town. (85) He sacrificed [...], [to] Menhy, foremost of Sehedj. Its treasury was allocated to the treasury, its granary as endowment to Amun in Ipet-sut.

His majesty sailed north to Itj-tawy. He found the rampart closed, the walls filled with valiant troops of Lower Egypt. Then they opened the gates and threw themselves on their bellies before [his majesty, saying to] his majesty:

"Your father gave you his heritage,
Yours are the Two Lands, yours those in it,
Yours is all that is on earth!"

His majesty went to offer a great sacrifice to the gods of this town: oxen, shorthorns, fowl, and everything good and pure. Its storehouse was allocated to the treasury, its granary as endowment to (85) his father Amun-Re.

Capture of Memphis

[His majesty proceeded to] Memphis. He sent to them, saying: "Do not close, do not fight, O home of Shu since the beginning! Let the entrant enter, the goer go; those who would leave shall not be hindered! I shall offer an oblation to Ptah and the gods of Memphis. I shall sacrifice to Sokar in Shetit. I shall see South-of-his-Wall.⁶¹ And I shall sail north in peace! [...]. [The people of] Memphis will be safe and sound; one will not weep over children. Look to the nomes of the South! No one was slain there, except the rebels who had blasphemed god; the traitors were executed."

They closed their fort. They sent out troops against some of his majesty's troops, consisting of artisans, builders, and sailors (87) [who had entered] the harbor of Memphis. And the Chief of Sais⁶¹ arrived in Memphis by night to charge his soldiers, his sailors, all the best of his army, consisting of 8,000 men, charging them firmly:

g Deut 30:15

"Look, Memphis is filled with troops of all the best of Lower Egypt, with barley, emmer, and all kinds of grain, the granaries overflowing; with weapons [of war] of all kinds. A rampart [surrounds it]. A great battlement has been built, a work of skilled craftsmanship. The river surrounds its east side; one cannot fight there. The stables here are filled with oxen; the storehouse is furnished with everything: silver, gold, copper, clothing, incense, honey, resin. I shall go to give gifts to the chiefs of Lower Egypt. I shall open their nomes to them.⁶² I shall be (89) [...], [in a few] days I shall return." He mounted a horse (for) he did not trust his chariot,⁶³ and he went north in fear of his majesty.

At dawn of the next day his majesty arrived at Memphis. When he had moored on its north, he found the water risen to the walls and ships moored at [the houses of] Memphis. His majesty saw that it was strong, the walls were high with new construction, and the battlements manned in strength. No way of attacking it was found. Every man of his majesty's army had his say about some plan of attack. Some said: "Let us blockade (91) [...], for its troops are numerous." Others said: "Make a causeway to it, so that we raise the ground to its wall. Let us construct a siege tower, setting up masts and using sails as walls for it. You should divide it thus on each of its sides with ramparts and [a causeway] on its north, so as to raise the ground to its wall, so that we find a way for our feet."

Then his majesty raged against them like a panther, saying: "I swear, as Re loves me, as my father Amun favors me, ... according to the command of Amun! This is what people say: (93) '... and the nomes of the South opened to him from afar, though Amun had not put (it) in their hearts, and they did not know what he had commanded. He (Amun) made him in order to show his might, to let his grandeur be seen.' I shall seize it like a cloudburst, for [Amun-Re] has commanded me!"

Then he sent his fleet and his troops to attack the harbor of Memphis. They brought him every ship, every ferry, every shry-boat, all the many ships that were moored in the harbor of Memphis, with the bow rope fastened to its houses. (95) [There was not] a common soldier who wept among all the troops of his majesty. His majesty himself came to ⁶⁰ Ptah.

⁶¹ Tefnakht.

⁶² This probably means that Tefnakht would restore to the northern chiefs the towns he had captured from them, in order to gain their help for the defense of Memphis and the Delta.

⁶³ Gilula (1977:296) points out that nhty is the root nht "believe, trust," and not nhi, "wish, ask for."

line up the many ships.

His majesty commanded his troops: "Forward against it! Mount the walls! Enter the houses over the river! When one of you enters the wall, no one shall stand in his vicinity, no troops shall repulse you! To pause is vile. We have sealed Upper Egypt; we shall bring Lower Egypt to port. We shall sit down in Balance-of-the Two-Lands!"⁶⁴

Then Memphis was seized as by a cloudburst. Many people were slain in it, or brought as captives to where his majesty was.

Now (97) [when] it dawned on the next day his majesty sent people into it to protect the temples of god for him. The arm was raised over the holy of holies of the gods.⁶⁵ Offerings were made to the Council (of the gods) of Memphis. Memphis was cleansed with natron and incense. The priests were set in their places.

His majesty proceeded to the house of [Ptah]. His purification was performed in the robing room. There was performed for him every rite that is performed for a king when he enters the temple. A great offering was made to his father Ptah South-of-his-Wall of oxen, shorthorns, fowl, and all good things. Then his majesty went to his house.

Then all the districts in the region of Memphis heard (it). Hery-pedemy, (99) Peninewe, Tower-of-Byt, Village-of-Byt, they opened the gates and fled in flight, and it was not known where they had gone.

Three rulers surrender

Then came King Iuput,⁶⁶ and the Chief of the Ma, Akanosh,⁶⁶ and Prince Pediese,⁶⁷ and all counts of Lower Egypt, bearing their tribute, to see the beauty of his majesty.

Then the treasuries and granaries of Memphis were allocated as endowment to Amun, to Ptah, and to the Ennead in Memphis.

Piye visits the sanctuaries of Heliopolis

At dawn of the next day his majesty proceeded to

A Exod 30:10,
etc.

J Gen 41:45,
50; 46:20

the East. (101) An offering was made to Atum in Kheraha,⁶⁸ the Ennead in Per-Pesdjat,⁶⁹ and the cavern of the gods in it,⁷⁰ consisting of oxen, shorthorns, and fowl, that they might give life-prosperity-health to the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Piye ever living.

His majesty proceeded to On⁷¹ over that mountain of Kheraha on the road of Sep⁷² to Kheraha. His majesty went to the camp on the west of Iui.⁷² His purification was done: he was cleansed in the pool of Kebeh; his face was bathed in the river of Nun, in which Re bathes his face. He proceeded to the High Sand⁷³ in On. A great oblation was made on the High Sand in On before the face of Re at his rising, consisting of white oxen, milk, myrrh, incense, and all kinds of (103) sweet-smelling plants.

Going in procession to the temple of Re.⁷⁴ Entering the temple with adorations. The chief lector-priest's praising god and repulsing the rebels from the king.⁷⁵ Performing the ritual of the robing room; putting on the sdb-garment; cleansing him with incense and cold water; presenting him the garlands of the Pyramidion House; bringing him the amulets.

Mounting the stairs to the great window to view Re in the Pyramidion House. The king stood by himself alone. Breaking the seals of the bolts, opening the doors; viewing his father Re in the holy Pyramidion House; adorning⁷⁶ the morning-bark of Re and the evening-bark of Atum. Closing the doors, applying the clay, (105) sealing with the king's own seal, and instructing the priests: "I have inspected the seal. No other king who may arise shall enter here." They placed themselves on their bellies before his majesty, saying: "Abide forever without end, Horus beloved of On!"

Entering the temple of Atum. Worshiping the image of his father Atum-Khepri, Great one of On.

Then came King Osorkon⁷⁷ to see the beauty of his majesty.

⁶⁴ Memphis.

⁶⁵ Iuput II, ruler of Leontopolis (T³-rmw, Int-rmw), one of the four "kings."

⁶⁶ This important Libyan chief ruled in Sebennytes (Tb-ntr), the metropolis of the 12th nome of Lower Egypt, and controlled a large territory around it, including the towns of Iseopolis (Per-hebyt) and Diospolis Inferior (Sema-behdet). See Yoyotte 1961:159-161, and Gomaà 1974:69-71. He had not joined Tefnakht's alliance, and along with Iuput and Pediese, he now came to make his submission.

⁶⁷ The ruler of Athribis. He too appears to have remained neutral; see Yoyotte 1961:162-163.

⁶⁸ A town south of Heliopolis called "Babylon" by the Greeks. See Gardiner AEO 2:131*-144*.

⁶⁹ Ibid., pp. 141*-142*. Gardiner examined the question whether Per-Pesdjat, the "House of the Ennead," was a place distinct from Kheraha or merely another name for it, and he leaned to the latter view.

⁷⁰ The "cavern" means a source of the inundation. In addition to the "twin sources" of the Nile at Elephantine, Kheraha claimed possession of a source.

⁷¹ A god of the region, spelled Sepa in earlier texts.

⁷² Name of the canal of Heliopolis.

⁷³ An often-mentioned sacred place in Heliopolis.

⁷⁴ The principal temple of Heliopolis.

⁷⁵ A symbolic act.

⁷⁶ It is not clear whether the word is ḏsr and just what ritual act the king is performing.

⁷⁷ Osorkon IV of Bubastis, the last of the four kings to surrender.

Piye holds court at Athribis

At dawn of the next day his majesty proceeded to the harbor at the head of his ships. He crossed over to the harbor of Kemwer.⁷⁸ The camp of his majesty was set up on the south of Keheny, in the east (107) of Kemwer.

Then came those kings and counts of Lower Egypt, all the plume-wearing chiefs, all viziers, chiefs, king's friends from the west, the east, and the isles in their midst, to see the beauty of his majesty. Prince Pediese threw himself on his belly before his majesty, saying: "Come to Athribis, that you may see Khentikhety,⁷⁹ that Khuyet⁸⁰ may protect you, that you may offer an oblation to Horus in his house, of oxen, shorthorns, and fowl. When you enter my house, my treasury will be open to you. I shall present you with my father's possessions. I shall give you gold as much as you wish, (109) turquoise heaped before you, and many horses of the best of the stable, the choicest of the stall."

His majesty proceeded to the house of Horus Khentikhety. An offering of oxen, shorthorns, and fowl was made to his father Horus Khentikhety, lord of Athribis. His majesty went to the house of Prince Pediese. He (Pediese) presented him with silver, gold, lapis lazuli, and turquoise, a great quantity of everything, and clothing of royal linen of every number,⁸¹ couches laid with fine linen, myrrh and ointment in jars, and stallions and mares, all the best of his stable.

He purified himself by a divine oath before these kings and great chiefs of (111) Lower Egypt: "Anyone who hides his horses and conceals his wealth⁸² shall die the death of his father! I have said this in order that you bear out your servant with all that you know of me. Tell if I have concealed from his majesty anything of my father's house: gold bars, precious stone, vessels of all kinds, armlets, bracelets of gold, necklaces, collars wrought with precious stones, amulets for every limb, headbands, earrings, all royal adornments, all vessels for the king's purification of gold and precious stones. All these I have presented (113) to the King, and garments of royal linen by the thousands of the very best of my house. I know you will be satisfied with it. Proceed to the stable, choose what you wish, all the horses you desire!" Then his majesty did so.

Then said these kings and counts to his majesty: "Let us go to our towns to open our treasuries, that we may choose according to what your heart may desire, and bring to you the best of our stables, the finest of our horses." Then his majesty did so.

List of the northern rulers

List of their names:⁸³

King Osorkon in Perbast and the district of Ranofer,⁸⁴

King Iuput in Tentremu and Taan,⁸⁵

Count Djedamenefankh (115) in Per-Banebdjedet⁸⁶ and Granary-of-Re,⁸⁷

His eldest son, the general in Per-Thothweprehwy,⁸⁸ Ankh-hor,

Count Akanosh in Tjeb-neter, Per-hebyt, and Sema-behdet,⁸⁹

Count and Chief of the Ma, Patjenfi in Per-Sopd and Granary-of-Memphis,⁹⁰

Count and Chief of the Ma, Pemai in Per-Usirnebdjedu,⁹¹

Count and Chief of the Ma, Nesnaisu in Hesbu,⁹²

Count and Chief of the Ma, Nekthor-neshnu in Per-gerer,⁹³

Chief of the Ma, Pentweret,

Chief of the Ma, Pentbekhent,⁹⁴

Prophet of Horus, lord of Khem,⁹⁵ (117)

Pedihorsomtus,

Count Herbes in Per-Sakhmet-nebetsat and in ⁷⁸ The 10th nome of Lower Egypt, the metropolis of which was Athribis.

⁷⁹ The principal god of Athribis who was identified with Horus.

⁸⁰ A local goddess.

⁸¹ Perhaps a reference to the number of threads in a fabric by which its fineness was determined.

⁸² Assuming that ḥw "worth, value, weight," could be used in the sense of a person's material worth, i.e., his wealth.

⁸³ The list is arranged according to rank.

⁸⁴ See nn. 40-41 and 77.

⁸⁵ See n. 65. Taan has not been identified.

⁸⁶ See n. 37.

⁸⁷ Location uncertain. See Gomaà 1974:88.

⁸⁸ Hermopolis Parva, see n. 37. On the two rulers see Gomaà 1974:86-89.

⁸⁹ See n. 66.

⁹⁰ Patjenfi's residence, Per-Sopd (modern Saft el-Henna) was the metropolis of the 22nd nome of Lower Egypt. His other town, "Granary-of-Memphis," has not been localized. This chief had not participated in Tefnakht's alliance. On the rulers of Per-Sopd, see Gomaà 1974:101-104.

⁹¹ Pemai was the ruler of Busiris. His predecessor, Sheshong, had been a member of Tefnakht's coalition. On these dynasts of Busiris, see Yoyotte 1961:165-172, and Gomaà 1974:60-67.

⁹² See n. 39. Nesnaisu had been an important member of Tefnakht's coalition.

⁹³ This chief has not been mentioned previously. His town in the eastern Delta has not been localized with certainty; see Gomaà 1974:105-106.

⁹⁴ Two minor chiefs not previously mentioned.

⁹⁵ Khem = Letopolis was the metropolis of the 2nd nome of Lower Egypt.

Per-Sakhmet-nebetrehsa,⁹⁶

Count Djedkhu in Khentnefer.⁹⁷

Count Pebes in Kheraha and Per-Hapy,⁹⁸

with all their good tribute [of] gold, silver, [precious stones], couches laid with fine linen, myrrh in (119) jars, [...] of good value, horses [...]

[...] [after] this one came to tell (121) his majesty: "[...] the wall [...]. He has set fire to [his] treasury [and to the ships] on the river. He has garrisoned Mesed (123) with soldiers"⁹⁹ Then his majesty sent soldiers of his to see what was happening there, he being the protector of Prince Pediese. They returned to report (125) to his majesty, saying: "We have slain every man we found there." Then his majesty gave it (the town) to Prince Pediese as a gift.

Tefnakht announces his submission

The Chief of the Ma, Tefnakht, heard it¹⁰⁰ (127), and a messenger was sent to where his majesty was with cajoling words, saying: "Be gracious! I cannot see your face in the days of shame; I cannot stand before your flame; I dread your grandeur! For you are Nubti, foremost of the Southland,¹⁰¹ and Mont, (129) the mighty bull! Whatever town you turn your face to, you will not be able to find your servant there, until I have reached the islands of the sea! For I fear your wrath on account of those fiery words which are hostile to me!"

"Is your majesty's heart (131) not cooled by the things you did to me? While I am under a just reproach, you did not smite me in accordance with (my) crime. Weigh in the balance, count by weight, and multiply it against me threefold! (But) leave the seed, that you may gather it in time. Do not cut down (133) the grove to its roots! Have mercy! Dread of you is in my body; fear of you is in my bones!"

"I sit not at the beer feast; the harp is not brought for me. I eat the bread of the hungry; I drink the water of (135) the thirsty, since the day you heard my name! Illness is in my bones, my head is bald, my clothes are rags, till Neith is appeased toward me! Long is the course you led against me, and your face is against me yet! It is a year (137) that has purged my ka and cleansed your servant of his fault! Let my goods be received into the treasury:

J Gen 17:14;
Exod 12:48;
1 Sam 17:26;
Isa 52:1

gold and all precious stones, the best of the horses, and payment of every kind.¹⁰² Send me (139) a messenger quickly, to drive the fear from my heart! Let me go to the temple in his presence, to cleanse myself by a divine oath!"

His majesty sent the chief lector-priest Pediamen-nest-tawy and the commander Purem. He (Tefnakht) presented (141) him with silver and gold, clothing and all precious stones. He went to the temple; he praised god; he cleansed himself by a divine oath, saying: "I will not disobey the King's command. I will not thrust aside (143) his majesty's words. I will not do wrong to a count without your knowledge. I will only do what the King said. I will not disobey what he has commanded." Then his majesty's heart was satisfied with it.

Final surrenders, Piye returns to Nubia

One came to say (145) to his majesty: "Hut-Sobk¹⁰³ has opened its gate; Meten¹⁰⁴ has thrown itself on its belly. No nome is shut against his majesty, of the nomes of the south and the north. The west, the east, and the islands in the midst are on their bellies in fear of him, (147) and are sending their goods to where his majesty is, like the subjects of the palace."

At dawn of the next day there came the two rulers of Upper Egypt and the two rulers of Lower Egypt, the uraeus wearers,¹⁰⁵ to kiss the ground to the might of (149) his majesty. Now the kings and counts of Lower Egypt who came to see his majesty's beauty, their legs were the legs of women. They could not enter the palace because they were uncircumcised¹ (151) and were eaters of fish, which is an abomination to the palace. But King Namart entered the palace because he was clean and did not eat fish. The three stood (153) there while the one entered the palace.

Then the ships were loaded with silver, gold, copper, and clothing; everything of Lower Egypt, every product of Syria, and all plants of god's land.¹⁰⁶ His majesty (155) sailed south, his heart joyful, and all those near him shouting. West and East took up the announcement, shouting around his majesty. This was their song of jubilation:

"O mighty ruler, O mighty ruler,
(157) Piye, mighty ruler!

⁹⁶ Two fortresses in the 2nd nome.

⁹⁷ A town in the nome of Memphis; see Gardiner AEO 2:120*-122*, and Gomaà 1974:51.

⁹⁸ Twin towns south of Heliopolis; see Gardiner AEO 2:131*-144.

⁹⁹ I.e., Tefnakht had occupied the town of Mesed (Mosdai) north of Athribis, on the border of Pediese's realm.

¹⁰⁰ When Tefnakht heard that the resistance of Mesed had been crushed he surrendered but without appearing in person.

¹⁰¹ The god Seth.

¹⁰² Or, "equipped with everything," referring to the horses.

¹⁰³ See n. 13.

¹⁰⁴ The nome of Aphroditopolis, the 22nd nome of Upper Egypt.

¹⁰⁵ The four kings: Namart, Pefnuabast, Iuput II, and Osorkon IV.

¹⁰⁶ This term for foreign regions south and east of Egypt seems to refer specifically to wooded areas. It could also be employed for woodlands within Egypt, as in the "Victory Stela of Psamtik II" (see Lichtheim AEL 2:86, n. 2).

You return having taken Lower Egypt,
 You made bulls into women!
 Joyful is the mother who bore you,
 The man who begot you!
 The valley dwellers¹⁰⁷ worship her,

The cow (159) that bore the bull!
 You are eternal,
 Your might abides,
 O ruler loved of Thebes!"

¹⁰⁷ The inhabitants of Upper Egypt.

REFERENCES

Text: Mariette 1872-89 pls. 1-6. Urk. III, 1-56. Additional fragments: Loukianoff 1926:86-89 and 2 pls.; Dunham 1970:12, 48, 77-81. Translations: Breasted 1906-07 4:§§796-883; Bresciani 1969:470-484; Lichtheim AEL 3:66-84 (reproduced here). Studies: Baer 1973:4-25; Gardiner 1935:219-223; Gomaà 1974; Kitchen 1986:362-398; Logan and Westenholz 1971-72:111-119; Priese 1972:16-32, 99-124; Yoyotte 1961:121-181.

This page intentionally left blank

B. MORTUARY INSCRIPTIONS

This page intentionally left blank

1. PYRAMID TEXTS

PYRAMID TEXTS 213 AND 219 (2.8)

("The Conquest of Death")

Robert K. Ritner

First carved in the Fifth Dynasty tomb of Unas (ca. 2350 BCE), the collection of 759 spells known as the "Pyramid Texts" was originally restricted to royal use, appearing in varying numbers in the pyramids of nine kings and queens of the Sixth to Eighth Dynasties. The texts stress the divinity and immortality of the monarch, and provide the earliest extensive commentary on the role of Osiris, the god of the dead. In spell 213, the individual body parts of the deceased are identified with divine counterparts, a technique that was to become a standard feature of Egyptian "magico-religious" practice.¹ The resultant image of the king is as an anthropomorphic Anubis, with the limbs of the primordial creator, Atum. In spell 219, the fate of the king is paired directly with that of the revived Osiris, initiating another fundamental technique of ritual pronouncements. Implicit here, though quite explicit elsewhere, is the threat that injury to the king would result in injury to the gods.²

Pyramid Text 213 (§§134-135)

Hail, King Unas! Not dead have you gone forth! Living have you gone forth! Be seated upon the throne of Osiris with your sceptre in your hand, so that you might issue commands to the living, and with your lotus-bud sceptre in your hand, so that commands might be issued to those whose places are secret ("the dead"). Your arm(s) are as (those of) Atum; your shoulders are as (those of) Atum; your belly is as (that of) Atum; your back is as (that of) Atum; your posterior is (that of) Atum; your legs are as (those of) Atum; your face is as (that of) Anubis. May you encircle the Mounds of Horus; may you encircle the Mounds of Seth.³

Pyramid Text 219 (§§167-193)

Recitation:

O Atum, this one is that (great-grand)son of yours, Osiris, whom you have caused that he be healthy and that he live. As he lives, so this king Unas lives. He doesn't die — this king Unas doesn't die. He doesn't perish — this king Unas doesn't perish. He doesn't mourn — this king Unas doesn't mourn.⁴ He mourns — this king Unas mourns.

O Shu, this one is that (grand)son of yours, Osiris, whom you have caused that he be healthy and that he live. As he lives, so this king Unas lives. He doesn't die — this king Unas doesn't die. He doesn't perish — this king Unas doesn't perish. He doesn't mourn — this king Unas doesn't mourn. He mourns — this king Unas mourns.

O Tefnut, this one is that (grand)son of yours, Osiris, whom you have caused that he be healthy and that he live. As he lives, so this king Unas lives. He doesn't die — this king Unas doesn't die. He doesn't perish — this king Unas doesn't perish. He doesn't mourn — this king Unas doesn't mourn. He mourns — this king Unas mourns.

O Geb, this one is that son of yours, Osiris, whom you have caused that he be healthy and that he live. As he lives, so this king Unas lives. He doesn't die — this king Unas doesn't die. He doesn't perish — this king Unas doesn't perish. He doesn't mourn — this king Unas doesn't mourn. He mourns — this king Unas mourns.

O Nut, this one is that son of yours, Osiris, whom you have caused that he be healthy and that he live. As he lives, so this king Unas lives. He doesn't die — this king Unas doesn't die. He doesn't perish — this king Unas doesn't perish. He doesn't mourn — this king Unas doesn't mourn. He mourns — this king Unas mourns.

O Isis, this one is that brother of yours, Osiris,

¹ See Massart 1959 and Ritner 1993:40.

² For such "threats," see Grapow 1911; Sauneron 1951; Ritner 1993:22 and the references indexed on 311.

³ The "tells" or "settlements" of Horus and Seth denote the fertile and desert regions allotted respectively to these deities. For the notion of "encircling" as "controlling" mounds and other territory, see Ritner 1993:57-67. Following Sethe, earlier translators have preferred: "The Mounds of Horus go about for (= 'serve') you. The Mounds of Seth go about for (= 'serve') you."

⁴ Or "As he doesn't die — this king Unas doesn't die." The negative statements in this passage are taken as future forms in Allen 1984: 130.

whom you have caused that he be healthy and that he live. As he lives, so this king Unas lives. He doesn't die — this king Unas doesn't die. He doesn't perish — this king Unas doesn't perish. He doesn't mourn — this king Unas doesn't mourn. He mourns — this king Unas mourns.

O Seth, this one is that brother of yours, Osiris, who has been caused that he be healthy and that he live and that he punish you.⁵ As he lives, so this king Unas lives. He doesn't die — this king Unas doesn't die. He doesn't perish — this king Unas doesn't perish. He doesn't mourn — this king Unas doesn't mourn. He mourns — this king Unas mourns.

O Nephthys, this one is that brother of yours, Osiris, whom you have caused that he be healthy and that he live. As he lives, so this king Unas lives. He doesn't die — this king Unas doesn't die. He doesn't perish — this king Unas doesn't perish. He doesn't mourn — this king Unas doesn't mourn. He mourns — this king Unas mourns.

O Thoth, this one is that brother of yours, Osiris, who has been caused that he be healthy and that he live and that he punish you. As he lives, so this king Unas lives. He doesn't die — this king Unas doesn't die. He doesn't perish — this king Unas doesn't perish. He doesn't mourn — this king Unas doesn't mourn. He mourns — this king Unas mourns.

O Horus, this one is that father of yours, Osiris, whom you have caused that he be healthy and that he live. As he lives, so this king Unas lives. He doesn't die — this king Unas doesn't die. He doesn't perish — this king Unas doesn't perish. He doesn't mourn — this king Unas doesn't mourn. He mourns — this king Unas mourns.

O Great Ennead, this one is that Osiris, whom you have caused that he be healthy and that he live. As he lives, so this king Unas lives. He doesn't die — this king Unas doesn't die. He doesn't perish — this king Unas doesn't perish. He doesn't mourn — this king Unas doesn't mourn. He mourns — this king Unas mourns.

O Little Ennead, this one is that Osiris, whom you have caused that he be healthy and that he live. As he lives, so this king Unas lives. He doesn't die — this king Unas doesn't die. He doesn't perish — this king Unas doesn't perish.

He doesn't mourn — this king Unas doesn't mourn. He mourns — this king Unas mourns.

O Nut(?),⁶ this one is that son of yours, Osiris, regarding whom you have said: "One has been (re)born to your⁷ father," for whom you have wiped his mouth when his mouth was opened by his son Horus, whom he loves, when his limbs were numbered by the gods. As he lives, so this king Unas lives. He doesn't die — this king Unas doesn't die. He doesn't perish — this king Unas doesn't perish. He doesn't mourn — this king Unas doesn't mourn. He mourns — this king Unas mourns.

[Address to Osiris in his various forms]

In your name of "He who is in Heliopolis," who endures enduringly in his enduring necropolis. As he lives, so this king Unas lives. He doesn't die — this king Unas doesn't die. He doesn't perish — this king Unas doesn't perish. He doesn't mourn — this king Unas doesn't mourn. He mourns — this king Unas mourns.

In your name of "He who is in the Busirite nome," chief of his nomes. As he lives, so this king Unas lives. He doesn't die — this king Unas doesn't die. He doesn't perish — this king Unas doesn't perish. He doesn't mourn — this king Unas doesn't mourn. He mourns — this king Unas mourns.

In your name of "He who is in The Mansion of Selqet," the pacified spirit. As he lives, so this king Unas lives. He doesn't die — this king Unas doesn't die. He doesn't perish — this king Unas doesn't perish. He doesn't mourn — this king Unas doesn't mourn. He mourns — this king Unas mourns.

In your name of "He who is in the God's Booth,"⁸ who is within the fumigation, he of the coffer, he of the chest, he of the sack. As he lives, so this king Unas lives. He doesn't die — this king Unas doesn't die. He doesn't perish — this king Unas doesn't perish. He doesn't mourn — this king Unas doesn't mourn. He mourns — this king Unas mourns.

In your name of "He who is in the Mansion of the p³-r-wood mace." As he lives, so this king Unas lives. He doesn't die — this king Unas doesn't die. He doesn't perish — this king Unas doesn't perish. He doesn't mourn — this king Unas doesn't mourn. He mourns — this king ⁵ Seth, in company with Thoth, is punished for the murder of Osiris.

⁶ The signs are unclear, and may indicate the tomb addressed as "City" (so Faulkner 1969:41) or the goddess of the lower heaven, Naunet (so Sethe and, with hesitation, Wilson ANET 33). A slight correction in carving would yield Nut, noted in § 171 as the proper mother of Osiris.

⁷ Pl.

⁸ The embalming booth.

Unas mourns.

In your name of "He who is in Orion," with your season in heaven and your season on earth. O Osiris, turn your face that you might look at this king Unas, your effective seed that came forth from you. As he lives, so this king Unas lives. He doesn't die — this king Unas doesn't die. He doesn't perish — this king Unas doesn't perish. He doesn't mourn — this king Unas doesn't mourn. He mourns — this king Unas mourns.

In your name of "He who is in Dep." Your hand is around the offering, your daughter. Provide yourself with it. As he lives, so this king Unas lives. He doesn't die — this king Unas doesn't die. He doesn't perish — this king Unas doesn't perish. He doesn't mourn — this king Unas doesn't mourn. He mourns — this king Unas mourns.

In your name of "He who is in the Mansion of the Great Cow." Your hands are around the offering, your daughter. Provide yourself with it. As he lives, so this king Unas lives. He doesn't die — this king Unas doesn't die. He doesn't perish — this king Unas doesn't perish. He doesn't mourn — this king Unas doesn't mourn. He mourns — this king Unas mourns.

In your name of "He who is in Hermopolis Magna." Your hands are around the offering, your daughter. Provide yourself with it. As he lives, so this king Unas lives. He doesn't die — this king Unas doesn't die. He doesn't perish — this king Unas doesn't perish. He doesn't mourn — this king Unas doesn't mourn. He mourns — this king Unas mourns.

In your name of "He who is in Hermopolis Parva." Your hands are around the offering, your daughter. Provide yourself with it. As he lives, so this king Unas lives. He doesn't die — this king Unas doesn't die. He doesn't perish — this king Unas doesn't perish. He doesn't mourn — this king Unas doesn't mourn. He mourns — this king Unas mourns.

In your name of "He who is in the City of Lakes." What you have eaten is the Eye (of Horus); your belly is encircled⁹ under it. Your son Horus has released it for you so that you might live by means of it. As he lives, so this king Unas lives. He doesn't die — this king Unas doesn't die. He doesn't perish — this king Unas doesn't perish. He doesn't mourn — this king Unas doesn't mourn. He mourns — this king Unas mourns.

The body of this king Unas is your body. The flesh of this king Unas is your flesh. The bones of this king Unas are your bones. As you go, so goes this king Unas. As this king Unas goes, so go you.

⁹ Signifying "protected." Following Sethe, translators have suggested "rounded out," meaning "to be full."

REFERENCES

Texts and Translations: Sethe 1908:80-81, 93-111; 1935:1-4, 72-99; Faulkner 1969:40-41, 46-48; Wilson 1969:32-33.

2. COFFIN TEXTS

COFFIN TEXT 261 (2.9)

("The Deceased as Divine Magician")

Robert K. Ritner

This spell provides the longest Egyptian theological discussion of Heka, eldest son of the creator and embodiment of the deity's ineluctable generative and destructive power (heka), conventionally termed "magic." By direct identification with Heka, the deceased controls the underlying force of the universe and gains command over the gods themselves.

TO BECOME THE GOD HEKA.

O noble ones who are before the Lord of the universe, behold, I have come before you. Respect me in accordance with what you know. I am he whom the Unique Lord made before two things ("duality") had yet come into being in this land by his sending forth his unique Eye when he was alone, by the going forth from his mouth, when his myriads of ka-spirits were the protection of his companions,¹ when he spoke with Khepri and himself that he might be more powerful than he, when he took authoritative Logos (Hu) upon his mouth.

I am indeed the son of Him who gave birth to the universe.² I am the protection of that which the Unique Lord ordained. I am he who caused the Ennead to live. I am one who does what he wishes, the father of the gods, whose standard is exalted, who endows a god in accordance with that which He who gave birth to the universe³ has ordained, the noble god who eats, who speaks with his mouth. Be silent for me; Bow down to me! Shod have I come, O bulls of heaven. In this my great dignity of "Lord of ka-Spirits," heir of Re-Atum, have I seated myself, O bulls of heaven.

I have come specifically that I might take my seat and that I might receive my dignity; for to me belonged the universe before you gods had yet come into being. Descend, you who have come in the end! I am Heka.

¹ A var. adds: "who shone in his Eye."

² Or "who gave birth to Atum." A var. adds: "who was born before his mother yet existed."

³ Or "who gave birth to Atum."

REFERENCES

Text: de Buck 1947:382-389. Translations and Discussions: Ritner 1993:17; Faulkner 1973: 199-201; Barguet 1986:489-490.

COFFIN TEXT 159 (2.10)

("Spell for Knowing the Souls of the Easterners")

Robert K. Ritner

Depicting the wonders of the region from which the sun rises, this spell (with its parallel Coffin Text 161 and descendants Book of the Dead 109 and 149b) details the otherworldly paradise known as "The Field of Reeds" where both the grain and the blessed inhabitants are giants in size.

ENTERING AND EXITING FROM THE EASTERN GATES OF HEAVEN AMONG THE FOLLOWERS OF RE. KNOWING THE SOULS OF THE EASTERNERS.¹

I know that central gate² from which Re exits in the east - with its south as the Lake of Waterfowl, in the place where Re sails by the wind, with its north as the Pools of Geese, in the place where Re sails by rowing.³ I am the guardian of the halyard in the boat of the god. I am one who rows without wearying in the bark of Re.⁴

I know those two sycamore trees that are of turquoise, between which Re exits, which go casting shade at every eastern gate from which Re shines. I know that Field of Reeds of Re. The wall that is around it is of iron. The height of its barley is four cubits.⁵ Its ear is one cubit. Its stalk is three cubits.⁶ Its emmer wheat is seven cubits. Its ear is two cubits. Its stalk is five cubits. It is the horizon dwellers, nine cubits in their height,⁷ who reap it beside the Souls of the Easterners.

I KNOW THE SOULS OF THE EASTERNERS. THEY ARE HARAKHTY, THE KHURER-CALF, AND THE MORNING STAR.⁸

¹ Common var.: "I know the souls of the Easterners."

² Var. adds: "of heaven."

³ As on the earthly Nile, one travels south by wind and sail and north by current and rowing.

⁴ The deceased claims a pivotal role in the solar bark, using either method of navigation.

⁵ Common var.: "five cubits."

⁶ Common var.: "four cubits."

⁷ Common var.: "horizon dwellers of nine cubits."

⁸ Common var.: "ONE (lit., "IT") IS HARAKHTY. ONE IS THE KHURER-CALF. ONE IS THE MORNING STAR."

REFERENCES

Text: de Buck 1938:363-372. Translations and Discussions: Wilson ANET 33; Faulkner 1973: 137-138; Barguet 1986:576.

3. THE BOOK OF THE DEAD

BOOK OF THE DEAD 109 (2.11)

(Variant of Coffin Text 159)

Robert K. Ritner

The New Kingdom vignette depicts the deceased standing behind the spotted Khurer-calf, with his arms raised in daily adoration of a seated Re-Harakhty. The spell is a counterpart to Coffin Text 160 (COS 1.21) and Book of the Dead 108 for "Knowing the Souls of the Westerners." For discussion, see Sethe 1924:1-20; and the bibliography in Hornung 1979:482.

As in the earlier Coffin Texts, the remarkable size of the underworld grain varies between sources, though the total height should equal the measure of the ear added to that of the stalk. Barley of five cubits (at 20.6 in. or 523 mm per cubit) would be over eight feet (2.615 m), while emmer of seven cubits would be just under twelve feet tall (3.661 m). Comparison of the Coffin Text and Book of the Dead versions shows that the latter follow many of the "variant" readings in the earlier source.

SPELL FOR KNOWING THE SOULS OF THE EASTERNERS.

It is NN who will say: "I know that eastern gate of heaven whose south is the Lake of Waterfowl, with its north as the Pool of Geese, in the place where Re sails by wind and by rowing. I am the guardian¹ of the halyards in the boat of the god. I am one who rows without wearying in the bark of Re.

I know those two sycamore trees of turquoise, between which Re exits, which go casting shadows at every eastern gate from which Re exits. I know the Field of Reeds. Its wall is of iron. Its barley is five cubits. Its ear is two cubits. Its stalk is three cubits.² Its emmer wheat is seven cubits.³ Its ear is four cubits.⁴ Its stalk is three cubits. It is the blessed spirits, each one of nine cubits in height, who reap it beside the Souls of the Easterners.

I know the souls of the Easterners. One is Harakhty. One is the Khurer-calf. One is the Morning Star.

Adoring Re every day. NN has built the city of the god. I know it. I know its name. Its name is Field of Reeds.

¹ Var.: "one who tends the halyards."

² Var.: list barley of seven cubits, with a stalk of three or five cubits.

³ Variants include: "four" or "eight cubits."

⁴ Var.: "three cubits."

REFERENCES

Text: Naville 1886:247-248. Translations and Discussions: Barguet 1967:143; Allen 1974:86; Hornung 1979:209-210; and Faulker 1985:102.

BOOK OF THE DEAD 125 (2.12)

("The Negative Confession")

Robert K. Ritner

The most famous of all Book of the Dead chapters, Spell 125 contains the celebrated protestation of innocence by the deceased before an underworld tribunal of forty-two gods, corresponding to the like-numbered nomes, or provinces, of Egypt. The duality of the "Two Truths" also reflects geographical, not ethical, considerations, as the goddesses correspond to the dual nature of the Egyptian kingdom, with two regions (Upper and Lower Egypt), royal titles, tutelary deities, insignia, etc. Although Spell 125 does not specifically mention the weighing of the heart before this tribunal and its overseer Osiris, god of the dead,¹ the accompanying vignette regularly depicts this psychostasis. The address by the deceased serves as a preamble to this pivotal event, purifying him from all misdeeds (literally, "things protected against/excluded") that he may in fact have done. Since the list of infractions includes seemingly unavoidable actions such as winking, impatience, aggressiveness and wading in flowing water, as well as all forms of sexual activity, this "ethical code" is not absolute, but reflects restrictions and abstinence preparatory for entrance into a sacred space and state.

¹ Though surely indicated by "that day of the reckoning of characters in the presence of Wennefer" and by the placing of "the scale in its proper position in the Land of Silence."

Following two declarations of innocence, the reciter defends his knowledge of religious mysteries in response to hostile questions posed by the constituent elements of the judgment hall itself. While cryptic, these responses detail ritual enactments of the mysteries of Osiris, slain by the severed leg of Seth, discovered in Phoenician Byblos, interred, shattered and scattered. The concluding rubric provides instructions for utilizing Spell 125 in ritual mysticism by the living. Attested from the Eighteenth Dynasty onward, Spell 125 survives well into the Hellenistic period, when it appears in a Demotic funerary papyrus written in the reign of Nero and in Greek translation as an initiatory recitation for priestly induction.

WHAT IS SAID WHEN ARRIVING AT THIS HALL OF TWO TRUTHS, PURGING NN OF ALL MISDEEDS THAT HE HAS DONE AND SEEING THE FACES OF THE GODS.²

RECITATION BY NN: "Hail to you, great god, Lord of the Two Truths! I have come before you, my lord, just so that you might bring me so that I might see your beauty. I know you and I know your name and the names of the forty-two gods who are with you in this Hall of the Two Truths, who live on those who preserve evil, who swallow their blood on that day of the reckoning of characters in the presence of Wennefer.³ Behold, The Two Daughters, His Two Eyes, {Lord} of Truth is your name. Behold, I have come before you bringing to you Truth, having repelled for you falsehood.

I have not committed wrongdoing against anyone.⁴
I have not mistreated cattle.⁴

I have not done injustice in the place of Truth.
I do not know that which should not be.
I have not done evil.

I have not daily made labors in excess of what should be done for me.

My name has not reached the bark of the Governor (i.e., Re).⁵

I have not debased a god.⁶

I have not deprived an orphan.

I have not done that which the gods abominate.

I have not slandered a servant to his superior.

I have not caused pain.⁷

I have not caused weeping.

I have not killed.

I have not commanded to kill.

I have not made suffering for anyone.

I have not diminished the offering loaves in the temples.

a Job 31

b-b Lev
19:35; Deut
25:13-16;
Amos 8:5;
Micah 6:10;
Prov 11:1; 20:10

I have not damaged the offering cakes of the gods.

I have not stolen the cakes of the blessed dead.

I have not copulated.⁸

I have not been lascivious.⁹

I have not added to nor have I subtracted from the offering measure.

I have not subtracted from the aroua measure.¹⁰

I have not encroached upon fields.¹¹

I have not added to the weight of the balance.

I have not tampered with the plummet of the scales.⁸

I have not taken milk from the mouths of children.

I have not deprived the flocks of their pasturage.

I have not snared birds of the branches of the gods.

I have not trapped fish in their marshes.

I have not diverted water in its season.

I have not erected a dam against flowing water.

I have not extinguished a fire at its critical moment.

I have not neglected the days concerning their meat offerings.

I have not driven away the cattle of the god's property.

I have not stopped a god in his procession.

I am pure, I am pure, I am pure, I am pure!

My purity is the purity of that great phoenix that is in Heracleopolis, because I am indeed that nose of the Lord of breath, who vivifies all the subjects on that day of filling the Eye of Horus in Heliopolis in the second month of winter, last day, in the presence of the Lord of this land. I am one who has seen the filling of the Eye of Horus in Heliopolis. Evil shall not happen against me in this land or in this Hall of the Two Truths

² Variants: "Spell for descending to the Hall of the Two Truths (and learning what is in it) by NN."

³ "The Perfect Being," an epithet of Osiris, now surviving as the surname Onofrio.

⁴ Common var.: "I have not mistreated associates."

⁵ Var.: "Governor of slaves."

⁶ Var.: "I have not debased a deed of the king in my time."

⁷ Common var.: "I have not caused hunger."

⁸ Var.: "I have not copulated with a boy."

⁹ Var.: "I have not been lascivious in the sanctuary of my local god."

¹⁰ Var.: "I have not subtracted from the palm-measure (1/7 of a cubit)."

¹¹ Var.: "I have not falsified the half-aroua of field."

because I know the names of the gods who are in it, the followers of the great god.¹²

O Wide-of-Stride, who has come forth from Heliopolis, I have not committed wrongdoing.

O Embracer-of-Fire, who has come forth from Egyptian Babylon, I have not robbed.

O Beaky,¹³ who has come forth from Hermopolis, I have not been envious.

O Swallower-of-Shadows, who has come forth from the cavern, I have not stolen.

O Rough of Face, who has come forth from the Memphite necropolis, I have not killed people.

O Twin-Lions, who has come forth from heaven, I have not damaged the offering measure.

O He-Whose-Eyes-Are-Flint, who has come forth from Letopolis, I have not committed crookedness.

O Firey-One, who has come forth backwards, I have not stolen a god's property.

O Smasher-of-Bones, who has come forth from Heracleopolis, I have not told lies.

O Sender-of-Flames, who has come forth from Memphis, I have not seized food.

O Cavern-dweller, who has come forth from the West, I have not been sullen.

O White-Toothed-One, who has come forth from the Faiyum, I have not transgressed.¹⁴

O Eater-of-Blood,¹⁵ who has come forth from the slaughtering-block, I have not slain sacred cattle.

O Eater-of-Entrails, who has come forth from the Court of Thirty, I have not committed usury.¹⁶

O Lord of Truth, who has come forth from The-Place-of-the-Two-Truths, I have not robbed bread-rations.

O Wanderer, who has come forth from Bubastis, I have not eavesdropped.¹⁷

O Pale-One, who has come forth from Heliopolis, I have not blabbered.¹⁸

O Doubly-Evil-Viper, who has come forth from Busiris, I have not disputed except concerning my own property.

O Wamemti-Viper, who has come forth from the place of execution, I have not copulated with a man's wife.¹⁹

O He-Who-Sees-That-Which-He-Has-Brought-Away, who has come forth from the House of Min, I have not been lascivious.

O Chief of the Nobles, who has come forth from Kom el-Hisn, I have not caused terror.

O Wrecker, who has come forth from Xoïs, I have not transgressed.

O Disturber, who has come forth from the sanctuary, I have not been hot-tempered.²⁰

O Child, who has come forth from the Heliopolitan Nome, I have not turned a deaf ear to words of truth.

O Proclaimer of Speech, who has come forth from Wensi, I have not made disturbance.

O Bastet, who has come forth from the shrine, I have not winked.²¹

O He-Whose-Face-Is-Behind-Him, who has come forth from the pit, I have not masturbated; I have not copulated with a catamite.²²

O Hot-Footed-One, who has come forth from the dusk, I have not dissembled.²³

O Dark-One, who has come forth from the darkness, I have not reviled.

O He-Who-Brings-Away-His-Offering, who has come forth from Sais, I have not been aggressive.²⁴

O Lord of Faces, who has come forth from the Heroonopolite Nome, I have not been impatient.²⁵

O Accuser, who has come forth from Wetenet, I have not transgressed my nature; I have not washed out a god.²⁶

O Lord of Horns, who has come forth from Siut, I have not been verbose in matters.

O Nefertum, who has come forth from Memphis, I have not sinned; I have not done wrong.

O He-Who-Is-Not-Abandoned, who has come forth from Busiris, I have not reviled the king.

O He-Who-Has-Acted-According-to-His-Heart, who has come forth from Antaeopolis, I have ¹² Var.: "Then you (Osiris) will protect NN from these gods who are with you in the Hall of the Two Truths."

¹³ An epithet of Thoth, the long-beaked ibis.

¹⁴ Address to the crocodile Sobek. Variants conclude: "regarding the property of Osiris" or "against another."

¹⁵ Used to signify "cannibal" in Coptic.

¹⁶ Translated variously "extorted," "profiteered," or "practiced usury," the infraction (hnwy.t) is perhaps related to "greed" (hnf). Faulkner's "perjury" derives from the Demotic substitution: "I did not commit falsehood [...]."

¹⁷ Var. concludes: "on another in his house."

¹⁸ Lit., "The speech/mouth of NN has not run on."

¹⁹ For this passage, see Heerma van Voss 1973.

²⁰ Var.: "My speech has not been heated."

²¹ Var. adds: "at another."

²² For this passage, see Heerma van Voss 1973.

²³ Lit., "I have not swallowed my heart." In medical texts, "swallowing the heart" is a physiological designation for "fainting."

²⁴ Elsewhere always a positive designation of a warrior: "champion."

²⁵ Lit., "my heart has not been hasty."

²⁶ Faulkner (1985:32) understands: "I have not washed out (the picture of) a god."

not waded in water.²⁷

- O Surging-One, who has come forth from the Abyss, I have not raised my voice.
- O Commander of the subjects, who has come forth from his shrine, I have not reviled a god.
- O Provider of goodness, who has come forth from the Harpoon Nome, I have not been puffed up.
- O Nehebka, who has come forth from Thebes, I have not made distinctions on my behalf.
- O Serpent-Whose-Head-Is-Erect, who has come forth from the cavern, my possessions have not increased except by my own property.
- O Serpent-Who-Has-Brought-Away-His-Portion, who has come forth from the Land of Silence, I have not debased the god in my town."

RECITATION BY NN:

"Hail to you, you gods.²⁸ I know you; I know your names. I shall not fall to your slaughter. You will not report my misdeed to this god in whose following you are. No fault of mine will come forth concerning you. You will speak Truth concerning me in the presence of the Lord of All, because I have done Truth in Egypt. I have not cursed a god. No fault of mine has come forth concerning a king who was in his reign.

Hail to you gods who are in this Hall of the Two Truths, who have no lies in their bodies, who live on Truth in Heliopolis, who swallow their putrifaction²⁹ in the presence of Horus who is in his Aten-disk. May you save me from Babai, who lives on the entrails of the great ones on that day of the great reckoning. Behold me; I have come before you without falsehood of mine, without guilt of mine, without evil of mine, without a witness against me, without anyone against whom I have done anything.³⁰ As I live on Truth, so I consume Truth. I have done what people say and that on account of which the gods are pleased. I have contented the god with that which he loves.³¹ I have given bread to the hungry, water to the thirsty, clothing to the naked, and a boat to the boatless. I have made divine offerings for the gods, invocation-offerings for the blessed dead. Save me, then. Protect me, then. You will not report against me in the presence of the great god. I am pure of mouth, pure of hands, one to whom "Welcome!" is said at seeing him, because I have heard that speech³² said by the Donkey and the Cat in the house of the One of the Gaping Mouth.³³ I being a witness before him³⁴ when he gave a shriek. I have seen the splitting of the persea tree within the Memphite necropolis.³⁵ I am one who provides assistance in the presence of the gods, who knows the requirements of their bodies. I have come here specifically to testify to Truth, to place the scale in its proper position in the Land of Silence. O he who is high upon his standard, Lord of the atef-crown, who has made his name as Lord of Breath,³⁶ may you save me from your messengers, who inflict bloody injury,³⁷ who create punishment, who are without compassion, because I have done Truth for the Lord of Truth, since I am pure, my front clean, my back cleansed, my middle as a pool of Truth. There is no limb of mine lacking in purity. As I have washed in the pool of the South, so I have rested in the city of the North, in the field of grasshoppers in which the crew of Re bathes in that second hour of night and third of day, which soothes the hearts of the gods when they pass by it by night or day."

"Let him come," so they say regarding me.

"Who are you?" so they say regarding me.

"What is your name?" so they say regarding me.

"I am the stalk of the papyrus plant, He-Who-is-in-the-Moringa-tree is my name."³⁸

"By what have you passed?" so they say regarding me.

"By the city north of the moringa tree I passed."³⁹

"What did you see there?"

"It was the calf and the thigh."

"What did you say to them?"

"I have seen rejoicing in the lands of the Phoenicians."

"What did they give to you?"

"It was a firebrand and a column of faience."

²⁷ Var.: "in flowing water."

²⁸ Var. adds: "who are in this Hall of the Two Truths."

²⁹ Var.: "who swallow/consume Truth."

³⁰ Var.: "for I have not done anything against him."

³¹ Var.: "the gods with that which they love."

³² Var.: "great word/speech."

³³ A reference to the punishment of Seth in donkey form by the cat goddess Mafdet; see Borghouts 1978:38, no. 59.

³⁴ Var.: "He-Whose-Face-Is-Behind-Him being my witness."

³⁵ A reference to Re's victory against Apep described in Book of the Dead 17 (COS 1.10).

³⁶ Epithets of Osiris.

³⁷ See Ritner 1993:170.

³⁸ Epithet of Osiris.

³⁹ For the following Osirian mysteries, see Ritner 1993:150, n. 678.

"What did you do with them?"
 "I buried them on the bank of the lake of Two Truths in the evening meal rite."
 "What did you find there on the bank of the Two Truths?"
 "It was a scepter of flint, whose name is Breath-Giver."
 "What did you do with the firebrand and column of faience after you had buried them?"
 "I lamented over them. I dug them up. I extinguished the fire. I broke the column and threw it in the lake."
 "Come, then, enter by this portal of the Hall of the Two Truths, since you know us."
 "I shall not let you enter by me," so say the door-posts of this portal, "unless you have said my name."
 "'Plummet of Truthfulness' is your name."
 "I shall not let you enter by me," so says the right door-leaf of this portal, "unless you have said my name."
 "'Scale-pan which bears Truth' is your name."
 "I shall not let you enter by me," so says the left door-leaf of this portal, "unless you have said my name."
 "'Scale-pan of wine' is your name."
 "I shall not let you enter by me," so says the threshold of this portal, "unless you have said my name."
 "'Ox of Geb' is your name."
 "I shall not open for you," so says the bolt of this portal, "unless you have said my name."
 "'Toe of his mother' is your name."
 "I shall not open for you," so says the hasp of this portal, "unless you have said my name."
 "'Living Eye of Sobek, Lord of Bakhu' is your name."
 "I shall not open for you, I shall not let you enter by me," so says the door-keeper of this portal, "unless you have said my name."
 "'Breast of Shu which he placed as protection for Osiris' is your name."
 "We shall not let you pass by us," so say the cross-timbers of this portal, "unless you have said our name."
 "'Children of Renenutet' is your name."
 "You know us. Pass, then, by us."
 "You shall not tread upon me," so says the floor of this Hall of the Two Truths."
 "Why, then, since I am pure?"
 "Because we do not know the names of your feet with which you would tread upon us. Say it to me then."

 "'He who is inducted into the presence of Min' is the name of my right foot. 'Flower of Nephthys'⁴⁰ is the name of my left foot."
 "Tread, then, upon us. You know us."
 "I shall not announce you," so says the door-keeper of this hall, "unless you have said my name."
 "'He who perceives hearts, who examines bodies' is your name."
 "To which god on duty shall I announce you, then?"
 "Tell it to the Interpreter of the Two Lands."
 "Who is the Interpreter of the Two Lands?"
 "It is Thoth."
 "Come," so says Thoth, "Why have you come?"
 "I have come here expressly to report."
 "What is your condition?"
 "I am pure from all misdeeds. I excluded myself from the strife of those who are in their days. I am not among them."
 "To whom, then, shall I announce you?"
 "To him whose roof is of fire, with its walls of living uraei, and the floor of whose house is in flood."
 "Who is he?"
 "He is Osiris."
 "Proceed, then. Behold, you are announced. Your bread is the Eye of Horus; your beer is the Eye of Horus; your invocation offerings on earth are the Eye of Horus," so says he regarding me.

What should be done when being present in the Hall of Two Truths. A man should say this spell when pure and clean, dressed in clothing, shod in white sandals, painted with black eye-paint, anointed with the finest myrrh-oil, and having offered fresh meat, fowl, incense, bread, beer, and vegetables. Now make for yourself this image⁴¹ in drawing upon pure ground with Nubian ochre, overlaid with soil on which neither pig nor goats have trod. As for the one for whom this book is done, he will flourish and his children will flourish. He will be a confidant of the king and his entourage. There shall be given to him a cake, a jug of beer, a loaf and a large portion of meat from upon the altar of the great god. He cannot be turned back from any portal of the West. He will be ushered in with the kings of Upper and Lower Egypt. He will be a follower of Osiris.⁴² Truly effective, millions of times.

⁴⁰ Var.: "He who opens heaven for Hathor."

⁴¹ Presumably the corresponding vignette of the weighing of the heart.

⁴² Var. adds: "He goes forth in any transformation that he desires, being a living ba-spirit forever and ever."

REFERENCES

Text: Maystre 1937; and Naville 1886:275-335 and plates cxxxiii-cxxxix. Translations and discussions: Wilson ANET 34-36; Barguet 1967:157-164; Allen 1974:97-101; Lichtheim 1976 3:124-132; Hornung 1979:233-245 and 491-493; Faulkner 1985:29-34; and Rosati 1991:88-96. For the Demotic version, see Lexa 1977. For the Greek translation, see Merkelbach 1968:7-30; 1987.

4. HARPER SONGS

CONTRASTING HARPER SONGS FROM THE TOMB OF NEFERHOTEP (2.13)
("The Good Fortune of the Dead")

Robert K. Ritner

Offering a traditional and a skeptical response to the fate of the dead, these banquet songs are part of a trio carved on the walls of Theban Tomb 50, dating to the reign of Horemheb (ca. 1319-1292 BCE). The first song to be read by the tomb visitor (conventionally termed the second Neferhotep song) forms a reaction to these contrasting approaches (see COS 1.31). Adjacent to this is the song extolling the rewards of piety and ritual (Neferhotep "III"), while the skeptical song (Neferhotep "I") is placed in the rear corridor. This last text continues the carpe diem philosophy of the Intef Harper Song (see COS 1.30), and is paralleled by a song in the Theban tomb of Paser.

Neferhotep Song "III"

Beginning of the Song:

Remember, O heart, that day of mooring (death),
Let it be placed in the heart of him who possesses a burial, who reckons(?) ... [...] him,
For indeed, there exists none who evades it,
The strong and weak in the same manner.
He who sails north or south within a lifetime,
Moors at the bank thereafter.

O God's Father,¹ what a salvation is yours,
Since you united with the lords of eternity.
How enduring is your name forever,
Glorified in the necropolis.
Every god whom you have served since your existence,

You have entered before them eye to eye,
They are prepared to receive your soul
And to protect your dignity.
They have doubled the work of your hands,
They shall purify your beauty.
They have established the altar of your mummy,
Every god bearing his food offerings.
They say to you: "Come in peace, O servant beneficent for our spirits,"

Namely the God's Father of Amon, Neferhotep, begotten by the judge Amenemone the justified.

O God's Father, I have heard your praises beside the lords of eternity.

It is said regarding you:

"He has dragged the bark of Sokar."
You have placed the Sokar bark on its sledge;
You have encircled the walls in his following,
When his breast acquires brilliance.

"He has erected the djed-pillar as a setem-priest
in his duty,
Who takes the hoe on the day of hacking the earth."²

"He has recited the festival liturgy of Busiris."
Your existence is good before the gods.
You are remembered for your goodness,
Inasmuch as it is you who enters into Heliopolis,
Who knows the mystery within it,
Namely the lector priest, who satisfied the heart of Amun, Neferhotep the justified.

O God's Father, your soul has advanced,
Your burial has passed.
Anubis has placed his hands upon you,
The Two Sisters³ have embraced you.
Purification is made for you anew,
You being assigned with crafts of eternity:
A stone deity in its true form,⁴
Ointment from upon the hands of Shesmu,⁵
Clothing from the work of Taiyt,⁶
The Children of Horus as your protection.
The Two Kites⁷ have seated themselves outside for you;
They have mourned for your name,

¹ The priestly title of the tomb owner, Neferhotep.

² For these ceremonial activities associated with the festival of Sokar, inert deity of death, see Schott 1934.

³ Isis and Nephthys.

⁴ A possible designation of the shawabty (var. ushebti) figure, detailed in Chapter 6 of the Book of the Dead and intended to perform eternal tasks for the deceased in the underworld.

⁵ God of the wine press.

⁶ Goddess of weaving.

⁷ Isis and Nephthys.

Inasmuch as it is you whose existence was beneficent on earth for your lord Amun,
God's Father of Amun, Neferhotep the justified.

O God's Father, you are remembered in Heliopolis,

You are imaged⁸ in Thebes.

There need be no searching for you for eternity;

Your name shall not be forgotten,

Inasmuch as you are one who is justified in the Estate of Ptah,

Who enters eye to eye in the Great Place.

Who is skilled in dignity in His great processions,

Who ascertains the extent of eternity by his measuring rods.

You are more exalted and happier than you have ever been.

O praised Neferhotep the justified,

Your soul is justified,

And your enemies are overthrown forever.

Neferhotep Song "I"

Statement of the singer with the harp who is in the tomb of the Osiris Neferhotep the justified, who says:

"How still is this righteous lord!

The good fate has occurred.

Bodies pass away since the time of the god;

Generations come into their places.

Re presents himself in the mornings;

Atum sets in Manu (the western mountain).

Men beget;

Women conceive.

Every nose breathes the air;

Dawn comes, and all their children have come to their tombs.

Make holiday, O God's Father!

Place incense together with fine oil to your nose;

Garlands of lotus and mandragora flowers at your breast,

Your sister,⁹ who is in your heart, seated beside you.

Place song and music before you,

Let all evil be cast behind.

Recall to yourself only joy,

Until the coming of that day of mooring

At the Land that Loves Silence,

Where the Son-whom-He-Loves¹⁰ is not weary.

Make holiday, Neferhotep the justified,

O excellent God's Father,

Whose hands are pure!

They¹¹ have heard all that has happened to those:

Their houses are crumbled,

Their places do not exist,

They are like that which had never occurred since the time of the god.

The [... trees] on the bank of your lake,

May your spirit be seated beneath them,

May it drink their waters.

Follow your heart thoroughly!

[...]

Give bread to the one who has no field,

That you may acquire a good name throughout eternity.

You have looked at the setem-priests, [clad in] panther [skins],

As they libate to the ground, with bread as offering loaves,

[What is it for?]¹²

The chantresses crying [...]

Their mummies are set up before Re;

Their people are in mourning.

[...] does not [...] coming at its time,

Fate reckoning his days.¹³

Awake [...],

Sitting powerlessly in what was made for his shade.¹⁴

Make holiday, O you whose hands are pure,

God's Father Neferhotep [the justified!] [...]

There is no work for the granaries of Egypt;

Its court is rich in [...],

Return me(?) to learn what remains concerning him.

A brief moment has not been added to [...] desert.

Those who used to have granaries with bread for offerings,

[And those who had none (?)] likewise,

They will spend their happy hour in [...].

[...] the time gone forth, the day of breaking hearts,

The one that places the house in [...]

Recall to yourself the day of your being dragged,

To the land that mingles [people ...].

[Follow your heart (?)] thoroughly!

There is no coming back.

Beneficial to [you is ...]

You are a righteous and true one,

Whose abomination is falsehood.

There is love of rightness [...]

[... protect(?)] the weak from the powerful,

⁸ Earlier translations adopt an unsubstantiated meaning "protected."

⁹ A figurative term for "beloved" or "wife."

¹⁰ Epithet of Horus, who performs mortuary duties for his father Osiris.

¹¹ Translators have tacitly emended: "I have heard ..."

¹² Restored from the parallel in the tomb of Paser, see Schott 1950:135.

¹³ Even the pious priest is subject to death.

¹⁴ A description of the helpless corpse in the tomb.

The one who is in [...] doesn't hasten(?), [...] who has no protector, who binds the one who is constricted(?) [...]	The nourishment that gives [...] [...] you. In old age she dispatches you to the place of truth, Without [...]
--	--

REFERENCES

Text: Hari 1985:11-15 and 36-40 and pls. iv and xxvi; and Lichtheim 1945. Translations and discussions: Breasted 1912:185-188; 1933:166-168; Schott 1950:131-135; Müller 1899:31-33.

5. GRAVE INSCRIPTIONS

HYMN FROM THE TOMB OF AY (2.14)

Robert K. Rimer

This hymn of the God's Father, and later Pharaoh, Ay derives from the east wall thickness of his private tomb at Amarna. Reflecting the official theology of the contemporary Atenist cult, the prayer stresses the universality of Aten, the visible solar disk, and the prophetic role of his son, Akhenaten. The hymnist's figurative expressions of abundance in terms of human measures of the sand, the sea and the mountains are paralleled in the later text of Isaiah.¹

Adoration of the living Re-Harackhty, rejoicing in the horizon in his name as the Light (Shu) which is in the Aten (the sun disk), given life forever and ever, and of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt Neferkheperure-Waenre,² son of the Sun, Akhenaten, long in his lifetime, and the great royal wife Neferneferuaten³ Nefertiti, living forever and ever.

Praises be to you when you rise in the horizon, O living Aten, lord of eternity!

Kissing the ground be at your rising in the heaven to illuminate every land with your beauty, with your rays on your son whom you love, your hands bearing millions of jubilees for the King of Upper and Lower Egypt Neferkheperure-Waenre, your child who came forth from your rays. May you confer on him your lifetime and your years. May you hearken for him to that which is in his heart. May you love him and cause him to be like Aten. May you rise to give him eternity; may you set to give him everlastingness. May you form him in the morning like your manifestations. May you fashion him in your image like Aten, the ruler of Maat, who came forth from eternity, the son of Re, who uplifts his beauty and who administers for him the production of his rays: the King of Upper and Lower Egypt who lives on Maat, Lord of the Two Lands, Ne-ferkheperure-Waenre and the great royal wife Neferneferuaten Nefertiti, living forever and ever.

The God's Father, favorite of the Good god,⁴ fanbearer at the right hand of the king, overseer of all the horses of his Majesty, true royal scribe whom he loves, Ay, who says:

"Hail to you, O living Aten, who rises in heaven inundating hearts, at whose appearance all lands are in festival, their hearts glad in jubilation since their lord, who made himself, is risen over them. Your son presents Maat to your beautiful countenance as joyfully you behold him. From you he has come forth, an eternal son come forth from the Aten, an effective one for him who is effective for him, who gratifies the heart of the Aten when he rises in heaven. He rejoices for his son, as he embraces him with his rays and gives to him an eternity as king like the Aten: Neferkheperure-Waenre, my god who made me, who transformed my ka-spirit. May you cause that I be fulfilled by beholding you unceasingly. Your character is like the Aten's: abounding in property, an inundation surging daily, giving life to Egypt, with silver and gold like the sands of the banks, while the land awakens to acclaim the one powerful by means of his ka-spirit. O he whom the Aten has born, you will be eternal, Neferkheperure-Waenre, alive and healthy inasmuch as he

¹ For a comparison of the hymn with Isa 40:12, see Couroyer 1966.

² Throne name of Akhenaten: "Beautiful are the Manifestations of Re; The Unique One of Re."

³ Throne name of Queen Nefertiti: "Beautiful is the beauty of Aten."

⁴ The "good god" is an epithet of the king.

has born you."

The God's Father, fanbearer at the right hand of the king, overseer of all the horses of his Majesty, true royal scribe whom he {loves}, Ay, who says: "I was one true to the king, one whom he transformed, one scrupulous for the Lord of the Two Lands, efficacious for his lord. I followed the ka-spirit of His Majesty as his favorite who sees his beauty when he appears in his palace, while I was at the head of the great ones and the royal companions, the first of all the followers of his Majesty. He has placed Maat in my body. Falsehood is my abomination, for I know that Wahrenre, my lord who is knowledgeable like Aten and truly perceptive, has rejoiced at such. He has doubled for me my rewards in silver and gold, while I am the first of the great ones at the head of the subjects. My character, my good nature, has made my position there. My lord instructed me just so that I might enact his teachings. I have lived by adoring his ka-spirit; I have been fulfilled by following him - my breath by which I live, my north wind, my millions of inundations surging daily, Neferkheperure-Wahrenre. May you give to me a long lifetime in your favor. How prosperous is your favorite, O son of the Aten! All that he does is stable and thriving; the ka-spirit of the Lord of the Two Lands is with him forever. Thus he is fulfilled in life when he has reached old age.

O my lord, who fashions people, who transforms a lifetime, who makes a good fate for his favorite, who is satisfied by truth, whose abomination is falsehood, how prosperous is he who hears your teaching of life! May he be fulfilled by beholding you unceasingly, his eyes seeing the Aten daily. May you grant to me a goodly old age as your favorite. May you grant to me a goodly burial by the decree of your ka-spirit in my tomb which you decreed for me that I rest therein in this mountain of Akhet-Aten, the place of the elect. May I hear your pleasant voice in the Mansion of the Benben, when you do that which your father the living Aten praises. May he cause you to be eternal! May he reward you with jubilees like the number of the sandbanks, measured in oipe-units, like the reckoning of the sea, measured by remainder-units. The itemization and counting of the mountains, weighed with the balance," or the feathers of birds or leaves of trees are like the jubilees of king Wahrenre, forever and ever, as an enduring king for the great royal wife whom he loves, who is united with her beauty, and who pacifies the Aten with a pleasant voice and with her beautiful hands bearing the sistra, the Lady of the Two Lands, Neferneferuaten Nefertiti, living forever and ever, while she is beside Wahrenre forever and ever just as heaven endures bearing what is in it.

a Isa 40:12

Your father the Aten has risen in the heaven to protect you every day inasmuch as he has born you. May you give to me the pure offering bread that has gone forth from your presence from the surplus of your father Aten as the gift of your ka-spirit. May you grant that my ka-spirit exist for me stable and thriving as when I was on earth following your ka-spirit, after it has mounted up by name to the place of the elect in which you have caused that I rest. My mouth holds Maat; let my name be uttered because of it as you have decreed, for I am like all of your elect who follow your ka-spirit. May I go bearing your rewards after old age. For the ka-spirit of the fanbearer at the right hand of the king, the true royal scribe whom he loves, the God's Father Ay, who lives again.

REFERENCES

Text: Sandman 1938:90-93; de Garis Davies 1908:17-18 and pl. xxv. Translations and discussions: Mumane 1995:110-112; Davies 1908:28-29; Couroyer 1966.

This page intentionally left blank

EGYPTIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY

- ABD EL-MAKSOU, M.
1998 Tell Heboua (1981-1991). Enquête archéologique sur la deuxième période intermédiaire et le nouvel empire à l'extrémité orientale du delta. Paris: Éditions Recherche sur les Civilisations.
- AHARONI, Y.
1979 The Land of the Bible: A Historical Geography. Rev. ed. by A. F. Rainey. Philadelphia: Westminster Press.
- AHLSTRÖM, G., and D. EDELMAN.
1985 "Merneptah's Israel." JNES 44:59-61.
- AHITUV, S.
1984 Canaanite Toponyms in Ancient Egyptian Documents. Jerusalem/Leiden: Magnes/Brill.
- ALBRIGHT, W. F.
1929 "Progress in Palestinian Archaeology during the Year 1928." BASOR 33:1-10.
1952 "The Smaller Beth-shan Stele of Sethos I (1309-1290 B.C.)." BASOR 125:24-32.
- ALLEN, T. G.
1974 The Book of the Dead or Going Forth by Day. SAOC 37. Chicago: The University of Chicago Press.
- BAER, K.
1973 "The Libyan and Nubian Kings of Egypt: Notes on the Chronology of Dynasties XXII to XXVI." JNES 32:4-25.
- BARGUET, P.
1967 Le Livre des Morts des anciens Égyptiens. LAPO 1. Paris: Les Éditions du Cerf.
1986 Textes des sarcophages égyptiens du Moyen Empire. LAPO 12. Paris: Les Éditions du Cerf.
- VON BECKERATH, J.
1969 "Zu den Namen des kuschitischen Königs Pi'anhy." MDAIK 24:58-62.
- BIETAK, M.
1996 Avaris: Capital of the Hyksos. London: The British Museum.
- BIMSON, J.
1991 "Merneptah's Israel and Recent theories of Israelite Origins." JSOT 49:20-23.
- BLEEKER, C. J.
1973 Hathor and Thoth. Leiden: Brill.
- BLEIBERG, E. L.
1996 The Official Gift in Ancient Egypt. Norman/London: University of Oklahoma Press.
- BORGHOUTS, J. F.
1978 Ancient Egyptian Magical Texts. Nisaba 9. Leiden: E. J. Brill.
- BREASTED, J. H.
1906-07 Ancient Records of Egypt. 5 volumes. Chicago: University of Chicago Press. Reprint, 1962.
1912 Development of Religion and Thought in Ancient Egypt. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons.
1933 The Dawn of Conscience. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons.
- BRESCIANI, E.
1969 Letteratura e poesia dell' antico egitto. Turin.
- DE BUCK, A.
1947 The Egyptian Coffin Texts. Vol. 3: Texts of Spells 164-267. OIP 64. Chicago: The University of Chicago.
1970 Egyptian Reading Book. Leiden: Nederlands Instituut voor het Nabije Oosten.
- CASPERSON, L.
1986 "The Lunar Dates of Thutmose III." JNES 45:139-150.
- ČERNÝ, J.
1976 Coptic Etymological Dictionary. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- CHRISTENSEN, D. L.
1989 "The Identity of 'King So' in Egypt (2 Kings XVII 4)." VT 39:140-153.
- COUROVER, B.
1966 "Isaie XL, 12." RB 73:186-196.
- CUMMINGS, B.
1982 Egyptian Historical Records of the Later Eighteenth Dynasty. Warminster: Aris & Phillips.
- DAVIES, B. G.
1997 Egyptian Historical Inscriptions of the Nineteenth Dynasty. Documenta Mundi, Aegyptiaca 2. Jonsered [Gothenburg]: Paul Aströms förlag.
- DAVIES, N. de G.
1908 The Rock Tombs of El Amarna. Part 6: Tombs of Parennefer, Tutu, and Ay. London: Egypt Exploration Society.
- DAY, J.
1992 "The Problem of 'So, King of Egypt' in 2 Kings xvii 4." VT 42:289-301.
- DESROCHES-NOBLECOURT, C.
1963 Tutankhamen, Life and Death of a Pharaoh. London: Connoisseur/Michael Joseph.
- DONNER, H.
1977 "The Separate States of Israel and Judah." Pp. 381-434 in Israelite and Judaeon History. Ed. by J. H. Hayes and J. M. Miller. London/Philadelphia: Westminster.
- DUNHAM, D.
1970 The Barkal Temples. Boston: Museum of Fine Arts.
- EDEL, E.
1953 "Die Stelen Amenophis' II aus Karnak und Memphis." ZDPV 69:98-175.

EPIGRAPHIC SURVEY

- 1986 The Battle Reliefs of King Sety I. RIK 4. Chicago: The Oriental Institute.
- FAULKNER, R. O.
1942 "The Battle of Megiddo." JEA 28:2-15.
1969 The Ancient Egyptian Pyramid Texts. Oxford: Clarendon Press.
1973 The Ancient Egyptian Coffin Texts. Vol. 1: Spells 1-354. Warminster: Aris & Phillips.
1985 The Book of the Dead. Rev. edition. London: The British Museum.
- FECHT, G.
1983 "Die Israelstele, Gestalt und Aussage." Pp. 106-138 in Studies Brunner.
- GARDINER, A. H.
1935 "Piankhi's Instructions to his Army." JEA 21:219-223.
1960 The Kadesh Inscriptions of Ramesses II. Oxford: Griffith Institute/OUP.
1961 Egypt of the Pharaohs. New York/London: Oxford University Press.
1969 Egyptian Grammar. Oxford: The Griffith Institute.
- GARDINER, A. H., and B. GUNN.
1918 "New Renderings of Egyptian Texts." JEA 5:36-56.
- GILULA, M.
1967 "An Egyptian Parallel to Jeremiah 1 4-5." VT 17:114.
1977 "Egyptian nht = Coptic nahte 'To Believe.'" JNES 36:295-296.
- GIVÉON, R.
1971 Les bédouins Shosou des documents égyptiens. Leiden: Brill.
- GOEDICKE, H.
1974 "Some Remarks Concerning the Inscription of Ahmose, Son of Ebana." JARCE 11:31-41.
1980 "The Background to Thutmose III's Foreign Policy." JSSEA 10:201-213.
- GOMAA, F.
1974 Die libyschen Fürstentümer des Deltas vom Tod Osorkons II bis zur Wiedervereinigung Ägyptens durch Psametik I. BTAVO, Reihe B 6. Wiesbaden: L. Reichert.
- GÖRG, M.
1986 "'Der Starke Arm Pharaos' — Beobachtungen zum Belegspektrum einer Metaphor in Palästina und Ägypten." Pp. 323-330 in Studies Daumas.
- GRAPOW, H.
1911 "Bedrohungen der Götter durch den Verstorbenen." ZÄS 49:48-54.
1947 Studien zu den Annalen Thutmose des Dritten und zu ihnen verwandten historischen Berichten des Neuen Reiches. Abhandlungen der Deutschen Akademie der Wissenschaften zu Berlin. Jarg. 1947. Phil.-hist. Kl. 2. Berlin: Akademie-Verlag.
- GRDSELOFF, B.
1949 Une stèle scythopolitaine du roi Séthos Ier. Cairo: Imprimerie Le Scribe Égyptien.
- GREEN, A. R. W.
1993 "The Identity of King So of Egypt — An Alternative Interpretation." JNES 52:99-108.
- HARI, R.
1985 La tombe thébaine du père divin Neferhotep. Geneva: Éditions de Belles-Lettres.
- HASEL, M.
1994 "Israel in the Merneptah Stela." BASOR 296:45-61.
- HEERMA VAN VOSS, M.
1973 "Drie Egyptische Geboden." Pp. 185-187 in Studies Böhl.
- HELCK, W.
1955 Urkunden der 18. Dynastie: historische Inschriften Thutmose III. und Amenophis III. Urkunden des ägyptischen Altertums 17. Berlin: Akademie Verlag.
1961 Urkunden der 18. Dynastie: Übersetzung zu den Heften 17-22. Berlin: Akademie Verlag.
- HOFFMEIER, J. K.
1977 "Tents in Egypt and the Ancient Near East." JSSEA 7:13-28.
1986 "The Arm of God Versus the Arm of Pharaoh in the Exodus Narratives." Bib 67:378-387.
1989 "Reconsidering Egypt's Part in the Termination of the Middle Bronze Age in Palestine." Levant 21:181-193.
1991 "The Aftermath of David's Triumph Over Goliath: 1 Samuel 17:54 in Light of Near Eastern Parallels." Archaeology in the Biblical World 1:18-23.
1991 "James Weinstein's 'Egypt and the Middle Bronze IIC/Late Bronze IA Transition': A Rejoinder." Levant 23:117-124.
1992 "The Problem of 'History' in Egyptian Royal Inscriptions." Pp. 291-299 in VI Congresso Internazionale di Egitologia Atti I. Turin.
1994 "The Structure of Joshua 1-11 and the Annals of Thutmose III." Pp. 165-179 in FTH.
1997 Egypt in Israel: The Evidence for the Authenticity of the Exodus Tradition. New York/Oxford: Oxford University Press.
1999 "Chariots." Pp. 193-195 in Encyclopedia of the Archaeology of Ancient Egypt. Ed. By Kathryn A. Bard. London: Routledge.
- HORNUNG, E.
1962 ZÄS 87:115-116.
1979 Das Totenbuch der Ägypter. Zürich: Artemis Verlag.
1987 "Lang oder kurz? — das Mittlere und Neue Reich Ägyptens als Prüfstein." Pp. 27-36 in HML.
- JANSSEN, J. J.
1968 "The Smaller Dakhla Stela." JEA 54:165-172.
- KEMPINSKI, A.
1974 "Tell el-'Ajjul — Beth-Aglayim or Sharuhim?" IEJ 24:145-152.

- KITCHEN, K. A.
 1970 "Ancient Orient, 'Deuteronism' and the Old Testament." Pp. 1-24 in New Perspectives on the Old Testament, edited by J. B. Payne. Waco, TX: Word Books.
 1982a "Phinehas." P. 934 in NBD.
 1982b Pharaoh Triumphant: The Life and Times of Ramesses II. Warminster: Aris and Phillips.
 1986 *The Third Intermediate Period in Egypt (1100-650 BC)*². Warminster: Aris and Phillips. 1st edition 1973; 3rd edition 1996.
 1987 "The Basics of Egyptian Chronology in Relation to the Bronze Age" pp. 37-53 in HML 1.
 1989 "Supplementary Notes on 'The Basics of Egyptian Chronology.'" Pp. 151-159 in HML 3.
 1993a Ramesseide Inscriptions Translated & Annotated, Translations. I. Oxford: Blackwell Reference.
 1993b Ramesseide Inscriptions Translated & Annotated, Notes & Comments, I. Oxford: Blackwell Reference.
 1994-97 "The Physical Text of Merenptah's Victory Hymn (The 'Israel Stela')." JSS 24:71-76.
 1996 Ramesseide Inscriptions Translated & Annotated, Translations. II. Oxford: Blackwell Reference.
 1999 Ramesseide Inscriptions Translated & Annotated, Notes & Comments, II. Oxford: Blackwell Reference.
- KLENGEL, H.
 1969 Geschichte Syriens im 2. Jahrtausend v. u. Z., 2. Berlin: Akademie-Verlag.
 1992 Syria 3000 to 300 B.C. Berlin: Akademie-Verlag.
- KRAUSS, R.
 1978 "S6", König von ägypten — ein Deutungsversuch." MDOG 110:49-54.
- KUENTZ, C.
 1928-34 La bataille de Qadech. Cairo: IFAO.
- LECLANT, J.
 1966 OLZ 61:152.
- LELLO, G.
 1978 "Thutmose III's First Lunar Date." JNES 37:327-330.
- LEMCHE, N. P.
 1985 Early Israel: Anthropological and Historical Studies on the Israelite Society before the Monarchy. Leiden: Brill.
- LEXA, F.
 1977 Das demotische Totenbuch der Pariser Nationalbibliothek. Milan: Cisalpino-Golliardica. Reprint of Leipzig: J. C. Hinrich'sche Buchhandlung, 1910.
- LICHTHEIM, M.
 1945 "The Songs of the Harpers." JNES 4:178-212 and pls. i-vii.
 1976 AEL.
- LOGAN, T. J., and J. G. WESTENHOLZ.
 1971-72 "Sdm.f and Sdm.n.f Forms in the Pey (Piankhy) Inscription." JARCE 9:111-119.
- LORET, V.
 1910 L'inscription d'Achmes fils d'Abana. Cairo: Bibliothèque d'étude.
- LOUKIANOFF, G.
 1926 Ancient Egypt, n.v.
- MARIETTE, A.
 1872-89 Monuments divers recueillis en Égypte et en Nubie. Paris: F. Vieweg.
- MASSART, A.
 1959 "A propos des «listes» dans les textes funéraires et magiques." Analecta Biblica 12:227-246.
- MAYSTRE, C.
 1937 Les déclarations d'innocence (Livre des Morts, chapitre 125). Recherches d'archéologie, de philologie et d'histoire 8. Cairo: IFAO.
- MAZAR, A.
 1999 "The 1997-1998 Excavations at Tel Rehov: Preliminary Report." IEJ 49:1-42.
- MERKELBACH, R.
 1968 "Ein ägyptischer Priesterred," Zeitschrift für Papyrologie und Epigraphik 2:7-30.
 1987 Die Unschuldserklärungen und Berichten im ägyptischen Totenbuch, in der römischen Elegie und im antiken Rom. Giessen: Universitätsbibliothek Giessen.
- MOND, R., and O. H. MYERS.
 1940 Temples of Amman. 2 Vols. London: Egypt Exploration Society.
- MONTET, P.
 1957-61 Géographie de l'Égypte Ancienne I & II. Paris: Imprimerie Nationale.
- MORSCHAUER, S.
 1988 "The End of the Sdf(3)-Tr(yt) 'Oath'." JARCE 25:93-103.
- MÜLLER, W. M.
 1899 Die Liebespoesie der alten Ägypter. Leipzig: J. G. Hinrichs.
- MURNANE, W. J.
 1989 "Rhetorical History? The Beginning of the Thutmose III's First Campaign in Western Asia." JARCE 26:183-189.
 1995 Texts from the Amarna Period in Egypt. WAW 5. Atlanta: Scholars Press.
- NA'AMAN, N.
 1977 "Yeno'am." Tel Aviv 4:168-177.
 1990 "The Historical Background to the Conquest of Samaria (720 BC)." Biblica 71:211-216.
- NAVILLÉ, É.
 1886 Das ägyptische Totenbuch der XVIII. bis XX. Dynastie aus verschiedenen Urkunden zusammengestellt und herausgegeben. 2 vols. Berlin: A. Asher & Co.

- NICCACCI, A.
1997 "La Stèle d'Israël: Grammaire et stratégie de communication." Études égyptologiques et bibliques à la mémoire du Père B. Courroyer. Cahier de la Revue Biblique 36:43-107.
- NOTH, M.
1943 "Die Annalen Thutmose III. als Geschichtsquelle." ZDPV 66:156-174.
- PARKER, R. A.
1957 "The Lunar Dates of Thutmose III and Ramesses II." JNES 16:39-43.
1966 "King Py, a Historical Problem." ZAS 93:111-114.
- PETRIE, W. M. F.
1897 Six Temples at Thebes: 1896. London: Bernard Quaritch.
- PRIESE, K.-H.
1968 "Der Name des Königs (𓆎𓅓𓏏𓏏)." MIO 14:166-175.
1972a "Der Beginn der kuschitischen Herrschaft in Ägypten." ZAS 98:16-32.
1972b "Zu Sprache der ägyptischen Inschriften der Könige von Kusch." ZAS 98:99-124.
- RAINEY, A.
1973 "Amenhotep II's Campaign to Takshi." JARCE 10:71-75.
1993 "Sharuhân/Sharuhen — The Problem of Identification." EI 24:178*-187*.
- REDFORD, D. B.
1979 "The Historical Retrospective at the Beginning of Thutmose III's Annals." Pp. 338-342 in Studies Edel.
1986 Pharaonic King-Lists, Annals and Day-Books: A Contribution to the Study of the Egyptian Sense of History. Mississauga: Benben Publications.
1992 Egypt, Canaan, and Israel in Ancient Times. Princeton: Princeton University Press.
- REISNER, G. A., and M. B. REISNER.
1933 "Inscribed Monuments from Gebel Barkal." Pt. 2 ZAS 69:24-29, pls iii-v.
- RITNER, R. K.
1993 The Mechanics of Ancient Egyptian Magical Practice. SAOC 54. Chicago: The Oriental Institute.
- ROSATI, G.
1991 Libro dei Morti. Testi del Vicino Oriente antico 1.2. Brescia: Paideia Editrice.
- ROWE, A.
1930 The Topography and History of Beth-Shan. Philadelphia: Pennsylvania: University Press.
- SANDMAN, M.
1938 Texts from the Time of Akhenaten. Bibliotheca Aegyptiaca 8. Brussels: Fondation Égyptologique Reine Élisabeth.
- SAUNERON, S.
1951 "Aspects et sort d'un thème magique égyptien: les menaces incluant les dieux." BSFE 8:11-21.
- SCHOTT, S.
1934 "The Feasts of Thebes." Pp. 78-88 in Work in Western Thebes 1931-33. Ed. by H. Nelson and U. Hölscher. OIC 18. Chicago: The University of Chicago.
1950 Ägyptische Liebeslieder. Zurich: Artemis Verlag.
- SCHULMAN, A. R.
1957 "Egyptian Representation of Horsemen and Riding in the New Kingdom." JNES 16:263-271 and pls. xxxvii-xli.
1964 Military Rank, Title and Organization in the Egyptian New Kingdom. MÄS 6. Berlin: Verlag Bruno Hessling.
- SETHE, K.
1908 Die altägyptischen Pyramidentexte. Vol. 1. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs'sche Buchhandlung.
1924 "Die Sprüche für das Kennen der Seelen der heiligen Orte." ZAS 59:1-20.
1935 Übersetzung und Kommentar zu den altägyptischen Pyramidentexten. Vol. 1. Hamburg: J. J. Augustin.
- SMITH, W. S.
1965 Interconnections in the Ancient Near East. New Haven: Yale University Press.
- SPALINGER, A. J.
1974 "Some Notes on the Battle of Megiddo and Reflections on Egyptian Military Writing." MDAIK 30:221-229.
1977 "A Critical Analysis of the 'Annals' of Thutmose III (Stücke V-VI)." JARCE 14:41-54.
1982 Aspects of the Military Documents of the Ancient Egyptians. YNER 9. New Haven and London: Yale University Press.
- STAGER, L. E.
1985 "Merneptah, Israel and the Sea Peoples: New Light on an Old Relief." EI 18:56-64.
- STEWART, J. R. et. al.
1974 Tell el-'Ajjul: The MB Age Remains. Göteborg: Studies in Mediterranean Archaeology 38.
- TRIGGER, B., B. KEMP, D. O'CONNOR, and A. LLOYD.
1983 Ancient Egypt: A Social History. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- VAN SETERS, J.
1990 "Joshua's Campaign and Near Eastern Historiography." SJOT 2:1-12.
- VITTMANN, G.
1974 "Zur Lesung des Königsnamens (𓆎𓅓𓏏𓏏)." Or 43:12-16.
- WEINFELD, M.
1972 Deuteronomy and the Deuteronomistic School. Oxford: Clarendon.
- WEINSTEIN, J.
1981 "The Egyptian Empire in Palestine: A Reassessment." BASOR 241:1-28.
1991 "Egypt and the Middle Bronze IIC/Late Bronze IA Transition in Palestine." Levanu 23:105-115.
- WILLIAMS, R. J.
1958 DOTT 137-141.
1969 "Some Egyptianisms in the Old Testament." Pp. 93-98 in Studies Wilson.

- WILSON, J. A.
1969 *ANET*³.
- WREZINSKI, W.
1938-41 Atlas zur Altaegyptischen Kulturgeschichte. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs'sche Buchhandlung.
- YEIVIN, S.
1952 "Who Was 'Šd' the King of Egypt?" VT 2:164-168.
- YOUNGER, K. L., Jr.
1990 Ancient Conquest Accounts: A Study of Ancient Near Eastern and Biblical History Writing. JSOTSup 98. Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press.
- YOYOTTE, J.
1961 "Les Principautés du Delta au temps de l'anarchie libyenne." Pp. 121-181 in Studies Maspero.
-

This page intentionally left blank

HITTITE MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS

This page intentionally left blank

A. ROYAL INSCRIPTIONS

This page intentionally left blank

1. EDICTS AND PROCLAMATIONS

BILINGUAL EDICT OF ḪATTUŠILI I (2.15)

Gary Beckman

The reign of one of the earliest Hittite Great Kings, Ḫattušili I, was plagued by dissension within his own family, culminating in several plots against his rule by members of the younger generation. In this document, which is presented in both Hittite and Akkadian in parallel columns,¹ Ḫattušili justifies his disinheritance of one adopted son, Labarna, and the nomination of another, Muršili, as successor to the throne. This edict was directed to various influential groups in Hittite society, whose active cooperation was necessary because the newly-designated heir was still a child. In places the discourse here is somewhat confusing, for it contains numerous quotations, which are not always introduced by verbs of speech. In §§11, 19, and 21b-22 the king addresses his new son Muršili, and in §23 his wife(?) Ḫaštayar. Although this proclamation is said to have been made by the king from his sickbed in the Anatolian town of Kuššar, and the tenor of the text indeed suggests that he lay near death, it is possible that Ḫattušili recovered from this crisis, since another tradition relates that he perished in battle in northern Syria. In any event, we know that Muršili I duly succeeded his adoptive father.

§1 (vii.1-7) [The Great King] Tabarna² spoke to the ranks of the army and to the dignitaries: I am now ill. I designated the young Labarna to you: "He shall sit securely (upon the throne)!" I, the king, had named him as my son. I continually instructed him³ and looked after him constantly. But he showed himself a youth not fit to be seen. He didn't shed tears. He didn't show mercy. He was cold. He was heartless.	commanded by the king. How can he then show sympathy on his [own] toward Ḫattuša?
§2 (vii.8-13) I, the king, apprehended him and had him brought to my couch: "What (is this)? No one will ever again raise his sister's child (as his own foster son)!" But he didn't accept the word of the king. He always took the advice of his mother, that snake. His brothers and sisters continually sent cool words to him, and he consistently listened to their words. I, the king, heard (of this), and I indeed quarrelled with him.	§4 (vii.20-25) His mother is a snake. Henceforth he will always heed (first) the words of his mother, and of his brothers and sisters. And when he draws near, it will be to take vengeance that he approaches! [And concerning my troops], my dignitaries, [and] my subjects who surround(?) the king, [he will vow]: "They will be massacred on account of the king!" So he will proceed [to destroy] them. He will begin to shed blood and will have [no] fear!
§3 (vii.14-19) "But enough!" (I said). "He is no longer my son!" Whereupon his mother bellowed like an ox: "They have torn my bull-calf⁴ [from] my living womb, (as if I were) a cow, and they have deposed him. (And now) you will kill [him]!" But have I, the king, done him any evil? [Haven't I elevated him] to the priesthood? I have always singled him out for goodness and kindness. [Yet] he showed no sympathy when	§5 (vii.26-29) It will come about that in regard to those who are citizens of Ḫattuša he will thus draw near to [take away] the cattle and sheep of whoever (owns any). [I ...ed my] external enemies [... and] I held [my land(?)] in peace(?). It shall not come about that he hereafter establishes [...] §6 (vii.30-36) [He] shall now in no way go down freely (in exile from Ḫattuša). I have now given my son Labarna a house. I have given him [arable land] in plenty. I have given him cattle in plenty. I have given [him sheep in plenty]. He shall continue to eat and drink (his fill). [As long as he is on his best behavior], he shall come up from time to time (to Ḫattuša to visit). But if he begins [to cause trouble(?)], or (if he spreads) any ¹ Columns i and iv are Akk., ii and iii Hittite.

² This title of the Hittite king, which has an alternate form Labarna, was also adopted as a personal name by certain members of the Hittite royal house. Some scholars believe that the development was in the opposite direction, and that like Latin Caesar, T/Labarna was originally the personal name of an important ruler and only later borrowed as a title by his successors. On this problem see Tischler 1988.

³ Read contra Sommer and Falkenstein 1938. Hoffner follows Forrer in reading the Akk. of i 4: ar-ni-up ú-u'-ú-ri-šu. See also the colophon.

⁴ Read i.15: GUD bi-ri.

- slander, [or] and [...], he will not be permitted to come up (again), but [shall remain on his own estate].
- §7 (i/ii.37-41) Muršili is now my son. [You must acknowledge] him. You must enthrone him. [...] In place of the lion, [the god will set up only] (another) lion. [And in the hour] when a call to arms goes forth, [or] when perhaps [a rebellion becomes serious], you, my subjects and high noblemen, must be [of assistance to my son].
- §8 (ii.42-47) [(Only) when] three years (have passed) shall he go on a campaign. [For the present] I will make [a valiant king of him]. If for the moment (this) is not yet (so), [honor him nonetheless(?)]. He is the progeny of your monarch. Raise him to be a valiant [king. If] you take him (with you) on campaign [while he is still a child], bring [him] back [safely]. Your clan shall be [united] like that of the wetna,⁵ and it shall be [...] His subjects are born [of one mother].
- §9 (ii.48-52) A single liver, a single set of lungs, and a single [ear] have been allotted [to you (all)].⁶ Don't vie with one another for preeminence. None of you shall be the opponent (of another). None of you shall transgress (this) command. You mustn't commit this [deed] of the cities of Šinahhuwa and Ubariya. Slander shall not be established (among you). (If it is), my son will carry out my (wishes) [against you].
- §10 (ii.53-57) [No] one shall think: "In secret the king [does] what he pleases (saying): 'I can justify it, whether it (really) is, or whether it is not.'" [Such] slander shall never be established as true. Rather, you [who yourselves] now acknowledge my advice and my wisdom, instruct my son in wisdom.
- §11 (ii.58-62) [Not] one (of you) shall hinder the other [in his own interests], nor shall one [promote] the other in his own interests. The elders shall not keep on speaking (to you courtiers). [My son] shall [not] be called [...] The elders of Hattuša shall not keep on speaking to you, (my son). No one shall speak to you at all — [not a man of Kuššar(?)], nor a man of Hemuwa, nor a man of Tamalikya, nor [a man of Zalpa(?)], nor (anyone of) the (general) population.⁷
- §12 (ii.63-67) [Consider (the case of)] my [son]
- a 1 Sam 12:3
- Huzziya: I, the king, [made] him [lord] over the city of Tappaššanda. But those (people there) got his attention, speaking abusively to him. They [acted] in a hostile fashion [against me] (saying): "Rebel against your father. The great estates [of Tappaššanda] — they [haven't been exempted (from taxes and corvée)], but you will grant an exemption."
- §13 (ii.68-74) So I, [the king], deposed [Huzziya]. Then [even in Hattuša itself] the citizens of Hattuša [became hostile (to me)]. They got the attention of a daughter (of mine). And [since she had male] offspring, they acted in a hostile manner [against me] (in regard to her, saying): "[There is no heir for] your father's [throne]. A subject will sit (upon it). A subject [will become king]." And furthermore [she made] the city of Hattuša and the great [households disloyal], so that [the high noblemen] and courtiers became hostile [to me. Thus] she incited [the entire land].
- §14 (i/ii.75-iii.5) Out of enmity she killed the citizens [of Hattuša ...], but these persons [...] she killed. (As for) the citizens of Hattuša: from him whose [ox was taken], from him whose ram was taken, from him whose [vine-yard] and fields were taken — (his) [threshing-floor(?)] and [servants(?)] were also taken.⁸ The ox which he harnessed — his ox [and his sheep(?)] were killed(?). [Now ...] both these [...] subjects of the king [...] them the men of [...] and the craftsmen [...] and their fields she took. ... Do I, the king, know nothing (of it) [...]?
- §16 (iii.6-12a) When [I] heard [that] she had put [the citizens] of Hattuša to death, I sought tears (i.e., remorse) for them [from her]. Had [I] not sought (them from her),⁹ you would have slandered me with (your) tongue (saying): "[He has] expelled [his daughter]." I, the king, did [not do] anything (to her). [Whereupon she said: "Why] have you given me so little?" (So, I, the king, replied): "[If I hadn't given] you only a little, if I had given you more cattle, if I had given [you more] sheep, I would have been drinking the blood (of the land)."⁹
- §17 (iii.13-22) [This daughter had debased my person(?)] and my name, [so] I, [the king], took [(my) daughter and brought her down] here¹⁰ from Hattuša. And I replaced land for ⁵ An unidentified wild animal.

⁶ This metaphor indicates that the nobility should behave as if it shared emotions (liver), life (lungs), intelligence and knowledge (ears).

⁷ Hattušili here cautions both his nobles and his heir Muršili against becoming involved in intrigues engaged in by prominent residents of the most important towns in Hatti.

⁸ Read iii.7-8: ták-ku-ma-na-aš>ta / ū-ū-ma ša-an-šu-un ....

⁹ The king fears that if his daughter were given abundant resources, she would only use them to stir up trouble in Hatti.

¹⁰ To Kuššar.

- land; [cattle for cattle] I replaced.¹¹ She has rejected (her) father's word and has drunk [the life's blood of the citizens of Hattuša]. Now she [has been banished from the city]. If she were to come to my household, [she would surely disrupt] my household. [If] she were to come to Hattuša, she would cause [it] to revolt [once more. A house has been allotted(?) to her in the country — now (she shall stay there, and) she shall eat [and drink].
- §18 (iii.23-25) [You] shall not do [her any harm]. She did (me) harm, but I shall not do (her) [harm in return]. She [would not call] me father, so I shall not call her daughter.
- §19 (iii.26-32) Up until now no one [in my family] has heeded my command. [But you, my son], Muršili, you must heed it. Keep [(your) father's words]. If you keep your father's word, you [must eat (only) bread] and drink (only) water. When the prime of young adulthood is [within] you, then eat two or three times a day, and treat yourself. [But when] old age is within you, drink your fill, setting aside [(your) father's] word.
- §20 (iii.33-45) You are my foremost subjects. You [must keep] my words, those of the king. You may (only) eat bread and drink (only) water. Then [Hattuša] will stand tall, and my land will be [at peace]. But if you don't keep the king's word, you won't live [much longer(?)], but will perish. [Whoever] confounds the king's words, right now he [...] my [...] Such a person should not be a high-ranking servant. [His throat(?)] shall be slit. Didn't his sons set aside these words of my grandfather [...] In Šanaḫuitta my grandfather had proclaimed his son Labarna (as heir to the throne). [But afterwards] his subjects and high noblemen had confounded his words [and] set Papaḫdilmah (on the throne). How many years have now passed, and [how many (of them)] have escaped (their fate)? The households of the high noblemen — where are they? Haven't they perished?
- §21a (iii.46-51) You (my subjects) must keep my words, those of Labarna, the Great King. [As long as] you keep [them], Hattuša will stand tall, and you will set your land [at peace]. You shall eat (only) bread and drink (only) water. But if you don't keep them, your land will fall under foreign control. Be very careful about the business [of the gods]. Their sacrificial loaves, their libations, their [stews(?)], and their meal must (always) be kept available for them. §21b (iii-iv.51-54) You (Muršili) must [not] postpone (them), nor fall behind (in your deliveries). If you were to [postpone (them)], it would be evil, (as indeed was) the former (condition). So be [it]!
- §22 (iii-iv.55-63) [The Great King], Labarna, spoke to his son Muršili: "I have given you my words. They shall read this [tablet] aloud in your presence every month. Thus you will be able to impress my [words] and my wisdom into (your) heart, [and] to rule successfully over my [subjects] and the high noblemen. If you [observe] an offense in anyone — whether someone offends before a deity, or someone speaks some (irresponsible) word — consult the assembly. Slander must be referred to the same assembly.¹² My son, always do what is in your heart."
- §23 (iii-iv.64-72) The Great King, Labarna, says repeatedly to Ḫaštayar: "Don't forsake me!" (In order that) the king not speak thus to her, the courtiers say as follows to him: "She now still keeps on consulting the Old Women." The king says as follows [to them]: "Is she now still consulting the Old Women? I don't know."¹³ (And the king says to Ḫaštayar:) "Furthermore, don't forsake me! [No!] Always consult me [alone]. I will reveal my words to you. Wash me as is fitting, hold me to your breast, and at your breast protect me from the earth!"¹⁴
- Colophon: The tablet of Tabarna, the Great King: When the Great King, Tabarna, took ill in the city of Kuššar and instructed the young Muršili for kingship.

¹¹ The king here assigns to his daughter property in lieu of that near Hattuša which he has confiscated.

¹² On this institution see Beckman 1982 and Marazzi 1984.

¹³ The "Old Women" were diviners and practitioners of magic whose services were often to be utilized by members of the Hittite court in the centuries which followed.

¹⁴ These concluding lines seem to be a request for proper burial rites.

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 6, KUB 1.16 + KUB 40.65. Edition: Sommer and Falkenstein 1938 (without KUB 40.65 join). Translations: T. Bryce 1982:99-130; Klock-Fontanille 1996. Studies: Bryce 1998:89-110; Beckman 1982; Carratelli 1994; Giorgieri 1991; Hoffner 1980:300-302; Marazzi 1984, 1986:1-23; de Martino 1989; Melchert 1991; Pecchioli Daddi 1992; Steiner 1996; Bryce 1998:89-100.

2. ANNALS

THE TEN YEAR ANNALS OF GREAT KING MURŠILI II OF ḪATTI (2.16)

Richard H. Beal

This composition is known from five copies. The best preserved is KBo 3.4 + KUB 23.125. This appears to be a copy from approximately the reign of Muršili's grandson Tudḫaliya IV (Grégois 1988:38-44). The other copies, KBo 16.1, KUB 19.38 (+) KUB 14.21, KBo 16.4, and KBo 16.2 (+) 113/e, appear to be slightly earlier (Grégois 1988:38-44). All of the copies were found at Boğazköy. The main copy, KBo 3.4 + KUB 23.125, as well as KUB 19.38 (+) KUB 14.21 were found by Winckler's excavations before World War I, which means they were found either in Building E, a building facing the innermost courtyard of the citadel's palace or in the archive rooms of the Great Temple in the lower city. More specific information was lost in the course of unpacking the tablets in Berlin. But see H. Klengel 1993 on Winckler's diaries. Of the copies found more recently, KBo 16.1 and KBo 16.2 are from the archive Building A on the citadel, while KBo 16.4 is from the Great Temple archive.

The main text was transliterated by Forrer 1926, no. 48. The primary edition of this text is Goetze 1933. Additional duplicates were published by Otten 1955. A newer edition was published by Grégois 1988, and a translation by del Monte 1993:32-33, 57-72.

There is also a more detailed version of the Annals of Muršili, known as the "Comprehensive" or "Detailed" Annals. This was also edited by Goetze 1933. Additional fragments or joins were published by Otten 1955, Houwink ten Cate 1966, 1967, 1979 and 1979a, Kammenhuber 1970:547-550, del Monte 1985a, Beal 1992:380f. n. 1439 and a new translation published by del Monte 1993:33-40, 73-131.

The ancient title of the "Comprehensive Annals" was "The Manly Deeds of Muršili." Although no copy preserves a title, this was likely to have been the title of the "Ten Year Annals" as well. As one might guess from its modern name, the "Ten Year Annals" describes events, largely military in nature, during the first ten years of Muršili's reign. In the so called "Comprehensive Annals" the record of events continues at least until the twenty-first year of the king. It also gives more detail and includes more campaigns not directly led by the king. For as Muršili states in the conclusion of the "Ten Year Annals," "the enemy lands which the royal princes and lords overcame are not included here." The latter statement is only partially correct: note the campaign of Nuwanza described in the 9th year of the Ten Year Annals.

It is useful to note that while the battles with the great or medium-sized powers such as Arzawa and Azzi and places that we can place on the map such as Nuḫašše and Qidš(a) (Kinza) interest us the most, and also appear to figure more prominently in Muršili's presentation, it is wars with the barbarian Kaška peoples which require most of Muršili's time. Their very lack of central organization made the Kaška easy to defeat but impossible to subdue, rather like trying to dig away the edge of a hill of sand. After spending his accession year in the all-important effort of winning the god's favor, Muršili had to go against the Kaška in his first three years. Only partway through his third year could he finally turn his attention to the powerful but relatively distant Arzawa. After spending a year and a half on campaign here, for all or parts of the next three years (5, 6, 7) he returned to fight the Kaška, who had presumably taken advantage of the army's absence. In the ninth year, the Kaška in both Pala and Yaḫrešša/Piggainarešša required Muršili's attention along with bigger and more distant Kinza, Assyria, and Azzi-Ḫayaša. Finally, almost all of the additional years described only in the "Full/Comprehensive Annals" (11-21 +) detail nothing but campaigns against the Kaška.

The Ten Year Annals are interesting as a particularly complete example of Hittite historical composition. They begin with a prologue (as do many Hittite historical compositions) and end with an echoing epilogue, "clearly already in view, as the prologue was being written. Each presupposes the other" (Hoffner 1980:312). The theme of the composition is that when the youngster Muršili came to the throne after the unexpected deaths of his heroic father Šuppiluliuma I and equally heroic elder brother Arnuwanda II, the neighboring lands insulted him for his youth and inexperience and, adding injury to insult, revolted. Then, with the considerable help of the gods, he, Muršili, subdued with his own hands in ten years all those who had insulted him.

This need of Muršili to demonstrate to history that he was indeed manly and that the gods did indeed support him can perhaps be further explained by several things not mentioned in either set of annals. First and foremost, his father and brother had died of plague, brought back from a punitive expedition against Egypt (COS 1:160 A i 47ff.). This plague was to ravage the Hittite lands for at least twenty years thereafter,¹ that is through the entire period covered by the Ten Year Annals. It is the subject of four prayers by Muršili (COS 1:156-160). In what seems likely to have been the earliest plague prayer (now known as the "fourth"), Muršili says that repeated inquiries of the gods² by himself and his father have failed to find the divine cause of the plague and that he is concerning himself with temple building in a bid for the gods' mercy.³ This must have been weighing on Muršili as he was composing the Ten Year annals. His mention that he prioritized festivals may be a reflection of this problem.

¹ There is a mention of the plague having ravaged the Hittite lands for twenty years during the course of the 18th year of the Comprehensive Annals.

In addition, with Muršili's mother dead, Muršili was saddled with a strong-willed Babylonian princess as stepmother and queen. Making matters far worse was the fact that Muršili's beloved wife, Gaššulawiya, was on very bad terms with her step-mother-in-law, the queen. The situation was to climax with Gaššulawiya dead and deeply mourned by Muršili ("Throughout the days of life [my soul] goes down to the dark netherworld [on her account]") and the queen accused of witchcraft and demoted.⁴ This may all have happened during the composition of the Ten Year Annals, for while Muršili was in Azzi on campaign, a solar eclipse was seen over Hattuša, which the queen repeatedly said "did not signify the death of the king, but did signify [the death of the king's wife]."⁵ If the restoration is correct, such talk may have indeed caused poor Gaššulawiya to die at this time. Regardless, the domestic discontent and the eclipse portending death or another's lordship⁶ must have been of concern to Muršili as he was writing the Ten Year Annals.

Finally, del Monte (1993:14) suggests that the death in Muršili's ninth year of Šarri-Kušuh, his elder brother and right arm, left Muršili fully on his own for the first time, and that this played a role in Muršili's issuing these annals. Probably all these events played a part in making the theme of the Ten Year Annals proof of the king's ability and the gods' trust in him. In contrast, the Full Annals, written over a decade later, appear to have another theme: "loyalty versus treason" (del Monte 1993:15-17).

In Muršili's view, it is the gods running before his army that give him the margin of victory. In the Ten Year Annals the repeated phrase is "the Sungoddess of Arinna, my lady, the victorious Stormgod, my lord, Mezzilla and all the gods ran before me." In the Comprehensive Annals, on the other hand, the phrase is somewhat different: "The victorious Stormgod, my lord, the Sungoddess of Arinna, my lady, the Stormgod of Hattuša, the Protective Deity (^dLAMMA) of Hattuša, the Stormgod of the Army, IŠTAR of the countryside, and all the gods ran before me." The gods were also seen to intervene directly in human affairs by throwing a thunderbolt at the enemy. However, human will was also certainly seen as a causal factor. For example, because the enemy thought Muršili was an inexperienced child, they revolted. Letters from Muršili to the enemy and his replies are quoted, as are challenges to battle over intractable points. The text often gives the casus belli as seen by Muršili (usually refusal to return fugitives in the case of foreign powers or refusal to continue to supply troops, i.e. revolt for parts of the empire). Sometimes Muršili gives his reasoning for choosing a particular course of action and sometimes even the enemy's reasoning is surmised (both often given in first person). While the purpose of the text is to demonstrate the king's manhood, actions performed by armies and detachments not under Muršili's direct command are nevertheless mentioned. The text also manages successfully to discuss several campaigns going on simultaneously on different fronts. Sometimes Muršili even describes the terrain. All in all, the historical writings of Muršili II show considerable historical sophistication. (On Muršili's historiography, see Cancik 1976:102-151, Hoffner 1980:311-315, and del Monte 1993:13-17).

Muršili II is also responsible another major Hittite historical text, "The Manly Deeds of Šuppiluliuma" (COS 1:185-192).

Introduction

[Thus speaks] My Majesty⁷ Muršili, the Great King, King of the land of Hatti, the hero, son of Šuppiluliuma, Great King, the hero.

Before I sat down on my father's throne, all the enemy foreign lands began hostilities. When my father became a god,⁸ Arnuwanda, my brother, sat on his father's throne. But, afterwards he, too, ² For one of the primary methods, the oracular inquiry, see later examples in COS 1:204-211.

³ The other three prayers mention that 20 years of plague have now passed. The badly broken "third" prayer's preserved sections mention no "causes," so it may actually be the second. By the time of the so called "first" prayer oracular inquiry had turned up a cause: his father's treachery toward Tudḫaliya the younger. The "second" prayer is probably the last in line since further causes have now been found, and since for the first time Muršili accepts his guilt in all of these misdeeds by the principle of the "sins of the father are visited on the son." Cf. Exod 20:5; etc. These prayers are transliterated and translated by Goetze (1930); cf. COS 1.60.

⁴ KUB 14.4 = CTH 70, ed. poorly by de Martino (1998), KBo 4.8 + Izmir "1277" w. dupl. 1206/u + 245/w, ed. Hoffner 1983.

⁵ [ŠA DAM LUGAL-wa UŠ išiyaḫta UL-wa ŠA LUGAL UŠ išiyaḫta] KUB 14.4 iv.25-26, with restoration courtesy of H. A. Hoffner (orally). Since this is the text detailing the queen's crimes, the restoration is likely to be correct.

⁶ Ibid., iv.27.

⁷ Lit., "My Sungod." The Hittite king was not worshipped as a god until he died and even then only became a minor god in his own right (not a sungod). The title is probably borrowed from Egypt, but makes sense to the Hittites due to the Mesopotamian-influenced concept of the Sungod as god of justice, and hence of kingship.

⁸ Cf. note 7.

became sick.⁹ When the enemy lands heard that my brother Arnuwanda was sick, the enemy lands began hostilities.

And when my brother Arnuwanda became a god, those enemy lands which had not yet begun hostilities, they too began hostilities. The enemy foreign lands said as follows: "His father, who was king of Hatti, was a heroic king. He kept the enemy lands defeated and he has become a god. His son who sat on his father's throne was also in the prime of life, and he got sick and he also became a god.

Now, the one who has sat down on his father's throne is a child.¹⁰ He will not (be able to) save the borders of Hatti and Hatti itself."

Because my father was establishing garrisons in the land of Miranni,¹¹ he tarried in a garrison, and the festivals of the Sungoddess of Arinna, my lady, lapsed.

When I, My Majesty, sat on my father's throne, while I had not yet gone against any of the enemy foreign lands who were in a state of hostilities with me, I concerned myself with and performed the regular festivals of the Sungoddess of Arinna, my lady. I held up my hand to the Sungoddess of Arinna, my lady, and said as follows: "O Sungoddess of Arinna, my lady! The enemy foreign lands who have called me a child and belittled me, have begun seeking to take away the borders of the Sungoddess of Arinna, my lady. Stand by me, O Sungoddess of Arinna, my lady. Destroy those enemy foreign lands before me." The Sungoddess of Arinna heard my words and stood by me. After I sat down on my father's throne, in ten years I vanquished these enemy foreign lands and destroyed them.

Year 1

The Kaška¹² of the land of Durmitta began hostilities with me and [came] for battle against me. Subsequently the (other) Kaška also came. They began to attack the land of Durmitta. I, My Majesty, went against them. I attacked the leading districts of the Kaška-Land — Halila and Dudduška. I looted them including their transplantees,¹³ cattle and sheep and brought them away to Hattuša. The towns of Halila and Dudduška I burned down.

When the Kaška heard about the destruction of Halila and Dudduška, the whole land of the Kaška came to help and came for battle against me. I, My Majesty, fought them. The Sungoddess of Arinna, my lady, the victorious¹⁴ Stormgod, my lord, Mezzulla and all the gods ran before me. I defeated the levies¹⁵ of the Kaška and killed them. The Kaška of the land of Durmitta resubmitted and they began to give [me troops].

[Then] I, [My Majesty,] returned. Because the Kaška of the land of Išupitta had become hostile and ceased giving me troops, I, My Majesty, went to the land of Išupitta. I attacked the town of [...]humiššena. I looted it including its transplantees, cattle and sheep and brought them away to Hattuša, while the town I burned down. I re-subjugated the Kaška of the land of Išupitta. They began to give me troops. All this I did in one year.

Year 2

In the following year I went [to the Upper Land,] because the district of Tipiya had become hostile and ceased giving me troops. I, My Majesty, attacked Kathaiduwa. I brought its transplantees, cattle, and sheep back to Hattuša, [while the town I burned down.]

Then I [retur]ned [from Tipiya to Hattuša]. Because the land of Išupitta had [again] become hostile, [I sent ...] and he defeated it again a second time. Those who [had been the head of the rebellion] escaped there. Nunnata [and Pazzanna, my servants ...d] and [I chased(?)] them [to Kammama] in the land of the Kaška. [No one(?) escaped. [When I demanded those] people [who had been] the head of the rebellion, [they seized and killed] them. I, My Majesty, [made] Kammama [my servants again]. The [Sungoddess of Arinna,] my lady, [the victorious Stormgod, my lord,]

⁹ The plague which carried off two Hittite kings in rapid succession is probably the same which caused Muṣili to compose at least four progressively more desperate plague prayers (see note 3 above). The plague was perhaps brought back by prisoners taken during Arnuwanda's punitive attack on Egyptian territory in Syria-Palestine.

¹⁰ Two elder brothers, Telipinu, "priest" of Kizzuwatna and later king of Aleppo and Piyašili/Šarri-Kušuḫ, king of Karkamiš were passed over in the succession. Perhaps these younger brothers of crown prince Arnuwanda had given up their at-the-time-theoretical rights to the throne in return for their appanage states or perhaps they were not children of the queen and so were disqualified from the Great Kingship.

¹¹ A Hurrian imperial state, ruled by an Indo-European family, stretching across upper Mesopotamia from the Mediterranean sea to the Zagros and centered on the land of Hanigalbat, with its capital at Waššukanni, so far unfocused, in upper Mesopotamia. After several generations of hostilities, Šuppiluliuma I in a campaign of strategic genius attacked them through the Ergani Maden pass from the north and penetrated quickly to Waššukanni, destroying their power, installing a puppet king, and annexing the Syrian third of their empire. See Güterbock 1956:84-96, 110-114; Beckman 1996:30-54; and Moran 1992.

¹² On the Kaškaeans, see my introduction to this text. See also von Schuler 1965.

¹³ NAM.RA = Hitt. arnuwala-, these are civilian captives, largely intended to be resettled in Hatti. See Alp 1950-51; Beal 1988:277, n. 42; Klinger 1992. The usual translation "deportee" is to be avoided since they are not being expelled from the empire but rather moved within it.

¹⁴ Underlying the Sumerogram NIR.GÁL is Luwian muwatalli-, which CLL 151 renders "overpowering, mighty." The adj. is ultimately based upon the Luwian muwa- "to overpower." My translation "victorious" is based on an oral suggestion of J. D. Hawkins.

¹⁵ ERIN.MEŠ NĀRĀRU = warriṣ ERIN.MEŠ-za, lit., "help-troops," see Beal 1992:56-71.

Mezzulla, [and all] the gods [ran before me, and I defeated Palhuišša(?).¹⁶ I looted it including its transplantees,] cattle and sheep [and brought them] away [to Ḫattuša.] All this [I did in one year].

Year 3

In the following year [I did ... When Arnuwanda(?),¹⁷ my brother, in [...], [the troops of the town of Attārimma], the troops of the town of Ḫuwaršanašša and the troops of the town of Šuruda fled before him and went] to [Arzawa.¹⁸ I sent a messenger] to Uḫḫaziti. [I] wrote to him as follows: "People [who belong to me — the troops of Attārimma,] the troops of Ḫuwaršanašša [and the troops of Šuruda] — came [to you. Give them back to me.] But Uḫḫaziti [wrote back] to me [as follows]: "[I will] not [give] any[one back] to you. [...] by force [...]" [He mustered] his troops [...]

[He stood] for battle behind the town of Tikkukkuwa. I, [My Majesty] fought [him]. The Sungoddess of [Arinna, my lady, the] victorious [Stormgod], my lord, Mezzulla [and all the god]s ran before me and [I defeated] the enemy and destroyed them. I burned down Tikkukkuwa [...]. I also burned the district of Dašmaḫa [...]

[I went to ...]-ittakattaša, [and it ...] I attacked. [...], and I [...]d [...] for the second time(?) [...]

Then I went forth to Išḫupitta. I attacked Palhuišša. The Pišḫurian enemy stood behind Palhuišša for battle against me. I fought them. The Sungoddess of Arinna, my lady, the victorious¹⁹ Stormgod, my lord, Mezzulla and all the gods ran before me. I destroyed the Pišḫurian enemy behind Palhuišša, then I burned down the town.

From Palhuišša I came back to Ḫattuša. I set my infantry and horse-troops in motion and in that same year I went against Arzawa. I sent a messenger to Uḫḫaziti.²⁰ I wrote to him as follows: "Because I asked you to return my subjects who came to you and you did not give them back and you kept calling me a child and you kept belittling me. Now, come, we will fight. Let the Stormgod, my lord, decide our lawsuit." ^b

When I had gone and when I had arrived in Lawaša, the victorious Stormgod, my lord, showed his divine power. He shot a lightning bolt. My troops saw the lightning bolt and the land of Arzawa saw it. The lightning bolt went and struck Arzawa.^{20 c} It struck Apāša (Ephesus?), the city of Uḫḫaziti. Uḫḫaziti fell on his knees and became ill. When Uḫḫaziti became ill, he did not subsequently come against me for battle. (Instead) he sent his son Piyama-^dLAMMA with infantry and horse-troops against me. He stood for battle against me at the Āstarpa River in Walma. I My Majesty fought him. The Sungoddess of Arinna, my lady, the victorious Stormgod, my lord, Mezzulla and all the gods ran before me. I defeated Piyama-^dLAMMA, son of Uḫḫaziti, with his infantry and his horse-troops, and I destroyed them. Then I pursued him and I went across to Arzawa. I went to Apāša into the city of Uḫḫaziti. Uḫḫaziti did not resist me and fled before me. He went across into the sea by ship(?) to the islands(?).²¹ There he remained.

All the land of Arzawa fled. Some (potential) transplantees fled to Mt. Arinnanda and they held Mt. Arinnanda. Other (potential) transplantees fled to the town of Puranda and they held Puranda. Yet other (potential) transplantees fled across into the sea with Uḫḫaziti. I, My Majesty, pursued the transplantees on Mt. Arinnanda. I battled Mt. Arinnanda. The Sungoddess of Arinna, my lady, the victorious Stormgod, my lord, Mezzulla and all the gods ran before me. I vanquished Mt. Arinnanda. The transplantees whom I, My Majesty, brought back for the royal estate numbered 15,500. Those whom the Hittite lords, infantry and horse-troops brought back were innumerable. Then I sent the transplantees to Ḫattuša and they were led away.

When I vanquished Mt. Arinnanda, I returned to the Āstarpa river and at the Āstarpa river I built a walled military camp. There I celebrated the Festi-

¹⁶ Previous editors have restored "Kammama" here. Indeed the transition from discussion of Kammama to Palhuišša would seem in the above translation to be rather abrupt. However, according to the Full Annals (KUB 14.15 i 1-21), Kammama turned over the fugitives and submitted voluntarily, whereas Palhuišša was attacked and plundered. Since Muṣili again attacked and this time burned Palhuišša in his third year, it is possible that a third town, whose name was lost in both texts is to be restored here and in KUB 14.15 i 1.

¹⁷ Since this past event happened in Northwestern Anatolia, it seems likely that a campaign led by Šuppiliuma I's crown prince Arnuwanda is meant. del Monte 1993:62 and n. 14 prefers to restore a different brother, Šarri-kuṣuḫ, King of Karkamiš, here.

¹⁸ On this state see Heinhold-Krahmer 1977.

¹⁹ Cf. note 14 above.

²⁰ For discussion of divine intervention in Hittite military records, see Hoffner 1980:327-328, and in ancient warfare narrations, see Younger 1990:145-146, 208-211; and Weinfeld 1983:139.

²¹ guršawanza. The word is quite rare. Goetze 1933:50f., 216, translated "by ship." Starke 1981 has since suggested a translation "to the islands" (followed by Melchert, CLL 113 and del Monte 1993:64). His arguments include the following. A genitival adjective guršawanašši formed from our word and describing a type of terrain occurs in field texts, KUB 8.75 i 12, where it is found in similar position to ša id "of the river" (Starke, 1981:144). "Island land" makes better sense than "ship land." An ergative/personified form occurs in a Luwian language offering text, KUB 35.107 ii.7, transliterated by Starke 1985:236-240. Starke's case would be quite convincing except for another example of the word, RS 25.421:48 (Laroche 1968:774f.), which he missed. Translating this passage "sweet Dilmun (i.e. Bahrain) dates arrive 'from the island'" surely makes sense, but why should "from the island" have a GİŠ "wood" determinative? Dates arriving from Dilmun "by ship" makes equal if not better sense and "ships" not "islands" could be expected to have a "wood" determinative. Unless the same word is used for both "ship" and "island" val of the Year. All this I did in one year.

Year 4

When it became Spring — as long as Uḫḫaziti was sick and was in the midst of sea (i.e. on an island) his sons were with him. Uḫḫaziti died in the midst of sea, but his sons split up. One son was still in the midst of the sea, but one, Tapalazunauli, returned from the sea. Since all (remaining) of Arzawa had gone [...] up to Puranda, Tapalazunauli (also) went up to Puranda. When I had taken care of the Festival of the Year, I went to Puranda for battle. Tapalazunauli came down from Puranda with infantry and horse-troops for battle against me. He stood for battle against me in his own territory.²² I, My Majesty, fought him. The Sungoddess of Arinna, my lady, the victorious Stormgod, my lord, Mezzulla and all the gods ran before me. I defeated Tapalazunauli, [son of Uḫḫaziti,] and his infantry and horse-troops and destroyed him. Then I pursued him. I went and surrounded Puranda and shut it up; I took away its water.

[When] I had shut up Puranda, Tapalazunauli, son of Uḫḫaziti, who was up in Puranda, became afraid. He fled down from Puranda at night. He took charge of [his wife,] his children, and the (potential) transplantees together with (their) provisions²³; he led them down from Puranda. However, when I, My Majesty, heard: 'Tapalazunauli fled down [at night] and he took charge of his wife, his children and the (potential) transplantees together with (their) provisions and led them down,' I, My Majesty, sent my infantry and horse-troops after him. They harried Tapalazunauli on the road. They captured his wife, his children, and the transplantees and brought them back. Tapalazunauli escaped alone, a single person. The aforementioned infantry and horse-troops kept for themselves the transplantees whom they had ha[rried] on the road.

When it had come about that I had shut up Puranda for [x] days, I [attack]ed [Puranda. The Sungoddess of Arinna, my lady, the victorious Stormgod,] my [lord,] Mezzulla [and all the gods ran before me.] I vanquished Puranda. [The transplantees whom I, My Majesty, brought back for the royal estate] numbered 16,[X]00. Those [transplantees,] cattle and sheep [which the Hittite lords, infantry and horse-troops brought back] were [innumerable.

d Josh 9

Then I sent them to Ḫattuša and they] were led away.

[...] was in [the midst of the sea ...Piyama]-²⁴LA[MMA,] son of Uḫḫaziti, [...] departed] from the sea [and took refuge(?)] with the king of Aḫḫiyawa²⁴ [...] I, [My Majesty] sent [...] by ship. [...-ed ...] and they brought him away. [The transplantees with him] they also brought away. [The transplantees from ...] and the transplantees from Lipa consisted of [] transplantees. I sent [them to Ḫattuša] and they were led away.

[When] I came back [to the Šeḫa-[River Land,]]²⁵ I would have fought [Manapa-Tarḫunta who] was [lord] in Šeḫa-River Land. However, when [Manapa-Tarḫunta] heard about me: "The Hittite king is coming," [he became] afraid and so [he did not] then [come] against me. He sent [to] me his mother and old men and old women. They came and [fell down] at my feet. Because the women fell down at my feet, I had mercy on the women and so²⁶ I did [not] enter the Šeḫa-River Land. They handed over to me the Hittite transplantees who were in Šeḫa-River Land. There were 4,000 transplantees whom they handed over. I sent them back to Ḫattuša and they led them away. Manapa-Tarḫunta and Šeḫa-River Land I made into my subjects.²⁷ ^d

Then I went to Mirā. I gave Mirā to Mašḫuiluwa; I gave Šeḫa-River Land to Manapa-Tarḫunta; and I gave Ḫapalla to Targašnalli. I made these lands into my subjects where they were. I imposed military obligations on them and they began to give me troops. Because I wintered within Arzawa, in two years the Sungoddess of Arinna, my lady, the victorious Stormgod, my lord, Mezzulla and all the gods ran before me and I overcame Arzawa. Some (of Arzawa) I brought away to Ḫattuša and some I made into my subjects where they were. I imposed military obligations on them and they began to give me troops. The transplantees whom I, My Majesty, brought back for the royal estates, because I overcame all of Arzawa, numbered all together²⁸ 66,000. Those whom the Hittite lords, infantry and horse-troops brought back were innumerable. When I had overcome all of Arzawa, then I came away to Ḫattuša. All this I did in the one year since I had wintered in Arzawa.

(wooden island = ship), the meaning of gursawanza is still not settled.

²² Lit. "his fields and meadows."

²³ šaramnaz. The translation follows a suggestion of H. A. Hoffner (personal communication). It was previously translated "from (their) place of refuge" (Goetze 1933:220), "down from above" (Friedrich 1952:184), "from the acropolis" (Alp 1954:456-58) and "from the palace" (Alp 1979:18-25).

²⁴ = Achaea, that is some Mycenaean Greek state. Although still a contentious issue, this equation is now accepted by most Hittitologists. See Güterbock 1983b; 1984; Bryce 1988; 1989; 1998:59f., 321f., 342f.; Marazzi 1992.

²⁵ Restoration with Goetze 1933:66 and Grégois 1988:65, rather than with Forrer 1926:82 "When I came back away from the sea."

²⁶ See CHD s.v. namma 6c.

²⁷ See Younger 1990:202-203.

²⁸ Hitt. 1-etta, lit. "in one (sum)."

Year 5

The next year I went to Mt. Ašharpaya. Since the Kaška had possession of Mt. Ašharpaya, they had cut the Pala-roads. I fought these Kaška of Mt. Ašharpaya. The Sungoddess of Arinna, my lady, the victorious Stormgod, my lord, Mezzulla and all the gods ran before me and I overcame Mt. Ašharpaya which the Kaška had held. I destroyed it. I emptied Mt. Ašharpaya and then departed. When I arrived in Šammaha, I entered Ziulila.

While my father was in Mitanni, the Arawannan enemy by continually attacking Kiššiya kept it greatly oppressed. I, My Majesty, went to Arawanna and attacked Arawanna. The Sungoddess of Arinna, my lady, the victorious Stormgod, my lord, Mezzulla and all the gods ran before me and I overcame all Arawanna. The transplantees whom I brought back from Arawanna for the royal estates numbered 3,500. The transplantees, cattle and sheep that the Hittite lords, infantry and horse-troops brought back were innumerable. When I had overcome Arawanna, then I came back to Hattuša. All this I did in one year.

Year 6

The next year I went to Zimurriya.²⁹ The Kaška who had occupied Mt. Tarikarimu by force in the time of my grandfather, subsequently became a danger for Hittite territory.³⁰ They came and attacked Hittite territory³¹ and they oppressed it greatly. I, My Majesty went and attacked Mt. Tarikarimu, which the Kaška had occupied. The Sungoddess of Arinna, my lady, the victorious Stormgod, my lord, Mezzulla and all the gods ran before me and I overcame the Kaška of Mt. Tarikarimu and destroyed them. I emptied Mt. Tarikarimu and burned the whole land of Zimurriya. Then I returned to Hattuša. All this I did in one year.

Year 7

The next year I went to Tipiya.³² While my father was in Mitanni, Piḫḫuniya, man of Tipiya, marched and repeatedly attacked the Upper Land. He advanced as far as Zazziša and he looted the e Num 20:14;

21:21; Josh
11:1; Judg
11:1 Kgs
20:3

Upper Land and carried it (i.e. the loot) down into the land of the Kaška. He took all the land of Ištitina and turned it into his pasture.

Thereafter, Piḫḫuniya did not rule like a Kaškan. When in Kaška there had never been a single ruler, suddenly this Piḫḫuniya ruled like a king. I, My Majesty, went toward him and sent him a messenger. I wrote to him: "Send out to me my subjects whom you took and led down into Kaška." Piḫḫuniya wrote back to me as follows: "I will not give anything back to you. And if you come to fight me, I will not take a stand to fight you anywhere in my own territory.³³ I will come to your land and I will take a stand to fight you in the midst of your land." When Piḫḫuniya had written this back to me and did not give my subjects back to me, I went to fight him. I attacked his land. The Sungoddess of Arinna, my lady, the victorious Stormgod, my lord, Mezzulla and all the gods ran before me. I overcame the whole land of Tipiya and burned it. I captured Piḫḫuniya and brought him back to Hattuša. Then I returned from Tipiya. Since Piḫḫuniya had taken Ištitina, I rebuilt it and made it a Hittite land again.

When I had overcome Tipiya, I sent a messenger to Anniya, king of Azzi.³⁴ I wrote to him: "[Return to me] my subjects who came to you while my father was in Mitanni."

[Remainder of Year 7 is broken away in the Ten Year Annals; Continuation of the 7th year according to the Full Annals (KUB 14.17 iii 2ff.)]

[...] He (Anniya) came [and marched to Dankuwa. He attacked it, and plundered] it of [transplantees, cattle and sheep.] He [carried] [them] down into Ḫayaša.³⁵

[When I, My Majesty, heard about it], I wrote to him, "[...] they [...]ed there nothing to/for me. None of the men of Ištitina(?) [...] me/for me. [But you] came, [marched] to Dankuwa, [attac]ked [it, plundered it] of [transplantees, cattle and sheep, and carried them] down into Ḫayaša." [Anniya, the lord] of Azzi, [wrote] back to me as follows:

²⁹ The reading ^{URU}Zi-mur-ri-ya follows Hoffner 1976:336, based on ^{URU}Zi-mu-ri-ya in the historical fragment KBo 22:54 rev. 4, 5, on the obv. of which the Kaška are mentioned, in preference to the Zi-ḫar-ri-ya of Goetze 1933:80 and del Monte and Tischler 1978:498.

³⁰ Lit. "Ḫatuša."

³¹ Lit. "Ḫatuša."

³² The Comprehensive Annals, which are badly broken in this section, first describe a revolt in Nuḫašše. When an Egyptian army is reported to be approaching Hittite territory, Muršili quickly sent general Kantuzzili to aid his brother Šarri-Kušuh, king of Karkamiš, in suppressing the revolt and presumably holding off the Egyptians until Muršili could personally bring the rest of the army. Fortunately the Egyptians were defeated. Since the text does not use the regular formula "My gods ran before them and they defeated PN/GN" (for some examples, see Goetze 1933:38f. i.28, 106f. i.22) or give credit to the victorious generals, but simply says "the Egyptians were defeated and did not come" the Egyptians, may have been defeated by some third party before reaching the Hittite border. See Bryce 1988 for more details and a suggested scenario for Muršili's relations with Nuḫašše. Muršili on hearing the news was able to turn around and instead head for Tipiya.

³³ Lit. "field and meadow."

³⁴ Anniya's kingdom of Azzi-Ḫayaša was located to the northeast of the Hittites, perhaps in the valley of the Kelkit İrmak. For references and discussion see del Monte and Tischler 1978:59f., 63f.

³⁵ Part of the combined kingdom of Azzi-Ḫayaša, see note 34.

"[Why] do you keep writing to me? If some [deportees] came and (if) there are some who are (still) coming in to me, [we do not give them up.] But if you are continually seeking [...]" I wrote back to him as follows: "I came and encamped at the border of your land. I did not attack your land and I did not plunder it of transplantees, cattle and sheep. You started hostilities [with My Majesty] and came and [attacked] Dankuwa [and emptied [it.] Let the gods take a stand on my side and judge the [legal case] on my side." ³⁶

[Because] he began to speak evil words [to me], I became hostile to him. I went (against) him. The town of Ura, which was the first outpost of the land of Azzi, is situated in a hard to reach place. Whoever hears these tablets (read), let him send and let him [behold how] this town of Ura was built. ³⁶ [When] Anniya, lord of Azzi [...]

[Aside from a mention of a campaign by Muṣili's brother Šarri-Kuṣuh, king of Karkamiš, while Muṣili was in Išitina, the remainder of the 7th year is entirely broken away in the Full Annals.]

Year 8

[Entirely broken away in the Ten Year Annals. Some of the missing information can be gleaned from the badly broken section in the Full Annals]

[...] Man[apa-Tarḫunta ...] a woman [...] the man of the town of [...] it/them [...] / to me [...] thus [...]

[long gap in the text]

[I sent ... with orders] "seize [...]" [Then, I sent my brother Šarri-Kuṣuh to ...]. I, [however], returned [to ...]. I encamped in [...]. I myself, in Ḫattuša [...]. [I] would [have ...-ed] troops and horse-troops [against] them. But when the [men] of Ḫayaša [heard] "His Majesty is coming," they sent [a messenger] to [me] saying "O lord, because they heard [...] they were afraid [...] ... We will bring [...] and hand over [...] to the lord(?). [...] comes, then let the lords come forth [...] We will bring back the Hittite transplantees who are coming in to us, and hand them over."

When the men of Ḫayaša replied to me in this way, at that time the goddess Hebat of Kummanni troubled me with regard to the festival of invocation.

Year 9

[The beginning of Year 9 is broken away in the Ten Year An-ns; some of the missing information may be gleaned from the Full Annals.]

nals; some of the missing information may be gleaned from the Full Annals.]

[I] said, "Hand over [the Hittite transplantees who are coming to you ... and I will not then go] against the men [of Ḫayaša.]" [However,] the men of Ḫayaša [...] and [did not hand over] the Hittite transplantees. So [I wrote] again [to] Anniya as follows. "[You have not] yet [begun] to give anything back to me. Some [you brought(?)] to the city of Ḫayaša and the land of Ḫayaša [kept(?)] and some you even took for yourself." He brought [word] to Ḫattuša: ³⁷ "The Hittite transplantees have not been compensated for [by(?)] Azziyan [transplantees] either. If some Hittite transplantees are coming over to us, we will not give them over." When the men of Ḫayaša did not hand back the Hittite transplantees to My Majesty, [...(my general)] built a [fortress ...] and he departed.

While I was in Tiliur[a], (the people of) Wāšulana revolted against Ḫudupianza, the royal prince who ruled Palā. I sent Nuwanza, Chief of the Wine ³⁸ [with infantry] and horse-troops and they departed for the sake of Ḫudupianza. They went to Wāšulana and they attacked Wāšulana. My gods ran before them and they defeated Wāšulana and burned it down. They looted [it including its transplantees], cattle, and sheep and carried [them] off [to Ḫattuša.]

[When I needed to celebrate] the festival of invocation of Hebat of Kummanni, ³⁹ I went to Kizzuwatna. ⁴⁰ When I arrived in Kizzuwatna, my brother Šarri-Kuṣuh, [the king of] Karkamiš ⁴¹ drove to Kizzuwatna to meet me and we got together. [Then] they [brought] [me] a terrible message. Šarri-Kuṣuh, my [brother, the king of] Karkamiš, got sick and died. They [carried] him to Ḫattuša and in Ḫattuša they performed the rites of the dead. The threshold(?) of the god which I [...] -d, the [...] of the gods [...]. I came away and in Kizzuwatna I lamented.

The men of Nuḫašše ⁴² began hostilities and [they] besieged [...] ... [They wrote(?)] to the king of [...] and] to other enemies [of My Majesty]. [...] When [the men of] Ḫayaša [heard that] enemies were arising [against My Majesty,] they did not [...]. They mustered [their troops and attacked] the land of Išitina. [They] surrounded [the city of Kannu-

³⁶ Verification of written annals is invited. See Hoffner 1980:315.

³⁷ The preceding broken passage can be differently understood following del Monte 1993:91: "Aniya [wrote] back [to me:] 'You are not beginning] to hand anything back to me. [You have come] against Ḫayaša, you have [devastated] the land of Ḫayaša; some you took for yourself and you have carried [them away] to Ḫattuša.'"

³⁸ The title of a senior general in the Hittite army. This officer ranked below only the king, the crown prince (at this time too young to be in the field), the king of Karkamiš, and the Chief of the Royal Body Guards (GAL MEŠEDI). See Beal 1992:342-56.

³⁹ Classical Comana Cataoniae, near modern Şar, east south-east of Kayseri on the Seyhan River, which was the major cult center of Kizzuwatna, is still unexcavated.

⁴⁰ The Cilician Plain and the valleys leading north from it. On the history of Kizzuwatna, see Kümmel 1980; Beal 1986.

⁴¹ See Güterbock 1956:120-121.

⁴² A land of many small states in Syria south of Aleppo, west of Meskene, east of Amurru and north of Qids (Qadeš); see Klengel 1969:18-57

wara. ...] Before PN [...] [While they came against Ištiti]na with infantry and horse-troops and destroyed] the land of [Ištiti]na and surrounded the city [of Kannuwa]ra, I had gone [to Kunumanni to celebrate] the invocation festival. [...] and I did not want in any way to [...] [I] did not want to [...] away] from before [...] I became [...] [...] me not. If while I was far away things [would] improve.

This is what I went and did. I gave infantry and horse-troops to [Kurunta] and I sent him to Nuḥašše. I gave him the following orders: "Since the men of Nuḥašše are hostile, go and destroy their harvest and besiege them." Kurunta went leading troops and horse-troops. He destroyed the harvest of the land of Nuḥašše and besieged them. Because the kings of Nuḥašše had transgressed the oaths of me and my father, the oath gods showed their divine power. [...] ... They summoned his own flesh and blood⁴³ against them. When Niqmadda,⁴⁴ eldest son of Aitakkama,⁴⁵ who was king of Kinza,⁴⁶ saw how they were besieged and further how their grain was running out, he killed Aitakkama his father. They (sc. the oath gods) turned [Niqmadda] and the land of Kinza back to my side. (The Kinzans) submitted themselves to me. I did not take Niqmadda as my servant on the spot. Now, because they had transgressed oaths, I said [to them] "let the oath gods make them [...]. Let the son kill his father and let brother kill brother. Let his own [flesh and blood] finish them off.

[Kurunta ...] and [went] up to the city of Kinza and he seized the city of Kinza.

[Then], because the infantry and horse-troops of Ḫayaša [came] in the direction of the Upper Land and destroyed the land of Ištiti and surrounded the city of Kannuwara and because I had left Nuwanza, the Chief of the Wine [in the Upper] [Land] with all the generals, infantry and horse-troops, I wrote to Nuwanza [as follows]: "The enemy from Ḫayaša has just come [in the direction of the Upper Land] and has destroyed Ištiti and has surrounded the city of Kannuwara. [Go] with infantry and horse-troops to the aid of Kannuwara and chase [the enemy] away from Kannuwara."

[Nuwanza, the Chief of the Wine], with infantry and horse-troops was marching to Kannuwara to help. When [Nuwanza ...], the ranking officers are saying the following words to him: "(Success) has not been ascertained [for you by augury] and extispicy."⁴⁷ [So Nuwanza, the Chief of the] Wine, sent a messenger [to me with a letter saying]: "[I do not have (?)] an augur and diviner and (success) has not been ascertained [for me by augury] and extispicy. [If] you [would only] write [to me the oracular answer]."

[When Nuwanza, the Chief of the Wine], had written that [to me], [I was celebrating the festival of invocation] in [Kizzuwat]na. [...] I summoned [...] I completed [the festival(?)]. [If] I had gone to help [Ištiti]na and had chased the Ḫayašan enemy away from Kannuwara, the [king of Assyria(?)] would have] conquered Karkamiš and [...] it. If I had [gone] against those enemies [and had] defeated them, when the [Assyrians] would have heard, would [they] not have [said] as follows: "His father conquered Karkamiš⁴⁸ and it stands [...]. His (Muršili's) brother whom he (Šuppiluliuma) made king in Karkamiš has died and he (Muršili) has not gone to Karkamiš and put Karkamiš in order; he has gone to some other land." When I had thought this over, I took oracles by augury and extispicy in advance⁴⁹ for Nuwanza, the Chief of the Wine. (Success) was ascertained for him by augury and by extispicy. I sent Nanaziti, the Royal Prince, after Nuwanza with a letter saying: "Just now I have taken oracles by augury and extispicy in advance for you and (success) was ascertained for you by augury and extispicy. Go now! The Storm-god, My Lord, has already given that Ḫayašan enemy to you. You will kill him."

When I had sent Nanaziti, the royal prince, after Nuwanza the Chief of the Wine, I went to the land of Karkamiš. When I arrived in the city of Aštata,⁵⁰ I went up into the city of Aštata and built a fortress up there. Then I garrisoned it. The troops whom Kurunta had led for destroying the harvest of Nuḥašše brought Niqmadda before me because he had killed his father Aitakkama, king of Kinza. I and most recently Beckman 1996:50.

⁴³ Lit. "fat."

⁴⁴ The reading of this prince's name as the common North West Semitic name Niqmad (= Nig-ma-u) rather than NIQ.BA-u, as Goetze 1933:112f. read, is the suggestion of Albright BASOR 95 (1944) 31f.

⁴⁵ The double dealing of Aitakkama, or Etakkama, and his switch of sides from the Egyptians/Mitannians to the Hittites during Šuppiluliuma I's conquest of Syria is documented in several letters from Tell el-Amarna; see Moran 1992:380 (index).

⁴⁶ This city's name, probably actually pronounced something like Qidš(a), as the Hittite "Kinza" and Aitakkama's own rendering, "Qidši" (EA 189 obv. 11, genitive) clearly show, is usually misvocalized by modern scholars as "Kadesh" or "Qadeš" by modern scholars. Its site is Tell Nebi Mend. See Klengel 1969:139-177.

⁴⁷ Lit. "by birds and by flesh."

⁴⁸ This conquest is described by Muršili in his "Deeds of Šuppiluliuma" (see Güterbock 1956:92-96). Karkamiš is modern Jereblus, where the Turkish-Syrian border crosses the Euphrates. It was briefly excavated before this border line was drawn. For discussion and bibliography, see Hawkins 1980a. On Hittite administration there see most recently Beckman 1992.

⁴⁹ CHD s.v. peran 3 a 2'.

⁵⁰ Modern Meskene, downstream from Karkamiš. French excavations and subsequent clandestine digging before the site was covered by Lake took him into my service.

When I went from Aštata into Karkamiš, ... I re-organized the land of Karkamiš. Then I made [...] -šarruma, son of Šarri-Kušuḫ king in the land of Karkamiš and I made the land of Karkamiš swear allegiance to him. Then I made Talmi-Šarruma, son of Telipinu, king in Aleppo and I made the land of Aleppo swear allegiance to him.

[The Ten Year Annals resume here]

[...] in fear [...] I turned [...] did not [stand] for battle against me. [Since] I had left [the infantry and horse-troops in the Upper Land, Nuwanza, the Chief of the Wine], came [with infantry and horse-troops] to help. He went [to Kanuware to fight] [against Azzi]. The infantry and horse-troops of Azzi stood [for battle against Nuwanza, the Chief of the Wine. Nuwanza overcame them.] Concerning prisoners and killed, [they were innumerable.]

[When] I, [My Majesty], came up from Kizzuwatna, [little of] the year [remained] to me. So I didn't then go to Azzi. [Since Yahrešša] had begun hostilities against [me] and did not give me troops and kept attacking [...], I, My Majesty, [went] to Yahrešša. I attacked Yahrešša. The Sun-goddess of Arinna, my lady, the victorious Storm-god, my lord, Mezzulla and all [the gods] ran before me. I overcame Yahrešša[-city] and then I burned it down. Then I continued to the land of Piggainarešša. I attacked the Kaška of Piggainarešša, and I overcame them. I burned down Piggainarešša. I plundered it of transplantees, cattle and sheep. and brought them away to Hattuša. When I had overcome Yahrešša and Piggainarešša, I then came back to Hattuša. All this I did in one year.

Year 10

The next year I went to Azzi. The infantry and horse-troops of Azzi did not stand for battle against me. The whole land took to fortified cities. Two of these fortified cities, Aripšā and Dukkanma, I fought. The Sungoddess of Arinna, my lady, the victorious Stormgod, my lord, Mezzulla and all the gods ran before me. Aripšā and Dukkanma I captured in battle. The transplantees whom I, My Majesty, brought back for the royal estates numbered 3,000. Those whom the Hittite lords, infantry and horse-troops brought back were not included.

Conclusion

Since I sat down on my father's throne, I have ruled ten years as king. These enemy lands I overcame with my own hands. The enemy lands which the royal princes and lords overcame are not included here. Whatever more the Sungoddess of Arinna, my lady, repeatedly gives to me (to do), I will carry it out and put it down (on clay).⁵¹

[The remainder of the column is uninscribed. There is no colophon]

Assad have produced numerous tablets. See Huehnergard 1993 and Margueron 1993. On Hittite administration there see Beckman 1992.

⁵¹ Or: place it down before (the goddess).

REFERENCES

Editions: Forrer 1926, no. 48; Goetze 1933; Grégois 1988. Translations: Friedrich 1925:9-12; Kümmel 1985; del Monte 1993:32-33, 57-72. Studies: Houwink ten Cate 1966; 1967; 1979; Hoffner 1980:311-315.

B. "FUNCTIONAL" INSCRIPTIONS

This page intentionally left blank

1. TREATIES

THE TREATIES BETWEEN HATTI AND AMURRU (2.17)

Itamar Singer

The Amurru treaties represent the largest series of Hittite vassal treaties with a Syrian state: four separate treaties extending from the mid-14th to the late 13th centuries BCE. In comparison, Carchemish and Ugarit are represented with two treaties each (plus royal decrees), whereas only one each is attested from Aleppo, Mitanni, Tunip, Nuḥḥašše, Alašia, and Mukiš(?). This state of preservation is in itself indicative of the relative importance of the strategic kingdom of Amurru flanking the southern border of the Hittite Empire. The treaties, especially their historical introductions, contain invaluable information on the troubled history of this Levantine state during the century and a half of its existence (Singer 1991a; Klengel 1992:160-174; Bryce 1998:181-189, 249-251, 262-263, 344-347). Although they in fact dealt with the same historical background of Hittite-Amorite relations, the resourceful legal draftsmen of the Hittite chancery did not mechanically repeat the same narrative time and again but, rather, skillfully adapted their discourse to the changing needs of the imperial political propaganda.

The decisive political act which shaped the development of Hittite-Amorite relations was Aziru's voluntary submission to Šuppiluliuma at an early stage of the Hittite penetration into Syria (Singer 1990:155-159). As an acknowledged Egyptian dependency for many generations, Amurru's defection to the Hittite camp remained an open wound in the pride of the Pharaohs, and sixty-five years later Ramesses II attempted unsuccessfully to reverse the course of events at the Battle of Qadesh. With the advent of peace, the former frontierland turned into one of the main hubs of amicable contact between the Hittite and the Egyptian empires. New problems agitated the Hittite court in its last decades — the growing Assyrian danger from without and dynastic rivalries from within. All these dramatic developments are vividly echoed in the Amurru treaties: the emphasis on Amurru's voluntary joining of the Hittite camp and its treacherous volte-face to Egypt before Qadesh, the deposition and restoration of Bentešina on the throne of Amurru, the military and trade embargo on Assyria, and the concern to ensure Amurru's ongoing support for the ruling line of Hittite kings.

Another aspect which may be followed in these treaties is the growing "Hittitization" of Amurru through reciprocal royal marriages and their resulting cultural impact (Singer 1992). A typical Canaanite state under Egyptian influence in the Amarna Age, Amurru gradually opened up to northern influences brought in by two Hittite princesses and the ensuing close ties between the two royal courts. The last document in the series was already composed for a king whose mother and wife were both Hittite princesses, and his father Bentešina absorbed "Hittite values" in his re-educational sojourn in Hatti. An Akkadian translation may have become superfluous, which may explain why the Šaušgamuwa treaty only came down to us in two Hittite copies (Beckman 1996:99).

TREATY BETWEEN ŠUPPILULIUMA AND AZIRU (2.17A)

Itamar Singer

There are six duplicates of the Akkadian version of the treaty but only one in Hittite. The following is a composite translation based primarily on the better-preserved Hittite text. Significant variants in the Akkadian version are indicated in the footnotes. Additional restorations are afforded by parallel Syrian treaties, notably those between Šuppiluliuma I and Tette of Nuḥḥašše (CTH 53), and between Muṣṣili II and Niqmepa of Ugarit (CTH 66), and also by the later treaties with Amurru (Duppi-Tešub, Bentešina and Šaušgamuwa). The paragraphs correspond to the original division lines of the text.

Preamble and main stipulations of the treaty

(i.1-13): [Thus says My Majesty, Šuppiluliuma, Great King, king of Hatti, hero, beloved [of the Storm-god:] I, My Majesty, have taken you in vassalage and [I have seated] you upon [the throne of your father]. If you, [Azira,¹ from this day on] until the end of days do not protect the king of Hatti, your lord, and the land of Hatti; and as your soul, your head, [your wives, your sons] and your *land*² [are dear] to you, in the same way may the king's soul, the king's head, the king's body and the land of Hatti be likewise dear to you [forever]! Until the end of days you should keep [the treaty and the peace] of the king of Hatti, [of his sons and grandsons], and of the land of Hatti. 300 shekels [of refined gold] of firstclass quality shall be your [annual] tribute [to the king] of Hatti; it shall be weighed out [with the weights] of the merchants [of

¹ Both the Hittite and the Akk. versions use the form Azira throughout the text.

² The Hittite text actually has the curious form "his(!) land (and ?) city".

Hatti. [You] Azira [must appear] yearly before My Majesty, [your lord], in the land of Hatti.

Historical background

(i.14-26)³ Previously, suddenly [all the kings, (namely)] — the king of Egypt, the king of Hurri,⁴ the king of [Qatna(?) / Aštata(?)], the king of Nuḥḥašše, the king of Niya, the king of [Kinza(?)],⁵ the king of Mukiš, the king of Ḥalab, the king of Karkamiš — all of these kings suddenly became hostile [towards My Majesty]. But Azira, king of [Amurru], rose up from the gate of Egypt and submitted himself to My Majesty, king of Hatti. And I, My Majesty, Great King, [accordingly(?) rejoiced] very much. Should I, My Majesty, the Great King, not have accordingly rejoiced very much, as I [...] to Azira? When Azira [knelt down] at the feet [of My Majesty] — (indeed) he came from the gate of Egypt and knelt down [at the feet of My Majesty] — I, My Majesty, Great King, [took up] Azira and ranked him among his brothers.⁶

Military clauses

(ii.9'-24') Whoever is My Majesty's friend should also be your friend; whoever is My Majesty's enemy should also be your enemy.^a If the king of Hatti (goes) to the land of [Hurri], or to the land of Egypt, or to the land of Kara(n)duniya (Babylon), or to the land of Aštata, or to the land of Alši, [or to whatever enemy lands that are] close to your border and are hostile [towards My Majesty], or to whatever friendly lands that are friends to My Majesty and are close to your border — (namely) the land of [Niya(?),⁷ the land of Kinza] and the land of Nuḥḥašše — (who) turn and become hostile [towards the king of Hatti, and if the king of Hatti goes to war] against that enemy, and if you, Azira, do not mobilize wholeheartedly with troops and chariots and do not fight him wholeheartedly — (ii.25'-39') Or if I, My Majesty, send to you, Azira, to your aid either a prince or a high-ranking lord with (his) troops and his chariots, or if I send to attack another land, and you, Azira, do not mobilize wholeheartedly with troops and chariots and you do not attack that enemy, and you commit some [evil by saying as follows]: "Although I am under oath, I do not know at all whether he will defeat the enemy or whether the enemy will defeat him"; and if you write to [that] enemy (saying): "[Behold! The troops and the chariots] of Hatti are coming to attack. Be on guard!" — thereby you will break the oath.

^a Exod 23:22

^b Judg 8:4-17

(ii.40'-46') [...] troops and chariots of Hatti, [...] of Hatti, they should [no]t seize a single person [...]. [If] you [do not seize(?) him and do not] deliver him to the king of Hatti — thereby you will break the oath.

(ii.47'-56') [If some] other [enemy] rises up against the king of Hatti and [attacks] the land of [Hatti], (or if) someone starts a revolt [against the king of] Hatti, [and you], Azira, hear about it but do not come wholeheartedly to the aid of [My Majesty] with troops and chariots; if it is not [possible] for you (to come), Azira, send to the aid of the king of Hatti either [your son] or your brother with troops and chariots.

(ii.56'-iii.3' ⁸) Or if someone oppresses Azira, either [...] or anyone else, and you send to the king of Hatti (saying): "[Come] to my rescue!" then I, My Majesty, will [come to your] aid, or I will send either a prince or a high-ranking [lord] with troops and chariots and they will defeat that enemy [for you].

(iii.4'-16') [Now(?)], because Azira has turned of his ow[n will to] My Majesty's servitude, I, My Majesty, will s[end him] lords of Hatti, troops [and chariots from the land of] Hatti to the land of Amurru. [And since] they will go up to your cities, you (must) protect them and provision them.⁹ ⁶ They should walk like brothers before you. You must protect [the king of] Hatti, but if some man of Hatti seeks evil against you, Azira, and he seeks to get h[old of either] a city or your(!)¹⁰ land — thereby he will break the oath.

Extradition of deportees, conspirators and fugitives
(iii.17'-28') Whatever deportees of that land [My Majesty] has carried off — deportees of the land of Hurri, deportees of the land of Kinza, deportees of the land of Niya and deportees of the land of Nuḥḥašše — if some man or woman flees from Ḥattuša

³ For the restoration of the list of kings and the rest of this passage, see Singer 1990:145.

⁴ Instead of Hurri the Akk. version has A-mur-[ri]. This could be a scribal error, or perhaps a confusion between two parallel geopolitical terms, for which see Singer 1991b.

⁵ Kinza is the cuneiform writing for Qadesh on the Orontes.

⁶ In the Hittite version there follow one or two very fragmentary paragraphs in the remainder of the first column and in the first eight lines of the second.

⁷ Beckman 1996:34 suggests restoring Mukiš(?), but this land is quite distant from Amurru's border. Cf. also §8 for the same group of lands (Kinza, Niya, Nuḥḥašše) in a similar context.

⁸ Most of this paragraph is lost in the Hittite version; the translation follows here the Akk. version A obv 27'-30'.

⁹ The sense of the rare Hittite verb išḥaššarwahḫ- is provided by the parallel section in the Duppi-Tešub treaty (A ii.32'-33'): "... give them regularly to eat and to drink." Cf. Beckman 1996:57; Friedrich 1926:18f.

¹⁰ The text actually has "his land" (followed by an erasure).

and enters your land, you should not say as follows: "Although I am sworn to the treaty, I (don't want to) know anything. [Are they(?) in my land?] [You], Azira, should rather capture them and send them to the king of Hatti.

(iii.29'-34') [If] someone speaks [evil words about] My Majesty to you,^c Azira — whether [a man of Hatti] or your own subject — but you, Azira, do not seize him and send him to the king of Hatti — thereby you will break the oath.

(iii.35'-44') Whatever men of Amurru reside in the land of Hatti — whether a nobleman or a slave of Azira's land — if you request him from the king of Hatti and the king of Hatti [gives] him back to you, then take him. But if the king of Hatti does not give him back to you and he flees and comes to you, and you Azira take him — thereby you will break the oath.

(iv.1'-5'; F 1'-3') [If] some [people(?) rise and come to the land of Azira, and you, Azira, speak unfavorable things before them and you direct them] towards the moun[tains or towards another land, and if] you, [Azira, do not seize and extradite hi]m to the king of Hatti — thereby [you will break the oath.]

(iv.6'-11') If a man of H[atti] comes as a fugitive [from the land of Hatti] and he turns to [you, Azira, seize him and extradite] him to the king [of Hatti]. But [if you do not extradite him — thereby you will break the oath.]

(iv.12'-14' = F 8'-9') [If a fugitive flees] from the land of Amurru [and comes to the land of Hatti, the king of Hatti does not (have to) seize and extradite him. It is not right for the king of Hatti to return] a fugitive.^d [But if a fugitive flees from the land of Hatti and comes to the land of Amurru, you, Azira, [should not detain him], but should release him to the land of Hatti. [If you detain him] — thereby you will [break the oath.]

(iv.15'-18') If you, [Azira, want something(?) you should request it] from the king of Hatti. [If the king of Hatti gives it to you], take it, but you should not take what [the king of Hatti does not give to you].

^c Exod 22:28;
Lev 24

^d Exod 21:12-14; Num 35

^e Deut 3:9;
Ps 29:6

^f Deut 4:26;
30:19; 31:28

Treason

(iv.19'-26') You, Azira, [I have taken to vassalage (?) and I have placed] you on [the throne of your father (?)]. If you, [Azira, do not seek] the well-being [of Hatti and] the hand of Šuppiluliuma, [Great King, king of Hatti], but (rather) you seek the well-being of another [land — either the land of Hurri(?) or the land of Eg[yp]t] — and [you seek] another's [hand] — thereby you will break the oath.¹¹

Summoning the divine witnesses

(iv.30'-32') Behold, I have summoned [the Thousand Gods to assembly for this oath and I have called them to witness. Let] them be witnesses!¹²

(A rev. 1'-11') ... Huwaššana of] Ĥupišna, [Tapišuwa of Išupita, the Lady of Landa], Kuniyawani [of Landa, NIN.PIŠAN.PIŠAN of] Kinza, Mount Lablana,¹³ [Mount Šariyana,¹⁴ Mount Pišaiša,] the lulahi gods, the habiru gods, Er[ēškigal, all the male] deities [and all the female deities of the land of Hatti], all the male deities and all the female deities [of the land of Kizzuwatna], all the male deities and all the female deities of Amurru, [all the primeval gods]: Nara, Namšara, Minki, [Tuḫuši, Ammunki, Ammizzadu], Alalu, Anu, [Anu, Apantu, Enlil, Ninlil], mountains, rivers, springs, great [sea, heaven and earth,^f winds and clouds]. Let them be witnesses to this treaty [and to the oath]!

Curses and blessings

(A rev. 12'-16') [All the words of the treaty and of the oath which are inscribed] on this tablet, [if Azira does not keep these words of] the treaty and of the oath [and he breaks the oath], let these oath gods destroy Azira [together with his head, his wives, his sons, his grandsons, his house], his town, his land, and all [his possessions]!

(A rev. 17'-20') [But if Azira keeps these words of the treaty] and of the oath which are [inscribed on this tablet], let these oath gods protect [Azira together with his head, his wives, his sons, his grandsons], his house, his town, his land, [and his possessions]!

¹¹ There follows a very fragmentary short paragraph (iv.27'-29').

¹² The rest of the Hittite tablet is uninscribed, but copy A of the Akk. version adds three more paragraphs: a list of witness deities (partly restored from similar lists in other Syrian treaties), a curse and a blessing.

¹³ Mt. Lebanon.

¹⁴ Mt. Sirion (the Anti-Lebanon).

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 49: Akkadian: A. KUB 3.7 + KUB 3.122 + KUB 4.94. B. KUB 3.19 (+) KUB 48.71. C. KBo 28-140. D. Bo 9200. E. KBo 28.118. F. Bo 9201. Hittite: KBo 10.12 (+) 13 (+) 12a. Editions: Weidner 1923:70-75, 146-149 (Akkadian); Freydanck 1959 (Hittite); del Monte 1986:116-141 (both). Translations and Studies: Goetze 1955:529-530; Klengel 1964; 1977; Singer 1990:144-50; 1991a:154-58; Beckman 1996:32-37; 1997:96-97.

TREATY BETWEEN MURŠILI AND DUPPI-TEŠUB (2.17B)

Itamar Singer

The Akkadian version is preserved in one text, the Hittite in four duplicates. The composite translation is based primarily on the Hittite version, with restorations afforded by the Akkadian version and other Amurru treaties. Significant variants in the Akkadian version are indicated in the footnotes. The paragraphs correspond to the original division lines in the text.

Preamble

(B i.1-2) [Thus says] My Majesty, Muršili, Great King, king [of Hatti, hero], beloved of the Storm-god, [son of] Šuppiluliuma, [Great King, king of Hatti, hero].

Historical background

(B i.3-12) Duppi-Tešub! Your grandfather Azira¹ submitted to my father.² When it came about that the kings of Nuḫḫašše and the king of Kinza³ became hostile, Azira did not become hostile.⁴ When my father fought his enemies, Azira likewise fought them. Just as Azira protected my father, my father protected Azira together with his land. He did not seek to harm him in any way, and Azira did not anger my father in any way. He kept delivering to him⁵ the 300 shekels of refined gold of first-class quality that had been decreed.⁶ My father died⁷ and I sat on the throne of my father. And just as Azira had been in [the time of my father], so he was in my time.

(B i.13-21) When it came about that the kings of Nuḫḫašše and the king of Kinza became again hostile in my time, Azira, your grandfather, and DU-Tešub, your father, [did not join] them. They supported only me in (my) overlordship.⁸ [And when Azira became old] and was no longer able to go on military campaign,⁹ [just as Azira] went to battle with troops and chariots, DU-Tešub likewise went to battle [with the troops and the chariots of the land of Amurru]. And I, My Majesty, destroyed those [enemies. ...] Azira, your father, to my father [...] came [...] I gave to DU-Tešub [...]¹⁰

(A i.11'-18') When your father died, according [to the request of your father] I did not reject you. Since your father during (his) lifetime(?)¹¹ had often mentioned yo[ur na]me before me, therefore I took care of you. You fell ill and became sick, but even though you were sick, I, My Majesty, still

a 2 Sam 18:1-

4 b 2 Chr 36:13

c Exod 34:12,

15 installed you in the position of your father and for you I made [...], your brothers, and the land of Amurru swore allegiance to you.

Main stipulations of the treaty and relations with Egypt

(A i.19'-34', B obv. 9'-10') When I, My Majesty, took care of you according to the word of your father, and installed you in the place of your father, behold, I have made you swear an oath to the king of Hatti, to the land of Hatti, and to my sons and my grandsons.¹² Keep the oath of the king and the hand of the king, and I, My Majesty, will protect you, Duppi-Tešub. When you shall take your wife and if you produce a son, he shall later be king in the land of Amurru. And as I, My Majesty, protect you, I will likewise protect your son. You, Duppi-Tešub, protect in the future the king of Hatti, the land of Hatti, my sons, and my grandsons. The tribute which was imposed upon your grandfather and upon your father — they delivered 300 shekels of refined gold of first-class quality by the weights of the land of Hatti — you shall deliver likewise. Do not turn your eyes towards another (land)! Your ancestors paid tribute to Egypt, [but] you [should not pay tribute to Egypt because Egypt has become an enemy [...]¹³

(D ii.1'-3') If [the king of Egypt(?) will become My Majesty's friend, you too] should be his friend, [and] you may keep sending your messenger [to Egypt(?)].

(D ii.4'-9') But [if] you commit [treachery, and while the king of Egypt [is hos]tile to My Majesty you secretly [send] your messenger to him [and you become hostile] to the king of Hatti, and [you cast] off the hand of the king of Hatti becoming (a subject) of the king of Egypt, [thereby] you, Duppi-Tešub, will break the oath.¹⁴

¹ Both the Hittite and Akk. versions use the form Azira throughout the text.

² Akk. version has: "He c[ame] to my father, [and] my father made him his subject." For this restoration of the first verb (instead of the traditional "he was hostile"), see Singer 1990:150f.

³ The cuneiform writing for Qadesh on the Orontes. Cf. COS 2.16, note 46.

⁴ Akk. version adds: "As he was friendly (before), he remained friendly."

⁵ Akk. version adds: "year by year".

⁶ Akk. version adds: "... by my father for your grandfather. He never withheld (his tribute) and he never angered him."

⁷ Lit., "became god" in Hittite; "went to his fate" in Akk.

⁸ Akk.: "As they (Aziru and DU-Tešub) held to the hand of my [father], likewise they held to my hand."

⁹ The Akk. version breaks off. The Hittite version resumes after a large gap.

¹⁰ See Starke 1990:543f.

¹¹ About four lines are entirely lost.

Military clauses

(D ii.10'-17', A ii.1'-12') [Whoever is My Majesty's] enemy shall be your enemy, [and whoever is My Majesty's friend] shall be your friend.¹² [And if any of(?)] the *protectorate*¹² lands [becomes hostile] to the king of Hatti, and if I, My Majesty, go [to fight] that [land], and you do not mobilize wholeheartedly with troops and chariots, or do not fight [the enemy] without hesitation [or ...], or you say] as follows: "[Although I am a sworn] man, let them defeat [the enemy or let] the enemy [defeat] them," [or if] you send a man to that [land] to warn [him as follows]: "Behold, the troops and the chariots of the land of Hatti are coming. Defend yourselves!" — (thereby) you will break the oath.

(A ii.13'-24') As I, My Majesty, protect you, Duppi-Tešub, be an auxiliary force to My Majesty and the land of [Hatti]. And if some [evil] matter arises in the land of Hatti, and [someone] revolts against My Majesty, and you hear (of it), lend assistance with your [troops] and chariots. Take a stand immediately to help [the land of Hatti]. But if it is not possible for you to lend assistance, send either your son or your brother with your troops and chariots to help the king of Hatti. If you do not send your [son] or your brother with your troops and chariots to help the king of Hatti — (thereby) you will break the oath.

(A ii.25'-29') If someone oppresses you, Duppi-Tešub, in some matter, or someone revolts against you, and you write to the king of Hatti, and the king of Hatti sends troops and chariots to help you, <...>¹³ — (thereby) you will break the oath.

(A ii.30'-37') If sons of Hatti bring you, Duppi-Tešub, troops and chariots, and since they will go up to (your) cities, you, Duppi-Tešub, must regularly give them to eat and to drink. But if (any Hittite) undertakes an evil matter against Duppi-Tešub, (such as) the plunder of his land or of his cities, or if he seeks to depose Duppi-Tešub from the kingship in the land of Amurru — (thereby) he will break the oath.

Extradition of deportees, conspirators and fugitives

(A ii.38'-45') Whatever deportees of the land of Nuḫḫašše and deportees of the land of Kinza my father carried off, or I carried off — if one of these deportees flees from me and comes to you, and you do not seize him and extradite him to the king of d Exod 23:22;

2 Chr 19:2

Hatti, but instead you tell him thus: "[Carry on(?)], go where (you want to) go; I do not know you" — (thereby) you will break the oath of the gods.

(A ii.46'-iii.11) If someone should bring up before you, Duppi-Tešub, evil words about the king or about the land of Hatti, you shall not conceal it from the king. If My Majesty should somehow confidently give orders to you: "Do this or that thing,"¹⁴ that one among those things which is not possible to perform make an appeal about it right on the spot: "I cannot do this thing and I won't do it"; it (will happen) according to what the king decides. But if you won't do a thing which is possible to perform and you repulse the king, or if you do not observe the matter that the king tells you confidently — (thereby) you will break the oath.

(A iii.12-22) If (the population of) some land or a fugitive rebels and goes to the land of Hatti, and passes through your land, you must set them on the right track and show (them) the road to the land of Hatti, and tell them favorable words. Do not direct them elsewhere. If you do not set them on their way, and you do not conduct them to the road (leading) to Hatti, but rather you turn their eyes towards the mountain, or if you speak evil words before them — (thereby) you will break the oath.

(A iii.23-29) Or if the king of Hatti beleaguers some land and he causes them (i.e. its inhabitants) to flee, and they enter your land, if you want to take anything, ask the king of Hatti for it. Do not take [it as you wish]. If you take [anything] as you wish and you conceal it — <(thereby) you will break the oath>.¹⁵

(A iii.30-33) Furthermore, if a fugitive enters your land in flight, seize him and extradite him. [But if a fugitive flees from the land of Amurru and comes in flight] [to the land of Hatti, the king of Hatti does not (have to) seize and extradite him.]¹⁶

Summoning the divine witnesses

(D iii.5'-6') [Behold, let the thousand gods stand by for this oath! Let them observe and listen!

(D iii.7'-17') [Sun-god of Heaven, Sun-goddess] of Arinna, Storm-god of Heaven, Storm-god of Hatti, [Šeri (and) Hu]ri, Mount Nammi and Mount Hazzi,¹⁷ [Storm-god of the Gate-house, Storm-god of the Army, Storm-god of Haleb, Storm-god of Zippalanda, Storm-god of Nerikka, Storm-god of Liḫ-

¹² For the meaning of kuriwana-, see, e.g., Otten 1969:28f.

¹³ The scribe left out the rest of this entry, which is in fact continued in the next paragraph. Cf. the parallel entry in the Aziru treaty, ii.56-iii.16' (see COS 2.17A).

¹⁴ Lit., "Do these things or this thing."

¹⁵ The recurring closing formula is omitted.

¹⁶ Restored from the parallel clause in the Aziru treaty (iv.12"-14") (see COS 2.17A). There follows a break of uncertain length concluded by the very fragmentary first four lines of D iii.

¹⁷ The Casius (Šaphôn) and Anti-Casius Mountains.

zina, Storm-god of the Ruin Mound, [Storm-god of Hišš]ašpa(!), Storm-god of Šahpina, Storm-god of Šapinuwa, [Storm-god of Pittiyar]igga, Storm-god of Šamuha, Storm-god of Hurma, [Storm-god of Šari]šša, Storm-god of Rescue, Storm-god of Uda, [Storm-god of Kizz]uwatna, Storm-god of Išhupitta, [Storm-god of Amurru(?)¹⁸], Storm-god of Argata, Storm-god of Dunippa, [Storm-god of Ha]lab of Dunip, Milku [of the land of Amur]ru.

e Deut 3:9;
Ps 29:6

(D iii.18'-23') [Tutelary-god, Tutelary-god] of Hatti, Zithariya, Karzi, [H]apantal]iya, Tutelary-god of Garaḥna, Tutelary-god of the Field, [Tutelary-god of the *kurša*¹⁹], Aya (Ea), Alladu, [Telipinu] of Turmitta, [Telipinu] of Tawiniya, Telipinu [of Ha]nḫana, Bunene, Ašgašipa.

(D iii.24'-A iv.3) [Moon-god Lord of the Oath, Išhara] Queen of the Oath, [H]ebat Queen of Heaven, Ištar Lady of the Field, Ištar of Ninuwa, Ištar of Ḫattarina, Ninatta, Kulitta, War-god of Hatti, War-god of Ellaya, War-god of Arziya, Iyarriš, Zampana.

(A iv.4-20) Ḫantidašu of Hurma, Aparu of Šamuha, Kataḫḫa of Ankuwa, [the Queen] of Gatapa, Ammamama of Taḫurpa, Ḫallara of Dunna, Ḫuwaššana of Ḫupišna, Tapišuwa of Išh[upitta], Lady of Landa, Kunniyawanni of Landa, NIN.PISAN-PISAN of Kinza, Mount Lablana,²⁰ Mount Šariyana,²¹ Mount Pišaiša, lulahḫi gods, ḫabiru gods, [Ereškigal], the male deities (and) the female deities of the land of Hatti, the male (and) the female deities of the land of Amurru, [all] the primeval gods — Nara, Napšara, [Minki], Tuḫuši, Ammunki, Amizzadu, Alalu, Anu, Antu, Apantu, Enlil, Ninlil, mountains, rivers, springs, great sea, heaven and earth, winds, clouds. Let them be witnesses to this treaty and to the oath!

Curses and blessings²²

(A iv.21-26) All the words of the treaty and the oath which are written on this tablet — if Duppi-Tešub [does not keep these] words of the treaty and of the oath, then let these oath gods destroy Duppi-Tešub together with his head, his wife, his son, his grandson, his house, his city, his land and together with his possessions.

(A iv.27-32) But if Duppi-Tešub observes these words of the treaty and of the oath which are written on this tablet, let these oath gods protect Duppi-Tešub together with his head, his wife, his son, his grandson, his city, his land, your(!) house, your(!) subjects [and together with his possessions!]

Colophon

(C rev. 11') [First tablet of Duppi-Tešub's treaty]. Complete.

¹⁸ For the restoration of the list of the gods of Amurru, see Singer 1991a:180f.

¹⁹ Either "fleece" or "hunting bag," for which see Güterbock 1989.

²⁰ Mt. Lebanon.

²¹ Mt. Sirion (the Anti-Lebanon).

²² These paragraphs are written entirely in Akk. in the Hittite version.

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 62; Akkadian: KUB 3.14; Hittite: A. KBo 5.9. B. KUB 3.119 (+) KUB 14.5 (+) KUB 19.48 + KUB 23.6 (+) KBo 22.39. C. KUB 21.49. Editions: Weidner 1923:76-79 (Akkadian); Friedrich 1926:1-48, 179-181 (Hittite); del Monte 1986:156-177 (both). Studies: Goetze 1955:203-05; Cornil and Lebrun 1975:76-96-100; del Monte 1985b; Singer 1990:150-151; Lebrun 1992:17-26; Beckman 1996:32-37.

TREATY BETWEEN TUDḪALIYA AND ŠAUŠGAMUWA (2.17C) (excerpts)

Itamar Singer

This treaty has come down to us only in two Hittite duplicates. The main text (A) has numerous erasures and insertions, some of them quite telling. The excerpts presented below include the historical introduction and other fragments dealing with Amurru's foreign relations, past and future. The remaining text includes the regular repertory of stipulations as also found in the Aziru and the Duppi-Tešub treaties. The paragraphs correspond to the original division lines in the text.

Preamble

(A i.1-7) [Thus says tabarna Tudḫaliya], Great King, [king of] Hatti, hero, beloved of the Sun-goddess of Arinna, [son of Ḫattušili, Great King, king of] Hatti, hero, [grandson of] Muṣšili, Great King, king of Hatti, hero, [descendant] of Tudḫaliya, [Great King, king of] Hatti, hero.

Historical background

(A i.8-12) I, My Majesty, [have taken you], Šaušgamuwa, [by the hand and] have made [you (my)] brother-in-law. You [shall not alter the words] of the treaty tablet which [I have made] for you!

(A i.13-27) [In the past] the land of Amurru had not been defeated by the force of arms of the land of Hatti. At the time when [Aziru] came to the (great)grandfather¹ of My Majesty, [Šuppilul]iuma, in the land of Hatti, the lands of Amurru² were still [hostile]; they [were] subjects of the king of Hurri. Even so, Aziru was loyal to him, although he did [not defeat him by force of arms. Aziru, your (great-great-)grandfather,¹ protected Šuppiluliuma as overlord, and he also protected the land of Hatti. Thereafter, he protected Muṣili as overlord, and he also protected the land of Hatti. In no way did he commit an offense against Hatti.

(A i.28-39) But when Muwatalli, the brother of My Majesty's father, reigned, the men of the land of Amurru committed an offense against him and announced to him as follows: "We were voluntary³ subjects, but now we are no longer your subjects." And they went after the king of the land of Egypt. The brother of My Majesty's father, Muwatalli, and the king of the land of Egypt fought over the men of the land of Amurru, and Muwatalli defeated him. He conquered the land of Amurru by the force of arms and subjugated it. And he made Šabili king in the land of Amurru.

(A i.40-48) When Muwatalli, the brother of My Majesty's father, died, the father of My Majesty, Ḫattušili, became king. He deposed Šabili and made Bentešina, your father, king in the land of Amurru. He protected the father of My Majesty and he also protected the land of Hatti. In no way did he commit an offense against Hatti.

Loyalty to the Hittite dynasty

(A ii.1-7) I, My Majesty, Great King, have taken you, Šaušgamuwa, by the hand, and have made you (my) brother-in-law. I gave you my sister in marriage and have made you king in the land of Amurru. Protect My Majesty as overlord, and thereafter protect the sons, grandsons, and offspring of My Majesty as overlords. You shall not desire another overlord⁴ for yourself. This matter should be placed under oath for you.

(A ii.8-19) Because I have made you, Šaušgamuwa, (my) brother-in-law, protect My Majesty as overlord. Thereafter protect the sons, the grandsons, and the offspring of My Majesty as overlords. But you shall not desire anyone (else) as overlord from among those who are brothers of My Majesty, (or) those who are legitimate sons of secondary wives of My Majesty's father, (or) any other royal offspring who are bastards for you. You shall not behave like Mašturi: Muwatalli took Mašturi, who was king of the Šeḫa River Land, and made him (his) brother-in-law; he gave him his sister Massanauzzi⁵ in marriage, and he made him king of the Šeḫa River Land.

(A ii.20-38) But when Muwatalli died, Urḫi-Tešub, son of Muwatalli, became king. [My father] took away the kingship from Urḫi-Tešub.⁶ Mašturi committed treachery. Although it was Muwatalli who had taken him up and who had made him (his) brother-in-law, Mašturi did not protect his son Urḫi-Tešub,⁷ but went over to my father (thinking): "Should I protect a bastard? Should I act on behalf of a bastard's son?"⁸ Will you perhaps behave like Mašturi? If someone brings difficulties upon My Majesty, or upon the sons, the grandsons, or the offspring of My Majesty, and you, Šaušgamuwa, together with your wives, your sons, your troops and your chariots, do not help wholeheartedly, and are not ready to die for him, together with your wives and your sons — this shall be placed under oath for you.

Foreign relations and embargo on Assyria

(A iv.1-18) The kings who are equal to me (are) the king of Egypt, the king of Karanduniya (Babylon), the king of Assyria <and the king of Ahḫiyawa.>⁹ If the king of Egypt is My Majesty's friend, he shall also be your friend; but if he is My Majesty's enemy, he shall also be your enemy. And if the king of Karanduniya is My Majesty's friend, he shall also be your friend; but if he is My Majesty's enemy, he shall also be your enemy. Since the king of Assyria is My Majesty's enemy, he shall also be your enemy.¹⁰ Your merchant shall not enter into Assyria and you shall not allow his merchant into your land. He shall not pass through your land. But if he enters into your land, you should seize him and send him off to My Majesty.¹¹ This matter should be placed under oath for you.

¹ Lit. "grandfather" (written, over erasure).

² The "lands of Amurru" (in plural) refers to the Syrian states ruled by Mitanni before the Hittite takeover. See Singer 1991b and cf. Zaccagnini 1988.

³ Lit. "out of love."

⁴ Written over the erased "another offspring".

⁵ For the reading of the logographically written name DINGER.MES-IR, see Edel 1976:32f.

⁶ This sentence was added over an erasure.

⁷ The sentence "He committed a treachery" was erased, but can still be read on the tablet.

⁸ This sentence, the sense of which is not quite clear, was added above the line.

⁹ The last name has been erased, but is still clearly readable on the tablet.

¹⁰ The sentence on Assyria is written over erasure.

¹¹ This sentence and the remaining paragraph was squeezed in the column-divider.

(A iv.19-22)¹² Because I, My Majesty, have begun war with the king of Assyria, just as My Majesty, you should (also) go and mobilize (your) troops (and your) chariots. Just as it is a matter of urgency and diligence for My Majesty, it shall likewise be a matter of urgency and diligence for you. You should mobilize wholeheartedly (your) troops (and) chariots. This matter should be placed under oath for you.

(A iv.23ff.) [Do not let] a ship of [Aḫḫ]iyawa¹³ go to him." [...] but when he dispatches them [...] the deity of your land [...].¹⁴

¹² This entire paragraph is written in minuscule script; the last line has been erased.

¹³ For a failed attempt to restore "[bat]de ship" instead of "ship of [Aḫḫ]iyawa", see Steiner 1989 and cf. Singer 1991a:171, n. 56.

¹⁴ The rest of the column is lost.

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 105 (only Hittite versions): A. 93 / w (+) KUB 23.1 + KUB 31.43 (+) KUB 23.37 (+) 720 / v (+) 670 / v. B. 1198 / u + 1436 / u + 69 / 821 + KUB 8.82. Editions: Kühne and Otten 1971. Studies: Sommer 1932:320-327; Radoszek 1950; Zaccagnini 1988; Steiner 1989; Singer 1991a; 1991b; Beal 1992; Klengel 1992:173; Beckman 1996:98-102; Cohen 1997; Bryce 1998; Klengel 1999.

THE TREATY OF TUDḪALIYA IV WITH KURUNTA OF TARḪUNTAŠŠA ON THE BRONZE TABLET FOUND IN ḪATTUŠA (2.18)

Harry A. Hoffner, Jr.

§1 (i.1-5) The words of the Tabarna, Tudḫaliya, Great King, King of the Land of Ḫatti, Hero, son of Ḫattušili (III), Great King, King of the Land of Ḫatti, Hero, grandson of Muršili (II), Great King, King of the Land of Ḫatti, Hero, great-grandson of Šuppiluliuma (I), Great King, King of the Land of Ḫatti, Hero, descendant (and namesake) of Tudḫaliya, Great King, King of the Land of Ḫatti, Hero.

Ḫattušili III and Kurunta

§2 (i.6-13) When my father, Ḫattušili (III), made war on Urḫi-Tešub (= Muršili III),¹ son of Muwatalli (II), he deposed him from kingship, but no treason was proven against Kurunta.² Kurunta was in no way involved in whatever treasonous acts the men of Ḫatti committed. Even before this, King Muwatalli had entrusted him to my father Ḫattušili to raise, and even before this, my father was raising him.

§3 (i.14-21) But when my father (Ḫattušili III) had deposed (Kurunta's older brother) Urḫi-Tešub from kingship, my father took Kurunta and installed him in kingship in the land of Tarḫuntašša. And my father made treaty tablets for him (concerning) what obligations my father made for him and how he set boundaries for him, and Kurunta has them.³

Kurunta's Borders

His⁴ boundaries are set as follows: In the direction of the land of Pitašša (to the W?), Mt. Ḫawa and the kanianna of Zarniya and the city Šanantarwa are your boundary. But the kanianna of the town of Zarniya remains in the land of the Ḫulaya River, while the town of Šanantarwa remains in the land of Pitašša.

§4 (i.22-28) Previously in the direction of the land of Pitašša (to the WNW?) his⁵ boundary was the town of Nahhanta.⁶ But then my father reduced his territory,⁷ so that on the treaty tablet of my father the grotto springs⁸ of the town of Arimmatta were made his boundary. Now I, My Majesty, have reestablished for him the former boundary. So from the land of Pitašša: from the boundary of Arimmatta:

¹ This was the conflict that led to the overthrow of Urḫi-Tešub and the accession of Ḫattušili III. For the sequence of events in this conflict see Bryce 1998:284-288.

² A brother of Urḫi-Tešub. For general discussions of this man Kurunta see Otten 1988:3-5; van den Hout 1995:82-95; Bryce 1998:296ff., 335f., 354f., and Mora 1998. Kurunta depicted himself as "Great King" on a rock relief published by Dinçol 1998.

³ The tablets of the treaty with Ḫattušili III which Kurunta had in his possession at the time this new treaty was being made by Tudḫaliya IV would have been invalidated thereby.

⁴ Ulmi-Tešub Treaty variant (hereafter UTT): "your."

⁵ UTT also: "his."

⁶ The boundary descriptions in §4 differ from UTT obv. 19', which reads: "In the direction of the boundary of the land of Pitašša the grotto springs (KASKAL.KUR.MEŠ) of (the city) Arimmatta are his boundary."

⁷ Lit., "drew in his boundary."

⁸ Or "underground river." The word is the Sumerogram KASKAL.KUR, lit., "(divine) road (of) the netherworld." See Gordon 1967.

Nahhanta and Hauttašša form the boundary. Nahhanta and Hauttašša themselves belong to the land of the Hūlaya River.

- §5 (i.29-42) In the direction of Mt. Huwatnuwanta (to the NNW?), the hallaḫpuwanza is its/his border, but the hallaḫpuwanza belongs to the Hūlaya River Land. In the direction of Kuwarsawanta up behind, the ḫuwaši stone of the Dog is the boundary. In the direction of Ušša (to the N?), Zarata is its/his boundary, but the city Zarata (belongs) to the Hūlaya River Land. In the direction of Wanzataruwa the town Harazzuwa is his boundary, but Harazzuwa (itself) belongs to the Land of Ušša. In my father's first written treaty the town Šuttasna was his boundary in the direction of Mt. Kuwakuwalya. But later my father himself made the town Šantimma the boundary. Šantimma (itself), however, belongs to the Land of the Hūlaya River. In the direction of the towns Wanzatarwa and Kunzinasa his boundary is Mt. Arlanta and the town Alana. Alana belongs to the Land of the Hūlaya River, but the water which is on Mt. Arlanta belongs jointly to the Land of the Hūlaya River and Ḫatti.
- §6 (i.43-47) In the direction of the town Šinwanta, Mount Lula and the Dannaššara-Mountains form its boundary. But the city Ninainta belongs to the Hūlaya River Land. The TUKUL of the Gold Charioteer which is behind, belongs to His Majesty. In the direction of Zarnušašša, the city Harmima used to be its boundary. But I, My Majesty, made Uppaššana its boundary. Uppaššana itself belongs to the Hūlaya River Land.
- §7 (i.48-52) In the direction of Zarwiša Mt. Šarlammi, the grotto springs, and the water(s) of ḫinnaru are his boundary. In the direction of the high mountain (the city) Šaliya is his boundary. But (the city) Šaliya itself belongs to the land of Ḫatti. In the direction of Ušaula (the cities) Ḫaššuwanata, Mila, Palmata, Ḫašḫaša, Šura and Šimmuwanata form his boundary. But these cities belong to the Hūlaya River Land.
- §8 (i.53-67) In the direction of the territory of Ḫawaliya (to the NNE?), the cities Walwara, Ḫarḫašuwanta, Tarapa,⁹ Šarnanta, Tupiša, Parayašša and the upati of Nata form the boundary. But these cities and the upati of Nata belong to the Hūlaya River Land. In the direction of the "place" (on) the sea (to the E?), the cities Mata, Šanhata, Šurimma, Šaranduwa, Ištapanna, the upati of Šalluša, Tatta, (and) Daša form his boundary. But these cities belong to the Hūlaya River Land. In the direction of the border-territory of Šaranduwa (to the S?), the sea is his boundary. In the direction of the border-territory of Parha (to the W),¹⁰ the Kaštaraya River¹¹ forms his boundary. And if the king of Ḫatti should undertake a campaign up against it (Parha?), and should take possession of the Land of Parha also by force of arms, then that (city) too would belong to the king of Tarḫuntašša. In the direction of the border-territory of Walma (to the WNW?), the cities Huwahhuwarwa, Alluprata, Kaparuwa, Ḫaššuwanata, Walippa (and) Wala form his boundary, but these cities belong to the Hūlaya River Land.

Hittite Enclaves in Tarḫuntašša

- §9 (i.68-90) These are cities of the king of Ḫatti which were inside the land of Tarḫuntašša: Anta, the ruined cities of Anta, Lahhuiyašši, Waštišša, Hudduwašša, Handawa, Daganza, Šimmuwa, Šahita, the men of Kamunama (as) Men of the Long Weapon, Wališšašša (and its) Golden Charioteers, Inurta, Wattanna, Malhuwalyata, Kašuriya, Šawiya, Pariyašša, Annauliliya, Puhanta, Gurtanašša, the pomegranate-men, Aralla, the men of Araunna, Uppaššana, the augurs — (insofar as) one resides within the borders of the land, they too are given (to Kurunta). From Mattarwanata (and) Parašša the tent men, from Dagannunta and Munanta the scribes of the nuppaš chest, from Ayara the custodians/keepers of nawilaš, from Tarapa¹² the spear men, from Wattašša (and) Talwišuwanta two TUKULs. The potters (remain) behind, and also the cupbearers remain behind: they are given to the gods of Tarḫuntašša. The dudduḫšialla-men from Iyasanta, the city Azzuwašši, the ḫuwantala-men from Wašḫaniya remain (or: are present). The warpatala-men from Adara as well as the cupbearers remain (or: are present). Respecting whatever šarikuwaš troops, craftsmen or Men of the Long Weapon remain in the land of Tarḫuntašša and the Hūlaya River Land, my father gave to him (i.e., to Kurunta) these cities with their mud (i.e., without additional population); he did not give them to him with population. Therefore I, Tudḫaliya, Great King, made a representation before my father

⁹ Perhaps the Derbe known in the Greco-Roman period.

¹⁰ Classical Perge in the Plain of Pamphylia.

¹¹ Classical Cestrus (modern Aksu) just to the East of Perge.

¹² Perhaps the Derbe known in the Greco-Roman period.

father, and he gave them (i.e., the cities) to him with population. But it is not written (so) on the treaty tablet of my father.

*Kurunta's Access to the Eternal Rock Mausoleum*¹³

§10 (i.91-101, ii.1-3) With respect to the matter of the eternal rock mausoleum, my father took it from the mouth of Maraššanta, (who had said:) "Kurunta should not approach the eternal rock mausoleum." My father (once) made a tablet for Maraššanta, which Maraššanta (still) has. But my father did not yet know how the wording of the eternal rock mausoleum inside (andan) the kuntarra of Tešub was (lit. "is") inscribed: how from now on the eternal rock mausoleum will never be taken away from Kurunta. Now when he came to hear the wording, my father reversed his ruling. And when I, Tudhaliya, Great King, succeeded to the throne, I sent a man who saw how the word of the eternal rock mausoleum inside the kuntarra of Tešub was inscribed: "from now on the eternal rock mausoleum will never be taken away from Kurunta." Therefore if Maraššanta ever brings the tablet which he has (which prohibited Kurunta from going up to the eternal rock mausoleum), let it not be accepted.

Changes in Boundaries

§11 (ii.4-20) No goatherd may go into the Hūlaya River Land, which is the boundary (area) of the land of Tarhuntašša. And if they drive up from the Hūlaya River Land to the Great Saltlick Rock,¹⁴ let them not take from him (i.e., Kurunta) the saltlick right(s). It is given to the king of Tarhuntašša, and he may regularly take the salt. My father Hattušili gave to Kurunta, king of Tarhuntašša, the town of Šarmana, Pantarwanta, and Mahrirma, together with their fields, grounds, meadows, sheep pastures, the whole saltlick, and the whole liki.¹⁵ Also I, My Majesty, Tudhaliya the Great King, have given them to him. Therefore let no other person encroach upon the salt of the town of Šarmana. And in Dunna one kuwappala has been given to the storm-god of lightning, and (yet) it remains (i.e., still belongs) to [the king] of Tarhuntašša. If Kurunta, the king of Tarhuntašša, subsequently "makes"¹⁶ one kuwappala, my father Hattušili, Great King, allowed it to him, and I Tudhaliya, Great King, allowed it to him also. So let it be allowed to him.

§12 (ii.21-30)¹⁷ Because all the Hittites supported(?) the gods of Tarhuntašša,¹⁸ they shall not appropriate those tribute payments and ritual provisions for the gods of Tarhuntašša from what my father gave to Kurunta, king of Tarhuntašša, and what I gave to him. But if now I, My Majesty, should choose some place for the (delivery of) cattle and sheep, who will appropriate it (as) the ritual provisions for the gods? They will begin to give to the gods of Tarhuntašša annually two hundred cattle and one thousand sheep. But if I do not give him any place, let them give annually to the gods of Tarhuntašša from the ariyatt(a)- of Hattuša two hundred cattle and one thousand sheep.

Tudhaliya and Kurunta as Childhood Friends

§13 (ii.31-42) I, Tudhaliya the Great King, before I became king, the god already previously had brought Kurunta and me together in friendship. Already previously we were dear and good to each other. We even were parties to an oath: "Each shall be loyal to the other."¹⁹ But at that time my father had placed an older brother²⁰ in the rank of tuhukanti.²¹ At that time he had not yet decided that I should become king. But even at that time Kurunta was loyal to me and swore allegiance to me personally as follows: "Even if your father does not install you in kingship, in whatever place your father puts you I will be loyal to you only. I am your servant." I too swore my allegiance to Ku-

¹³ On this section see Beal 1993.

¹⁴ On lapana- "saltlick" and its derivatives in Luwian and Hittite see Watkins 1997.

¹⁵ This word liki- does not occur in the corresponding passage in the UTT KBo 4.10 obv. 35, but of course MUN does. Melchert 1994:255 (cited with approval by Watkins) must be a native Hittite synonym of Luwian lapana-.

¹⁶ HW² 1:220 "(d.h., dem Gott gibt)." But perhaps rather it means "makes the one k. (previously given to the god his own)."

¹⁷ ii.21-80 has no antecedent in the preserved parts of UTT.

¹⁸ Cf. Gordon 1965 §7, obv. 41.

¹⁹ Cf. the friendship, mutual loyalty, and even oath between David and Jonathan (1 Sam 18-23, esp. 23:18).

²⁰ Bryce 1998:299f., who follows the view that Ulmi-Tešub is the same person as Kurunta and that the UTT belongs to Hattušili III and therefore precedes the Bronze Tablet, proposes that this "older brother" of Tudhaliya IV was Hattušili III's son Nerikkaili who as tuhukanti- heads the list of human witnesses in UTT. On this man see van den Hout 1995:95-105. The Nerikkaili of the Bronze Tablet witness list, who is called simply "prince" (DUMU LUGAL), might be another man, a son of Tudhaliya IV, although Otten and van den Hout think it more likely that he is the same person mentioned in UTT.

²¹ The Hittite (or Luwian) word tuhukanti- is generally thought to mean "crown prince", and although Houwink ten Cate 1992:262-63 argues it merely means "heir presumptive" or "second in line," a view that appears to be followed by van den Hout 1995, this would simply be the Kurunta: "I too will be loyal to you."

a 1 Sam 18:
23

The Designation of Tudḫaliya

§14 (ii.43-52) But when my father deposed my brother, whom he had placed in the rank of tuḫkanti-, he installed me in kingship. And when my father saw the high regard and love which existed between Kurunta and me, my father brought us together and made us swear: "May each (of us) be loyal to the other." And so it was my father too who made us swear (to each other), and we became separately (i.e., independently) parties to a (mutual) oath. Kurunta was loyal to me: he never broke the oaths which he swore before me. And I, My Majesty, on my part promised him: "If the gods recognize me, so that I become king, nothing but good will come to you from me." ^a

The Death of Ḫattušili III

§15 (ii.53-56) But when my father at that time became a god (i.e., died), although (some) lands adopted a wait-and-see policy,²² even at that time Kurunta put his life on the line for me. He was loyal to me and broke none of the oaths which he had sworn.

§16 (ii.57-66) And when the deity took me, and I became king, I made the following treaty with Kurunta. I gave even cities which do not lie on the treaty tablet of my father together with field, fallow and NAM.RA, with everything, to be subjects of Kurunta, king of the land of Tarḫuntašša. (Respecting) whoever dwells in the Ḫulaya River Land, the entire (land)²³ remains subject to Kurunta, king of the Land of Tarḫuntašša. I redrew the boundaries in a manner favorable to him. I gave the eternal rock mausoleum back to him. In the future let no one take the eternal rock mausoleum away from the descendant of Kurunta.

Future Validity of Treaty

§17 (ii.67-78) In the future let this treaty be valid for Kurunta, king of the land of Tarḫuntašša, for as long as Tudḫaliya, (king) of the land of Ḫatti, keeps these. And let the descendant of Tudḫaliya thereafter keep the descendant of Kurunta in the land of Tarḫuntašša in kingship in the same way. Let him not allow them to be killed or demoted(?).²⁴ As I, Tudḫaliya, Great King, am loyal to Kurunta, afterwards let my son and my grandson be loyal to the descendant of Kurunta in the same way. And as I am loyal to Kurunta—if he lacks something, I will compensate him. And if some difficulty (i.e., crisis)²⁵ befalls the descendant of Kurunta, let my son or my grandson compensate him in the same way; let him not allow him to be either destroyed or diminished.

The Carchemish Treaty

§18 (ii.79-83) Let the protocol of the king of the land of Carchemish be allowed to him with respect to the Great Throne. Let only the crown prince (of Ḫatti) be greater than the king of the land of Tarḫuntašša; let no one else be greater than he. What royal insignia/protocol²⁶ is allowed to the king of the land of Carchemish, let it be allowed also to the king of the land of Tarḫuntašša.

Kurunta's Wife, Heir, Successor

§19 (ii.84-94) Concerning what stands written on the treaty tablet of my father (Ḫattušili III): "Put in kingship in the land of Tarḫuntašša the son of the woman whom the (Hittite) queen²⁷ gives you as a wife," — when they made the treaty tablet during my father's reign, you, Kurunta, had not taken that woman. Whether now Kurunta takes that woman or doesn't take her, that ruling (of my father) will not be enforced. Whatever son Kurunta prefers, whether the son of his wife or the son of some other woman, whatever son is the choice of Kurunta, whatever son Kurunta prefers, let him place him in kingship in the land of Tarḫuntašša. Let no one overrule Kurunta in this matter.

Security of Kurunta's line even in the event of treason

§20 (ii.95-102, iii.1-20) Let this treaty be valid for Kurunta, his son and his grandson. I, My Majesty, will not throw out your son.²⁸ I will not accept (in your son's place) your brother or anyone else. Your descendant alone²⁹ will possess the land of Tarḫuntašša which I have meaning of "crown prince" in English, "heir apparent to the throne."

²² Hittite: arša tiyat, translation after Owen 1988:19.

²³ Or perhaps: "everything."

²⁴ Luwian: zantalanuna=ya. Tentative translation based upon the apparent alternation with tepnunmanzi=ya in line 77.

²⁵ The same Hittite verb nakkūzi occurs below in §21 iii.22, 28. Whereas here in §17 (ii 76) it is parallel to wakšiyazi "is lacking" in ii.74, later in §21 it is parallel to GÜB-ūšzi "something unfortunate happens."

²⁶ Hittite šaklāš.

²⁷ That is, Puduḫepa.

²⁸ Lines ii.96-iii.20 recapitulate §2' (KBo 4.10 + KUB 40.69 + 1548/u obv. 7'-14') of Ḫattušili III's earlier treaty with the king of Tarḫuntašša. For a parallel aligned transliteration see van den Hout 1995:22-25.

²⁹ UTT: "your son and grandson."

given to you. They will not take it away from him. And even if some son or grandson of yours commits treason³⁰ (against Hatti), the king of the land of Hatti will examine him, and if treason is proved against him, they³¹ shall do to him whatever the king of the land of Hatti decides.³² ^b (iii.1) But they may not take from him his 'house' (i.e., his dynasty) and land, nor may he (i.e., the emperor)³³ give it to another descendant (i.e., to a brother or cousin, some other descendant of Muwatalli II). Or if — since the matter of the land of Tarhuntašša was subsequently formulated as follows: "In the future let no one take the kingship of the land of Tarhuntašša away from the (primary) line of Muwatalli's descendants" — someone does this thing: he gives it (i.e., the land) to another line of Muwatalli's descendants, thus taking it away from the descendant of Kurunta, let the storm-god of Hatti and the sun-goddess of Arinna destroy whoever does that thing. In the future let only the descendant of Kurunta hold kingship over the land of Tarhuntašša.³⁴ But let only a descendant on the male side hold³⁵ it; let them not accept the descendant of a daughter.³⁶ And³⁷ if some son or grandson of Kurunta exercises kingship over the land of Tarhuntašša, and some misfortune³⁸ befalls him (lit. "someone") because of a god's decision (lit. word of a god), so that he must relinquish the kingship of Tarhuntašša, let them take only a descendant of Kurunta and install him in kingship in the land of Tarhuntašša. Let them not give it to any other descendant. If he has no descendant in the male line,³⁹ let them search for a descendant of the daughter of Kurunta. Even if it (scil. the descendant) is in a foreign country, let them bring it back even from there, and let them install him/her in kingship⁴⁰ in the land of Tarhuntašša.

^b 1 Sam 20; 22:16;
2 Sam 19:23;
1 Kgs 2:42

c 1 Kgs 22

Kurunta's line must ensure the succession and permanence of Tudhaliya's descendants

§21 (iii.21-31)⁴¹ If some descendant (lit. seed) of Tudhaliya exercises kingship in the land of Hatti, and some difficulty⁴² befalls him, whatever descendant of Kurunta exercises kingship in the land of Tarhuntašša should be ready to die for him.⁴³ And just as Kurunta was loyal to Tudhaliya, so afterwards the descendant of Kurunta should also be loyal to the descendant of Tudhaliya. The descendant of Kurunta should also be loyal to the descendant of Tudhaliya and should not allow him to die or be demoted. If some difficulty befalls the descendant of Tudhaliya, and he must step down from the kingship of the land of Hatti, what descendant of Kurunta stands in kingship in the land of Tarhuntašša must make war on the (new) king of Hatti; he must not serve (him).

Tarhuntašša's obligation to provide troops

§22 (iii.32-42)⁴⁴ My father, Hattušili, abolished for him (Kurunta) the (providing of) chariotry and infantry of the Hūlaya River Land which the administration holds for you (Kurunta) in Hatti, and I too, My Majesty, Great King, have abolished it for him. In the future a contingent of 100 foot soldiers supplied by him shall march on a campaign of the land of Hatti. The administration may not demand further troops from him. Whenever a troop contingent is demanded of him, they shall require no more than 100 foot soldiers and no chariotry at all. But if a king of equal status arises against the Hittite king, or if My Majesty initiates a campaign from the Lower Land,⁴⁵ a contingent of 200 foot soldiers may be recruited from him. But they may not serve as garrison troops.

³⁰ Lit. "sins" (waštai).

³¹ UTT: "he."

³² Lit. "whatever is the wish of the king of the land of Hatti." UTT then adds: "If he deserves to die, he shall die."

³³ UTT: "nor may they give"

³⁴ UTT lacks "Or if ... destroy whoever does that thing" and instead of "let only the descendant of Kurunta hold ..." reads "let only the descendant of Ulmi-Tesub take"

³⁵ UTT: "take."

³⁶ UTT: "let them not accept a daughter."

³⁷ The next two sentences in my English translation are lacking in UTT.

³⁸ GUB-līšzi; see notes on §§17 and 21.

³⁹ UTT adds: "then let it be retracted, and."

⁴⁰ UTT: "in lordship."

⁴¹ §21 had no antecedent in UTT.

⁴² Hittite: nakkišzi. See above note on §17.

⁴³ Cp. the willingness of Jehoshaphat of Judah to risk death in battle to assist his ally, Ahab of Israel (1 Kgs 22).

⁴⁴ iii.32-36 are paralleled in UTT obv. 42'-44'.

⁴⁵ An area adjacent to Tarhuntašša.

Tarḫuntašša's exemption from taxes and corvée

§23 (iii.43-56) Concerning the fact that the entire land belongs to him and that as a whole it forms his front line of border posts — if now a call for help arises from somewhere, no one may require help from the Hūlaya River Land. And against the cities in the midst of the land of Ḫatti, in the midst of the territory of Mt. Huwatnuwanta, in the midst of Kizzuwatna, Ḫurniya, Ikkuwaniya, and Pitašša — which belong in whatever land to the storm-god of lightning, the god of Parša, Šauška of Inuita, the cities that belong to the house of the king of Tarḫuntašša — against them no obligation to taxes and corvée shall stand. No call for military assistance is binding upon them. No one shall pester them to require taxes and corvée. For the sake of the gods of Tarḫuntašša I have exempted them.

§24 (iii.57-77) Concerning this which my father (Ḫattušili III) gave to Kurunta, and what I, My majesty, gave to him, the treaty which we made for him, in the future let no one change it. When I, My Majesty, carefully reviewed the taxes and corvée of the gods of (Kurunta), the king of Tarḫuntašša, (I saw that) it was too burdensome and that he could not manage it. What cult procedure the king of Tarḫuntašša supports in the land of Tarḫuntašša, corresponds to the procedure of Ḫattuša, Arinna and Zippalanda. Because the support of ceremonies and provisions for the gods was too burdensome for him, I remitted what my father and I, My Majesty, gave to Kurunta, for the sake of the Tešub of Lightning, Šarruma son of Tešub, and all the gods of Tarḫuntašša, and I exempted him. Let no one⁴⁶ take anything away from him. Let no one subject him to taxes and corvée. Whoever should take away the kingship of the land of Tarḫuntašša from a descendant of Kurunta or reduce it or command that it be abolished or should take away from him whatever my father and I have given him, or should alter a single word of this tablet,⁴⁷ may the sun-goddess of Arinna and the storm-god of Ḫatti take away the kingship of the land of Ḫatti from that person.

The divine witnesses to the treaty

§25 (iii.78-98, iv.1-4) The Thousand Gods⁴⁷ have now been called to assembly for (attesting the contents of) this treaty tablet that I have just executed for you. Let them see, hear, and be witnesses thereto — the sun-god of heaven,

d Deut 4:2;
13:1 [12:32]

e Deut 4:26;
30:19; 31:28

f Ezek 6:3;
36:1, 4;
Micah 6:1-2

g Deut 4:2;
13:1 [12:32]

the sun-goddess of Arinna, the storm-god of heaven, the storm-god of Ḫatti, the storm-god of the army, the storm-god of Ḫiššašhapa, the storm-god of Zippalanda, the storm-god of Nerik, the storm-god of Aleppo, the storm-god of Uda, the storm-god of Kizzuwatna, the storm-god of Šamuḫa, the storm-god of Šapinuwa, the mighty storm-god, the storm-god of lightning, the (god) of lulu, the patron god, the patron god of Ḫatti, Āla, Karzi, Ḫapantaliya, the patron god of the countryside, the patron god of the hunting bag,⁴⁸ Zithariya, Šarruma, Ḫebat the queen of heaven, Ḫebat of Uda, Ḫebat of Kizzuwatna, Šawuška of Šamuḫa, Šawuška of the countryside, Šawuška of Lawazantiya, Šawuška of Nineveh, Šawuška of Ḫattarina, Ninatta, Kulitta, the moon-god king of the oath, NIN.GAL queen of the oath, Išhara goddess of Aruḫna, the warrior-god, the warrior-god of Ḫatti, the warrior-god of Ellaya, the warrior-god of Arziya, Yarri, Zappana, Ḫantitaššu of Ḫurma, Abara of Šamuḫa, Ḫataḫḫa of Ankuwa, Ammama of Taḫurpa, GAZ.BA.A.A of Ḫubišna, Ḫallara of Duma, Lelwani, the lulahḫi- and ḫabiri-gods, (all) the male and female deities, heaven and earth,⁴⁹ the great sea, the mountains, rivers and springs of the land of Ḫatti and of the land of Tarḫuntašša.

(iv.5-15) If you, Kurunta, fail to comply with these treaty clauses, and do not remain loyal to My Majesty and subsequently the descendants of My Majesty as your rulers, or if you should desire for yourself the kingship of the land of Ḫatti, or if you side with someone who causes trouble for My Majesty or for the descendants of My Majesty instead of making war against him, then may these oath-deities destroy you together with your posterity. But if you, Kurunta, take to heart the words of this tablet, and you desire My Majesty and subsequently the descendants of My Majesty as your rulers, and you remain loyal to them, then may these same deities take good care of you, and may you grow old under the protection of My Majesty.

§26 (iv.16-29) But whoever causes trouble for Kurunta in this land and takes it away from him, or subsequently takes it away from the descendant of Kurunta, or reduces his territory, or takes anything away that I have given to him, or alters even a single word of this tablet,⁴⁹ may these oath-deities destroy him. What I, My Majesty, have given to Kurunta, king of the land of Tarḫuntašša, and what borders I have set for him, no one must ever take away from the descendants of Kurunta. Not even the king (of Ḫatti) should ever take them and give them to his son. He must not give them to any other descendant. Let no one contest his right to it. Let only the direct line of Kurunta's descendants possess the kingship of the land of Tarḫuntašša forever. Whoever causes trouble for him and takes something away from him may these oath-deities destroy together with that man's posterity.

⁴⁶ That is, no future king of Ḫatti.

⁴⁷ The official term for the Hittite pantheon.

⁴⁸ Cf. above COS 2.2.17B, note 19.

Is Deut 10:2

Šarruma, Prince En-Šarruma, Alalimi chief of the military tribunes, Alantalli king of the land of Mera,⁵⁰ Bentešina king of the land of Amurru, Šaḫurunuwa chief of the wood scribes, Ḫattuša-LAMMA the field marshal, GAL-^{du} chief of the chariot drivers, Huršaniya the field marshal, Zuzupḫa chief of the chariot warriors, Šalikka chief of the guards of the right side, Tapa-ziti the decurio, Tutu commander of the storehouses, Walwa-ziti chief of the scribes, Kammaliya chief scribe of the kitchen staff, Nana-zi chief of the scribes and overseer of the food-servers — and all sorts of military commanders, magistrates and all the royal family.

§27 (iv.30-43) Ḫalwa-ziti, the scribe, the son of Lupakki of Ukkiya, inscribed this tablet in the city of Tawa in the presence of the following witnesses: Prince Nerikkaili, Ḫuzziya the chief of the palace guards, Prince Kurakura, Ini-Tešub king of Carchemish, Mašturi king of the Šeḫa River Land,⁴⁹ Šauška-muwa the king's son-in-law, Uppara-muwa the anduwašalli, Tattamaru the chief of the guard of the left side, Prince Eḫli-Šarruma, Aba-muwa chief of the chariot drivers, Prince Ḫešmi-Šarruma, Prince Taki-

*Colophon*⁵¹

(iv.44-51) This (treaty) was made into seven tablets and sealed with the seals of the sun-goddess of Arinna and the storm-god of Ḫatti. One tablet was placed before the sun-goddess of Arinna,⁵² ^a one before the storm-god of Ḫatti, one before Letwani, one before Ḫebat of Kizzuwatna, one before the storm-god of lightning, and one in the king's house before Ziḫariya. And Kurunta, king of Tarḫuntašša, keeps one in his house.

⁴⁹ Located on the western end of Asia Minor.

⁵⁰ Located on the western end of Asia Minor.

⁵¹ On this colophon see Börker-Klähn 1993.

⁵² Cp. the keeping of the two tablets of the Sinai covenant in the ark of the testimony (Deut 10:2).

REFERENCES

Edition: Otten 1988. Other Tarḫuntašša treaties and protocols: CTH 96 (544/f, treated in SBo II [1942] 10f., 82); CTH 97 (SBoT 57); CTH 106 (KBo 4.10 + +, edited van den Hout 1995). Studies: Beal 1993; Beckman 1989-1990; Börker-Klähn 1993; Börker-Klähn 1994; Bryce 1998; Dinçol 1998; Heinhold-Krahmer 1991-92; Hoffner 1992; Houwink ten Cate 1992; Imparati 1992a; Imparati 1992b; 1992c; Laroche 1948; Melchert 1990; Mora 1998; Otten 1989; Singer 1996; Stefanini 1992; Sørensen 1992; van den Hout 1984.

2. LAWS

HITTITE LAWS (2.19)

Harry A. Hoffner, Jr.

The Hittite laws were first written down in the Old Kingdom (ca. 1650-1500 BCE). They are therefore later than the Sumerian law collections of Ur-Nammu and Lipit-Ishtar and the Akkadian laws of Eshnunna and Hammurabi, but earlier than the Middle Assyrian laws and the laws of the Hebrew Bible. A New Kingdom revision (KBo 6.4), called the Late Parallel Version and abbreviated PT for "Parallel Text," contains 41 sections numbered with roman numerals. I have interleaved the Late Parallel Version with the Main Version of Series One in the manner of Goetze 1969. In order to distinguish it more clearly from the copies of the Old Hittite recension I have indented the translation of paragraphs from the Late Parallel Version. Two paragraphs from the Old Hittite Telipinu Edict, edited by Hoffmann 1984, have been appended in order to supply the Hittite law on murder.

§1	[If] anyone kills ^a [a man] or a woman in a [quarrel], ^b he shall [bring him] (for burial) and shall give 4 persons (lit. heads), male or female respectively. He shall look [to his house for it.] ¹	^a Exod 21:12	§IV	(= late version of §6) If a man is found killed on another person's property, if he is a free man, he shall give his property, house, and 6040 shekels of silver. If it is a woman, he shall give (no property, but) 120 shekels of silver. But if (the place where the dead person was found) is not private property, but uncultivated open country, they shall measure 3 miles in all directions, ^c and whatever village is determined to lie within that radius, he shall take those (same payments from the villagers). ⁶ If there is no village, he shall forfeit (his claim).
§2	[If] anyone kills ^c [a male] or female slave in a quarrel, he shall bring him (for burial) [and] shall give [2] persons (lit. heads), male or female respectively. He shall look to his house for it.	^b Exod 21:18 ^c Exod 21:20
§3	[If] anyone strikes a free [man] or woman so that he dies, but it is an accident, ² ^d he shall bring him (for burial) and shall give 2 persons (lit. heads). He shall look to his house for it.	^d Deut 19:5-6; Num 35 ^e Deut 21:1-2
§4	If anyone strikes a male or female slave so that he dies, but it is an accident, he shall bring him (for burial) and shall give one person (lit. head). He shall look to his house for it.	^f Exod 21:24; Lev 24:20; Deut 19:21 ^g Exod 21:26-27	§7	If anyone blinds a free person or knocks out his tooth, ⁷ / they used to pay 40 shekels of silver. But now he shall pay 20 shekels of silver. He shall look to his house for it.
§II	(= late version of §§3-4) [If anyone] strikes [a (free) man,] so that he dies, but it is an accident, [he shall pay ... shekels of silver.] If it is a (free) woman (or) a female slave (or: if the woman is a slave), he shall pay 80 shekels of silver. ³	^h Exod 21:18-19	§V	(= late version of §7) If anyone blinds a free man in a quarrel, he shall pay 40 shekels of silver. If it is an accident, he shall pay 20 shekels of silver.
§5	If anyone kills a merchant (variant: a Hittite merchant) ⁴ (in a foreign land), he shall pay 4,000 shekels (lit. 100 minas) of silver. He shall look to his house for it. If it is in the lands of Luwiya (= Arzawa) or Pala, he shall pay the 4,000 shekels of silver and also replace his goods. If it is in the land of Hatti, he shall (also) bring the merchant himself (for burial).		§8	If anyone blinds a male or female slave or knocks out his tooth, ⁸ he shall pay 10 shekels of silver. He shall look to his house for it.
§III	(= late version of §5) [If] anyone kills a Hittite [merchant] in the midst of his goods, he shall pay [... s minas hekels of silver], and he shall make threefold compensation for his goods. But [if] (the merchant) is not in possession of goods, and someone kills him in a quarrel, he shall pay 240 shekels of silver. If it is only an accident, he shall pay 80 shekels of silver.		§VI	(= late version of §8) If anyone blinds a male slave in a quarrel, he shall pay 20 shekels of silver. If it is an accident, he shall pay 10 shekels of silver.
§6	If a person, man or woman, is killed in another city, (the victim's heir) shall deduct 12,000 square meters (= 3 acres) ⁵ from the land of the person on whose property the person was killed and shall take it for himself.		§VII	(= late version of §§7-8) If anyone knocks out a free man's tooth — if he knocks out 2 or 3 teeth — he shall pay 12 shekels of silver. If it is a slave, he shall pay 6 shekels of silver.
			§9	If anyone injures a person's head, they used to pay 6 shekels of silver: the injured party took 3 shekels of silver, and they used to take 3 shekels of silver for the palace. But now the king has waived the palace share, so that only the injured party takes 3 shekels of silver.
			§VIII	(= late version of §9) If anyone injures a (free) man's head, the injured man shall take 3 shekels of silver.
			§10	If anyone injures a person and temporarily incapacitates him, he shall provide medical care for him. In his place he shall provide a person to work on his estate until he recovers. When he recovers, (his assailant) shall pay him 6 shekels of silver and shall pay the physician's fee as well. ⁶

¹ The significance of this phrase has been much debated (Güterbock and Hamp 1956; Haase 1956; 1962; Souček 1961; Güterbock 1983b). I favor Güterbock's view that the claimant person entitled to make a claim in the case is entitled to recover damages from the estate of the perpetrator.

² Lit., "(only) his hand is at fault."

³ Given the price of a slave, this fine of 2 minas (= 80 shekels) seems inordinately high.

⁴ So OH manuscript. NH reads "a Hittite merchant."

⁵ Hittite: 100 gipeššar = 3.3 iku = 3 acres = 1 hectare, worth about 8.25 shekels silver according to §183. The fine in the late version (all his land plus 40 shekels) is much higher.

⁶ Or perhaps: "he shall take those very (people who inhabit the village)."

⁷ Cf. §§18-22.

§IX (= late version of §10) If anyone injures a free man's head, he shall provide medical care for him. In his place he shall provide a person to work on his estate until he recovers. When he recovers, (his assailant) shall pay him 10 shekels of silver and shall pay the 3 shekel physician's fee as well. If it is a slave, he shall pay 2 shekels of silver.	f Exod 21:22 j Exod 21:16; Deut 24:7; Amos 1:6 * Exod 20:17; Deut 5:21	[if] it is her tenth month, ¹¹ he shall pay 10 shekels of silver, if it is her fifth month, he shall pay 5 shekels of silver. He shall look to his house for it.
§11 If anyone breaks a free person's arm or leg, he shall pay him 20 shekels of silver. He shall look to his house for it.		§XVI (= late version of §17) If anyone causes a free woman to miscarry, ¹² he shall pay 20 shekels of silver.
§X (= late version of §11) If anyone breaks a free man's arm or leg, if (the injured man) is permanently handicapped(?), he shall pay him 20 shekels of silver. If he is not permanently handicapped(?), he shall pay him 10 shekels of silver.		§18 If anyone causes a female slave to miscarry, ¹² if it is her tenth month, he shall pay 5 shekels of silver.
§12 If anyone breaks a male or female slave's arm or leg, he shall pay 10 shekels ⁸ of silver. He shall look to his house for it.		§XVII (= late version of §18) If anyone causes a female slave to miscarry, he shall pay 10 shekels of silver. [...]
§XI (= late version of §12) If anyone breaks a slave's arm or leg, if he is permanently handicapped(?), he shall pay him 10 shekels of silver. If he is not permanently handicapped(?), he shall pay him 5 shekels of silver.		§19a If a Luwian abducts ¹³ a free person, man or woman, from the land of Hatti, and leads him away to the land of Luwiya/Arzawa, and subsequently the abducted person's "owner" ¹³ recognizes him, (the abductor) shall forfeit (lit. bring) his entire house. ¹⁴
§13 If anyone bites off the nose of a free person, he shall pay 40 shekels of silver. He shall look to his house for it.		§19b If a Hittite abducts a Luwian man in the land of Hatti itself, and leads him away to the land of Luwiya, formerly they gave 12 persons (lit. heads), but now he shall give 6 persons. He shall look to his house for it.
§XII (= late version of §13) If anyone bites off the nose of a free man, he shall pay 30 minas (i.e., 1,200 shekels) ⁹ of silver. He shall look to his house for it.		§20 If a Hittite man abducts a Hittite male slave ⁸ from the land of Luwiya, and leads him here to the land of Hatti, and subsequently the abducted person's owner recognizes him, (the abductor) shall pay him 12 shekels of silver. He shall look to his house for it.
§14 If anyone bites off the nose of a male or female slave, he shall pay 3 shekels of silver. He shall look to his house for it.		§21 If anyone abducts the male slave of a Luwian man from the land of Luwiya and brings him to the land of Hatti, and his owner (later) recognizes him, (the owner) shall only take (back) his own slave: there shall be no compensation.
§XIII (= late version of §14) If anyone bites off the nose of a male or female slave, he shall pay 15 minas (i.e., 600 shekels) ¹⁰ of silver.		§22a If a male slave runs away, and someone brings him back, if he seizes him nearby, he shall give him (i.e., the finder) shoes.
§15 If anyone tears off the ear of a free person, he shall pay 12 shekels of silver. He shall look to his house for it.		§22b If (he seizes him) on the near side of the (Marašanta) River, he shall pay 2 shekels of silver. If on the far side of the river, he shall pay him 3 shekels of silver.
§XIV (= late version of §15) If anyone tears off the ear of a free man, he shall pay 12 shekels of silver.		§23a If a male slave runs away and goes to the land of Luwiya, (his owner) shall pay 6 shekels of silver to whomever brings him back.
§16 If anyone tears off the ear of a male or female slave, he shall pay him 3 shekels of silver.		§23b If a male slave runs away and goes into an enemy country, whoever brings him back shall keep him for himself.
§XV (= late version of §16) If anyone tears off the ear of a male or female slave, he shall pay 6 shekels of silver.		§24 If a male or female slave runs away, he/she at whose hearth his/her owner finds him/her
§17 If anyone causes a free woman to miscarry,

⁸ Later variant: "6 shekels."

⁹ Perhaps a scribal error for "30 shekels." See also in §XIII.

¹⁰ Perhaps a scribal error for "15 shekels."

¹¹ Remainder of the paragraph in manuscript C reads: "he shall pay 20 shekels of silver."

¹² Remainder of the paragraph in manuscript C reads: "he shall pay 10 shekels of silver."

¹³ Since the victim is a free person, "owner" probably indicates only the head of his household.

¹⁴ Or: "(The claimant) shall confiscate(?) his (i.e., the abductor's) entire house." See Hoffner 1997b 30 note 46.

	shall pay one month's wages: 12 shekels of silver for a man, 6 shekels of silver for a woman. ¹⁵	f Deut 24:1-4; Jer 3:1; Mal 2:16	but afterwards the father and mother abrogate reject ²⁶ it (sc. the agreement), they shall separate her from the man, but they ²⁷ shall restore the brideprice double.
§25a	[If] a person is impure in a vessel or a vat, ¹⁶ they used to pay 6 shekels of silver: s/he who is impure/guilty pays 3 shekels of silver, ¹⁷ and they used to take 3 shekels for the [king]'s house. ¹⁸	m Gen 30:20; 1 Kgs 9:16	§XXII (= late version of §29) [Too broken for connected translation.]
§25b	But now the king has [waived] the palace's share. S/he who is impure/guilty only pays 3 shekels of silver. ¹⁹ S/he shall look to his/her house for it.	n Deut 28:30; Judg 15:1-3	§30 But if before a man has taken the daughter (sexually) he refuses her, he shall forfeit the brideprice which he has paid.
§26a	If a woman re[fuses] ²⁰ a man, [the man] shall give [her ...], and [the woman shall take] a wage for her seed. ²¹ But the man [shall take the land] and the children. [...]	a Exod 22:15-16; Deut 22:28-29; 2 Sam 3:14	§XXIII (= late version of §30) If a man [...] a young woman, the brideprice which [he paid, ...].
§26b	But if a man divor[ces] ²² a woman, [and she ...], he shall [sell her.] Whoever buys her [shall] pa[y him] 12 shekels of silver.	p Exod 21:2-11	§31 If a free man and a female slave are lovers and come together (i.e., live together), and he takes her as his wife, and they make a house and children, but (if) afterwards either they become estranged or they each find a new marriage partner, they shall divide the house equally, and the man shall take the children, with the woman taking one child.
§27	If a man takes his wife and leads [her] away to his house, he shall carry her dowry ²³ in (to his house). If the woman [dies] th[ere] (in his house), they shall burn her personal possessions, and the man shall take her dowry. If she dies in her father's house, and there [are] children, ²² the son(s) is/are his, but the man shall not [take] her dowry.		§XXIV (= late version of §31) [Too broken for connected translation.]
§28a	If a daughter (or: young woman) has been promised to a man, but another man runs off with her, he who runs off with her shall give to the first man whatever he paid and shall compensate him. ²³ The father and mother (of the woman) shall not make compensation.		§32 If a male slave [takes] a [free] woman (in marriage), [and they make a home and children, when they divide their house], (if they separate,) they shall divide their possessions [equally, and the free woman shall take] most of [the children,] with [the male slave taking] one child.
§28b	If her father and mother give her to another man, ²⁴ the father and mother shall make compensation (to the first man).		§33 (Translation of A) If a male slave takes a female slave (in marriage), [and they have children,] when they divide their house, they shall divide their possessions equally, [the slave woman shall take] most of the children, with the male slave [taking] one child.
§28c	If the father and mother refuse (to do so), ²⁴ they shall separate her from him. ²⁵		§34 If a male slave pays a brideprice for a woman and takes her as his wife, no one shall free her from slavery. ²⁶
§XX	(= late version of §28) [Too broken for connected translation.]		§XXVI (= late version of §32 or 34) If a male slave [..., and takes] her [in] ma[rriage...]
§XXI	[Too broken for connected translation]		§35 If a herdsman ²⁸ [takes]elopes with a free woman [in marriage] and does not pay a brideprice for her, she will become a slave for ²⁹ (only) 3 years. ³⁰
§29	If a daughter has been betrothed (lit. bound) to a man, and he pays a brideprice ²⁶ for her,

¹⁵ So the OH manuscript. The NH manuscript substitutes: "shall pay one year's wages: 100 shekels of silver for a man, 50 shekels of silver for a woman."

¹⁶ Although the Hittite wording cannot support the translation "brings impurity into a vessel or vat," yet the act referred to must be urinating or in some other manner defiling the vessel and its contents.

¹⁷ Another manuscript reads "[the victim] ta[kes] 3 shekels of silver."

¹⁸ So the OH manuscript. The NH manuscript has: "for the palace."

¹⁹ Another manuscript reads: "The victim [takes three shekels of silver]."

²⁰ Another manuscript reads: "divorces."

²¹ I.e., she shall be paid for the number of children she has borne?

²² Variant: "and he/she has a son."

²³ Another manuscript reads: "As soon as (kusšan) he runs off ... they (i.e., the parents) shall compensate ..."

²⁴ Another manuscript reads: "But if it is not the wish of the father and mother."

²⁵ Another manuscript adds: "who runs off with her."

²⁶ Same verb (hulle-) as in §173a.

²⁷ Another manuscript has a singular verb.

²⁸ So the OH manuscript. The NH manuscript substitutes: "If a steward or a herdsman."

²⁹ Or, less likely: "after." See §175.

³⁰ So the OH manuscript. NH reads: "If a steward or a herdsman elopes with a free woman and does not pay a brideprice for her, she will

- §36 If a slave pays a brideprice for a free young man and acquires him as a son-in-law, no one shall free him from slavery.
- §37 If anyone elopes with a woman, and a group of supporters goes after them, if 3 or 2 men are killed, there shall be no compensation: "You (singular) have become a wolf."
- §38 If persons are engaged in a lawsuit, and some supporter goes to them, if a litigant becomes furious and strikes the supporter, so that he dies, there shall be no compensation.
- §XXXII (= late version of §38) If a person [...], and if/when [a supporter(?) ...] and he/she becomes angry [...], and he/she dies, [if(?) ...], and he/she dies, [...].
- §39 But if he holds another person's land, he shall perform the šahhan-services entailed by it. [But if] he refuses(?)³¹ [the šahhan-obligation,] he shall relinquish the land: he shall not sell it.
- §XXXIII (= late version of §39) If [anyone holds] vacated [land], he shall work [it,] and not [...]
- §40 If a man who has a TUKUL-obligation defaults, and a man owing šahhan-services has stepped (in his place), the man owing šahhan-services shall say: "This is my TUKUL-obligation, and this other is my obligation for šahhan-services." He shall secure for himself a sealed deed concerning the land of the man having the TUKUL-obligation, he shall hold the TUKUL-obligation and perform the šahhan-services. But if he refuses the TUKUL-obligation, they will declare the land to be that of a man having a TUKUL-obligation who has defaulted,³² and the men of the village will work it.³³ If the king gives an arnuwalaš-man, they will give him land, and he will become a TUKUL-(man).
- §XXX (= late version of §40) If a free man [defaults], and a man owing šahhan-services [has stepped in his place, the man owing šahhan-services shall declare: "This is my [...], and this other is [my] obligation for šahhan-services." He shall secure for himself a sealed deed concerning [the land of the man having the ...-obligation, he shall ... the ...-obligation] and perform [the šahhan-services. But if he refuses the ...-obligation, they will declare the land] vacated, [and the men of the village will work it]. If the king [gives an arnuwala-man], they will give [him - land, and he will become a ...-(man)].
- §41 If a man owing šahhan-services defaults, and a man having a TUKUL-obligation has stepped in his place, the man having the TUKUL-obligation shall say: "This is my TUKUL-obligation, and this other is obligation for šahhan-services." He shall secure for himself a sealed deed concerning the land of the man owing šahhan-services. He shall hold the TUKUL-obligation and perform the šahhan-services. But if he refuses (to do) the šahhan-services, they will take for the palace the land of the man owing šahhan-services. And the obligation for šahhan-services shall cease.
- §XXXI (= late version of §41) [See §41 for probable translation.]
- §42 If anyone hires a person, and that person goes on a military campaign³⁴ and he is killed, if the hire has been paid, there shall be no compensation. But if the hire has not been paid, the hirer shall give one slave.³⁵
- §43 If a man is crossing a river with his ox, and another man pushes him off (the ox's tail), seizes the tail of the ox, and crosses the river, but the river carries off the owner of the ox, (the dead man's heirs) shall take that man (who pushes him off).
- §44a If anyone shoves a man into a fire, so that he dies, (the guilty party) shall give one person (lit. head) a son in return.
- §44b If anyone performs a purification ritual on a person, he shall dispose of the remnants (of the ritual) in the incineration dumps. But if he disposes of them in someone's house,³⁶ it is sorcery (and) a case for the king.
- §XXXIV (= late version of §44b?) ... and he shall make it ritually pure again. If in the house anything goes wrong, he shall make it pure again. And he shall make compensation for whatever is lost.
- §45 If anyone finds implements, [he shall bring] them back to their owner. He (the owner) will reward him. But if (the finder) does not give them (back), he shall be considered a thief.
- §XXXV (= late version of §§45 and 71) If anyone finds implements or an ox, a sheep, a horse, (or) an ass, he shall drive it back to its owner, and (the owner) will lead it away. But if he cannot find its owner, he shall secure witnesses (that he is only maintaining custody).

become a slave for (only) 3 years."

³¹ One NH manuscript has "releases," while another has "casts off," "rejects."

³² A later manuscript reads "they declare the land of the TUKUL-man vacant."

³³ A later manuscript reads "men will work it for the village."

³⁴ Or: "on a (business) trip."

³⁵ A later manuscript adds: "And as hire he shall pay 12 shekels of silver. As the hire of a woman he shall pay 6 shekels of silver."

³⁶ Another manuscript reads: "on someone's land or house."

- Afterwards (when) its owner finds it, he shall produce it according to the law — carry off in full what was lost. But if he does not secure witnesses, and afterwards its owner finds it (in his possession), he shall be considered a thief,³⁷ and he shall make threefold compensation.
- §46 If in a village someone holds land (lit. fields) as an inheritance share, if the [larger part of] the land has been given to him/her, (s)he shall render the luzzi-services. But if the sm[aller part] (of) the land [has been given] to him/her, (s)he shall not render the luzzi-services: they shall render them from the house of his/her father.³⁷ If an heir cuts out for himself new(?) idle land, or the men of the village give land to him/her (in addition to his inherited land), (s)he shall render the luzzi-services (on the new land).
- §XXXVIII (= late version of §46) If anyone holds land and obligation to perform šahhan-services as an inheritance share in a village, if the land was given him in its entirety, he shall render the luzzi-services. If the land was not given him in its entirety, but only a small portion was given to him, he shall not render the luzzi-services. They shall render them from his father's estate. If the land of the heir is vacated, and the men of the village give him (other public) land, he shall render the luzzi-services.
- §47a If anyone holds land by a royal grant, [he shall] not [have to render] šahhan- and luzzi-services. Furthermore, the king shall provide him with food at royal expense.³⁸
- §47b If anyone buys all the land of a man having a TUKUL-obligation, he shall render the luzzi-services. But if he buys only the largest portion of the land, he shall not render the luzzi-services. But if he carves out for himself new idle land, or the men of the village give (him land), he shall render the luzzi-services.
- §XXXVI (= late version of §47a) If anyone holds land by a royal grant, he shall perform the luzzi-services. But if the king exempts him, he shall not perform the luzzi-services.
- §XXXVII (= late version of §47b) If anyone buys all the land of a TUKUL-man, and the (former) owner of the land dies, (the new owner) shall perform whatever (šahhan-services) the king determines. But if the (former) owner is still living, or (there is) an estate of the (former) owner of the land, whether in that country or another country, he shall not perform the šahhan-services.
- §XXXIXa (= late version of §47) If anyone holds land by a royal grant, he shall perform the luzzi-services devolving on the land. If they exempt him from the palace, he shall not render the luzzi-services.
- §XXXIXb If anyone buys all the land of a TUKUL-man, they shall ask the king, and he shall render whatever luzzi-services the king says. If he buys in addition someone (else)'s land, he shall not render the luzzi-services (of that). If the land is vacated, or the men of the village give him (other land), he shall perform the luzzi-services.
- §48 A hipparaš-man renders the luzzi-services. Let no one transact business with a hipparaš-man. Let no one buy his child, his land, (or) his vineyard(s). Whoever transacts business with a hipparaš-man shall forfeit his purchase price, and the hipparaš-man shall take back whatever he sold.
- §XL (= late version of §48) (Even) if a hipparaš-man renders the luzzi-services, let no one transact business with a hipparaš-man. Let no one buy his child, his land (or) his vineyard(s). Whoever transacts business with a hipparaš-man shall forfeit his purchase price, and the hipparaš-man [shall take] back whatever he sold.
- §49 [If] a hipparaš-man steals, there will be no compensation. But [if] (there is) a body which represents him, only that body shall give compensation. If they (i.e., the hipparaš-men) [were] to have to give (compensation for) theft, they would all have been dishonest, or would have become thieves. This one would have seized that one, and that one this one. [They] would have overturned the king's authority(?).
- §XLI (= late version of §49) [If] a hipparaš-man steals, they will impose upon him no [compensation, or else a body which represents him] will [make compensation.] If [the hipparaš-men had been required ...] [Continuation broken away.]
- §50 The ... [man] who ...-s in Nerik, Arinna or Ziplanta, and he who is a priest in any town — their houses are exempt, and their associates render the luzzi-services. In Arinna when the eleventh month arrives, [the house of him] at whose gate an eyan (tree or pole) is erected is likewise (exempt).
- §51 Formerly the house of a man who became a weaver in Arinna was exempt, also his associates and relatives were exempt. Now only his own house is exempt, but his associates and relatives shall render the luzzi-

³⁷ I.e., the principal heir shall inherit the luzzi-obligation.

³⁸ Lit. "shall take bread from his table and give it to him."

- services. In Zippalantiya it is just the same.
- §52 A slave of a Stone House, a slave of a prince (or) a person entitled to wear a reed-shaped emblem(?) — any of such people who hold land among TUKUL-men, shall render the luzzi-services.
- §53 If a man having a TUKUL-obligation and his associate live together, if they have a falling out, they shall divide their household. If there are on their land 10 persons (lit. heads), the man having a TUKUL-obligation shall receive 7 and his associate 3. They shall divide the cattle and sheep on their land in the same ratio. If anyone holds a royal grant by tablet, if they divide old land, the man having a TUKUL-obligation shall take 2 parts, and his associate shall take one part.
- §54 Formerly, the MANDA troops, the troops of Sala, Tamalki, Hatra, Zalpa, Tashiniya and Hemuwa, the bowmen, the carpenters, the chariot warriors and their karuhaleš-men did not render the luzzi-services, nor did they perform šahhan-services.
- §55 When (a delegation of) Hittites, men owing šahhan-services, came, they did reverence to the father of the king, and said: "No one pays us a wage. They say to us: 'You are men required to perform your jobs as a šahhan-service!'" The father of the king [stepped] into the assembly and declared under his seal: "You must continue to perform šahhan-services just like your colleagues."³⁹
- §56 None of the coppersmiths is exempt from participating in ice procurement,⁴⁰ construction of fortresses and royal roads, or from harvesting vineyards. The gardeners render the luzzi-services in all the same kinds of work.
- §57 If anyone steals a bull — if it is a weanling calf, it is not a "bull"; if it is a yearling calf, it is not a "bull"; if it is a 2-year-old bovine, that is a "bull." Formerly they gave 30 cattle. But now he shall give 15 cattle: 5 two-year-olds, 5 yearlings and 5 weanlings. He shall look to his house for it.
- §58 If anyone steals a stallion — if it is a weanling, it is not a "stallion"; if it is a yearling, it is not a "stallion"; if it is a two-year-old, that is a "stallion." They used to give 30 horses. But now he shall give 15 horses: 5 two-year-olds, 5 yearlings and 5 weanlings. He shall look to his house for it.
- §59 If anyone steals a ram, they used to give 30 sheep. Now he shall give [15] sheep: he shall give 5 ewes, 5 wethers and 5 lambs. And he shall look to his house for it.
- §60 If anyone finds a bull and castrates it, (when) its owner claims it, (the finder) shall give 7 cattle: 2 two-year-olds, 3 yearlings, and 2 weanlings. He shall look to his house for it.
- §61 If anyone finds a stallion and castrates it, (when) its owner claims it, (the finder) shall give 7 horses: 2 two-year-olds, 3 yearlings, and 2 weanlings. He shall look to his house for it.
- §62 If anyone finds a ram and castrates it, (when) its owner claims it, (the finder) shall give 7 sheep: 2 ewes, 3 wethers, and 2 (sexually) immature sheep. He shall look to his house for it.
- §63 If anyone steals a plow ox,⁴¹ formerly they gave 15 cattle, but now he shall give 10 cattle: 3 two-year-olds, 3 yearlings, and 4 weanlings. He shall look to his house for it.
- §64 If anyone steals a draft horse, its disposition is the same.⁴²
- §65 If anyone steals a trained he-goat or a trained deer or a trained mountain goat,⁴² their disposition is the same as of the theft of a plow ox.⁴³
- §66 If a plow ox, a draft horse, a cow, or a mare⁴⁴ strays into another corral, if a trained he-goat, a ewe, or a wether strays into (another) pen, and its owner finds it, he shall take it back according to the law in full. He shall not have (the pen's owner) arrested as a thief.
- §67 If anyone steals a cow, they used to give 12 oxen. Now he shall give 6 oxen;⁴⁵ he shall give 2 two-year-old oxen, 2 yearling oxen, and 2 weanlings. He shall look to his house for it.
- §68 If anyone steals a mare, its disposition is the same (i.e., 2 two-year-olds, 2 yearlings and 2 weanlings).
- §69 If anyone steals either a ewe or a wether, they used to give 12 sheep, but now he shall give 6 sheep: he shall give 2 ewes, 2 wethers and 2 (sexually) immature sheep. He shall look to his house for it.
- §70 If anyone steals an ox, a horse, a mule, or an ass,⁴⁶ (when) its owner claims it, [he shall take] it according to the law in full. In addi-

³⁹ Presumably only a delegation of the men subject to the HKU-obligation appeared before the king.

⁴⁰ Post-OH manuscripts omit "ice procurement."

⁴¹ Lit., "is this very (same)."

⁴² I.e., decoys used by hunters.

⁴³ A later copy incorrectly substitutes "its compensation is the same as that for a he-goat."

⁴⁴ NH text: "jenny."

⁴⁵ A later copy adds: "Now he shall give 6 oxen."

- tion (the thief) shall give to him twice/double. He shall look to his house for it.
- §71 If anyone finds a (stray) ox, a horse, (or) a mule,⁴⁶ he shall drive it to the king's gate. If he finds it in the country, they shall present it to the elders. (The finder) shall harness it (i.e., use it while it is in his custody). When its owner finds it, he shall take it according to the law in full, but he shall not have him (sc. the finder) arrested as a thief. But if (the finder) does not present it to the elders, he shall be considered a thief."
- §72 If an ox is found dead on someone's property, the property-owner shall give 2 oxen. He shall look to his house for it.
- §73 If anyone ...s a living ox, that is the same as (a case) of theft.
- §74 If anyone breaks the horn or leg of an ox, he shall take that (ox) for himself and give an ox in good condition to the owner of the (injured) ox. If the owner of the ox says: "I will take my own ox," he shall take his ox, and (the offender) shall pay 2 shekels of silver.
- §75 If anyone hitches up an ox, a horse, a mule or an ass, and it dies, [or] a wolf devours [it], or it gets lost, he shall give it according to the law in full. But if he says: "It died by the hand of a god," he shall take an oath (to that effect).
- §76 If anyone impresses an ox, a horse, a mule or an ass, and it dies at his place, he shall bring it and shall pay its rent also.
- §77a If anyone strikes a pregnant cow, so that it miscarries, he shall pay 2 shekels of silver. If anyone strikes a pregnant horse, so that it miscarries, he shall pay 3⁴⁶ shekels of silver.
- §77b If anyone blinds the eye of an ox or an ass, he shall pay 6 shekels of silver. He shall look to his house for it.
- §78 If anyone rents an ox and then puts on it a leather ... or a leather ..., and its owner finds it, he shall give 50 liters⁴⁷ of barley.
- §79 If oxen enter (another man's) field,⁴⁷ and the field's owner finds (them), he may hitch them up for one day until the stars come out. Then he shall drive them back to their owner.
- §80 If any (shepherd) throws a sheep to a wolf, its owner shall take the meat, but he (the shepherd) shall take the sheepskin.
- §81 If anyone steals a fattened pig, they used to pay 40 shekels of silver. But now he shall pay 12 shekels of silver. He shall look to his house for it.
- §82 If anyone steals a pig of the courtyard, he shall pay 6 shekels of silver. He shall look to his house for it.
- §83 If anyone steals a pregnant sow, he shall pay 6 shekels of silver, and they shall count the piglets: for each 2 piglets he shall give 50 liters of barley. He shall look to his house for it.
- §84 If anyone strikes a pregnant sow a lethal blow, its (i.e., the case's) settlement disposition is exactly the same.
- §85 If anyone cuts out a piglet and steals it, he shall give 100 liters of barley.
- §86 If a pig enters a grain-heap, a field or a garden, and the owner of the grain-heap, field (or) garden strikes it a lethal blow, he shall give it back to its owner. If he doesn't give (it back), he shall be considered a thief.
- §87 If anyone strikes the dog of a herdsman a lethal blow, he shall pay 20 shekels of silver. He shall look to his house for it.
- §88 If anyone strikes the dog of a dog trainer (or: hunter?) a lethal blow, he shall pay 12 shekels of silver. He shall look to his house for it.
- §89 If anyone strikes a dog of the enclosure(?) a lethal blow, he shall pay one shekel of silver.
- §90 If a dog devours lard, and the owner of the lard finds (the dog), he shall kill it and retrieve the lard from its stomach. There will be no compensation (for the dog).
- §91 [If] anyone [steals bees] in a swarm, [formerly] they paid [... shekels of silver], but now he shall pay 5 shekels of silver. He shall look to his house for it.
- §92 [If] anyone steals [2] or 3 bee hives, formerly (the offender) would have been exposed to bee-sting. But now he shall pay 6 shekels of silver. If anyone steals a bee-hive, if there are no bees in the hive, he shall pay 3 shekels of silver.
- §93 If they seize a free man at the outset, before he enters the house, he shall pay 12 shekels of silver. If they seize a slave at the outset, before he enters the house, he shall pay 6 shekels of silver.
- §94 If a free man burglarizes a house,⁴⁷ he shall pay only according to the law in full. Formerly they paid 40 shekels of silver as (fine) for the theft, but now [he shall pay] 12 shekels of silver. If he steals much, they will impose much upon him. If he steals little, they shall impose little upon him. He shall look to his house for it.
- §95 If a slave burglarizes a house, he shall pay only according to the law in full. He shall pay six shekels of silver for the theft. He⁴⁸ shall disfigure/mutilate the nose and ears of the slave and they will give him back to his owner. If he steals much, they will impose much upon him; if he steals little, they will impose little upon him. [If] his owner says: "I will make compensation for him," then he shall make it. But [if] he refuses, he shall lose that slave.	x Exod 22:5 y Exod 22:4	plum(?) tree, he shall pay [... shekels] of silver. He shall look to his house for it.

⁴⁶ A NH manuscript reads: 2.⁴⁷ Hittite: 1 PARISU.

§96 If a free man breaks into a grain storage pit, and finds grain in the storage pit, he shall fill the storage pit with grain and pay 12 shekels of silver. He shall look to his house for it.		§105 [If] anyone sets [fire] to a field, and (the fire) catches a fruit-bearing vineyard, if a vine, an apple tree, a pear(?) tree or a plum tree burns,⁴⁹ he shall pay 6 shekels of silver for each tree. He shall re-plant [the planting]. And he shall look to his house for it. If it is a slave, he shall pay 3 shekels of silver (for each tree).
§97 If a slave breaks into a grain storage pit, and finds grain in the storage pit, he shall fill the storage pit with grain and pay 6 shekels of silver. He shall look to his house for it.		§106 If anyone carries embers into his field, catches(?) a fruit-bearing (one), and ignites the field,⁵⁰ he who sets it (i.e., the fire [neuter]) shall himself take the burnt-over field. He shall give a good field to the owner of the (burnt-over) field, and he will reap it.
§98 If a free man sets fire to a house, he shall rebuild [the house]. And whatever perished in the house — whether it is persons, [cattle or sheep], it is not ...		§107 If a person lets (his) sheep into a productive vineyard, and ruins it, if it is fruit bearing, he shall pay 10 shekels of silver for each 3,600 square meters.⁴⁹ []⁵⁰ But if it is bare, he shall pay 3 shekels of silver.
§99 If a slave sets fire to a house, his owner shall make compensation for him, and they shall disfigure the slave's nose and ears and return him to his owner. But if (the owner) will not make compensation, he shall forfeit that slave.		§108 If anyone steals vine branch(es) from a fenced-in vineyard, if (he steals) 100 vines/(fruit) trees, he shall pay 6 shekels of silver. He shall look to his house for it. But if (the vineyard) is not fenced in, and he steals vine branch(es), he shall pay 3 shekels of silver.
§100 If anyone sets fire to a shed, he shall feed his (sc. the owner's) cattle and bring them through to the following spring. He shall give back the shed. If there was no straw in it, he shall (simply) rebuild the shed.		§109 If anyone cuts off fruit trees from their irrigation ditch, if (there are) 100 trees, he shall pay 6 shekels of silver.
§101 If anyone steals a vine, a vine branch, a ..., or an onion/garlic, formerly [they paid] one shekel of silver for one vine and one shekel of silver for a vine branch, one shekel of silver [for one karpina, one] shekel of silver for one clove of garlic. And they shall strike a spear on his [...] [Formerly] they proceeded so. But now if he is a free man, he shall pay 6 shekels [of silver]. But if he is a slave, he shall pay 3 shekels of silver.		§110 If anyone steals clay from a pit, [however much] he steals, he shall give the same amount in addition.
§102 [If] anyone steals wood from a [...] pond, [if] he steals [one talent (= 30.78 kg) of wood], he shall pay 3 shekels of silver; if he steals 2 talents (= 61.56 kg) of wood, [he shall pay] 6 shekels of silver; if he steals [3] talents (= 92.34 kg) of wood, it becomes a case for the king's court.		§111 [If] anyone forms clay for [an image] (for magical purposes), it is sorcery (and) a case for the king's court.
§103 [If] anyone steals plants, if it is 0.25 square meters [of planting], he shall re-plant it and [give] one shekel of silver. [If it is 0.5] square meters of planting, he shall re-plant it and pay 2 shekels of silver.		§112 [If] they give [to an arnuwala-man] the land of a man having a TUKUL-obligation who has disappeared, [for 3 years] they perform no [šahhan-services], but in the fourth year he begins to perform šahhan-services and joins the men having TUKUL-obligations.
§104 [If] anyone cuts down a pear(?) tree or		§113 [If] anyone cuts down a vine, he shall take the cut-down [vine] for himself and give to the owner of the vine (the use of) a good vine. (The original owner of the cut-down vine) shall gather fruit from (the new vine) [until] his own vine recovers. ...
		[§114 and 118 too broken for translation. §§115-117 lost in a lacuna]
		§119 If anyone [steals] a duck (lit. pond bird) trained (as a decoy) [or] a mountain goat trained (as a decoy), [formerly] they paid [40] shekels of silver, but now [he shall pay]

⁴⁸ Another manuscript reads: "They."

⁴⁹ Hittite: 1 IKU, which equals 30 gipešsar.

⁵⁰ Two late manuscripts add: "He shall look to his house for it."

[§114 and 118 too broken for translation. §§115-117 lost in a lacuna]

§119 If anyone [steals] a duck (lit. pond bird) trained (as a decoy) [or] a mountain goat trained (as a decoy), [formerly] they paid [40] shekels of silver, but now [he shall pay]

- 12 shekels [of silver]. He shall look [to his house for it].
- §120 If anyone steals ...-ed birds [...], if there are 10 birds, he shall pay one shekel [of silver].
- §121 If some free man steals a plow, and its owner finds it, (the owner) shall put [(the offender's) neck] upon the ..., and [he shall be put to death] by the oxen. So they proceeded formerly. But now he shall pay 6 shekels of silver. He shall look to his house for it. If it is a slave, [he shall pay] 3 shekels of silver.
- §122 If anyone steals a wagon with all its accessories, initially they paid one shekel of silver, [but now] he shall pay [... shekels of silver]. He shall look [to his] house [for it].
- §123 If [anyone steals a ..., Now he shall pay] 3 shekels of silver. He shall look to his house for it.
- §124 If anyone steals a ... tree, he shall pay 3 shekels of silver. He shall look to his house for it. If anyone loads a wagon, [leaves] it in his field, and someone steals (it), he shall pay 3 shekels of silver. He shall look to his house for it.
- §125 If anyone steals a wooden water trough, he shall pay [...] + one shekel of silver. If anyone steals a leather ... or a leather ..., he shall pay one shekel of silver.
- §126 If anyone steals a wooden ... in the gate of the palace, he shall pay 6 shekels of silver. If anyone steals a bronze spear in the gate of the palace, he shall be put to death. If anyone steals a copper pin, he shall give 25 liters of barley. If anyone steals the threads (or strands of wool) of one bolt of cloth, he shall give one bolt of woolen cloth.
- §127 If anyone steals a door in a quarrel, he shall replace everything that may get lost in the house, and he shall pay 40 shekels of silver. He shall look to his house for it.
- §128 If anyone steals bricks, however many he steals, he shall give the same number a second time over. If [anyone] steals stones from a foundation, for 2 (such) stones he shall give 10 stones. If anyone steals a stela or a ... stone, he shall pay 2 shekels of silver.
- §129 If anyone steals a leather ..., a leather ..., a [...], or a bronze bell(?) <of> a horse or a mule, formerly they paid 40 shekels of silver, but now [he shall pay] 12 shekels of silver. He shall look to his house for it.
- §130 If anyone steals [...] of an ox or a horse, [he shall pay ... shekels of silver.] He shall look to his house for it.
- §131 If [anyone steals] a leather harness(?), he shall pay 6 shekels of silver. [He shall look to his house for it.]
- §132 If a free man [steals ..., he shall pay] 6 shekels of silver. [He shall look to his house for it.] If he is a slave, [he shall pay 3 shekels of silver.]
- §133 If a free man [steals ...], he shall pay [...] shekels [of silver]. He shall look to his house for it. If he is a slave, he shall pay ... shekels of silver.]
- §142 [If] anyone drives [...], ... anyone steals] its wheel(s), he shall give 25 liters of barley [for each] wheel. [If he is a slave, he shall give ... of barley] for each wheel.
- §143 If a free man [steals] copper shears(?) [or] a copper nail file(?), he shall pay 6 shekels of silver. [He shall look to] his house [for it]. If it is a slave, he shall pay 3 shekels of silver.
- §144 If a barber gives copper [...] to his associate, and (the latter) ruins them, he shall give [them] according to the law in full. If anyone cuts fine cloth [on/with] a hanzan, he shall pay 10 shekels of silver. If anyone cuts [...], he shall pay 5 shekels of silver.
- §145 If anyone builds an ox barn, (his employer) shall pay him 6 shekels of silver. [If] he leaves out [...], he shall forfeit his wage.
- §146a If anyone offers a house, a village, a garden or a pasture for sale, and another goes and pre-empts(?) him, and offers (lit. makes) a purchase price instead of (lit. upon) the (first) purchase price, as a fine for his offence he shall pay 40 shekels of silver, and buy (the items) [from the person] at the original prices.
- §146b⁵¹ [If] anyone offers a [...] for sale, and another pre-[empts(?)], for his offence he shall pay 10 shekels of silver. He shall buy at the original prices.
- §147 [If] anyone offers an unskilled person for sale, and another person pre-empts(?), as the fine for his offence he shall pay 5 shekels of silver.
- §148 [If] anyone [offers] an ox, a horse, a mule or an ass [for sale], and another person pre-empts(?), as the fine for his offence he shall pay ... shekels of silver.
- §149 If anyone sells a trained person, and (afterwards, before delivery) says: "He has died," but his (new) owner tracks him down, he shall take him for himself, and in addition (the seller) shall give 2 persons (lit. heads) to him. He shall look to his house for it.
- §150 If a man hires himself out for wages, (his employer) [shall pay ... shekels of silver] for [one month. If a woman] hires herself out for wages, (her employer) [shall pay ... shekels]

⁵¹ §146b is omitted in the post-OH manuscripts.

for one month. §151 If anyone rents a plow ox, [he shall pay] one shekel [of silver] for one month. [If] anyone rents a [...], he shall pay] a half shekel of silver for one month. §152 If anyone rents a horse, a mule or an ass, he shall pay one shekel of silver [for one month]. §157⁵² If a bronze axe^c weighs 1.54 kg,⁵³ its rent shall be one shekel of silver for one month. If a copper axe weighs 0.77 kg, its rent shall be ½ shekel of silver for one month. If a bronze tapulli-tool weighs 0.5 kg, its rent shall be ½ shekel of silver for one month. §158a If a (free) man hires himself out for wages, to bind sheaves, load them on wagons, deposit them in barns, and clear the threshing floors, his wages for 3 months shall be 1,500 liters of barley (= 3.75 shekels of silver). §158b If a woman hires herself out for wages in the harvest season, her wages shall be 600 liters of barley (= 1 shekel of silver) for 3 months' work.⁵⁴ §159 If anyone hitches up a team of oxen for one day, its rent shall be 25 liters of barley. §160a If a smith makes a copper box weighing 1½ minas, his wages shall be 5,000 liters of barley (= 12.5 shekels of silver). §160b If he makes a bronze axe weighing 2 minas, his wages shall be 50 liters of wheat (= 0.33 shekel of silver). §161 If he makes a copper axe weighing one mina, his wages shall be 50 liters of barley (= 0.125 shekels of silver). §162a If anyone diverts an irrigation ditch, he shall pay one shekel of silver. If anyone stealthily taps (water from) an irrigation ditch, he/it is ...ed. If he takes (water at a point) below (the other's branch), it is his (to use). §162b [If] anyone takes [...], whosoever [...] he prepares, [...]. [If] anyone [...] sheep from a pasture, [...] will be] the compensation, and he shall give its hide and meat. §163 If anyone's animals go loco (lit. are made divine),⁵⁵ and he performs a purification ritual upon them, and drives them back home, and he puts the mud(?) (used in the ritual) on the mud pile(?), but doesn't tell his colleague, so that the colleague doesn't know, and (the colleague) drives his own animals there, and they die, there will be compensa-	z 2 Kgs 6:5 on Deut 22:9 46 Deut 19:14; 27:17 cc Deut 19:14; 27:17	tion. §164 If anyone goes (to someone's house) to impress (something), starts a quarrel, and breaks either the sacrificial bread or the libation vessel, §165 he shall give one sheep, 10 loaves of bread, and one jug of ... beer, and reconsecrate his house. Until [a year's] time has passed he shall keep away from his house. §166 If anyone sows (his own) seed on top of (another man's) seed,⁵⁶ his neck shall be placed (lit. come to rest) upon a plow. They shall hitch up 2 teams of oxen: they shall turn the faces of one team one way and the other team the other. Both the offender and the oxen will be put to death, and the party who first sowed the field shall reap⁵⁶ it for himself. This is the way they used to proceed. §167 But now they shall substitute one sheep for the man and 2 sheep for the oxen. He shall give 30 loaves of bread and 3 jugs of ... beer, and re-consecrate (the land?). And he who sowed the field first shall reap it. §168 If anyone violates the boundary of a field⁵⁶ and takes⁵⁷ one furrow off (the neighbor's field), the owner of the field shall cut 0.25 square meters of field (from the other's field), the owner of the violated field shall cut off a strip of his neighbor's land 0.25 meters deep along their common boundary and take it for himself. He who violated the boundary shall give one sheep (= 1 shekel), 10 loaves (= ca. 0.1 shekel), and one jug of ... beer and re-consecrate the field. §169 If anyone buys a field and violates the boundary,⁵⁸ he shall take a thick loaf and break it to the Sungod [and] say: "My scales have been flowing into the ground." And he shall speak thus: "Sungod, Stormgod. There is no quarrel." §170 If a free man kills a snake, and speaks another's name, he shall pay 40 shekels of silver. If it is a slave, he alone shall be put to death. §171 If a mother removes her son's garment, she is disinheriting her son. If her son comes back into (her house, i.e., is reinstated), (s)he takes her door and removes it, (s)he takes her ... and removes it, she (thus) takes them (i.e., the sons) back; she makes her son her
---	--	--

⁵² The OH manuscript q shows that there was no gap in which four additional laws (§§153-156 in Hrozný's numbering) might fit. We preserve the traditional numbering of §§157-200 for convenience of reference.

⁵³ So the OH manuscript. The NH manuscripts describe lighter axes, for the same rent, yielding a higher rate of rent per weight.

⁵⁴ A NH manuscript has: "He (the employer) shall give 600 liters of barley for two months' (work)."

⁵⁵ Others (e.g., Friedrich 1959:75) have translated this verb "are smitten by a god." The translation "are branded" (Goetze 1969:195) is impossible.

⁵⁶ A later manuscript reads "take."

⁵⁷ A later manuscript reads "drives."

son again. §172 If anyone preserves a free man's life in a year of famine, (the saved man) shall give a substitute for himself. If it is a slave, he shall pay 10 shekels of silver. §173a If anyone rejects a judgment of the king, his house will become a heap of ruins. If anyone rejects a judgment of a magistrate, they shall cut off his head.⁵⁸ §173b If a slave rebels against⁵⁹ his owner, he shall go into a clay jar. §174 If (when) men are hitting each other, one of them dies, (the other) shall give one slave (lit. head). §175 If either a shepherd or a steward⁶⁰ takes a free woman in marriage, she will become a slave for⁶¹ either two or four years. They shall ... her children, but no one shall seize (their) belts. §176a If anyone keeps a bull outside a corral,⁶² it shall be a case for the king's court. They shall sell (the bull). (A bull is an animal which) is capable of breeding in (its) third year. A plow ox, a ram, (and) a he-goat (are animals which) are capable of breeding in (their) third year. §176b If anyone buys a trained artisan: either a potter, a smith, a carpenter, a leather-worker, a fuller, a weaver, or a maker of leggings, he shall pay 10 shekels of silver. §177 If anyone buys a man trained as an augur(?), he shall pay 25 shekels of silver. If anyone buys an unskilled man or woman, he shall pay 20 shekels of silver. §178 The price of a plow ox is 12 shekels of silver. The price of a bull is 10 shekels of silver. The price of a fullgrown cow is 7 shekels of silver. The price of a yearling plow ox or cow is 5 shekels of silver. The price of a weaned calf is 4 shekels of silver. If the cow is pregnant with a calf, the price is 8 shekels of silver. The price of one calf is 2 (variant: 3) shekels of silver. The price of one stallion, one mare, one male donkey, and one female donkey are the same. §179 If it is a sheep, its price is one shekel of silver. The price of 3 goats is 2 shekels of silver. The price of 2 lambs is one shekel of silver. The price of 2 goat kids is ½ shekel of silver. §180 If it is a draft horse, its price is 20 (variant: 10) shekels of silver. The price of a mule is 40 shekels of silver. The price of a pastured	dd Deut 16:18 ee Exod 21:28-36	horse is 14 (variant: 15) shekels of silver.⁶² The price of a yearling colt is 10 shekels of silver. The price of a yearling filly is 15 shekels of silver. §181 The price of a weaned colt (or) a weaned filly is 4 shekels of silver. The price of 4 minas of copper is one shekel of silver, of one bottle of fine oil is 2 shekels of silver, of one bottle of lard is one shekel of silver, of one bottle of butter/ghee is one shekel of silver, of one bottle of honey is one shekel of silver, of 2 cheeses is one shekel [of silver], of 3 rennets is one shekel of silver. §182 The price of a ... garment is 12 shekels of silver. The price of a fine garment is 30 shekels of silver. The price of a blue wool garment is 20 shekels of silver. The price of an ADUPLI garment is 10 shekels of silver. The price of a tattered(?) garment is 3 shekels of silver. The price of a ... garment is 4 shekels of silver. The price of a sackcloth garment is one shekel of silver. The price of a sheer/thin tunic is 3 shekels of silver. The price of an (ordinary) tunic is [... shekels of silver]. The price [of one] (bolt of) cloth weighing 7 minas is [... shekels of silver]. The price of one large (bolt of) linen is 5 shekels of silver. §183 The price of 150 liters of wheat is one shekel of silver. The price of 200 liters [of barley is ½ shekel of silver.] The price of 50 liters of wine is ½ shekel of silver, of 50 liters of [...] is ... shekels of silver. The price] of 3,600 square meters of irrigated(?) field is 3 [shekels of silver. The price] of 3,600 square meters of ... field is 2 shekels of silver. [The price] of a (field) adjoining(?) it is one shekel of silver. §184 This is the tariff, as it was ...ed in the city. §185 The price of 3,600 square meters of vineyard is 40 shekels of silver. The price of the hide of a full-grown ox is one shekel of silver. The price of 5 hides of weanling calves is one shekel of silver, of 10 oxhides is 40 shekels of silver, of a shaggy sheepskin is one shekel of silver, of 10 skins of young sheep is one shekel of silver, of 4 goatskins one shekel of silver, 15 sheared(?) goatskins is one shekel of silver, of 20 lambskins is one shekel of silver, of 20 kidskins is one shekel of silver. Whoever buys the meat of 2 fullgrown cattle shall give one sheep. §186 Whoever buys the meat of 2 yearling cattle
---	--	--

⁵⁸ Lit., ara <w> ezzi "exempts/frees himself from."

⁵⁹ "Steward" translates the Sumerogram AGRIG (Akk. abaraku). On this function in Hittite texts see Singer 1984.

⁶⁰ Or, less likely: "after." See §35.

⁶¹ Lit., "dispenses with a bull's corral." See the goring ox cases in Exod 21:28-36.

⁶² For what follows, another manuscript substitutes: "The price of a yearling filly is 15 shekels of silver. The price of a gelding(?) (or) a mare is [...] shekels of silver. The price of 4 minas of copper is one shekel [of silver]."

shall give one sheep. Whoever buys the meat of 5 weanlings shall give one sheep. (Whoever buys) the meat of 10 calves shall give one sheep. (Whoever buys) the meat of 10 sheep shall give one sheep. (Whoever buys) the meat of 20 lambs shall give one sheep. [If] anyone buys the meat of [20] goats, he shall give one sheep.	ffExod 22:18; Lev 20:15-16	have the same mother and their mother, it is not an offence. If brothers sleep with a free (woman), it is not an offence. If father and son sleep with the same female slave or prostitute,⁶⁹ it is not an offence.
§187 If a man has sexual relations⁶³ with a cow,⁶⁴ it is an unpermitted sexual pairing: he will be put to death. They shall conduct him to the king's court (lit. gate). Whether the king orders him killed or spares his life, he shall not appear (personally) before the king (lest he defile the royal person).	ggDeut 22:15; 2 Sam 19:8; Amos 5:10, 12, 15	§195a If a man sleeps with his brother's wife, while his brother is alive, it is an unpermitted sexual pairing.
§188 If a man has sexual relations with a sheep, it is an unpermitted sexual pairing: he will be put to death. They will conduct him [to the] king's [gate].⁶⁵ The king may have him executed, or may spare his life. But he shall not appear before the king.	hh Lev 18:7, 8; 20:11	§195b If a (free) man has a free woman (in marriage) and approaches her daughter (sexually),⁶⁶ it is an unpermitted sexual pairing.
§189 If a man has sexual relations with his own mother,⁶⁶ it is an unpermitted sexual pairing. If a man has sexual relations with (his own) daughter,⁶⁷ it is an unpermitted sexual pairing. If a man has sexual relations with (his own) son,⁶⁵ it is an unpermitted sexual pairing.	ii Gen 19:36; Lev 18	§195c If he has the daughter (in marriage) and approaches her mother or her sister (sexually), it is an unpermitted sexual pairing.
§190 If they appear(?) with the dead — man, woman — it is not an offence. If a man has sexual relations with his step-mother,⁶⁸ it is not an offence. But if his father is still living, it is an unpermitted sexual pairing.	jj Lev 20:13	§196 If anyone's male and female slaves enter into unpermitted sexual pairings, they (sc. the authorities) shall move them elsewhere: they shall settle one in one city and one in another. A sheep shall be offered in place of one and a(nother) sheep in place of the other.
§191 If a free man sleeps with free sisters who have the same mother and their mother⁶⁸ — one in one country and the other in another, it is not an offence. But if it happens in the same location, and he knows (the relationship, the women are related), it is an unpermitted sexual pairing.⁶⁶	kk Lev 18:8; 20:11; 2 Sam 16:21; 20:3	§197 If a man seizes a woman in the mountain(s) (and rapes her), it is the man's offence, but if he seizes her in (her) house, it is the woman's offence: the woman shall die.⁶⁹ If the (woman's) husband (lit. the man) finds them (in the act), he may kill them without committing a crime.
§192 If a man's wife dies, [he may take her] sister [as his wife.]⁷⁰ It is not an offence.⁶⁷	nn Gen 29:30; Ezek 23:4	§198 If he brings them to the palace gate (i.e., the royal court) and says: "My wife shall not die," he can spare his wife's life, (but) he must also spare the lover⁶⁹ and "clothe his head." If he says, "Both of them shall die," they shall "roll the wheel."⁷⁰ The king may have them killed or he may spare them.
§193 If a man has a wife, and the man dies, his brother shall take his widow as wife. (If the brother dies,) his father shall take her. When afterwards his father dies, his (i.e., the father's) brother shall take the woman whom he had.⁶⁸ nn	mm Gen 38; Deut 25:5-10; Ruth	§199 If anyone has sexual relations with a pig (or) a dog,⁷¹ he shall die. He shall bring him to the palace gate (i.e., the royal court). The king may have them (i.e., the human and the animal) killed or he may spare them, but he (the human) shall not approach the king. If an ox leaps on a man (in sexual excitement), the ox shall die; the man shall not die. They shall substitute one sheep in the place of the man and put it to death. If a pig leaps on a man (in sexual excitement), it is not an offence.
§194 If a free man sleeps with slave women who	oo Amos 2:7	§200a If a man has sexual relations (lit. "sins") with ⁶³ Lit., "sins." So also in §§188-190, 199-200.

⁶⁴ See Hoffner 1973; Haase 1976.

⁶⁵ Since the blood relationship is specified here, this is probably not a blanket prohibition of homosexual sex such as in Lev 20:13. See Hoffner 1973.

⁶⁶ One NH manuscript mistakenly adds: "It is not an offence."

⁶⁷ Another version reads: "If a woman's husband dies, his partner shall take his wife (in marriage). It is [not] an offence." See Hoffner 1997b:151f.

⁶⁸ A NH manuscript adds: "There is no offence."

⁶⁹ Cf. MAL A §15 (COS 2.132, below, p. 355).

⁷⁰ A symbolic gesture of uncertain significance.

⁷¹ See Hoffner 1973.

either a horse or a mule,⁷² it is not an offence, but he shall not approach the king, nor shall he become a priest.⁷³ If anyone sleeps with an arnuwalaš-woman, and also sleeps with her mother, it is not an offence. §200b If anyone gives (his) son for training either (as) a carpenter or a smith, a weaver or a leather worker or a fuller, he shall pay 6 shekels of silver as (the fee) for the training. If the teacher makes him an expert, (the student) shall give (to his teacher) one person. Telipinu Edict §49 And a case of murder (lit. blood) is as follows. Whoever commits murder, whatever	ss Deut 19:11-13	the heir himself of the murdered man says (will be done). If he says: "Let him die," he shall die; but if he says: "Let him make compensation," he shall make compensation. But to the king let (him) not (come) at all.⁷⁴ Telipinu Edict §50 (Regarding cases) of sorcery in Hattuša: keep cleaning up (i.e., investigating and punishing) (all) instances (thereof). Whoever in the royal family knows sorcery (i. e., practices it), seize him and deliver him to the king's gate. But it will go badly for that man (C adds: and for his household) who does not deliver him.
--	-------------------------	--

⁷² Perhaps this ancient sexual taboo applied to animals domesticated at that very early period in human history. Equids, domesticated only later, were never included.

⁷³ That is, he has committed no punishable crime, but he has become so defiled by the incident that he may not enter the king's presence or ever become a priest.

REFERENCES

Text: Laws §§1-100 are Series One (CIH 271), while laws §§101-200 are Series Two (CIH 272). Manuscripts of Series One are: A = KBo 6.2 + 19.1 + 22.62 + 22.61 + 19.1a; B = KBo 6.3 + 22.63; C = KBo 6.5; D + E = KBo 6.6 + 6.7; F = KBo 6.8 (F) (+) KUB 13.11 (F?) + KUB 29.15 (F) (+) KBo 19.3 (F) (+) KBo 19.4 (F0); G = KBo 6.9; H (+) I = KUB 13.12 (H) (+) KUB 13.13 (I); I = See H; J = KUB 26.56; K = KUB 29.13; L = KUB 29.14 (L) (+) KBo 12.49 (L?); M = KUB 29.16 + KBo 19.2; N + V = KUB 29.17 (N) + KBo 14.64 (V); O (+) Q = KUB 29.18 (+) KUB 29.20; P = KUB 29.19; R = KBo 6.21; S = KBo 6.22; T = KBo 9.70; U = KUB 40.32; W = KBo 14.65 (+) Bo 88/5; X = KBo 12.48; Y = KBo 19.7; Z = KBo 9.69; AA = KBo 19.5; BB = KBo 22.65. Manuscripts A and M are in OH script; the rest are in NH script. Manuscripts for Series Two are: a = KBo 6.12; b = KUB 29.21 (+) 29.22 (+) 29.23; c = KBo 6.10 + 6.20; d = KBo 6.11; e = KBo 6.13 (+) KUB 13.30; f = KBo 6.14 + 6.18 (+) 6.19; g = KBo 19.6; h = KBo 19.9; i = KBo 6.17; j = KBo 6.16; k = KUB 29.24; l = Bo 92/113; m = Bo 8202; n = KUB 13.15 + KBo 19.7; o = KUB 29.26 (+) 29.27; p = KBo 6.26; q = KBo 14.66 + KUB 48.78; r = 11/p; s = HFAC 5; t = KBo 14.67; u = KUB 29.31; v = KBo 6.15; w = 684/c; x = KBo 9.71 + KUB 29.33 + KUB 13.14 + KUB 13.16; y = KUB 29.34 (+) 29.37; e? = KUB 13.30; z = KBo 22.66; aa = KUB 29.25 + KUB 29.28 + KUB 29.29 + 29.30 + 29.32 + 29.35 + 29.36 + 29.38 + KBo 25.5 + 25.85; bb = KBo 19.8; cc = "Bo 2111"; dd = HFAC 4; ee = VAS 127. Only manuscript aa in Series Two is in the OH script. The standard editions are Friedrich 1959; Imparati 1964; and Hoffner 1997b. Fairly recent translations are: Goetze 1969; Haase 1984; von Schuler 1982; and Hoffner 1997a. General surveys of Hittite law may be found in Güterbock 1954; Hoffner 1963 and 1995.

This page intentionally left blank

C. HIEROGLYPHIC INSCRIPTIONS

This page intentionally left blank

1. "IDEAL PRICES" (2.20)

KARKAMIŠ A2 (+3) (2.20A)¹

J. D. Hawkins

The text comes from the first of a pair of inscribed stone door jambs excavated in situ at the entrance to the cella of the temple of the Storm-God in the lower city at Karkamiš.² Katuwa was the last of a four-generation line of rulers of the city dating approximately to the 10th century BCE,³ and he and his father Suhi (II) left a number of such building inscriptions and much sculpture in the form of relief orthostats decorating building facades.

A recurring theme in such inscriptions is the favor of the gods and the prosperity of the author's reign, one element of which is a statement of ideal prices to emphasize the cheapness of living.⁴ Such statements are found already in inscriptions of Mesopotamian rulers in the early 2nd millennium BCE, and reappear in those of Assurbanipal of Assyria and Nabonidus of Babylon probably as archaisms. Recognition of similar statements in the Hieroglyphic Luwian inscriptions of the early 1st millennium BCE was something of a surprise.

In the Mesopotamian versions of these statements, prices of commodities, above all barley but also oil, wine, wool, etc., are expressed in terms of so-much measure of commodity for one shekel of silver.⁵ The idealized literary character of these statements is clear when they are compared with the more realistic tariffs of prices appended to law codes of Mesopotamia.⁶ The Hittite Laws too contain such tariffs, but their prices may be expressed not in silver shekels but in sheep,⁷ which reflects a standard equivalence 1 sheep = 1 shekel of silver, and probably shows the more primitive, less monetarized Hittite economy.

Katuwa's statement introduced here is repeated by him in another inscription and different context, in a more elaborate form (KARKAMIŠ A 11a)⁸. Other examples are found as far away as the Anatolian plateau, in particular on a partly preserved stele from Aksaray, the work of a certain Kiyakiya, probably to be identified with Kiakki of Sinuhtu deported by Sargon II in 718 BCE.⁹ This is the most detailed such statement known from the Hieroglyphic inscriptions, covering as it does three commodities, instead of simply barley, as at Karkamiš, and it was indeed the appearance of this inscription in 1978 that permitted the identification of these statements, when this new one was compared with the other examples. Thus the logogram for "barley" could be recognized, as well as the hieroglyphic Luwian word for "wine" (matu, cf. Greek methú, Sanskrit madhu, English mead). It is also noteworthy that Karkamiš uses the Assyrian measure the homer (or donkey(-load)), while the more distant Anatolia uses an unknown measure the tiwatali, apparently from the context about 1/3 of the homer.

§1	I am Katuwa the ruler, the Karkamišean Country Lord, the Country Lord Suhi's son.	§6	and he looked on me with a smiling(?) face,
§2	When Tarhunza ¹⁰ gave me my paternal succession,	§7	and it in my good-times brought forth the Grain-God and the Wine-God ¹² in the country.
§3	this Karkamišean Tarhunza had exalted the person neither for my father,	§8	In my good-times for a sheep ten homers (of barley) stood,
§4	nor for my grandfather had he exalted (the person),	§9	and I myself thereupon constructed these temples of Tarhunza for him with goodness.
§5	but for me Katuwa, the Karkamišean Country Lord he exalted the person, ¹¹		(The text concludes with curses designed to protect the foundation and Katuwa's name attached to it)

¹ Hawkins 2000 no. II. 13 (+14).

² Woolley 1952:169f., pls. 34a-37a.

³ Hawkins 2000:76-78.

⁴ Hawkins 1986.

⁵ Hawkins 1986:93f.

⁶ Esp. the Laws of Eshnunna (COS 2.130). See Hawkins 1986:94f.

⁷ See the Hittite Laws, COS 2.19 §§178-186.

⁸ Hawkins 2000 no. II. 9.

⁹ Ibid. no. X. 16.

¹⁰ The Storm-God. See below Azatiwata, COS 2.21, n. 10.

¹¹ "Exalting the person." A common topos in these inscriptions. Cf. MARAŞ 4, §15, COS 2.22A, where I have translated "person" as "image." See also, KULULU 4, §4, COS 2.22B, where it is translated "soul" (§9 there).

¹² For the Grain God and the Wine God as symbols of prosperity, cp. COS 2.21, §§53, 55.

KARKAMIŠ A11a (2.20B)

In this parallel, closely similar passage, Katuwa records:

§7	My lord Tarhunza, Karhuha and Kubaba ¹³ loved me because of my justice,	§10	and in my good-times for a sheep the cost (?) (as) [so many] homers of barley stood,
§8	(not properly understood)	§11	but I myself then constructed the temple with luxury for Karkamišean Tarhunza.
§9	and the Grain-God and the Wine-God for me [they brought forth], ¹³ The regular triad of gods invoked at Karkamiš. Besides Tarhunza, the Storm-God, the god Karhuha is a manifestation of the god known elsewhere in the Hittite world as Runza, the Stag-God, protector of wild animals, Resheph to the Semitic world: see COS 2.21, n. 19. Kubaba, the "Queen of Karkamiš," was the patron goddess of the city, and later passed through Anatolia, through veneration by the Phrygians, to become the Kubēbē/Kubēlē (Cybele) of the Greeks.

AKSARAY (2.20C)

This more recently discovered inscription has a more detailed statement, which provided the key to the understanding of comparable passages.

	[Beginning of text lost]	§6	[x] measures of wine stood.
§1	... Tarhunza prospered the ...,	§7	Because of my justice, I was dear to Tarhunza and all the gods there.
§2	and m[uch] came down from the sky,	§8	And great kings and kings all admired this city.
§3	and much came up from the earth,		(text continues)
§4	and in those years for one sheep 30 measures of barley stood,
§5	20 measures of oil(?) [...]ed,

REFERENCES

Texts: Hawkins 2000 no. II.13 (+ 14), II.9, X.16; (COS 2.20A only): Woolley 1952:169f., pls. 34a-37a. Studies: Hawkins 1986.

2. ROYAL INSCRIPTIONS

AZATIWATA (2.21)

J. D. Hawkins

The Karatepe inscriptions are famous as one of the ancient world's longest bilingual texts. The hilltop fortress of Karatepe was defended by a circuit of walls with two monumental gateways, each decorated with sculptured orthostats and a bilingual version of the same inscription in Phoenician and Hieroglyphic Luwian. The lower North Gate is better preserved with more of its sculpture and inscriptions in situ or just fallen from their plinths; the upper South Gate's stones were largely scattered and the text incomplete.

The site was discovered in 1946 by H. T. Bossert and Halet Çambel, and the main excavations exposing the gateways were rapidly completed, but further research and restoration has continued under Halet Çambel up to the present.¹ Bossert's publication of the bilingual text in a preliminary form was incomplete at the time of his death in 1960, and a final publication by Halet Çambel has appeared recently.²

The inscription is the work of a certain Azatiwata who was apparently a subordinate ruler subject to the royal house of Adana, referred to as the "house of Muksa" (see below, n. 16). He names as his patron the king of Adana, Awariku (see below, n. 11), and seems from his somewhat veiled language to have acted as guardian to Awariku's succession and a powerful regent of the kingdom.

¹ Çambel 1993.

² Çambel 1999.

The date of the buildings, sculptures and inscriptions, which are not necessarily all contemporary, has been much debated.³ The sculptures show features datable to both the 9th and 8th centuries BCE,⁴ while a late date is favored both for the Phoenician⁵ and Hieroglyphic⁶ scripts, and historically a date at the beginning of the 7th century BCE (the reign of Sennacherib in Assyria) looks suitable.⁷ The possible identification of Awariku is relevant here.

The text is both the longest Phoenician and Hieroglyphic inscription; so it is equally important for both languages, quite apart from its bilingual aspect. In general, of course, the Phoenician throws light on the Hieroglyphic, but in some instances the reverse is true. The discovery and publication of the bilingual marks a most important stage in the decipherment of Hieroglyphic Luwian, which was reasonably advanced before its appearance, but has now been set on a sound footing by the translation of the parallel Phoenician (below, 2.31).⁸

§1	I am Azatiwata, ⁹ the Sun-blessed man, Tarhunza's ¹⁰ servant,	a Deut 32:6; 32:18	because of my justice and my wisdom and my goodness.
§2	whom Awariku ¹¹ the Adanawean king promoted. ¹²		§19 And I built strong fortresses [...] on the frontiers,
§3	Tarhunza made me mother and father ^a to Adanawa; ¹³	b Gen 45:8; Ps 109:14; Isa 22:21	§20 where there were bad men, robbers,
§4	and I caused Adanawa to prosper,		§21 who had not served under Muksa's house, ¹⁶
§5	and I extended the Adanawa plain on the one hand towards the west and on the other hand towards the east,	c Josh 10:24; Ps 8:7; 110:2;	§22 and I, Azatiwata, put them under my feet. ^c
§6	and in my days there were to Adanawa all good things, plenty and luxury ,	1 Kgs 5:3; 2 Sam 22:39 (= Ps 18:39); 1 Sam 25:24; Esther 8:3	§23 So I built fortresses in those places,
§7	and I fill the Paharean ¹⁴ granaries,		§24 so that Adanawa might dwell peacefully.
§8	and I made horse upon horse,		§25 And I smote strong fortresses towards the west,
§9	and I made army upon army,		§26 which former kings had not smitten,
§10	and I made shield upon shield, all by Tarhunza and the gods.		§27 who were before me.
§11	So I broke up the proud ,		§28 (So) I, Azatiwata, smote them,
§12	and the evils which were in the land		§29 and I brought them down,
§13	I [removed] out of the land.		§30 and I settled them down towards the east, on my frontiers,
§14	And I blessed my lord's house well. ¹⁵		§31 and so I settled Adanaweans down ... there.
§15	and I did all good things for my lord's family,		§32 In my days I extended the Adanawean frontiers on the one hand towards the west and on the other hand towards the east,
§16	and I made it sit upon its father's throne.		§33 and even in those places which were formerly feared,
§17	[not preserved in Hier. text; Phoen.: "and I established peace with every king."]		§34 where a man fears to go the road,
§18	and every king made me father ^b to himself		§35 so in my days even women walk with spindles. ¹⁷
			§36 In my days there was plenty and luxury and ³ Summarized by Çambel 2000:9-11; Hawkins 1999:44f.

⁴ Winter 1979; Deshayes 1981.

⁵ Peckham 1968:116-119; Röhlig 1999:73-81.

⁶ Hawkins 2000:44 and n. 88, 67f., 460 f.

⁷ Hawkins 1979; Garelli 1981; Desideri and Jasink 1990:133-146.

⁸ Words in italics in the translation are dependent on the Phoen. for their interpretation.

⁹ This name, also spelled Azatiwara, is a normal Luwian compound of aza-, "love," and Tiwar, the Sun-God. The consonantal outline is given most accurately by the Phoen. ²*ziwd* (note that intervocalic d > r is a regular Luwian development), while the vocalization is given by the Hieroglyphic: these combine to indicate Azatiwada (> Azatiwara).

¹⁰ Tarhunza is the usual name of the Hittite-Luwian Storm-God, equated in the bilingual with the Phoen. Ba'al.

¹¹ Awariku has the same name as Urikki, king of Que (Plain Cilicia), named in the inscriptions of Tiglath-pileser III and Sargon II of Assyria (2nd half of the 8th century BCE). He could well be the same person, which would fix the date of the inscriptions, but he could also be a homonymous predecessor of Urikki. See below, COS 2.117A, note 4.

¹² This clause appears to define the position of Azatiwata as a subordinate ruler subject to the kings of Plain Cilicia.

¹³ Adanawa clearly designates the city of Adana, capital of Plain Cilicia (the "Adanawa plain") and seat of the dynasty. The usual Phoen. equivalent is dhnyw, probably to be vocalized danunim, "the Danuna people," apparently a Semitism for the inhabitants of Adana. Phoen. also has ¹*mq* ²*dn* for "plain of Adana."

¹⁴ A city, = Phoen. p^rr, identified as classical Pagri, perhaps an earlier name of Mopsouhestia (Misis): see Bossert 1951:290-294.

¹⁵ This and the following two rather cryptic phrases seem to show that Azatiwata acted as regent and guardian to Awariku's succession when the latter died or disappeared. The whole inscription, however, emphasizes how Azatiwata, though not king in Adana, exercised great power over the kingdom.

¹⁶ Muksa (Phoen. Mps) was at once identified as representing at least some aspects of Mopsos (Maxos) of Greek legend: see Hawkins 1995 with bibliography. It was remarkable to find him in the indigenous record regarded as the founder of the royal house of Adana.

¹⁷ Recognized as a regular literary topos of peace and security. Cf. also Hoffner 1966.

good living, §37 and peacefully dwelt Adanawa and the Adanawa plain. §38 I built this fortress, §39 and to it I put the name Azatiwataya.¹⁸ §40 So Tarhunza and Runza¹⁹ were after me for to build this fortress. §41 [Missing in Hier. South Gate inscription. Fragmentary -46 in North Gate inscription, preserved in Phoen.] §47 and therein (i.e. in Azatiwataya) I caused Tarhunza to dwell, §48 and every river-land²⁰ will begin to honor him: by (?) the year an ox, and at the cutting (?) a sheep and at the vintage a sheep.²¹ §49 Let him bless Azatiwata with health and life,²² §50 and let him be made highly preeminent over all kings! §51 And may Tarhunza the highly blessed and this fortress's gods give to him, to Azatiwata, long days and many years and good abundance,²² §52 and let them give him all victory over all kings! §53 And so let this fortress become (one) of the Grain-God and the Wine-God, §54 and so the nations that dwell in (it). §55 let them become (those) of sheep, oxen, the Grain-God, and the Wine-God!	d Mal 2:5; Prov 3:2 e Pss 72:5, 17; 89:37-38	§56 Much let them beget for us, §57 and much let them multiply, §58 and much let them be in service to Azatiwata and to Muksa's house, by Tarhunza and the gods! §59 If anyone from (among) kings, §60 or (if) he (is) a prince, §61 and to him (there is) a princely name, §62 proclaims this: §63 "I shall delete Azatiwata's name from the gates here, §64 and I shall incise my name",²³ §65 or (if) he is covetous towards this fortress, §66 and blocks up (?) these gates, §67 which Azatiwata made, §68 and proclaims thus: §69 "I shall make the gates my own, §70 and I shall incise my name for myself"; §71 or (if) from covetousness he shall block them up (?), §72 or from badness or from evil he shall block up (?) these gates, §73 may celestial Tarhunza, the celestial Sun, Ea and all the gods delete that kingdom, and that king and that man! §74 Hereafter may Azatiwata's name continue to stand for all ages, §75 as the moon's and the sun's name stands! "
--	--	---

¹⁸ While Azatiwata clearly named his city after himself, the name so strikingly resembles the pre-classical name of the Pamphylian city Aspendos as recorded on its coins, Aspendawc, as to raise the question whether Azatiwata's building programme might have extended as far west as Pamphylia.

¹⁹ Runza (or Runtiya) is the usual Luwian name of the Stag-God, a tutelary deity often represented as supporter of the Storm-God, whose sphere of activity was the countryside and wild animals. The bilingual equates him with Rēp sprm, "Reseph of the Goats" (or "Birds").

²⁰ "River-land" is the usual Hittite expression for an inhabited, cultivated river valley. The problematic Phoen., mskt must be explained by reference to this: Morpurgo Davies and Hawkins 1987:270-272; Röllig 1999:60; Amadasi Guzzo, forthcoming.

²¹ For the seasonal festivals at which a sheep is offered, Phoen. has "ploughing" and "reaping." It is not at all clear that the Hieroglyphic text provides exact equivalents. The second seems certain to be "vintage," and while the first could be "ploughing," "cutting" looks more likely.

²² Hieroglyphic "abundance" is well established, Hawkins 2000:65, and Phoen. ršrt should be interpreted by reference to it, which seems to rule out the translation "old age" (but cf. Röllig 1999:60).

²³ The offense referred to, misappropriation of the monument, is often banned in ancient inscriptions, which seems to imply that it was common.

REFERENCES

Text, Translations and Studies: Hawkins 2000; Bossert 1951; Çambel 1993; 1999; Deshayes 1981; Desideri and Jasink 1990; Garelli 1981; Hawkins 1979; 1995; Hawkins and Orthmann 1980; Peckham 1968; Röllig 1999; Winter 1979.

3. FUNERARY INSCRIPTIONS (2.22)

MARAŞ 4 (2.22A)

J. D. Hawkins

The inscription in Hieroglyphic Luwian is on a fragment of a colossal statue¹ recognizably of a type known from complete but uninscribed examples, notably the figure from Zinçirli, 3 m. high, of a typical neo-Hittite ruler, bearded, with hair in pot-hook curls, wearing a long fringed garment and belt with frontal tassel, sword on hip, holding a long staff of office.² This figure stands on a base of a pair of lions held centrally by a small hero figure,

¹ Hawkins 2000 no. IV.2.

² For an illustration, see e.g. Akurgal 1962 pls. 126-127.

and represents the ruler, deified after death, to receive funerary offerings, a practice referred to in inscriptions.³ Though from Zincirli, it clearly comes from a Karkamiš workshop, and fragments of a closely similar statue and base were found at the latter site.⁴

The Maraş fragment was clearly another such statue but the only inscribed example, the text giving the ruler's self-presentation of his deeds. This belongs in a tradition descending from the Hittite Empire: the last known Hittite king Suppiluliuma II records on a tablet that he made a statue of his late father Tudhaliya IV, inscribed it with his deeds and set it up in a rock sanctuary to receive offerings (see text COS 1.75, ii.4-16).

The author of MARAŞ 4, Halparuntiya II of Gurgum, is identified as a contemporary of the Assyrian king Shalmaneser III, to whom he paid tribute in 853 BCE.⁵ In the next century, the Arameans borrowed this practice of the commemorative inscribed statue when Bar-Rakib king of Sam'al set up and inscribed in Aramaic a statue for his father Panammu II, who had fallen fighting for the Assyrians at the siege of Damascus in 733-732 BCE.⁶

§1 I am Halparuntiya the ruler, Gurgumean King, ⁷ the ruler Muwatali's son. ⁸	"allowed it to themselves (?)," ¹³
§2 In the year in which I smote the city Hirika, ⁹	§10 But I, Halparuntiya "allowed it to myself (?)," ¹⁴ Muwatali's son, Muwizi's great-grandson.
§3 in that year I set up Tarhunza of the Domain. ¹⁰	§11 I exalted (my) father, grandfather, great-grandfather and forefather(?).
§4 I captured the city Iluwasi, ¹¹	§12 [When] I captured the city Iluwasi,
§5 and I ...ed away Mount(?) Atursaliyanza, ¹²	§13 (of) the men I cut off the feet, ¹⁵
§6 and I trampled(?) the land Hirika,	§14 but the children I made eunuchs to us,
§7 and for us I did not spare(?) the two countries.	§15 and thereby I exalted my image for myself.
§8 To my father and grandfather there was authority,	§16 But I came forth,
§9 but neither (my) father nor (my) grandfather	§17 and myself on my throne [I seated ...] ¹⁶ (text breaks off)

³ See Hawkins 2000:89, no. II. 6, §§28-34.

⁴ Woolley 1952 pls. B53a-b, 54a, p. 192, but note that the figures are deified rulers, not gods as such.

⁵ Grayson RIMA 3:23, ii.84. See below Kurkh Monolith, COS 2.113A.

⁶ See the Panamuwa inscription (KAI #215), COS 2.37 below.

⁷ Gurgum is the name of a small country with the capital city Marqas in Assyrian terminology, and Marqas has become modern Maraş (Mar'as), city and province. The Hieroglyphic inscriptions use only Gurgum for city and country.

⁸ Muwatali is named by Shalmaneser III in the year 858 BCE. See Grayson RIMA 3:16, i.40. See below Kurkh Monolith, COS 2.113A.

⁹ Place names unknown though an identification of Hirika with Hilakku (Assyrian Rough Cilicia) has been proposed. See Neumann 1979.

¹⁰ Special manifestation of the Storm-God Tarhunza.

¹¹ See note 9.

¹² See note 9..

¹³ Literal translation not obviously meaningful but presumably idiomatic.

¹⁴ See previous note.

¹⁵ This barbaric act against captives is actually depicted on the Bronze Gates of Shalmaneser III, Halparuntiya's contemporary.

¹⁶ The text breaks off with our hero reporting his accession.

REFERENCES

Text, Translation and Studies: Hawkins 2000 no. IV.2. Photo: Akurgal 1962 pls. 126-127.

KULULU 4 (2.22B)

J. D. Hawkins

This Hieroglyphic Luwian inscription was placed on a round-topped stele, running round all four sides, and broken off at the fourth line, but ending with an appended inscription across the top.¹ It is unique in beginning, "I was Ruwa ...," where all other such have "I am" It is clearly an example of the "speaking dead" addressing an audience from the tombstone, which is emphasized by the final appended notice that the dead man's nephew set it up for him. The inscription is also unusual in expressing an individual's concept of his soul, although this can be paralleled from cuneiform Hittite texts.² Though somewhat difficult to understand, the text apparently states that the speaker's soul has been put in (at birth) by the gods and is taken back by them (at death). In the Bronze Age the idea that the King (and Queen) at death "become a god" and join the divine company finds expression in the texts,³ but it is not until the early Iron Age, with the appearance of inscribed tombstones for private individuals, that this notion is extended to non-royal folk.⁴

¹ Hawkins 2000 no. X.10.

² ibid., 446, §4.

Ruwa is probably the same Ruwa who inscribed another stele from the same site Kululu, recording his construction of houses for his overlord Tuwati.⁵ That inscription concludes: "When I shall depart into the presence of the gods ..., these houses will be here." This suggests that Ruwa even in his lifetime was preoccupied with the idea of personal immortality and "afterlife."

§1 I was Ruwa the Ruler, the Sun-blessed (man).	put in (as) a ... ⁶ .
§2 Also my posterity (?) (is) Sun-blessed.	§10 I blessed my lords well, ⁹
§3 The gods loved me ...,	§11 and I was every man's father,
§4 and they put into me a beloved soul. ⁶	§12 and for every (man) I honored the good,
§5 Under my lords ⁷ (and) ... with my soul I ...ed,	§13 and for me my ... [...],
§6 and I was dear to my lords,	§14 and for my eunuchs ... [...]
§7 and they made me governor,	(text breaks off)
§8 and I was house-lord in the lords' house.	Across the top of the stele is written:
§9 For me the gods received the beloved soul	§15 This stele Huli set up, Ruwa's brother's son,
	§16 And he

³ "To become a god" is a regular euphemism describing a king's death. Note also the Royal Death Ritual introduced by the words: "When in Hattuša a great sin occurs and either the king or the queen becomes a god ..." (Otten 1958:184)

⁴ Hawkins 1980b; 1989.

⁵ Hawkins 2000 no. X.9.

⁶ The word here translated "soul" following the context as understood seems to mean literally "form, figure, image." The concept appears similar to that known from the classical world, the soul as an image or replica of the living person.

⁷ It is not exactly clear who are meant by the speaker's "lords," probably his earthly superiors during his lifetime rather than the gods.

⁸ The clause presumably describes the speaker's death.

⁹ This and the following clauses seem to characterize the speaker's virtuous life.

REFERENCES

Text, Translation and Studies: Hawkins 2000 no. X.10; 1980b; 1989.

HITTITE BIBLIOGRAPHY

- AKURGAL, E.
1962 The Art of the Hittites. London: Thames and Hudson.
- ALP, S.
1950-51 "Die soziale Klasse der NAM.RA-Leute und ihre hethitische Bezeichnung." JKF 1:113-135.
1954 "The -N(N)- Formations in the Hittite Language." Bellere 18/72:456-458.
1979 "Das hethitische Wort für 'Palast'." Pp. 17-25 in Studies Merigi.
- AMADASI GUZZO, M. G.
forthcoming "MSKT at Karatepe." Or.
- BEAL, R.
1986 "The History of Kizzuwatna and the Date of the Šunaššura Treaty." Or 55:424-445.
1988 "The ^{GIS}TUKUL-institution in Second Millennium Hatti." AoF 15:269-305.
1992 The Organisation of the Hittite Military. THeth 20. Heidelberg: Carl Winter-Universitätsverlag.
1993 "Kurunta of Tarhuntassa and the Imperial Hittite Mausoleum." AnSt 43:29-39.
- BECKMAN, G. M.
1982 "The Hittite Assembly." JAOS 102:435-42.
1989-90 "Review of Otten 1988." WO 20-21:289-294.
1992 "Hittite Administration in Syria in the Light of the Texts from Hattuša, Ugarit, and Emar." BiMes 25. Malibu: Undena.
1996 Hittite Diplomatic Texts. WAW 7. Atlanta: Scholars Press.
1997 "New joins to Hittite Treaties." ZA 87:96-100.
- BÖRKER-KLÄHN, J.
1993 "Zum Kolophon der Bronzetafel aus Boğazköy." AoF 20:235-237.
1994 "Der hethitische Areopag: Yerkapi, die Bronzetafel und der 'Staatsstreich'." AoF 21:131-160.
- BOSSERT, H. T.
1951 "Die Phönizisch-Hethitischen Bilinguen von Karatepe." 1-2 Nachtrag. JKF 1/3:290-294.
- BRYCE, T.
1982 The Major Historical Texts of Early Hittite History. Queensland, Australia: University of Queensland.
1988 "Tette and the Rebellions in Nuhasi." AnSt 38:21-28.
1989 "Abhiyawans and Mycenaeans — An Anatolian Viewpoint." Oxford Journal of Archaeology 8:297-310.
1998 The Kingdom of the Hittites. Oxford: Clarendon Press.
- ÇAMBEL, H.
1993 "Das Freilichtmuseum von Karatepe-Aslantaş." Ist. Mü. 43:495-509.
1999 CHLI 2.
- CANCIK, H.
1976 Grundzüge der hethitischen und alttestamentlichen Geschichtsschreibung. Wiesbaden: O. Harrassowitz.
- CARRATELLI, G. P.
1994 "La clausola del 'Testamento' di Hattusili I." La parola della passato 276:401-408.
- COHEN, Y.
1997 Taboos and Prohibitions in Hittite Society: A Study of the Hittite Expression natta ara ("not right"). M.A. Thesis. Tel Aviv University.
- CORNIL, P. AND R. LEBRUN.
1975-76 "Fragments hittites relatifs à l'Égypte." OLP 7-8:83-108.
- DEL MONTE, G.
1985a "Un Nuovo Frammento degli 'Annali Completi' di Muršili II." Athenaeum NS 63:164-166.
1985b "Nuovi frammenti di trattati hittiti." OA 24:263-269.
1986 Il trattato fra Muršili II di Hattuša e Niqmepa di Ugarit. Oriens Antiqui Collectio 18. Roma: Istituto per l'Oriente C. A. Nallino.
1993 L'annalistica ittita. Testi del Vicino Oriente antico 4. Brescia: Paideia.
- DEL MONTE, G. AND J. TISCHLER.
1978 Die Orts- und Gewässeramen der hethitischen Texte. RGTC 6. TAVO B 7/6. Wiesbaden: Dr. Ludwig Reichert Verlag.
- DESHAYES, J.
1981 "Remarques sur les monuments de Karatepe. I. — Problèmes archéologiques." RA 75:32-46.
- DESIDERI, P., and A. M. JASINK.
1990 Cilicia. Dall'età di Kizzuwatna alla conquista macedone. Università degli Studi di Torino, Fondo di studi Parini-Chirio 1. Firenze: Casa Editrice Le Lettere.
- DINÇOL, A. M.
1998 "The Rock Monument of the Great King Kurunta and Its Hieroglyphic Inscription." Pp. 159-166 in Acts of the IIIrd International Congress of Hittitology, Çorum, September 16-22, 1996. Ed. by S. Alp and A. Stiel. Ankara: Grafik, Teknik Hazırlık Uyum Ajansı.
- EDEL, E.
1976 Ägyptische Ärzte und ägyptische Medizin am hethitischen Königshof. Rheinisch-Westfälische Akademie der Wissenschaften, Vorträge G 205. Opladen: Westdeutscher Verlag.
- FÖRRER, E.
1926 Die Boğazköi-Texte in Umschrift. Zweiter Band. Geschichtliche Texte. WVDOG 42/2. Leipzig: J.C. Hinrichs'sche Buchhandlung.
- FREYDANK, H.
1959 "Eine hethitische Fassung des Vertrages zwischen dem Hethiterkönig Šuppiluliuma und Aziru von Amurru." MIO 7:356-381.

FRIEDRICH, J.

- 1925 Aus dem hethitischen Schrifttum 1. Heft: Historische Texte, Staatsverträge, Königliche Erlasse, Briefe, Gesetze, wirtschaftliche Texte. Der Alte Orient 24,3. Leipzig: Hinrichs.
 1926 Staatsverträge des Hatti-Reiches in hethitischer Sprache. 1. Teil. MVAG 31.1. Leipzig: J. Hinrichs'sche Buchhandlung.
 1952 HW 1.
 1959 Die hethitischen Gesetze. Documenta et Monumenta Orientis Antiqui 7. Leiden: E. J. Brill.

GARELLI, P.

- 1981 "Remarques sur les monuments de Karatepe. III. – Les données assyriennes." RA 75:54-60.

GIORGIERI, M.

- 1991 "Magia e intrighi alla corte di Labarna-Hattusili." IstLombRend 124:247-277.

GOETZE, A.

- 1930 "Die Pestgebete des Mursiliš." KIF 1:161-251.
 1933 Die Annalen des Mursiliš. MVAG 38. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs'sche Buchhandlung.
 1955 ANET, 199-206, 529-530.
 1969 "The Hittite Laws." Pp. 188-197 in ANET.

GORDON, C. H.

- 1965 UT.

GORDON, E. I.

- 1967 "The Meaning of the Ideogram *KASKAL.KUR = 'Underground Water-course' and its Significance for Bronze Age Historical Geography." JCS 21:70-88.

GRÉLOIS, J.-P.

- 1988 "Les Annales décennales de Mursili II (CTH 61, I)." Hethitica 9:17-145.

GÜTERBOCK, H. G.

- 1954 "Authority and Law in the Hittite Kingdom." JAOs Suppl. 17:16-24.
 1956 "The Deeds of Suppiluliuma as Told by his Son, Mursili II." JCS 10:41-68, 75-85, 90-98, 107-130.
 1983a "The Hittites and the Aegean World." AJA 87:133-143.
 1983b "Noch einmal die Formel parnaššea šuwaizzi." Or 52:73-80.
 1984 "Hittites and Akhaeans: A New Look." PAPS 128:114-122.
 1989 "Hittite kursa 'Hunting Bag.'" Pp. 113-19 in Studies Kantor.

GÜTERBOCK, H. G., and E. HAMP.

- 1956 "Hittite šuwaya." RHA XIV/58:22-25.

HAASE, R.

- 1956 "Über die Formel parnaššea šuwaizzi in den hethitischen Gesetzestexten." WO 2:290-293.
 1962 "Über neue Vorschläge zur Erklärung der hethitischen Formel parnaššea šuwaizzi." BiOr 19:117-122.
 1976 "Über Tierdelikte in den sogenannten hethitischen Gesetzen." Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung, Römische Abteilung 93:253-60.
 1984 Texte zum hethitischen Recht. Eine Auswahl. Wiesbaden: Reichert.

HAWKINS, J. D.

- 1979 "Who was Azatiwatas?" AnSt 29:153-157.
 1980a "Karkamiš." RIA 5:426-46.
 1980b "Late Hittite Funerary Monuments." Pp. 213-225 in RAI 26.
 1986 "Royal Statements of Ideal Prices: Assyrian, Babylonian, and Hittite." Pp. 93-102 in Studies Mellink.
 1989 "More Late Hittite Funerary Monuments." Pp. 189-197 in Studies Özgüç.
 1995 "Muksas." RIA 8/5-6:413.
 2000 CHLI 1.

HAWKINS, J. D., and W. ORTHMANN.

- 1980 "Karatepe, A. Inschriften, Geschichte, B. Archäologische." RIA 5:409-414.

HEINHOLD-KRAHMER, S.

- 1977 Arzawa: Untersuchungen zu seiner Geschichte nach den hethitischen Quellen. THeth 8. Heidelberg: Carl Winter-Universitätsverlag.
 1991-92 "Zur Bronzetafel aus Boğazköy und ihrem historischen Inhalt." AfO 38-39:138-158.

HOFFMAN, I.

- 1984 Der Erlaß Telipinus. THeth 11. Heidelberg: Winter.

HOFFNER, H. A., Jr.

- 1963 "The Laws of the Hittites." Brandeis University Ph. D. Dissertation.
 1966 "Symbols for Masculinity and Femininity: Their Use in Ancient Near Eastern Sympathetic Magic Rituals." JBL 85:326-334.
 1973 "Incest, Sodomy and Bestiality in the Ancient Near East." Pp. 81-90 in Studies Gordon.
 1976 "Review of H. Otten and Chr. Rüster, Keilschrifttexte aus Boğazköi 22." BiOr 33:335-337.
 1980 "Histories and Historians of the Ancient Near East: The Hittites." Orientalia 49:283-332.
 1983 "A Prayer of Mursili II About His Stepmother." JAOs 103:187-92.
 1992 "The Last Days of Khamusha." Pp. 46-52 in The Crisis Years: The 12th Century B.C. From Beyond the Danube to the Tigris. Ed. by W. A. Ward and M. S. Joukowsky. Dubuque, Iowa: Kendall/Hunt Publishing Company.
 1995 "Legal and Social Institutions of Hittite Anatolia." Pp. 555-570 in CANE.
 1997a "The Hittite Laws." Pp. 211-247 in Law Collections from Mesopotamia and Asia Minor, Second Edition. Ed. by M. T. Roth. WAW 6. Atlanta: Scholars Press.
 1997b The Laws of the Hittites. A Critical Edition. Documenta et Monumenta Orientis Antiqui, 23. Leiden: E. J. Brill.

HOUWINK TEN CATE, Ph.

- 1966 "Mursilis' Northwest Campaigns — Additional Fragments of his Comprehensive Annals." JNES 25:162-191.
 1967 "Mursilis' Northwestern Campaigns — a Commentary." Anatolica 1:44-61.
 1979 "Mursilis' Northwestern Campaigns — Additional Fragments of His Comprehensive Annals Concerning the Nerik Region." Pp. 157-167 in Studies Laroche.

- 1979a "The Mashuihuwas Affair: A Join (KBo XIX 46) and a Duplicate (KBo IX 77) to Mursilis's Comprehensive Annals (12th year of his reign)." Pp. 267-290 in Studies Meriggi.
- 1992 "The Bronze Tablet of Tudhaliyas IV and its Geographical and Historical Relations." ZA 82:233-270.
- HUEHNERGARD, J.
1993 "Meskene A. Philologisch." RIA 8:83.
- IMPARATI, F.
1964 Le leggi ittite. Incunabula Graeca 7. Roma: Edizioni dell'Ateneo.
1991 "Autorità centrale e istituzioni collegiali nel regno itita." Pp. 161-181 in Esercizio del potere e prassi della consultazione. Ed. by A. Ciani and G. Diurni. Roma: Libreria Editrice Lateranense.
1992a "Le relazioni politiche fra Hatti e Tarhuntaša all'epoca di Hattusili III e Tudhaliya." Pp. 23-68 in Quattro Studi Ititi. Ed. by F. Imparati. Eothen 4. Firenze: Edizione Libreria Italiana Estere (ELITE).
1992b "A propos des témoins du traité avec Kurunta de Tarhuntaša." Pp. 305-322 in Studies Alp.
1992c "Significato politico della successione dei testimoni nel trattato di Tudhaliya IV con Kurunta." Istituto per gli studi micenei ed egeo-anatolici, Seminari 59-86.
- KAMMENHUBER, A.
1969 "Zur Textüberlieferung der Annalen des Hethiterkönigs Muršiliš II." Arhnaeum NS 47:168-172.
1970 "Keilschrifttexte aus Bogazköy (KBo XVI)." Or 39:548-567.
- KLEINGEL, H.
1964 "Neue Fragmente zur akkadischen Fassung des Aziru-Vertrages." OLZ 59:437-445.
1969 Geschichte Syriens im 2. Jahrtausend v.u.Z. VIO 70. 3 vol. Berlin: Akademie Verlag.
1977 "Zwei neue Fragmente zum akkadischen Aziru-Vertrag." AoF 5:259-261.
1992 Syria 3000 to 300 B.C. Berlin: Akademie Verlag.
1993 "Hugo Wincklers Tagebücher." IM 43:511-516.
1999 Geschichte des Hethitischen Reiches. HdO 1/34. Leiden: E. J. Brill.
- KLINGER, J.
1992 "Fremde und Außenseiter in Hatti." Pp. 187-212 in Außenseiter und Randgruppen. Ed. by V. Haas. Xenia 32. Konstanz: Universitätsverlag Konstanz.
- KLOCK-FONTANILLE, I.
1996 "Le testament politique de Hattusili Ier ou les conditions d'exercice de la royauté dans l'ancien royaume hittite." Anatolia Antiqua 4:33-66.
- KÖHNE, C., AND H. OTTEN.
1971 Der Saugamuwa-Vertrag. StBoT 16. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz.
- KÜMMEL, H. M.
1980 "Kizzuwatna." RIA 5:627-631.
1985 "Hethitische historisch-chronologische Texte." in TUAT 1/5:455-495.
- LAROCHE, R.
1948 "Un point d'histoire, Ulmi-Tessub." RHA 8:40-48.
1968 "Textes de Ras Shamra en langue Hittite." Ugaritica 5:769-784.
- LEBRUN, R.
1992 "Les traités hittites." Pp. 15-59 in Traité et serments dans le proche-orient ancien. Ed. by J. Briand, R. Lebrun and É. Puech. Paris: Impressions Dumas.
- MARAZZI, M.
1984 "Überlegungen zur Bedeutung von pankuš in der hethitisch-akkadischen Bilinguis Hattusiliš I." WO 15:96-102.
1986 Beiträge zu den akkadischen Texten aus Bogazköy in altheititischer Zeit. Rome: Dipartimento di studi glottolinguistici, Università "La Sapienza".
1992 "Das 'geheimnisvolle' Land Ahijawa." Pp. 365-378 in Studies Alp.
- MARGUERON, J.-C.
1993 "Meskene B Archäologisch." RIA 8:84-93.
- DE MARTINO, S.
1989 "Hattusili I e Haštayar: un problema aperto." OA 28:1-24.
1998 "Le accuse di Muršili II alla regina Tawannan secondo il testo KUB XIV 4" Pp. 19-48 in Studi e Testi I. Ed. by S. de Martino and F. Imparati. Eothen 9. Firenze: Logisma.
- MELCHERT, H. C.
1990 "Review of Otten 1988." Kratylos 35:204-206.
1991 "Death and the Hittite King." Pp. 182-187 in Perspectives on Indo-European Language, Culture and Religion. McLean, VA: Institute for the Study of Man.
1994 Anatolian Historical Phonology. Leiden Studies in Indo-European 3. Amsterdam/Atlanta: Rodopi.
- MORA, C.
1998 "Kurunta, Prince." Pp. 85-91 in Studi e Testi I. Ed. by S. de Martino and F. Imparati. Eothen 9. Firenze: Logisma.
- MORAN, W. L.
1992 The Amarna Letters. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins.
- MORPURGO DAVIES, A., and J. D. HAWKINS.
1987 "The Late Hieroglyphic Luwian Corpus: Some New Lexical Recognitions." Bibliothèque des Cahiers de l'Institut de Linguistique de Louvain 37: Hethitica 8:267-295.
- NEUMANN, G.
1979 "Zum Namen Kilikien." Pp. 2:429-437 in Studies Meriggi.
- OTTEN, H.
1955 "Neue Fragmente zu den Annalen des Muršili." MIO 3:153-179.
1958 Hethitische Totenrituale. Deutsche Akademie der Wissenschaften zu Berlin. Institut für Orientforschung. Veröffentlichung 37. Berlin: Akademie Verlag.

- 1969 Sprachliche Stellung und Datierung des Madduwatta-Textes. StBoT 11. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz.
- 1988 Die Bronzetafel aus Boğazköy: Ein Staatsvertrag Tuthalijas IV. StBoT. Beiheft 1. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz.
- 1989 Die 1986 in Boğazköy gefundene Bronzetafel. Zwei Vorträge (1. Ein hethitischer Staatsvertrag des 13. Jh. v. Chr.; 2. Zu den rechtlichen und religiösen Grundlagen des hethitischen Königtums). Innsbrucker Beiträge zur Sprachwissenschaft, Vorträge und Kleinere Schriften, 42. Innsbruck: Universität Innsbruck.
- PECCHIOLO DADDI, F.
1992 "Note di storia politica antico-ittita." SEL 9:11-19.
- PECKHAM, J. D.
1968 The Development of the Late Phoenician Scripts. HSS 20. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.
- RANOSZEK, R.
1950 "A propos de KUB XXIII 1." ArOr 18/4:236-242.
- RÖLLIG, W.
1999 "Appendix I. The Phoenician Inscriptions." Pp. 50-81 in H. ÇAMBEL, CHLI 2.
- VON SCHULER, E.
1965 Die Kaškäer. Ein Beitrag zur Ethnographie des alten Kleinasien. UAVA 3. Berlin: Walter de Gruyter.
- 1982 "Die hethitischen Gesetze." in TUAT 1/1:96-123.
- SINGER, I.
1984 "The AGRIG in Hittite Texts." AnSt 34:97-127.
- 1990 "Aziru's Apostasy and the Historical Setting of the General's Letter." Pp. 113-183 in Sh. Izre'el and I. Singer. The General's Letter from Ugarit. Tel Aviv: Tel Aviv University.
- 1991a "A Concise History of Amurru." Pp. 134-195 in S. Izre'el, Amurru Akkadian: A Linguistic Study. Vol. 2. HSS 41. Atlanta: Scholars Press.
- 1991b "The 'Land of Amurru' and the 'Lands of Amurru' in the Šaušgamuwa Treaty." Iraq 53:69-74.
- 1992 "Hittite Cultural Influence in the Kingdom of Amurru." Pp. 231-234 in RAI 38.
- 1996 "Great Kings of Tarhuntassa." SMEA 38:63-71.
- SOMMER, F., and A. FALKENSTEIN.
1932 Die Ahhiyawa-Urkunden. ABAW. Philosophisch-historische Abteilung n.F. 6. München: Verlag der Bayerischen Akademie der Wissenschaften.
- 1938 Die hethitisch-akkadische Bilingue des Hatušili I. (Labarna II.). ABAW. Philosophisch-historische Abteilung n. F. 16. Munich: Verlag der Bayerischen Akademie der Wissenschaften.
- SOUČEK, V.
1961 "Bemerkungen zur Schlussformel der hethitischen Gesetze (parnaššea šuwaizzi)." ArOr 29:1-29.
- STARKE, F.
1981 "Die keilschrift-luwischen Wörter für Insel und Lampe." KZ 95:141-155.
- 1985 Die keilschrift-luwischen Texte in Umschrift. StBoT 30. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz.
- 1990 Untersuchung zur Stammbildung des keilschrift-luwischen Nomens. StBoT 31. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz.
- STEFANINI, R.
1992 "On the Tenth Paragraph of the Bronze Tablet (ii 91 - iii 1)." AGI 67:133-152.
- STEINER, G.
1989 "'Schiffe von Ahhiyawa' oder 'Kriegsschiffe' von Amurru im Šaušgamuwa-Vertrag?" UF 21:393-411.
- 1996 "Muššili I.: Sohn oder Enkel Labarna-Hatušilis I.?" UF 28:561-618.
- SÜRENHAGEN, D.
1992 "Untersuchungen zur Bronzetafel und weiteren Verträgen mit der Sekundogenitur in Tarhuntaša." OLZ 87:341-371.
- TISCHLER, J.
1988 "Labarna." Pp. 347-358 in Studies Otten.
- VAN DEN HOUT, Th. P. J.
1984 "Kurunta und die Datierung einiger hethitischen Texte." RA 78:89-92.
- 1995 Der Ulmišsub-Vertrag. Eine prosopographische Untersuchung. StBoT 38. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz.
- WATKINS, C.
1997 "Luvu-Hittite lapan(a)." Pp. ### in Studies Puhvel.
- WEIDNER, E.
1923 Politische Dokumente aus Kleinasien: Die Staatsverträge in akkadischer Sprache aus dem Archiv von Boghazköi. Boghazköi-Studien 8 and 9. Leipzig: Hinrichs.
- WEINFELD, M.
1983 "Divine Intervention in War in Ancient Israel and in the Ancient Near East." Pp. 121-147 in HHI.
- WINTER, I. J.
1979 "On the Problems of Karatepe: the Reliefs and their Contexts." AnSt 29:115-151.
- WOOLLEY, C. L.
1952 Carchemish. The Excavations in the Inner Town. Carchemish, Report on the Excavations at Jerablus, on Behalf of the British Museum, Part III. London: The Trustees of the British Museum.
- YOUNGER, K. L., Jr.
1990 Ancient Conquest Accounts: A Study of Ancient Near Eastern and Biblical History Writing. ISOTSup 98. Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press.
- ZACCAGNINI, C.
1988 "A Note on Hittite International Relations at the Time of Tudhaliya IV." Pp. 295-299 in Studies Caratelli.

WEST SEMITIC MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS

This page intentionally left blank

A. BUILDING AND DEDICATORY INSCRIPTIONS

This page intentionally left blank

1. MOABITE INSCRIPTIONS

THE INSCRIPTION OF KING MESHA (2.23)

K. A. D. Smelik

The inscription, which was carved on a black basalt stone, measuring 1.15 m. high and 60-68 cm. across, was discovered by the Alsatian missionary Klein at Dhiban in 1868. Due to the great interest in the stone shown by various Europeans in Palestine, the local population decided to demolish it and use the pieces as amulets in their granaries. The Frenchman Clermont-Ganneau, however, who had already had squeezes made of the stela, managed to get possession of two-thirds of the original stone. The fragments were sent to France and put together in the Louvre museum. Some of the gaps were filled on the basis of the squeezes. The end of the inscription is completely lost. The text, written in Moabite (or Israelite Hebrew?), dates around 835 BCE and belongs to the genre of building inscriptions. The Arabic numerals refer to the lines of the original text.

Introduction and Identification (1-3a)

I am Mesha,^a the son of Kemosh[-yatti]¹, the king of Moab, the Dibonite.²

My father was king over Moab for thirty years, and I was king after my father.

Occasion for the Erecting of the Stela (3b-4)

And I made this high-place³ for Kemosh⁴ ^b in Karchoh,⁵

[...]

because he has delivered me from all kings(?), and because he has made me look down on all my enemies.

Introduction to the Part on Military Achievements (5-7a)

Omri⁶ was the king of Israel, and he oppressed Moab for many days, for Kemosh was angry with his land.⁶

And his son⁷ succeeded him, and he said — he too —

"I will oppress Moab!"

In my days did he say [so],

a 2 Kgs 1:1; 3:4

b Num 21:29;
Judg 11:24;
1 Kgs 11:7,33;
2 Kgs 23:13;
Jer 48:7
(qere), 13, 46

c 1 Kgs 16:16-28 but I looked down on him and on his house, and Israel has gone to ruin, yes, it has gone to ruin for ever!⁸

The Return of the Land of Medeba (7b-9)

And Omri had taken possession of the whole la[n]d of Medeba, and he lived there (in) his days and half the days of his son, forty years, but Kemosh [resto]red it⁹ in my days.

And I built Baal Meon, and I made in it a water reservoir, and I built Kiriathaim.

The Conquest of Ataroth (10-13)

And the men of Gad lived in the land of Ataroth from ancient times,¹⁰ and the king of Israel built Ataroth for himself, and I fought against the city, and I captured it, and I killed all the people [from] the city as a sacrifice(?)¹¹ for Kemosh and for Moab, and I brought back the fire-hearth of his Uncle(?)¹² from there,

¹ The complete name of Mesha's father is not preserved in the Mesha inscription, but supplemented on the base of a reconstruction of another Moabite inscription found at Kerak in 1958 and published by Reed and Winnett 1963:1-9.

² Dibon (now Diban) was the capital of Moab at that time.

³ bmt: a kind of sanctuary typical for Canaan. It also occurs frequently in the Hebrew Bible.

⁴ National god of Moab.

⁵ Possibly the name for a new quarter of the capital Dibon. The vocalization of the name is uncertain. Other possibilities: Kericho, Korcha, Kircho.

⁶ According to the same principle, in Judg 3:12 the oppression of Israel by a Moabite king is explained as the result of YHWH's wrath with his people.

⁷ According to the Hebrew Bible, this was Ahab (ruled 868-854 BCE). This is, however, not in accordance with the date given in line 8. For this reason, it is more probable that Omri's grandson Jehoram (ruled 851-840 BCE) is meant.

⁸ Possible reference to the decline of Israel during the reign of Jehu (839-822 BCE); cf. 2 Kgs 10:32-33.

⁹ Lit., "returned it." Other possibility: "lives there."

¹⁰ This remark by Mesha shows that he was not acquainted with the tradition that Gad was one of the Israelite tribes who participated in the Exodus.

¹¹ Meaning uncertain. Part of ritual warfare was the massacre of the population of a conquered town in honour of the national god (also in ancient Israel).

¹² Some cultic device. Possibly, "Uncle" was a divine name or title.

and I hauled it before the face of Kemosh¹³ in Kerioth, and I made the men of Sharon live there, as well as the men of Maharith¹⁴.

The Destruction of Nebo (14-18a)

And Kemosh said to me:

"Go, take Nebo from Israel!"^d

And I went in the night, and I fought against it from the break of dawn until noon,

and I took it,

and I killed [its] whole population,

seven thousand male citizens(?) and aliens(?), and female citizens(?) and aliens(?),¹⁵ and servant girls;

for I had put it to the ban^e for Ashtar Kemosh.¹⁶

And from there, I took th[e ves]sels of YHWH,¹⁷ and I hauled them before the face of Kemosh.

The Conquest of Jahaz (18b-21a)

And the king of Israel had built Jahaz, and he stayed there during his campaigns against me,¹⁸

and Kemosh drove him away before my face, and I took two hundred men of Moab, all its division(?),¹⁹ and I led it up to Jahaz.

And I have taken it in order to add it to Dibon.

Mesha's Building Activities at Karchoh (21b-25)

I have built Karchoh,

the wall of the woods and the wall of the citadel, and I have built its gates,

and I have built its towers,

and I have built the house of the king, and I have made the double reser[voir] for the spring²⁰ in the innermost part of the city.

d 1 Sam 15:3

e Num 21:2-3; Josh 10:28-40; Judg 1:17; 21:11; 1 Sam 15:3; 1 Kgs 20:42

f Num 32:38; 1 Chr 5:8

g Isa 15:5; Jer 48:3, 5, 34

Now, there was no cistern in the innermost part of the city, in Karchoh, and I said to all the people:

"Make, each one of you, a cistern in his house."

And I cut out the moat(?) for Karchoh by means of prisoners from Israel.²¹

Other Building Activities (26-27)

I have built Aroer,

and I made the military road in the Arnon.

I have built Beth Bamoth,

for it was destroyed.

I have built Bezer,

for [it lay in] ruins.

First Conclusion (28-29)

[And the me]n²² of Dibon stood in battle-order,²³ for all Dibon, they were in subjection.

And I am the kin[g over the] hundreds in the towns which I have added to the land.

Other Building Activities (30-31a)

And I have built [the House of Mede]ba²⁴ and the House of Diblathaim^f and the House of Baal Meon,

and I brought there [...] flocks of the land.

Battle at Horonaim (31b-34)

And Horonaim,^g there lived [...]

And Kemosh said to me:

"Go down, fight against Horonaim!"

I went down [...]

[and] Kemosh [resto]red it in my days.

and [...] from there [...]

[...]

[...]

Second Conclusion (34-)

And I ...

¹³ The Kemosh sanctuary at Kerioth is meant.

¹⁴ Mesha only combined the massacre of the original inhabitants with the resettlement of the conquered territory by his own population when he wanted to add the city to Moab (Ataroth and Jahaz; not Nebo).

¹⁵ Meaning uncertain; for this translation, see Gibson, SSI 1:80-81.

¹⁶ Ashtar is the male counterpart of Ashtarte/Ishtar; here combined with the national Moabite god Kemosh. For the significance of the ban (ḥrm), see Stern 1991.

¹⁷ The earliest occurrence of the name of Israel's god in an inscription. Cf. also below, 2.47.

¹⁸ In 2 Kgs 3, Jehoram attacks Moab from the South; in the Mesha inscription from the North (Jahaz). For a historical reconstruction see Smelik 1992:90-92.

¹⁹ For the translation here, see Gibson, SSI 1:81.

²⁰ For the translation here, see Yadin 1969:18 n. 18.

²¹ For the translation of this sentence, see Gibson, SSI 1:82.

²² For the restoration of the text here, see Smelik 1992:71.

²³ For the translation here, see Lipiński 1971:339.

²⁴ For the restoration of the text here, see Müller 1974:14.

REFERENCES

Text: KAI 2:168-179; SSI 1:71-83; Translations: ANET 320-321; DOTT 195-199; RTAT 253-257 (E.T. 237-240); TUAT 247-248; Studies: Dearman 1989; Müller 1974; Smelik 1990; 1991:29-50; 1992; Stern 1991:19-56.

2. AMMONITE INSCRIPTIONS

THE AMMAN CITADEL INSCRIPTION (2.24)

Walter E. Aufrecht

The inscription is on an irregularly shaped rectangle of white limestone discovered on the Citadel of Amman, Jordan, in 1961. The face of the stone is chipped, causing several letters to flake off. The beginning and ending of each line are lost. The inscription is in the Archaeological Museum, Amman, Jordan (No. J 9000).¹ It has been dated paleographically to the (mid)-9th century BCE.²

Introduction: Command by the deity (line 1) [The words of Mil]kom: ³ ^a build for yourself entrances roundabout [	^a 1 Kgs 11:5, 33; 2 Kgs 23:13	[] and amid (its) co[lum]ns (the) just will reside [] [] (the) innermost door ⁴ ^b [I shall surely] extinguish [
Curses and blessings (lines 2-8) [] that all who surround you shall surely die [] [] I shall surely destroy. All who enter [	^b Jer 36:23	[] you shall gaze in awe in the midst of the porch [] [] and š[] ^h and n[] [] ... peace to you and pe[ace

¹ For the most recent discussions, see: CAI 154-163 (no. 59); Shea 1991:62-66; and Hübner 1992:17-21.

² Cross 1969:17.

³ The inscription has been interpreted by most commentators as a building inscription of either a temple or of the Citadel itself. Most interpreters agree in reconstructing the phrase as if the god Milkom is speaking. Milkom may have been the national deity of Ammon. The name appears in the Bible and in several inscriptions, CAI nos. 1, 55, 57, 61, 127, 129, 147, 136. See the discussions by Puech 1977, Tigay 1987, and Aufrecht 1999a.

⁴ Hicks 1983:53-55 takes dlr here (and in Jer 36:23) to mean "writing board."

⁵ An alternative reading of this line is, "You shall be feared among the gods," CAI 162-163.

REFERENCES

Text: CAI 154-163 (no. 59). Studies: Aufrecht 1999a; Cross 1969; Fulco 1978; Hicks 1982; Hübner 1992; Puech 1977; Shea 1991; Tigay 1987.

THE TELL SĪRĀN INSCRIPTION (2.25)

Walter E. Aufrecht

The inscription is found on a 10 cm. long bronze-colored metal bottle made of copper, lead and tin. The bottle was found at Tel Sīrān, Jordan, in 1972. The end of the bottle was sealed by a pin through the neck. It contained dried barley, wheat, a few weeds and chunks of lead and copper. There are ninety-two letters in the eight-line inscription, all of which can be read clearly. The inscription is in the Archaeological Museum, Amman, Jordan (No. J 12943).¹ It has been dated paleographically to ca. 600 BCE.²

May the produce ³ of ^c Amminadab ⁴ king of the Ammonites, ⁵ ^a the son of Hissal ⁶ il ⁶ king of the Ammonites,	^a 2 Sam 10:1; Jer 40:14 ^b Amos 4:9, 9:14	the son of ^c Amminadab king of the Ammonites — the vineyard and the garden(s) ^b and the hollow ⁷ and cistern ⁸ —
--	---	--

¹ For the most recent discussions, see: CAI 203-211 (no. 78) and Hübner 1992:27-31.

² Cross 1973a:14.

³ Among the major studies of this inscription, two trajectories of translation and interpretation have developed: those who view the text as a building or commemorative inscription, and those who view it as a poem. The differences among the interpretations rest on the translation of the first word, m^cbd, and those in lines four and five. Those who view the text as a building inscription translate m^cbd as "works of." Others extend the meaning of this word to mean "poem." Coote 1980:93, made the sensible suggestion that this word refers to the contents of the bottle, translating "product of," CAI 207.

⁴ This king (ca. 600 BCE) has the same name as his grandfather (line 3). The grandfather is likely the person mentioned on Assurbanipal's Cylinder C (ca. 667 BCE), who is said to have paid tribute to the Assyrian king. ANET 294. The name is also found on Ammonite seals, CAI 40-43 (no. 17) and 96-99 (no. 40). For a new list of the Ammonite kings, see Cross (in press).

⁵ The Ammonites, bn^c mⁿ, lit. "sons of Ammon," were the Northwest Semitic speaking people who occupied part of Transjordan in the Iron Age. For the most recent discussions, see: Hübner 1992; Aufrecht 1999b; Aufrecht and Herr (in press); and Cross (in press).

⁶ This king, otherwise unknown, may be dated to ca. 625 BCE, Cross (in press).

⁷ Those who view the text as a building inscription interpret this word, h²th^r, as a noun from the root h²tr, meaning "hove," "tunnel," "hollow," or the like. Those who view the inscription as a poem take the word to be a verb from the root h²tr, meaning "to be delayed," or from the root h²rh, "to be hot," CAI 209.

⁸ If a noun, the root of this word is šwh meaning, "pit," "tunnel," or "cistern." The word also appears in line 9 of the Moabite stela, COS 2.23; KAI 2.168. Those who view the inscription as a poem take the word to be a verb from the root šht, "to go to ruin," CAI 210-211.

cause rejoicing and gladness for many days (to come) and in years⁹ c

c Deut 32:7,
Ps 90:15

far off.

⁹ The formulaic pair ymr, "days," and šnr, "years," also occurs in Ug.; Virolleaud 1957:39. Cf. below, p. 146, n. 9; p. 150, n. 32; p. 154, n. 13; p. 154 n. f.

REFERENCES

Text: CAI 203-211 (no. 78); Studies: Aufrecht 1999b; Aufrecht and Herr (in press); Coote 1980:93; Cross 1973a; in press; Hübner 1992; Virolleaud 1957.

THE AMMAN THEATRE INSCRIPTION (2.26)

Walter E. Aufrecht

This two-line inscription is on a fragmentary, triangular, black basalt stone measuring 26 x 17 cm at its widest. The surface of the stone is rough and pitted. A word divider in the form of a short stroke is found between the first and second words. The inscription is in the Archaeological Museum, Amman, Jordan (No. J 11686).¹ It has been dated paleographically to the late 6th century BCE.²

[] Ba^cal³ I shall build []
[] son of ^cAmn[on]⁴

¹ For the most recent discussions, see: CAI 151-153 (no. 58) and Hübner 1992:21-23.

² Cross 1975:11.

³ This word means "lord" or "master," and is probably part of a proper name, an epithet designating the male deity of fertility, whose proper name was Hadad among the Amorites, Adad among the Mesopotamians, and Haddu among the Canaanites; Maier 1992:11.

⁴ Most interpreters reconstruct "^cAmmon" or "^cAmminadab." It is also possible to understand it as "Ammonite(s)" or to read the first two letters as ^ci; CAI 153.

REFERENCES

Text: CAI 151-153 (no. 58); Studies: Ahlström 1984; Cross 1975; Fulco 1979; Hübner 1992; Maier 1992.

3. DEIR ^cALLA

THE DEIR ^cALLA PLASTER INSCRIPTIONS (2.27)

(The Book of Balaam, son of Beor)

Baruch A. Levine

The Deir ^cAlla plaster inscriptions were discovered by H. Franken in 1967, and later published by J. Hoftijzer and G. van der Kooij 1976. They immediately awakened scholarly attention because the name of Balaam, son of Beor, the non-Israelite seer and diviner whose exploits and poetic orations are preserved in Numbers, chapters 22-24, appears several times in these inscriptions. What is more, the inscriptions speak of phenomena similar to those associated with the biblical Balaam; of divine visitations and visions, of signs and admonitions, of destruction and death, all in a language not very different from Biblical Hebrew. The Deir ^cAlla inscriptions also refer to a divine council of inimical gods, and to El and his circle of friendly gods, and tell of intense magical activity, all of which lends to the Balaam texts a mythological character. The religio-ethnic identity of the author of these inscriptions remains uncertain, as does the identity of those for whom they were written (see below).

The first edition by Hoftijzer and van der Kooij provided color photographs, as well as copies and transcriptions. Unidentified fragments were also published. The texts were presented in two "Combinations," respectively, Combination I and Combination II. There is a full commentary, with introductory sections on the script and writing materials, including a discussion of the archaeological background by Franken, the excavator of Deir ^cAlla. Caquot and Lemaire 1977 realigned the fragments of Combination I and in so doing added significantly to their comprehensibility. The proceedings of an international conference on the Deir ^cAlla inscriptions, held in Leiden in 1989, present a re-evaluation of the inscriptions by most of those who had been engaged in their research, with updated information gathered from the ongoing excavations at the site (Hoftijzer and van der Kooij 1991).

What are being called "inscriptions" are actually texts pieced together from fragments of plaster that had fallen to the floor from the inner walls of a building. That structure was part of a manufacturing and distribution center located on the mound, where some religious activity may have taken place. The inscriptions, written in ink on plaster with a nib, were displayed on the walls. They belong to stratum IX at the site, which has been dated to the ninth and eighth centuries BCE, with the inscriptions, themselves, dated on the basis of laboratory tests to ca. 800 BCE (Ibrahim and van der Kooij 1991). Tel Deir 'Alla is located about eight kilometers east of the Jordan, not far from the northern bank of the Zerqa river (the biblical Jabbok), which flows into the Jordan. The plaster inscriptions are on display in the Archaeological Museum in Amman, Jordan.

The interpretation of the inscriptions has been complicated from the outset by their fragmentary state and poor legibility, and by questions bearing on their language and cultural provenance. Serious disagreements remain as to correct readings, a situation which has produced more than a few alternative renderings of the texts. Puech 1987 and others have been successful in placing some initially unidentified fragments in the gaps of Combination I. In the first publication, the language of these inscriptions was simply identified as Aramaic, but subsequent analysis has altered scholarly opinion, favoring a local, or regional language bearing affinities to both the Aramaic and Canaanite groups, with opinion still divided on this question.

What has become clear is that the inscriptions are a product of the place where they were discovered: in the Valley of Succoth of biblical times, in the land of Gilead. They date from the period prior to the invasions of Tiglat-Pileser III (734-732 BCE), which resulted in mass deportations from the area. Given what is known of the immediate region in the early to mid-eighth century BCE, it is likely that Israelites constituted the principal element in the Gileadite population. It has been argued that, indeed, the inscriptions speak for Gileadite Israelites who worshipped El, a regional deity.

Although Balaam's name is not attested in what we have of Combination II, it is reasonable to conclude that the initial title "The Book of Balaam" named a collection of visions that encompassed both of the combinations thus far assembled, and additional sections that are preserved only in fragments. Since the inscriptions display a poetic character, they will be arranged in verse form, which adds to their clarity. Combination I can be read consecutively, despite its gaps, whereas Combination II, pending further attempts at its reconstruction, is less continuous, and will be presented as excerpts.

The contents of Combination I may be summarized as follows: Balaam is visited at night by gods sent to communicate to him a message from El, the high god. It is a message of doom, and Balaam is so distressed that he weeps and fasts for two days. Convening his intimates, Balaam discloses to them what has been revealed to him in the vision. A council (mw'd = Hebrew mô'ed) of inimical gods, opposing El, has commanded the goddess Shagar-and-Ishtar, a Venus figure of light and fertility, to sew up the heavens producing darkness, and never to speak again. Celestial darkness will cause frenzy on earth, with birds of prey shrieking. Balaam interprets the vision to refer to an impending disaster in the land. Grazing land will be lost to wild beasts, and the flocks will be scattered.

At this point, it becomes less clear what is happening. As interpreted here, the text relates that Balaam undertook the rescue of the goddess from the edict of the council of inimical gods, in accordance with the will of El who had forewarned him. Shagar-and-Ishtar is brought to various magical practitioners and oracles, as Balaam issues admonitions to her adversaries and dispatches powerful agents against them. The adversaries of Shagar-and-Ishtar suffer distress for all to see. Although the text becomes progressively more fragmentary, it is apparent that what had been threatened did not happen; the goddess did not sew up the heavens, and the land was not devastated. The adversaries heard incantations pronounced against them. Domesticated animals drove off the wild beasts.

Combination II begins by relating that after engaging in lovemaking, El constructed a netherworld, described as a "house" where no traveler enters, where no bridegroom goes. The text continues with descriptions of the netherworld reminiscent of Isaiah, chapter 14, the biblical oracle of Sheol. The word Sheol (š'ol) may actually occur in the text. We read that the corpse moans in the nether world. The unusual word used to designate a corpse, nqr, is known from Isa 14:19 in its Hebrew form, nēser. Alongside the depiction of the half-existence of kings in Sheol, of worm rot and shrouds, where human feelings and quests are lacking, we read of an unnamed, wise counselor being denied his craft; deprived of his ability to pronounce oracles and execrations. It is suggestive to associate such a fate with Balaam, the protagonist of Combination I, although Balaam's name is not attested in Combination II as we have it. In the following, uncertain translations are italicized.

COMBINATION I:

Title (line 1)

The misfortunes¹ of the Book of Balaam, son of Beor.² ^a

A divine seer^b was he.³

The Theophany (lines 1-4)

The gods came to him at night,

And he beheld a vision^c in accordance with El's utterance.⁴

They said to Balaam, son of Beor:

"So will it be done, with naught surviving,⁵

No one has seen [the likes of] what you have heard!"

Balaam Reports his Vision to his Intimates (lines 4-7)

Balaam arose on the morrow;

He summoned the heads of the assembly unto him,

^a Num 22-24,

esp. 24:3,

15; Num 31:8,

16; Deut 23:5;

Josh 13:2;

24:9; Mic

6:5; Neh 13:2

82 Sam 24:11;

2 Kgs 17:13;

Isa 30:10;

Amos 7:12;

Mic 3:7

^c Num 22:8-

13, 19-20;

Gen 15:1;

Num 24:4,

16; Ezek

13:7

^d 1 Sam 1:10;

Isa 30:9, Jer

22:10, Lam

1:2 ^e Gen

49:25, Num

24:4, 16; Isa

13:6; Ezek

1:24; 10:5;

Joel 1:15; Ps

68:15; 91:1;

Job (31

times), esp.

5:17; 6:14;

22:17; 40:2;

^f Num 23:23

^g Isa 14:13;

Ps 82:1

And for two days he fasted, and wept bitterly.⁴

Then his intimates entered into his presence,⁶

And they said to Balaam, son of Beor:

"Why do you fast,

And why do you weep?"

Then he said to them:

"Be seated, and I will relate to you⁷ what the Shaddai-gods^c have planned,⁸

And go, see the acts of the gods!"⁹ ^f

Balaam Describes the Celestial Vision and Its Aftermath in the Land (lines 7-13)

"The gods have banded together;

The Shaddai-gods have established a council.¹⁰ ^g

And they have said to [the goddess] Shagar:¹¹

¹ Read yissûrê "the misfortunes of," namely, the misfortunes envisioned in "The Book of Balaam." The BH verb yissêr may mean "to afflict, punish" (Lev 26:28, 1 Kgs 12:11, Ps 39:12). In post-BH, sing. yissûr, plural yissûrîn mean "suffering(s), punishment(s)" (Levy 1964 2:250).

² The WS term spr (= Heb. sîper) refers to all types of written records, including collections of prophetic visions (Jer 36:11; Nah 1:1; Dan 12:4). The title spr Bî'm br-Bî'r: "The Book of Balaam, son of Beor" encompasses Combinations I and II, and probably subsequent sections that have been lost. The patronymic br-bî'r (= Heb. ben Be'or) is written as one word, using the normal Aram. br (= bar, bir) for "son."

³ The syntax is emphatic: ³ hzh ² lhn ^h (= ² hzh ² hzh ² elâhîn hâ) "a divine seer was he." Cf. ² hâ ² elôhîm hâ "The man of God was he" (1 Kgs 13:26). Others have parsed the words differently, reading ² hâ ² hzh ² elâhîn hâ "who was a divine seer," expressing the relative ² hâ (= ² hâ), with prosthetic aleph, which is current in Phoen.-Punic.

⁴ Appropriately the hzh "seer" beholds a vision (mhzh = mahazeh), a term associated with Balaam in the biblical poems, where it is said of him: ² âser mahazeh šaddâi yehezeh "who beholds the vision of Shaddai" (Num 24:3, 16). The term mš (= maššâ) "utterance" means, lit., what one says when he "raises" his voice, an action conveyed in the idiom nâšâ qôl "to raise one's voice." In biblical literature, Heb. maššâ often defines prophetic utterances. See c above. It is the message of the god El (Heb. ² El) which was revealed to Balaam, and which the gods who visited him at night had related to him. The gods came "to him" (² lwh), written with aleph instead of ayin. This shift reflects the interplay of the prepositional forms ^c al and ^c el in certain phases of Heb. and Aram., and recalls the Aram. form ^c alôhî "to him."

⁵ The elliptical clause kh yip^cl (= kôh yip^cal) is to be taken as stative-passive: "So will it be done." The verb p^cl "to do" resonates in this inscription. (See note 9 below). The phrase bî'p^ch (= bêlâ^c ² ahra^cdh) is best taken adverbially: "without anything coming after, surviving into the future." The form ² h^cdh (= ² ahra^cdh) resembles that of Heb. hâl^cdh "further on, beyond" (Num 17:11; 32:19).

⁶ The term ^c m (= ^c am), in ^c mh (= ^c ammôh) "his intimates," is usually taken to mean "people, nation," but it essentially connotes "clan, family." See Levine: 1989:142, s.v. Lev 21:4; Good 1983.

⁷ The text reads ² hwkn (= ² ahawwâkûm) "I will relate to you." The verb hw "to show, tell," is common to the WS languages. Cf. Job 15:17: ² ahawwêkâ, šema^c li "I will tell you; hear me!"

⁸ The previously unattested plural, šdyn, is best vocalized šaddâyîn "Shaddai-gods" on the model of the Aram. gentilic plural Yehûdâyyîn "those of Judah; Judeans" (Qere) in Dan 3:12. In fact, the frequent Heb. singular, šaddâi, is also gentilic, and is best translated "the one of the mountain," referring to divine beings who inhabit mountains, or associated with them in myth. As such, šaddâi would be cognate with Akk. šaddâ-u "mountain dweller." Cf. CAD š 1:43, s.v. šaddû^ca; HAL 1319-1321, s.v. šaddâi (see e above). Heb. šaddâi is closely associated in biblical literature with ² El, the presiding deity in the Deir 'Alla inscriptions. The Deir 'Alla šaddâyîn are deities allied with the other group of ² lhn (= ² elâhîn) "gods" who were opposing the chief god, El. The hypostasis of Shaddai in biblical literature is realized in personal names such as Amnîšaddâi "Shaddai is my kin" (Num 1:6), and šurîšaddâi "Shaddai is my rock" (Num 1:12).

⁹ Gods are given to action, a thought conveyed by the verb p^cl "to do." Deir 'Alla p^cl^c lhn (= pe^cullôt^c elâhîn) "the acts of the gods," recalls biblical mah p^cal^c El "What El is about to do" (Num 23:24).

¹⁰ For the biblical attestations of the Heb. term mô^ced, Deir 'Alla mw^cd, see g above. On the high ridges of Mount Zaphon, referred to as har mô^ced "the mountain of the divine council," El and his council assembled (Isa 14:13). The notion that gods made common cause and "banded together" (² tyhwh) in divine assemblies to deal with problems on earth and in heaven is pervasive in ancient Near Eastern literature; cf. Polley 1980; Mullen 1992. It is interesting to read here that the Shaddai-gods "established, set up" (Piel nšbw = nîššebû) a divine council, whereas Ps 82:1 employs the Niphal, stative stem of the same verb: ² elôhîm nîššab ba^cadat^c El "God stands up in the assembly of El."

¹¹ The text is restored to read šgr, the first part of the goddess' name. Her full name is given near the end of COMBINATION I as šgr w^cštr "Shagar and Ishtar" (see below, Note 17 [name partially restored], and Note 26 [complete name]). As first noted by Hoftijzer, this composite divine name evokes the biblical expression: šegar alâpêkâ w^c âštorêt šô^cnekâ "the issue of your herds and the fertility of your flocks" (Deut 7:13; 18:51; 28:4). In that expression, the plural of âštorêt, namely, âštarôt, loses its status in divine nomenclature and comes to mean "fertility," the major attribute of the goddess in question. In contrast, the component šgr is hypostasized here. Note the Punic personal name, bdšgr "servant / worshipper of Shagar," which demonstrates the same hypostasis; Benz 1972:163. It may be pure coincidence, but in the inscriptions from Emar, a Late Bronze Age town on the Euphrates, divine ša-ag-ga-ar is listed as the recipient of offerings alongside the goddess Nin-kur, suggesting that this name may be that of a goddess. In any event, the context at Emar is suggestive for comparison with the inscriptions from Deir 'Alla. The principal text (no. 378) is a list of gods and goddesses to whom offerings were brought. It begins by referring to Dagan as "Lord of cattle" (EN bu-[ga-ri]), and there is further reference to "Ashtar of the stars" (As-tar MUL) and to "Ishtar, lady of the water sources" (Inanna GAŠAN e-ni); Arnaud 1986:372, no. 378, lines 1, *12, 39, 44. It is surprising to find in a WS inscription the masculine form of the name of the goddess, namely, štr, which is normal for East Semitic (cf. Akk. štar), instead of the feminine form, Heb. âštorêt, Phoen.-Punic štrr,

'Sew up, close up¹² the heavens with dense cloud, That darkness exist there, not brilliance¹³; ^h Obscurity and not clarity; So that you instill dread in dense darkness. And — never utter a sound again!"	# Isa 4:5; 50:10; 59:9; 60:19; 62:1; 3; Ezek 1:4; 13, 27-28; 10:4; Joel 2:10; Amos 5:20; Hab 3:11; 2 Sam 22:13 Ps 18:13; Job 22:11-14	Ishtar]¹⁷ [skilled diviner.¹⁸ To skilled diviners shall one take you, and to an oracle; [To] a perfumer of myrrh and a priestess.¹⁹ [Who] covers his body [with oil], And rubs himself with olive oil. To one bearing an offering in a horn;²⁰ One augurer after another, and yet another. As one augurer broke away from his colleagues.²¹ The strikers²² departed []
"It shall be that the swift and crane will shriek insult to the eagle, And a nest of vultures shall cry out in response. The stork, the young of the falcon and the owl, The chicks of the heron, sparrow and cluster of eagles; Pigeons and birds, [and fowl in the sky]."¹⁴	f Ezek 31:13; 32:4 j Jer 25:34-36; 51:23; Ezek 34:5-10; Amos 1:2; Zech 11:3; 13:7 k Jer 17:23; 32:33; 35:13; Prov 1:8; 4:1; 8:33	The Admonitions are Heeded; The Malevolent Gods are Punished, the Goddess Rescued, and the Land Saved (lines 14-18) They heard incantations from afar.²³ [] Then disease was unleashed,²⁴ And all beheld acts of distress.²⁵ Shagar-and-Ishtar did not²⁶ [] The piglet [drove out] the leopard; And [the] drove out the young of [the].²⁷ [] double offerings. And he beheld []
Balaam Acts to Save the Goddess and the Land (lines 13-14) Heed the admonition,^h adversaries of Sha[gar-and-

Ug. ^c*ftt*. And yet reference must be to a goddess, because the verbs of address are consistently feminine. The counterpart male aspect, expressed in Moabite and South-Arabian as ^c*ftt*, Ug. ^c*ftt*, cannot be intended here. As will be clarified in due course, the Deir 'Alla goddess Shagar-and-Ishtar expresses the synthesis of Ishtar and Venus. See Note 13 below.

¹² It is appropriate to speak of sewing up the heavens, since they are depicted as a tent flap (Ps 104:2). The verb skr "to close up, dam" is employed in Gen 8:2 to describe the shutting of the wells of the deep after the Flood.

¹³ The text reads hsk w'l ngh "darkness and not brilliance," a contrast well attested in biblical literature, where Heb. nôgah is most often associated with the light of heavenly bodies. See h above. In post-biblical Jewish literature, nôgah is the name given to Venus (Levy 1964 3:334). The synthesis of Ishtar-Venus in Mesopotamian culture is best known from the so-called Venus Tablets of Ammîsaduqa newly edited by Reiner-Pingree (1975; 1981).

¹⁴ The long list of birds, mostly birds of prey, is unusual. All may be identified, and many are included in the category of forbidden fowl in Lev 11 and Deut 14. Deir 'Alla sdh "owl" is known from the Aram. treaties from Sefire (KAI 22, line 33; see below, 2.82). The restoration: [^p bšmyn] "[fowl in the sky]" is by Puech 1987.

¹⁵ Puech 1987 restores: wf/yhšl.bjqr "shall flay the cattle," based on the occurrence of the verb hšl "to peel off, hull" (Akk. ḫašālu) in an unidentified fragment, which reads: bqr.ḫšl.wy²kl "Let him skin cattle and eat."

¹⁶ Phonetically, Deir 'Alla qb^c "hyena" is realized in post-biblical Heb. as šabū'a (Levy 1964 4:166).

¹⁷ The text reads šm^cw mwsr (= Heb. šim'e-ā mūsār) "heed the admonition." This is biblical diction. See k above. The name of the goddess is partially restored.

¹⁸ The text is restored: hškm "skilled diviner" from ensuing hškmn "to skilled diviners." Cf. Isa 3:3 ḥakam ḥarāšim "one skilled in incantations" which is parallel with nebôn laḥaš "one expert in spells." In Gen 41:8, ḥakāmūn is listed alongside mekāšepīm "soothsayers" and in Exod 7:11 with ḥarṭūmīm "magicians."

¹⁹ The feminine noun nyh, lit. "responder, answerer" is compared by Hoffjizer (1976:212, notes 79-82) with Akk. āpiltu, a known role at Mari. CAD A 1:170; "female answerers." Cf. in biblical usage ma'aneh ²*elōhīm* "a divine response" (1 Kgs 18:24; Prov 16:1). In fact, all of the practitioners listed are women: khnh "priestess," rqht nr "perfumer of myrrh," and nyh.

²⁰ The text reads: lnš^c 2xr.qm "to one bearing an offering [in] a horn," taking 2xr as a cognate of Ug. uzr "offering." The precise sense remains uncertain.

²¹ The term hšb (Heb. ḥōšēb) is understood as one who "calculates," hence: "augurer." The text reads hšb, hšb, whšb, which may be taken as distributive: "augurers of all sorts." Puech 1987 restores ²*nuq* "he broke away" on the basis of an unidentified fragment.

²² Puech 1987 restores hbsn from an unidentified fragment and explains it on the basis of Aramaic-Syriac hbs, a variant of hbt "to strike, mill, crush," (Levy 1964 2:7). Hoffjizer cites Syriac ḥebšā "crowd." Cf. Brockelmann 1966:211. These are the ones sent to afflict the adversaries of the goddess.

²³ The text reads wšm^cw hršn mn rḥq "They heard incantations from afar." Cf. Note 18 above, ḥakam ḥarāšim. See Levy 1964 2:119, for post-biblical and Aram. forms, ḥārāš and ḥaršā "incantations." Cf. Brockelmann 1966:259 and Sokoloff 1990:216.

²⁴ Puech 1987 restores on the basis of a fragment: [wḥpyth ḫly], lit. "He opened to disease."

²⁵ All beheld the distress inflicted on the adversaries of the goddess. Deir 'Alla qqn (pl.) reflects a phonetic variant of Heb. forms such as šūqāh "distress, oppression" (Isa 8:22), and masc. šōq (Dan 9:25).

²⁶ This is the only place where the full name of the goddess, Šgr-w^cštr is preserved. The name is followed by what appears to be a prefixed negative l- "not." The sense would be that the goddess "did not" sew up the heavens or, to put it another way, that she did not bring devastation on the land.

²⁷ Order and calm were restored. Domestic animals drove out wild beasts. The form hqrqt "she drove out" is the Haphel 3rd fem. perf. sing. of qrq, a phonetic variant of rq "to run away, abscond" (Job 30:17). HAL 841.

COMBINATION II:

EXCERPT A: El builds a necropolis (lines 6-7)El satisfied himself with [lovmaking];¹And then El fashioned an eternal house;²

[A house].

A house where no traveler³ enters,²

Nor does a bridegroom enter there.

EXCERPT B: A Half-existence in Sheol (line 8)

Worm rot from a grave.

From the reckless affairs of men,

And from the lustful desires of people³EXCERPT C: The Rejection of a Seer (line 9)

If it is for counsel, one will not counsel with you!

Or for advising him, one will not take advice!⁴EXCERPTS D-E: More on Conditions in Sheol (lines 10-11)From the bed they cover themselves with a wrap.⁵If you hate him, he will be mortally afflicted.⁵

If you []

[Worm rot] is under your head.⁶

You shall lie on your eternal bedding,

To pass away⁶ to []

1 Prov 7:18

20 Qoh 12:5

22 Sam 12:4

30 Isa 14:19

31 Isa 14:11;

Job 7:5;

17:4; 21:26;

25:6

32 Isa 14:19

33 Isa 14:9, 18

34 Gen 37:35;

Deut 32:22;

Isa 14:9-15;

1 Sam 2:6;

Isa 38:10;

18; Ezek

32:21, 37;

Hos 13:14;

Psa 18:6;

30:4; Prov

9:18; 17:13;

30:16; Qoh

9:10

EXCERPTS F-G: Kings and Other Corpses in Sheol

(lines 12-15)

[] in their heart.

The corpse moans in his heart?⁷

He moans []

[] a daughter.

There, kings behold [].⁷There is no mercy when Death seizes a suckling.⁸

And a suckling [];

And a suckling [];

A suckling [];

There [] shall be.

The heart of the corpse is desolate⁹

As he approaches [Sheol].

[].

To the edge of She[ol],¹⁰

And the shadow of the hedge [].

EXCERPTS H-I: An Oracle: The Quests of Kings and Seers Come to Naught (lines 15-17)"The quest of a king is moth rot,"¹¹

And the quest of [];

[] seers.

¹ The text reads byl lmn (= bēt ḥōlāmīn), with the abstract pl. connoting "eternity." Further on, in EXCERPT D-E, we find the same concept of the grave as an eternal resting place, expressed by the plural mškby lmyka (= mškābē ḥōlāmīkā) "your eternal bedding." As noted by Hofstijzer, Qoh 12:5 attests the sing. term: "For the human being is going to his eternal house" (bēt ḥōlāmō). The Deir 'Alla inscriptions antedate the biblical Qoheloth. Cf. Hallo 1993:187f.; Williams 1977:500 [eternal house = grave]. In post biblical Jewish literature, bēt ḥā' ḥōlāmīn (also: bēt ḥōlāmīn), and related sing. forms, may refer either to the Temple of Jerusalem (after 1 Kgs 8:13), or to a burial ground. Levy 1964 1:224-228, esp. 227, s.v. bēt ḥōlām. Cf. Sokoloff 1990:95. The sing. form occurs in an Aram. deed of grant from Nahal Ḥever on the Dead Sea, dated July 13, 120 CE. In it a father states to his wife, among other provisions, that he bequeaths his property to her "from the day I go to my eternal house (byl lmy = iebēt ḥōlāmī) and forever." Yadin, Greenfield and Yardeni 1996:384, line 21, passim. Cf. also below, p. 156., n. 3.

² hik "traveler" is matched in 2 Sam 12:4 by the hapax legomenon in BH hēlek "traveler."

³ The parallelism phzy/hgy "reckless affairs/lustful desires" recalls Ps 147:10: šōqē hā'ā'š "the lustful desires of man," related to Heb. rešāqāh "desire" (Gen 3:16: 4:7; Cant 7:11). Gen 49:4 has paḥāz kammayim "as unstable as water," and cf. participial pōhēz "shifless" in Judg 9:4; Zeph 3:4, as well as abstract paḥāzīt in Job 23:32.

⁴ The one being addressed is told that his counsel will no longer be sought. We have the parallelism of ḥ (= Heb. ḥšāh) "advice" and mik (= mulk) "counsel." A similar thought is expressed further on, in EXCERPTS H-I. In post-biblical Heb. and Jewish Aram. the Niph'al construction nimlak b- and lthpe'el, yimelek mean "to take counsel with," as does the Deir 'Alla lthpe'el lymlik b- "He will not take counsel with." Levy 1964 3:128-130 s.v. mālak, melak. DNWSI 634 s.v. mik 2. Sokoloff 1990:310, s.v. mik #2.

⁵ The translation is conjectural, at best, and not fully comprehensible, even though the text is clearly legible as hn lšn'n y'nā.

⁶ hlyq "to pass away, disappear" is to be related to Akk. halāqu, and Ug. hlyq, realized in BH as hlyq III "to pass away, die," as distinct from hlyq "to be smooth; to divide"; Levine 1995:139-149.

⁷ The term nqr "corpse" is crucial to the interpretation of COMBINATION II. It is understood as a cognate of BH nēser "carrion, corpse" in Isa 14:19: "You have been cast from your grave like loathsome carrion (kenēser nqr ḥb "like a trampled corpse"). The qoph of the Deir 'Alla language realizes proto-Semitic ḥod, which is often realized in Heb. as a ḡade. Post-biblical Heb. attests a related noun nēsel, or nāḡāl "putrid flesh" of a corpse (Mishnah, Nāzir 7:2, Ḥilḥot 2:1), and the proto-Semitic ḥod is preserved in the Arabic verb naḡala "to extract, remove" Ibn-Manzur 1956 2:663, s.v. naḡala. Others have related Deir 'Alla nqr to the better attested Heb. noun nēser "offshoot, scion" (Isa 11:1: 60:21), interpreting the Deir 'Alla text to refer to a dead child.

⁸ The line is difficult to interpret with certainty. It reads: lyš bmyqḥ mvr 'l rḥm, lit. "There is not, when Death seizes a suckling, mercy." The noun l (= Heb. āl) "suckling" occurs repeatedly in broken lines, suggesting that the vision of Sheol focuses on infant mortality. Death, or perhaps the god Mot, personified, snatches away infants mercilessly. Cf. āl yāmīm "infant," in contrast to zāqēn "graybeard" in Isa 65:20. Most relevant is Isa 49:15: "Can a woman forget her suckling child (ālāh), withholding compassion (merahēm) from the fruit of her womb?" Others prefer to translate l rḥm as "suckling of the womb," reflecting Heb. reḥem "womb."

⁹ The text reads bb nqr šhh. I take Deir 'Alla šhh to be a variant of Heb. šḥ, as in Isa 6:11: "Until such a time that towns lie desolate (šim šā'ā' ḥrim) without inhabitants."

¹⁰ Restoring l[ḥ]l "to Sheol" on the basis of what follows: lqsh š[ḥ]l "to the edge of Sheol." The corpse groans as it approaches Sheol, which is surrounded by a hedge or wall (mgdr).

¹¹ ssh (= sāshāh) "moth rot" is taken to be a cognate of BH sās "rot" parallel with ḥḥ "moth" in Isa 51:8.

Your quest is distant from you. To know how to deliver an oracle to his people. You have been condemned for your speech,	Num 22:11, 17; 23:8, 11, 25-27; Job 5:3	And [banned] from pronouncing words of execration." ¹
--	--	---

REFERENCES

Text: Hoftijzer and van der Kooij 1976; 1991; Studies; Arnaud 1986; Benz 1972; Brockelmann 1966; Caquot and Lemaire 1971; Good 1983; Hacken 1984; Hallo 1993; Ibn Manzur 1956; Ibrahim and van der Kooij 1991; Levine 1989; 1995; Levy 1964; Mullen 1992; Polley 1980; Puech 1987; Reiner and Pingree 1975; 1981; Sokoloff 1990; Williams 1977; Yadin, Greenfield and Yardeni 1996.

4. HEBREW INSCRIPTIONS

THE SILOAM TUNNEL INSCRIPTION (2.28)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

The inscription was discovered in 1880 on the wall of a Jerusalem tunnel that leads from the Gihon Spring to the pool of Siloam. The inscription occupies the lower half of a prepared panel that is approximately 0.50 m in height and 0.66 m in width. The tunnel winds through the Mizzi Ahmar dolomite rock for a length of approximately 533 m (corresponding roughly to the inscription's 1,200 cubits).¹ It is essentially an enlargement of natural karstic dissolution channels,² and was executed as part of a comprehensive design by Hezekiah's town planners (2 Kgs 20:20; 2 Chr 32:3-4, 30; Isa 22:11; Ben Sira 48:17). Both the execution of the tunnel and the inscription demonstrate careful adeptness. Cut by two groups of workmen progressing towards each other,³ the tunnel's floor required accurate calculation since it runs smoothly at a 0.06% average slope with the height differential between the spring and exit being a very moderate gradient (≈ 0.32 m).⁴

This commemorative inscription is not an "official"/"royal" inscription, but an "unofficial"/"common person" type text.⁵ In this sense it is unique among ancient Near Eastern building/display inscriptions. It is not concerned with the recounting of the complete history of the excavation of the tunnel.⁶ Instead, it is very much preoccupied with a specific moment on a specific day — the culmination of a great and exciting engineering project.⁷

In spite of a recent attempt to date the inscription on paleographic and archaeological grounds to the Hasmonean period,⁸ the vast majority of scholars see the inscription dating to ca. 700 BCE (i.e. a product of Hezekiah's reign).⁹

[The day of]¹⁰ the breach.^a 11

This is the record of how the tunnel was breached.
While [the excavators were wielding¹²] their pickaxes,

a Isa 51:1

each man towards his co-worker, and while there were yet three cubits for the brea[ch,]
a voice [was hea]rd
each man calling to his co-worker;

¹ Contrast the straight-line (i.e., rectilinear) distance from the spring to the pool which is only 320 m.

² Gill 1991; 1994; 1996.

³ The reason for having two crews digging simultaneously was to halve the cutting time — an essential since an Assyrian attack was imminent. See the discussion of Abells and Arbib 1995:6.

⁴ Gill 1991:1469; Shiloh 1993:711.

⁵ Parker 1997:38-39. Cf. above pp. xxiii f.

⁶ Sasson 1982:113.

⁷ Shea 1988:431-435.

⁸ Rogerson and Davies 1996:138-149.

⁹ Hacken, Cross, McCarter, Yardeni, Lemaire, Eshel, and Hurvitz 1997:41-50, 68-69; Hendel 1996:233-237. Also note that geology may provide a clue to when the tunnel was dug through the dating of a stalactite. See Gill 1996:22.

¹⁰ See Younger 1994:551 and nn. 29-30 for a discussion of the different suggested restorations.

¹¹ The inscription contains deliberate spaces that function as idea dividers. See Sasson 1982:113.

¹² For the possible restorations, see Younger 1994:544.

because there was a cavity ¹³ in the rock (extending) from the south to [the north].	b 2 Chr 32:30	Then the water flowed from the spring ¹⁴ to the pool, a distance of one thousand and two hundred cubits. One hundred cubits was the height of the rock above the heads of the excavat[ors]. ¹⁵
So on the day of the breach, the excavators struck, each man to meet his co-worker, pick-axe against pick-[a]xe.

¹³ The meaning of zdh has been the crux for this inscription. For a survey of the different proposals, see Younger 1994:549-550 and Parker 1997:52, n. 4. The geological conclusions of Gill 1996 seem to demand a geological type meaning for zdh: something like "cavity" or "fissure." See Lancaster and Long 1999:15-26; Younger 1994.

¹⁴ For mws, cf. 2 Chr 32:30.

¹⁵ One hundred cubits (150 feet) was the maximum thickness of the rock at only one point, namely at the northern loop of the tunnel nearest the Gihon spring. It was not the average height.

REFERENCES

Text: HAE 1:178-189; AHI 68 (4.116); SSI 1:21-23; KAI 1:34; 2:186-188. Translations: ANET 321; DOTT 209-211; TUAT 2/4:555-556; WAI 64-71; Studies: Abells and Arbib 1995; Gill 1991; 1994; 1996; Hackett, Cross, McCarter, Yardeni, Lemaire, Eshel, and Hurvitz 1997; Hendel 1996; Lancaster and Long 1999; Pardee 1996; Parker 1997:36-42, 152-154; Rogerson and Davies 1996; Sasson 1982:111-117; Shea 1988; Shiloh 1993; Younger 1994.

5. PHOENICIAN INSCRIPTIONS

THE INSCRIPTION OF KING YAḤIMILK (2.29)

Stanislav Segert

The inscription on the limestone block (35 x 70 x 45 cm) was found in the ruins of the Crusader Castle in Byblos (Gébil) in 1929 and published in the same year. Its seven lines are written over a text in "Byblos hieroglyphic" that is no longer clearly visible. Yaḥimilk's building inscription can be dated to about 950 BCE. It is now kept in the National Museum in Beirut.

Building inscription (lines 1-3a)	a 1 Kgs 9:1	and the assembly ⁸ of holy gods ⁸ of Byblos/
Building ¹ which Yaḥimilk, ² the king of	b Ezek 27:9	Gubal
Byblos/Gubal ³ ^b built. ⁴	c 1 Kgs 6:1-2	prolong ^k the days ⁹ of Yaḥimilk
He rebuilt ⁴ ^d all ruins of these buildings.	d Micah 3:12;	and his years over Byblos/Gubal,
	Isa 58:12	for [he] ¹⁰ (is) the righteous ¹¹ ⁱ king
	e Gen 24:7;	and just king
	Jonah 1:9	at the face/before the holy ¹² (gods) of Byblos/
The king deserves to be rewarded by gods (lines 3b-7)	f 1 Kgs 17:17	Gubal.
May Baal/Master ⁵ of Heavens ⁶ ^e	g Ps 89:7
and Baala[t]/Mistress ⁷ ^f of Byblos/Gubal	h Exod 20:12;
	Deut 5:16;
	6:2; 11:9;
	25:15; 32:47; Ps 61:7; Prov 3:2 1 Ps 140:14; Deut 9:5

¹ The word bt can mean various kinds of buildings, including "temple" or "palace."

² The reconstruction is based on Assyrian syllabic cuneiform ia-ḫi-mil-ki. The name can be interpreted as "may (the divine) King keep alive."

³ In the syllabic cuneiform texts from the 14th century BCE, the name is given as gublu (with the case ending -u). In the Hebrew Bible the form g'bal is attested, with reduction of the first vowel. The Phoenician form can be reconstructed as /gubal/. The Greek form Bublos goes back to the second millennium BCE, when in archaic Greek gu-* changed into /bu-/. This city was important economic and cultural center in antiquity.

⁴ Lit., "he revived." Cf. 1 Chr 11:8.

⁵ Baal (b^cl) "master (of the house)," "Lord," "Chief" was originally an epithet of this god, named primarily /had(a)d/. He was compared to Greek Zeus.

⁶ Phoenician b^clmm is rendered in the cuneiform writing as ba-al-ša-me-me, in Greek as baalsamēn.

⁷ The usual form is b^clt. At the end of line 3 the final letter is omitted. This goddess is mentioned already in the 16th century BCE. She was later compared to Greek Aphrodite.

⁸ Assembly of gods is often mentioned in Canaanite religious texts, including those from Ugarit.

⁹ The word pair "days" — "years" is attested also in the HB; cf. Dahood 1972:203-205, and above p. 140, n. 9.

¹⁰ The supposed equivalent [h³] at the very end of the inscription is missing.

¹¹ The word pair indicating "righteousness" and "uprightness" appears in ancient Canaanite poetry, e.g. KTU 1.14:I:12-13. Cf. 1 Kgs 3:6.

¹² As "holy" (qdš), gods are characterized only in ancient Canaanite tradition.

REFERENCES

Text: KAI #4: 2:6-7; SSI 3:17-19. Translations: ANET, 653. Driver 1954 pl. 48, 1.7. Studies: Avishur 1976:7f., 12f.

THE KULAMUWA INSCRIPTION (2.30)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

The inscription, which is carved on a large orthostat, was discovered during the German excavations at Zinjirli (= Sam'al) in 1902. The orthostat's relief pictures Kulamuwa pointing with his right hand to divine symbols that fill part of the space at the top of the monument. The text, written in North Phoenician with Aramaic influences, dates around 830-820 BCE and belongs to the "memorial" genre (Miller 1974:9-18).

It is a highly rhetorical work utilizing symmetrical design. It divides into two roughly equal sections (lines 1-8; 9-16) by a line drawn across the monument and a double introduction (line 1 and line 9). There are two major units in each section that create a chiasm: A "The past contrasted with the present" (lines 2-5a), B "External or foreign affairs" (lines 5b-8) :: B' "Internal or domestic affairs" (10-13), A' "Curse: the future" (14-16).

Introduction: Identification (line 1)

I am Kulamuwa,¹ the son of Hayya.²

The Past Contrasted With the Present (lines 2-5a)

Gabbar³ ruled over Y^{dy},⁴

but he achieved nothing.

BNH⁵ also (ruled over Y^{dy}),

but he achieved nothing.

And then my father Hayya,

but he achieved nothing.

And then my brother Ša'il,⁶

but he achieved nothing.

But I am Kulamuwa, son of TML⁷ —

what I achieved

(my) predecessors had not achieved.

^a Ps 136:18

^b Exod 22:7;

10; 24:11;

Deut 25:11;

Judg 5:26;

1 Sam 22:12;

26:9;

2 Sam 15:5;

1 Kgs 13:4;

Job 28:9

^c Exod 24:17;

Deut 4:24;

9:3

^d Deut 23:5;

2 Sam 10:6;

1 Kgs 15:18;

2 Kgs 7:6; 16:7; Isa 7:20; Neh 13:2

External Affairs (lines 5b-8)

The house of my father was in the midst of mighty kings.⁸

And each one stretched forth his hand⁹ to fight.⁹

But I was in the hand of the kings like a fire consuming⁹ the beard and like a fire consuming the hand.¹⁰

Now the king of the Danunians was more powerful than I (or: too powerful for me),¹¹

But I engaged¹² ^a against him the king of Assyria.

A young woman was given for a sheep and a young man for a garment.¹³

¹ The name Klmw is undoubtedly Anatolian. Starke investigates the Luwian components kula and nuwa, and defines the name as "die Wehrhaftigkeit des Heeres besitzend" ("possessing the fighting ability of the army"). See Starke 1990:236, n. 806.

² This individual is mentioned in Shalmaneser III's inscriptions (see COS 2.113A, note 10; see also RIMA 3:16 [lines i.42, 53]; 3:23 [ii.83]).

³ Also mentioned by Shalmaneser III. See COS 2.113A, p. 263 and RIMA 3:23 [ii.83].

⁴ Y^{dy} is the ancient non-Semitic name of Zinjirli. It was also known as Sam'al (cf. below 2.38 = Bar-Rakib 2-3; 2.35 = Zakkur 7; and Assyrian texts from Tiglath-Pileser III to Assurbanipal). The vocalization of Y^{dy} is still uncertain.

⁵ See Tropper 1993:32 and esp. plate 6; Lipiński 1974:45-61, esp. p. 49. While bnh appears to be the reading of line 3, the reading in line 16 appears to be bnh.

⁶ The name is attested in Hebrew: Ša'il. See Swiggers 1983:137.

⁷ For the reading TML, see Tropper 1993:33 and Young 1993. Some scholars have suggested that this is the name of Kulamuwa's mother. See Gibson SSI 3:36; Swiggers 1981:2, n. 6; 1983:138; and Young 1993:96-98.

⁸ Avishur 1976:10; Tropper 1993:35.

⁹ There are two ways in which the term hym has been understood: 1) "to eat, devour, consume" (see Müller 1985:638; Gibson SSI 3:34; Fales 1979:10); and 2) "to make war, fight" (see Tropper 1993:35; Swiggers 1983:139; Krahmalkov 1974:39-43). Cf. 1 Sam 22:12.

¹⁰ There are two possible interpretations of ʔʕ: 1) ʔʕ is the relative pronoun attached to km. Thus the translation would be something like "And I was in the hand of the kings as if I had eaten my beard and as if I had eaten my hand" (see Röhlig, KAI 2:31; Fales 1979:12; Müller 1985:638); and 2) ʔʕ is the word "fire" (cf. ʔʕ ʕkl to the biblical phrase "a consuming fire"). Here the term is used as a symbol of the humiliation of an enemy in the burning of the beard and hand. The context seems to demand that a description of earlier difficulties be followed at this point in the text by triumph. We would expect Kulamuwa to harm the very kings who stretched out the hand to destroy his dynasty (see Sperling 1988:331; Tropper 1993:36-37).

¹¹ Cf. the Amarna formula da-an-nu LÜ.SA.GAZ.MEŠ eli-nu :: "the Hapiru are too powerful for us" or "the Hapiru are more powerful than us" EA 299:18-19; 305:21-22; 307:8-10. See Liverani 1991:180, n. 13; and Parker 1997:222, n. 1.

¹² The "hiring" of armies was not unusual in the ancient Near East. See Lipiński 1974:50; Sperling 1988:332. Dion 1997:107 and note 118; and Parker 1997:80-81. For other explanations, see: Landsberger 1948:51; and Garbini 1977a:116-118.

¹³ This is the most difficult sentence of the inscription. The problem is in identifying the subject of the verb ym. There are at least five possibilities: 1) The Danunian king who had bad economic conditions after the Assyrian intervention (Gibson SSI 3:37; Müller 1985:639); 2) the Assyrian king whom Kulamuwa boasts of hiring cheaply (Rosenthal 1955:654; Fales 1979:19); 3) a parenthetical statement describing the heavy tribute Kulamuwa had to pay the king of Assyria (Röhlig, KAI 2:33); 4) a parenthetical statement describing the depressed economic conditions

Introduction: Identification (line 9)

I am Kulamuwa, son of Hayya.
I sat upon the throne of my father.

Internal Affairs (lines 10-13)

Before the former kings, the *Muškabīm*¹⁴ were living like dogs.¹⁵

But I was to some a father;
and to some I was a mother;
and to some I was a brother.

Now whoever had never possessed a sheep,¹⁶
I made lord of a flock.

And whoever had never possessed an ox,
I made owner of a herd and owner of silver and lord of gold.

And whoever from his childhood had never seen linen,

e Ps 59:16

f Ezek 6:4,6;
2 Chr 14:4;
37:4

now in my days wore byssos.

And I took the Muškabīm by the hand, and they showed (me) affection¹⁷ like the affection of a fatherless child toward (its) mother.

Curse: The Future (lines 14-16)

Now whoever of my sons who will sit (reign) in my place and damages this inscription, may the Muškabīm not honor the Ba^crīrm,¹⁸ and may the Ba^crīrm not honor the Muškabīm.

And whoever strikes out this inscription, may Ba^cal Šemed,¹⁹ (the god) of Gabbar, strike his head;

and may Ba^cal Hammon,²⁰ (the god) of Bamah,²¹ and Rakib-El,²² the lord of the house (i.e., dynasty), strike his head.

within Y^cdy prior to the Assyrian intervention (O'Connor 1977:226); and 5) a climatic statement concerning the dramatic fall of prices from the Assyrian king's intervention. The inverted word order and the parallel of 2 Kgs 7:1-16 strengthen this interpretation. See Tropper 1993:38; and Liverani 1991:177-184.

¹⁴ Meaning is still uncertain. Perhaps, the poor, indigenous population of Sam'al. See the discussion of Swiggers 1983:142-143; Dion 1997:253-254; 285-286.

¹⁵ Tropper 1993:39-41, plate 8. For other interpretations, Landsberger 1948:52; SSJ 3:37; Müller 1985:639; O'Connor 1977:22. Concerning Ps 59:16 see Tropper 1994:87-95.

¹⁶ Lit., "see the face." See Landsberger 1948:52 and O'Connor 1977:22.

¹⁷ See Dion 1974:88-89; Zevit 1990:342-343; and Tropper 1993:43-44.

¹⁸ Meaning uncertain. This is no doubt a social group at Sam'al and is often seen by commentators as referring to the dominant, nomadic, immigrant Aramaic minority in the land (as opposed to the mškbm above). The term may have more ethnic than social connotations; Dion 1997:253-254; 285-286.

¹⁹ See Tropper 1993:45.

²⁰ For this deity see Xella 1991:229-234.

²¹ See note 5 above.

²² Rakib-El occurs also in Kulamuwa's scepter inscription (KAI 25:4-6; see Lemaire 1990:323-327) and in later inscriptions from Zenjirli: Hadad (below, 2.36 = KAI 214:2, 3, 11, 18), Panamuwa (below, 2.37 = KAI 215:22), and Bar-Rakib (below, 2.38 = KAI 216:5; 217:7-8). For recent discussions of this deity see van der Toorn 1995:1296-1297; Teixidor 1987:371; Schmidt 1994:135, n. 135.

REFERENCES

Text: Tropper 1993:27-46; KAI 1:4-5; 2:30-34, 338; SSJ 3:30-39; Translations and Studies: Avishur 1976; Dion 1974; 1995; 1997; Fales 1979; Garbini 1977a; Ishida 1985; Krahmalkov 1974; Landsberger 1948; Lemaire 1990; Lipiński 1974:45-61; Liverani 1991; Müller 1985; O'Connor 1977; Parker 1997:76-83; Rosenthal ANET 654; Sperling 1988; Swiggers 1981; 1983; Tropper 1993:27-46; 1994; Xella 1991; Zevit 1990.

THE AZATIWADA INSCRIPTION (2.31)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

In 1946, a Phoenician-Hieroglyphic Luwian bilingual inscription was discovered on portal orthostats at the Iron Age fortification of Karatepe on the west bank of the Çeyhan River in the ancient region of Cilicia, the modern province of Adana, Turkey. It is the longest extant Phoenician inscription and is preserved at three locations on the site: the Lower (North) Gate, the Upper (South) Gate, and on the skirt of a colossal divine statue which stood just inside the Upper Gate. The Lower Gate was carved on four orthostats in three columns and continues onto the base of a fifth orthostat and onto a stone lion. The text appears to date from the very end of the 8th century, or more likely from the beginning of the 7th century BCE.¹ Azatiwada was an agent of Awariku, the king of the Danunians (= Que*) and the text narrates his various accomplishments on behalf of the Danunians and his sovereign. For the Hieroglyphic Luwian (HL) inscription see COS 2.21 above.

¹ For the most recent discussion, see Hawkins 1995:1304.

Introduction: Epithets (i.1-2)

I am Azatiwada,

the blessed of Ba'al,² servant of Ba'al, whom Awariku,³ king of the Danunians, empowered.

Body: Azatiwada's Mighty Deeds (i.3-iii.2)General establishment of Azatiwada's reign (i.3-13)

Ba'al made me a father and a mother⁴ to the Danunians.

I caused the Danunians to live.⁵ ^c

I enlarged the land of the plain of Adana from East⁶ to West.⁷

Now there was in my days all good for the Danunians and abundance and luxury.

And I filled the granaries⁸ of the city of Pahar.⁹

And I acquired¹⁰ ^d horse upon horse, and shield upon shield, and army upon army, by the grace of Ba'al and the gods.¹¹

And I smashed the rebels;¹²

And I crushed¹³ all evil which was in the land.

And I established the house of my lord in goodness;

and I did good to the root ^e of my lord.

And I caused him to reign ^f upon the throne of his father.

And I made peace with every king.

And indeed every king made me as a father,¹⁴ ^g on account of my righteousness, my wisdom and the goodness of my heart.

^a 1 Kgs 10:28;
2 Chr 1:16

^b Deut 32:6;
32:18

^c Gen 50:18-20

^d 1 Kgs 10:26;
Isa 30:1;
Jer 4:20;
Ps 61:7;
Job 16:14;
Prov 21:6

^e Isa 11:1, 10

^f 1 Kgs 2:24

^g Gen 45:8;
Ps 109:14;
Isa 22:21

^h Josh 10:24;
Pss 8:7;
110:2;
1 Kgs 5:3;
2 Sam 22:39
(= Ps 18:39);
1 Sam 25:24;
Esther 8:3

Building of fortifications and their impact (i.13-ii.9)

I built strong fortifications¹⁵ in all the far regions of the borders,

in places where there had been evil men,
gang leaders,¹⁶

of whom not one man had ever been a vassal to the house of Mopsos;¹⁷

But I, Azatiwada, placed them under my feet.¹⁸ ^h

And I built fortifications in those places so that they,¹⁹ the Danunians, might dwell in the ease of their hearts.

And I humbled strong lands in the West, which no king who was before me ever humbled.

But I, Azatiwada, have humbled²⁰ them.

I brought them down.

I settled them in the far regions of my borders in the East.

And I settled the Danunians there.

And they were in my days on all the borders of the Plain of Adana from the East to the West, even²¹ in places which formerly were feared,
where a man feared to walk the road.

But in my days, (especially) mine, a woman can walk alone with her spindles,²²
by the grace of Ba'al and the gods.

Now there was in all my days abundance and luxury and good living and ease of heart for the Danunians and for all the Plain of Adana.

² The meaning of hbrk b'el is difficult. Some scholars suggest that hbrk b'el should be translated "chief official (habarakku) of Ba'al," arguing that hbrk is a loanword from Akk. abaraku (e.g. Lipiński 1974:45-46). Others understand hbrk b'el as a construct "the (one) blessed (by) of Ba'al" (e.g. Greenfield 1972:179). The HL seems to support a religious honorific. See now Rölli 1999:58 and Younger 1998:33-35. A further complication for hbrk being a loanword from Akk. abaraku is the fact that the title abaraku in the Neo-Assyrian period had been replaced by masennu (mašennu in Neo-Babylonian). See Millard 1994:7, n. 14.

³ Awariku is known from the inscriptions of Tiglath-Pileser III (COS 2.117A, note 4) and Sargon II. He is also mentioned in the Cebel Ires Dağı inscription (COS 3).

⁴ Cf. the Hittite inscription of Anitta where the phrase "father and mother" are used as a metonymy for "compassion."

⁵ For the phrase yhw n'k y' dnyim "I caused the Danunians to live," see Amadasi Guzzo 1984:109-118. Cf. the usage in Egyptian, as well as in the Amarna Letters (EA 94. 65, 69; 136. 43; 147. 9; 169. 7).

⁶ Lit. "the rising of the sun."

⁷ Lit. "its setting."

⁸ The term qrt is defined by Luwian ka-ru-na-zi "granaries, storehouses." Lipiński has attempted to link qrt with Akk. ekurru/ekurrāt (1974:47). See Rölli 1999:58.

⁹ Pahar (Pahri in Assyrian sources) is probably to be located at Misis (classical Mopsuestia). See also Rölli 1999:58.

¹⁰ Lit. "made." For the meaning of acquire, see Greenfield 1966:103-105 and DNWSI 926.

¹¹ On the term lm see Younger 1998:28-31. See also Rölli 1999:59.

¹² Gevitz understood wšbrt mlsm to mean "and the assembly of the (divine) intermediaries" (1990:145-158). But the Luwian text clearly has a verbal clause in the place where wšbrt mlsm occurs. Thus, it should be read as a verbal clause: "and I smashed the rebels." See Rölli 1999:59.

¹³ See Younger 1998:15, note 26, and also DNWSI 1233-1234.

¹⁴ The meaning is uncertain. See Bron 1979:60-62.

¹⁵ See DNWSI 381; Bron 1979:64; and Rölli 1999:59.

¹⁶ See Müller 1985:642.

¹⁷ Ibid. See also Vanschoonwinkel 1990:185-211.

¹⁸ Greenfield points out that the nuance of the figure is "to subjugate," or even closer to the idea "to conquer" (1971:253-268). Cp. Tukulti-Ninurta I's treatment of the captured Babylonian king Kaštiliaš: "I trod with my feet upon his lordly neck as though it were a footstool. Bound I brought him as a captive into the presence of Aššur, my lord" (RIMA 1:245).

¹⁹ For the nm suffix as prospective, see Pardee 1987:140.

²⁰ Cf. the use of n'k in the Mesha inscription with reference to Omri's oppression of Moab. See COS 2.23.

²¹ The HL seems to support understanding the Phoen. conjunction in the sense of "even." Cf. also Gibson SSI 3:59.

²² See Younger 1998:32-33.

Building the city and cultic innovations (ii.9–iii.2)

And I built this city.

And I gave it the name²³ Azatiwadaya,²⁴ since Ba'al²⁵ and Resheph of the stags²⁶ commissioned me to build.

So I built it,

by the grace of Ba'al and by the grace of Resheph of the stags, in abundance and in luxury and good living and in ease of heart, that it might be a guard (outpost) for the Plain of Adana and for the house of Mopsos.

since in my days there was for the land of the Plain of Adana abundance and luxury.²⁷

And there was never any night for the Danunians in my days.²⁷

And I built this city.

And I gave it the name Azatiwadaya.

I settled in it Ba'al KRNTYŠ.

Now all the river-land²⁸ shall offer a sacrifice to him:

a yearly sacrifice:²⁹ an ox;

and at the time of plowing: a sheep;

and at the time of reaping/harvesting: a sheep.

Closing: blessings and curses (iii.2–iv.3)Blessings (iii.2–11)

Now may Ba'al KRNTYŠ bless³⁰ *Azatiwada*³¹ with life and health,¹ and mighty strength over every king;

may Ba'al KRNTYŠ and all the gods of the city give Azatiwada length of days³² and multitude of years and good prosperity,³²

and mighty strength over every king.

J Judg 8:31;
Neh 9:7

J Ps 103:5

k Ps 29:11

I Mal 2:5;
Prov 3:2

m Deut 30:20;
Ps 21:5;
Prov 3:2

n Prov 3:10

o Gen 6:4

p Gen 14:19

q Ps 72:5,
17; 89:37-
38

And may this city be a possessor of grain and wine;³³ and may this people who dwell in it be possessors of herds and possessors of flocks and possessors of grain and wine.

And may they immeasurably bear children;

and may they immeasurably become mighty;

and may they immeasurably serve Azatiwada and the house of Mopsos,

by the grace of Ba'al and the gods.

Curses (iii.12–iv.1)

Now if a king among kings or a prince among princes,

if a man, who is a man of renown,³³ who shall erase the name of Azatiwada from this gate, and shall place (his) name (on it) —

if indeed he shall covet this city, and shall tear away this gate, which Azatiwada has made,

or shall make for himself a different gate, and place (his) name on it —

if from covetousness he shall tear (it) away —

if from hate or from evil he shall tear away this gate —

then shall Ba'al Shamem and El, creator of the earth,³⁴ and Shemesh, the eternal, and the whole group of the children of the gods erase that kingdom, and that king, and that man who is a man of renown.³⁵

Climactic invocation (IV.2-3)

Only may the name of Azatiwada be forever like the name of the sun and the moon!³⁵

²³ For the idiom "to place a name," see Bron 1979:87.

²⁴ Based on the HL "Azatiwadaya." See Röhlig 1999:59-60. For a similar episode, cf. Nimurta-kudurri-usur (COS 2.115B, lines iii.1'-22a').

²⁵ Ba'al = Tarhunzas.

²⁶ Phoen. spm has been defined either as "he-goats" or "birds." Bron 1979:88, 185 and Müller 1985:643 favor the latter; Hawkins 1995:1300, Weippert 1969:200-210, the former. Garbini 1992:93-94 has proposed: "Resheph of the talon." Amadasi Guzzo and Archi argue on the basis of the equivalence of *KAL and ršp spm that the graphical representation in the HL of a deer makes "stag" a superior definition to "bird" (1980:101).

²⁷ DNWSI 577-578, s.v. ll. For nam see Röhlig 1999:60.

²⁸ The Phoen. reads "Now all the river-land shall offer a sacrifice to him." The HL: "And every river-land will begin to honor him." For a full discussion see Younger 1998:36-40 and also Röhlig 1995:206-208; 1999:60.

²⁹ See Younger 1998:19.

³⁰ Cf. Yehawmilk (KAI #10.8-10). See COS 2.32 below.

³¹ For the blessings' structure, see Barré 1982:177-194 and Younger 1998:47.

³² Various meanings for the Phoen. ršp have been proposed: (1) "authority," "rule" (Greenfield 1991a:145); (2) "old age" (Bron 1975:545-546; 1979:105-106; Barré 1981:1-3; Röhlig 1999:60); (3) "property" (Müller 1985:644, n. 6a). and (4) "abundance, prosperity" (Morpurgo Davies and Hawkins 1987:272-275). see Younger 1998:40-41.

³³ Röhlig (1999:60) suggests that the phrase dm šm may be understood as "a man who is (just) called a man" i.e. an ordinary human being without title of any sort (cf. DNWSI 1157 sub 3).

³⁴ KAI 1:25 (no. 129, 1): Iṣṭ qn rš.

³⁵ See Greenfield 1971:266-268; Röhlig 1999:61.

REFERENCES

- Text: Text: Phoen.: Röhlig 1999:50-57; Bron 1979:8-25; KAI #26, 1:5; SSI 3:41-64; HL: Hawkins 2000; Meriggi 1967:69-103; Marazzi 1990:365-367. Studies: Amadasi Guzzo and Archi 1980; Amadasi Guzzo 1984; Barré 1981; 1982; Bron 1975:545-546; 1979; Garbini 1992; Gevirtz 1990; Greenfield 1971; 1972; 1991a; Greenstein 1995:2428-2432; Hawkins 1995; Lipiński 1974; Morpurgo Davies and Hawkins 1987; Müller 1985; Pardee 1987; Weippert 1969; Younger 1998.

THE INSCRIPTION OF KING YEḤAWMILK (2.32)

Stanislav Segert

The limestone stele measuring 113 x 56 x 24 cm was found in 1869 by a local planter of trees in the ruins of the ancient sanctuary of the Mistress of Byblos/Gubal. The missing lower right part was discovered much later at the excavation conducted by Maurice Dunand and published by him in 1939. On the upper part of the stele the goddess Baalat/Mistress of Byblos is depicted, sitting on a small throne, clothed in Egyptian style with winged sun on her head, holding a long sceptre in one hand and blessing with the other hand king YeḤawmilk, who is offering her a large cup. The Persian style of clothing of the bearded king corresponds to the date of the inscription, 5th or 4th century BCE. Some parts of the inscription are damaged. The stele with the inscription is kept in the Louvre Museum in Paris.

Introduction of the king (lines 1-2a)

I am YeḤawmilk,¹ king of Byblos/Gubal,² son of Yeḥarbaal,³ son of son⁴ / grandson of Urimilk,⁴ king of Byblos/Gubal,

whom the Lady, Baalat/Mistress⁵ of Byblos/Gubal made⁶ king upon Byblos/Gubal.

King gratefully offered art works to the goddess of Byblos/Gubal (lines 2b-8a)

And I called⁷ my Lady, Baalat/Mistress of Byblos/Gubal, [and] she heard my voice.⁸
And I made for my Lady, Baalat/Mistress of Byblos/Gubal

this altar of bronze,⁹ which is in this [courtyard],⁷

and this opening/engraving⁷ of gold, which (is) opposite to this opening/engraving of mine,⁵

and this winged (disk)⁹ of gold, which (is) in the midst of the stone, which (is) above this opening/engraving of gold, and this portico and its columns.¹⁰ ^h

a Prov 13:22

b 2 Chr 1:9

c Pss 120:1;

3:5

d 2 Sam 22:7;

Jonah 2:3

e Gen 35:37;

1 Chr 21:22;

26; Exod

38:30; 2 Kgs

16:14; 2 Chr

4:1

f Exod 27:9;

Jer 36:10

g 1 Kgs 6:31-

35; Num 3:25-

26; Ezek 8:7;

16; 41:20;

2 Chr 2:6(7);

13(14);

Zech 3:9

h 1 Kgs 7:6;

18, 21

i 1 Kgs 7:16-

20, 22

j 1 Kgs 6:15

k Ps 90:17

l Gen 28:3;

Ps 67:7

m Pss 1:3(2);

143:11

n 1 Kgs 3:14

o Jer 37:2

and the capitals¹¹ which (are) upon them,
and its roof.^j

I, YeḤawmilk, king of Byblos/Gubal, made (it) for my Lady, Baalat/Mistress of Byblos/Gubal, as I called by lady, Baalat/Mistress of Byblos/Gubal,
and she heard my voice,
and made agreeableness¹² ^k to me.

Request of blessing for the king (lines 8b-11a)

May the Mistress of Byblos/Gubal bless^l YeḤawmilk, king of Byblos/Gubal, may she keep him alive,^m and may she prolong his days and his years¹³ upon Byblos/Gubal, for he (is) a righteous¹⁴ king.

And may [the Lady], Mistress of Byblos/Gubal give [him] favor in the eyes of gods, and in the eyes of the people of this land,ⁿ and favor of the people of this land.¹⁵

The king's work has to be protected (lines 11b-18)

[Whoever you (are)],¹⁶ every king and/or every

¹ The name yḥwmilk is formed with the factitive verbal pattern, "may the (divine) King keep alive." A similar name is attested in the Hebrew Bible (2 Chr 29:14); it is written in the text as yḥw^l, but in the Masoretic note w is replaced by y and read yḥi^l el, "may he live, O God!" (or: "may El live"). Cf. Benz 1972:308.

² Cf. Yahimilk, COS 2.29, note 3 above.

³ The name yḥrb^l can be interpreted differently, the most probable meaning is "may Baal liberate"; cf. Hebrew ḥōr "noble" (< "free"), Arabic ḥ-r-r II "to liberate."

⁴ The name urmlk can be reconstructed with the help of Assyrian cuneiform ú-ru-mil-ki as urumilk. The meaning is "King (is) my light," cf. Heb. ur^l el and ur^l ar "light." Cf. Benz 1972:274.

⁵ Cf. Yahimilk, COS 2.29, note 7 above.

⁶ Stone altars from Megiddo and from Khorsabad (?) are presented in ANEP numbers 575 and 580. A bronze altar is mentioned in Exod 38:30.

⁷ The object of gold is called ph. This word can mean "opening," "entrance," "gateway" (Gibson), "door." The other possible interpretation points to Heb. piṭṭ(a)ḥ "carved ornament," "engraving"; cf. Exod 28:11 and 36, both also concerning gold.

⁸ Perhaps the king had his own entrance — cf. 2 Kgs 16:18 — or his image — cf. note 7 above.

⁹ The noun pr is related to Heb. ṣwp "to fly"; here it means "wing"; the winged sun disk is carved on the top of the stele.

¹⁰ The word for "column" md points to a portico or colonnade (ṣrp); cf. Bondi 1988:255-257.

¹¹ The damaged word is restored with help of Heb. ktir; cf. 2 Kgs 25:17.

¹² This unusual word is used as an equivalent to n^cm (cf. Heb. n^cm Ps 90:17), as it indicates "pleasantness," "delight," and also suggests agreement, leading to peace.

¹³ Cf. Yahimilk, COS 2.29, note 9 above.

¹⁴ Cf. Yahimilk, COS 2.29, note 11 above.

¹⁵ On this line words from the lines 10b-11a are exactly rendered, but it is possible that the scribe repeated the preceding formula, as he wanted to include the word for "favor" (ḥn).

¹⁶ The words [qnmy ṣr] are restored according to the inscription of Eshmunazar, king of Sidon, line 4; cf. Gibson, SSI 3:94, 97, 106-107; and Rosenthal, ANET 502. In KAI 10, line 11 (and in GPP 268) the gap is filled by [whn ṣr] "and favor in the eyes," connecting it with the following kt mmilk "(of) all kingdoms/kings."

(ordinary) man, ¹⁷ who will do additional work on this altar [and/or] this opening/engraving of gold and/or on this portico, my name, (that of mine), Yehawmilk, king of Byblos/Gubal, [you must put with] yours on that work. And if you will not put my name with yours,	p Micah 1:6 q Jer 49:10 r Jer 36:31; 22:28	and/or if you remove this work, [and/or shif]t this [...] with its base upon/from ¹⁹ this place, and (thus) uncover its foundation ²⁰ / deposit ²¹ ?, ²⁰ may the Lady, Mistress/Baalat of Byblos/Gubal putrefy ²¹ [him], that man and his seed, ² at the face of all gods ²² of By[blos]/Gu[bal].
--	---	---

¹⁷ The word ²dm indicates an ordinary man in contrast to mmkt "royalty," "king."

¹⁸ The lower part of the inscription is badly damaged. Perhaps some word indicating "pillar" was in the gap.

¹⁹ The preposition ²h means usually "upon," but after a verb of removing it can also indicate this movement, "from."

²⁰ Uncover the hidden foundation means to destroy the building which is above; cf. Micah 1:6. Uncovering precious things is mentioned in Isa 45:3, uncovering persons who are hiding in Jer 49:10. In this inscription most probably a foundation deposit is meant (cf. KAI 15), such as that found in 1926.

²¹ The translation of tsrh[w] is based on post-biblical Hebrew; cf. "rotten name" šm šrh (to be read instead of -h) in Wis 42:11. The root šrh in Syriac indicates mostly cutting in pieces. Either of these interpretation means "to destroy."

²² Cf. Yehimilk, COS 2.29, note 12 above.

REFERENCES

Text: CIS I:#1; KAI #10; 2:11-15. SSI 3:93-99; Translations and studies: ANET 656. ANEP #477 (305). Moscati 1988:305.

6. OLD ARAMAIC INSCRIPTIONS

THE MELQART STELA (2.33)

Wayne T. Pitard

This short dedicatory inscription (four lines, with one letter on a fifth) is carved on the lower part of a basalt stela found in the late 1930's. It had been incorporated into a Roman period wall in the village of Bureij, near Aleppo, Syria. The text is surmounted by a relief of the god Melqart, who strides forcefully to the left carrying a fenestrated axe over one shoulder and an Egyptian ²ankh in his right hand. Although the inscription is in Aramaic, the relief is Phoenician in style. The most significant controversy about the text centers on the identity of the donor, Bir-Hadad, the king of Aram. Earlier readings of the damaged name of Bir-Hadad's father on line 2 led scholars to identify Bir-Hadad with one of the kings of Aram-Damascus who had that name (cf. 1 Kgs 15:18; 2 Kgs 8:7-15; 13:24-25, where Ben-Hadad is the Hebrew rendering of the name). More recent studies of the line, however, have cast doubt on a relationship of this Bir-Hadad to Damascus. Many scholars now argue that he was the ruler of an area in northern Syria, perhaps Arpad. The script suggests that the stela dates to the second half of the ninth or early eighth century.

The stela¹ which Bir-Hadad¹ the son of Attarhamek,² [] king of Aram³, set up for his lord⁴

Isa 19:19 b Gen 15:2, 8; Isa 7:7; Ezek 2:4; passim

¹ This name means, "Son of (the god) Hadad." It is attested as a royal name in ninth and eighth century Aram Damascus. Names of the type Bir-DN are well attested in Aram, onomastics (Pitard 1988:18, n. 12).

² The left half of line 2, which includes the name of Bir-Hadad's father, is the poorest preserved part of the inscription. Numerous proposals for reading the name have been published over the years, including: Tab-Rimmon (Albright 1942; cf. 1 Kgs 15:18); Ezer the Damascene (Cross 1972); Ezer-Shamash (Lipinski 1975a); Hezion (Lemaire 1984a). Recent studies (Pitard 1988, Fitzmyer and Kaufman 1992, and Puech 1992) have supported a reading of Attar-hmk (²trhmk) or a closely related, ²trsmk. Reading the fourth letter as an s, instead of an h, produces the name of Attar-sumki, a well-known king of the important north Syrian state of Arpad during the late ninth century. It is, then, tempting to identify the donor of this stela as Attar-sumki's son and successor. However, the surviving traces of the letter on the stone are more likely those of an h (Pitard 1988:6, 12). The verbal element, hmk, is ambiguous, but likely means "to subdue." Thus the name may mean, "(The god) Attar has subdued (his enemies)."

There is also controversy about what, if anything, follows the name Attar-hmk on the last third of line 2. Proposals for reading this section have been overwhelmingly divergent. This points to the fact that there is so little evidence for letters on that stone that it is best to conclude that either the traces of further words on the line have been entirely effaced, or that the latter part of the line was simply left blank by the scribe (Pitard 1988:7). See most recently Puech (1992:319), who lists earlier proposals and suggests reading "son of Attar-sumki, son of Hadrame."

³ The term Aram was used to designate a number of states in Syria-Palestine and Mesopotamia during the first millennium. The Hebrew Bible often uses it to designate the state of Aram-Damascus, but also calls Aram-Zobah simply Aram. The Sefire inscription uses the term to designate the kingdom of Arpad. The Assyrians designated part of northern Syria as Aram during the tenth and ninth centuries, but by the mid-eighth

Melqart⁴, to whom he made a vow^c and who heard his voice.^d e Gen 31:13; Num 21:2-3; Judg 11:30-31; 2 Sam 15:7-8 d Deut 33:7; Josh 10:14; Ps 6:9; 27:7; 28:2, 6; 64:2

century they used the term to designate an area along the bank of the Tigris River. Thus its usage here is not a helpful indicator of the location of Bir-Hadad's kingdom.

⁴ Melqart was the patron deity of the Phoen. city of Tyre, and he is not attested in any other Aram. inscription. His appearance on this stela in a decidedly Phoen. artistic style suggests that there was a substantial relationship between Bir-Hadad's kingdom and the Phoen. coast.

REFERENCES

Text: KAI #201, 2:203-204; SSI 2:1-4; Translations and Studies: ANET 655; Albright 1942; Bordreuil and Teixidor 1983; Cross 1972; Dunand 1939; Fitzmyer and Kaufman 1992; Lemaire 1984a; Lipinski 1975a; Pitard 1988; Puech 1992.

HADAD-YITH^cI (2.34)

Alan Millard

In February 1979 a farmer uncovered a life-size basalt statue of a man at the edge of Tell Fekheriye on a branch of the Habur river, opposite Tell Halaf. The standing figure is carved in Assyrian style, without any emblems of rank. On the major part of his skirt are 38 ruled lines of Assyrian cuneiform script, set vertically (as on the Law-stele of Hammurabi), i.e. at right angles to the normal, while the back of the skirt carries 23 lines of Aramaic script engraved horizontally, with dots separating the words. There is now wide agreement that a date in the third quarter of the ninth century BCE is the most likely, taking together historical, stylistic, palaeographic and prosopographic features, as proposed by the original editors (Abou-Assaf, Bordreuil, Millard 1982), although a later date has been proposed on grounds of sculptural style by Spycket (1985) and an earlier one on the basis of the Aramaic script by Naveh (1987) and Cross (1995). This is the oldest lengthy Aramaic text published, bringing unexpected information on the early history of the Aramaic language; see Kaufman (1982), Muraoka (1984). It is also the only extensive bilingual Assyrian-Aramaic text and has stimulated many studies which cannot be cited here. The composition appears to be in two parts, the first (A) copied from a previous monument, the second (B) prepared for this statue. In A the Assyrian text is clearly primary, containing many stock phrases from the Assyrian scribal repertoire, of which the Aramaic is a fairly close translation, whereas B shows greater freedom, displaying linguistic equivalents rather than exact translation; see Fales (1983). Many terms in the Aramaic find parallels and echoes in biblical Hebrew, most extensively noted by Sasson (1985).

A Identification

The image of Hadad-yith^ci¹ which he has set up^a before Hadad² of Sikan,³ regulator of the waters of heaven and earth, who rains down abundance,^b who gives pasture and watering-places to all lands, who gives rest and vessels of food to all the gods, his brothers, regulator of all rivers, who enriches^d all lands, the merciful god^c to whom it is good to pray, who dwells^d in Sikan.

a Deut 27:15; Judg 18:31; 2 Kgs 21:7; b 1 Kgs 3:13; Ps 65:9, 10; c Exod 34:6; Deut 4:31; Ps 86:15; 103:8; d 1 Sam 4:4; 2 Sam 6:2 = 1 Chr 13:6; 2 Kgs 19:15; Ps 2:4; 9:12; 99:1

¹ Hadad-yith^ci's name means "Hadad is my salvation," incorporating the base yš^c seen in such biblical names as Joshua, Isaiah and Elisha. In this name as in certain other words in this text, the sibilant is written with s in place of the expected š, apparently a local peculiarity. The divine name Hadad is written hd here (but hdd where it stands alone), so may have been pronounced Had or Hadda.

² Hadad, the storm god, widely worshipped by the Aramaean tribes and attested in other cuneiform texts from Guzan (Sader 1987:11-13). The historical identification of this ruler depends upon that of his father; see note 7 below.

³ Sikan, known from Assyrian texts, was evidently the ancient name for Tell Fekheriye, apparently also Wassukkanni of the second-millennium BCE Mitannian kingdom.

⁴ "enriches" is a participial form from the base dn, denoting "pleasure, luxury" in BH, now seen with the same connotation in Old Aram. This cognate strengthens the case for deriving the name of the Garden of Eden from the same base, rather than from a Sum. word supposedly borrowed into Heb. (see Millard 1984). The epithets of Hadad here express his particular role, widely attested in cuneiform texts, one which biblical writers attribute to the God of Israel, e.g. Ps 65:9, 10; Isa 41:17-19.

Dedication

To the great god, his lord, Hadad-yith^ci, king⁵ of Guzan,⁶ son of Sās-nūrī,⁷ king of Guzan, set up and gave (the statue) to
him,
so that his soul may live, and his days be long,
and to increase his years,⁸ and so that his house may flourish, and his descendants may flourish, and his people may flourish,
and to remove illness from him,⁹ and for making his prayer heard, and for accepting the words of his mouth.⁸

Blessing and curses

Now whoever afterwards, when it is in disrepair,⁸ re-erects it, may he put my name on it,
but whoever erases my name from it and puts his name, may Hadad,
the hero,⁹ be his adversary.⁹

B Rededication

The statue¹⁰ of Hadad-yith^ci, king of Guzan and of Sikan and of Azran,¹¹ for exalting and continuing his throne,¹² and for the length of his life and so that his word might be pleasing to gods and to people,

ε 2 Kgs 17:6;
18:11 = Isa
37:12; 1 Chr
5:26
f Prov 3:2
g Exod 23:25;
Deut 7:15
h Prov 4:10;
Ps 19:14
j Deut 10:17;
Ps 24:8; Isa
9:6; 10:21;
Jer 32:18
k 2 Kgs 17:6;
18:11; 1 Chr
5:26
l Ezra 5:14
m Exod 29:25;
Num 5:25;
Judg 13:23
n Gen 18:4;
5; Deut 23:4
o Mic 6:15
p Dan 5:22, 28
q Deut 28:38;
Isa 5:10; Hag
1:6
r Isa 66:11
s Lev 26:26

this image he made better than before.

In the presence of Hadad who dwells in Sikan, the lord of Habur,¹³ he has set up his statue.

Curses

Whoever removes my name from the furnishings of the house of Hadad,⁷ my lord, may my lord Hadad not accept^m his food and waterⁿ from his hand, may my lady Sūl¹⁴ not accept food and water from his hand.

When he sows, may he not reap,¹⁵ and when he sows a thousand (measures) of barley,¹⁶ may he take (only) a fraction^o from it.⁹

Should one hundred ewes suckle a lamb, may it not be satisfied.

Should one hundred cows suckle a calf, may it
not be satisfied.

Should one hundred women suckle a child, may it not be satisfied.⁷

Should one hundred women bake bread in an oven, may they not fill it.⁸

May his men glean barley from a refuse pit to eat.

May plague, the rod of Nergal,¹⁷ not be cut off from his land.

⁵ "king" (mīk) stands in the Aram. text where the Assyrian has "governor" (šakin māni). The best explanation takes each text as directed at a different audience, the former to the local people, whose ruler erected the statue, the latter to representatives of the Assyrian emperor whose vassal the local ruler was. The appellation of the same man as "king" in one text and "governor" in another illustrates an ancient attitude to such titles which may be reflected in the application of "king" to Belshazzar in Dan 5; 7:1; 8:1, denoting his actual, although not his titular role, after his father, Nabonidus, the actual king, departed to Arabia.

⁶ Guzan, modern Tall Halaf; for its history see Sader 1987:5-45.

⁷ Sās-nūrī, "Shamash is my light," the name of Hadad-yith^ci's father, is written Shamash-nūrī in Akk., the Aram. presenting the abbreviated, spoken form of the divine name Shamash, with Assyrian sibilant shift, reflected later in the Babylonian form Sheshbazzar, Ezra 1:8, 11; 5:14, 16 (see Berger 1971). This ruler of Guzan has been identified with Shamash-muri, the eponym for 866 BCE, thus giving a date for the statue of his son within the next quarter of a century; see Abou-Assaf, Bordreuil and Millard (1982:103-05).

⁸ The Aram. verb ybl is understood as "to wither, fail" on the basis of biblical Hebrew nbl, with Pardee and Biggs (1984:254); other proposals relate it to nbl from bly "to wither, be old" or from npl "to fall down" (Kaufman 1982:166; Greenfield and Shaffer 1983:113; Fales 1983:246).

⁹ "Adversary" is a term used for a prosecutor in a lawsuit; cf. Isa 50:8; Assyrian legal contracts often call on Hadad to act in this way should the contract be broken.

¹⁰ The monument is termed dinw "image" at two points and šlm "statue" at two others, both words clearly referring to the same stone figure. While remembering that Aram. and Heb. are not identical, this parallel use suggests no significant differences of meaning should be sought between the two cognate Heb. words used in a similar way in Gen 1:26, 27; 5:3.

¹¹ Azran, Assyrian zarani, is otherwise unknown.

¹² The meaning of the Aram. expression here is uncertain; the text reads l'rmwrđt krs^ch parallel to Akk. tiriš kussišu, which should mean something like "to continue his throne," but as yet has found no generally accepted interpretation.

¹³ Habur is the river on which Guzan was situated.

¹⁴ Sūl is the wife of Hadad, known as Shala in Babylonian; the unique Aram. writing here (swl) suggests her name was pronounced Sawl, Sōl, or Sūl. The use of w to mark š, or š, or possibly the diphthong aw, as well as y for i is one of the novelties of the text (see Muraoka 1984:83-87).

¹⁵ This and the following "futility" curses follow the pattern "maximum effort — minimum return" (Fales 1982a) and have clear echoes in Aram. (Treaty of Sefire COS 2.82 below) and biblical texts, leading to the supposition that they have a WS origin; see Fales (1982a), Greenfield and Shaffer (1983:110), Pardee and Biggs (1984). But this may be contested (Millard 1993a:521-522).

¹⁶ The word "barley" is written š^cryn which some have linked with a unique biblical Heb. word written in the same way in Gen 26:12, thought to be a measure, but it is more reasonable to interpret it as "barley" here (written š^crn a few lines later), the actual measure being omitted as in Ruth 3:15; see Greenfield and Shaffer (1983:115), Sasson (1985:100 n. 13), Millard (1993a:523).

¹⁷ Nergal, the Mesopotamian god of plague.

REFERENCES

Text: Abou Assaf, Bordreuil and Millard 1982; Translations and studies: TUAT 634-637; Berger 1971; Cross 1995; Fales 1982a; 1983; Greenfield and Shaffer 1983; 1985; Gropp and Lewis 1985; Kaufman 1982; Millard 1984; 1993a; Millard and Bordreuil 1982; Muraoka 1984; Naveh 1987; Pardee and Biggs 1984; Sader 1987; Sasson 1985; Spycket 1985.

THE INSCRIPTION OF ZAKKUR, KING OF HAMATH (2.35)

Alan Millard

H. Pognon bought parts of a basalt stele in north Syria which he published in 1907-8; they are now in the Louvre (AO 8185). Now 1.03 m. high, 62 cm. wide, the squared block was originally taller, the upper part carved with a figure in relief of which only the feet resting upon a dais or stool survive. Below the sculpture an inscription was engraved in Aramaic, starting on the front (A), continuing on the left (B) and right sides (C). This "memorial" text is damaged and incomplete. Circumstantial evidence points to a date shortly after 800 BCE.

Title (A line 1)

The monument which Zakkur,¹ a king of Hamath² and Lu'ash,³ set up⁴ for El-wer⁵ [in Apish.⁶]

Record of divine rescue (A lines 1-17)

I am Zakkur, king of Hamath and Lu'ash. I was a man of Anah⁶ and Ba'ishamayn⁷ [raised] me and stood beside me, and Ba'ishamayn made me king over Hazrach.⁸ Then Bar-Hadad,⁹ son of Hazael,⁸ king of Aram,⁷ united against me s[even]teen kings¹⁰: Bar-Hadad and his army, Bar-Gush⁸ and his army, the king of Que and his army, the king of Amuq and his army, the king of Gurgum and his army, the king of Sam'al and his army, the king of Meliz and his army [] seven[teen],⁹ they and their armies. All these kings laid siege⁶ to Hazrach. They raised a wall higher than the wall of Hazrach, they dug a ditch deeper than [its] ditch. Now I raised my hands⁴ to Ba'ishamayn and Ba'ishamayn answered me.⁷ Ba'ishamayn [spoke] to me through seers and diviners.¹⁰ Ba'ishamayn said to me, "Do not be afraid! Since I have made [you king, I will stand] beside you." I will save you from⁶ all [these kings who] have besieged you." [Ba'ishamayn] also said to [me, "] all these kings who

a Num 13:4;
1 Chr 4:26;
24:27; 25:2;
25:10; Neh
3:2; 10: 13;
12:35; 13:12;
Ezra 8:14
b 2 Kgs 14:25;
28; Jer 49:23;
Amos 6:2;
Zech 9:2
c Gen 28:18; 22 d Zech 9:1
e 2 Kgs 13:3; 24
f 2 Kgs 13:3; 24
g 2 Kgs 8:7-15, 28, 29;
10:32; 13:22-25
h 1 Kgs 10:28
A 1 Kgs 20:1
j Mic 4:14
(5:1)
k Ps 28:2
l Jon 2:3; cf.
2 Kgs 13:4, 5
m 1 Sam 9:6-
9; 2 Sam 5:17-
25; 1 Kgs
22:1-28 a Ps 91:15; Isa 41:9,10; 43:1; 44:2; 54:4,5; Jer 30:10 p Jer 1:8; 30:10, 11 q Exod 14:17 etc.; 1 Kgs 9:19; 2 Kgs 18:24 r 2 Sam 18:18 have [besieged you] and this wall []."

Building inscription (B lines 1-15)

[] Hazrach [] for chariot [and] horseman⁶ [] its king within it(?). I [built] Hazrach and added [to it] all [] defenses. [] and I put x x[] x x[] forts on every side. [I] built shrines in a[ll] my [land ?]. I built [] x Apish and [] the house [] and I set up this monument before [El-wer] and w[rote on] it my achi[evements].⁷

Curses (B lines 16-28, C 1,2)

[In future who]ever removes from this monument wha[t Zakkur king of Hamath [and Lu'ash] has [accomplished] and who[ever re]moves this monument from [befo]re El-wer and takes it away fr[om] its [place], or whoever throws it in [] x [] x [] May Ba'ishamayn and El[wer]¹¹ and Shamash and Shahar [] and the gods of heav[en] and the god[s] of earth and Ba 'IX[] x and x [] x x [] (C) [] the name of Zakkur and the name of [].

¹ The king's name, long read Zakir, is established by the Assyrian transcription "za-ku-ri, referring to the same ruler, on a stele defining the boundary between the states of Hamath and Arpad, found near Antakya. See Donbaz 1990:6-7, line 4. See COS 2.114A, note 5.

² A dynasty with Lawian (neo-Hittite) names ruled Hamath during the ninth century BCE; see Hawkins 1982, Sader 1987:185-230. Its frontier marked the northernmost limit of Israelite power (1 Kgs 8:65; 2 Kgs 14:25). For Aram. graffiti and seals found there, see Otzen 1990. The name is engraved in Aram. letters on an ivory label found at Nimrud, perhaps taken there as booty by Assyrian forces; see Millard 1962:42-43.

³ Lu'ash, earlier Nuhashshe, lay south-west of Aleppo. The name is engraved in Aram. letters on the back of a carved ivory found at Nimrud; cf. note 2 above.

⁴ El-wer was a weather god known in east and north Syria; see Millard 1990:51. He is invoked in the Antakya stele mentioned in note 1 above.

⁵ The name is restored on the basis of its later occurrence in the text and the likely provenance of the stele.

⁶ For this rendering see Millard 1990 and note the writing of "Anah as "ana" in an Assyrian legal document: Kwasman and Parpola 1991:198, 4.

⁷ Aram at this time denoted the kingdom of Damascus.

⁸ Gush, Agush, founded the Aramean dynasty Bit-Agush, based at Arpad (Tell Rifa'at) and faced Ashurnasirpal of Assyria about 877 BCE (Annals iii 77; Grayson 1976:143; 1991:218).

⁹ While seven names are given, if seventeen is correct earlier, it can be accepted here; not all kings need have been named.

¹⁰ The first word is cognate with Hebr. hōzēh, the second related to Hebr. PN 'Oded (2 Chr 15:1, 8; 28:9) and known in Ug. Consulting diviners or oracles in crises was common throughout the Near East; see Greenfield 1971; Weippert 1981.

¹¹ For pairs of divine names see the Sefire Stelae 2.82 below.

REFERENCES

Text: KAI #202; SSI 2:6-17; Translations: ANET 501-502; TUAT 626-628; Studies: Donbaz 1990; Grayson 1976; 1991; Greenfield 1972; Hawkins 1982; Kwasman and Parpola 1991; Millard 1962; 1990; Otzen 1990; Sader 1987; Weippert 1981; Zobel 1971.

THE HADAD INSCRIPTION (2.36)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

Discovered in the village of Gerçin 7 km northeast of Zenjirli, dating to the mid-eighth century BCE, this large statue of the god Hadad contains a thirty-four line inscription on its lower portion. The statue originally stood about 4 m high, though the top portion is not preserved. It was erected by Panamuwa I, king of Y^{dy} (also known as Sam^{al}) (see Dion 1997:99-105). The inscription, which is difficult due to poor preservation in a number of places, is written in Samalian Aramaic, the dialect of this north Syrian city-state (see Tropper 1993:287-296).

Introduction (line 1)

I am Panamuwa, son of Qarli,¹ king of Y^{dy}, who have erected² this statue for Hadad in my eternal abode (i.e. "burial chamber").³

Panamuwa's divine authority and prosperous rule
(lines 2-13a)

The gods Hadad and El and Rašap and Rakib-El and Šamaš supported me.
And Hadad and El and Rakib-El and Šamaš and Rašap⁴ gave the scepter of dominion⁵ into my hands.

Rašap supported me.
So whatever I grasped with my hand, [] (served?) and whatever I asked from the gods,
they granted to me.
And the devastation(?) they restored.⁶

[]
[] a land of barley ...
[]
[... a]land of wheat and a land of garlic⁷ and a land of [] ...
Then [...]
And [...]
They cultivated the land and the vineyard.
They dwelt there [...].

a Deut 32:24;
Hab 3:5

b Deut 8:8

c 1 Kgs 4:20

d Ps 72:3-16

e Neh 10:1

And I, Panamuwa, reigned also on the throne of
my father.

And Hadad gave into my hands a scepter of dominion.⁷

And I also cut off war and slander⁸ from the house of my father.

And in my days also Y^{dy} ate and drank.⁹

And in my days it was commanded throughout all my land to reconstruct TYRT⁹ and to reconstruct ZRRY¹⁰ and to build the villages¹¹ of the dominion.

And each one took his friend(?)¹²
And Hadad [and] El and Rakib-El and Šamaš and Arqû-Rašap¹³ gave abundance.⁴

And greatness was granted me.
And a sure covenant⁶ was concluded with me.

And in the days when I gained dominion, a gift-offering(?)¹⁴ was given to the gods;
¹⁵ and they took the land from my hand.
and whatever I asked from the gods of the land,
they gave to me.
And the gods of the land delighted¹⁶ [in me, the son] of Qarli.

Hadad's commission (lines 13b-14)

Then Hadad gave the land for my []¹⁷;

¹ Vocalization is uncertain, though possibly *Qarli (based on a hieroglyphic Luwian form). See Lipiński 1994:204, n. 5.

² For the syntax of this clause see Segert, AA 434; and Tropper 1993:255.

³ Tawil (1974:42-43) and Gibson (SSJ 2:65) translate b'lm "from my youth." But see Tropper 1993:61, and COS 2.27 above p. 144, n. 1.

⁴ Cf. this line 2b-3a: ym n. bydy. hdd. ... htr. hlbh. and lines 8b-9a: wnm. hdd. bydy. htr. hlbh* below.

⁵ Proposed meanings for hlbbh include: 1) "reign, rule" Dion 1974:88; Tropper 1993:62; 2) "succession" Fales 1982b:76-77; Greenfield 1987:69; Lipiński 1994:204; and 3) "blessing, prosperity" Sader 1987:163.

⁶ See Tropper 1993:63-64. Tawil's translation "And they kept (me) alive for years" (1974:50) is very unlikely. See DNWSI 1177, s.v. šnm.

⁷ See note 5 above.

⁸ Lit., "sword and tongue."

⁹ According to Tropper the epigraphically possible readings are: tyrt "the enclosures" and yrt "the cities" (1993:68-70).

¹⁰ Uncertain meaning.

¹¹ See Dion 1997:254, n. 55.

¹² Or perhaps better in the context: "each one acquired his herd." See the discussion in Tropper 1993:70.

¹³ For a discussion of this deity, see Lipiński 1983:15-21; 1994:210-211.

¹⁴ The reading is uncertain. Tropper (1993:72) favors mn "gift"; Lipiński (1994:204) favors mt "land."

¹⁵⁻¹⁶ Alternatively: "and they indeed took from my hand. And whatever I asked from the gods, indeed they gave to me. And the gods truly delighted [in me, the son] of Qarli. Then Hadad indeed gave for my []; he singled me out to build and during my dominion Hadad [] indeed gave me to build. So I have truly built."

The difference lies in the meaning of the difficult word mt. Three proposals have been made: 1) "always," linking mt with Mari Akk. matay-ma* (Faber 1987); 2) "surely, indeed, truly," understanding an aphesis of the aleph, mt > mt* (Tropper 1992); and 3) "land," a loan word from Akk. matu (Lipiński 1976:232; 1977:100-101; 1994:204). There are difficulties with each proposal (see DNWSI 706-707 s.v. mt, and mt₂). None of them fits all the contexts where mt occurs in the Hadad and Panamuwa inscriptions. One cannot rule out the possibility that mt means "land," since it is now well-attested in OA inscriptions, though this meaning clearly does not fit the context of Panamuwa (KAI 215.4) or Hadad (KAI 214.28). But conversely, one cannot completely rule out aphesis of the aleph, though the evidence is hardly overwhelming in favor of it.

¹⁶ DNWSI 1083 s.v. rgy, and Tropper 1993:74.

¹⁷ Possibly read: [yry] "for my [inheritance]." See DNWSI 472 s.v. yry; Lipiński 1994:204.

he singled me out to build, and during my dominion Hadad [] gave me the land to build.

So I have built the land.¹⁵
And I have erected this statue of Hadad, and the place of Panamuwa, son of Qarli, king of Y²dy, with the statue — a burial chamber.

Blessings (Lines 15b-18)

Whoever of my sons seizes the scepter,
and sits upon my throne,
and maintains power,^f
and sacrifices to this Hadad,
[... an o]ath?
and sacrifices this [] [] sacrifices to Hadad

Or, on the other hand, []
then he says:

"May [the de]ad spirit¹⁸ of Panamuwa [eat]
with you (i.e. Hadad), and may the dead spirit of Panamuwa dri[nk]
with you."

May he remember eternally the dead spirit of Panamuwa with [Had]ad.⁶

[May he gi]ve this his sacri[fice to Hadad].
May he (i.e. Hadad) look favorably upon it;
May it be a tribute for Hadad and for El and for Rakib-El and Šamaš [and Rašap].

Reintroduction (lines 19-20a)¹⁹

I am Panamuwa [...] a hou[se for the go]ds of this city.

And [I built] it.

And I caused the gods to dwell in it.

And during my reign, I allotted [the gods] a resting place.

[And] they gave to me a seed of the bosom.²⁰

Curses (Lines 20b-34)

[whoev]er of my sons seizes the scepter,
and sits on my throne,
and reigns over Y²[dy],
and maintains his power;
and sacri[fices to this Hadad],
[and does not remem]ber the name of Panamuwa,
(who) does (not) say:

f Isa 9:6;
Prov 20:28

g Jer 16:5-9;
Amos 6:4-7

h 1 Kgs 2;
16:11; 2 Kgs
10:6; 11:1;
etc.

"May the dead spirit²¹ of Pana[muwa] eat
with Hadad,
and may the dead spirit of Panamuwa drink
with H[adad];

[] his sacrifice

And may he (Hadad) not look favorably upon it,
and whatever he asks,

may Hadad not grant him;

And as for Hadad — may his wrath be poured out on him;²²

[And] may he not give to him to eat because of
(his) rage;

and may he withhold sleep from him in the night;

and may terror be given to him

And may he not []

[] my kinsmen [or re]latives.

Whoever of my house seizes the scepter in Y²dy
and sits on my throne
and reig[ns in my place],

[May he not] stretch his hand with the sword against [] of my [hou]se⁶ [either out of] anger or out of violence;

may he not do murder, either out of wrath or out of [];

And may no one be [put to death], either by his bow or by his word [or by his command].

But may [his kins]man plot the destruction²³ of one of his kinsmen or one of his relatives or one of his kinswomen.

[Or if any member of my house] should plot destruction;

may he (the king) assemble his male relatives, and may he stand him in the middle.²⁴

Indeed, he ("the accused") will pronounce his oath:

"Your brother has caused (my) destruction!"

If [he (i.e. "the accused") denies it, and] he lifts up his hands to the god of his father (i.e. Rakib-El), and says on his oath:

"Behold, I have put these words in the mouth of a stranger!"

saying:

"May my eyes be fixed or troubled, or [I have put] my commands in the mouth of the enemies' men!"

¹⁵ For nbš/npš in this context, see Niehr 1994:63-65. Nbš appears to signify both "the dead spirit" of Panamuwa and, on the basis of the sense of a funerary monument, the cult image of the deceased king. Thus in the form of this cult image the dead spirit of Panamuwa could receive sacrifice (cf. the archaeological materials from Tel Halaf). Lines 15-18 indicate that when an offering was made before the statue of Hadad, both the god and the spirit of the deceased royal ancestor could receive the sacrifice. With the remembrance of the name "Panamuwa," blessing is invoked upon the descendant monarch. Cf. this ritual to the Mesop. kispu and the WS marzeah (Greenfield 1973; 1987; Hallo 1992; 1996:209; Porten 1968:179-186). While nuances of royal ancestor worship are apparent, there are some distinctions (Niehr 1994:60-63; and Schmidt 1994:132-135).

¹⁹ Cf. the double introduction in the Kulamuwa inscription above (2.30).

²⁰ The meaning of the phrase zr^c hb² is uncertain. See DNWSI 343 s.v. hb₁.

²¹ See note 18 above. Lines 20-24 indicate that when an offering was placed before the statue of Hadad without a remembrance and offering to the spirit of the deceased royal ancestor (i.e. Panamuwa), Hadad would reject the offering and would bring a curse upon the offerer.

²² See Tropper 1993:83.

²³ See DNWSI 1123 s.v. šht₂. There is a note of similarity at this point between the Hadad Inscription and the Hittite "Proclamation of Telipinu" with the interest in the shedding of royal blood and procedures given to deal with such. See COS 1.76.

²⁴ See Tropper 1993:89-90.

And if it is a male, then may his male relatives be assembled, ²⁵ and may they pound him with stones; ⁱ and if it is [a female], then may her kinswomen be assembled, and may they pound her with stones. ⁱ But if indeed ruin (has struck) him himself, ²⁶ then your eyes should be weary of him,	i Lev 20:2; Deut 13:6-10; 17:5; 21:18-21; 22:13-21; Josh 7:25; 1 Kgs 12:18; 2 Chr 10:18; 24:21	either by his bow or by his power or by his words or by his instigation. ²⁷ you, then [] his right, And [] or you slay him in violence or in anger, or you issue a decree against him, or you incite a stranger to slay him, may (the gods(?)) ... (slay?) ...
---	---	--

²⁵ For these clauses, see Huehnergard 1987:268-269.

²⁶ A very difficult sentence. See Tropper 1993:95.

²⁷ Or possibly "maneuvers." Quack points out a parallel in Sinuhe B 103-105 which states: "with my power, with my bow, with my maneuvers and with my capable plans."

REFERENCES

Text: KAI #214; Dion 1974:26-35; SSI 2:60-76; Tropper 1993:54-97. Studies: Faber 1987; Fales 1982b; Fitzmyer and Kaufman 1992:15-16; Greenfield 1973; 1987; Hallo 1992; Huehnergard 1983; 1987; Kaufman 1974; Klengel 1992; Lehmann 1994; Lipiński 1983; 1994:203-211; Niehr 1994; Quack 1993; Sader 1987:153-184; Schmidt 1994:132-135; Tawil 1973; 1974; Tropper 1993:54-97.

THE PANAMUWA INSCRIPTION (2.37)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

The inscription, engraved on the lower half of a statue, is written in Samalian Aramaic (see COS 2.36). It was discovered in the German excavations at Zinjirli. Bar-Rakib, the son of Panamuwa II, probably raised this monument early in his reign to memorialize his father because of his sudden and unexpected death during Tiglath-Pileser III's campaign against Damascus (733-732 BCE). The text also served Bar-Rakib's interests in that his legitimate right to rule is firmly established. Thus a date of 733-727 BCE is very probable for the inscription. The form of the Panamuwa inscription is that of the dedication genre although it has been modified and adapted for a human dedication. The statue was originally intended to be placed in front of the tomb of Panamuwa to serve as a memorial.¹ Elements of the memorial genre are also evident. Thus, these two genres have been incorporated in the composition.

Introduction (line 1)

This statue Bar-Rakib has set up for his father, for Panamuwa, the son of Baršūr, the king of Y^{dy},
[in ...] the year [of his death(?)].

Body (lines 2-19a)

The Crisis (lines 2-6a)

My father, Panamuwa — because of the loyalty of his father, the gods of Y^{dy} delivered him (i.e. Panamuwa) from the destruction²
which³ was in the house of his father.
And the god Hadad stood with him.

a Judg 9:5;
2 Kgs 10:1-11

[] his throne against [].
And(?) he destroyed(?) [] in the house of his father.
And he killed his father Baršūr;
and he killed seventy brothers of his father.⁴ ^a
But my father mounted a chariot⁵ ... and [] lord []
And(?) he pierced [] Panamuwa(?) And (with) the rest of it⁶ he indeed⁷ filled the prisons.
And he made ruined cities more numerous than inhabited cities.
And it gave (?) [Panamuwa], son of Q[ar]li, (and ¹ In some way the statue was connected to the cult of the royal ancestors. See Niehr 1994:67-68 and also Greenfield 1973. Cf. Absalom's actions in 2 Sam. 18:18.

² See DNWSI 1123 s.v. šht. Cp. the opening to the Idrimi Inscription (COS 1.148). See Younger 1986:96.

³ For the reading ²zh, see Tropper 1993:104 and plate 13. Others have read ²lh with the meaning of either "curse" or "conspiracy." But the second sign in Tropper's photograph clearly reads z and not l.

⁴ Cf. the story of Abimelech's murder of his seventy brothers (Judg 9:5) and the execution of the seventy sons of Ahab (2 Kgs 10:1-11). See Fensham 1977.

⁵ Cp. Idrimi's departure from Emar (see COS 1.148). This clause suggests the motif of the departure of the hero with only his essential equipment or personnel, after which he passes through alien territory and eventually assumes the throne. See Parker 1997:162, n. 34.

⁶ i.e. "the house of his father."

⁷ See COS 2.36 note 15-15 above for a discussion of the term mt. It seems doubtful for syntactic reasons that mt means "land" in this context (as proposed by Lipiński 1994:204). See Tropper 1992:448-453.

he spoke?) ...

"And if⁸ you cause bloodshed⁹ in my house,
and you also kill one of my sons, then I also will make bloodshed in the land of Y²dy."⁸

Then [¹⁰] Panamuwa, son of Qa[r]li¹¹ ...

My father Panam<uwa>, son of Baršūr(?), [he?] destroyed(?) in the la[nd]¹² [] ewe and cow and wheat and barley.

And a *parts*¹³ stood at a shekel;¹⁴ and a ŠTRB-(measure) [of onions(?)/wine(?)]¹⁴ at a shekel;

and two-thirds of a mina¹⁵ of oil at a shekel.

The Restoration (lines 6b-11a)

Then my father, Pana[muwa, son of Ba]ršūr, brought a gift¹⁶ to the king of Assyria.¹⁷

And he made him king over the house of his father.

And he killed the stone of destruction¹⁸ from the house of his father.

And ... (away) from the treasures of houses of the land of Y²dy from

[]

And he opened¹⁸ the prisons;

and he released the captives of Y²dy.

So my father arose,

and released the women in [].

[] the house of the women who had died,

b 2 Chr 21:12

c 2 Kgs 6:24-7:2

d Isa 18:7;
Pss 68:30;
76:12

e 1 Kgs 15:17-22;
2 Kgs 16:5-9;
2 Kgs 6:24-7:20; 2 Sam 10:6; Deut 23:5b-6

f Isa 8:14

g 1 Kgs 10:27

h 1 Sam 8:11;
2 Sam 15:1;
1 Kgs 1:5

and he buried(?)¹⁹ them(?) in ...

[and he seized(?)] the house (i.e., the palace) of his father.

And he made it better than before.

And it abounded with wheat and barley and ewe and cow in his days.

And then [the land²⁰] ate [and drank ...]

The price was cheap.²¹

And in the days of my father Panamuwa, he truly²² appointed lords of villages and lords of chariots.

And my father Panamuwa was esteemed in the midst of mighty kings [from the east to the west].

[] my father surely possessed silver;

and surely he possessed gold.²³

On account of of his wisdom and because of his loyalty, he then seized onto the skirt (robe)²⁴ of his lord, the mighty king of Assyria.

Panamuwa's Vassalship (lines 11b-19a)

[] of Assyria.

Then he lived and Y²dy also lived.

And his lord, the king of Assyria, positioned him over powerful kings [as the head(?)].²⁵

[]

[And he ran] at the wheel of his lord,²⁶ Tiglath-Pileser, king of Assyria, (in) campaigns from the east to the west [and from the north to the south, over] the four quarters of the earth.

⁸ Tropper reads whnw "and if" (1993:267).

⁹ Lit., "set a sword."

¹⁰ Dion restores h[ly] š[?] "Panamuwa asked (vengeance for) those who had been killed" (1974:37).

¹¹ Some scholars restore: "[b²b]" "my great-grandfather." See KAI 2:226; Dion 1974:37; SSI 2:78. For Qarli, see COS 2.36, note 1.

¹² Parker translates "(they) fled from the land" (1997:84 and n. 37).

¹³ A small dry measurement = a se²ah or perhaps less (= 7 quarters, 7.3 liters). For parts, see Kaufman 1974:80.

¹⁴ Tropper (1993:111) reads: šnw "onions." Greenfield states: "To judge from the Hieroglyphic Luwian material assembled by Hawkins (Hawkins 1986) a word for wine is needed here, since the kaf is doubtful, perhaps one should restore hmr" (Greenfield 1991:122, n. 7).

¹⁵ Tropper argues for a reading of snb (without the ² at the beginning of the word) (1993:111). The term snb occurs on a lion-weight from Nineveh with the meaning of 2/3 of a mina. The comparative material makes the reading of mšh "oil" sure.

¹⁶ Panamuwa must have brought tribute to Tiglath-Pileser III to gain his help. Tropper suggests reading šy "gift" (1993:112).

¹⁷ Parker (1997:89-104) adeptly compares the story of Panamuwa II to the biblical accounts of Asa (1 Kgs 15:17-22). Ahaz (2 Kgs 16:5-9), the siege of Samaria (2 Kgs 6:24-7:20), as well as 2 Sam 10:6; Deut 23:5b-6.

¹⁸ So Tropper 1993:114. Or alternatively "destroyed" through an Akk. root pašdsu "to destroy" (Lipiński 1977:102).

¹⁹ Tropper 1993:115. Formerly read: qmw²l.

²⁰ Reading uncertain (Tropper 1993:115). Dion restores ʔrq y²dy (1974:37). Cp. Hadad 9: whymy gm ʔbl wšʔ y²dy.

²¹ Concerning the motif of "ideal prices" in Panamuwa's day as compared to the previous depressionary conditions in Y²dy, see Hawkins 1986:93-102; Younger 1986:96-98; and Greenfield 1991:122.

²² See COS 2.36, note 15-15. Lipiński (1994:205) translates: "he provided the land with chiefs of villages and chiefs of carting" or "he made the land proprietors of villages and proprietors of carting."

²³ There are two options for the understanding of hw: 1) it is an asseverative particle so that the translation is: "my father surely possessed silver; and surely he possessed gold." See Dion 1978:298-300; Tropper 1993:118; and 2) it is a concessive particle so that the translation is: "my father, though he were a possessor of silver, though a possessor of gold." See Gibson, SSI 2:81; Huehnergard 1983:571. The context seems, in my opinion, to argue for the former.

²⁴ The idiom "to grasp the hem (of a garment)" has been identified in Akk. (sisikaa(m) šabānu(m)), Old Aram. (ʔhʔz blwp), BH (hʔzyq blwp: 1 Sam 15:27), and Ug. (ʔhd bsʔn). It is derived from a gesture in which a suppliant beseeches, or indicates his submission to, his superior by grasping the hem of the superior's garment. Used alone, the locution serves to denote "supplication, importuning, submission to a superior." It establishes a closer relationship between suppliant and superior, especially between vassal and suzerain. See Greenstein 1982; Younger 1986:98, n. 31; and COS 2.137, note 4.

²⁵ A reading of bmšn "as vice-regent" has been suggested by Lipiński 1977:103. Tropper argues that the reading is epigraphically impossible (1993:120).

²⁶ Vassal kings were often obligated to participate with the Assyrian king in his campaigns (see Dion 1997:262; Naʾaman 1991). Cf. Bar-Rakib 1:8-7. Cp. 1 Sam 8:11; 2 Sam 15:1; 1 Kgs 1:5.

And the population ²⁷ of the east he brought to the west; and the population of the west he brought to the east. And [my] father [profited more than all other mighty kings] ²⁸ And [to] his territory his lord Tiglath-Pileser, king of Assyria, [added] cities from the territory of Gurgum ²⁹ and ... ³⁰ [And] my [fa]ther Panamuwa, son of Ba[ršūr ...] [³¹] And my father, Panamuwa, died while following ³² his lord Tiglath-Pileser, king of Assyria, in the campaigns. Even [his lord, Tiglath-Pileser, king of Assyria, wept for him]; ³³ and his relative kings wept for him; and all of the camp of his lord, the king of Assyria, wept for him. And his lord, the king of Assyria, took [] [“may] his dead spirit [eat and drink.”] ³⁴ And he set up for him a memorial in the way. And he brought my father from Damascus to Assyria.	i 2 Sam 18:18 j Judg 9:9, 13	In my days [...] [And] his whole house we[pt] for him. Conclusion (lines 19b-23) And I am Bar-Rakib, son of Panamuwa. Because of the loyalty of my father and because of my loyalty, my lord [Tiglath-Pileser, king of Assyria,] has caused me to reign [on the throne] of my father, Panamuwa, son of Barsur. And I have set up this statue [to my father], to Panamuwa, son of Baršūr. And ? And [³⁵] And [] the king [] ³⁶ And [³⁷] before the tomb of my father, Panammu[wa]. And this memorial is it. ¹ Thus, may Hadad and El and Rakib-El, the lord of the house, and Šamaš, and all the gods of Y ² dy [have favor on me the son of Panamuwa]. ³⁸ [And may Rakib-El show favor] ³⁹ to me before gods and before men. ¹
--	-------------------------------------	---

²⁷ Lit., “the daughters.”

²⁸ Tropper’s suggested restoration based on Bar-Rakib 7-8.

²⁹ Gurgum’s border was changed earlier by the Assyrians. See the Pazarcik Inscription, COS 2.114B and RIMA 3:201-205. See Dalley 1995:421.

³⁰ Tropper suggests [wmu. q]wh “[from the territory of Q]ue(?)” (1993:123).

³¹ Concerning the possible meanings of a verb mrg, see the discussion of Tropper 1993:123-124.

³² Igry is a metathesis of rg! (Friedrich 1951:162).

³³ For this restoration see Gibson SSI 2:80; and Dion 1974:206.

³⁴ Two possible restorations: 1) [r²kl. wšš]y. nbšh. “[may] his soul [eat and drink]” (Gibson SSI 2:80-81); or 2) [wh²kl. whšq]y. nbšh. “[and he caused/permitted] his soul [to eat and drink]” (Tropper 1993:125).

³⁵ Tropper suggests: “a lamb in the roasting position(?)” (1993:129-130).

³⁶ Tropper suggests: w²l. ybl. ²nun. ys²m²k². mlk[. ydyh]. “And [upon a certain/reliable ram(?)] the king [should support(?)] his hands” (1993:130).

³⁷ Tropper suggests restoring: “he should send out a ram (?)” (1993:130).

³⁸ Restored on the basis of Hadad 13. See Tropper 1993:130.

³⁹ Restored on the basis of Bar-Rakib 2:7-9. See Tropper 1993:131.

REFERENCES

Text: Tropper 1993:98-139; KAI #215; SSI 2:76-86. Translations and studies: TUAT 1/6:628-630; Dalley 1995; Dion 1974; 1978; Faber 1987; Fensham 1977; Fitzmyer and Kaufman 1992:16-17; Friedrich 1951; Friedrich and Röllig 1970; Greenfield 1991b; Greenstein 1982; Hawkins 1986; Huehnergard 1983; Lipiński 1977; Tropper 1992; 1993:98-139; Younger 1986:91-100.

THE BAR-RAKIB INSCRIPTION (2.38)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

Composed not long after the Panamuwa inscription (i.e. 733-727 BCE), the Bar-Rakib inscription was written in an Old Aramaic dialect which has been identified as “Mesopotamian Aramaic.”¹ Its form is that of the memorial genre, though the emphasis is on Bar-Rakib’s vassal loyalty to Tiglath-Pileser III of Assyria.² The inscription was discovered in excavations conducted at Zenjirli (cf. COS 2.36, 2.37, and especially 2.37).

¹ Greenfield 1978:95. There are eight inscriptions attributable to Bar-Rakib.

² The absence of a curse is “rather surprising.” See Müller 1974:10, n. 6.

Introduction (lines 1-4a)

I am Bar-Rakib, son of Panamuwa, king of Sam²al, the servant of Tiglath-Pileser (III), lord of the four quarters of the earth.

The Accession (lines 4b-7a)

On account of the loyalty of my father and on account of my loyalty,
my lord, Rakib-El,³ and my lord, Tiglath-Pileser, caused me to reign upon the throne of my father.

The Ascension of the Dynasty (lines 7b-15)

And the house of my father profited,⁴ ^a more than all others.
And I ran at the wheel of my lord,⁵ ^b the king of Assyria,

^a Ps 105:44;
Isa 53:11;
Qob 2:10;
4:4; 5:17

^b 1 Sam 8:11;
2 Sam 15:1;
1 Kgs 1:5

^c 2 Sam 7;
1 Kgs 4-8

in the midst of powerful kings, lords of silver and lords of gold.

And I took control of the house of my father.
And I made it better than the house of any powerful king.

And my brother kings were desirous⁶ for all that is the good of my house.

The Construction of the Palace (lines 16-20)

But there was not a good house⁷ for my fathers, the kings of Sam²al.

They had the house of Kulamuwa;
and it was a winter house for them;
and it was a summer house (too).

But I built this house!⁸ ^c

³ Lit., "The chariot driver of El." On this deity see Kulamuwa (COS 2.30, n. 22).

⁴ For the possible meanings for the verb ml see DNWSI 870-871 s.v. ml. Parker translates "accomplished" (1997:160, n. 8).

⁵ Cf. Panamuwa 13 (COS 2.37).

⁶ The best understanding of the verb htr²bw is as an Epa²al of n²b. See Kaufman 1974:153 and Younger 1986:101, n. 38.

⁷ Probably a sandhi-writing, see Degen 1969:43.

⁸ Cf. the same word play in the Davidic narrative: byt "temple," "palace," and "dynasty." (2 Sam 7; 1 Kgs 4-8).

REFERENCES

Text: Tropper 1993:132-139; KAI#216; SSF2.87-92. Translations and studies: TUAT 1/6:630-631; Sader 1987:169-170; Younger 1986:100-103.

THE TELL DAN STELE (2.39)

Alan Millard

Three fragments of a basalt stele were found at Tell Dan in 1993 and 1994, re-used as building stones in structures dated on archaeological grounds to the eighth century BCE. The pieces fit together, with gaps. Across the smooth face run parts of thirteen lines of clearly incised Aramaic letters, with word-dividers, of a style best placed late in the ninth century BCE. An unknown number of lines is missing at the beginning and end, nor is the length of the lines known, allowing for a variety of reconstructions. The monument was apparently a "memorial" inscription, like those of Mesha, Kulamuwa and Zakkur of the same period.

[sajid x [] and cuft]
[] x my father¹ went u[p] against him when he fought at x[]
Then my father lay down^a and went to his [fathers]. There came up the king of I[s]rael² beforetime in the land of my father, [but]

^a 1 Kgs 2:10
etc.

^b 1 Sam 15:11;
1 Kgs 3:7;

^c 2 Chr 1:11
Exod 13:21;

22; 32:1;
Num 10:33;

14:14; Isa 52:12 & Gen 46:29;
Exod 14:6; 2 Kgs 9:21

Hadad [ma]de [me] king³ ^b []

x⁴ Hadad went before me⁵ ^c [and] I went from x
[]

of my king(s)⁶ I killed kin[gs]⁷ who harnessed⁷ ^d x

¹ The author is not identified. Hazael of Damascus (COS 2.40) is the most attractive candidate, but the reference to his 'father' in terms of a predecessor contradicts Assyrian and biblical statements that he was a usurper (2 Kgs 8:7-15; see COS 2.113G, note 3; 2.113C-F); without more of the text, speculation is pointless.

² This restoration assumes only one letter (s) is lost at the end of the line.

³ Cp. Zakkur's claim that Ba'lsamayn made him king (COS 2.35).

⁴ The meaning of the first word in this line, as it stands, the pronoun "I," is unclear; it may be the end of a verb from the previous line.

⁵ Gods were widely perceived as marching ahead of their loyal worshippers to give success; see Ashurnasirpal II's "annals" ii.25-26, 27, 50, iii.52. See Grayson 1976:128, 130, 140 and 76 n. 305; 1991:203, 205, 216, with 134 n. to line 48 and the depictions of the god Ashur above the king in battle scenes on sculptures from his palace; Budge 1914: pls. XIVa, XVIIa, XXIIIa.

⁶ Translation uncertain; the first editors rendered "my kingdom" (Biran and Naveh 1995:15-16), but "my kings" i.e. vassals, is also possible. cf. 1 Kgs 20:1.

⁷ Translation uncertain.

[ch]ariots and thousands of horsemen⁸ * [] m⁹ son of [] king of Israel and kill[ed] yahu son of [I overthr]ew¹⁰ the house of David.¹¹ I set/imposed [tribute ?]

* Exod 14:17
 etc.;
 1 Kgs 9:19;
 2 Kgs 18:24
 f 2 Sam 3:1;
 6; 7:26;
 2 Kgs 17:21; Isa 7:12, 13; 22:22; Jer 21:12; Zech 12:7ff x their land to [] other and to [was/became kin]g over Is[rael] siege against []

⁸ "Thousands" could also be "two thousand."

⁹ A restoration "[Jeho]ram son of [Ahab] king of Israel and killed [Ahaz]iah son of [Jehoram kin]g of Beth-David" is attractive historically (Kitchen 1997:32-34), although 2 Kgs 9:14-28 names Jehu as the killer and the expression "king of the House of PN" has grammatical problems. Possibly Hadad was the subject here, for the first person ending of the verb is not preserved. The number of missing letters is impossible to calculate with certainty, for, even if only one is to be restored at the end of the third line (n. 2), there is no proof that the stele was symmetrical, or that the lines were of equal length.

¹⁰ The restoration suggested is [w^hhp]k, "and I overthrew." Cf. Sefire IC 19, 21 (COS 2.82) and 2 Sam 10:3.

¹¹ Beth-David, House or Dynasty of David: this understanding of the six letters byrdwd has been challenged because the words are not separated as are all others in this text. In the light of Aram. use, that is not compelling; see Rendsburg 1995. The numerous names for dynasties or states "House of" or "Son of PN" hark back to eponymous ancestors who, in some cases at least, are attested, e.g. Omri; Gush of Arpad; Sader 1987:99-136, 271-273. Linguistic arguments in favor of a place name have some force (Knauf, de Pury, and Römer 1994), although the divine name Dod supposed, is otherwise unknown, see Barstad 1995:493-98, but attempts to avoid any possible reference to an historical David (Cryer 1995; Thompson 1995) stem rather from a form of scepticism at odds with all known ancient practices.

REFERENCES

Text: Biran and Naveh 1993; 1995. Translations and studies: Barstad 1995; Budge 1914; Cryer 1995; Grayson 1976; 1991; Kitchen 1997; Knauf, de Pury, and Römer 1994; Lemaire 1994; 1998; Rendsburg 1995; Sader 1987; Thompson 1995.

THE HAZAEL BOOTY INSCRIPTIONS (2.40)

Alan Millard

Four brief dedicatory inscriptions refer to "our lord Hazael" who is to be identified as the usurper who took the throne of Damascus from Ben-Hadad (Assyrian Hadad-idri; cf. COS 2.125A) and ruled ca. 842-800 BCE; see Pitard 1987:145-160; Sader 1987:231-260.

A. A trapezoidal bronze plaque cast with figures in relief, a horse's nose-piece, was unearthed at the Hera temple in Samos in 1984; see Kyreleis 1988. One line of Aramaic letters is incised in the field. This discovery established the correct reading of a line of Aramaic letters incised upon a bronze horse's cheek piece found long before in the area of the temple of Apollo Daphnephoros in Eretria, Euboea (see Charbonnet 1986), showing that the inscriptions are duplicates; see Amadasi Guzzo 1987:17-20; Röllig 1988; Bron and Lemaire 1989; Eph^cal and Naveh 1989.

That which Hadad gave¹ * to our lord^b Hazael from ^cAmq in the year when our lord crossed

^a Deut 20:14;
 1 Sam 30:23

the river.² ^c

^b Dan 4:16, 21 ^c Gen 31:21; Exod 23:31; Num 22:5; 2 Sam 8:3 etc.

¹ The god Hadad made Hazael victorious and so gave him these objects among the booty. They were then selected and inscribed as votive offerings in accordance with the common practice of giving the deity part of the spoils of war (Gen 14:20; Num 31:25-54; 1 Chr 18:11). It is unlikely that they were originally presented to the Greek temples where they were found; they were probably looted from somewhere in Syria, perhaps the temple of Hadad in Damascus and passed through several hands to Greece.

² "The river" is understood to be the Euphrates, as in biblical and cuneiform texts, but in conjunction with ^cAmq, the plain of the Orontes, here could denote that river, see Millard 1993b:175*-176*.

B1. A fragmentary ivory plaque found in two pieces (which do not join) at Arslan Tash, ancient Hadatu, is thought to be from the edge of a bed.

[] x the people (or "Amma") for our lord

Hazael in the year [] x []¹

¹ Reconstruction as "the bed which the people (or 'Amma') offered to ... in the year of annexing Hawran" (Puech 1981; followed by Bron and Lemaire 1989:37) seems too imaginative (see Eph^cal and Naveh 1989:197 n. 24).

B2. Another ivory strip, from Nimrud¹ in Assyria, bears the end of a text:

Our [lor]d Hazael

¹ See Millard in Mallowan 1966:598.

REFERENCES

Text: KAI No. 232 (B1 only); SSI 2, No. 2 (B1 only); Bron and Lemaire 1989; Eph'al and Naveh 1989; Kyrieleis 1988; Röllig 1998. Studies: Amadasi Guzzo 1987; Charbonnet 1986; Lemaire 1991b; Mallowan 1966; Millard 1993b; Pitard 1987; Sader 1987.

7. ARAMAIC DEDICATORY INSCRIPTIONS

THE ASWAN DEDICATORY INSCRIPTION (2.41)

Bezalel Porten

Usually known as the Aswan sandstone stela, this six-line building dedication inscription (Cairo J. 36448) was published by de Vogüé in 1903 (TAD D17.1). It is 44.2 cm wide (frontally), 27.5 cm high and 12.5 cm thick (in depth) and is engraved in cursive script whose proximate forerunners are attested in a clay tablet of 571/570 BCE (Louvre AO 21063; SSI 2:116-117; cf. the letters aleph, beth, he, waw, zayin, yod, kaph). Unlike other dedicatory inscriptions, both Phoenician and Aramaic, this one is dated (Sivan = Mehîr, 7 Artaxerxes). Since palaeographically the reign of Artaxerxes I is indicated, the resultant date would be June 6-13, 458 BCE.¹ So far unique in Achaemenid Egypt, the inscription formula may be compared to a Cilician inscription at Yale ("This statue Nanast erected before ..." [KAI #258; SSI 2:153-154]). In both the Cilician and Elephantine inscriptions, the object described is indicated by a Persian loanword — ptkr, patikara*— "statue" and brzmdn, brzmdāna*— "shrine" respectively — and both follow a traditional Aramaic formula: "Cultic object + demonstrative - verb - subject - indirect object" (KAI #215). The cultic site was dedicated by the Troop Commander of Syene, whose name is damaged, to a deity whose name is likewise damaged.

This² shrine³ PN⁴ the Troop Commander⁵ of Syene made⁶ in the month of Sivan,⁷ that is Mehîr, year seven of Artaxerxes⁸ the king⁹ [for] DN⁹ the god. Peace¹⁰ [...] ...

 a Gen 21:22, 32; 26:26; Judg 4:2; 1 Sam 14:50; 2 Sam 10:16; 2 Kgs 4:13; 5:1; Esth 8:9; Ezra 4:7-8, 11, 23; 6:14; Ezra 7 passim; 8:1; Neh 2:1; 5:14; 13:6

¹ Lemaire 1992:295-303 argued for a date in the reign of Artaxerxes II. But already in Artaxerxes II fifth year, Elephantine was controlled by Amyrtaeus (400 BCE [TAD B4.6:1]), who gave way a year later to Nephertites (TAD A3.9:3-4). Synchronous Babylonian-Egyptian double dating was standard in Egypt between 473 and 402 BCE; Porten 1990:16, 31.

² For use of the demonstrative at the beginning of dedicatory inscriptions see KAI #215, #258.

³ An Old Persian loanword brzmdāna* (Bogoliubov 1966).

⁴ The surviving letter traces (odn[...] or orn[...]) do not allow for the restoration of wydrng Vidranga, as desired by Bogoliubov 1966 and Lemaire 1992:292.

⁵ Aram. rb hyl = BH *šr šb*². Both officials were second in command, the Aram. to the frataraka— "governor," and the biblical to the king. We have the names of four people in the fifth century BCE who bore this title: Rauk (TAD B5.1:3 [495]; D7.24:15), Naphaina (TAD A5.2:7 [post 434/433]), his son Vidranga (TAD A4.3:3; B2.9:4-5, 2.10:2, 4, 3.9:2-3 [420-416]), and Vidranga's son Naphaina (TAD 4.7:7 || 4.8:6 [410]). A Vidranga appears in broken context in a fragmentary letter of 399 BCE (TAD A3.9:7). They functioned not only in a military capacity but in a judicial one as well, independently or alongside the governor (TAD B2.9:4-5).

⁶ The verb bd was regularly, if not exclusively, used to describe the fashioning of a ritual object; see TAD D20.1:2 = COS 2.60 here and cf. DNWSI 810-813.

⁷ rñšš* was the standard spelling of the royal name in Eg. Aram. texts, though once it is abbreviated to rñš* (TAD B3.3:1). In the Bible it was rendered rñššr* (Ezra 7 passim) or rñššr* (Ezra 4:7-8, 11, 23; 6:14 [separate source]).

⁸ Palaeography and the historical situation point to Artaxerxes I. In his year 7 Babylonian Sivan and Eg. Mehîr converged for only a week, June 6-13.

⁹ The preserved text reads [l]w²pd/rñhy. Unfortunately, what is preserved does not allow intelligible restoration. The attempt to restore Osirnakht (Lemaire 1992:293) cannot be sustained.

¹⁰ The last legible word is another Old Persian loanword, drwt, druvair— "peace, welfare" and must have introduced the concluding blessing to be bestowed upon the official who built the shrine and set the inscription.

REFERENCES

Text, translations and studies: AC #22; Bogoliubov 1966; DAE #75; Fitzmyer and Kaufman 1992:B3f3; Lemaire 1992; TAD D17.1.

8. PHILISTINE INSCRIPTIONS

THE EKRON INSCRIPTION OF AKHAYUS (2.42)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

Written in a lapidary style script developed by the Philistines at Ekron, the text is a royal dedicatory inscription for the temple of the goddess Ptgyh made by Akhayus,¹ the son of Padi, the ruler of Ekron. The royal names ("Padi" and "Akhayus") are names known from Assyrian sources: for Padi, the inscriptions of Sennacherib (COS 2.119B) and another inscription from Ekron (see n. 3 below); for Akhayus (vocalized in the Assyrian texts as Ikausu), the inscriptions of Esarhaddon and Aššurbanipal. On the basis of these names, the inscription dates to ca. 680-665 BCE.

The name Akhayus has been generally associated with the name of biblical ²*ākīš* Achish, the Philistine king(s) of Gath in the times of Saul and Solomon (1 Sam 21:11-16; 1 Sam 27:1-29:9; 1 Kgs 2:39-40).

Dedication (lines 1-3)

The temple (house)² that Akhayus, son of Padi,³ son of Ysd, son of Ada, son of Ya^cir, ruler^{4b} of Ekron,⁵ built for PTGYH,⁶ his lady.

Invocation (lines 4-5)

May she bless him,^{7d}

a Isa 29:1

b Judg 3:3;
Judg 9:6, 22;
16:5 etc;
1 Sam 5; 6;
7; 21:10;
27:2; 29:1, 6-7

and prote[ct] him,
and prolong his days,^d
and may she bless his [l]and.

c Josh 13:3, etc.

d = d Num 6:24-26

¹ For a vocalization as Akhayus, i.e. ¹Αχαιοϋς, meaning "Greek," see Gitin, Dothan, and Naveh 1997a:11; Naveh 1998:35-37. The name Achish appears in an Eg. list of names from Caphtor (Crete) from the 16th century BCE (Sasson 1997:632).

² Rainey (1998:242) points out that bt bn ²kyš is a noun in construct with a clause acting as the nomen rectum. Cf. Isa 29:1.

³ Padi is best known from the annals of Sennacherib (below, COS 2.119B) and now also from another inscription from Ekron that reads: lbt^c1 wlpdy "for Ba^cal and for Padi." See Gitin and Cogan 1999. For Ba^cal at Ekron, cf. Ba^cal-Zebub in 2 Kgs 1:2-3. See Sasson 1997:634.

⁴ The use of the phrase šr ^cqrm (instead of mlk ^cqrm) may be because: 1) it expresses the vassal's loyalty to the Assyrian king, 2) the term šr means king in the Philistine-Canaanite dialect, or 3) the phrase is directed toward a particular audience. Cf. the Hadad-yith^ci inscription (COS 2.34, n. 5); the Aram. has "king" (mlk), the Assyrian has "governor" (šākin mātī) (cf. Isa 10:8). Note that the Philistine rulers are called šar (Judg 3:3; 16:5 etc; 1 Sam 5; 6; 7). Cf. also Judg 9:6 and 9:22. In 1 Sam 29, the title sarnē p'lišīm (29:1, 7, also hass'ranim in v. 6) is used synonymously with šarē p'lišīm (29:3 [2x]). 4). Akhayus (Achish) of Gath was called melek (e.g. 1 Sam 21:11; 27:2), perhaps because at that time he was the senior among the five Philistine rulers (Rainey 1998:243).

⁵ For the spelling and vocalization of the name ^cqrm, see Rainey 1998:243. In Akk. it is spelled ^uAm-qar-ru-na and ^uAm-qar-ru-u-na = Amqarūna = ^{}Amqarōna < ^{}Aqqarōna. See Parpola 1970:16; and Hurvitz 1968:18-24.

⁶ Much speculation has arisen over this Ekronite goddess. Gitin, Dothan and Naveh (1998:12) suggest an equation with Asherah (this deity's name appears on a votive jar inscription from Tel Migne / Ekron). Schäfer-Lichtenberger (1998:64-76) vocalizes the goddess's name as Pythagajah and argues that she was Ekron's principal deity, positing possible connections between this Philistine goddess and the sanctuary at Delphi known as Pytho, which was the shrine of Gaia before the cult of Apollo became popular there. The principal goddess of the Mycenaean period was a personification of mother earth which may be a further indication that the Philistines were of Mycenaean origin.

Since the gimel in the word appears somewhat defectively written, some scholars have suggested different readings. Demsky (1997:1-5; 1998:53-58) reads ptryh and equates with the Greek term πόρνα — a title used in the addressing of females meaning "lady," "mistress," "queen." It is used to describe Athena and Artemis. Demsky equates its use in the inscription with Asherah. But there is a redundancy created by Demsky's proposal: lptryh . ²dth "for his lady/mistress, his lady." The term ²dt is an epithet and thus ptryh would seem to be a divine name. Görg (1998), however, suggests the reading ptryh, and equates this with a Canaanite goddess known from Ugarit. However, the ending in Ug. is y not yh (Sasson 1997:633). Moreover, the text seems to read gimel, not nun or resh.

⁷ Cf. the Azatiwada inscription (COS 2.31) and the Kuntillet ^cAjrud inscriptions (COS 2.47).

REFERENCES

Text: Text: Gitin, Dothan, and Naveh 1997a; 1997b. Studies: Demsky 1997; 1998a; 1998b; Gitin 1993; Naveh 1998; Rainey 1998; Schäfer-Lichtenberger 1998; Sasson 1997.

9. NABATAEAN INSCRIPTIONS

A NABATAEAN COMMEMORATIVE INSCRIPTION FROM ^cAVDAT (2.43)

J. F. Healey

This is a rare example of a non-funerary Nabataean building inscription. Found ca. 2 km south of ^cAvdat on what was probably a libation altar, it mentions a religious celebration (mrzh) connected with Dushara and is dated, though the reading of the date is uncertain.¹

Event being recorded (lines 1-2a)

This is the dam (which was built) by ... and ... sons of ... (and his associates) the sons of Saruta.

a Jer 16:5;
Amos 6:7

god of Gaia,³ in the year 7(?) ... of King Rabbel, King of the Nabataeans, who brings life and deliverance to his people.⁴

Dedication and date (lines 2b-4)

This was at the marzeah-festival² of Dushara, the

¹ The text is published and annotated by Negev 1963.

² The marzeah (Heb. form) is a widespread phenomenon stretching from Ebla in the third millennium BCE to Marseilles in the first millennium CE and also alluded to in later Jewish sources. It refers to a communal celebration by members of a fraternity involving eating and drinking under the supervision of a symposiarch. Strabo refers to such celebrations by the Nabataeans. See COS 2.36, note 18.

³ Gaia is the ancient form of the geographical name al-Ji, the name of the village to the east of Petra. This may have been the original (even pre-Nabataean) home of Dushara, the main Nabataean god.

⁴ The date is far from certain, but the 7th year of Rabbel II (70-106 CE) was 76/77 CE. (This follows Meshorer 1975; Negev 1963 has the 18th year). The titulature "he who has brought life and deliverance to his people" is an Aramaic version of the Greek title σωτήρ.

REFERENCES

Meshorer 1975; Negev 1963.

THE DEDICATION OF A STATUE TO THE DIVINIZED NABATAEAN KING (2.44)

J. F. Healey

While belonging to a common genre of inscription commemorating an individual in the presence of a god,¹ this particular example is noteworthy for the possibility that the god in question is the divinized Nabataean king, Obodas. It also contains a probably poetic section, the meaning of which is uncertain, but which appears to be in Arabic. It thus contains the earliest Arabic known to us, from the 1st century CE.²

Commemoration (lines 1-2a)

May he who recites (this inscription) before the god Obodas be remembered for good and may whoever ... be remembered.³

Pious Act Commemorated (line 2b)

Garmalahi son of Taymalahi [set up] a statue before the god Obodas.⁴

Reason for Dedication (lines 4-5)

And he (Obodas) works without reward or favor, and he, when death tried to claim us, did not let it claim (us), for when a wound (of ours) festered, he did not let us perish.⁵

Autograph (line 6)

Garmalahi wrote (this) with his (own) hand.

¹ On the formula see Healey 1996.

² First published and translated by J. Naveh and S. Shaked in Negev 1986, this inscription has become the focus of intense scholarly interest, especially centered upon the Arabic section: Noja 1989; Bellamy 1990; Snir 1993; Ambros 1994; Kropp 1994.

³ The formula "Remembered be PN before DN" is extremely common in inscriptions of this period (Nabataean, Palmyrene, Hatran, Jewish, Syriac, Greek). The basic idea behind it is clearly that anyone seeing the inscription should mention the name of the person who wrote the inscription. This would keep his or her memory alive before the god and bring blessing on the reciter of the name.

⁴ Obodas was regarded as divine from the early first century CE onwards, though it is not clear which Obodas is meant, I (ca. 96-85 BCE) or III (30-9 BCE). This may have been a nationalistic move towards an ancestral cult. Theophoric personal names such as 'Abd'obodat ("servant of [the god] Obodas") reflect the same idea. Obodas was buried at 'Avdat (see Stephanus of Byzantium; Negev 1986:59-60). Despite the report of Stephanus, some have doubted that the god Obodas is a divinized king (Dijkstra 1995:319-321).

⁵ The different commentators vary considerably in their translations of the Arabic. We provisionally follow Bellamy 1990.

REFERENCES

Ambros 1994; Bellamy 1990; Healey 1996; Kropp 1994; Negev 1986; Noja 1989; Snir 1993.

A NABATAEAN INSCRIPTION CONTAINING RELIGIOUS LAWS FROM THE ATARGATIS TEMPLE AT PETRA (2.45)

J. F. Healey

This inscription gives us a most tantalizing glimpse of Nabataean religious law in the 1st century CE. It is the religious aspect which is particularly unusual, since on secular law we are surprisingly well informed.¹ The inscription is preserved on a marble plaque which was originally attached to the temple wall along with (many?) others which proclaimed the religious law of this particular temple. The habit of placing religious laws in full view in temples is known from Jerusalem and from Hatra in the same period. In Jerusalem, the fragments of the law prohibiting non-Jews from going beyond the Court of the Gentiles have survived (see also literary reference in Josephus). In Hatra the laws on temple walls include strict rules about theft and an apparent rule that shoes were to be removed before entry.

In this case the law seems to be directed at priests, though there is so much difficulty in the text that our translation, based on that of the publishers of the inscription, must be regarded as tentative.²

Law on Taxation of Offerings (lines 1-3) Whatever he receives ³ of silver or gold or offerings or provisions of any kind, or of silver (coinage) or bronze (coinage) ⁴ ... and the other half (will be allotted) to the priests ⁵ ... after the carrying out of a proclamation of delinquency ⁶ before this (time). Then there shall be allotted ...	a Lev 7:28-36; 10:12-15, etc.; Deut 18:1-8; 1 Sam 2:12-17; Neh 10:32-33	... concerning it, whoever does other than all of what is written above shall as a consequence repay that which was found out ... Date (line 4) On the fourth day of ⁷ Ab, the 37th year of Haretat, King of the Nabataeans, lover of his people. ⁷ And ...
---	--	--

¹ See Healey 1993.
² See Hammond, Johnson, and Jones 1986.
³ Apparently this refers to the income of a priest or some other temple official (receiving offerings). Subsequent reference to priests receiving half may refer to some collective body.
⁴ There is a distinction between precious metals and coinage.
⁵ On temple taxes note Neh 10:32-33 and Josephus, Antiquities, III.191; Mishnah Shekalim 2:3, 4; 4:7-8; Yoma 6:1, etc.
⁶ ⁷kryz ⁶wn: like the public proclamation of bankruptcy which protects the rights of creditors.
⁷ The king, whose "nationalistic" title is normally added, is Aretas IV (9 BCE-40 CE) and the date is therefore 28/29 CE.

REFERENCES

Hammond, Johnson, and Jones 1986; Healey 1993b.

A NABATAEAN SHRINE INSCRIPTION FROM EGYPT (2.46)

J. F. Healey

This well-preserved inscription on a white limestone block is particularly important historically because of the detailed chronological synchronism it gives. It comes from the site of Tell esh-Shuqafiya in the eastern delta of lower Egypt and is dated to 34 BCE.¹ The Nabataeans were active in Egypt and have left many inscriptions there.

Dedication (lines 1-4a) This is the shrine ² which Wahballahi son of ³ Abd ³ alga ² son of ² Awsalahi made for the god Dushara who is in Daphne ³ — as it is called in Egyptian. ⁴	Date (lines 4b-6) The year 18 of Queen Cleopatra, ⁵ which is the year 26 of Maliku, ⁶ King of the Nabataeans, i.e. the year 2 of ² Aqlah, ⁷ in the month of Nisan.
---	--

¹ The primary publication is Jones, Johnson, Hammond, and Fiema 1988.
² The Nabataean word (^{rb}⁶ⁱ²) indicates a square temple or shrine.
³ Probably Tell ed-Defenna.
⁴ Possibly "Daphne of the Egyptians."
⁵ 34 BCE. For corrected dating see Fiema and Jones 1990.
⁶ Or Maniku.
⁷ Perhaps a local priest.

REFERENCES

Fiema and Jones 1990; Jones, Johnson, Hammond, and Fiema 1988.

This page intentionally left blank

B. VOTIVE INSCRIPTIONS

This page intentionally left blank

1. HEBREW INSCRIPTIONS

KUNTILLET 'AJRUD (2.47)

KUNTILLET 'AJRUD: INSCRIBED PITHOS 1 (2.47A)

P. Kyle McCarter

A number of Hebrew inscriptions, primarily religious in content, were found in excavations conducted during the 1970's by Ze'ev Meshel for the Tel Aviv Institute of Archaeology at the site of Kuntillet 'Ajrud, a major crossroads in the northeastern Sinai. The inscriptions were found in the ruins of the better preserved of the two buildings found at the site, which have been dated archaeologically to the end of the ninth and the beginning of the eighth century BCE. Among the most important artifacts were two large pithoi bearing a number of inscriptions and other graffiti. The first pithos is decorated with various drawings, including a pair of ibexes feeding on a stylized tree of life, a cow suckling a calf, a partially preserved lion, and, of special interest, a pair of human-bovine figures in the traditional pose of man and wife, king and queen or god and consort. This last illustration appears immediately below and partially overlapping the blessing translated below. Though it has been vigorously argued that the two figures are representations of the Egyptian god Bes (Beck 1982:27-31; Hadley 1987:189-196; Keel and Uehlinger 218-223), the unmistakable bull's head, hooved feet and tail of the larger figure argue decisively in favor of interpreting him as the "Yahweh of Samaria" invoked in the adjacent inscription (cf. "the young bull of Samaria" in Hos 8:6), while the female breasts of the smaller figure, who stands slightly behind Yahweh and interlocks her arm with his (cf. Weippert 1988: 673), is evidently "his asherah."

Utterance of ²Ashyaw the king! ^a: "Say to Yehallel and to Yaw^casah and to [...]: 'I bless you by Yahweh^b of Samaria² and his asherah^{3c}!'"

^a 2 Kgs 13:9-19, 25; 14:8-17; 2 Chr 25:17-25

^b 2 Sam 6:18; 1 Chr 16:2; Ps 129:8

^c Exod 34:13; Deut 7:5; 12:3; 1 Kgs 14:15, 23; 16:33; 2 Kgs 13:16; 17:10; 18:14; 21:3; 23:14; cf. 1 Kgs 15:1; 18:19; 2 Kgs 21:7; 23:4, 7; Jer 17:2; 1 Chr 15:16

¹ Reading ²šyw hmlk. Though the mem of the title cannot be seen in published visible-light photographs, it is clear in infrared images. The king in question is Joash of Israel, the years of whose reign (ca. 802-787 BCE) correspond precisely with the paleographic dating of the Kuntillet 'Ajrud inscriptions. The correspondence between ²šyw, "²Ashyaw," and biblical yw²f, "Joash" (originally Yaw²ash) is not problematic, the theophoric and verbal elements being transposed as in a number of other royal names known from the Bible (cf. Ahaziah [2 Kgs 8:24, etc.] and Jehoahaz [2 Chr 21:17, etc.], Jehoiahin [2 Kgs 24:6, etc.] and Jeconiah [Jer 24:1, etc.]), etc. Cf. COS 2.50, n. 3.

² The god of Israel as he was worshiped in Samaria. A distinctive feature of the Kuntillet 'Ajrud inscriptions is that Yahweh is routinely identified by one of his local manifestations, the Yahweh of Samaria and the Yahweh of Teman (McCarter 1987:139-143). Though the genitive construction yhw² šmrn violates BH grammar, it is not surprising in inscriptional Hebrew in view of comparative evidence in related languages.

³ In the Bible the word ²ššrā is sometimes used in reference to a goddess, "Asherah," but more often it designates a wooden cult object — possibly an upright wooden pole, a carved image of a goddess, or even a sacred tree. Its use is usually condemned by the biblical writers, at least in part because of its association with a goddess. In light of this association, the formula employed at Kuntillet 'Ajrud, "Yahweh of Samaria [or 'Teman'] and his asherah," suggests the pairing of the god of Israel with a consort. Various proposals have been made to explain the connection between the wooden cult object and the divine consort. Most probably, the abstract conceptualization of Yahweh's divine presence, as marked in the cult by the wooden object, was given concrete form — that is, hypostatized — and personified as female, then venerated as Yahweh's consort (McCarter 1987:143-49).

REFERENCES

Text: AHI 8.017; HAE 1:59-61; Translations and studies: Gilula 1973/79; Beck 1982; Emerton 1982; Lemaire 1984b; Weinfeld 1984; Hadley 1987a; McCarter 1987; Meshel 1979; 1987; Olyan 1988:25-34; Weippert 1988; Keel and Uehlinger 1998:225-226.

KUNTILLET 'AJRUD: INSCRIBED PITHOS 2 (2.47B)

P. Kyle McCarter

The second pithos from Kuntillet 'Ajrud, like the first, is decorated with a number of drawings, including a cow, an archer with his bow drawn, and a group of five human figures, standing with their hands extended as if in worship or supplication. The pithos also bears four separate inscriptions. First is a complete Hebrew abecedar, with the letters pe and ayin reversed from their traditional order, as also found in the early twelfth-century BCE ostrakon from ^cIzbet Šarḥ and occasionally in the Bible (Prov 2:16-17; 3:46-51; 4:16-17; 31:25-26 [LXX]; cf. Ps 34:16-17); cf. COS 1.107. Second, adjoining the drawing of the supplicating figures, is a list of names: Shakanyaw, ^aAmoš, Šamaryaw, ^bEliyaw, ^cUzziyaw and Mišray. The third and fourth inscriptions are translated here.

A Fragmentary Blessing (lines 1-3)

[...] to Yahweh of the Teman¹ ^a and his asherah.^b And may he grant (?) everything² that he asks from the compassionate god³ ^c [...], and may he grant according to his needs⁴ ^d all that he asks!⁵

A Message of Blessing (lines 1-10)

Utterance of 'Amaryaw, "Say to⁶ my lord: 'Is it

^a Jer 49:7; 20; Ezek 25:13; Amos 1:12; Obad 9; Hab 3:3

well with you?^a I bless you by Yahweh^b of Teman⁷ and his asherah. May he bless you and keep you,^c and may he be with my lord!"^a ^b Exod 34:13; Deut 7:5; 12:3; 1 Kgs 14:15, 23; 16:33; 2 Kgs 13:6; 17:10; 18:4; 21:3; 23:14; cf. 1 Kgs 15:13; 18:19; 2 Kgs 21:7; 23:4, 7; Jer 17:2; 2 Chr 15:16 ^c Exod 34:6; Jer 4:2; Ps 86:15; Neh 9:31; cf. Joel 2:13; Pss 103:8; 111:4; 145:8; Neh 9:17; 2 Chr 30:9 ^d Exod 36:7; Jer 49:9; Obad 5; Prov 25:16 ^e Gen 29:6; 43:27; 2 Sam 18:32; 20:9; 1 Kgs 2:13; 2 Kgs 4:26 ^f 2 Sam 6:18; 1 Chr 16:2; Ps 129:8 ^g Num 6:24 ^h Gen 28:15

¹ The particular manifestation of the god of Israel invoked in this blessing is yhw htmn, "Yahweh of the Teman," i.e., "Yahweh of the Southland," probably the local form of Yahweh worshiped in the vicinity of Kuntillet 'Ajrud. "The Teman" or "Southland" is the biblical Teman, spelled tmn (tēmān) here in the Israelite (northern) dialect of Hebrew, though the name also appears at Kuntillet 'Ajrud in the Judahite (southern) form tymn (ṭaymān). The initial article is an indication that Teman is understood as a region, "the Teman" or "the Southland."

² Reading wyšl [.] kl. Only the last two letters are certain.

³ The apparent reading is mš . hnn, but the šin is uncertain, and the reading mšl . hnn is suggested by the second Khirbet Beit Lei cave inscription (COS 2.53) as well as biblical šl ṣḥām w'hānūn, "the gracious and compassionate god" (Exod 34:5, etc.)

⁴ Reading wmmldyhw (apparently without the expected word divider) and interpreting the final sequence as the preposition followed by dayyēhū, lit., "according to his sufficiency." Weinfeld (1984:125-126) reads wmm lh yhw klbbh, "let Yahweh given him according to his wish," but the defective spelling of the divine name (yhw), though it appears (by scribal error?) on a stone bowl from Kuntillet 'Ajrud, would be isolated in the pithoi and plaster texts, where the full spelling (yhw) is consistently found, as elsewhere in the Iron Age epigraphic corpus.

⁵ Reading klbph, lit., "everything that is in his mouth."

⁶ A peculiarity of this inscription in comparison not only to biblical practice but to the rest of the epigraphic corpus is the attachment of the preposition -l (l) to the preceding word, as in mr l . šdy, "Say to my lord," instead of the expected form l . attached to the following word.

⁷ In this case yhw tmn, "Yahweh of Teman," occurs without the article (see n. 1 above).

REFERENCES

Text: AHI 8.018-22; HAE 1: 59-61. Translations and studies: Chase 1982; Keel and Uehlinger 1998:227; McCarter 1987; Meshel 1979; 1987:E (2.2); Weinfeld 1984.

KUNTILLET 'AJRUD: THE TWO-LINE INSCRIPTION (2.47C)

P. Kyle McCarter

Portions of at least three ink-on-plaster texts in very fragmentary condition were found where they had fallen on the floor of the so-called bench room, near the entryway of the main building at Kuntillet 'Ajrud. One of these is illegible except for a single word that admits of no obvious interpretation. The second, translated here, consists of two incomplete lines of text in four fragments. There is insufficient continuous text to determine the exact relationship among the four parts of the inscription, and the fragment presented here is the only one well enough preserved for translation. A peculiarity of the plaster inscriptions is that they are written in Phoenician script, but features of phonology and morphology show that the language is Hebrew.

A blessing (lines 1-2)

[... May] he prolong (their) days,¹ ^a and be satisfied [...] Yahweh of the Teman² ^b has dealt favorably [with' ...]

^a 1 Kgs 3:14; Deut 4:26, 40; 5:33; 11:9; 17:20; 22:7; 30:18; 32:47; Josh 24:31; Judg 2:7; Isa 53:10; Ps 72:5 (l); Prov 28:16; Job 29:18; Eccl 8:13 ^b Jer 49:7, 20; Ezek 25:13; Amos 1:12; Obad 9; Hab 3:3 ^c Exod 1:20; Num 10:32; Deut 8:16; 28:63; 30:5; Josh 24:20; Judg 17:13; 1 Sam 25:31; Jer 32:40-41; Zech 8:15; Ps 125:4

¹ Reading y²rk ymm in preference to ybrk ymm, "May he bless their days ..." (Meshel, Renz HAE). Though the first letter is poorly preserved, the traces fit alep better than bet, and the Hebrew phrase is more idiomatic and better suited to the context.

² For yhw htmn, see Inscribed Pithos 2 (COS 2.47B, note 1). Note that the Judahite (southern) dialect (ṭaymān) is used in the Two-Line Inscription.

REFERENCES

Text, translation and studies: AHI 8.015; HAE 1: 58; Meshel 1979; 1987:D (2).

KUNTILLET ʿAJRUD: PLASTER WALL INSCRIPTION (2.47D)

P. Kyle McCarter

This inscription fell from the doorjamb of the entryway to the western storage room in the main building at Kuntillet ʿAjrud. Preserved on the plaster are portions of five lines of a much longer text, which was poetic in character and similar in striking ways to certain theophanic passages found in archaic biblical poetry. Though the script is Phoenician, the language is probably Hebrew (cf. notes 3 and 5).

A Theophany of the Day of Battle (lines 1-5)

[...] When ʿEl¹ shone forth² in [...] And mountains melted,³ and peaks² grew weak³ [...] Baʿl⁴ on the

a Deut 33:2; Hos 6:3; Isa 60:1 b Isa 34:3; Mic 1:4; Ps 97:5 c Hos 10:14; Amos 1:14; Prov 21:31

¹ Or "God." Despite the Phoen. script, the language and poetic style of this poem are distinctively Heb., like the other inscriptions at Kuntillet ʿAjrud. In all probability, then, ʿEl should be understood here as the god of Israel rather than a non-Israelite deity.

² To the enigmatic phnm, compare pahn-, the common Hurrian word for "mountain." Though this (loan)word is not attested elsewhere in the Northwest Semitic lexica, the alternative, to read ghnm and compare Ps 68:16, fails on epigraphic grounds: The first letter is a perfect pe but unparalleled as gimel.

³ Both wymsh, "and ... melted," and wyrkn, "and ... grew weak," end in the so-called paragogic nun, a well-known feature of Heb. but thus far lacking in Phoen. except in late forms influenced by Aram. (Friedrich and Röhl, PPG §135 and n. 2).

⁴ In view of the distinctively Israelite literary character of this fragmentary poem, it seems probable that Baʿl ("Lord") should be understood as an epithet of the god of Israel here rather than the name of a Canaanite or Phoen. god. Cp. the old debate over the meaning of -baʿl in personal names in the Samaria ostraca of the early eighth century.

⁵ The reading of this word seems to be mlhm, with a word-divider following the final mem, indicating a pronunciation milhamd. The lack of a final mater is consistent with Phoen. orthography, while the final -d rather than -at shows that the language of the text is Heb. rather than Phoen.

REFERENCES

Text: AHI 8.023; HAE 1: 59; Meshel 1979; 1987:D (3). Translations and studies: Weinfeld 1984.

THE JERUSALEM POMEGRANATE (2.48)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

This inscription is carved on a thumb-sized ivory in the shape of a pomegranate (height 4.3 cm, diameter 2.1 cm). It has been dated on paleographic grounds to the end of eighth century BCE. Since the text circles on the pomegranate, there is some uncertainty concerning the starting and ending points. The text appears to mention a sanctuary of Yahweh which may possibly be associated with the temple in Jerusalem built by Solomon. Lemaire (1981; 1984c) has suggested that this ivory pomegranate may be part of a priestly scepter.¹

*lbylt yhw]h qdš khnm*Belonging to the tem[ple of Yahw]eh,^{2a} holy^b to the priests.^{3c}

a Exod 23:19; 34:26; Deut 23:19; Josh 6:24; 1 Sam 1:7, 24; 3:15; 2 Sam 12:20; 1 Kgs 3:1; 6:37; 7:12, 40, 45, 48, 51 (|| 2 Chr 5:1); 1 Kgs 8:11, 63, 64; 9:1 (|| 2 Chr 7:11); 1 Kgs 9:10, 15; 10:5, 12 (|| 2 Chr 9:4, 11); 1 Kgs 12:27; 14:26, 28 (|| 2 Chr 12:9, 11); 1 Kgs 15:15, 18 (|| 2 Chr 16:2); 2 Kgs 11:3 + (8x); 12:5 + (12x); 14:14; 15:35 (|| 2 Chr 27:3); 2 Kgs 16:8, 14, 18; 18:15; 19:1, 14 (|| Isa 37:1, 14); 2 Kgs 20:5, 8; 21:4, 5 (2 Chr 33:4, 5); 2 Kgs 22:3, 5, 8, 9 (|| 2 Chr 34:15, 17); 2 Kgs 23:2 + (6x); 24:13 (|| 2 Chr 36:10); 2 Kgs 25:9, 13, 16 (|| Jer 52:13, 17, 20); Isa 2:2 (|| Mic 4:1); Isa 38:20, 22; 66:20; Jer 7:2; 17:26; 19:14; 20:1, 2; 26:2, 7, 9, 10; 27:16, 18, 21; 28:1, 3, 5, 6; 29:26; 33:11 35:2, 4; 36:5, 6, 8, 10; 38:14; 41:5; 51:51; 52:13; Ezek 8:16; 10:19; 11:1; 12:10; 44:4, 5; Hos 8:1; 9:4; Joel 1:9, 14; 3:18; Hag 1:2, 14; Zech 7:3; 8:9; 11:13; 14:20, 21; Pss 23:6; 27:4; 92:14; 116:19; 118:26; 122:1, 9; 134:1; 135:2; Lam 2:7; Dan 1:2; Ezra 1:3, 7; 2:68; 3:8, 11; 7:27; 8:29; Neh 10:36; 1 Chr 6:16, 17; 9:23; 22:11, 14; 23:4, 24, 28, 32; 24:19; 25:6; 26:12, 22, 27; 28:12, 13, 20; 29:8; 2 Chr 3:1; 4:16; 7, 2, 11; 8:16; 20:5, 28; 23:5, 6, 18, 19; 24:4, 7, 8, 14, 18, 21; 26:19; 28:21, 24; 29:3 + (10x); 30:1, 15; 31:10, 11, 16; 33:15; 34:14; 35:2; 36:7, 14, 18

b Exod 28:36; 39:30; Zech 14:20

c Lev 21:7b-8; 22:9; 27:21; Ezek 22:26; 44:13

¹ Two inscribed Phoen. vessels in the form of pomegranates have been published (Heltzer 1996). Both are votive inscriptions reading, lʿšrr "To ʿAštarte" or "Belonging to ʿAštarte." Heltzer feels that these add "strong confirmation that the publication of N. Avigad treats a really genuine object with a genuine dedicatory inscription" (1996:282).

² Kempinski (1990) suggested that the text should be restored and translated: lbylt ʿšr]h qdš khnm "Belonging to the tem[ple of Ašter]ah, holy to the priests." But there are difficulties with this restoration, see Hess 1996; Millard 1991. For lbyr yhw], see the Temple of Yahweh ostracoon (COS 2.50) below. The phrase byr yhw] also occurs in Arad ostracoon 18.9 (Renz HAE 1:382-384). See esp. the comments of Pardee 1978:318.

³ Avigad (1994) proposed to read the inscription with a different starting point: qdš khnm lbyr yhw]h "Sacred donation for the priests of (in) the house of Yahweh." But see Renz HAE 1:193 and 2:27.

REFERENCES

Text, translations and studies: AHI 99.001.1; HAE 1:192-193; Avigad 1989; 1990; 1994; Kempinski 1990; Lemaire 1981; 1984.

JERUSALEM OSTRACON (2.49)
(The "Creator of the Earth" Ostrakon)

P. Kyle McCarter

The ostrakon, a fragment of the shoulder of a storage jar bearing three incomplete lines of Hebrew script written in ink, was found in 1971 during N. Avigad's excavations in the Jewish Quarter of Jerusalem. The poorly-preserved inscription is of special interest because of its third line, which may read "Creator of the Earth," a well-known epithet of the biblical and West Semitic god ʾEl, though the orthography is problematic and the interpretation uncertain. The ostrakon is datable on paleographical grounds to the end of the eighth century BCE (cf. Renz HAE 1:198).

List of Names

[...]yahu. ʾAbbir[y]ahu¹

^a Gen 14:19; cf. Isa 40:28; 45:18	[...]n. Mikayahu ² son of [. . .]nh[. . .] [...] Creator (?) of the Earth. ^a
--	--

¹The meaning of this name is "Yahweh is a Bull" (ʾabbir, as in Isa 34:7 and Jer 46:15; cf. Ugaritic ibr, "buffalo," and probably Egyptian ibr, "stallion") or "Yahweh is Strong."

²That is, mikayāhū ("Who [among the gods] is like Yahweh?"), "Micaiah."

³The reading of this line (qn ʾrs) has been compared, esp. by Miller (1980), to the common epithet that characterizes the god ʾEl as "the creator of the earth," which is attested in Northwest Semitic sources from Late Bronze Age Canaanite (reflected in Hittite Ikunirša) to Neo-Punic ʾl qn ʾrs in the second century CE. Its occurrence here in a Hebrew source is reminiscent of biblical ʾel ʿelyōn qōnē šamayim waʾareṣ, "ʾEl, creator of heaven and earth," in Gen 14:19. This led Avigad to reconstruct the divine name ʾl, "ʾEl," in the break at the beginning of the line, a restoration described by Miller as "almost inescapable." Admittedly, however, the spelling qn for qōnē, "creator," without the expected final -h, as expected in Hebrew orthography of this period, is anomalous (Miller, Lipiński, Renz HAE), and this led some scholars to propose alternative interpretations, such as [z]qn ʾrs, "elders of the land" (Lipiński; see Renz HAE 1: 198 n. c for other possibilities). Nevertheless, noting its frequent occurrence in Phoen. texts, the orthography of which did not employ final -h (Karatepe ʾl qn ʾrs; KAI 2:42-43), Miller (1980:45) suggests that it may be "a cultic or religious cliché in frozen form," and this suggestion is reinforced by the possibility that, as a common epithet, the epithet "creator-of-the-earth" might have come to be viewed as, in effect, a single word, qnʾrs, as suggested already by Hittite Kunirša.

REFERENCES

Text: AHI 4.201; HAE 1:197-98. Translations and studies: Avigad 1972; Lipiński 1990; Miller 1980; Smelik 1987:73 §156.

THE TEMPLE OF THE LORD OSTRACON (2.50)
(Moussaieff No. 1)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

This is one of two ostraca in the Moussaieff collection (for the other, see the Widow's Plea Ostrakon, COS 3). It is a five-line inscription that records a royal contribution of silver by a king ʾAshyahu to the temple of Yahweh to be made through the agency of a royal functionary named Zakaryahu. The ostrakon is 10.9 cm x 8.6 cm, and is written in Hebrew script that dates¹ on the basis of palaeography to the time of Josiah (640-609 BCE) (Bordreuil, Israel, and Pardee 1996; 1998).

As ² ʾAshyahu ³ the king (has) commanded you to give in the hand of Zakaryahu ⁴ silver of Tarshish ⁵ ^a	<table border="0"> <tr> <td style="vertical-align: top;"> ^a 1 Kgs 10:22; 22:49; Isa 60:9; Jer 10:9; Ezek 27:12; Jonah 1:3; Ps 72:10 </td> <td style="vertical-align: top;"> for the house of Yahweh⁶ ^b: three shekels.⁷ </td> </tr> </table>	^a 1 Kgs 10:22; 22:49; Isa 60:9; Jer 10:9; Ezek 27:12; Jonah 1:3; Ps 72:10	for the house of Yahweh ⁶ ^b : three shekels. ⁷
^a 1 Kgs 10:22; 22:49; Isa 60:9; Jer 10:9; Ezek 27:12; Jonah 1:3; Ps 72:10	for the house of Yahweh ⁶ ^b : three shekels. ⁷

¹Interestingly, Ephʿai and Naveh (1998) suggest that the ostrakon (as well as its sister ostrakon "the Widow's Plea") may not be genuine, but a modern forgery because of the great similarity of words and phrases with BH and known epigraphic materials. The very same facts are used by Becking to argue for genuineness (1998:5)! It should be remembered that the ink used on the inscriptions has been tested and appears to date from the time period (Bordreuil, Israel, and Pardee 1996:74-76).

²*kʾšr* at the very beginning of a text is unknown in extrabiblical texts. Lang (1998) argues that kʾšr can stand at the beginning of a Hebrew sentence and that the word should be construed as "Thus," or the like, having a kataphoric function (see also Becking 1998:6). However, the examples that Lang cites do not syntactically support his contention. Most of the examples are instances of the occurrence of the kʾšr ... kn ... sentence type where the first (dependent) clause, kʾšr ..., states: "as such and such has been commanded or spoken," and the second (independent) clause, kn ..., states: "so this such and such has been done or will be done (using ʿ*sh*)." See Num 8:22b; 36:10; Josh 11:15; 14:5; 1 Kgs 2:38. 1 Kgs 2:38 is esp. helpful since it records a monarchic edict in the kʾšr clause, and the subject's commitment to do this in the kn clause. Therefore the ostrakon may simply employ this kʾšr ... kn ... formula elliptically. The kʾšr clause records "as ʾAshyahu, the king, (has) commanded you ... and elliptically, the kn clause is understood, "so you will do"; or "so it will be done".

³The name ʾAshyahu is attested among extrabiblical personal names (Zadok 1988; Renz HAE 2:61), though none of these persons are monarchs. Thus the name is problematic because no king of Israel or Judah is known by this name in the biblical materials. Nevertheless, there are two biblical possibilities. First, this could be an inverted form of the name of Joash, king of Judah, 835-796 BCE (2 Kgs 11:21-12:21) (or much less likely Joash, king of Israel, 803-787 BCE, 2 Kgs 13:10-13). Second, this could be an inverted form of the name of Josiah, king of Judah, 640-609 BCE (2 Kgs 22:1, etc.). That royal names could be inverted is seen in the case of Jehoiachin (Yehōyākin, 2 Kgs 24:6 etc.), who was also called Coniah (Konyāhū, e.g. Jer 22:24) among a number of other variations of his name. Another example is Ahaziah (ʿḥzyhw) (of Judah) (2 Kgs 8:25) who is called Jehoahaz (yhwʿhz) in 2 Chr 2:21:17. Finally, Becking (1998:6-9) discusses three other possibilities that are much less likely than either of the two Judahite kings (i.e. Joash or Josiah). Cf. the discussion in COS 2.47A, note 1 above.

⁴ There are two possibilities for biblical identification: 2 Chr 24:20 mentions a Zechariah who, though full of the spirit of God, nevertheless was murdered by his uncle Joash; and 2 Chr 35:8 mentions a Zechariah who was a Levite "over the house of God" during the reign of king Josiah (Bordreuil, Israel, and Pardee 1996:53; Lang 1998:22).

⁵ Silver from Tarshish had proverbial high quality (Jer 10:9). The location of Tarshish is uncertain. The Phoen. Nora inscription seems to refer to a Tarshish on Sardinia. More probably, Tarshish was located in Spain. See Baker 1992; Lipiński 1992.

⁶ A reference to "the house of Yahweh" is known from one of the Arad ostraca (Renz HAE 1:384) as well as possibly from the Jerusalem Pomegranate (see Renz HAE 1:192-193; and COS 2.48 above). Whether ʿAshyahu is Joash or Josiah, it is most likely that this is a reference to the Solomonic temple in Jerusalem.

⁷ Bordreuil, Israel and Pardee (1998:5) understand this to be a reference (however oblique) to the Judahite royal shekel and not to the sekel haqqōdeš "sanctuary shekel" (cf. Exodus 30:13).

REFERENCES

Text: Bordreuil, Israel, and Pardee 1996; 1998. Translations and studies: Becking 1998; Ephʿal and Naveh 1998; Lang 1998.

2. ARAMAIC INSCRIPTIONS

TELL EL-MASKHUṬA LIBATION BOWLS (2.51)

Bezalel Porten

In 1954 the Brooklyn Museum acquired three inscribed libation bowls, and then a fourth in 1957. They were said to have been found at Tel el-Maskhuṭa, ca. 12 miles west of Ismailia, and were published by Isaac Rabinowitz in 1956 and 1959 (TAD D15.1-4). Three are to be dated to the first half of the fifth century (TAD D15.1-3 = COS 2.51A-C) and the fourth to the second half (TAD D15.4 = COS 2.51D). They were all dedicated to the North-Arabian goddess Hanilat, known to Herodotus as Alilat (iii.8), and three of the four bowls (TAD D15.2-4 = COS 2.51B-D) recorded the names of the donor. These indicate the same kind of onomastic assimilation found among the Arameans in Egypt (see Egyptian mortuary texts below (COS 2.60-65) and evidenced in the contemporary Teima stela (Šalamshezib son of Peṭosiri [CIS 2.113:9, 11, 21 = KAI #228]). Only the king of Kedar bore a fully Arabian name — Kainu son of Geshem (D15.4 = COS 2.51D), the latter identical with Biblical Geshem/Gashmu the Arabian, opponent of Nehemiah. The other donors had mixed Egyptian and Arabian names (Šeḥo son of Abdamru COS 2.51C) or only Egyptian names (Harbek son of Pa(u)siri COS 2.51B). The Arabs who aided Cambyses in his conquest of Egypt may have been Kedarites, who would have then or shortly thereafter been stationed in Wadi Tumeilat, where they built a shrine to their deity Hanilat at Tel el-Maskhuṭa.¹ Their king Geshem was a threat to Nehemiah and some say was the Jašm son of Šahr renowned in Arabian Dedan. The prophet Isaiah had already associated the Dedanites with Kedar (Isa 21:13-17).

SILVER BOWL (Brooklyn Museum 54.50.36) (2.51A)
(First Half of Fifth Century BCE)

To Hanilat²

¹ For recent discussion on the identification of this site see Currid 1997:128-130.

² Elliptical for "Bowl which PN offered to Hanilat the goddess;" see inscriptions below. Rabinowitz 1956:2 thought this abridged form was "used when a donor preferred to remain anonymous." For discussion of the goddess Allat see NSI p. 222 and references in Rabinowitz (1956) 3. The name means "goddess" and this form of her name ("the [h] goddess") occurs only here. Rabinowitz 1956:4, 8 argues for her identification with Atarsmain and Greek Athena.

REFERENCES

Text: Rabinowitz 1956; TAD D15.1. Studies: Dumbrell 1971; Fitzmyer and Kaufman 1992:B.3.f.12.

SILVER BOWL (Brooklyn Museum 57.121) (2.51B)
(First Half of Fifth Century BCE)

(That which)³ Ḥarbak⁴ son of Pa(u)siri⁵ offered⁶ ^a Ezra 7:17 | to Hanilat the goddess⁷

³ The scribe omitted the initial zy, "that which" found in the two inscriptions below.

⁴ The name is Egyptian — Hr-byk, "Horus (the) Falcon" — as is that of the father. Ḥarbak must have been at least a third generation settler in Egypt.

⁵ Pasiri = pa-Wsir, "He of Osiris."

⁶ The stem grb was used in Official Aramaic (KAI 2.229), Nabataean (NSI 100:1), and Palmyrene (NSI 133:1) with the sense of presenting an object to deity. See below on COS 2.60 (Serapeum offering table).

⁷ It was proper in monuments, and not de rigueur in graffiti, to add masculine ^ʔ*lh*⁷, "the god" or feminine ^ʔ*lhr*⁷, "the goddess" to the divine name (cf. COS 2.41; TAD D20.3:2, COS 2.62 and 2.64; KAI 2.229). Strikingly, only one of the four bowls here has the addition of the title.

REFERENCES

Text: Rabinowitz 1959; TAD D15.1. Studies: Dumbrell 1971; Fitzmyer and Kaufman 1992:B.3.f.12; Honeyman 1960.

SILVER BOWL (Brooklyn Museum 54.50.32) (2.51C)
(First Half of Fifth Century BCE)

That which⁸ Šeho son of Abdamru⁹ offered⁸ to ^b Ezra 7:17 | Hanilat

⁸ Elliptical for "Bowl which (zy) Šeho ...;" see KAI 2.1, 4-7, 25, 201-202, 229 and discussion on Serapeum offering table below COS 2.60. The voiced dental in all the inscriptions discussed in this collection was expressed by zayin, thus zy not dy and znh not dnh; cf. COS 2.41.

⁹ The praenomen is an Egyptian name (Šeho = ḥd-h[r], "The Face Spoke") well known in Aramaic texts (see glossaries in TAD B and C) and the patronym occurs in Nabataean documents (Cantineau 1932:126). The name ^c*mrw* is found in Palmyrene (Stark 1971:45) and the root ^c*mr* is very popular in North Arabian names (Harding 1971:10-411). Is this root related to Biblical ^c*mr*, Omri (1 Kgs. 16:16)?

REFERENCES

Text: Rabinowitz 1956; TAD D15.3. Studies: Cantineau 1932; DAE No. 79; Dumbrell 1971; Fitzmyer and Kaufman 1992:B.3.f.12; Harding 1971; Stark 1971.

SILVER BOWL (Brooklyn Museum 54.50.34) (2.51D)
(Second Half of Fifth Century BCE)

That which Kainu¹⁰ ^c son of Geshem¹¹ ^d king¹² of ^e Gen 4:1; 5:9 ^d Neh 2:19; 6:1-2, 6 ^e Gen 25:13 | 1 Chr 1:29; Isa 21:16-17; 42:11; 60:7; Jer 2:10; 49:28; Ps 120:5; Cane 1:5 ^f Ezra 7:17
Kedar¹³ ^c offered^d to Hanilat

¹⁰ The name is found in Nabataean inscriptions (Cantineau 1932:142) and the root qyn in North Arabian inscriptions (Harding 1971:492-493) and in Hebrew.

¹¹ Known as Geshem the Arabian, Geshem, or Gashmu, he was associated with Sanballat (Sin-uballit) the Horonite and Tobiah the Ammonite servant (of the king?) in opposition to Nehemiah, governor of Judah (Neh. 2:19; 6:1-2, 6). His memory survived for a couple centuries so that the land of Goshen, where Jacob's family settled, was designated by the translator of the Septuagint as the land of Gesem of Arabia (LXX Gen. 45:10, 46:34). Some would identify Geshem with Jašm son of Šahr who appears in a Lihyanite inscription from Dedan dated to the fifth century BCE (Winnert 1937:50-51), but others are sceptical (Eph^cal 1982:210-214). The name is common in Nabataean (cf. NSI p. 255; see Cantineau 1932:80 [where also gšmw]); Safaitic, Thamudic, Qatabanian, and Lihyanite inscriptions (as jšm [Harding 1971:162]).

¹² In his memoirs, Nehemiah withheld any title from his three opponents, although we know that Sanballat was "governor" (phh) of Samaria (TAD A4.7:29). Nor does Jašm (Geshem) bear a title in the Lihyanite inscription. During the time of Sennacherib, Hazail was styled "king of the Arabs" and his son Iauti is referred to by Ashurbanipal as "King of Kedar." For detailed discussion of the Kedarites see Eph^cal 1982.

¹³ Filiated with Ishmael, Kedar was associated with Dedan, Edom, Nebaioth, and Arabia; possessed tents, flocks, and camels with their chiefs (ṣṣyʾym) trading in lambs, rams, and goats. For geographical location see the references in Rabinowitz 1956:3.

REFERENCES

AC No. 44; Cantineau 1932:142; DAE No. 78; Dumbrell 1971; Eph^cal 1982; Fitzmyer and Kaufman 1992:B.3.f.12; Harding 1971:492-493; NSI; Rabinowitz 1956; TAD D15.4; SSI 2:25; Winnert 1937:50-51.

C. MORTUARY INSCRIPTIONS

This page intentionally left blank

1. HEBREW INSCRIPTIONS

KHIRBET EL-QOM (2.52)

P. Kyle McCarter

This late eighth-century BCE epitaph appears on a slab of limestone recovered in 1967 after having been looted from a cave-tomb at the site of Khirbet el-Qom, about eight miles west of Hebron in the Judean hills. The slab was originally part of a pillar adjoining one of the burial chambers in the tomb. The interpretation of the inscription, which is rather crudely written and not deeply incised, is hampered by the fact that much of the text has been retraced, with the result that many letters appear twice, sometimes superimposed on each other, so that it is often difficult for the epigraphist to decide which letters to read and which to ignore. The text surmounts a deeply incised representation of an inverted human hand, which, though it resembles the common Islamic talisman known as "the hand of Fatima," seems to have been in place before the Iron Age inscription was carved around it.

ʔUriyahu, the rich¹: (This is) his inscription.
Blessed was Uriyahu to Yahweh,² and from his enemies,² by his asherah,³ he saved him.⁴

a1 Sam 15:13; 23:21; 2 Sam 2:5; Ps 115:15; Ruth 2:19, 20; 3:10 b 2 Sam 22:4 c Exod 34:13; Deut 7:5; 12:3; 1 Kgs 14:15, 23; 16:33; 2 Kgs 13:16; 17:10; 18:14; 21:3; 23:14; cf. 1 Kgs 15:1; 18:19; 2 Kgs 21:7; 23:4, 7; Jer 17:2; 1 Chr 15:16 d Ps 44:8

¹ Reading h'šr. This seems a strange way to identify the deceased, and in fact the šr is uncertain.

² When the overwriting described above is taken into account, the reading nmšryh seems secure and is now accepted by most scholars (the objection of Olyan [1988:24 and n. 6] to the spelling of the suffix must be taken seriously, but despite the contraction in the sixth-century Lachish form, nmšw, "his men," it is reasonable to suppose that the suffixed plural ending -ayhā* remained uncontracted in the eighth century). Naveh (1979: 28-29) read nšry, "my guardian," yielding a translation that has the merit of conforming to the Kuntilet 'Ajrud blessing formula (see COS 2.47A-C): "Blessed be Uriahu by YHWH my guardian and by his Asherah."

³ This phrase, l'šrth, was partially clarified by the discovery of the Kuntilet 'Ajrud blessing formula ("Blessed be PN by Yahweh ... and his asherah!"), providing the clue that most interpreters of the Khirbet el-Qom text have followed (contrast Mitmann 1981). Thus Lemaire, arguing that the scribe wrote l'šrth out of sequence in Uriah's inscription, reconstructs brk ʔryhw lyhw w'l'šrth nmšryh hwš' th, "Blessed be Uriyahu by Yahweh and by his asherah; from his enemies he saved him!" In this way, Lemaire succeeds in producing a smooth and idiomatic reading that is consistent with the evidence of Kuntilet 'Ajrud. The rearrangement is too arbitrary to inspire confidence, however (but cf. Miller 1981:315-20), and other solutions, interpreting l'šrth as a vocative particle with a personal name (Angerstörfer 1982, "O Ashirta"; Zevit 1984, "O Asherata," with "double feminization") and/or appealing to the canons of poetic syntax (O'Connor 1987) have been proposed. As translated above, the text is understood to give credit to Yahweh's asherah — that is, his divine presence as available in the cult (see COS 2.47A, note 3) — for Uriyahu's salvation from his enemies during his lifetime.

⁴ The phrase l'nyhw, written just below the main inscription and to the viewer's left of the inverted hand, might be a indicator of the identity of the man who carved Uriyahu's inscription. Alternatively, it might be the laconic epitaph of another resident of the same burial chamber. Further down on the stone, on the same (left) side of the hand, appear two further lines, the meaning of which is enigmatic: l'šrth w'l'šrth, "To his asherah, and to his asherah."

REFERENCES

Text: AHI 25.003; HAZ 1: 199-211. Translations and studies: Angerstörfer 1982; Barag 1970; Dever 1969-70; Hadley 1987b; Jaroš 1982; Lemaire 1977; Margalit 1989; Miller 1981; Mitmann 1981; Naveh 1979; O'Connor 1987; Olyan 1988:23-25; Shea 1990; Tigay 1986:29-30; Zevit 1984.

THE KHIRBET BEIT LEI CAVE INSCRIPTIONS (2.53)

P. Kyle McCarter

These two inscriptions, along with several shorter texts and a number of graffiti, were discovered during road construction in a burial cave at the site of Khirbet Beit Lei, about five miles east of Lachish in the Judean Shephelah. Though found in a burial cave, the texts are not conventional tomb inscriptions, and no grave-goods were found with them. They offer praise to the god of Israel and invoke his help and succor, suggesting that they were incised in the rock walls by refugees seeking shelter in the cave. This also explains the discrepancy between the archaeological date of the burial cave, which is of a standard eighth- or seventh-century type (Lemaire), and the palaeographical date of the script, which, though difficult to date because of its crude character, seems to belong to the beginning of the sixth century BCE (Cross; contrast Naveh, Lemaire and Mittmann; late eighth century; Gibson SSI: late sixth century).

Inscription A

Yahweh is the god of the whole earth.^a The highlands of Judah^b belong to the god of Jerusalem.^{1 c} a Isa 54:5;

cf. Josh 3:11, 13; Mic 4:13;
Zech 4:14;
6:5; Ps 97:5

b 2 Chr 21:11 e 2 Chr 32:19; cf. Ezra 7:19 d Jon 4:2; Exod 34:6; Ps 86:15; Neh 9:31; cf. Joel 2:13; Pss 103:8; 111:4; 145:8; Neh 9:17; 2 Chr 30:9

Inscription B

Intervene,² O³ compassionate god!^{4 d} Absolve, O³ Yahweh!

¹ The reading hry ydh l'hy yrlm is essentially that of Lemaire (followed by Renz HAE 246), who, however, reads yhdh despite the improbability of the internal vowel letter (waw) in a pre-exilic inscription. A substantially different interpretation of the entire text is offered by Cross (1970:299-302, followed in part by Miller 1981:320-332) and Weippert (1964:161-164).

² That is, pgd (Lemaire, Miller), but the reading is difficult. Cross reads ngh, "Absolve," as later in the line, and Naveh's original reading (corresponding to pgd yh, "Intervene, O ...") was hmwryh, "(Mount) Moriah ..."

³ Interpreting yh with Cross as the vocative particle known also from Aram. and Arab. (yā) as well as Ug. (y). The alternative is to render yh, as "Yah," the shortened form of "Yahweh," which is well known from the Bible but always in specialized circumstances and often in textually troubled contexts. To the end of Inscription B, compare especially "Yah, Yahweh" in Isa 12:2 and 26:4, both of which are textually uncertain (Renz HAE 248. n. 3).

⁴ That is, l' hnn, as also in Kuntillet 'Ajrud Pithos 2 (COS 2.47B, note 3).

REFERENCES

Text: AHI 15.005-008; HAE 1: 245-49; SSI 1: 57-58. Translations and studies: Cross 1970; Lemaire 1976; Miller 1981; Mittmann 1989; Naveh 1963; Weippert 1964.

THE ROYAL STEWARD INSCRIPTION (2.54)

P. Kyle McCarter

This damaged grave inscription was found beneath a modern building in a burial chamber hewn from the rock of the eastern slope of the Kidron Valley in the village of Silwan in southeastern Jerusalem. The tomb is widely believed to have been that of the Hezekiah's royal steward Shebna, who was condemned by the prophet Isaiah for, among other things, presuming to have a tomb cut for himself in the rock (Isa 22:15-25). Though he may have lost the office of royal steward at this time, he seems to have remained in Hezekiah's administration as a royal secretary, and in this capacity he was among the party sent by Hezekiah to negotiate with the Assyrians during Sennacherib's siege of Jerusalem in 701 BCE (2 Kgs 18:13-19:7 = Isa 36:1-37:7).

Identification of the Deceased (line 1)

This is [the tomb¹ of Sheban]jah,^{2 a} who is over the house.^{3 b}

a 2 Kgs 18:18,
26, 37; 19:2
Isa 22:15;
36:3, 11, 22;
37:2

b 1 Kgs 4:6;
16:9; 18:3; 2 Kgs 10:5; 15:5; 18:18; Isa 22:15; 36:3

and the bones of his maidservant⁴ (who is) with him. Cursed be the man who opens this (tomb)!

Curse against Desecration of the Grave (lines 1-3)

There is no silver or gold here — only [his bones]

¹ The fem. pronoun that begins the inscription (z't, "this") requires the reconstruction in the lacuna of a feminine noun, probably qbrt, "the tomb of, the grave of."

² Only the end of the name of the deceased (-yhw) is preserved after the lacuna. The reconstruction is based on the script of the epitaph, which requires a paleographic date at the end of the eighth or beginning of the seventh century, that is, to the reign of Hezekiah. We know of two individuals, Shebna (Isa 22:15) and Eliakim (Isa 36:3; 37:2) who held the position of "the one who is over the house" in Hezekiah's administration. Of these two names, only that of Shebna in its longer form ybrnyhw, "Shebanyahu" or "Shebaniah" (cf. 1 Chr 15:24) fits here.

³ The title z'fr l' hbyt, "the one who is over the house," is well known from Heb. seals and the Bible, where it is held by high-ranking individuals (1 Kgs 4:6; 16:9; 18:3; etc.), who seem in particular to have had responsibility for the management of the king's household. For this reason, the position is often described as that of "royal steward," or "palace steward"; cf. COS 2.70D and T.

⁴ While it is true that biblical law makes special provision for the protection of a woman who was part of a man's household but not his legal wife (Gibson SSI 1:25), it is still surprising to learn that Shebaniah was buried with a servant.

REFERENCES

Text: AHI 4.401; HAE 1:261-265; KAI 2:#191B; SSI 1:23-24. Translations and studies: Avigad 1953; Clermont-Ganneau 1871; Good 1979; Katzenstein 1960.

2. PHOENICIAN INSCRIPTIONS

THE SARCOPHAGUS INSCRIPTION OF ʔAHIROM,
KING OF BYBLOS (2.55)

P. Kyle McCarter

The limestone sarcophagus of King ʔAhirom (fl. 1000 BCE) was found in 1923 during the French excavations at Byblos. ʔAhirom's epitaph, commissioned by his son and successor, ʔItobaʕl, is carved around the edge of the lid and the upper rim of the coffin. The inscription surmounts an elaborate relief, in which the king is depicted enthroned on a cherub throne and receiving offerings from a procession of dignitaries; women in mourning are depicted on the two ends of the coffin. The ʔAhirom epitaph is the earliest known Phoenician inscription of substantial length.

Identification of the sarcophagus (line 1)

The sarcophagus^a that ʔItobaʕl,¹ son of ʔAhirom,² the king of Byblos, made for ʔAhirom, his father, when he placed him in eternity.^{3 b}

Curses against desecration of the sarcophagus
(line 2)

And if a king among kings or a governor^c among governors or the commander^d of an army should

^a Gen 50:26
^b Eccl 12:5
^c Isa 22:15
^d Sam 11:1;
1 Kgs 14:25;
20:1; 2 Kgs
6:24; 16:9;
17:5; 18:9;
13; 24:10;
Isa 7:1; 36:1;
2 Chr 12:2, 9; 16:1

rise up against^d Byblos and uncover this sarcophagus, may the scepter^e of his rule be uprooted,^f may the throne of his kingship be overturned,^g and may peace depart from Byblos! And as for him, may his inscription be effaced with the double edge^h of a chisel (?)^h

Isa 11:1 f Isa 14:5; Jer 48:17 g Ps 89:45
2 Chr 12:2, 9; 16:1 e Isa 11:1 f Isa 14:5; Jer 48:17 g Ps 89:45

¹ ʔItobaʕl was also the name of the mid-ninth century king of Tyre whose daughter, Jezebel, was the queen of King Ahab of Israel; though his name is vocalized ʔetbaʕal, "Ethbaal," in MT, the correct Phoen. pronunciation is preserved in Josephus as Itôbalos (Apion 1.156). A second ʔItobaʕl of Tyre (Tubaʕlu in Assyrian inscriptions) ruled at the end of the eighth century. See COS 2.117B, note 5; ANET 287, 288.

² In shortened form, Hirom, the name appears as that of at least two kings of Tyre: the first, the biblical Hiram, was a contemporary of David and Solomon, and the second (Hirunnu in Assyrian records) ruled in the eighth century (ANET 283).

³ No precise parallel to the expression "placed him in eternity" exists, though its meaning seems clear. A number of scholars (Albright 1947:155 n. 19; Gallig 1950; Rosenthal, ANET 661), assuming a scribal error, would emend the text to read "as his abode in eternity" (kā < b > th bʕlm). The proposal of Tawil (1970-71; accepted by Gibson, SSI 3:15), that bʕlm is an abbreviation for bt ʕlm, "(in) the house of eternity," is unlikely in an early Phoen. text.

^a This meaning of Phoen. imʔ, which seems to occur in Punic as imʔ (Tombach 1978:341), is probable from the context.

^b The meaning of the final phrase is uncertain. To lpp, "with the double edge (of)," compare the use of pīpīyōt in Ps 149:6.

^c The conjecture that Phoenician ʕl is some kind of tool, such as a chisel (Donner 1953-54:157 n. 16), is based entirely on context, and several other suggestions, none persuasive, have been made.

REFERENCES

Text: KAI 2:2-4, 338; SSI 3:12-16. Translations and studies: ANET 661; Albright 1947; Donner 1953-54; Dussaud 1924; Gallig 1950; Greenfield 1971:254-257; Tawil 1970-71; Tombach 1978.

THE SARCOPHAGUS INSCRIPTION OF TABNIT,
KING OF SIDON (2.56)

P. Kyle McCarter

Tabnit's sarcophagus was found in 1887 during the excavation of a shaft tomb in Sidon. It was manufactured in Egypt of black basalt, and it bears a hieroglyphic inscription that shows it was originally intended for an Egyptian general by the name of Pen-Ptah (Assman 1963). It was evidently brought to Phoenicia as plunder and appropriated as a coffin for Tabnit, who ruled Sidon in the second quarter of the fifth century BCE (see n. 1). The eight-line Phoenician inscription, primarily a warning to discourage grave robbers, is engraved beneath the hieroglyphic text at the base of the sarcophagus, which is now in the Museum of Antiquities in Istanbul.

Identification of the deceased (lines 1-3)

I, Tabnit,¹ priest of ʿAshtart,² king of the Sidonians, son of ʿEshmunʿazor,³ priest of ʿAshtart, king of the Sidonians, am lying in this coffin.^a

Warning against desecration of the sarcophagus (lines 3-8)

Whoever you are, any man who comes upon this coffin, do not, do not³ open my cover and disturb

a Gen 50:26;
b 1 Sam 28:15;
c Deut 7:25;
12:31; 17:1;
18:12; 22:5;
23:19; 27:15;
d Eccl 4:15; 6:8; 7:2; 9:9;
e Eccl 4:15;
6:12; 9:9;
f Isa 14:9;
26:14, 19;
Ps 88:11; Job 26:5; Prov 2:18; 9:18; 21:16

me,^b for no silver is gathered with me (and) no gold is gathered with me or any kind of riches.^c I alone am lying in this coffin. Do not, do not open my cover and disturb me, for such a thing would be an abomination^d to ʿAshtart! And if you do open my cover and disturb me, may you have^e no offspring among the living^d under the sun^f or a resting place with the Repa^{im}.^{6 f}

¹ For historical and archaeological reasons the Sidonian dynasty founded by Tabnit's father, ʿEshmunʿazor I, must be dated to the fifth century BCE (Peckham 1968:78-87). Tabnit's reign, which was probably in the second quarter of the fifth century, was not a long one, as suggested by the testimony of the ʿEshmunʿazor inscription (COS 2.57), which indicates that Tabnit's son and heir, ʿEshmunʿazor II, was born after his father's death and that Tabnit's queen, ʿUmniʿAshtart, ruled as regent with her minor son during his own short reign.

² ʿAshtart was the principal goddess of Sidon, whose king, at least in Tabnit's case, held the sacerdotal office of her chief priest.

³ Note the emphatic repetition ʿl ʿl, "Do not, do not ...!" here and in line 5 below.

⁴ To mšr, "riches," cp. Akk. mašrū, "wealth, riches" (Lipiński 1974).

⁵ The text seems defective here, and most scholars reconstruct $y < k > n \text{ } l < k >$, following the text of line 8 of the ʿEshmunʿazor inscription (COS 2.57).

⁶ Deified royal ancestors — a group that appears frequently in the Ug. literature and occasionally in the HB, where the term also comes to refer to certain primordial inhabitants of Syria-Palestine and, in the Deuteronomistic literature, esp. Transjordan. For literature, see Hallo 1992:382-386.

REFERENCES

Text: KAI 2:17-19; SSI 3:101-105. Translations and studies: ANET 662; Assman 1963; Greenfield 1971:258-259; Hallo 1992:382-386; 1993:183-191; Lipiński 1974.

THE SARCOPHAGUS INSCRIPTION OF ʿESHMUNʿAZOR, KING OF SIDON (2.57)

P. Kyle McCarter

This black basalt sarcophagus, manufactured in Egypt and imported to Phoenicia, was found in 1855 in a shallow, rock-cut tomb in the Sidonian necropolis. After a false start on the head of the coffin itself, the stonecutter engraved the full inscription on the lid. ʿEshmunʿazor became king at the death of his father, Tabnit, in the mid-fifth century BCE. He was an infant at the time of his accession and lived to reign only fourteen years as a vassal ruler of the Persian Empire. The text recounts his achievements and those of his mother, who evidently served as regent during his reign (see further n. 9, and COS 2.56, note 1).

Introduction and date formula (lines 1-2)

In the month of Bul,^{1 a} in the fourteenth year — 14 — of the reign of King ʿEshmunʿazor,² king of the Sidonians, son of Tabnit,³ king of the Sidonians, King ʿEshmunʿazor, king of the Sidonians, said:

The king's self-lamentation (lines 2-4)

I was snatched away^b (when it was) not my time,^c a man of a limited number^d of days,^d an invalid,⁵ an orphan, the son of a widow⁶; and (now) I am

a 1 Kgs 6:38
b Isa 38: 9;
12; Ps 102:24-25; Job 10:20-22
c Job 22:16;
Eccl 7:17
d Job 10:20; 14:1

lying in this coffin, in this grave in a place that I built.

Curses against desecration of the sarcophagus (lines 4-13)

Whoever you are, any ruler or any (ordinary) man, do not open this resting-place and look for anything in it, for nothing has been placed in it, and do not carry away the coffin of my resting-place and move me from this resting-place to another resting-place! Even if men tell you (something different), do not

¹ The month of Bul was the eighth month in the old Canaanite calendar used by the Phoenicians and, originally, the Israelites (cf. bāl in 1 Kgs 6:38); it corresponded to the later Jewish month of Marcheshvan.

² ʿEshmunʿazor II (ca. 465-451 BCE) was the son of Tabnit (ca. 470-465 BCE) and the grandson of ʿEshmunʿazor I (ca. 479-470 BCE). The dates for the kings of the ʿEshmunʿazor dynasty are those calculated by Peckham 1968:78-87.

³ For Tabnit's epitaph, see COS 2.56.

⁴ Several scholars have compared the obscure term mšk to Syriac sāk, "end, limit, sum," which may be used in reference to the limit or summing-up of one's lifespan and commonly occurs in expressions stressing brevity.

⁵ The term ʿzrm remains unexplained. It is also used of a type of mulk or child sacrifice (Tombach 1974:9), but the relationship of this technical term to the present context is far from clear. The conjectural translation "invalid" is based on the observations of G. R. Driver (cf. Gibson SSI 3:110).

⁶ The meaning is presumably that Tabnit had died before ʿEshmunʿazor was born.

listen to their lies! For any ruler or (ordinary) man who opens the cover of this resting-place or carries off the coffin of my resting-place and moves from this resting place, let him have no resting-place with the Repha'im,⁷ let him not be buried in a grave, and let him have no son or offspring to take his place! And may the holy gods deliver him up to a mighty ruler who shall hold sway over him to bring an end to him — any ruler or (ordinary) man who opens the cover of this resting-place or carries off this coffin, or the offspring of that ruler or those (ordinary) men! Let him have no root below or fruit above⁸ or form⁸ among the living⁸ under the sun!⁸ For I deserve pity: I was snatched away (when it was) not my time, a man of a limited number of days; an invalid, an orphan, the son of a widow was I.

The achievements of ʔEshmunʔazor (lines 13-20)

For I, ʔEshmunʔazor, king of the Sidonians, son of King Tabnit, king of the Sidonians, grandson of King ʔEshmunʔazor, kings of the Sidonians, and my mother, ʔUmmiʔashtart,⁹ the priestess of ʔAshtart, our lady,¹⁰ the queen, the daughter of King ʔEshmunʔazor, king of the Sidonians — we ʔ Isa 14:9;

26:14, 19;
Ps 88:11;
Job 26:5;
Prov 2:18;
9:18; 21:16

f Amos 2:9;
Job 18:16;
cf. Isa 37:31

g Eccl 4:15;
6:8; 7:2; 9:9

A Eccl 4:15;
6:12; 9:9

are the ones who¹¹ built the houses of the gods: [the house of ʔAshtart] in Sidon-Land-of-the-Sea¹² and enthroned¹³ ʔAshtart in the Majestic-Heavens¹⁴; and we are the ones who built the house of ʔEshmun, the holy prince,¹⁵ at the spring of YDLL¹⁶ on the hill, and enthroned him in the Majestic-Heavens; and we are the ones who built houses for the gods of Sidon in Sidon-Land-of-the-Sea, a house for Baʕl of Sidon¹⁷ and a house of ʔAshtart-Name-of-Baʕl.¹⁸ Moreover, the Lord of Kings¹⁹ gave us Dor and Joppa, the majestic corn lands that are in the Plain of Sharon, in accordance with the mighty deeds that I performed, and we added them to the limits of the land so that they would belong to the Sidonians forever.

Final warning against desecration (lines 20-22)

Whoever you are, any ruler or any (ordinary) man, do not open my cover, and do not take off my cover and move me from this resting-place, and do not carry away the coffin of my resting-place, lest these holy gods deliver them up and they — that ruler or those (ordinary) men — be brought to an end forever!

⁷ See the Tabnit inscription (COS 2.56, note 6).

⁸ The sense of ʔʔr is "form, visible presence" (cf. Gibson SSJ 3:111 n. 12).

⁹ ʔUmmiʔashtart is a common Phoen. name (Benz 1972:62) meaning "My (divine) mother is (the goddess) ʔAshtart." Her role as regent during her son's reign is made clear by the language of the inscription: "... we are the ones who built the houses of the gods ..., and we are the ones who built the house of ʔEshmun ..., and we are the ones who built houses for the gods of Sidon Moreover, the Lord of Kings gave us Dor and Joppa"

¹⁰ Probably a title of the goddess rather than another designation of the queen-mother.

¹¹ Assuming, with most scholars, that ʔm is a scribal error for ʔʔ.

¹² "Sidon Land-of-the-Sea" (ʔdm ʔʔym) was evidently the same district of the city called "Sidon-of-the-Sea" (ʔdm ʔym) in one of the two building inscriptions of ʔEshmunʔazor's successor, Bodʔashtart (KAI 2: 24).

¹³ Assuming, with most scholars, that wyʔm is a scribal error for wyʔm, the verb used immediately below in an identical context.

¹⁴ Here and below, "the Mighty-Heavens," refers to a shrine or precinct within a temple — in this case the seaside temple built (or rebuilt) for ʔAshtart and below the hilltop temple of ʔEshmun.

¹⁵ The same epithet is used of ʔEshmun in the two building inscriptions of ʔEshmunʔazor's successor, Bodʔashtart (KAI 2:23-25).

¹⁶ "The spring of YDLL" is evidently the same as "the spring of YDL" mentioned in the Baʕlshilleim inscription found in the temple of ʔEshmun at Bostan esh-Sheikh (Dunand 1965) north of Sidon, where the two inscriptions of Bodʔashtart, ʔEshmunʔazor's successor, were also found; the temple was located on a hill on the west bank of the river known today as the Nahr el-Awali, and "the spring of YDL(L)" must have been the ancient name of the source of this watercourse.

¹⁷ The "Baʕl" (bʕl) or "Lord" of Sidon must have been the local genius of the city, a divine embodiment of Sidon itself. He is not known from other sources, however, and his relationship to ʔEshmun, who is usually understood to be the principal god of Sidon, is unclear.

¹⁸ As her epithet "Name-of-Baʕl" indicates, this ʔAshtart was the consort of the city god, Baʕl of Sidon, and a personification of his cultically available presence (ʔm, "name").

¹⁹ The title ʔdm mkm, "Lord of Kings," or its equivalent was used from Assyrian to Hellenistic times, most often referring to the reigning emperor. In this case it denotes the Persian emperor (Peckham 1968: 80-86), probably Xerxes (486-465 BCE) or Artaxerxes I (465-425 BCE). The vassal-gift of Dor and Joppa with the Plain of Sharon was a generous one, including the port-city of Joppa as well as the whole of the former Assyrian province of Duni or Dor, including its rich farm lands and its own port.

REFERENCES

Text: KAI 2:19-23; SSJ 3:105-114; Translations and studies: ANET 662; Benz 1972; Dunand 1965; Galland 1963; Garbini 1977b; Ginsberg 1963; Greenfield 1971:259-265; Peckham 1968; Tomback 1978.

THE FUNERARY INSCRIPTION FROM PYRGI (2.58)

P. Kyle McCarter

The Phoenician inscription is engraved on a sheet of gold leaf found in excavations at the site of ancient Pyrgi (Santa Severa), the principal port of the wealthy Etrurian city of Caere (modern Cerveteri, ca. 30 miles north of Rome on the Tyrrhenian coast), in the ruins of a temple dated archaeologically to ca. 500 BCE. The sheet was found together with two similar plaques bearing Etruscan inscriptions, one of which seems to correspond in content to the Phoenician text, though, unfortunately for our knowledge of the still incompletely understood Etruscan language, the two inscriptions do not constitute a true bilingual. The text records the dedication of a shrine to the Phoenician goddess 'Ashtart, who was identified at Pyrgi with the Etruscan Uni, to whom the larger sanctuary was sacred. As shown by Knoppers (1992), the nature of the shrine was probably funerary, erected to commemorate the burial of a prominent individual, who was deified at death and is thus referred to in the inscription as "the god."

Dedication and construction of the shrine (lines 1-9)	α 2 Sam 7:4-6; 1 Kgs 8:17-21	my reign in the month of Kirar ⁶ on the day of the burial of the god. ⁷
To the Lady 'Ashtart ¹ : This holy place ² which Thebarye Velinas, king over Kaysriye, ³ made and dedicated in the month of the Sacrifice of the Sun ⁴ as a gift (and) as a temple. ⁵ I built it because 'Ashtart requested it from me ⁶ in the third year of	δ Isa 14:13 (?)	A wish for the longevity of "the god" (lines 9-11) And may the years during which ⁸ the god is in his house ⁹ be like these ¹⁰ stars! ^b

¹ In the Etruscan texts the divine name corresponding to 'Ashtart is Unialastres, whose name has been explained as a combination of the names of the Etruscan goddess Uni (the Roman Juno) and the Phoen. goddess 'Ashtart (Pallottino in Colonna, et al. 1964:84-85).

² The "holy place" was probably a shrine located within the precincts of the larger temple of Uni at Pyrgi (Garbini and Levi della Vida 1965:37). See also note 5 below.

³ The vocalizations of the name of the Etruscan king and the Etruscan name of the city of Caere are based on the Etruscan texts. Thebarye is probably the equivalent of Latin Tiberius.

⁴ Or "the month of the Sacrifices [pl.] of the Sun" (cf. Knoppers 1992:110-111). This month is also known from Phoen. inscriptions from Cyprus, though its position in the year is unknown. Knoppers (1992:111-112), noting the chthonic nature of the sun god in both Mesopotamian and Northwest Semitic religions, argues that the dedication of the shrine in this month is in keeping with the funerary character of the inscription.

⁵ Reading bmm ²*bbr*, with the ²*alep* understood as prosthetic (cf. Garbini and Levi della Vida 1965:41; Gibson SSI 3:156). The "temple" or "house" (br) referred to here and in line 10 ("his house") was probably not the larger temple of Uni itself but rather the funerary shrine of the deified deceased ("the god").

⁶ This month name appears several times in Phoen. and Punic texts, but, as in the case of the month of the Sacrifice of the Sun, the time of year to which it belonged is unknown. The same month-name (Kiraru) seems to have been known in northern Syria (Alalakh) already in the OB Period (CAD K 401).

⁷ As convincingly argued by Knoppers (1992:114-117) the "god" (²*lm*), which is frequently sing. in Phoen. (Tombback 1978:16-18), was probably a prominent citizen of Thebarye Velinas's kingdom whose burial and deification the shrine commemorates.

⁸ Construing *lm*²*š* as lm- (the long form of the prep. l-) and the relative particle ²*š* (Février 1965:11, 14-15).

⁹ The "god ... in his house" refers to the deceased deified and residing in his funerary shrine.

¹⁰ The expression "like these stars" (km hkkm ²*š*) evidently expresses the pious hope that the years of the "god" residing in his "house" should be as numerous as the stars in the night sky, but the referent of ²*š*, "these," is admittedly rather vague, and this has provoked a number of other interpretations. The most ingenious is that of Dahood (1965), who took the phrase to mean "like the stars of 'El," comparing kōk'be-'el, "the stars of 'El," in Isa 14:13 and explaining the -m of hkkm as enclitic.

REFERENCES

Text, translations and studies: KAI 2:330-332; SSI 3:151-159; Colonna et al. 1964; Dahood 1965; Delcor 1968; Dupont-Sommer 1964; Ferron 1965; Février 1965; Fischer and Rix 1968; Fitzmyer 1966; Friedrich 1969; Garbini 1968; Garbini and Levi della Vida 1965; Heurgon 1966; Knoppers 1992.

3. ARAMAIC INSCRIPTIONS

THE TOMB INSCRIPTION OF ŠI'GABBAR, PRIEST OF SAHAR (2.59)

P. Kyle McCarter

Two funerary reliefs depicting deceased priests and inscribed with their epitaphs were found in 1891 at Nerab, southeast of Aleppo. The two inscriptions, which date to the early seventh century BCE, are written in the dialect known as Empire Aramaic, recognizable from a number of features of grammar and lexicon that show the influence of the dominant Assyrian language and culture of the period. The names of both priests honor the Assyrian god Sin, and it has been suggested that the sanctuary at Nerab was a satellite of the great temple of Sin at Harran (Gibson SSI

2:94). The epitaph translated here is written above a representation of the priest Si²gabbar, who is depicted in a seated position offering a libation at an altar, behind which is an attendant holding a fan.

Identification of the Deceased (lines 1-2)

Si²gabbar,¹ priest of Sahar² in Nerab. This is his picture.

The Piety of the Deceased (lines 2-6)

Because of my righteousness in his presence,³ he gave me a good name and prolonged my days.⁴ On the day I died, my mouth was not deprived of words, and with my eyes I beheld children of the fourth generation.⁵ They wept for me and were greatly distraught.⁶ But they did not place any sil-

cf. 1 Kgs 3:14;
cf. Deut 4:26,
40; 5:33;
11:9; 17:20;
22:7; 30:18;
32:47; Josh
24:31; Judg
2:7; Isa
53:10; Ps
72:5 (!);
Prov 28:16;
Job 29:18;
Eccl 8:13
δ Ps 128:6; Job 42:16 ε Ps 37:38; 109:13

ver or bronze with me; they placed me (here) with (only) my clothes, so that in the future my remains⁵ would not be carried off.⁶

Warning against Desecration of the Sarcophagus (lines 6-10)

Whoever you are, who do (me) wrong⁷ and carry me off, may Sahar, Nikkal⁸ and Nusk⁹ make his death ignominious, and may his posterity perish!⁶

¹ The element Si² is the West Semitic (Aram.) form of the name of the Mesopotamian god Sin (Kaufman 1970:271); thus Si²gabbar's name means "Sin is a warrior." [See also the Akk. attestation for the name, Parpola 1985: KLY].

² Sahar (shr = šhr) was the Aramean moon-god (cf. Syriac sahrā, "moon").

³ The assertion of "my righteousness in his presence" indicates, in the first place, simply that Si²gabbar's behavior met with Sahar's approval; but since Si²gabbar was a priest, the expression qdmw, "before him, in his presence," refers more specifically to his performance of his sacerdotal duties in the service of the god.

⁴ That is, hwm ²*thmw*. Evidently hwm (hawm) is a noun in cognate accusative construction rather than an infinitive absolute, for which we might have expected hm or mhm (cf. Gibson SSI 2:98 n. 6, but contrast Segert AaG 532).

⁵ On this word (²*rsy*) see Kaufman (1974:50), who explains it in light of Akk. esitu, "bone, skeleton."

⁶ The verb ltns, derived by some interpreters from a root hns (cf. Syriac ²*ns*, "press, compel," which in the ²Ethpe²el mean "be compelled, distressed," and Jewish Palestinian Aram. ²*ns*, "oppress, overwhelm") is better explained as Hap²el of nws with the meaning "carry off" (KAI 2:210, 275, 276).

⁷ Elsewhere in Aram., including Sefire III 20 (COS 2.82), and Hebrew the verb ²*šq* is transitive, meaning "oppress, do wrong (to), slander." Here the object is not expressed, but it may be implied or reverted from following verb.

⁸ Nikkal is the Aram.-Phoen. version of the Sum.-Akk. Ningal, the consort of Sin.

⁹ In Mesopotamian mythology Nuskā or Nusku was esp. associated with the sacrificial flame, so that he is often described in modern literature as a "fire god." One of his most important roles was the expulsion of demons.

REFERENCES

Text, translations and studies: KAI 2:276; SSI 2:97-98; Kaufman 1970.

ARAMAIC MORTUARY TEXTS FROM EGYPT

Bezalel Porten

Achaemenid Egypt has yielded a half-dozen mortuary texts, one offering table and five stelae with Aramaic inscriptions. Their period of discovery spans two and one-quarter centuries (1704-1920's CE). Three certainly, and the others most likely, were found in the Memphis-Saqqarah area, and today each is housed in a different museum — Louvre in Paris (COS 2.60 [discovered 1851]), Musées Royaux d'Arts et d'Histoire in Brussels (COS 2.61 [1907]), municipal museum in Carpentras (COS 2.64 [1704]), and the Vatican in Rome (COS 2.65 [1860]). The one in the Staatliche Museen in Berlin was destroyed in World War II (COS 2.62 [pre-1877]) and the last one remains in an unknown storage site in Egypt (COS 2.63 [1920]). The Egyptian funerary scenes and the onomasticon indicate a ready adoption by Aramaean settlers of local practices, at the same time maintaining their native language, the lingua franca of the empire. Four stelae open with a blessing of the deceased (COS 2.61-64), three of them by the Egyptian god Osiris (COS 2.61-62, 2.64; cf. 2.65), who was slaughtered by his brother Seth and revived by his son Horus. The inscriptions came at the bottom of two or three registers of familiar Egyptian funerary scenes. The fifth stela inscription is merely a label identifying the deceased and it appears between two registers (COS 2.65). Two of the inscriptions are for a male (COS 2.63, 2.65), two for a female (COS 2.61, 2.64) and one for a couple (COS 2.62). This latter stela was prepared by a surviving son, adds a hieroglyphic inscription, and is dated to 4 Xerxes (482 BCE). The most famous of the stelae, that in Carpentras, is a quatrain of three four-beat bicola, internal rhyme in lines 2-3, and a concluding three-beat bicolon (COS 2.64). Twice the deceased, female and male, is designated by an Egyptian loanword meaning "(the) excellent (one)" (COS 2.64-65), while the Carpentras stela employs two more loanwords, one an epithet of deity, "Lord of Two Truths" (nb m²c²ty) and another of the defunct, "praiseworthy" (ḥsyw). Most of the names, both praenomen and patronym, are likewise Egyptian: Bokriw father of

Tuma (COS 2.61), Ḥor father of Abah (COS 2.62), Petees[e] son of Yh² [...] (COS 2.63), Tabi daughter of Tahapi (COS 2.64), and Ankhohapi son of Takhabet (COS 2.65). This is in stark contrast to the Jewish settlers in Egypt who preserved their Hebrew names. The names on the offering table were both Aramaean — Abitab son of Banit (COS 2.60). Though discovered in the Memphis Serapeum (thus dedicated to Osiris-Ḥapi = Serapis) in a Thirtieth Dynasty context (380-343 BCE), palaeographic considerations argue for an early fifth century date.¹ We may conjecture that along with numerous other tables, ours was moved from its original site to make way for the late pylon, in whose proximity they were then deposited. A new reading following recent collation presents a text which can best be understood as a calque on Egyptian grammar. In similar fashion, the Carpentras text (COS 2.64) may be seen as an abstract of Chapter 125 in the Book of the Dead (COS 2.12).²

¹ See Introduction to D20.1-6 in TAD D. Complete bibliography to these texts can be found there and in Fitzmyer and Kaufman 1992.

² These conclusions were worked out in conjunction with the Egyptologist John Gee and most of the Egyptological references are due to him. A joint article entitled "Aramaic Funerary Practices in Egypt" is scheduled to appear in the P.-E. Dion Festschrift.

OFFERING TABLE FROM THE MEMPHIS SERAPEUM (2.60)

(Early Fifth Century BCE)

Bezalel Porten

Written somewhat carelessly without clear word separation, this four-line text (Louvre A0 4824) is susceptible to different interpretations (see notes). The smoothest translation is achieved if we view it as a calque on Egyptian grammar. We surmise that the memorial offering-table was originally deposited in a public place outside the sanctuary proper. Offerings, whether periodic or occasional, would subsequently have been made to the deity, and the deceased would have taken his share therefrom. Bible and Apocrypha know of the practice of feeding the dead directly (Deut 26:14; Tob 4:17).

Offering-table ¹ as an offering ² of Banit ³ ^a to ⁴	^a 2 Kgs 17:30 ^b 1 Chr 8:11	Banit made ⁷ for him ⁸ (so that) ⁹ he may be ¹⁰ before Osiris-Ḥapi (Serapis) ⁵ (which) Abitab ⁶ ^b son of	Osi > ḥ < ris-Ḥapi. ¹¹
--	---	--	-----------------------------------

¹ While the formula in this dedicatory inscription is familiar from Phoen. (cf. KAI 2.1, 4-7, 25) and Aram. (KAI 2.201-202, 215, 229, 239, 242-243, 258; TAD D17.1), the formulation here is syntactically elliptical. The first word always refers to the object dedicated, hence ḥpy = Eg. ḥp.t means here "offering table" (Glossar 338; cf. DAE, Lipiński 1978:111) and not "offering" (so NSI, KAI). The text regularly proceeded either with the relative ("which"), followed by verb-subject-indirect object (KAI 2.1, 4-7, 25, 201-202, 229), or with the demonstrative ("this"), likewise followed by verb-subject-indirect object (KAI 2.215, 258; TAD D17.1:1 = COS 2.41). In the first pattern the word order occasionally changed to subject-verb-indirect object (KAI 2.242-243). In our text the word order is verb ("bd")-subject (Abitab)-indirect object (ḥ). There is neither a relative nor a demonstrative pronoun. Conceivably, one may take the opening expression as a title and render: "Offering-table for the offering of Banit to Osiris-Ḥapi. Abitab son of Banit made it for him." The awkwardness is eliminated if we assume the grammar imitates an Eg. pattern wherein the relative marker nty (= Aram. zy) is omitted in the past tense, replaced by a special relative form of the verb, r-sdm.f; see Johnson 1976:182.

² Official Aram. knows the use of the stem grb both in the sense of approaching a person (TAD C1.1:50, 54, 57, 193-194) and presenting an offering to deity (KAI 2.229 [Teima]; COS 2.51B-D; cf. TAD A4.7:25, 28 || 4.8:25, 27; Ezra 7:17). This is the only occurrence of the nominal form. Those who prefer the former sense point to the appearance of the defunct before Osiris for judgment (Book of the Dead, Chap. 125). But the terminology there is not "approach deity" but simply iw r, "come to (the hall)" (Lexa 1910:5) or spr r, "arrive at (the hall)" (Naville 1886:I, Pl. cxxxiii, line 1). Ordinarily in the Aram. inscriptions, the object would be dedicated (to a deity) for "the life" or "honor" of the deceased (references in DNWSI 812-813).

³ A Mesopotamian female deity, appearing here in a rare but not unparalleled occurrence as a personal name; cf. Eg. Ḥr, "Horus" (COS 2.61). Banit was embraced by the Aramaeans and had a temple at Syene (TAD A2.2:1, 12, 2.3:7, 2.4:1). She appeared there and at Elephantine, at the same time as our text, in such personal masculine names as Banitsar (TAD A2.2:5, 2.6:8), Banitsarel (TAD 2.3:2), Baniteresh (TAD B2.1:19), and the dominant Makkibanit (TAD A2.1:8, etc.). In a Neo-Assyrian text from Nineveh involving Egyptians, a name that may be read Banitu appears as witness; Postgate 1976:No. 13:34 and n. on p. 103. In the Neo-Babylonian onomasticon, on the other hand, Banitu was found almost exclusively in female names; Talletqvist 1905:21-22. See further Cogan 1995.

⁴ The preposition "to" appears in four votive bowl inscriptions (COS 2.51) but it alternates with "before" in blessings ("before:" COS 2.62; TAD D22:10-11, 16, 24, 26, 47, 49-52; "to:" TAD D22.13, 17-18, 29-32, 40-44).

⁵ Upon death the Apis bull (ḥpy) became known as Osiris-Apis. Greek Serapis, and was buried in the Serapeum. Popular in Ptolemaic times, the term Wsir Ḥpy is found already in Serapeum stelae 22-23 dating to year 2 of Pimay (772 BCE); Malinine, Posener, and Vercoutter 1968:I, 21-23; II, Pl. viii. Ḥpy was a popular element in the personal names in these funerary texts — Tahapi (COS 2.64) and Ankhohapi (COS 2.65). This fact suggested to Lévy 1927:285-286 that the respective stelae and the persons they commemorated stem from Memphis.

⁶ A good West Semitic name ("[My] divine father is goodness"), occurring also in a graffito at the Seti Temple at Abydos: Abitab son of Shumtab (TAD D22:9).

⁷ For the verb "bd" in this context see COS 2.41.

⁸ This word had been read lhy and rendered “thus(?)” with no satisfactory etymology. Careful examination of the offering table reveals that the first letter is a lamed whose horizontal bar is mistakenly curved to the left rather than to the right. Read lh, “to him” (i.e. to Banit) and attach the yod to the following word (y^cbd) (so Ada Yardeni). While word separation is not always clear in this text, there is noticeable space between lh and y^cbd. It was not uncommon for a child to fashion the funerary object for the parent (cf. COS 2.62; KAI 2.1, 215; cf. KAI 2.239, 248 [husband]; references in DANWSI 812-813 passim).

⁹ Aram. would normally employ the particle kzy to introduce a purpose (final) clause; Muraoka and Porten 1998:§52f. Its absence here is consonant with Eg. syntax which omits such a particle in the subjunctive sdm=f in purpose clauses; see the hieroglyphic text in COS 2.62 below (di.f qrst nfr, “so that he might give a good burial”) and discussion in Johnson 1976:279-280, esp. E492B-D. Alternately, we may view the verb y^cbd as jussive (“Let him be”) and the construction as “two asyndetic clauses loosely hanging together” (T. Muraoka, written communication). This rendition, however, appears somewhat awkward.

¹⁰ Aram. bd may be a calque of Eg. iri which besides its regular meaning of “do, make” may also mean “be, become.” See the expression ir=t w^c m-b²h p² nb ntr.w, “may you be one before the lord of the gods” in parallel to ipy=k m-b²h p² nb ntr.w, “may you be rejuvenated before the lord of the gods”; P. Louvre E 10607, lines 7-8 in Smith 1993:23, Pl. 7; see also Glossar 36-37. Proper ritual, including offerings, would enable Banit to be an attendant in the presence of Serapis (cf. 2.64). This would be the sense of the Aram. verb if we took it conjecturally to mean “act.” The verb also has the meaning of offering up a sacrifice, but with an object complement (TAD A4.7:21-22 || A4.8:21), here to be understood as “make (offerings).” The clause would then express the determination of the son to attend to the funerary rites of his father. Reading y^cbr and translating “Let it pass before Osiris-Hapi” does not seem to be an improvement. The simplest explanation is to assume an Eg. prototype, as argued above.

¹¹ The careless scribe, perhaps unskilled, anticipated the heth of the second word in the line (hpy) already at the beginning of the line.

REFERENCES

CIS 2.123; DAE No. 84; Donner 1969; Fitzmyer and Kaufman 1992 B.3.e.8; HNE I, 128, 448, II, Pl. 28.2; Johnson 1976; KAI No. 268; Lévy 1927; Lexa 1910; Lipiński 1978; NSI No. 72; Malinine, Posener, and Vercoeur 1968; Muraoka and Porten 1998; Naville 1886; Postgate 1976; TAD D20.1; Smith 1993; Tallqvist 1905.

FUNERARY STELA (Brussels E. 4716) (2.61)
(Early Fifth Century BCE)

Bezalel Porten

Blessed¹ ^a be Tuma² daughter of Bokrin³ by^{1 a} | ^a Gen 14:19; Judg 17:2; 1 Sam 15:13; Ps 115:15; Ruth 3:10
Osiris.⁴

¹ In the formula brk + l/qdm-DN, the deity has been considered not the agent but the indirect object of the preposition, thus “I bless you to/before DN, i.e. I pray to/before DN that he bless you”; Muraoka 1979:92-94; Muraoka and Porten 1998:§ 54d. Lipiński 1975:96-98 rendered it here “Be recommended to Osiris.” For general discussion of this formula as commendation to deity cf. Scharbart 1975 2:279-308. The word brk occurs in four of the five stelae (COS 2.61-2.64), once with the preposition qdm (COS 2.62; see there sub voce). In the passive voice the dual formula occurs essentially in graffiti (“before” TAD D22:10-11, 16, 24, 26, 47, 49-52; “to:” D22.13, 17-18, 29-32, 40-44); in the active voice it appears in epistolary salutations (see references in EPE B1, n. 6). The passive formula also occurs in inscriptions from Hatra (KAI 2.244, 246 [dkyr wbyrk PN qdm DN]) and in a Heb. tomb inscription (Dever 1971).

² The name is found frequently in Palmyra (Stark 1971:56; Lipiński 1975b:98) and a third century BCE Aram. ostrakon mentions a “Tam wife of Malchiah son of Azgad” (TAD D7.57:4-5).

³ Bokrin³ = b²k-n.f, “Servant of his Name,” known through Greek transcription as Bochoris, this name was borne by a well-known king of the Twenty-fourth Dynasty. See Lipiński 1975b:99-101.

⁴ The name is here spelled wry; in the other texts it is written with an initial aleph. The graffiti know three different spellings — ^a*wry* (TAD D22.10, 24), ^a*sry* (TAD D22.13, 16), and wry (TAD D22.11, 18).

REFERENCES

Lipiński 1975b; Muraoka 1979; Muraoka and Porten 1998; RÉS 1788; Scharbart 1975; Stark 1971; TAD D20.2

FUNERARY STELA FROM SAQQARAH (BERLIN GIPSFORMEREI 939 FORMERLY ÄM 7707 [destroyed WW II]) (2.62)
(482 BCE)

Bezalel Porten

Aramaic text

Blessed be Abah son of Hor ¹ and Aḥatabu daughter of Adiyah, ² all (told), ³ of Khasemehi the city ⁴ before Osiris the god. ⁵	α Esth 1:1, etc.; Dan 9:1; Ezra 4:6	Absali son of Abah, ⁶ his mother (being) Aḥatabu, ⁷ thus said ⁸ in year 4, month of Meḥir, (of) Xerxes ⁹ the king ¹⁰ ...
--	---	---

¹ The son bore a hypocoristic Aram. name (cf. Abah father of Itu, an Aramaean scribe at Syene [TAD B2.2:16]) and the father an Eg. one (Hr, "Horus"), popular at Elephantine (TAD B3.10:10 || 11:6, C3.4:16, 3.9:19, 3.10:3, 4.6:3, 4.8:7, etc.). The intermingling of Aram. and Eg. names was well-attested in the filiations of the Makkibani letters sent to Syene and Luxor, probably from Memphis (TAD A2.1-7); cf. Nabushezib son of Peṭeknum (TAD A2.1:15) and Makkibani son of Psami (TAD A2.2:18).

² Here there are apparently two Aram. names. The praenomen has been explained as abbreviation of the Ersatzname ²hr ²bwh, "Sister of her father" (NSI, KAI, SSI); Tallqvist 1905:3 compares Neo-Babylonian Aḥ-at-bu-ū. In the hieroglyphic text it is written ²hr ²bwh. The patronym is identical with Heb. Adaiash, well attested in fifth century BCE Judah (Ezra 10:29, 39; Neh. 11:12 [AC]) but the stem is found in Moabite ²d (Zadok 1988:300), Nabataean ²dyw (CIS 2.195:1 [KAI]); Cantineau 1932:127; Safaitic and Thamudic ²dy (Harding 1971:410-411), Arabic ²Adi, ²Adiyā² [Jewish] (EnIslam 1:195-196 [reference from F. Rosenthal]). The name Adaios in the Greek inscriptions (adduced by Lipiński 1978a:105-106) may reflect ²Adi and not ²Adi (Wuñnow 1930:12; F. Rosenthal orally); likewise with similar spellings such as Addaios, Adeios, Adeou. Our name is not to be found in the well documented onomasticon of Elephantine. Given the pattern of name-giving among the Jews there it is questionable whether among the five names represented here this alone is Jewish; see Porten 1968:133-150. Positive determination would mean that the Jew Adaiash had assimilated to the pagan Aramaean-Egyptian society; Lévy 1927:287.

³ Such enumeration of personal names was common in Aram. contracts (TAD B2.9:2-3, 2.11:2; 3.12:3, 11) and letters (TAD A6.3:5, 6.7:5).

⁴ The word now read by A. Yardeni as qr̥r̥, "the city" was formerly misread as qr̥br̥ and erroneous derivations were proposed for the preceding h̥sm̥h. The newly retrieved formula is familiar from the Elephantine contracts with the addition of an ethnonim, "PN son of PN, Jew/Aramaean of Elephantine/Syene"; see discussion with references in EPE 153, n. 4. The site has been identified independently by K.-Th. Zauzich (orally) and J. Yoyotte 1995 with Khasemehi, adjacent to or identical with Marea at Egypt's western border where Herodotus (ii.30) cited the location of an outpost, just as at Elephantine.

⁵ Several Aram. graffiti on the walls of the Osiris temple at Abydos likewise contained the formula "Blessed be PN (son of PN) before Osiris" (TAD D22.10-11, 13, 16-18, 24). Here he is identified as "the god" and in the accompanying hieroglyphic inscription as "the great god" (n̥tr ²g).

⁶ Father and son both bear theophorous names compounded with ²b, "father." In the Jewish onomasticon at Elephantine this element survived only in the female names Abihi (TAD A3.7:2; B6.3:10; C3.15:93, 103), Abiosher (TAD C3.15:107), and in the apparently related Abioresh, of unknown gender, though possibly feminine (TAD D9.14:3). It appeared more frequently in the Egyptian Aramaean onomasticon — the above-cited Abah from Syene and the Abitabs from Memphis and Abydos, Abihu father of Rochel ("Merchant" in Aram. [TAD B4.4:20]), feminine Abut(a)i on an Aswan sarcophagus (TAD D18:16), and the frequently attested Abieti in the Ptolemaic period (TAD D7.57:1-2; 8.9:13, 8.10:1; 9.15:1). The element shy appears in the abbreviated biblical names, mostly exilic, Salli/Sallu (Neh 11:7; 12:7, 20) and in female Saltua (TAD B6.4:7) and Saltuah (TAD B4.6:10, 5.1:1, 6.4:3; C3.15:105) among the Elephantine Jews. Our name would mean "(Divine) Father Rejected (Sinners)" (cf. Ps 119:118; Lam 1:15; conversation with F. Rosenthal). For dubious derivation from Arabic saṭa'a, taken to mean "replace, substitute" cf. DAE, p. 462; Zadok 1988:110, 112, n. 34.

⁷ The addition of a mother in a filiation was common in Demotic documents but in Aram. contracts appears to be limited to a situation where the father may have had more than one wife (TAD B2.9:3, 2.10:3).

⁸ "PN thus (kn) said" was a common formula in Imperial Aram. documents of all sorts — letters (TAD A4.7:4; 6.2:2, 6.3:6; etc.), court record (TAD B8.7:3), and the Bisitun inscription (TAD C2.1:8, etc.). Heb. had a different word order — "Thus (kh) said PN" (e.g. Gen 32:4).

⁹ This Persian royal name was spelled in Aram. and Heb. in a variety of ways — h̥šyrš (TAD B4.4:1 [483 BCE]), h̥šyrš (here [482 BCE] and TAD D1.33b:1 [473 BCE]; B2.1:1 [471 BCE]), and h̥šwrrwš (Esth passim; Dan 9:1; Ezra 4:5).

¹⁰ The word order of this date formula (year, month, king) follows the Eg. pattern (see e.g. EPE C28-31, 33-35) rather than the Aram. one, which was month, year, king, on both monument (TAD D17.1 = COS 2.41) and in contracts (TAD B2-6). In 4 Xerxes = 482 BCE, the month of Meḥir = May 21-June 19. By 13 Xerxes = 473 BCE it became de rigueur to employ a synchronous Babylonian and Eg. month (TAD C3.8). See Porten 1990:16, 28.

Hieroglyphic text

1 h̥p̥-di-nswt Wsir h̥n̥ty-imntyw n̥tr 2 nb 2 b̥d̥w di.f qrst
n̥fr̥t n
 2 h̥rt-n̥tr rn n̥fr̥ hr̥tp
 3 2 n im 2 hy hr̥ n̥tr 2
 4 nb pr 2 h̥r̥
 5 bw

(Transcription and translation by Miriam Lichtheim)

¹A royal offering (to) Osiris Khentamenthes (= Lord of the Westerners), great god, lord of Abydos, that he may give a good burial in ²the necropolis and a good name on ³earth to the one honored before the great god, ⁴lord of sky, Akhata²bu.

REFERENCES

- AC No. 21; Cantineau 1932; CIS 2.122; DAE #85; Donner 1969; EnIslam 1960; EPE; Fitzmyer and Kaufman 1992:B.3.e.22; Harding 1971; HNE 1:448, 2:Pl. 28.1; KAI #267; Lévy 1927; NSI #71; Lipiński 1978; Porten 1968, 1990; TAD D20.3; Tallqvist 1905; SSI 2:119-120; Wuñnow 1930; Yoyotte 1995; Zadok 1988.

FUNERARY STELA (SAQQARAH; LOCATION UNKNOWN) (2.63)
(First Half of Fifth Century BCE)

Bezalel Porten

Blessed be Petees[e] son of Yh²!... by/before DN]

¹ The praenomen is Eg. (p²-dy-²s.t., "The [One] whom Isis Gave") but the fragmentary patronym is unrecoverable.

REFERENCES

Aimé-Giron 1939; Fitzmyer and Kaufman 1992:B.3.e.28; TAD D20.4.

FUNERARY STELA (CARPENTRAS) (2.64)
(First Half of Fifth Century BCE)

Bezalel Porten

This inscription may be entitled "The Immortalization of Taba." Its composer was well-versed in Egyptian funerary vocabulary. In a grammatically correct, well-fashioned quatrain he has deftly woven original Aramaic formulae — "Blessed be Tabi" (1a), "Before Osiris blessed be" (3a), "serve" (4a) — into translations of Egyptian terminology and formulae. Bicolon (1b) employs a traditional term for the deceased (r² mnḥt) and associates it with Osiris. Bicolon (2) paraphrases two of the most attested clauses in the tomb autobiographies that contain negative confessions.¹ Bicola (3) and (4) are the earliest attestation of four benedictions recorded in Roman funerary papyri, with (3a) preferring traditional Aramaic terminology to Egyptian.² The a-b-c-d order of the clauses in the Egyptian text is completely altered (a-c-d-b) to create an Aramaic poetic balance:

a. qdm ² wsry brykh hwy	Before Osiris blessed be
a. ² nḥ p ² y=f by r nḥ	May his soul live forever
c. hwy plḥh nm ^c ty	Do serve the Lord of the Two Truths
b. mtw p ² y=f by šms Wsir	and may his soul serve Osiris
d. wbyn ḥsyh [f ^c lm hwy]	and among the praiseworthy [forever be].
c. mtw=f ḥpr šnw n ² hse.w Wsir	and may he be among the praiseworthy of Osiris
b. mn qdm ² wsry myn qhy	from before Osiris water take.
d. mtw=f t mw hr t ² ḥtp.t m-s ² Wsir	and may he take water on the offering-table after Osiris

The final product in Aramaic is a precis of the process the deceased experiences through the final judgment and beyond, as elaborated in Book of the Dead, chapter 125 (COS 2.12).

(1a) Blessed be Tabi daughter of Tahapi,³
(2a) Anything evil⁴ a she did not do a Deut 17:1; 23:10; 2 Kgs 4:41 b Dan 3:8; 6:25	(1b) the excellent (one) ⁴ of Osiris the god. (2b) and the slander of a man ⁶ she did not say ⁷ b at all. ⁸

---	---

¹ Thirty-four percent of these autobiographies contain the "no evil" clause while twenty-seven percent contain the "no slander" clause; Gee 1998:173-178 (evil), 190-194 (calumny).

² Spiegelberg 1901:9-11; Lévy 1927:288-294, and esp. 293-294 for why the Eg. expression "live forever" would be unsuitable for an Aramaean.

³ Both praenomen and matronym are Eg. — Tabi = ta-b², "She of the Ba," Tahapi = ta-ḥp, "She of Apis." Taba (also = ta-b²) occurs frequently in the papyri (TAD B2.11:4-5, 12; 8.10:6; C3.17a:3, 3.19:8). Filializing a deceased (fe)male to mother rather than father was common in late Eg. funerary texts. The standard late period Book of the Dead was owned by Efonkh son of the woman Tsemminis (Lepsius 1842); see below COS 2.65.

⁴ mnḥ² = r² mnḥ, a term with special reference to the deceased, applied to a male in the Vatican stela (COS 2.65); the first of three Eg. loan words in this inscription. Though usually used as an adjective, it does occur as an epithet on a late gravestone — mnḥ.t hr Ptḥ Skr Wsir, "excellent (one) before Ptah-Sokar-Osiris" (P. Cairo 31153:1 in Spiegelberg 1904 1:62; Lipiński 1978a:112, n. 148).

⁵ The indef. pron. md^cm may function as a noun modified by an adj.; see Muraoka and Porten 1998:§ 44a. The comparable Heb. expression (ḏbr r^c) occurs in the Deuteronomist in a cultic sense. The Aram. expression and a similar Heb. one (m²wmh r^c) also bear the meaning of physical harm (TAD A6.7:8; Jer. 39:12). The cognate Eg. statement would be n ir=i isf.t, "I have not done iniquity" (Book of the Dead chapter 125 A1).

⁶ It is strange that Donner and Rölliig KAI should call the word ṣyš "a Canaanism!" It occurs in every type of document in the papyri.

⁷ The expression kršn ṣmr is a var. of the idiomatic Akk. loan qršn ṣkl (Dan 3:8, 6:25) < karš akālu; Kaufman 1974:63; DNWSI 537. Slander was condemned in Torah (Lev 19:16), Prophets (Jer 6:28), and Writings (Ps 34:4) and the sage Ahiqar advised extreme caution in speech (TAD C1.1:80-83, 93, 141). The deceased was pure in deed and word.

⁸ This word (tmḥ) is a crux. Metrically it overweighs the line. It is usually taken to mean "there" on earth as distinct from the world of the dead (KAI, SSI, DAE, DNWSI 1219-1220), but no Eg. parallel in funerary context supports this interpretation. The suggestion of Shea 1981 to restore metrical balance by reading it as the beginning of line 3 ("There before Osiris" in parallel to "from before Osiris") fails to explain why the scribe of this poem put it at the end of line 2. Lipiński 1978:112 took it as adjective "perfect," an interpretation rejected by NSI, who preferred the suggestion of Lagarde, citing Syriac mwm (from mm), "ever." Torrey 1926:247 proposed tummā, "completeness," as adverbial accusative "(not) at all." The Eg. autobiographies did not have a standard categorical denial of slander but only specific limited denials (e.g. "I never slandered anyone to the captain of the land;" Statue of Dd-Dhwtj-ḫw=f-ḫ [reign of Osorkon II] = Cairo JE 36697, line 20 in Janssen-Winkel 1985 1:49; 2:456). As translated above, the Aram. would have affirmed an absolute denial in parallel to the absolute denial in the first half of the line.

(3a) Before Osiris blessed be; ⁹	(3b) from before Osiris water take. ¹⁰
(4a) Do serve ¹¹ the Lord of the Two Truths ¹²	(4b) and among the praiseworthy ¹³ [forever be]. ¹⁴

⁹ With inverted word order, verb first, this blessing appears regularly among the graffiti on the walls of the Temple at Abydos — "Blessed be PN before Osiris" (TAD D22.10-11, 13, 16, 24). The sequence "blessed-serve" is found in juxtaposition in reverse order in an Aram. statue inscription from Hatra where the king is designated plh ʾlhʾ bryk ʾlhʾ, "servant of the god, blessed of the god" (KAI 2.243).

¹⁰ Imperative ghy is no more a Canaanism (contra KAI) than is ʾyš (cf. TAD D1.14:2); see Muraoka and Porten 1998:§12b, 33d. As the Eg. parallel indicates, the libation offering is made to Osiris and then the deceased takes the water "after" him to quench her thirst (so John Gee; cf. also Donner 1969, KAI). The Aram. text is fashioned to duplicate the preposition — qdm and then mn qdm; Lévy 1927:289.

¹¹ The verb plh takes the direct object (TAD B3.6:11); here it appears in a periphrastic imperative, indicating a "sense of urgency and insistence;" Muraoka and Porten 1998:§ 55g. Others translate "Be a servant/worshipper" (NSI, KAI, SSI).

¹² An Eg. loan word — nb mʿʿ-ry (DAE, 342, note s.), a known epithet of Osiris (Book of the Dead chap. 136 b S = Allen 1974:111). It is apparently applied to him in the Declaration of Innocence in the Book of the Dead, chap. 125 a § S 1 because that text concerns entering the wšḫ.t mʿʿ-ry, "Hall of the Two Truths"; see COS 2.12. It appears both in the editions of the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Dynasties (Maystre 1937:13 = Allen 1974:97) through the Twenty-fifth and Twenty-sixth Dynasties (Verhoeven 1993 1:228, 15.13; 2:79*); see also Couroyer 1970:19-20. A different explanation of the Eg. loanword has yielded the translation "Do attend on the righteous ones" (nmʿ-ry < nʾ mʿʿ-ry), this in parallel with the second hemistich, as restored, "and be among the beatified ones [of Osiris];" Lipiński 1977:112-115.

¹³ Aram. hryh < Egi. hsy, an epithet applied to the deceased (Glossar, 329-330). A Neo-Assyrian contract from Nineveh (Postgate 1976:No. 13) attaches the word hasaya to the Eg. patronym Ahertais father of Nabu-riḫtu-uṣur. Usually taken as a gentilic it is now understood as our Eg. word; Lipiński 1978:114. But an epithet "deceased" is not attached to a patronym in either Akk. or Eg. documents (W. W. Hallo, J. Gee orally).

¹⁴ Among the restorations proposed are hwy šlymh, "be complete" (NSI), hwy lʾlm, "live forever" (Couroyer 1970:20-21; SSI 2:122), zy ʾwsry, "of Osiris" (Lipiński 1978:112-115). In light of the Eg. parallel, it is tempting to restore lʾlm hwy, "forever be," opening and closing the bicolon with the same verb and creating an internal rhyme (cf. Lévy 1927:290) but the blank space in the damaged text does not allow for such a full restoration.

REFERENCES

AC #49; Allen 1974; CIS 2.141; Couroyer 1970; DAE #86; DNWSI; Donner 1969; Fitzmyer and Kaufman 1992:B.3.f.18; Gee 1998; Glossar; HNE 1:91-92, 448, 2:pl. 28.3; Janssen-Winkel 1985; KAI #269; Kaufman 1974; Lepsius 1842; Lipiński 1977; 1978a; Maystre 1937; Muraoka and Porten 1998; NSI #75; Postgate 1976; Shea 1981; Spiegelberg 1901, 1904; TAD D20.5; Torrey 1926; Verhoeven 1993; SSI 2:120-122.

FUNERARY STELA (VATICAN MUSEUM I^o SALA 22787) (2.65)

Bezalel Porten

Ankhotapi son of Takhabes,¹ excellent (one)² of Osiris the god.

¹ Both names are Eg., as in the Carpentras stela (2.64 above), here as there, the parent being female rather than male. Ankhotapi = ʿnh-ḥp, "May Apis live;" Takhabes = ta-ḫʾb.s, "She of the Stars."

² The same Eg. loanword (mnḫʾ < mnḫ) as in the preceding inscription. Absent in this inscription is the traditional opening blessing.

REFERENCES

CIS 2.142; Donner 1969; Fitzmyer and Kaufman 1992:B.3.f.28; HNE 1:448, 2:Pl. 28.4; KAI #272.

TOMBSTONE INSCRIPTION (GRECO-ROMAN MUSEUM 18361) (2.66)

(ca. End Third Century BCE)¹

Bezalel Porten

Among the tombstones uncovered at the necropolis in el-Ibrahimiya, Alexandria, in 1906 by E. Breccia were three of limestone with Aramaic inscriptions. They were published in 1907 by Clermont-Ganneau (TAD D21.4-6) and have been much discussed. The one reproduced here bears a name reminiscent of that of one of the last Davidides — Akkub son of Elioenai (1 Chr 3:24).² The praenomen, of course, is the hypocoristicon of Akabiah, the name here, and it is tempting, given the known practice of papponymy, to see in our deceased a descendant of the biblical figure. Breccia suggested that the buried were mercenaries. The inscription is spread across three lines and is painted in large red characters.

¹ The dating follows Lidzbarski (ESE). Most would date it to the early Ptolemaic period. Complete bibliography in Horbury and Noy 1992:#3.

Akabiah³ son of Elioenai⁴

a 1 Chr 3:24; 4:36

² The sequence of Simeonite names Elioenai and Jaakobah (1 Chr 4:36) is most coincidental.

³ The root of this name (^cqb) is the same as that in Jacob and occurs in a variety of hypocoristica, borne primarily by Aramaeans, both at Elephantine/Syene (Akab [TAD C4.3:16; D1.1:12], Akbah [TAD A2.4:6] Akban [TAD B4.2:12] Akkub [TAD D1.2:1], Nabuakab [TAD A6.2:23, 28, etc.], and Saharakab [TAD B3.9:10]) and in the Ptolemaic period at Edfu (Akban [D7.56:3]). It is well attested elsewhere, as well; for references see Abbadi 1983:44-46, 85. In post-exilic Judah the name Akkub is borne by gatekeepers (Ezra 2:42 || Neh 7:45; 11:19; 12:25; 1 Chr 9:17), Levites (Neh 8:7), Nethinim (Ezra 2:45), and a Davidic descendant (1 Chr 3:24). This is the first occurrence of the name with the theophorous element -yh.

⁴ This noninal sentence name with three elements (^cl-yw-^cyny, "To YHW are My-Eyes [Lifted Up]") is unique in the Israelite onomasticon; Zadok 1988:57. Borne in pre-exilic times by a Simeonite and Benjamite (1 Chr 4:36; 7:8), it was popular in exilic times (Ezra 10:22, 27; Neh 12:41; 1 Chr 3:23-24).

REFERENCES

Abbadi 1983; Breccia 1907; Clermont-Ganneau 1907; ESE 49; Fitzmyer and Kaufman 1992:B.3.f.39.3; Horbury and Noy 1992; TAD D21.4; Zadok 1988.

4. NABATAEAN INSCRIPTIONS

THE NABATAEAN TOMB INSCRIPTION OF KAMKAM AT MADĀ³IN ŠĀLIḤ (2.67)

J. F. Healey

The inscription, dated 1 BCE/CE, is the finest of 38 carved on Nabataean tomb facades (this one is tomb no. B 19) at the site of Madā³in Šālīḥ (ancient Hegra) in northern Saudi Arabia. The tombs were first described and the texts copied by C. Doughty in 1883. Subsequent work, especially by J. Euting and Frs A. Jaussen and R. Savignac (Jaussen and Savignac 1909), established the importance of this southern outpost of the Nabataean kingdom in the 1st century CE. The tomb inscriptions, many of which are precisely dated, are particularly informative on religion, social structure and legal matters. It is clear that the surviving texts were also preserved on papyrus in the legal archives of the city or one of its temples.¹

Ownership (lines 1-2a)

This is the tomb which Kamkam daughter of Wa³ilat daughter of Haramu and Kulaybat, her daughter, made for themselves and their descendants.²

Date³ (lines 2b-3a)

In the month of Ṭebet, the ninth year of Ḥaretat, King of the Nabataeans, lover of his people.⁴

Curse (lines 3b-7a)

And may Dushara⁵ and his throne and Allat of ^cAmnad⁶ and Manotu⁷ and her Qaysa curse anyone who sells this tomb or who buys it or gives it in pledge or makes a gift of it or removes from it body or limb or who buries in it anyone other than Kamkam and her daughter and their descendants.⁸

¹ The fullest discussion of the inscription is to be found in Healey 1993:154-162.

² It is noteworthy that there are several Nabataean tombs owned by and designed for the use of women.

³ December/January 1 BCE/CE.

⁴ Arenas IV (9 BCE - 40 CE) is usually given the nationalistic title "lover of his people."

⁵ Dushara ("the master of the Shara mountains") was the main Nabataean god. Astral in character, he is elsewhere called "the one who separates day from night" and "lord of the world." Dushara's "throne" (mwtb) was the object of separate veneration: see Healey 1993:156-158.

⁶ The divine name Allat is borrowed from Arabic. The apparent geographical name ^cmand cannot be identified.

⁷ Manotu is known from early Islamic evidence as Manāt.

⁸ The terminology is legalistic and it is reflected in such Nabataean legal papyri as have survived, notably those from the Babatha archive. See COS 3.

*Fine*⁹ (lines 7b-10)

And whoever does not act according to what is written above shall be liable to Dushara and Hubalu¹⁰ and to Manotu in the sum of 5 *shamads*¹¹ and to the exorcist-priest¹² for a fine of a thousand Haretite sela^cs,¹³ except that whoever produces in his hand a document from the hand of Kamkam or Kulaybat, her daughter, regarding this tomb, this document will be valid.

*The Mason*¹⁴ (lines 11-12)

Wahballahi son of ^cAbd^cobodat made it.

⁹ The inclusion of fines in these texts is most unusual in the Semitic sphere (there is one Palmyrene example), but it is a characteristic feature of Lycian tomb inscriptions.

¹⁰ Hubal: one of the pre-Islamic deities of Mecca.

¹¹ The šmd has no obvious cognate. It is most likely that it is some kind of monetary unit, probably a large unit.

¹² Nabataean ^cpk^c. It occurs quite frequently and is also found in Palmyrene and Hatran Aramaic and in Sabaic, Minaean and Lihyanite. Cf. already Akk. apkallu, Sum. AB-GAL, Kaufman 1974:34.

¹³ The Nabataean sela^c is the normal unit of silver coin (here specified as according to the standard established by the king Haretat). It corresponds to the silver tetradrachm.

¹⁴ It is common for masons to be named, and since genealogical information is given it is clear that a small number of mason families was at work at Madā^c in Šāliḥ.

REFERENCES

Healey 1993; Jaussen and Savignac 1909.

THE NABATAEAN TOMB INSCRIPTION OF HALAFU AT MADĀ^cIN ŠĀLIḤ (2.68)

J. F. Healey

For general comments see the Kamkam inscription above. The Ḥalafu inscription is dated 31/32 CE and located on the facade of tomb no. E 18.¹

Ownership (lines 1-7a)

This is the tomb which Ḥalafu son of Qosnatan² made for himself and for Su^caydu, his son, and his brothers, whatever male children may be born to this Ḥalafu,³ and for their sons and their descendants by hereditary title for ever. And his children may be buried in this tomb: this Su^caydu and Manu^cat and Šanaku and Ribamat and Umayyat and Salimat, daughters of this Ḥalafu. And none at all of Su^caydu and his brothers, males, and their sons and their descendants has the right to sell this tomb or write a deed of gift or anything else for anyone at all, except if one of them writes for his wife or for his daughters or for a father-in-law⁴ or

a Gen 31:5; 32:10; 43:23,
etc.

for a son-in-law a document for burial only.

Fine (lines 7b-9a)

And anyone who does other than this will be liable for a fine to Dushara the god of our lord⁵ ^a in the sum of five hundred Haretite sela^cs and to our lord for the same amount, according to the copy of this deposited in the temple of Qaysha.⁶

Date (lines 9b-10a)

In the month of Nisan, the fortieth year of Haretat, King of the Nabataeans, lover of his people.⁷

Masons (line 10b)

Ruma and ^cAbd^cobodat, the masons.

¹ Fulltest and most recent discussion: Healey 1993:226-231.

² This theophoric name appears to be formed on the Edomite divine name Qos. There is a view that the Nabataeans were not newcomers into the Jordan area but descendants of the Edomites.

³ The limitation to males is unique in the context of these inscriptions.

⁴ The term for father-in-law, nšyb, is an Arabic loan, though it has been Aramaicized.

⁵ The "god of our lord" is the "god of our lord the king" — the deity Dushara in the guise of (royal) family god. There is a certain analogy here with Albrecht Alt's "god of the fathers."

⁶ "The copy" (nšht) is best paralleled in Akk. legal terminology (nšḫu, originally "extract," coming to mean in Neo-Babylonian "official record"). Here we have explicit evidence that there was a corresponding document lodged in a temple. We can assume that this other copy was on papyrus like the Nabataean legal documents from Nahal Hever.

⁷ The year is 31/32 CE. On the titulature see the Kamkam inscription above.

REFERENCES

Healey 1993; Jaussen and Savignac 1909.

A NABATAEAN FUNERARY INSCRIPTION
FROM MADEBA (2.69)

J. F. Healey

There are two copies of this monumental funerary inscription, one in the Vatican, the other in the Louvre (AO 4454). They are identical except for a minor variation in line-division. In both exemplars words are separated by spaces; scriptio continua is the norm in Nabataean.¹

Ownership (lines 1-7a)

This is the tomb and two funeral monuments above it which ʿAbdʿobodat the governor made for ʔItaybel the governor,² his father, and for ʔItaybel, the camp commandant who is in Luḥitu and ʿAbarta, son of this ʿAbdʿobodat the governor; in the territory of their rule which they exercised twice for thirty-six years during the time of Ḥaretat, King of the Nabataeans, lover of his people.

Date (lines 7b-8)

And the above work was executed in his forty-sixth year.³

¹ For the main edition of the text see CIS 2 #196 (Vatican text). For discussion see Starcky 1980 and Healey 1993:247-248.

² Nabataean ʔstrgʔ (< Greek στρατηγός). Nabataean strategoi are mentioned in Josephus, Ant. XVIII.112.

³ The date is 37/38 CE.

REFERENCES

CIS 2 #196; Healey 1993; Starcky 1980.

This page intentionally left blank

D. SEAL AND STAMP INSCRIPTIONS

This page intentionally left blank

1. SEALS AND SEAL IMPRESSIONS*

Jeffrey H. Tigay¹ and Alan R. Millard

Seals were used for stamping the names of their owners on clay bullae to seal letters and documents (1 Kgs 21:8; Isa 8:16; 29:11; Jer 32:9-14; Job 38:14; Esth 8:8; cf. Gen 38:18, 25; 41:42; Jer 22:24; Song 8:6; Esth 3:10), on pottery vessels to indicate ownership or some other type of relationship, and for other purposes. Hundreds of seals and seal impressions, containing inscriptions in Hebrew, Phoenician, Ammonite, Moabite, Edomite, Philistine, and Aramaic script are known, mostly from the eighth through sixth centuries BCE. The inscriptions, spread over one to four lines, usually contain the name of the seal's owner, often that of the owner's father and occasionally his grandfather, and sometimes the owner's title or some other phrase. They are a valuable source of information about history, religion, culture, government, and economy because of the onomastic information they contain, the fact that some of the owners are government or religious officials, that a few are individuals known from the Bible, and because of the objects to which they are affixed and the iconography on some of them. Seals that were found in controlled archaeological excavations are the most reliable sources of information; some of these come from occupation debris, as at Lachish (Diringer 1941), some from tombs (e.g. Barkay 1986:34), which are the most likely provenience for the majority. Bullae, often with imprints of papyrus on the back, were recovered in excavations at Lachish (Aharoni 1968:164-168) and Jerusalem (Shiloh 1986). Seals and bullae acquired on the antiquities market, notably the hoard of bullae published by Avigad (1986), are less reliable because their provenience is unknown, their date uncertain, and some may be modern forgeries.²

The seals may bear a design of imaginary, human or animal figures, floral or geometric motifs, with the inscription engraved above or below or in the field, sometimes clearly as an addition, usually in a space deliberately created. In this respect, Hebrew seals differ little from other West Semitic seals (see Bordreuil 1992; Sass and Uehlinger 1993). However, the majority of Hebrew seals carry only the owner's name and patronym or title, normally written in two lines divided by a ruling or simple design and enclosed in a border. The seals are usually under one inch in diameter, so the lettering is tiny, sometimes finely engraved, sometimes roughly cut and occasionally with errors.

HEBREW (2.70)

2.70A. Two bullae of Berechyahu son of Neriylahu the scribe, made by the same seal (Hebrew; provenience unknown).³ These identical inscriptions are written in the Hebrew script of the seventh century BCE. This Berechyahu is probably Jeremiah's secretary "Baruch son of Neriylahu the scribe" (Jer 36:32). Baruch is the hypocoristic, or nickname, for Berechyahu. The shorter form of Baruch's patronym, Neriylah, that appears in some biblical passages (such as Jer 36:4), reflects the form of the theophoric element that was common in the Second Temple period when earlier biblical manuscripts were recopied. Although the names Berechyahu and Neriylahu were common, the identification of this Berechyahu as Jeremiah's scribe is quite likely, for it is rare to find two individuals in the Bible and/or in Hebrew inscriptions who have both the same first name and patronym, especially among the relatively limited segment of the population that is likely to have owned seals (another case is the seal of Baruch's brother Serayahu son of Neriylahu [Avigad and Sass 1997 #390; Avigad 1978b:86-87; 1978a:56]; see also [C], below). The title "scribe" virtually clinches the identification.

(Belonging) to Berechyahu son of Neriylahu⁴
the scribe

* [Millard furnished items 2.70 I-V and portions of the introduction, Tigay the rest. Ed.]

¹ Tigay notes: "I owe several helpful observations to Nili S. Fox."

² See Sass 1993:245-46; Naveh 1997:12; and the broader discussion of the problem of unprovenienced material by Fox 1997 chapter II, section C, 1.

³ Avigad and Sass 1997 #417; Davies 1991 100.509; Avigad 1978a:52-56; 1978b:86-87; Deutsch and Heltzer 1994:37-38.

⁴ The name Berechyahu means "YHWH has blessed (the family with this child)," while Neriylahu means "YHWH is my lamp." Like the vast majority of Israelite theophoric personal names of the Biblical period, both of these names contain the theophoric element -yahu, a short form

2.70B. The bulla of Jerahmeel, the king's son (Hebrew; provenience unknown).⁵ This inscription is also in seventh-century script. This bulla, reportedly found in the same group as that of Berechyahu ben Neriya (above), probably belonged to "Jerahmeel the king's son" who was sent by King Jehoiakim to arrest Baruch and Jeremiah (Jer 36:26). [For an actual seal with the same inscription, but of a different size see now Helzer 1999.]

(Belonging) to Jerahmeel⁶

The king's son⁷

2.70C. The seal impression of Hananyahu son of Azaryahu (Hebrew; provenience unknown).⁸ The inscription is written in the Hebrew script of the seventh century BCE. In view of the considerations discussed in (A) above, the owner of this seal may have been Hananyah son of Azur, denounced by Jeremiah as a false prophet (Jer 28; Azur is a hypocoristicon of Azaryahu).

(Belonging) to Hananyahu son of Azaryahu⁹

2.70D. The bulla of Gedalyahu, over(seer of) the (royal) house (Hebrew).¹⁰ This bulla, found on the surface at Lachish, is inscribed in the Hebrew script of the seventh century BCE. Some scholars believe that the owner of this seal was Gedaliah son of Ahikam son of Shaphan, whom the Babylonians placed in charge of the Jews remaining in Judah after the destruction of Jerusalem; he was assassinated shortly afterwards (2 Kgs 25:22-25; Jer 40:5-41:2). Gedaliah was from a family that held several high offices at the court of Judah, and since the Babylonians appointed him, it is plausible that he had already held a high office such as overseer of the palace. The back of the bulla contains imprints of the papyrus document to which it was affixed. Perhaps the document was a letter sent by Gedaliah from the palace to the defenders of Lachish before it fell to the Babylonians.

(Belonging) to Gedalyahu¹¹

"Over(seer of) the (royal) house" (i.e. the palace steward)¹²

2.70E. The seal of Zecharyaw, Priest of Dor (Hebrew; provenience unknown).¹³ The other side of the seal bears the inscription "(Belonging) to Zadok son of Micha³," possibly the name of Zecharyaw's father. Both inscriptions are written in Hebrew script of the eighth century BCE.

[(Belonging) to Ze]charyaw¹⁴

Priest of Dor¹⁵

2.70F. The seal of Uzza son of Baalhanan (Hebrew; provenience unknown).¹⁶ The script on the seal has been classified as Hebrew of the eighth century BCE.¹⁷ of YHWH (Yahweh). This form is usually anglicized as -iah at the end of a name, Jeho- at the beginning. The fact that this element is used so extensively, while no other deity's name is used in more than one or two percent of Israelite names, probably indicates, when combined with other evidence, that the vast majority of Israelites, particularly in the eighth-sixth centuries BCE, was exclusively Yahwistic. See Tigay 1986; Pike 1990.

⁵ Avigad and Sass 1997 #415; Davies 1991 100.508; Avigad 1978a:52-56.

⁶ The name Jerahmeel (Heb. Yerahme'el) means "May God have mercy."

⁷ Several individuals mentioned in the Bible and on West Semitic seals are designated as "the king's son" (see 1 Kgs 22:26 = 2 Chr 18:25; 2 Kgs 15:5; Jer 36:26; 38:6; 2 Chr 28:7; for other seal inscriptions containing the title see Barkay 1993:109-114; cf. 2.70G, below). It is debated whether the phrase means simply "offspring of the king" (either of the current king or his predecessor) or is the title of some office not necessarily connected with royal descent; the former view is more likely. See the discussion by Brin 1969:433-465; Yeivin 1954:160; de Vaux 1961:119-120; Rainey 1969; 1975; Fox 1997 chap. III, section A, 1 and below, n. 38.

⁸ Avigad and Sass 1997 #165; Davies 1991 100.024; Moscati 1951 67 #24.

⁹ The name Hananyahu means "YHWH has been gracious," while Azaryahu means "YHWH has helped."

¹⁰ Avigad and Sass 1997 #405; Davies 1991 100.149; Tufnell et al. 1953:347-348.

¹¹ The name Gedalyahu means "YHWH was (i.e., has shown himself) great."

¹² The title šāḥer "at ḥabaylū ([š]r [l] ḥbyl), known from the Bible and from inscriptions, cannot be defined precisely. It refers literally to the major domo of the royal palace, which was probably the original role of those who bore this title (see below, 2.70T). Eventually individuals bearing this title took on major state responsibilities and we find them active in political and diplomatic affairs as well (see particularly 2 Kgs 15:5; 18:17-18; 19:2-7; see also Gen 43:16, 19; 44:1, 4; 1 Kgs 4:6; 16:9; 18:3; 2 Kgs 10:5; 15:5; 18:18, 37; 19:2; Isa 22:15; 36:3; 37:2). See also Avigad 1953:137-152; 1979b:119-126 no. 1; de Vaux 1961:125, 129-131; Katzenstein 1960; Yeivin 1971; Layton 1990; Fox 1997 chap. III, section B, 1; for a possible Ug. parallel, see Good 1979. See COS 2.54 and 2.70T.

¹³ Avigad and Sass 1997 #29; Davies 1991 100.323; Avigad 1975.

¹⁴ The name Zecharyaw is the equivalent of Zecharyahu (Zachariah) and means "YHWH remembered," perhaps meaning that the Lord remembered Zecharyaw's parents and gave them this child. The form of the theophoric element, -yaw (anglicized as -io [Jo-a + the beginning of a name]) instead of -yahu, is more commonly found in inscriptions of north-Israelite provenience.

¹⁵ Dor was a Canaanite harbor town on the coastal plain between Caesaria and Haifa. Its king was defeated by Joshua (Josh 12:23), but it was apparently only controlled by Israel from the time of David and Solomon (1 Kgs 4:11) until it was captured by Assyria in the latter part of the eighth century. The seal implies that there was a sanctuary, perhaps of YHWH, in the city in the eighth century.

¹⁶ Avigad and Sass 1997 #297; Davies 1991 100.036; Düringer 1934:195 #36.

¹⁷ Avigad 1987:197.

(Belonging) to Uzza,¹⁸ son of Baalhanan¹⁹

2.70G. The seal of Maadanah the king's daughter (Hebrew; provenience unknown).²⁰ The inscription, written in the Hebrew script of the seventh century BCE, is one of about a dozen known seal inscriptions of Israelite women. Most are on seals, but at least one is in a seal impression stamped on a jar handle, showing that it was used functionally and not merely as jewelry. This raises the possibility that Israelite women enjoyed at least some of the rights enjoyed by men who owned seals, such as holding office and perhaps signing contracts and other documents (Avigad 1987:205-206; 1988:8). But, as in the case of "the king's son," it is not clear whether "the king's daughter" means simply "princess" or implies that Maadanah held public office.

(Belonging) to Maadanah²¹
the king's daughter

2.70H. The seal of Pelayahu son of Mattityahu, Overseer of the Corvée (Hebrew; provenience unknown).²² The inscriptions, on the front and back of the seal, are written in Hebrew script of the seventh century BCE. Pelayahu probably used side A of his seal for private purposes and side B for official ones.

Side A: (Belonging) to Pelayah-u²³ (son of)²⁴ Mattityahu²⁵

Side B:
(Belonging) to Pelayahu Over(seer of) the Corvée²⁶

2.70I. The seal of Nehemyahu son of Micayahu.²⁷ Both of these names are attested in the Bible (Neh 1:1 etc.; Judg 17:1 etc.).

(Belonging) to Nehemyahu son of Micayahu

2.70J. The seal of Yehoezer son of Yigdalyahu.²⁸ The patronymic recurs in Jer 35:4. For the owner's name cf. Yoezer in 1 Chr 12:7.

(Belonging) to Yehoezer son of Yigdalyahu

¹⁸ The name Uzza, a hypocoristicon meaning "(the deity so-and-so) is strong," is known from the Bible and other Northwest Semitic inscriptions.

¹⁹ The name Baalhanan, "Baal has been gracious," is also known from the Bible (a king of Edom, Gen 36:38-39; an official of David, 1 Chr 27:28); it is virtually synonymous with the Phoen./Carthaginian name Hannibal. The element baal is known in some names appearing in the Bible, the Samaria ostraca, and one or two other Heb. inscriptions; see, for example, Jerubbaal, Eshbaal, Meri(b)-baal, and Beeliada (Judg 6:32; 1 Chr 8:33, 34; 9:39, 40; 14:7); the Samaria ostraca clearly contain the names ²*bb*²*l* (SO #2:4), *b*²*c*²*p* (SO #1:7); *b*²*c*²*lmr* (SO #12:2-3), *b*²*c*²*l*²*zkr* (SO #37:3), and *mrb*²*l* (SO #2:7); for other possibly baalistic names in the Bible and inscriptions, see Tigay 1986:7-8, 65-66. It means "lord," and scholars debate its significance in Hebrew names. In Canaanite names and texts it refers to the Canaanite storm-god Hadad (see below, n. 49). Some think it has the same meaning in the Hebrew names. If that is the case, these names reflect the worship of Baal by some Israelites or foreigners living in Israel, but they do not show widespread worship of him because they constitute a minuscule percentage of all Israelite theophoric names (Tigay 1986; Pike 1990). Others believe that it does not refer to the Canaanite deity but functions as an epithet of YHWH, synonymous with ²*adon*, "Lord." The Hebrew names *Yehoba*²*al* (Avigad 1988:8) and ba-li-ya-a-ma (in the Murashu archives of the fifth century BCE Babylonia; see Coogan 1976:15, 69), both meaning "YHWH is Lord," indicate that *ba*²*al* was sometimes used as an epithet of YHWH (cf. also *Be*²*alyah*, borne by a contemporary of David in 1 Chr 12:6; the masoretic vocalization of *be*²*al*- indicates a perfect-tense verb, and the name must mean "YH(W)H rules"). Hos 2:18 (possibly from the approximate time and place of the Samaria ostraca) states this almost explicitly: "On that day ... you will call 'My Husband' (²*is*²*h*), and no more will you call Me 'My ba²*al*.'"

²⁰ Avigad and Sass 1997 #30; Davies 1991 100.781; its authenticity has been doubted, Naveh 1997:12; Avigad 1978c.

²¹ The previously unknown name Maadanah, derived from the same root as "Eden," means something like "luxury," "lubricity" (Greenfield 1984). See above COS 2.34, note 4.

²² Avigad and Sass 1997 #20; Davies 1991 100.782; Avigad 1980.

²³ The name Pelayahu, "YHWH is wondrous" or "YHWH has acted wondrously," appears in its short form Pelaiah in Neh 8:7; 10:11.

²⁴ On side A the word ben, "son of," is omitted before the patronym, a common practice in Heb. seal inscriptions.

²⁵ The name Mattityahu (rendered as Mattathias in Greek and Matthew in English) means "Gift of YHWH." It appears in 1 Chr 15:18, 21; 25:3, 21, and in the short form Mattithiah in 1 Chr 9:31; 16:5; Ezra 10:43; Neh 8:4.

²⁶ The title "Over(seer of) the Corvée" is known from the Bible, where it is borne by Adoram/Adoniram son of Abda, Overseer of the Corvée in the days of David, Solomon, and Rehoboam (2 Sam 20:24; 1 Kgs 4:6; 5:28). Opposition to the corvée was the principal reason why northern Israel seceded from Judah, and Adoram/Adoniram was stoned to death by north Israelites at the time of the secession (1 Kgs 12:1-18). The continuation of the corvée into late seventh century Judah seems implied by Jeremiah's critique of Jehoiakim for forcing fellow Israelites to build his palace with no pay (Jer 22:13), but this seal is the only explicit evidence of the practice in that period.

²⁷ Avigad and Sass 1997 #265; Davies 1991 100.030.

²⁸ Avigad and Sass 1997 #1073; Davies 1991 100.421.

2.70K. The seal of Zephanyah (son of) Mattanyah.²⁹ Here the divine name is reduced to yh (usually anglicized as -lah), its least common abbreviation in pre-exilic documents, becoming usual later.

(Belonging to Zephanyah (son of) Mattanyah)

2.70L. The seal of Yeho³adan daughter of Uriyahu.³⁰ That women could own seals in their own right — although only a few out of the total — is noted above, see 2.70G.

(Belonging) to Yeho³adan daughter of Uriyahu

2.70M. The seal of Abigail wife of Asayahu.³¹ Another seal belonging to a woman.

(Belonging) to Abigail wife of Asayahu

2.70N. The seal of Hanan son of Hilqiyahu, the priest.³² As a Hilqiah was High Priest in the time of Josiah (2 Kgs 22:4 etc.), this seal could have belonged to his son.

(Belonging) to Hanan son of Hilqiyahu, the priest

2.70O. The bulla of X son of Zakkur.³³ The bulla is incomplete, so the owner's name is unknown.

(Belonging) to [X] son of Zakkur, the physician³⁴

2.70P. The bullae of Elyaqim squire of Yawkin.³⁵ When first found, imprints of this seal on jars were thought to belong to a servant of Jehoiachin, king of Judah, taken to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar in 597 BCE (2 Kgs 24). But excavations at Lachish demonstrated that this type of jar belonged to the level destroyed by Sennacherib in 701 BCE, implying that the master lived earlier. The word 'squire' (na^car) applies to anyone who is not an independent citizen, yet not a slave, from a child (1 Sam 1:22) to a responsible man (2 Sam 9:9) as here.

(Belonging) to Elyaqim squire³⁶ of Yawkin

2.70Q. Seals of "servants" (ministers) of unnamed kings. At least eleven seals or impressions have been found with this title, denoting a certain position or rank, rather than simply 'slave' of the king.³⁷ Other seals belonged to sons of unnamed kings.³⁸

(Belonging) to Obadyahu, "servant" (i.e. minister) of the king³⁹

2.70R. Seals of "servants" (ministers) of named kings. The names of the masters can all be identified with eighth century kings of Israel and Judah; no other personal names occur after 'bd. For the last, note the existence of Eliakim, son of Hilqiah, in Hezekiah's court (2 Kgs 18:18 etc.), perhaps this seal owner's brother.⁴⁰

(Belonging) to Shema, servant of Jeroboam

(Belonging) to Abiyaw servant of Uzziyahu

(Belonging) to Shebanyahu servant of Uzziyahu

(Belonging) to Ushna servant of Ahaz

(Belonging) to Yehozarah son of Hilqiyahu servant of Hizqiyahu

2.70S. The seal of Miqneyahu servant of Yahweh.⁴¹ The unique title ('bd yhw^h) may indicate a high official in the temple, Cross 1983:62-63, argued for a singer, cf. Ps 135:1 etc.

(Belonging) to Miqneyahu servant of Yahweh

2.70T. The bulla of Adoniyahu, palace steward ('šr 'l hbyt).⁴² The title, literally 'who is over the house' is explained as 'in charge of the palace' by comparing 2 Kgs 15:5 with 2 Chr 26:21. Cf. note 12 above.

(Belonging) to Adoniyahu, "over(seer of) the (royal) house" (i.e. palace steward)⁴³

²⁹ Avigad and Sass 1997 #340; Davies 1991 100.716.

³⁰ Avigad and Sass 1997 #38; Davies 1991 100.855.

³¹ Avigad and Sass 1997 #31; Davies 1991 100.062.

³² Avigad and Sass 1997 #28; Davies 1991 100.734.

³³ Avigad and Sass 1997 #420; Davies 1991 100.804.

³⁴ Gen 50:2; 2 Chr 16:12.

³⁵ Avigad and Sass 1997 #663; Davies 1991 100.108, 277, 486. See Ussishkin 1976.

³⁶ Gen 22:3; Exod 24:5; Judg 9:54; Jer 1:6.

³⁷ Avigad and Sass 1997 #9; Davies 1991 100.070.

³⁸ See Davies 1991 100.072, 110, 209, 252, 506, 507, 508, 719, 760, 784, and one daughter, 781; Avigad and Sass 1997:467; and #30.

³⁹ 1 Kgs 18:3 etc.

⁴⁰ Avigad and Sass 1997 #2, 4, 3, 5, 407; Davies 1991 100.068, 065, 067, 141, 321.

⁴¹ Avigad and Sass 1997 #27; Davies 1991 100.272.

⁴² Avigad and Sass 1997 #404; Davies 1991 100.501, 502. See also COS 2.54.

⁴³ 2 Kgs 18:18; 19:2; Isa 22:15.

2.70U. Two bullae of the governor of the city (sr h^cyr).⁴⁴ This title appears beneath figures cut in imitation of Assyrian style.

Governor of the city⁴⁵

2.70V. The bulla of Eltolad.⁴⁶ This bulla indicates a fiscal process otherwise unrecorded. If the year is a regnal year, then it can only be that of Josiah of Judah, in the south of whose realm the town of Eltolad (Josh 15:30; 19:4) or Tolad (1 Chr 4:29) lay, i.e. 613 BCE.

In year 26, Eltolad, belonging to the king

AMMONITE (2.71)

Many seals inscribed with the first letters of the alphabet — from four to eight — are regarded as Ammonite; they are probably practice pieces; see Avigad and Sass 1997:366-371; Hestrin and Dayagi-Mendels 1979 ## 127, 129.

The seal impression of Milkom-or, minister of Baalyasha (Ammonite).⁴⁷ This seal was discovered in excavations at Tell el-^cUmeiri in Jordan.

(Belonging) to Milkom-or⁴⁸

"servant" (minister) of Baalyasha⁴⁹

MOABITE (2.72)

The seal of Kemosham son of Kemoshel the scribe (Moabite; provenience unknown).⁵⁰ This seal is in the Moabite script of the eighth-seventh centuries BCE.⁵¹

(Belonging) to Kemosham⁵²

(son of) Kemoshel⁵³

the scribe

EDOMITE (2.73)

The bulla of Qawsgabar, king of Edom (Edomite).⁵⁴ This is one of the few known Edomite seal inscriptions (see Herr 1978:161-169). It was found at Umm el-Biyara in Jordan, near Petra.

(Belonging) to Qawsg[abar]⁵⁵

King of E[dom]

⁴⁴ Avigad and Sass 1997 #402; Bordreuil 1992:192; Davies 1991 100.402, 510.

⁴⁵ Judg 9:30; 1 Kgs 22:26; 2 Kgs 23:8; 2 Chr 34:8.

⁴⁶ See Avigad and Sass 1997 #421; Bordreuil 1992:193.

⁴⁷ Avigad and Sass 1997 #860; Herr 1985.

⁴⁸ The name Milkom-or means "Milkom is light." According to the Bible, Milkom was the national god of the Ammonites (1 Kgs 11:5, 33; 2 Kgs 23:13). His name is mentioned in one or two Ammonite inscriptions (Jackson 1983:10, 13, 74) but, oddly, rarely in Ammonite personal names. There are Milkomit (if the name is complete) in an Ammonite inscription from Tell el-Mazar, Jordan (Yassine and Teixidor 1986:48-49), and the seal inscription of one Tanak-^cel, where the patronym reads either "(son of) Bodmilkom (b^dmlkm)" or, less likely, "son of Milkom (br mlkm)" (CIS 2:94); see Avigad 1965:225 n. 12; 1985:5 n. 25; cf. Cross 1973:128 n. 6. Most often, ^cel, "god," serves as the theophoric element, which may suggest that El was the chief god of the Ammonites and that Milkom was his title, meaning something like "the King."

⁴⁹ The name Baalyasha (the name could also be read as Baalisha, comparable to Hebrew Elisha) means "the Lord (baal) has saved (yasha^c)" or "the Lord is salvation (yeshu^c)," referring either to the Canaanite storm god or some other deity. Since the title "minister" (b^d, lit. "servant") commonly refers to the minister of a king in seal inscriptions, it is likely that Baalyasha/Baalisha was a king. Some think him identical with Baalis, king of the Ammonites ca. 586 BCE according to Jer 40:14 (the script is also compatible with the early sixth century). This seems possible, since the theophoric element baal is rare in Ammonite names and Baalis is the only other definite example. In this view Baalis, a name admittedly hard to explain, is an error for Baalyasha or Baalisha (the final ^cayin may be reflected in the Septuagint of Jer 40:14, which renders Baalis as Bel(e)isa; see Herr 1985:172). However the Ug. names b^cls and Baalasi indicate that Baalis is probably a name in its own right (Ahluv 1992:241; see Gröndahl 1967:102, 115, 116).

⁵⁰ Avigad and Sass 1997 #1010; Hestrin and Dayagi-Mendels 1979 #2.

⁵¹ Avigad 1970:289; Herr 1978:156-157.

⁵² Kemosham means "Kemosh is a kinsman." Kemosh was the Moabite national deity, known from the Bible and Moabite inscriptions. See Num 21:29; Judg 11:24; 1 Kgs 11:7, 33; 2 Kgs 23:13; Jer 48:7, 13, 46. And also COS 2.23; Reed and Winnet 1963; Avigad and Sass 1997:373, 380-382.

⁵³ The name means "Kemosh is god."

⁵⁴ Avigad and Sass 1997 #1048; Bennett 1966:399-401.

⁵⁵ The name is restored on the basis of inscriptions of the Assyrian kings Esarhaddon (680-669 BCE) and Ashurbanipal (668-627 BCE) that mention Qawsgabri King of Edom (ANET 291, 294), almost certainly the same individual. The name means something like "Qaws is mighty" or "Qaws has prevailed" (on gabri see Noth 1928:190). Qaws was the Edomite deity, known from the postexilic name Barqos (Ezra 2:53 = Neh 7:55) and extrabiblical sources; see Vriezen 1965; Herr 1978:162, 164-165; Naveh 1975 ##1, 10, 20-21, 32-33, 43.

PHOENICIAN (2.74)

The seal of Yahzibaal (probably Phoenician; provenience unknown).⁵⁶ The script fits the ninth-eighth century.

(Belonging to) Yahzibaal⁵⁷

PHILISTINE (2.75)

The seal of Abd-Ililb son of Shabeath, minister of Mittit son of Zidqa (Philistine; provenience unknown).⁵⁸ Mittit and his father Zidqa must be Mitinti II and Zidqa, the kings of Ashkelon mentioned in Assyrian inscriptions. Zidqa and his family were exiled to Assyria when Sennacherib conquered Ashkelon in 701 BCE, and Mitinti II paid tribute to Esarhaddon in 677 and to Ashurbanipal in 667.⁵⁹

(Belonging) to Abd-Ililb⁶⁰

son of Shabeath⁶¹

"servant" (i.e. minister) of Mittit⁶² son of Zidqa⁶³

EARLY ARAMAIC (2.76)

The seal of Hadadezer (Aramaic).⁶⁴ This seal, found at Saqqarah, Egypt, is inscribed in the Old Aramaic script and orthography of ca. the eighth century BCE.

(Belonging) to Hadadezer⁶⁵

ROYAL JUDAEAN SEAL IMPRESSIONS (2.77)

Over 1700 royal seal impressions, stamped on jar handles from at least 65 sites, are known.⁶⁶ With few exceptions, each impression contains the word lamelekh (lmlk), "(Belonging, or pertaining) to the king," on the top line, a four-winged scarab or a two-winged symbol (possibly the sun-disc) in the middle, and on the bottom line one of four place names: Hebron and Ziph in Judah, Sochoh in the Shephelah, and an otherwise unknown place whose name is spelled mmst.⁶⁷ Such impressions have been found at most of the excavated sites in Judah, particularly Lachish, Jerusalem, and Ramat Rahel, as well as at Tell en-Nasbeh, Gibeon, Gezer, Beth Shemesh, Timnah, and elsewhere, including border sites in northern Israel and Philistia (apart from Arad, they have been found only rarely in the Negev). These impressions, mostly found in public buildings, are from the reign of Hezekiah at the end of the eighth century BCE.⁶⁸ Almost all of the "lamelekh" jars were probably manufactured and stamped at a single central location: neutron activation analysis of typical jars showed that all were made of the same clay, from the Shephelah, possibly ⁵⁶ Avigad and Sass 1997 #1143; Hestrin and Dayagi-Mendels 1979 #118; Avigad 1968:49.

⁵⁷ The name Yahzibaal, "May Baal see," meaning "May Baal look favorably upon" the bearer of the name, is similar to the Biblical names Yahziel and Yahzeyah, "May God/YH(WH) see" (Ezra 8:5; 10:15; 1 Chr 12:4; 16:6; 23:19; 24:23; 2 Chr 20:14). The theophoric element ba'al, "Lord, Master," referring particularly to the storm-god, is very common in Phoenician and other Canaanite names. See Benz 1972:288-290; Gröndahl 1967:114-117.

⁵⁸ Avigad and Sass 1997 #1066; Ahituv 1992:212. Main discussion by Bergman 1936:224-226; Naveh 1985:9, 18.

⁵⁹ ANET 287a, 291bc, 294b.

⁶⁰ The name Abd-Ililb is comparable to Biblical Abdiel, Obadiah, etc., and must mean "Servant of the deity Ililb (ʾilʾb). The word ʾilʾb is known from Ug. and Akk. texts, where it means "god of the father," apparently something like an ancestral spirit. See UT Aqht i.27, 45; ii.16 (COS 1.103 and n. 6); UT 17:14; 44:3, 5; 72:1; 2004:5; Nougayrol et al. 1968:44 (no. 18 line 1), 45-46; Roberts 1972:secs. 27-28; Lambert 1981; cf. Old Akk. Ilaba, mentioned in UET 1, 275 ii.28 (cited in CAD G 25c); Albright 1968:141-142.

⁶¹ Shabeath seems to be a variant of the name Sheba, known from the Bible and inscriptions (2 Sam 20:1, etc.; 1 Chr 5:13; SO #2:6; Aharoni 1975 #38:4; Avigad and Sass 1997 #356; cf. Shībʿah[?] in Cowley AP #82:2; Bathsheba in 2 Sam 11:3, etc.; Yehosheba in 2 Kgs 11:2 = Yehoshabeath in 2 Chr 22:11; and Elisheba in Exod 6:23 etc., rendered Elisabeth [= Elishabeath] in the Septuagint). The underlying root š-b-ʿ resembles the Heb. root(s) meaning "seven" and "swear," but the meaning of the names containing this element is uncertain.

⁶² Mittit, "gift" (cf. Heb. matat, 1 Kgs 13:7; Prov 25:14) is a hypocoristic of a name meaning "gift of the deity so-and-so," comparable to Heb. Mattiyahu (above, 2.70H). Cf. Hebrew Mattathah (Ezra 10:33) and Mattan (2 Kgs 11:8, etc.). The vocalization Mittit is not certain; it is based on the forms found in Assyrian inscriptions. See Benz 1972:356.

⁶³ Zidqa (šidqa) is a hypocoristic of a name meaning "The deity so-and-so is my vindicator," comparable to Heb. Zedekiah (šidqiyahuf). "YHWH is my vindicator" (2 Kgs 24:17, etc.; cf. Jer 23:6; Ps 4:2).

⁶⁴ Avigad and Sass 1997 #785; CIS 2:124; Galland 1941 no. 103; Herr 1978 Aram. #1.

⁶⁵ Hadadezer, "Hadad is (my) help," is a typical Aram. name. Essentially same name appears on an Aram. seal in the form hdʿdr (CIS 2:77; Herr 1978 Aram. #73). Hadad, the storm god, was head of the Aramean pantheon. See Greenfield 1994:54-61. The same name was held by Hadadezer son of Rehob, King of Aram Zobah, defeated by David (2 Sam 8:3, 5; 10:16 [= 1 Chr 18:3, 5; 19:16], and by the king of Damascus in the days of Ahab (873-852 BCE) and Shalmaneser III (858-824 BCE). The name of the latter Hadadezer is represented in cuneiform as Adad-idri. See COS 2.113A, note 23.

⁶⁶ Vaughan 1996:219, 231-251; Fox 1997 chap. IV, section A, 2.

⁶⁷ Samples in Hestrin et al. 1973:95-99; Ahituv 1992:139-140.

⁶⁸ Ussishkin 1976, 1977, 1979.

in the same workshop;⁶⁹ all the impressions were made from about twenty seals;⁷⁰ and some jars may have been stamped with a second seal carrying certain personal names, identical impressions of which appear on jars from several sites.⁷¹

The exact significance of the iconography and inscriptions on these impressions is uncertain. The winged figures may be royal symbols, perhaps symbolizing Judean independence and indicating the type or grade of the contents of the jars to which they were affixed. lamelekh probably means that the jars and their contents belong to the king. There are various theories about the significance of the place names. They may have been agricultural regions in which the royal estates were located (the additional seal impressions with personal names, stamped on some of the jars, may have belonged to government officials who had been given grants of crown land in those regions). Other possibilities are that they were district centers where products of royal estates, such as wine and oil, were gathered for marketing; that they refer to storage cities where food was kept in royal warehouses or where taxes in kind were collected; or that they were military garrisons or administrative centers to which, or from which, supplies were sent for royal bureaucrats and the Judean army, especially while Hezekiah was preparing to rebel against Assyria. The latter use may be reflected in the fact that most of these jars were found in destruction levels caused by the retaliatory Assyrian invasion of 701 BCE.⁷²

PERSIAN PERIOD (2.78)

2.78A. Seals and seal impressions of the Persian province of Yehud (Aramaic)⁷³

The one-word inscription Yehud, the name of the Persian province of Judah (Ezra 5:8), is inscribed on a seal and stamped on several hundred jar handles from various Persian-period sites in Judah and on several bullae from an unknown site (there are also coins similarly inscribed). The bullae gave official sanction to the documents to which they were affixed, and the stamped jar handles indicated that the contents of the jar belonged to the government, perhaps as taxes in kind.

2.78B. The bulla of Elnathan the Governor (Aramaic; provenience unknown).⁷⁴ For the seal of Elnathan's "maidservant," see below, 2.78C.

(Belonging) to Elnathan⁷⁵
the Governor⁷⁶

2.78C. The seal of Shelomit, "maidservant" of Elnathan the Governor (Hebrew in Aramaic script; provenience unknown).⁷⁷

(Belonging) to Shelomit.⁷⁸ Maidservant⁷⁹ of El <na>- than the Gove[rnor]

⁶⁹ Mommsen, Perlman, and Yellin 1984.

⁷⁰ Mazar 1990:455.

⁷¹ Avigad 1979a:37.

⁷² See Avigad 1979a:37; Mazar 1990:455-458; Rainey 1982; Na'aman 1979; 1986; Fox 1997 chap. IV, section A, 2.

⁷³ Avigad 1976:3-4, 21-23. In these inscriptions, Yehud is spelled both fully (yhwḏ) and defectively (yhd).

⁷⁴ Davies 1991 106.017; Avigad 1976:5-7.

⁷⁵ The name Elnathan ("God has given [this child to his parents])" is known from the Bible; in the Persian period it was borne by two or three of Ezra's associates (Ezra 8:16).

⁷⁶ Aram. *phw*², apparently a variant of *pht*², equivalent to Heb. hphh; see Avigad 1976:6; cf. Avigad and Sass 1997:33 n. 45 (contrast the view of Greenfield and Naveh cited there). This was the title of provincial governors in the western part of the Persian empire, including Sheshbazzar, Zerubbabel, and Nehemiah who were governors of Judah (Hag 1:1; Ezra 5:14; Neh 5:14; 12:26). Sanballat, Governor of Samaria (below, COS 2.78D), and Bagohi, Governor of Yehud, mentioned in an Aram. papyrus from Elephantine (Cowley AP 30:1; ANET 492). See also the seals of an unnamed governor of Yehud and two other named governors (Avigad 1976:22-23).

⁷⁷ Davies 1991 106.018; Avigad 1976:11-13.

⁷⁸ The name Shelomit is related to šalom, "peace," "wellbeing," and šalem, "well," "unimpaired," and expresses a wish that its bearer will enjoy these blessings. It is known from the Bible and elsewhere as a name of both men and women (Lev 24:11; 1 Chr 23:18; etc.), including the daughter of Zerubbabel, Governor of Judah toward the end of the sixth century BCE (1 Chr 3:19); the owner of this seal could be the same Shelomit (Meyers and Meyers 1987:12-13).

⁷⁹ The significance of the description of Shelomit as "maidservant" is uncertain. Seals of two Ammonite "maidservants" are also known (Hestrin and Dayagi-Mendels 1979 #28, 29). These women were hardly menials, since they would then have had no need to own seals. At the very least, they must have been secondary wives of prominent men, like the maidservant of the overseer of the palace, whose burial alongside the overseer is noted in the latter's tomb inscription from Siloam village (Avigad 1953; Hestrin et al. 1973 #24; COS 2.54). Conceivably, "maid-servant" is the feminine equivalent of ʿebed, the "minister" of a king, and is used in some of these cases for female ministers of high officials. In any case, Shelomit did hold an important office in the Governor's administration. This is shown by the official character of the collection in which it was found: the collection included an official Yehud provincial seal and several Yehud bullae (2.78A), a bulla of the governor (2.78B), bullae containing the name of the province and other officials, and ten bullae of a scribe, as well as forty-four bullae of six other individuals; the only personal seal in the collection was that of Shelomit, suggesting that she was in charge of the collection and used both the provincial seal and

2.78D. The bulla of the son of Sanballat, Governor of Samaria (Hebrew).⁸⁰ This bulla was attached to an Aramaic deed of sale for a vineyard, written on papyrus, found at Wadi Daliyeh, north of Jericho. It probably dates from the reign of Artaxerxes III (358-338 BCE).

(Belonging) to [...]iah son of [San-] ballat,⁸¹ Governor of Samar[ia]

her own for official purposes. It is unclear whether her title "maidservant" refers to her official position or simply to her marital status, and whether she owed her position to that status (Avigad 1976:11-13, 30-32; see also Avigad and Sass 1997:33 n. 45).

⁸⁰ Davies 1991 100.408; Hestrin et al. 1973 #148; Ahituv 1992:207-208; Cross 1971:47 and figs. 34-35; Naveh, 1982:115.

⁸¹ Sanballat, spelled sn'blt in extrabiblical documents (Cross 1971:47 n. 4; Cowley AP 30:29), is a Babylonian name, originally Sin-uballit, meaning "Sin (the moon god) gave life." "Sanballat" is the vocalization found in the Bible. The biblical Sanballat was the governor of Samaria who was Nehemiah's contemporary and opponent (Neh 2:10, 19; 3:33; 4:1; 6:1-14); he is also mentioned in the Elephantine papyri (Cowley AP 30:29). The document accompanying this bulla bears a date that is too late for this to be the Biblical Sanballat; he is probably his descendant (see Cross 1966:201-206). The Babylonian name does not necessarily imply that either Sanballat was a foreigner. Such names were common among Jews in the Persian period, and both of these men gave their sons Yahwistic names: those of Nehemiah's contemporary were named Delaiah and Shelemiah (Cowley AP 30:29), and the son of Sanballat named on this seal also had a Yahwistic name. For further discussion see Cross 1966; Williamson 1992.

REFERENCES

Texts and Translations: Avigad and Sass 1997; Davies 1991; Ahituv 1992; Avigad 1979b; 1986; Barkay 1986; 1993; Bordreuil 1992; Cross 1971; 1973; 1983; Deutsch and Heltzer 1994; Herr 1978; 1985; Hestrin, R. et al. 1973; Hestrin and Dayagi-Mendels 1979; Sass 1993; Sass and Uehlinger 1993; Shiloh 1986; Ussishkin 1976; 1977; Yassine and Teixidor 1986.

THE SEAL OF ʿAŠAYĀHŪ (2.79)

Michael Heltzer

The Hebrew seal is dated paleographically to the second half of the 7th century BCE.¹

(Belonging) to ʿAšayāhū
"servant" (minister) of the king

It is most probable that this ʿAšayāhū of the seal is identical with "Ašayā, servant of the king," mentioned in 2 Kings 22:12, 14 and 2 Chronicles 34:20. He appears as one of the team, sent by king Josiah (Yōšiyāhū) in the year 622 to the temple in connection with the finding of the book, which is by most scholars identified with Deuteronomy. Among the other persons of the team involved in this event was a Ḥilqiyāhū, the High Priest. There is a seal that reads: ⁽¹⁾lhnn b ⁽²⁾n ḥlqyhw ⁽³⁾hklm "Belonging to Ḥanan son of Ḥilqiyāhū, the priest."² There is also a seal impression dated ca. 600 BCE which reads: ⁽¹⁾c zryhw ⁽²⁾bn ḥlqyhw "c Azaryāhū, son of Ḥilqiyāhū."³ Moreover there are additional persons who are mentioned in the 2 Kings 22 and 2 Chronicles 34 whose seals or whose fathers' seals are known.⁴

¹ Deutsch and Heltzer 1994:49-51.

² Elayi 1987:54-56; 1992:680-685; above, COS 2.70N.

³ Shiloh 1986: No. 27.

⁴ Schneider 1991:26-33.

REFERENCES

Deutsch and Heltzer 1994; Elayi 1987; 1992; Shiloh 1986; Schneider 1991.

2. STAMPS

STAMPS (2.80)

Michael Heltzer

There are more than one hundred stamps on identical handles, and as proved by the examinations of D. Ussishkin in Lachish, they appear on one or two of the four handles where the others had the lmk stamps (COS 2.77). These stamps belonged to more than 30 persons, who were the officials responsible for the standard measures of the jars.¹ The following are a few examples.

Yhwhyl Šhr	Yehoḥayil (son of) Šaḥar
lNhm Hšlyhw	(Belonging) to Naḥum (son of) Hiššilyāhū
Šbnyhw ʿzryhw	Šebanyāhū (son of) ʿAzaryāhū

No seal which was used for stamping the handles before firing the jar was ever found.²

¹ See Garfinkel 1985:105-118.

² There is now known a stamped seal impression on a jar-handle clearly showing that the seal was cut from timber.

REFERENCES

Ussishkin 1977; Garfinkel 1985.

This page intentionally left blank

E. WEIGHT INSCRIPTIONS

This page intentionally left blank

HEBREW WEIGHT INSCRIPTIONS (2.81)

Alan Millard

Four hundred or more inscribed stone weights have been found, mostly in the area of Judah and made in the eighth and seventh centuries BCE. They are flat-based dome-shaped stones, with values engraved on the top. (Two weights have their values marked in ink which suggests the numerous uninscribed stones of the same type may have had their values noted in the same way.) The majority bear a sign like a loop, believed to denote the shekel, followed by a numeral in a system derived from Egyptian hieratic. A series of smaller weights bear single words and yet smaller ones numerical signs alone.

Shekel weights occur with the values 1, 2, 4, 8, 12, 16, 24, 40, the shekel being about 11.33 grams.

Fractions of the shekel named are nsp, 5/6, pym, 2/3 and bq^c, 1/2, their values being determined metrologically.

Discovery of the pym weights elucidated an obscure phrase in 1 Sam 13:21, which can now be rendered "the charge was two thirds of a shekel for ploughshares and mattocks ..."

The bq^c occurs once in the Bible as the value of the nose-ring given to Rebekah by Eliezer, Gen 24:22.

The very small weights, marked 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, are believed to be multiples of the gerá, 1/20th of a shekel, see Exod 30:13; Lev 27:25, although a system of 24 gerás to the shekel fits the metrology better. The slightly heavier "shekel of the sanctuary" may be the special standard the texts specify.

Variation in weight between stones of the same value is rarely more than 5%, except in the very small ones. The cheating often condemned lay in using two sets of weights, heavy for buying and light for selling; see Deut 25:13; Prov 20:10, 23; Mic 6:11.

REFERENCES

Kletter 1991; 1998.

This page intentionally left blank

F. "FUNCTIONAL" INSCRIPTIONS

This page intentionally left blank

1. TREATIES

THE INSCRIPTIONS OF BAR-GA²YAH AND MATI^cEL FROM SEFIRE (2.82)

Joseph A. Fitzmyer, S.J.

These inscriptions of Sefire (once called Sujin) were discovered by S. Ronzevalle in 1930 in a village southeast of Aleppo. Two of them became the property of the Damascus Museum in 1948. The third stele was acquired by the Beirut Museum in 1956. The three steles are related not only by their provenience, but also by their contents, script, and language. They are inscribed in Old Aramaic and date from the mid-eighth century, sometime prior to 740 BCE, the year in which Tiglath-pileser III conquered Arpad and made it part of the Assyrian empire.

STELE I

What remains of this inscription is engraved on three sides of a basalt stone, 51.5 inches high, which was cut subsequently to its engraving so that it lacks several letters at the end of the lines of face A and at the beginning of the lines of face B. The text that was engraved on face D is completed lost today. Also missing are several lines in the middle of the faces that are otherwise preserved.

Face A

The title, introducing the contracting parties
(lines 1-6a)

The treaty^a of Bar-ga²yah,¹ king of KTK,² with Mati^cel,³ the son of ^cAttarsamak,⁴ the king [of Arpad; and the treaty of the sons of Bar-ga²yah with the sons of Mati^cel; and the treaty of the grandsons of Bar-ga²yah and] his [offspring] with the offspring of Mati^cel, the son of ^cAttarsamak, the king of Arpad; and the treaty of KTK with [the treaty of] Arpad; and the treaty of the lords of KTK with the treaty of the lords of Arpad; and the treaty of Ha[burju]⁵ with all Aram, and with Mišr⁶ and with his sons who will come after [him], and [with the kings of] all Upper-Aram and Lower-Aram and with all who enter the royal palace.

The gods who are witnesses to this treaty (lines 6b-14a)

And the st[ele with t]his [inscription] they have set

a Isa 33:8
(read ^cdyw;
cf. 1QIsa^a 27:8)

b Gen 15:18;
Jer 34:18

c Gen 14:13-19

d Deut 4:26;
30:19; 31:28

e Gen 31:50

f 2Kgs 19:16;
Isa 37:17

up (as) this treaty. Now (it is) this treaty which Bar-ga²[yah] has concluded⁷ b [in the presence of Assur] and Mullesh⁸ in the presence of Marduk and Zarpanit, in the presence of Nabu and T[ashmet, in the presence of Ir and Nus]k, in the presence of Nergal and Laš, in the presence of Shamash and Nur, in the presence of S[in and Nikkal, in the presence of Nikkar and Kadi²ah, in the presence of all the gods of Raḥbah and Adam(?)⁹ [... in the presence of Hadad of A]llep[po], in the presence of Sibitti, in the presence of El and ^cElyan,¹⁰ in the presence of Hea[ven and Earth,^d in the presence of (the) A]bbyss and (the) Springs, and in the presence of Day and Night — all the god[s of KTK and the gods of Ar]pad (are) witnesses (to it).^e Open your eyes, (O gods!), to gaze upon the treaty of Bar-ga²yah [with Mati^cel, the king of Arpad].

Curses against Mati^cel, if he violates the treaty
(lines 14b-35a)

Now if Mati^cel, the son of ^cAttarsamak, the kin[g

¹ The name, meaning "son of majesty," may be a title, possibly for Šamši-ilu, the turtanu of northern Syria; see: Lemaire and Durand 1984:3-58.

² The place is still not identified with certainty. For recent discussion of it, see: Lemaire and Durand (ibid.); Fitzmyer 1995:167-174.

³ Called Mati^citu in related Akk. treaties.

⁴ Called Ataršumki in related Akk. treaties.

⁵ Instead of the name Hbwrw, one could rather read h[ab]r, "federation, union." So Dupont-Sommer, who supplied [ʔrrr]w, "of Urartu," a restoration that has created many historical problems and is unlikely.

⁶ Dupont-Sommer (1960:18) originally translated this last phrase, "et avec <le roi de> Mušru," understanding msr as the name of a land. On the problems that this creates, see Garelli 1957:1469-1470; 1971. Others have interpreted msr as the name of a person. So Lipiński 1975a:25.

⁷ Lit., "has cut" (as in I A 40). Cf. Heb. kārat berit (Gen 15:18; Jer 34:18).

⁸ šr, pronounced in Assyrian fashion "Assur," is restored with certainty as the consort of mīš, which represents the Neo-Assyrian form Mullissu (< Mullitu) or Ninlil. See Barré 1985.

⁹ Interpreted as in I A 35.

¹⁰ Here treated apparently as two gods; cf. Gen 14:18-19.

of Arpad], should prove unfaithful [to Bar-ga²yah, the king of KTK, and if the offspring of Mati^cel should prove unfaithful [to the offspring of Bar-ga²yah ... [and if the Benê-Jush¹¹ should be unfaithful ...] [from YM[...]] ... and should seven rams cover] a ewe, may she not conceive; and should seven nurses] anoint [their breasts and] nurse a young boy, may he not have his fill; and should seven mares suckle a colt, may it not be sa[te]d; and should seven] cows give suck to a calf, may it not have its fill; and should seven ewes suckle a lamb, [may it not be sa]te]d; and should seven hens(?) go looking for food, may they not kill(?) (anything)!¹² And if Mati^cel] should be unfaithful <to Bar-ga²yah> [and to] his son and to his offspring, may his kingdom become like a kingdom of sand, a kingdom of sand, as long as Assur rules! (And) [may Ha]dad [pour (over it) every sort of evil (which exists) on earth and in heaven and every sort of trouble; and may he shower upon Arpad [ha]it-[stones]]!¹⁴ For seven years may the locust devour (Arpad), and for seven years may the worm eat, and for seven [years may] TWY come up upon the face of its land! May the grass not come forth so that no green may be seen; and may its vegetation not be [seen]! Nor may the sound of the lyre be heard in Arpad; but among its people (let there rather be) the din of affliction and the noi[se of crying and lamentation]! May the gods send every sort of devourer against Arpad and against its people! [May the mouth of a snake [eat], the mouth of a scorpion, the mouth of a bear(?), the mouth of a panther. And may a moth and a louse and a [... become] to it a serpent's throat!¹³ May its vegetation be destroyed unto desolation! And may Arpad become a mound to [house the desert animal],¹⁴ the gazelle and the fox and the hare and the wild-cat and the owl and the [] and the magpie! May [this] ci[ty] not be mentioned (any more), [nor] MDR² nor MRBH nor MZH nor MNLH nor Sharun nor Tu²im nor Bethel nor BYNN nor [... nor Ar]neh nor Hazaz nor Adam!¹⁵

Curses with accompanying rites (lines 35b-42)

Just as this wax is burned by fire, so may Arpad be burned and [her gr]eat [daughter-cities]! May Hadad sow in them salt¹⁶ and weeds(?), and may it not be mentioned (again)! This GNB² and [] (are) Mati^cel; it is his person. Just as this wax is burned by fire, so may Mati^cel be burned by fi]re!¹⁶ Just as (this) bow and these arrows are z Lev 26:26

h Exod 10:4-5; Ps 105:32, 34

i Deut 28:38-42

j Ezek 26:13

k Zeph 1:10

l Isa 13:21

m Judg 9:45; Deut 29:22

n Ps 68:3

o Hos 1:5

p Jer 39:7

q Jer 34:18; Gen 15:10

r Jer 13:26-27

s 2 Kgs 18:28

t Ps 25:10; 119:2

u 2 Kgs 23:21

v Gen 37:22; Exod 22:7, 10 broken, so may Inurta and Hadad break [the bow of Mati^cel],¹⁶ and the bow of his nobles! And just as the man of wax is blinded, so may Mati^cel be blinded!¹⁷ [Just as] this calf is cut in two, so may Mati^cel be cut in two, and may his nobles be cut in two!¹⁸ [And just as] a [har]lot is stripped naked,¹⁹ so may the wives of Mati^cel be stripped naked, and the wives of his offspring, and the wives of [his] nobles! And just as this wax woman is taken] and one strikes her on the face, so may the [wives of Mati^cel] be taken [and]

Face B

The sacred character of the treaty (lines 1-15?)

[The treaty of Bar-ga²yah, king of KTK, with Mati^cel, son of Attarsamak, the king of Ar]pad; and the treaty of the son of Bar-ga²yah with the sons of Mati^cel; and the treaty of the [grandsons of Bar-ga²yah with the offspring of Mati^cel and with the offspring of any king who [will come up and rule] in his place, and with the Benê-Gush and with Bêt-SLL and with [all] Ar]am;¹⁶ and the treaty of KTK with the treaty of Arpad; and the treaty of the lords of KTK with the treaty of the lords of Ar]pad and with its people. The treaty of the gods of KTK with the treaty of the g[ods of Arpad]. This is the treaty of gods, which gods have concluded. Blessed(?) forever be the reign of [Bar-ga²yah], a great king,¹⁶ and from this happy treaty [] and heaven. [All the gods] shall guard [this] treaty.¹⁷ Let not one of the words of thi[s] inscription be silent, [but let them be heard from] Arqu(?) to Ya²d[i and] BZ, from Lebanon to Yabrud, from Damascus to Aru(?) and M.W., [and fr]om the Valley to KTK [... in Bêt-Gush and its people with their sanctuary(?), this treaty [...]YTH HŠK.HW². . . in Mušr and MRBH [...] DŠ. . . .TM to Mati^cel, son [of Attarsamak ...]

[A few letters are legible on lines 14-15; lines 16-20 are missing.]

The stipulations of the treaty (lines 21-45)

[...] to your house. And (if) Mati^cel will not obey [and (if) his sons will not obey, and (if) his people will not obey, and (if) all the kings who will rule in Arpad [will not obey] the [] [] .LMNYN, you will have been unfaithful to all the gods of the treaty whi[ch is in this inscription.¹⁸ But if you obey and car]ry out this treaty and say, "[I] am an ally," [I shall not be able to raise a hand] against you;¹⁹ nor will my son be able to raise a hand against ¹¹ Restored according to I B 3.

¹² The reading and meaning of this line is highly contested. Dupont-Sommer read it: wšb^c bñh yñkñ bñt tñm w²l yhrñn, which I have translated above. In light of Fakhariyah 22 (COS 2.34), Kaufman (1982:72) would rather read: wšb^c bñh y²pn b..t tñm w²l ym²n, "and may his seven daughters bake bread in an oven(?) but not fill (it)." Cf. Lev 26:26. Cf. Fitzmyer 1995, ad loc.

¹³ The division of the letters into words is disputed; see Fitzmyer 1995, ad loc.

¹⁴ The restoration follows Isa 13:21.

¹⁵ Most of these ancient places are not yet identified, especially those written in capital letters.

¹⁶ Restored as in I A 5.

[your] son, or my offspring against [your] offspr[ing]. And if] one of (the) kings [should speak a word] against me or one of my enemies (should so speak) and you say to any king, "What are you [going to do?]" and he should raise a hand against] my son and kill him and raise his hand to take some of my land or some of my possessions, you will have been unfaithful to the treaty which is in this inscription. If one of (the) kings comes and surrounds <me>, [your] ar[my] must come [to me with every arch[er] and every sort [of weapon], and you must surround those who surround me and you must draw for me [...] and I shall pile corpse upon corpse in Ar[pad] ... some king L³WYN WMWT [...] and if on a day when (the) gods [...] the rebels, you (sg.) do not come with your army and (if) [you (pl.) do not] come with your (pl.) armies to strengthen my ho[use] and [if your] off[spring] does not] come to strengthen [my] offspring, [you will have been unfaithful to] the gods of the treaty which is in this inscription. And (when) [...] Y³PN with me, I shall be able [to drink] water [of the well of ...]L; whoever lives around that well shall not be able to destroy (it) or raise a hand against the water of [the] well[!]. [And the king] who will enter and take LBKH or H³....., who will take ... B³H. [...] to destroy ²NGD² ... MLHM ... M ... KD in the town of ²YM²M. And if (you do) not (do) so, you will have been unfaith[ful] [to the treaty] <which is in> this <inscription>. And if ... Q. LY ... L²K.L ... LHMY ... Y.NŠ², you shall send ...². [...]M, and if you do not give (me) my provisions, [or] deduct provisions from me, and do not deliver (them), you will have been unfaithful to this treaty. [... You can[not] deduct provisions ²NH K²YM

▼ Qoh 1:3,
9, 14

YQM LK, and you yourself will seek and will go [... to] your [cit]y and to your house YN. ... ZR². ... for myself [and for eve]ry person of my household and for T [...] in it your son(?); and the kings of Ar[pad] will not cu[t any]thing off from them because it is a living pact. [...] H.... TLL H² WSH H² WBL H² NTRHM for yourself ²M. [...]. ... K². ... with you; so you will cut the ²PL². And if ... [...] NQ ... he will strengthen the QLBT of my house against ... L.H.²Y²QL. ... [...] . [against] my son or against one of my courtiers; and (if) one of them flees and com[es ...]

Face C

Conclusion (lines 1-9)

Thus have we spoken [and thus have we writ]ten. What I, [Mat]i^cel, have written (is to serve) as a reminder for my son [and] my [grand]son who will come a[fter] me. May they make good relations [beneath] the sun" [for (the sake of) my] ro[yal] house that no ev[il] may be done against] the house of Mat[i^cel and his son and] his [grand]son for[ever]

Blessings (lines 7-16)

... may (the) gods keep [all evils] away from his day and from his house.

Curses (lines 17-24)

Whoever will not observe the words of the inscription which is on this stele or will say, "I shall efface some of its words," or "I shall upset the good treaty-relations and turn (them) [to] evil," on any day on which he will d[o] so, may the gods overturn th[at m]an and his house and all that (is) in it! May they make its lower part its upper part! May his sci[on] inherit no name!

STELE II

When stele II was obtained by the Damascus Museum, it consisted of about a dozen fragments. When assembled, they yielded the middle part of three sides of an inscribed monument similar to stele I. Stele II is clearly related to stele I, mentioning the same kings, Bar-ga²yah and Mat[i^cel], and having very similar curses and stipulations, but it is not simply another copy of the same text. Hence the relation of the two steles is debated.

Face A

Curses (lines 1-14)

... [and should seven mares suckle a colt, may it not be sated; should seven cows give suck to a calf, may it n[ot] have its fill; should seven [ewes suckle a lamb, may it not be sated; and should seven goats suck]le a kid, may it not be sa[ted]; and should seven hens(?) go looking for food, may they not kill(?) (anything).¹⁷ And if (Mat[i^cel] should be un]faithful to Bar-ga²yah and to [his son and to his offspring, may his kingdom become like a kingdom of sand; and may his name be for]gotten, and may

[his grav]e be ... [and for se]ven years thorns, ŠB[...] [...] and for se]ven years may there be [...] [...] among all the nobles of ... [...] and his land. And a cry [...] and may] the mouth of a lion [eat] and the mouth of [a ...] and the mouth of a panther [...]

[Lines 10-14 are practically illegible.]

Face B

Stipulations (lines 1-20)

... the treaty and the amity whi[ch] the gods have ¹⁷ See n. 12 above.

made in [Arpad and among its people; and (if) Mati^cel will not obey], and (if) his sons will not obey, (if) his nobles will not obey, and (if) his people will not obey, and (if) [all the kings of Arpad] will not o[bey ...] YM who are watch-ful(?). But if you obey, (may) tranquility [... And] if you say in your soul and think in your mind,^a ["I am an ally, and I shall obey Bar-ga^yah] and his sons and his offspring," then I shall not be able to raise a ha[nd against you, nor my son against your son, nor my offspring against your offspring], either to rout them, or to destroy their name.^b And [if one of my sons says, "I shall sit upon the throne] of my father, for he is babbling(?) and growing old," or (if) my son seeks [my head to kill me and you say in your soul, "Let him kill whom-ever he would kill," (then) you will have been unfaithful to all the gods [of the treaty which is in this inscription ...] [...JNK and Bêt-Gush and Bêt-ŠLL and [...] [...] and corpse ... upon corpse [...] [...] and on a day of wrath for all [...] [...] will come to my son and [my] grandsons [...] sons of [my] sons [...] from the hand of my enemies and [...], you will have been unfaithful [to this treaty ...] RB²B..KMY ... ŠMR WBSQ. [...] and let no

^a Zech 7:10;
8:17
^b Deut 7:24;
12:3
^c Gen 28:19

one oppress him. If he oppresses (him) in QR[...] LHW.H ... if you should seek and not ... [...] you [will have been unfaithful to] all the [gods of the treaty which is in [this] inscription [...] [...]LY^c [...] he will surpass you until [...]JHN [...] who will be stronger than you [...]

Face C

Safekeeping of the inscribed treaty (lines 1-17)

... [and whoever will] give orders to efface [th]ese inscriptions from the bethels,^c where they are [wr]itten, and [will] say, "I shall destroy the inscript[ion]s, and with impunity(?) shall I destroy KTK and its king," should that (man) be frightened from effacing the inscriptions from the bethels and say to someone who does not understand, "I shall engage (you) indeed(?)," and (then) order (him), "Efface these inscriptions from the bethels," may [he] and his son die in oppressive torment. [...] and all the gods of the [treaty which is in [this] inscription will [...] Mati^cel and his son and his grandson and his offspring and all the kings of Arpad and all his nobles and their people from their homes and from their days.

SEFIRE III

The nine fragments of this stele, when pieced together, yielded an extended text of 29 lines. In this case, the text was engraved only on one side of a broad slab, roughly 102 cm. x 72 cm. Though stele III is related to the other two steles, Bar-ga^yah's name has been restored in III 25, and that may be questionable. But it does mention "the kings of Arpad" (lines 1, 3, 16, 27), which does relate it to the other two. Neither the beginning nor the end of this text is preserved; it contains only stipulations imposed on the kings of Arpad.

Concerning the surrender of plotters (lines 1-4a)

[... And whoever will come to you] or to your son or to your offspring or to one of the kings of Arpad and will s[pea]k [ag]ainst me or against my son or against my grandson or against my offspring, indeed(?), any man who rants(?)¹⁸ and utters evil words^b against me, [you] must [not] accept such words from him. You must hand them (i.e., the men) over into my hands, and your son must hand (them) over to my son, and your offspring must hand (them) over to my offspring, and the offspring of [any of the ki]ngs of Arpad must hand (them) over to me. Whatever is good in my sight, I will do to them.^c And if (you do) not (do) so, you shall have been unfaithful to all the gods of the treaty which is in [this] inscription.

Concerning the surrender of fugitives (lines 4b-7a)

Now if a fugitive flees from me, one of my officials, or one of my brothers, or one of my courtiers, or one of the people who are under my

^a Lam 4:20;
Prov 1:23;
Isa 11:15
^b Qoh 8:3
^c 2 Sam 19:38;
Josh 9:25;
2 Kgs 10:5
^d Exod 16:29
^e Gen 34:10;
42:34
^f 1 Kgs 20:2

control, and they go to Aleppo,¹⁹ you must not gi[ve th]em food or say to them, "Stay quietly in your place"; and you must not incite them against me. You must placate(?) them and return them to me. And if they [do] not [dwell] in your land, placate(?) (them) there, until I come and placate(?) them. But if you incite them against me and give them food and say to them, "Stay where [yo]u are^d and do not (re)turn to his region," you shall have been unfaithful to this treaty.

Concerning freedom of passage (lines 7b-9a)

Now (as for) all the kings of my vicinity²⁰ or any one who is a friend of mine, when I send my ambassador to him for peace or for any of my business or (when) he sends his ambassador^e to me, the road shall be open to me. You must not (try to) dominate me in this (respect) or assert your authority over me concerning [it]. [And] if (you do) not (do) so, you shall be unfaithful to this treaty.

¹⁸ Lit., "who causes the breath of his nostrils to boil"; cf. Lam 4:20; Prov 1:23; Isa 11:15.

¹⁹ For Aleppo and its temple as a place of asylum, see Greenfield 1991a.

²⁰ The noun šhry may mean "trading area"; cf. the use of the verb šhr in Gen 34:10; 42:34.

Concerning vengeance to be taken in the case of assassination (lines 9b-14a)

Now if any one of my brothers or any one of my father's household or any one of my sons or any one of my officers or any one of my [off]icials or any one of the people under my control or any one of my enemies seeks my head to kill me²¹ and to kill my son and my offspring — if they kill m[e], you must come and avenge my blood²² from the hand of my enemies. Your son must come (and) avenge the blood of my son from his enemies; and your grandson must come (and) avenge the blood of my grandson. Your offspring must come (and) avenge the blood of my offspring. If it is a city, you must strike it with a sword. If it is one of my brothers or one of my slaves or [one] of my officials or one of the people who are under my control, you must strike him and his offspring, his nobles(?), and his friends with a sword.²³ And if (you do) not (do) so, you shall have been unfaithful to all the gods of the [tr]eaty which is in this inscription.

Concerning plots against the suzerain (lines 14b-17a)

If the idea should come to your mind²⁴ and you should express with your lips²⁵ (the intention) to kill me; and if the idea should come to the mind of your grandson and he should express with his lips (the intention) to kill my grandson; or if the idea should come to the mind of your offspring and he should express with his lips (the intention) to kill my offspring; and if the idea should come to the [mi]nd of the kings of Arpad, in whatever way anyone²¹ shall die, you shall have been false to all the gods of the treaty which is in this inscription.

Concerning duty in a strife for succession to the throne (lines 17b-19a)

If [my] son, who sits upon my throne, quarrels <with> one of his brothers, and he would remove him, you shall not interfere²⁶ with them,²² saying to him, "Kill your brother or imprison him and do no[t] let him go free." But if you really make peace between them, he will not kill and will not imprison (him). But if you do not make peace be-

g Jer 26:21;
Ps 37:32

2 Kgs 9:7

i Deut 13:16;
Josh 11:11;
i Sam 22:19

j Isa 65:17;
Jer 3:16

2 Ps 16:4c

i Dan 7:13;
1 QapGen
21:13;
11 QgJob
26:3

m Prov 6:19b

n 1 Kgs 19:4

o Deut 24:2

p Jer 33:7;
Ps 126:1

tween them, you shall have been unfaithful to this treaty.

Concerning the reciprocal return of fugitives (lines 19b-20)

And as for [k]ings [of my vicin]ity, if a fugitive of mine flees to one of them, and a fugitive of theirs flees and comes to me, if he has restored mine, I will return [his; and] you yourself shall [no]t (try to) hinder me. And if (you do) not (do) so, you shall have been unfaithful to this treaty.

Concerning plots against the suzerain's household (lines 21-23a)

You shall not interfere in my house or (with) my grandsons or (with) the sons of my bro[thers] or (with) the sons of my off[spring] or (with) the sons of my people, saying to them, "Kill your lord, and be his successor! For he is not better than you."²⁷ Someone will avenge [my blood. If you do com]mit treachery against me or against my sons or against [my] offspring, you shall have been unfaith[ful] to all the gods of the treaty which is in th[is] inscription.

Concerning the territory of Tal²ayim (lines 23b-27a)

[Tal²ay]im,²³ its villages, its lords, and its territory (once belonged) to my father and to [his house from] of old. When (the) gods struck [my father's] house, [it came to belong] to another.²⁸ Now, however, (the) gods have brought about the return²⁹ of my [father's ho]use, [and] my father's [house has grown great], and Tal²ayim²⁴ has returned to [Bar-ga²y]ah and to his son and to his grandson and to his offspring forever. [If my son quarrels and (if) my [grand]son quarrels and (if) my offspring quarrels [with your offspring a]bout Tal²ayim and its villages and its lords, whoever will raise [... the ki]ngs of Arpad [...]LNH, you shall have been unfaithful to this treaty.

Concerning gifts (?) (lines 27b-29)

And if [] and they bribe in any way a king who will [... all th]at is beautiful and all that is go[od] [...]

²¹ Lit., "a son of man." This is the earliest occurrence of this phrase in Aram., where it is used in a generic sense. Cf. Dan 7:13; 1 QapGen 21:13; 11 QgJob 26:3.

²² Lit., "you shall not send your tongue between them."

²³ The name is restored according to Sf III 25-26.

²⁴ Identified as Talhayim, known from Akk. texts; see Noth 1961:156.

REFERENCES

Text: KAI 2:238-274, 342; SSI 2:18-5; ANEP 659-661; Translations and Studies: TUAT 1:178-189; Barré 1985; Dupont-Sommer and Starcky 1956; 1960; Fitzmyer 1995; Garelli 1957; 1971; Greenfield 1991a; Kaufman 1982; Lemaire and Durand 1984; Lipiński 1975a:27-76; McCarthy 1978; Noth 1961; Ronzevalle 1930-1931; van Rooy 1989.

This page intentionally left blank

G. MISCELLANEOUS INSCRIPTIONS

This page intentionally left blank

THE KETEF HINNOM AMULETS (2.83)

P. Kyle McCarter

These two tiny silver scrolls were found in 1980 by Gabriel Barkay during the excavation of a burial cave in Jerusalem near the Church of St. Andrew on a rocky hillside overlook the Valley of Hinnom — hence, Ketef Hinnom or “the Shoulder of Hinnom.” When unrolled, the scrolls proved to be amulets containing several lines of Hebrew script, the preserved portions of which include blessings almost identical to the so-called priestly or Aaronid Benediction of Num 6:24-26. In design, the burial chamber is typical of the early sixth century BCE, and since the majority of the artifacts belong to that period, Barkay assigned a similar date to the two scrolls. The tomb continued in use until the first century BCE, however, and Renz (HAE 447-452) argues on paleographic and orthographic grounds that the inscriptions should be dated to the second or first century BCE — that they are written, in other words, in the archaizing Paleo-Hebrew script. Nevertheless, Yardeni (1991:179-180), the principal decipherer of the scrolls, has mounted a forceful argument on the same grounds for an early sixth-century date.

Amulet 1: concluding benediction (lines 14-19)
[...] May Yahweh bless you¹ [and] keep you. May Yahweh cause his face to shine [on you^a ...].

^a Num 6:24-25a
^b Num 6:24-25a, 26b; cf. Ps 67:2

Amulet 2: benediction (lines 5-12)
[...] May Yahweh bless you and keep you. May Yahweh cause his face² to shine [on] you³ and give you peace^a [...].

¹ The spelling in both amulets is ybrk in comparison to ybrkk in Num 6:24; this feature is attested elsewhere in epigraphic Heb. as early as the beginning of the ninth century (Kuntillet ‘Ajrud). See COS 2.47.

² The spelling of the third-person suffix after the formally plural noun “face” as -yw is a late orthographic feature, reminiscent of the MT but contrasting with inscriptional forms of the seventh-sixth centuries BCE, such as Yabneh Yam ’lw, “to him,” and Lachish ’nsw, “his men.” This supports Renz’s argument for a Hellenistic date for the amulets. The same would be true of the plene spelling of šlwm, “peace,” in the next line, though in that case the waw in question is doubtful (not read by Yardeni).

³ The text of the second amulet includes no equivalent of Num 6:25b-26a, “... and be gracious to you. May Yahweh lift up his face to you” There seems to have been room at the end of the first amulet for wyhnk, “... and be gracious to you,” but the text is not extant.

REFERENCES

Text, translations and studies: AHI 4.301-302; HAE 1:447-56; Barkay 1986; 1989; 1992; Haran 1989; Rösel 1986; Yardeni 1991.

THE EL KHADR ARROWHEADS (2.84)

Gordon Hamilton

These five arrowheads, inscribed with Old Canaanite alphabetic letters, were found near Bethlehem and published between 1954 and 1980.¹ Their weight and size, between 9.5 and 10.5 cm, fall within normal parameters for arrowheads used for practical purposes.² Dating to ca 1100-1050 BCE,³ these inscriptions provide witness both to literacy and goddess religion in Palestine during the late second millennium.

1 (The) Arrowhead of ‘Abd-Labī⁴t⁴
2 (The) Arrowhead of ‘Abd-Labī⁴t⁴
3 (The) Arrowhead of ‘Abd-Labī⁴t⁴

^a Judg 3:31;
5:6

4 (The) Arrowhead of ‘Abd-L⁵t⁵
5 ‘Abd-Labī⁴t⁴ Bin-‘Anat⁶ ^a

¹ For the most recent discussions, see Mitchell 1985:137-148; Sass 1988:76-78; Cross 1993:542.

² See Mitchell 1985:140-142 and, for previous proposals, Cross 1979:103, n. 28.

³ Since all five were purchased in the marketplace, their dating depends on combining the typological analysis of their scripts and the form of the arrowheads themselves. See Cross and Milik 1956:15-23 and Mitchell 1985:142-145; cf. Sass 1988:76.

⁴ The name ‘Abd-Labī⁴t on Arrowheads 1, 3 and the first name of 5 means “(The) Servant/Slave/Worshipper of (the) Lioness,” a reference to a goddess, possibly ‘Anat (Cross 1967:13*-14* and 1980:7). The spelling of the same name on Arrowhead 2, ‘bdlbt, either shows an accidental omission of the ’aleph (so Cross 1980:5) or loss of that letter at the end of a syllable (Milik and Cross 1954:8).

⁵ Cross (1980:5) interpreted the name on Arrowhead 4, ‘bd-L⁵t, as exhibiting another error, the omission of a bē. It is also possible to view the 2nd element, ’t, as a genuine name given it’atum* in Amorite (Gelb 1980:312, 323) and lš’ā, Leah, in BH; the meaning might then be “(The) Arrowhead of (the) Servant/Slave/Worshipper of (the) Prevailing One,” another reference to a goddess (cf. Lioness in 1, 2, 3 and ‘Anat in 5).

⁶ Bin-‘Anat either could be the name of the father of ‘Abd-Labī⁴t or indicate that the latter was a member of an archers’ guild (Cross 1980:7). For occurrences of the term on another arrowhead and elsewhere cf. Hallo and Tadmor 1977:4f. See also Beem 1991:158-162.

REFERENCES

Text: Milik and Cross 1954; Cross and Milik 1956. Studies: Cross 1967; 1979; 1980; Mitchell 1985; Sass 1988; Deutsch and Heltzer 1994:11-21.

THE GEZER CALENDAR (2.85)

P. Kyle McCarter

This limestone plaque, found at Gezer in 1908, is inscribed with a brief text associating the months of the year with various agricultural activities — hence its familiar designation as a “calendar.” The limestone from which the small, hand-sized tablet is made is soft, and both surfaces show evidence of erasing and reuse. This suggests that it may have been a practice tablet and that its apparently formulaic inscription may have been a standard text used in scribal training. The text probably dates to the tenth century BCE, and its archaic language, which exhibits features not found in later inscriptional Hebrew, is probably most safely described as a South Canaanite dialect rather than specifically Hebrew.

A list of agricultural activities (lines 1-7)	a Exod 23:16; 34:22; Isa 32:10 b Gen 8:22; Lev 26:5 c Amos 7:1 d Exod 9:31 e 2 Sam 21:9; Ruth 1:22; 2:23 f Lev 25:3-5; Cant 2:12 (?) g 2 Sam 16:1-2; Isa 16:9; Jer 40:10-12; 48:32; Amos 8:1-2; Mic 7:1	month is summerfruit. ^a
His double-month ¹ is ingathering. ² ^a His double-month is sowing. ³ ^b His double-month is late-planting. ⁴ ^c His month ⁵ is chopping flax. ⁶ ^d His month is barley harvest. ^e His month is harvest and measuring (?). ⁷ His double-month is pruning. ^f His		A personal name (margin) Abiya. ⁸

¹ Interpreting the difficult yṛḥw with Albright (1943:22) as yārḥēw, a dual noun with masculine singular suffix vocalized according to the pronunciation of the South Canaanite dialect of Gezer in the tenth century.

² Probably the harvest of grapes and olives.

³ That is, the planting of grain.

⁴ Cf. Targumic Aram. laqqiṣ, which refers to late rain and other late-season activities.

⁵ Instead of yṛḥw, “his two months,” we now have yṛḥ (yārḥō), “his month,” for four of the remaining five activities. The combination of four double-months and four single months yields a total of twelve.

⁶ To “ṣd pṣt, cf. BH mā-āṣād, “axe,” and [pṣet], pīṣā, “flax.”

⁷ The reading wkṭ is problematic. The interpretation “measuring” is based on the root kāl, “contain, hold,” and (presumably) by extension “measure.” A form of the word seems also to occur in an agricultural context in line 5 of the Meṣad Hashavyahu (Yabneh Yam) inscription (COS 3).

⁸ These three letters, ^a*by*, are written sideways at the edge of the tablet. They evidently represent a personal name, possibly that of the scribe. If the name is complete, it corresponds to a common hypocoristic pattern, shortened with final -y.

REFERENCES

Text: EHO 46-47; KAI 2:181-82; SSI 1:1-4; AHI 10.001. Translations and studies: ANET 320; Albright 1943; Diringer 1934:1-20, 337-338; Février 1948; Garbini 1954-56; Honeyman 1953; Lidzbarski 1909; Rahlfs 1961; Segal 1962; Talmon 1963; 1986; Wirgin 1960.

AN AMULET FROM ARSLAN TASH (2.86)

P. Kyle McCarter

Two small limestone plaques, bearing a series of inscriptions and drawings and perforated at the top for wall-mounting, were purchased in 1933 at Arslan Tash, Syria (ancient Ḥadattu). The first plaque, which was published in 1939, is translated here. The main text is written on the front and back of the plaque in the spaces not occupied by illustrations; it consists of six lines on the obverse, eight on the reverse, and three more on the edges. Depicted on the obverse is a winged sphinx inscribed with two lines of text and, beneath the sphinx, a wolf devouring a child and inscribed with yet another line of text. On the reverse is portrayed a warrior-god wielding an axe, on or alongside which are eight other short lines of text. While the language of the text is Phoenician or a local Canaanite dialect, the script is Aramaic, paleographically datable to the seventh century BCE. Somewhat surprisingly, the orthography sides with the language (Phoenician) rather than the script.

Main text: obverse (lines 1-6)

Incantations^a against the Flyers,¹ the goddesses, (against) Sasm² son of Padrishisha³, the god, and against the Strangler of the Lamb.³ The house I enter, you shall not enter!^b

Main text: reverse (lines 7-14)

The court I tread, you shall not tread! Ashur⁴ has made^c an eternal covenant^d with us. He has made (a covenant) with us, along with all the sons of ²El^e and the leaders of the council of all the Holy Ones,^f with a covenant of the Heavens and Eternal Earth, with an oath of Ba^cl,

Bottom edge (line 15)

Lord of Earth, with

Left edge (line 16)

an oath of Hawran,⁵ whose mouth is true,

a Isa 3:20
b Exod 12:21-32
c Gen 15:18; Exod 34:10, 27; Deut 5:2, 3; 28:69; 29:13, 24; Josh 24:25; 1 Kgs 5:26; 2 Kgs 11:17; etc.
d Gen 9:16; 17:7, 13, 19; Exod 31:16; Lev 24:8; Num 18:19; 25:13; 2 Sam 23:5; etc.
e Gen 6:2, 4; Ps 29:1; 89:7; Job 1:6; 2:1; 38:7 f Zech 14:5; Ps 89:6, 8; Job 5:1; 15:15; Dan 8:13 g Ezek 46:12 h Isa 2:18

Right edge (line 17) and his seven consorts, and the eight wives of Ba^cl Qudsh.⁶

On the winged sphinx (lines 19-20)

Against the Flyers: From the dark chamber pass away! At once! At once, O night demons!

On the man-eating wolf (line 21)

In the house, against the Crushers (?)⁷: Go!

On the warrior-god (lines 22-29)

As for Sasm, let (the house) not be opened to him,⁸ and let him not come down to the doorposts! Let the sun arise against Sasm! Pass away,⁸ and forever fly away!

¹ Reading $\ell^c < p > \ell^c$. The p is missing, but the parallelism of $\ell^c p \ell^c$, "Flyers," and $\ell^c n$, "night demons," in the text on the sphinx strongly favors the reconstruction (Cross and Saley 1970:44 n. 5). Since the wolf must be the "Strangler of the Lamb" (see n. 3), the winged sphinx must either be one of the Flyers or, less likely, Sasm.

² For the little that is known about this god, who seems to be Hurrian in origin, see KAI 2:44. He is probably the warrior-god depicted on the reverse.

³ As pointed out by du Mesnil du Buisson 1939, this demon finds a parallel in an Arabian she-wolf demon called Qarinar, who also has the epithet "Strangler of the Lamb" and who carried off children at night. She must be the wolf depicted on the obverse.

⁴ Ashur, the god of Assyria, seems to have assumed the role of senior deity in northern Syria at this time when Hladattu was an imperial Assyrian administrative center (Zevit 1977:115). The alternative is to reconstruct $\ell^c s r < t >$, "²Asherah," with Albright (1939:8 n. 16), or read a dialectal form (²ashir) with Cross and Saley (1970:45 n. 17).

⁵ Hawron or Horon, a Syro-Canaanite deity known from Ug. to Greco-Roman times, had a chthonic aspect, though his full character is not known.

⁶ Evidently Ba^cl Qudsh, "the Lord of Holiness," was an epithet of Hawron.

⁷ Reading $\ell^c p h s t$ with Cross and Saley (1970:46).

REFERENCES

Text: KAI 2: SSI 3:78-88. Translations and studies: ANET 658; Albright 1939; Caquot 1973; Cross and Saley 1970; Du Mesnil du Buisson 1939; Dupont-Sommer 1939; Gaster 1942; Lipiński 1978a:247-49; Röhlig 1974; Torczyner 1947; van den Branden 1961; Zevit 1977.

THE TEL DAN BOWL (2.87)

P. Kyle McCarter

This short Aramaic inscription is incised on the base of bowl found among a collection of ninth- and eighth-century pottery from Tel Dan. It consists of six Aramaic letters, five of which are fully or partly extant, written alongside a five-pointed star.

(Belonging) to the butchers.¹ ^a a 1 Sam 8:13; 9:23, 24; cf. Gen 37:36; 2 Kgs 25:8; Dan 2:14

¹ That is, $\ell^c b[h] \ell^c$. The noun can mean "butchers" or "cooks," but titles like Hebrew $\ell^c r h b h y m$ (Gen 37:36) and $\ell^c r b h y m$ (2 Kgs 25:8), both lit. "chief of the butchers" and Aram. $\ell^c r b h y m \ell^c d y m l k$ (Dan 2:14), lit. "chief of the butchers of the king," came to designate high-ranking officers, and it is possible that the Tel Dan bowl belonged to such an individual.

REFERENCES

SSI 2:5-6; Avigad 1968b.

INSCRIBED NIMRUD IVORIES (2.88)

P. Kyle McCarter

A number of inscribed fragments of ivory inlay were found during the 1961 season of the British excavations of the stronghold of Fort Shalmaneser at Nimrud, the ancient Assyrian capital of Calah, on the east bank of the Tigris. The ivories, which bear both Aramaic and Hebrew inscriptions, are believed to have been brought to Calah as booty by the Assyrian army returning from campaigns in the West. The ivory plaque translated here is inscribed with well-written Hebrew characters dating paleographically to the middle of the eighth century BCE, and it is reasonable to surmise that it was part of the plunder taken from Samaria when the city fell to Shalmaneser V in 722 BCE. The first editor (Millard 1962) understood the preserved lines as an imprecation included in a votive or commemorative plaque to threaten with divine retribution anyone in the future who should damage the inscription.

[...] may Ya[hweh] shatter ¹ * [...] who come af]ter me, from great king ² [to ... if they should co]me and efface ³ th[is ivory ⁴ ...]	a Pss 68:22; 110:5-6 b 1 Kgs 10:18; 22:39; Amos 3:15; 6:4; 2 Chr 9:17
---	---

¹ Millard's readings in the editio princeps, though highly tentative in view of the very fragmentary character of the text, have not been substantially improved upon and are generally followed here. The first sequence that admits of any possible interpretation is [...]lypt[. lyshw ...]. Millard identifies the verb as pt, "break into pieces, shatter," which occurs in BH only as the infinitive in Lev 2:6, but which has reflexes in Syriac and Arabic.

² Millard may be correct in understanding mmk gdl, "from great king," as the first part of such phrases found frequently in curses as "from great king to common man"; cf., for example, "Whoever you are, any ruler or any (ordinary) man" in the ³Eshmun^cazor epitaph (COS 2.57). As Millard also points out, if the ivory text read nmmlk hgd, "from the great king," we would suspect a reference to the Assyrian emperor (šarru rabū) in this period (cf. 2 Kgs 18:19).

³ That is, wmh, presumably a plural from māhā, "wipe, wipe out, obliterate, efface."

REFERENCES

Millard 1962; SSI 1:19-24; AHI 34.001-003; Lemaire 1976b.

WEST SEMITIC BIBLIOGRAPHY

- ABBADI, S.
1983 Die Personennamen der Inschriften aus Hatra. Hildesheim/New York: Olms.
- ABELLS, Z. and A. ARBIT.
1995 "Some New Thoughts on Jerusalem's Ancient Water Systems." PEQ 127:2-7.
- ABOU ASSAF, A., BORDREUIL, P., and A. R. MILLARD.
1982 La Statue de Tell Fekherye et son inscription bilingue assyro-araméenne. Paris: Editions Recherche sur les civilisations.
- AHARONI, Y.
1968 "Trial Excavation in the 'Solar Shrine' at Lachish, Preliminary Report." IEJ 18:157-169.
1975 Ketavot Arad. Jerusalem: Bialik Institute and Israel Exploration Society.
- AHITUV, S.
1992 Handbook of Ancient Hebrew Inscriptions. Encyclopaedia Biblica Library 7. Jerusalem: Mosad Bialik (in Hebrew).
- AHLSTRÖM, G.
1984 "The Tell Siran Bottle Inscription." PEQ 116:12-15.
- AIMÉ-GIRON, N.
1939 "Adversaria Semitica." BIFAO 38:40-43.
- ALBRIGHT, W. F.
1939 "An Aramean Magical Text in Hebrew from the Seventh Century B.C." BASOR 76:5-11.
1942 "A Votive Stele Erected by Ben-Hadad I of Damascus to the God Melcarth." BASOR 87:23-29.
1943 "The Gezer Calendar." BASOR 92:16-26.
1947 "The Phoenician Inscriptions of the Tenth Century B.C. from Byblus." JAOS 67:153-60.
1968 Yahweh and the Gods of Canaan. Garden City, NY: Doubleday.
- ALLEN, T. G.
1974 The Book of the Dead. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
- AMADASI GUZZO, M. G., and A. ARCHI.
1980 "La bilingue fenicio-ittita geroglifica di Karatepe." VO 3:85-101.
- AMADASI GUZZO, M. G.
1984 "Le roi qui fait vivre son peuple dans les inscriptions phéniciennes." WO 15:109-118.
1987 "Iscrizioni semitiche di nord-ovest in contesti greci e italici (X-VII sec.a.C.)." Dialoghi di Archeologia 3rd series 5:13-27.
- AMBROS, A. A.
1994 "Zur Inschrift von 'En 'Avdat — eine Mahnung zur Vorsicht." Journal of Arabic Linguistics 27:90-92.
- ANDERSEN, F. I.
1966 "Moabite Syntax." Or 35:81-120.
- ANGERSTORFER, A.
1982 "Asherah als 'Consort of Jahweh' oder Ashirtah?" BN 17:7-16.
- ARNAUD, D.
1986 Emar.
- ASSMAN, J. C.
1963 "Zur Baugeschichte der Königsgruft von Sidon." AA 78:690-716.
- AUFFRET, P.
1980 "Essai sur la structure littéraire de la stèle de Mésha." UF 12:109-124.
- AUFRECHT, W. E.
1999a "The Religion of the Ammonites." Pp. 152-162 in Ancient Ammon. Ed. by B. MacDonald and R. W. Younker. Leiden: E. J. Brill.
1999b "Ammonite Texts and Language." Pp. 163-188 in Ancient Ammon. Ed. by B. MacDonald and R. W. Younker. Leiden: E. J. Brill.
- AUFRECHT, W. E., L. G. and HERR.
In Press "The Civilizations of the Ammonites." JAOS.
- AVIGAD, N.
1953 "The Epitaph of a Royal Steward from Siloam Village." IEJ 3:137-152.
1965 "Seals of Exiles." IEJ 15:222-232.
1968a "Notes on some Inscribed Syro-Phoenician Seals." BASOR 189:44-49.
1968b "An Inscribed Bowl from Dan." PEQ 100:42-44.
1970 "Ammonite and Moabite Seals." Pp. 284-295 in Studies Glueck.
1972 "Excavations in the Jewish Quarter of the Old City of Jerusalem, 1971 (Third Preliminary Report)." IEJ 22:193-200 and pl. 42B.
1975 "The Priest of Dor." IEJ 25:101-105.
1976 Bullae and Seals from a Post-Exilic Judean Archive. Qedem 4. Jerusalem: Institute of Archaeology, The Hebrew University of Jerusalem.
1978a "Baruch the Scribe and Jerahmeel the King's Son." IEJ 28:52-56.
1978b "The Seal of 'Seraiah (son) of Neriah.'" IEJ 14:86-87 (in Hebrew).
1978c "The King's Daughter and the Lyre." IEJ 28:146-151.
1979a "Hebrew Epigraphic Sources." Pp. 20-43 in The World History of the Jewish People. Ed. by A. Malamat, and I. Eph'al. First Series: Ancient Times. Vol. 4, Pt. 1: Political History. Jerusalem: Massada.
1979b "A Group of Hebrew Seals from the Hecht Collection." Pp. 119-126 in Festschrift Rëuben R. Hecht. Jerusalem: Koren.
1980 "The Chief of the Corvée." IEJ 30:170-173.
1985 "Some Decorated West Semitic Seals." IEJ 35:1-7.
1986 Hebrew Bullae from the Time of Jeremiah. Jerusalem: Israel Exploration Society (in Hebrew).
1987 "The Contribution of Hebrew Seals to an Understanding of Israelite Religion and Society." Pp. 195-208 in Studies Cross.
1988 "Hebrew Seals and Sealings and Their Significance for Biblical Research." Pp. 8-16 in Congress Volume: Jerusalem, 1986. SVT 40. Ed. by J. A. Emerton. Leiden: E. J. Brill.

- 1989 "The Inscribed Pomegranate from the 'House of the Lord.'" Israel Museum Journal 9:7-16.
- 1990 "The Inscribed Pomegranate from the 'House of the Lord.'" BAR 53:157-166.
- 1994 "The Inscribed Pomegranate from the 'House of the Lord.'" Pp. 128-137 in Ancient Jerusalem Revealed. Ed. by H. Geva. Jerusalem: Israel Exploration Society.
- AVIGAD, N., and B. SASS.
1997 Corpus of West Semitic Stamp Seals. Revised and completed by B. Sass. Jerusalem: Israel Academy of Sciences and Humanities, Israel Exploration Society, and Institute of Archaeology, Hebrew University of Jerusalem.
- AVISHUR, Y.
1976 "Studies of Stylistic Features Common to the Phoenician Inscriptions and the Bible." UF 8:1-22.
- BAKER, D. W.
1992 "Tarshish." ABD 6:331.
- BARAG, D.
1970 "Note on an Inscription from Khirbet el-Qom." IEJ 20:216-218.
- BARKAY, G.
1986 Ketef Hinnom. A Treasure Facing Jerusalem's Walls. Jerusalem: Israel Museum, Catalogue 274.
1989 "The Priestly Benediction on the Ketef Hinnom Plaques." Cathedra 52:37-76 (in Hebrew).
1992 "The Priestly Benediction on Silver Plaques from Ketef Hinnom in Jerusalem." TA 19:139-194.
1993 "A Bulla of Ishmael, the King's Son." BASOR 290-291:109-114.
- BARRÉ, M. L.
1981 "A Note on rs³ʾt in the Karatepe Inscription." JANES 13:1-3.
1982 "An Analysis of the Royal Blessing in the Karatepe Inscription." Maarav 3/2:177-194.
1985 "The First Pair of Deities in the Seffire I God-List." JNES 44:205-210.
- BARSTAD, H. M.
1995 "Dod" Cols. 493-498 in DDD. Pp. 259-262 in 2nd Revised Edition, 1999.
- BECK, P.
1982 "The Drawings from Horvat Teiman (Kuntilet 'Ajrud)." TA 9:3-68.
- BECKING, B.
1998 "Does a Recently Published Paleo-Hebrew Inscription Refer to the Solomonic Temple?" BN 92:5-11.
- BEEM, B.
1991 "The Minor Judges: A Literary Reading of Some Very Short Stories." Pp. 147-172 in SIC 4.
- BELLAMY, J. A.
1990 "Arabic Verses from the First/Second Century: the Inscription of 'En 'Avdat." JSS 35:73-79.
- BENNETT, C.
1966 "Fouilles d'Unm el-Biyara." RB 73:399-401.
- BENZ, F. L.
1972 Personal Names in the Phoenician and Punic Inscriptions. Studia Pohl 8. Rome: Pontifical Biblical Institute.
- BERGER, P.-R.
1971 "Zu den Namen šbšr und *sin*³*sr*." ZAW 95:111-112.
- BERGMAN, A.
1936 "Two Hebrew Seals of the 'Ebed Class." JBL 55:221-226.
- BIRAN, A., and J. NAVEH.
1993 "An Aramaic Stele Fragment from Tel Dan." IEJ 43:81-98.
1995 "The Tel Dan Inscription: A New Fragment." IEJ 45:1-18.
- BLAU, J.
1980 "Short Philological Notes on the Inscription of Meša^c." Maarav 2: 143-157.
- BOGOLUBOV, M. N.
1966 "An Aramaic Inscription from Aswan." Palestinskiy Sbornik 15:41-46 (in Russian).
- BONDI, S. F.
1988 "City Planning and Architecture," Pp. 248-283 in Moscatti.
- BORDREUIL, P.
1992 "Sceaux inscrits des pays du Levant." Dictionnaire de la Bible, Supplément 12:86-212. Paris: Letouzey et Ané.
- BORDREUIL, P., and J. TEIXIDOR.
1983 "Nouvel examen de l'inscription de Bar-Hadad." AO 1:271-276.
- BORDREUIL, P., F. ISRAEL, and D. PARDEE.
1996 "Deux ostraca paléo-hébreux de la collection Sh. Moussaïeff." Semitica 46:49-76 and plates 7-8.
1998 "King's Command and Widow's Plea. Two New Hebrew Ostraca of the Biblical Period." NEA 61:2-13.
- BRECCIA, E.
1907 "La Necropoli de l'Ibrahimieh." Bulletin de la Société Archéologique d'Alexandrie 9:35-42.
- BRIN, G.
1969 "The Title ben (ha)melek and its Parallels." AION 29:433-465.
- BROCKELMANN, K.
1966 Lexicon Syriacum. Hildesheim: Georg Olms.
- BRON, F.
1975 "Phénicien rs³ʾt = vieillesse." AION 35:545-546.
1979 Recherches sur les inscriptions phéniciennes de Karatepe. École pratique des Hautes études 2: Hautes études orientales 11. Genève/Paris: Librairie Droz.
- BRON, F., and A. LEMAIRE.
1989 "Les inscriptions araméennes de Hazaël." RA 83:35-44.
- BUDGE, E. A. W.
1914 Assyrian Sculptures in the British Museum. Reign of Ashur-nasir-pal, B.C. 885-860. London: The British Museum.

- CANTINEAU, J.
1932 Le Nabatéen. Paris: Ernest Leroux.
- CAQUOT, A.
1973 "Observations sur la première tablette magique d'Arslan Tash." JANES 5:45-51.
- CAQUOT, A., and A. LEMAIRE.
1977 "Les Textes Araméens de Deir 'Alla." Syria 54:189-208.
- CHARBONNET, A.
1986 "Le dieu au lions d'Erétrie." AION. Archeologia e Storia antica 8:123-154.
- CHASE, D. A.
1982 "A Note on an Inscription from Kuntiller 'Ajrud." BASOR 246:63-67.
- CIASCA, A.
1988 "Phoenicia." Pp. 140-151 in Moscati.
- CLERMONT-GANNEAU, C.
1871 "Notes on Certain New Discoveries at Jerusalem. 1. Hebrew Inscription in Phoenician Characters." PEFQS 3:103.
1907 "L'antique nécropole juive d'Alexandrie." CRAIBL 234-243.
- COGAN, M.
1995 "Sukkoth-Benoth." Cols. 1553-1556 in DDD.
- COLONNA, G., M. PALLOTTINO, L. VLAD BORELLI, L. GARBINI, and G. GARBINI.
1964 "Scavi nel santuario etrusco di Pyrgi: Relazione preliminare della setima campagna, 1964, e scoperta de tra limine d'oro iscritte in etrusco e in punico." Archaeologia classica 16:49-117 and pls. 25-39.
- COOGAN, M. D.
1976 West Semitic Personal Names in the Murašû Documents. HSM 7. Missoula, MT: Scholars Press.
- COOTE, R. B.
1980 "The Tell Siran Bottle Inscription." BASOR 240:93.
- COUROVER, B.
1970 "A propos de la stèle de Carpentras." Semitica 20:17-21.
- CROSS, F. M.
1966 "Aspects of Samaritan and Jewish History in Late Persian and Hellenistic Times." HTR 59:201-206.
1967 "The Origin and Early Evolution of the Alphabet." ET 8:8*-24*.
1969 "Epigraphic Notes on the Ammān Citadel Inscription." BASOR 193:13-19.
1970 "The Cave Inscriptions from Khirbet Beit Lei." Pp. 299-306 in Studies Glueck.
1971 "Papyri of the Fourth Century B.C. from Dāfiyeh." Pp. 45-69 in New Directions in Biblical Archaeology. Ed. by D. N. Freedman and J. C. Greenfield. Garden City, NY: Doubleday.
1972 "The Stele Dedicated to Melcarth by Ben-Hadad." BASOR 205:36-42.
1973a "Notes on the Ammonite Inscription from Tell Sirān." BASOR 212:12-15.
1973b "Heshbon Ostraca II." AUSS 11:126-131.
1975 "Ammonite Ostraca From Heshbon, Heshbon Ostraca IV-VIII." AUSS 13:1-22, pls. 1-2.
1976 "Heshbon Ostraca XI." AUSS 14:145-48, pl. 15:A.
1979 "Early Alphabetic Scripts." Pp. 97-123 in Symposia.
1980 "Newly Found Inscriptions in Old Canaanite and Early Phoenician Scripts." BASOR 238:1-20.
1983 "The Seal of Miquéyaw, Servant of Yahweh." Pp. 55-63 in Ancient Seals and the Bible. Ed. L. Gorelick and E. Williams-Forte. Malibu: Undena Publications.
1986 "An Unpublished Ammonite Ostraca from Heshbān." Pp. 475-89 in Studies Horn.
1993 "Newly Discovered Arrowheads of the 11th Century B.C.E." Pp. 533-542 in BAT 1990.
1995 "Palaeography and the Date of the Tell Fahariyeh Bilingual Inscription." Pp. 393-409 in Studies Greenfield.
In press "Ammonite Ostraca from Tell Heshbān." Leaves From an Epigraphist's Notebook.
- CROSS, F. M., and J. T. MILIK.
1956 "A Typological Study of the El-Khadr Javelin- and Arrow-Heads." ADAJ 3:15-23.
- CROSS, F. M., and R. J. SILEY.
1970 "Phoenician Incantations on a Plaque of the Seventh Century B.C. from Arslan Tash in Upper Syria." BASOR 197:42-49.
- CRUYER, F. H.
1995 "A 'Bēdawd' Miscellany. Dwd, Dwd? or Dwdh?" SJOT 9:52-58.
- CURRID, J. D.
1997 Ancient Egypt and the Old Testament. Grand Rapids: Baker.
- DAHOOB, M.
1965 "Punic hkkbm 21 and Isa. 14:13." Or 34:170-172.
1972 "Ugaritic-Hebrew Parallel Pairs." Pp. 71-382 in Ras Shamra Parallels I. Ed. by L. R. Fisher. AnOr 49. Rome: Pontificium Institutum Biblicum.
- DALLEY, S.
1995 "Ancient Mesopotamian Military Organization." CANE 1:413-422.
- DAVIES, G. I.
1991 AHI.
- DEARMAN, J. A. (editor).
1989 Studies in the Mesha Inscription and Moab. Atlanta: Scholars Press.
- DEGEN, R.
1969 Altaramäische Grammatik der Inschriften des 10.-8. Jh. v. Chr. AKM 38/3. Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz.
- DELCOR, M.
1968 "Une inscription bilingue étrusco-punique récemment découverte à Pyrgi, son importance religieuse." Le Muséon 81:241-254.

- DEMSKY, A.
1997 "The Name of the Goddess of Ekron: A New Reading." JANES 25:1-5.
1998a "A Royal Inscription from Ekron." IEJ 47:1-16.
1998b "Discovering a Goddess: A new Look at the Ekron Inscription Identifies a Mysterious Deity." BAR 24/5:53-58.
- DEUTSCH, R., and M. HELTZER.
1994 Forty New Ancient West Semitic Inscriptions. Tel Aviv-Jaffa: Archaeological Center Publication.
- DEVER, W. G.
1969-70 "Iron Age Epigraphic Material from the Area of Khirbet el-Kom." HUCA 40/41:159-169.
1971 "Inscription from Khirbet el-Kom." Qadmoniot 4:90-92 (in Hebrew).
- DUKSTRA, K. J.
1995 Life and Loyalty. Leiden: E. J. Brill.
- DIRINGER, D.
1934 Le iscrizioni antico-ebraiche palestinesi. Florence: Felice le Monnier.
1941 "On Ancient Hebrew Inscriptions Discovered at Tell ed-Duweir (Lachish), I, II." PEQ 73:38-56, 89-106.
- DION, P.-E.
1974 La langue de Ya'udi: description et classement de l'ancien parler de Zencirli dans le cadre des langues sémitiques du nord-ouest. Waterloo: La Corporation pour la Publication des Études Académiques en Religion au Canada.
1978 "The Language Spoken in Ancient Sam'al." JNES 37:115-118.
1995 "Aramaean." In CANE 4:1281-1285.
1997 Les Araméens à l'âge du fer: histoire politique et structures sociales. Études bibliques, nouvelle série 34. Paris: J. Gabalda.
- DONBAZ, V.
1990 "Two Neo-Assyrian Stelae in the Antakya and Kahramanmaraş Museums." ARRIM 8:5-24.
- DONNER, H.
1953-54 "Zur Formgeschichte der Ahiram-Inschrift." Wissenschaftliche Zeitschrift (Karl-Marx-Universität, Leipzig). Gesellschafts- und sprachwissenschaftliche Reihe 2/3:283-287.
1969 "Elemente ägyptischen Totenglaubens bei den Aramäern Ägyptens." Pp. 35-44 in Religions en Égypte hellénistique et romaine. Ed. by P. Derchain. Paris: Presses Universitaires de France.
- DORNEMANN, R. H.
1983 The Archeology of the Transjordan in the Bronze and Iron Ages. Milwaukee: Milwaukee Public Museum.
- DRIVER, G. R.
1954 Semitic Writing: From Pictograph to Alphabet. The Schweich Lectures of the British Academy 1944. London: British Academy.
- DUMBRELL, W. J.
1971 "The Tell el-Maskhuṭa Bowls and the 'Kingdom' of Qedar in the Persian Period." BASOR 203:33-44.
1960 Encyclopaedia of Islam. 2nd Edition. Leiden: E. J. Brill.
- DU MESNIL DU BUISSON, C.
1939 "Une tablette magique de la région du Moyen Euphrate." Pp. 1:421-434 in Studies Dussaud.
- DUNAND, M.
1939 "Stèle araméenne dédiée à Melqart." BMB 3:65-76.
1965 "Nouvelles inscriptions phéniciennes du temple d'Echmoun à Bostan ech-Cheikh près Sidon." BMB 18:105-109.
- DUPONT-SOMMER, A.
1939 "L'Inscription de l'amulette d'Arsfan Tash." RHR 120:133-159.
1964 "L'Inscription punique récemment découverte à Pyrgi." JA 252:282-302.
- DUPONT-SOMMER, A., and J. STARCKY.
1956 "Une inscription araméenne inédite de Sfiré." BMB 13:23-41 (+ pls. i-vi).
1960 "Les inscriptions araméennes de Sfiré (siècles I et II)." MPAIBL 15:1-155 (+ pls. i-xxix).
- DUSSAUD, R.
1924 "Les inscriptions phéniciennes du tombeau d'Ahiram, roi de Byblos." Syria 5:135-57.
- ELAYI, J.
1987 "Name of Deuteronomy's Author Found on a Seal Ring." BAR 13:54-56.
1992 "New Light on the Identification of Priest Hanan, son of Hūlqiyahu (2 Kgs. 22)." BiOr 49:680-685.
- EMERTON, J. A.
1982 "New Light on Israelite Religion: The Implications of the Inscriptions from Kuntillet 'Ajrud." ZAW 94:2-20.
- EPH'AL, I.
1982 The Ancient Arabs. Nomads on the Borders of the Fertile Crescent 9th-5th Centuries B.C. Jerusalem: Magnes Press.
- EPH'AL, I., and J. NAVEH.
1989 "Hazaël's Booty Inscriptions." IEJ 39:192-200.
1998 "Remarks on the Recently Published Moussaieff Ostraca." IEJ 48:269-273.
- FABER, A.
1987 "On the Etymology and Use of Yaudi mt." ZDMG 137:278-284.
- FALES, F. M.
1979 "Kilamuwa and the Foreign Kings: Propaganda vs. Power." WO 10:6-22.
1982a "Massimo Sforzo, Minima Res: Maledizioni divine da Tell Fekheriye all'Antico Testamento." Annali della facoltà di lingue e letterature straniere di ca' Foscari 21:1-12.
1982b "Note di Semitico nordoccidentale." VO 5:75-83.
1983 "Le double bilinguisme de la statue de Tell Fekheriye." Syria 60:233-250.
- FENSHAM, F. C.
1977 "The Numeral Seventy in the Old Testament and the Family of Jerubbaal, Ahab, Panammuwa and Athirat." PEQ 109:113-115.
- FERRON, J.
1965 "Quelques remarques à propos de l'inscription phénicienne de Pyrgi." OA 4:181-198.

- FÉVRIER, J.G.
 1948 Rémarques sur le calendrier de Gèzer. Semitica 1:33-41.
 1965 "L'Inscription punique de Pyrgi." CRAIBL 11-13.
- FIEMA, Z. T., and R. N. JONES.
 1990 "The Nabataean King-List Revised: further observations on the second Nabataean Inscription from Tell Esh-Shuqafiya, Egypt." ADAJ 34:239-248.
- FISCHER, W., and H. Rix.
 1968 "Die phönizische-etruskischen Texte der Goldplättchen von Pyrgi." Göttingischer Gelehrte Anzeigen 220:64-94.
- FITZMYER, J. A.
 1966 "The Phoenician Inscription from Pyrgi." JAOS 86:287-297.
 1995 The Aramaic Inscriptions of Sefire. Biblica et Orientalia 19a. Rev. ed. Rome: Biblical Institute.
- FITZMYER, J. A., and S. A. KAUFMAN.
 1992 An Aramaic Bibliography, Part 1: Old, Official and Biblical Aramaic. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press.
- FOX, N. S.
 1997 "Royal Functionaries and State-Administration in Israel and Judah During the First Temple Period." Ph.D. Dissertation University of Pennsylvania.
- FRIEDRICH, J.
 1951 Phönizisch-Punische Grammatik. AnOr 32. Rome: Pontifical Biblical Institute.
 1969 "Nochmals die phönizische Inschrift von Pyrgi." Pp. 205-209 in Studies Althelm, vol. 1.
- FRIEDRICH, J. and W. RÖLLIG.
 1970 PPG.
- FUENTES ESTANOL, M.-J.
 1980 Vocabulario Fenicio. Biblioteca Fenicia 1. Barcelona: Biblioteca Fenicia.
- FULCO, W. J.
 1978 "The 'Ammān Citadel Inscription: a New Collation." BASOR 230:39-43.
 1979 "The Amman Theatre Inscription." JNES 38:37-38.
- GALLING, K.
 1941 "Beschriftete Bildsiegel." ZDPV 64:121-202.
 1950 "Die Achiram-Inschrift im Lichte der Karatepe-Texte." WO 1/5:421-425.
 1963 "Eshmunazar und der Herr der Könige." ZDPV 79:140-151.
- GARBINI, G.
 1954-56 "Note sul 'calendario' di Gezer." AION 6:12-30.
 1968 "Riconsiderando l'iscrizione di Pyrgi." AION 18:229-246.
 1977a "L'iscrizione fenicia di Kilamuwa e il verbo škr in Semitico nordoccidentale." BeO 19:(= 111-112):113-118.
 1977b "L'iscrizione di Eshmun'azar." AION 37:408-412.
 1992 "RSP SPRM." RSF 20:93-94.
- GARBINI, G., and G. LEVI DELLA VIDA.
 1965 "Considerazioni sull'iscrizione punica di Pyrgi." OA 4:35-52.
- GARELLI, P.
 1957 "Mušur (māt Mušri)." Dictionnaire de la Bible, Supplément 5:1468-1474.
 1971 "Nouveau coup d'oeil sur Mušur." Pp. 37-48 in Studies Dupont-Sommer.
- GARFINKEL, Y.
 1985 "A Hierarchic Pattern in the Private Seal Impressions on the lmik Jar-Handles." EJ 18:105-118 (Hebrew).
- GASTER, T. H.
 1942 "A Canaanite Magical Text." Or 11:41-79.
- GEE, J.
 1998 Requirements of Ritual Purity in Ancient Egypt. Ph.D. Dissertation Yale University.
- GELB, I.
 1980 Computer-Aided Analysis of Amorite. AS 21. Chicago: The Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago.
- GEVIRTZ, S.
 1990 "Phoenician wšbrt mlsm and Job 33:23." Maarav 5-6:145-158.
- GILL, D.
 1991 "Subterranean Waterworks of Biblical Jerusalem: Adaptation of a Karst System." Science 254:1467-1471.
 1994 "How They Met." BAR 20/4:20-33.
 1996 "The Geology of the City of David and its Ancient Subterranean Waterworks." Pp. 1-28 in Excavations at the City of David 1978-1985 Directed by Yigal Shiloh. Volume 4: Various Reports. Ed. by D. T. Ariel and A. de Groot. Qedem 35. Jerusalem: The Hebrew University.
- GILULA, M.
 1978/79 "To Yahweh Shomron and to his Asherah." Shnaton 3:129-137 (in Hebrew).
- GINSBERG, H. L.
 1963 "Roots Below and Fruit Above." Pp. 72-76 in Studies Driver.
- GITIN, S.
 1993 "Seventh Century B.C.E. Cultic Elements at Ekron." Pp. 248-258 in BAT 1990.
- GITIN, S., and M. COGAN.
 1999 "A New Type of Dedicatory Inscription from Ekron." IEJ 49:193-202.
- GITIN, S., T. DOTAN, and J. NAVEH.
 1997a "A Royal Dedicatory Inscription from Ekron." IEJ 47:1-16.
 1997b "A Royal Dedication Inscription from Tel Migne / Ekron." Qadmoniot 30:38-43 (in Hebrew).

- GOOD, R. M.
 1979 "The Israelite Royal Steward in the Light of Ugaritic 'l br.'" RB 36:580-582.
 1983 The Sheep of his Pasture: a Study of the Hebrew Noun 'amm and its Semitic Cognates. Chico CA: Scholars Press.
- GÖRG, M.
 1998 "Die Göttin der Ekron-Inschrift." BN 93:9-10.
- GRAYSON, A. K.
 1976 ARI 2. Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz.
 1991 RIMA 2.
- GREENFIELD, J. C.
 1966 "Three Notes on the Sefire Inscription." JSS 11:98-105.
 1971 "Scripture and Inscription: The Literary and Rhetorical Element in Some Early Phoenician Inscriptions." Pp. 253-268 in Studies Albright.
 1972 "The Zakir Inscription and the Danklied." Pp. 174-191 in Proceedings of the Fifth World Congress of Jewish Studies. Vol 1. Jerusalem: World Union of Jewish Studies.
 1973 "Un rite religieux Araméen et ses parallèles." RB 80:46-52.
 1978 "The Dialects of Early Aramaic." JNES 37:93-99.
 1984 "A Touch of Eden." Pp. 219-224 in Orientalia J. Duchesne-Guillemin Emerito Oblata. Leiden: Brill.
 1987 "Aspects of Aramaic Religion." Pp. 67-78 in Studies Cross.
 1991a "Some Glosses on the Sfire Inscriptions." Maarav 7:141-147.
 1991b "Doves' Dung and the Price of Food: The Topoi of II Kings 6:24-7:2." Pp. 121-126 in Studies Soggin.
 1991c "Asylum at Aleppo: A Note on Sfire III, 4-7." Pp. 272-278 in Studies Tadmor.
 1994 "The Aramean God Hadad." EI 24:54-61.
- GREENFIELD, J. C., and A. SHAFFER.
 1983 "Notes on the Akkadian-Aramaic Bilingual Statue from Tell Fekherye." Iraq 49:109-116.
 1985 "Notes on the Curse Formulae of the Tell Fekherye Inscription." RB 92:47-59.
- GREENSTEIN, E. L.
 1982 "'To Grasp the Hem' in Ugaritic Literature." VT 32:217-218.
 1995 "Autobiographies in Ancient Western Asia." CANE 4:2421-2432.
- GRÖNDAHL, F.
 1967 Die Personennamen der Texte aus Ugarit. Studia Pohl 1. Rome: Pontifical Biblical Institute.
- GROPP, D. M., and T. J. LEWIS.
 1985 "Some Problems in the Aramaic Text of the Hadd-Yith'ij Bilingual." BASOR 259:45-61.
- HACKETT, J. A.
 1984 The Balaam Text from Deir 'Alla. HSM 31. Chico: Scholars Press.
- HACKETT, J. A., F. M. CROSS, P. K. MCCARTER, JR., A. YARDENI, A. LEMAIRE, E. ESHEL and A. HURVITZ.
 1997 "Defusing Pseudo-Scholarship: The Siloam Inscription Ain't Hasmonaean." BAR 23/2:41-50, 68-69.
- HADLEY, J. M.
 1987a "Some Drawings and Inscriptions of Two Pithoi from Kuntillet 'Ajrud." VT 37:180-214.
 1987b "The Khirbet el-Qom Inscription." VT 37:50-62.
- HALLO, W. W.
 1992 "Royal Ancestor Worship in the Biblical World." Pp. 381-401 in Studies Talmon.
 1993 "Disturbing the Dead." Studies Sarna 183-192.
 1996 Origins.
- HALLO, W. W., and H. TADMOR.
 1977 "A Lawsuit from Hazor." IEJ 27:1-11 and pl. i.
- HAMMOND, P. C., D. J. JOHNSON, and R. N. JONES.
 1986 "A Religio-Legal Nabataean Inscription from the Atargatis/Al-'Uzza Temple at Petra." BASOR 263:77-80.
- HARAN, M.
 1989 "The Priestly Blessing on Silver Plaques: The Significance of the Discovery at Ketef Hinnom." Cathedra 52:77-89 (in Hebrew).
- HARDING, G. L.
 1971 An Index and Concordance of Pre-Islamic Arabian Names and Inscriptions. Near and Middle East Series 8. Toronto: University of Toronto Press.
- HAWKINS, J. D.
 1982 "The Neo-Hittite States in Syria and Anatolia" in CAH² 3/1:372-441.
 1986 "Royal Statements of Ideal Prices: Assyrian, Babylonian, and Hittite." Pp. 93-106 in Studies Mellink.
 1995 "Karkemish and Karatepe: Neo-Hittite City-States in North Syria." CANE 2:1295-1307.
 2000 CHLI 1.
- HEALEY, J.
 1993a The Nabataean Tomb Inscriptions of Madā'in Šālīh. JSSup 1. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
 1993b "Sources for the Study of Nabataean Law." New Arabian Studies 1:203-214.
 1996 "'May He Be Remembered for Good': An Aramaic Formula." Pp. 177-186 in Studies McNamara.
- HELTZER, M.
 1996 "Two Inscribed Phoenician Vessels in the Form of Pomegranates." AO 14:281-282.
 1999 "Two Ancient West Semitic Seals." SEL 16:45-47.
- HENDEL, R.
 1996 "The Date of the Siloam Inscription: A Rejoinder to Rogerson and Davies." BA 59/4:233-237.
- HERR, L. G.
 1978 The Scripts of Ancient Northwest Semitic Seals. HSM 18. Missoula, MT: Scholars Press.
 1985 "The Servant of Baalis." BA 48:169-172.
 1992 "Epigraphic Finds from Tell El-'Umeiri During the 1989 Season." AUSS 30:187-200.

- HESS, R. S.
1996 "Asherah or Asherata?" Or 65:209-219.
- HESTRIN, R.
1983 "Hebrew Seals of Officials." Pp. 50-54 in Ancient Seals and the Bible. Ed. by L. Gorelick and E. Williams-Forte. Monographic Journals of the Near East. Occasional papers on the Near East, v. 2/1. Malibu, CA: Undena.
- HESTRIN, R. et al.
1973 Ketivot Mesapperot (Inscriptions Reveal). Israel Museum Catalogue no. 100. 2nd ed. Jerusalem: Israel Museum.
- HESTRIN, R., and M. DAYAGI-MENDELS.
1979 Inscribed Seals. First Temple Period. Jerusalem: Israel Museum.
- HEURGON, J.
1966 "The Inscriptions of Pyrgi." JRS 56:6-15.
- HICKS, L.
1982 "Delet and M'gillāh: A Fresh Approach to Jeremiah xxxvi." VT 33:46-66.
- HILLERS, D. R., and E. CUSSINI.
1995 Palmyrene Aramaic Texts. Baltimore and London: Johns Hopkins.
- HOFTIJZER, J., and G. VAN DER KOOIJ.
1976 Aramaic Texts from Deir 'Alla. Leiden: E. J. Brill.
1991 The Balaam Text from Deir 'Alla Re-evaluated. Proceedings of the International Symposium held at Leiden, August 21-24, 1989. Leiden and New York: E. J. Brill.
- HONEYMAN, A. M.
1953 "The Syntax of the Gezer Calendar." JRAS 53-58.
1960 "Two Votaries of Han-'llat." JNES 19:40-41.
- HORBURY, W., and D. NOY.
1992 Jewish Inscriptions of Graeco-Roman Egypt. No. 3. Cambridge/New York: Cambridge University Press.
- HORN, S. H.
1986 "Why the Moabite Stone was Blown into Pieces: 9th-Century B.C. Inscription Adds New Dimension to Biblical Account of Mesha's Rebellion." BAR 12/3:50-61.
- HÜBNER, U.
1988 "Die ersten moabitischen Ostraca." ZDPV 104:68-73.
1992 Die Ammoniter: Untersuchungen zur Geschichte, Kultur und Religion eines transjordanischen Volkes in 1. Jahrtausend v. Chr. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz.
- HUEHNERGARD, J.
1983 "Asseverative *la and Hypothetical *lu/law in Semitic." JAOS 103:569-593.
1987 "The Feminine Plural Jussive in Old Aramaic." ZDMG 137:266-277.
- HURVITZ, A.
1968 "אֲמָרָאִי = Amqar(r)una = 'qrwn." Lšōnenu 23:18-24 (in Hebrew).
- IBN MANZUR, M.
1956 Liṣṭn al-'arab. Beirut: al-Qahirah, J.M.A.
- IBRAHIM, M. M.
1975 "Third Season of Excavations at Sahab, 1975 (Preliminary Report)." ADAJ 20:69-82, pls. 25-29.
- IBRAHIM, M. M., and G. VAN DER KOOIJ.
1991 "The Archaeology of Deir 'Alla, Phase IX." Pp. 16-29 in Hoftijzer and van der Kooij 1991.
- ISHIDA, T.
1985 "'Solomon Who is Greater Than David.' Solomon's Succession in 1 Kings I-II in the Light of the Inscription of Kilamuwa, King of Y'DY-ŠAM'AL." Pp. 145-153 in Congress Volume, Salamanca 1983. Ed. J. A. Emerton. Leiden: E. J. Brill.
- JACKSON, K. P.
1983 The Ammonite Language of the Iron Age. HSM 27. Chico, CA: Scholars Press.
- JANSSEN-WINKELN, K.
1985 Ägyptische Biographien der 22. und 23. Dynastie. Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz.
- JAROŠ, K.
1982 "Zur Inschrift Nr. 3 von Ḥirbet el Qom." BN 19:31-40.
- JAUSSEN, A., and R. SAVIGNAC.
1909 Mission archéologique en arabie. I. Paris: Leroux & Geuthner.
- JOHNSON, J. H.
1976 The Demotic Verbal System. Chicago: Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago.
- JONES, R. N., D. J. JOHNSON, P. C. HAMMOND, and Z. T. FIEMA.
1988 "A Second Nabataean Inscription from Tell Esh-Shuqfiya, Egypt." BASOR 269:47-57.
- KATZENSTEIN, H. J.
1960 "The Royal Steward (Asher 'al ha-Bayith)." IEJ 10:149-154.
- KAUFMAN, S. A.
1970 "Sī'gabbar, Priest of Sahr in Nerab." JAOS 90:270-271.
1974 The Akkadian Influences on Aramaic. AS 19. Chicago and London: The University of Chicago.
1982 "Reflections on the Assyrian-Aramaic Bilingual from Tell-Fakhariyeh." Maarav 3:137-175.
- KEEL, O., and C. UEHLINGER.
1998 Gods, Goddesses, and Images of God in Ancient Israel. Minneapolis: Fortress.
- KEMPINSKI, A.
1990 "Is It Really a Pomegranate from the 'House of the Lord'? — On: N. Avigad, 'An Inscribed Pomegranate from the 'House of the Lord.'" Qadmoniot 23:126 (Hebrew).
- KITCHEN, K. A.
1997 "A Possible Mention of David in the Late Tenth Century BCE and Deity *Dod as dead as the Dodo?" JSOT 76:29-44.

- KLENGEL, H.
1992 Syria: 3000 to 300 BC. A Handbook of Political History. Berlin: Akademie Verlag.
- KLETTER, R.
1991 "The Inscribed Weights of the Kingdom of Judah." Tel Aviv 18:121-163.
1998 Economic Keystones: The Weight System of the Kingdom of Judah. JSOTSup 276. Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press.
- KNAUF, E. A., A. DE PURY, and Th. RÖMER.
1994 "Bayt Dawid ou 'Bayt Dod?" BN 72:60-69.
- KNOOPPERS, G. N.
1992 "The God in His Temple: The Phoenician Text from Pyrgi as a Funerary Inscription." JNES 52:105-120.
- KRAHMALKOV, C.
1974 "The Object Pronouns of the Third Person of Phoenician and Punic." RSF 2:39-43.
- KROPP, M.
1994 "A Puzzle of Old Arabic Tenses and Syntax: the Inscription of 'En 'Avdat" Proceedings of the Seminar for Arabian Studies 24:165-174.
- KWASMAN, T., and S. PARPOLA.
1991 Legal Transactions of the Royal Court of Nineveh, Part I, Tiglath-pileser III through Esarhaddon. SAA 6. Helsinki: University Press.
- KYRELEIS, H.
1988 "Ein altorientalischer Pferdeschnuck aus dem Heraion von Samos." MDAIA 103:37-61.
- LAMBERT, W. G.
1981 "Old Akkadian Ilaba = Ugariûc Ilîb." UF 13:299-301.
- LANCASTER, S. P., and G. A. LONG.
1999 "Where They Met: Separations in the Rock Mass Near the Siloam Tunnel's Meeting Point." BASOR 315:15-26.
- LANDSBERGER, B.
1948 Sam'al. Studien zur Entdeckung der Ruinenstätte Karatepe. I. Liefg. Veröffentlichungen der Türkischen Historischen Gesellschaft 7, num. 16. Ankara.
- LANG, B.
1998 "The Decalogue in the Light of a Newly Published Palaeo-Hebrew Inscription (Hebrew Ostrakon Mousaieff no. 1)." JSOT 77:21-25.
- LAYTON, S. C.
1990 "The Steward in Ancient Israel: A Study of Hebrew (ʿašer) ʿal habbayit in Its Near Eastern Setting." JBL 109:633-649.
- LEHMANN, G.
1994 "Zu den Zerstörungen in Zincirli während des frühen 7. Jahrhunderts v. Chr." MDOG 126:105-122.
- LEMAIRE, A.
1976a "Prières en temps de crise: les inscriptions de Khirbet Beit Lei." RB 83:552-568.
1976b "Notes sur quelques inscriptions sur ivoire provenant de Nimrud." Semítica 26:66-70.
1977 "Les inscriptions de Khirbet el-Qôm et l'Asêrah de Yhwh." RB 84:595-608.
1981 "Une inscription paléo-hébraïque sur grenade en ivoire." RB 88:236-239.
1984a "Le stèle araméenne de Bar-Hadad." Or 53:337-349.
1984b "Date et origine des inscriptions hébraïques et phéniciennes de Kuntilet 'Ajrud." SEL 1:131-143.
1984c "Probable Head of Priestly Scepter from Solomon's Temple Surfaces in Jerusalem." BAR 10/1:24-29.
1987 "Notes d'épigraphie nord-ouest sémitique." Syria 64:205-216.
1990 "SMR dans la petite inscription de Kilamuwa (Zencirli)." Syria 67:323-327.
1991a "La stèle de Mésha et l'histoire de l'ancien Israël." Pp. 143-169 in Studies Soggin.
1991b "Hazaël de Damas, roi d'Aram." Pp. 91-108 in Studies Garelli.
1992 "La stèle araméenne d'Assouan (RES 438, 1806): nouvel examen." Pp. 289-303 in Studies Milik.
1994 "Epigraphie paléstinienne: nouveaux documents. I. Fragment de stèle araméenne de Tell Dan (IXe s. av. J.-C.)." Henoch 16:87-93.
- LEMAIRE, A., and J.-M. DURAND.
1984 Les inscriptions araméennes de Sfiré et l'Assyrie de Shamshi-ilu. Geneva/Paris: Librairie Droz.
- LEPSIUS, R.
1842 Das Totenbuch der Ägypter nach dem hieroglyphischen Papyrus in Turin. Leipzig: G. Wigand.
- LEVINE, B. A.
1989 Leviticus, JPS Torah Commentary. Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society.
1995 "The Semantics of Loss: Two Exercises in Biblical Hebrew Lexicography." Pp. 137-148 in Studies Greenfield.
- LÉVY, I.
1927 "Les inscriptions araméennes de Memphis et l'Épigraphie funéraire de l'Égypte Gréco-Romaine." JA 210:281-310.
- LEVY, J.
1964 Wörterbuch über die Talmudim und Midraschim. Darmstadt: Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft. 4 volumes.
- LEXA, F.
1910 Das demotische Totenbuch der Pariser Nationalbibliothek. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs.
- LIDZBARSKI, M.
1909 "An Old Hebrew Calendar-Inscription from Gezer." Palestine Exploration Fund Quarterly Statement 41:26-29.
- LIPINSKI, E.
1971 "Etymological and Exegetical Notes on the Meša' Inscription." Or 40:325-340.
1974 "From Karatepe to Pyrgi. Middle Phoenician Miscellanea." RSF 2:45-61.
1975a Studies in Aramaic Inscriptions and Onomastics. OLA 1. Leuven: Leuven University.
1975b "La stèle égypto-araméenne de Tumma' fille de Bokkorinif." CdE 50:93-104.
1976 "Review of P.-E. Dion 1974." BiOr 33:231-234.
1977 "North-West Semitic Inscriptions. A Review of Gibson, Textbook of Syrian Semitic Inscriptions." OLP 8:81-117.
1978a "North-west Semitic Inscriptions." OLP 8:81-107.

- 1978b "North Semitic Texts from the First Millennium B.C." Pp. 247-249 in Near Eastern Religious Texts Relating to the Old Testament. Ed. by W. Beyerlin. OTL. Philadelphia: Westminster.
- 1983 "The God ʾArqu-Rashap in the Samalian Hadad Inscription." Pp. 15-21 in Arameans, Aramaic and the Aramaic Literary Tradition. Ed. by M. Sokoloff. Ramat-Gan: Bar-Ilan University.
- 1990 "hng." TWAT 7/1-2:63-71.
- 1992 "Tarshish." P. 440 in DDCP.
- 1994 Studies in Aramaic Inscriptions and Onomastics II. OLA 57. Louvain: Peeters.
- LIVER, J.
1967 "The Wars of Mesha, King of Moab." PEQ 99:14-31.
- LIVERANI, M.
1991 "Kilamuwa 7-8 e Il Re 7." Pp. 117-184 in Studies Soggin.
- MAIER, W. A. III
1992 "Hadad." in ABD 1:11.
- MALININE, M., G. POSENER, and J. VERCOUTTER.
1968 Catalogue des stèles du Sérapéum de Memphis. Paris: Éditions des Musées Nationaux.
- MALLOWAN, M. E. L.
1966 Nimrud and Its Remains. London: John Murray.
- MARAZZI, M.
1990 Il Geroglifico anatolico: problemi di analisi e prospettive di ricerca. Biblioteca di ricerche linguistiche e filologiche 24. Rome: Dipartimento di studi glottoantropologici università 'la Sapienza'.
- MARGALIT, B.
1986 "Why King Mesha of Moab Sacrificed His Oldest Son." BAR 12/6:62-63, 76.
1989 "Some Observations on the Inscription and Drawing from Khirbet el-Qôm." VT 39:371-378.
- MAYSTRE, C.
1937 Les déclarations d'innocence livre des morts, chapitre 125. Cairo: Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale.
- MAZAR, A.
1990 Archaeology of the Land of the Bible New York: Doubleday.
- MAZAR, B.
1975 "'En Gev." EAEHL 2:381-385.
- MAZAR, B., A. BIRAN, M. DOTHAN, and I. DUNAYEVSKY.
1964 "'En Gev. Excavations in 1961." IEJ 14:1-49.
- MCCARTER, P. K., Jr.
1987 "Aspects of the Religion of the Israelite Monarchy: Biblical and Epigraphic Data." Pp. 137-155 in Studies Cross.
- MCCARTHY, D. J.
1978 Treaty and Covenant: A Study in Form in the Ancient Oriental Documents and in the Old Testament. Rev. ed. Rome: Biblical Institute.
- MERIGGI, P.
1967 Manuale di eteo geroglifico 2/1: Testi neo-etei più o meno completi. Incunabula Graeca 14. Rome. Edizioni dell'Ateneo.
- MESHEL, Z.
1979 "Did Yahweh Have a Consort? The New Religious Inscriptions from the Sinai." BAR 5/2:24-35.
1987 A Religious Centre from the Time of the Judaean Monarchy on the Border of Sinai. Inscriptions: E (1). Israel Museum Catalogue 175. Jerusalem: Israel Museum.
- MESHORER, Y.
1975 Nabataean Coins. Qedem 3. Jerusalem: Institute of Archaeology.
- MEYERS, C. L., and E. M. MEYERS.
1987 Haggai, Zechariah 1-8. AB 25B. Garden City, NY: Doubleday.
- MILIK, J. T., and F. M. CROSS.
1954 "Inscribed Javelin-Heads from the Period of the Judges: A Recent Discovery in Palestine." BASOR 134:5-15.
- MILLARD, A. R.
1962 "Alphabetic Inscriptions on Ivories from Nimrud." Iraq 24:41-51.
1984 "The Etymology of Eden." VT 34:103-106.
1990 "The Homeland of Zakkur." Semítica 39:47-52.
1991 "Variable Spellings in Hebrew and Other Ancient Texts." JTS 42:106-115.
1993a "The Tell Fekheriyeh Inscriptions." Pp. 518-524 in BAT 1990.
1993b "Eden, Bit Adini and Beth Eden." EI 24:173*-177*.
1994 The Eponyms of the Assyrian Empire 910-612 BC. SAAS 2. Helsinki: The Neo-Assyrian Text Corpus Project.
- MILLARD, A. R., and P. BORDREUIL.
1982 "A Statue from Syria with Assyrian and Aramaic Inscriptions." BA 45:135-141.
- MILLER, J. M.
1974 "The Moabite Stone as a Memorial Stela." PEQ 106:9-18.
- MILLER, P. D., Jr.
1980 "El, Creator of the Earth." BASOR 239:43-46.
1981 "Psalms and Inscriptions." Pp. 311-332 in Congress Volume, Vienna, 1980. Ed. by J. A. Emerton. VTSup 32. Leiden: Brill.
- MITCHELL, T.
1985 "Another Palestinian Inscribed Arrowhead." Pp. 136-153 in Studies Tufnell.
- MITTMANN, S.
1981 "Die Grabinschrift des Sängers Uriahu." ZDPV 97:139-152.
1989 "A Confessional Inscription from the Year 701 BC Praising the Reign of Yahweh." Acta Academica 21/3:17-23.
- MOMMSEN, H., I. PERLMAN, and J. YELLIN.
1984 "The Provenience of the lmk Jars." IEJ 34:89-113.

- MORPURGO DAVIES, A., and J. D. HAWKINS.
1987 "The Late Hieroglyphic Luwian Corpus: Some New Lexical Recognitions." Bibliothèque des Cahiers de l'Institut de Linguistique de Louvain 37: Hethitica VIII:267-295.
- MOSCATI, S.
1951 L'epigrafa Ebraica Antica. 1935-1950. BibOr 15. Rome: Pontifical Biblical Institute.
1988 "Stelae." Pp. 304-327 in Moscati.
- MULLEN, E. T.
1992 "Divine Assembly." ABD 2:214-217.
- MÜLLER, H.-P.
1985 TUAT 1:638-640; 640-645.
- MURAOKA, T.
1979 "Hebrew Philological Notes." AJBI 5:88-104.
1984 "The Tell-Fekherye Bilingual Inscription and Early Aramaic." Abr-Nahrain 22:79-117.
- MURAOKA, T., and B. PORTEN.
1998 A Grammar of Egyptian Aramaic. Leiden: E. J. Brill.
- NA'AMAN, N.
1979 "Sennacherib's Campaign to Judah and the Date of the LMLK Stamps." VT 29:61-86.
1986 "Hezekiah's Fortified Cities and the LMLK Stamp." BASOR 261:5-21.
1991 "Forced Participation in Alliances in the Course of the Assyrian Campaigns to the West." Pp. 80-98 in Studies Tadmor.
- NAVEH, J.
1963 "Old Hebrew Inscriptions in a Burial Cave." IEJ 13:74-92.
1975 "Aramaic Ostraca." Pp. 165-204 in Aharoni 1975.
1979 "Graffiti and Dedications." BASOR 235:27-30.
1980 "Review of Herr 1978." BASOR 239:75-76.
1982 Early History of the Alphabet. Jerusalem: Magnes, and Leiden: Brill.
1985 "Writing and Scripts in Seventh-Century Philistia: The New Evidence from Tell Jemmeh." IEJ 35:9-18.
1987 "Proto-Canaanite, Archaic Greek and the Script of the Aramaic Text on the Tell Fakhariyah Statue." Pp. 101-113 in Studies Cross.
1997 "Preface." Pp. 11-13 in Avigad and Sass 1997.
1998 "Achish-Ikusu in the Light of the Ekron Dedication." BASOR 310:35-37.
- NAVILLE, E.
1886 Das ägyptische Totenbuch der XVIII. bis XX. Dynastie aus verschiedenen Urkunden zusammengestellt und herausgegeben. 2 vols. Berlin: A. Asher & Co.
- NEGEV, A.
1963 "Nabatean Inscriptions from 'Avdat (Oboda)." IEJ 13:113-124.
1971 "A Nabatean Epitaph from Trans-Jordan." IEJ 21:50-52.
1986 "Obodas the God." IEJ 36:56-60.
- NIEHR, H.
1994 "Zum Totenkult der Könige von Sam'al im 9. und 8. Jh. v. Chr." SEL 11:58-73.
- NOJA, S.
1989 "Über die älteste arabische Inschrift, die vor kurzem entdeckt wurde." Pp. 187-194 in Studies Macuch.
- NOTH, M.
1928 Die israelitischen Personennamen im Rahmen der gemeinsemitischen Namengebung. BWANT. 3rd series, no. 10; Stuttgart: Kohlhammer.
1961 "Der historische Hintergrund der Inschriften von Sefire." ZDPV 77:118-172.
- NOUGAYROL, J., et al.
1968 Ugaritica 5.
- O'CONNOR, M.
1977 "The Rhetoric of the Kilamuwa Inscription." BASOR 226:13-29.
1987 "The Poetic Inscription from Khirbet el-Qom." VT 37:224-330.
- OLYAN, S. M.
1988 Asherah and the Cult of Yahweh in Israel. SBLMS 34; Atlanta: Scholars Press.
- OTZEN, B.
1990 "The Aramaic Inscriptions." Pp. 267-318 in Hama II.2. Les objets de la période dite Syro-Hittite (Age du fer). Ed. by P. J. Rijs, and M.-L. Buhl. København: Nationalmuseet.
- PARDEE, D.
1978 "Letters from Tel Arad." UF 10:289-336.
1987 "Review of Gibson, SSI 3." JNES 46:137-142.
1996 "Siloam Tunnel Inscription." OEANE 5:41-42.
- PARDEE, D., and R. D. BIGGS.
1984 "Review of Abou Assaf, Bordreuil and Millard 1982." JNES 43:253-257.
- PARKER, S.
1997 Stories in Scripture and Inscriptions. Comparative Studies on Narratives in Northwest Semitic Inscriptions and the Hebrew Bible. New York-Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- PARPOLA, S.
1970 Neo-Assyrian Toponyms. AOAT 6. Kevelaer: Butzon & Bercker.
1985 "Si'Gabbar of Nerab Resurrected." OLP 16:273-275.
- PECKHAM, J. B.
1968 The Development of the Late Phoenician Scripts. Cambridge, MA: Harvard.

- PIKE, D. M.
1990 Israelite Theophoric Personal Names in the Bible and their Implications for Religious History. Ph.D. dissertation University of Pennsylvania, 1990. (Photocopy, Ann Arbor, MI: UMI, 1993).
- PITARD, W. T.
1987 Ancient Damascus. Winona Lake, IN: Eisenbrauns.
1988 "The Identity of the Bir-Hadad of the Melqart Stela." BASOR 272:3-21.
- POLLEY, M. E.
1980 "Hebrew Prophecy Within the Council of Yahweh, Examined in its Ancient Near Eastern Setting." SIC 1:141-156.
- PORTEN, B.
1968 Archives from Elephantine. Berkeley: University of California Press.
1990 "The Calendar of Aramaic Texts from Achaemenid and Ptolemaic Egypt." Pp. 13-32 in Irano-Judaica II. Ed. by S. Shaked and A. Netzer. Jerusalem: Ben-Zvi Institut.
- POSTGATE, J. N.
1976 Fifty Neo-Assyrian Legal Documents. Warminster: Aris and Phillips.
- PUECH, E.
1977 "Milkom, le dieu ammonite, en Amos I 15." VT 27:117-125.
1987 "Les Admonitions de Balaam (première partie)." Pp. 13-30 in Studies Grelot.
1992 "La stèle de Bar-Hadad à Melqart et les rois d'Arpad." RB 99:311-334.
- QUACK, J. F.
1993 "Eine ägyptische Paralle zu KAI 214:32f?" ZDPV 109:37-38.
- RABINOWITZ, I.
1956 "Aramaic Inscriptions of the Fifth Century B.C.E. from a North-Arab Shrine in Egypt." JNES 15:1-9.
1959 "Another Aramaic Record of the North-Arabian Goddess Han-'ilat." JNES 18:154-155.
- RAHTJEN, B. D.
1961 "A Note concerning the Form of the Gezer Tablet." PEQ 93:70-72.
- RAINEY, A. F.
1969 "'Ben Hamelekh' be-Ugarit ve-'ešel ha-Hittim." Leshonenu 33:304-308 (in Hebrew).
1975 "The Prince and the Pauper." UF 7:427-432.
1982 "Wine from the King's Vineyards." EI 16:177-181 (Hebrew).
1998 "Syntax, Hermeneutics and History." IEJ 48:239-251.
- REED, W. L., and F. V. WINNETT.
1963 "A Fragment of an Early Moabite Inscription from Kerak." BASOR 172:1-9.
- REIMER, E., and D. PINGREE.
1975 The Venus Tablets of Amisaduqa, Babylonian Planetary Omens 1. BiMes 2. Malibu CA: Undena.
1981 Babylonian Planetary Omens 2, Enuma Anu Enlil (EAE). Tablets 50-51. Malibu CA: Undena.
- RENDSBURG, G. A.
1995 "On the Writing bi-dwd in the Aramaic Inscription from Tel Dan." IEJ 45:22-25.
- ROBERTS, J. J. M.
1972 The Earliest Semitic Pantheon. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press.
- RÖLLIG, W.
1974 "Die Amulette von Arslan Taş." NESE 2:17-28.
1988 "Die aramäische Inschrift für Haza'el und ihr Duplikat." MDAL 103:62-75.
1995 "Phoenician and the Phoenicians in the Context of the Ancient Near East." Pp. 203-214 in I Fenici: ieri - oggi - domani. ricerche, scoperte, progetti, Roma, 3-5 marzo 1994. Rome: Gruppo editoriale internazionale.
1999 "Appendix 1: The Phoenician Inscriptions." Pp. 50-81 in CHLI 2.
- ROGERSON, J. R., and P. R. DAVIES.
1996 "Was the Siloam Tunnel Built by Hezekiah?" BA 59/3:138-149.
- RONZEVILLE, S.
1930-1931 "Fragments d'inscriptions araméennes des environs d'Alep." MUSJ 15:237-260.
- VAN ROOY, H. F.
1989 "The Structure of the Aramaic Treaties of Sefire." Journal of Semitics 1:133-139.
- RÖSEL, H. N.
1986 "Zur Formulierung der aaronitischen Segens auf den Amuletten von Ketef Hinnom." BN 35:30-36.
- ROSENTHAL, F.
1955 "Kilamuwa." In ANET 654.
- SADER, H.
1987 Les états araméens de Syrie depuis leur fondation jusqu'à leur transformation en provinces assyriennes. Beirut Texte und Studien 36. Beirut and Wiesbaden: F. Steiner Verlag.
- SANDERS, T. K.
1997 "An Ammonite Ostrakon from Tall al-'Umayri." Pp. 331-36 in Madaba Plains Project 3. Ed. by L. G. Herr, et al. Berrien Springs, MI: Andrews University Institute of Archaeology.
- SASS, B.
1988 The Genesis of the Alphabet and Its Development in the Second Millennium BC. AAT 13. Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz.
1993 "The Pre-Exilic Hebrew Seals." Pp. 194-256 in Sass and Uehlinger 1993.
- SASS, B., and C. UEHLINGER.
1993 Studies in the Iconography of Northwest Semitic Inscribed Seals. OBO 125. Fribourg: University Press, and Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht.

- SASSON, V.
 1982 "The Siloam Tunnel Inscription." PEQ 114:111-117.
 1985 "The Aramaic Text of the Tell Fakhriyah Assyrian-Aramaic Bilingual Inscription." ZAW 97:86-103.
 1997 "The Inscription of Achish, Governor of Ekron, and Philistine Dialect, Cult and Culture." UF 29:627-639.
- SCHÄFER-LICHTENBERGER, C.
 1998 "PTGJH — Göttin und Herrin von Ekron." BN 91:64-76.
- SCHARBART, J.
 1975 "brk." TDOT 2:279-308.
- SCHMIDT, B.
 1994 Israel's Beneficent Dead. Ancestor Cult and Necromancy in Ancient Israelite Religion and Tradition. FAT 11. Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr.
- SCHNEIDER, Ts.
 1991 "Six Biblical Signatures. Seals and Seal Impressions of Six Personages Recovered." BAR 17/4:26-33.
- SEGAL, J. B.
 1962 "yrh in the Gezer Calendar." JSS 7:212-221.
- SHEA, W. H.
 1977 "Ostrakon II from Heshbon." AUSS 15:117-25.
 1981 "The Carpentras Stela: A Funerary Poem." JAOS 101:215-217.
 1988 "Commemorating the Final Breakthrough of the Siloam Tunnel." Pp. 431-442 in Studies Ehrman.
 1990 "The Khirbet el-Qom Tomb Inscription Again." VT 40:110-116.
 1991 "The Architectural Layout of the Amman Citadel Inscription Temple." PEQ 123:62-66.
- SHILOH, Y.
 1986 "A Group of Hebrew Bullae from the City of David." IEJ 36:16-38.
 1993 "Jerusalem: Period of the Monarchy. The Water Supply Systems." NEAEHL 2:709-712.
- SMELIK, K. A. D.
 1987 Historische Dokumente aus dem alten Israel. Kleine Vandenhoeck-Reihe 1528. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht.
 1990 "The Literary Structure of King Mesha's Inscription." JSOT 46:21-30.
 1991 WAI.
 1992 Converting the Past: Studies in Ancient Israelite and Moabite Historiography. OTS 28. Leiden: Brill.
- SMITH, M.
 1993 The Liturgy of Opening the Mouth for Breathing. Oxford: Griffith Institute, Ashmolean Museum.
- SNIR, R.
 1993 "The Inscription of 'En 'Abdat: an early evolutionary stage of ancient Arabic poetry." Abr-Naharin 31:110-125.
- SOKOLOFF, M.
 1990 A Dictionary of Jewish Babylonian Aramaic. Ramat Gan: Bar Ilan University Press.
- SPELJING, S. D.
 1988 "KAI 24 Re-Examined." UF 20:323-337.
- SPIEGELBERG, W.
 1901 Aegyptische und griechische Eigennamen aus Mummienetiketten der römischen Kaiserzeit. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs.
 1904 Die demotischen Denkmäler. Cairo: Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale.
- SPYCKET, A.
 1985 "La statue bilingue de Tell Fekheriye." RA 79:67-68.
- STARCKY, J.
 1980 "Inscription nabatéenne de Madaba." Pp. 76-77 in Inoubliable Petra: Le royaume nabatéen aux confins du désert. Ed. by D. Homès-Fredericq. Bruxelles: Musées Royaux d'Art et d'Histoire.
- STARK, J. K.
 1971 Personal Names in Palmyrene Inscriptions. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- STARKE, F.
 1990 Untersuchung zur Stammbildung des keilschrift-luwischen Nomens. StBoT 31. Wiesbaden: O. Harrassowitz.
- STERN, P. D.
 1991 The Biblical Herem. BJS 211. Atlanta: Scholars Press.
- SWIGGERS, P.
 1981 "Notes on the Phoenician Inscription of Kilamuwa." RSO 55:1-4.
 1983 "Commentaire philologique sur l'inscription phénicienne du roi Kilamuwa." RSF 11:133-147.
- TALLQVIST, K. L.
 1905 Neubabylonisches Namenbuch. Helsingfors.
- TALMON, S.
 1963 "The Gezer Calendar and the Seasonal Cycle of Ancient Canaan." JAOS 83:177-187.
 1986 King, Cult and Calendar in Ancient Israel. Leiden and Jerusalem: Brill.
- TAWIL, H.
 1970-71 "A Note on the Ahiram Inscription." JANES 3:33-36.
 1973 "The End of the Hadad Inscription in the Light of Akkadian." JNES 32:477-482.
 1974 "Some Literary Elements in the Opening Sections of the Hadad, Zakir, and Nêrab II Inscriptions in Light of East and West Semitic Royal Inscriptions." Or 43:40-65.
- TEIXIDOR, J.
 1987 "Aramean Religion." Pp. 1:367-372 in Encyclopedia of Religion. Ed. by M. Eliade. New York: MacMillan.
- THOMPSON, T. L.
 1995 "'House of David': An Eponymic Referent to Yahweh as Godfather." SJOT 9:59-74.

- TIGAY, J. H.
 1986 You Shall Have No Other Gods. Israelite Religion in the Light of Hebrew Inscriptions. HSS 31. Atlanta: Scholars Press.
 1987 "Israelite Religion: The Onomastic and Epigraphic Evidence." Pp. 157-194 in Studies Cross.
- TOMBACK, R. S.
 1978 A Comparative Semitic Lexicon of the Phoenician and Punic Languages. SBLDS 32. Missoula, Montana: Scholars Press.
- TORCZYNER, H.
 1947 "A Hebrew Incantation against Night-Demons from Biblical Times." JNES 6:18-29.
- TORREY, C. C.
 1926 "A Specimen of Old Aramaic Verse." JAOS 46:241-247.
- TROPPER, J.
 1992 "Sam'alisch mit 'wahrlich' und das Phänomen der Aphärese im Semitischen." Or 61:448-453.
 1993 Die Inschriften von Zincirli. Neue Edition und vergleichende Grammatik des phönischen, sam'alischen und aramäischen Textkorpus. ALASP 6. Münster: Ugarit Verlag.
 1994 "Sie knurrten wie Hunde» Psalm 59,16, Kilamuwa:10 und die Semantik der Wurzel hwn." ZAW 106:87-95.
- TUBB, J. N.
 1988 "Tell es-Sa'idiyeh: Preliminary Report on the First Three Seasons of Renewed Excavations." Levant 20:23-88.
- TUFNELL, O. et al.
 1953 Lachish III. London: Oxford University Press.
- USSISHKIN, D.
 1976 "Royal Judean Storage Jars and Private Seal Impressions." BASOR 223:1-13.
 1977 "The Destruction of Lachish by Sennacherib and the Dating of the Royal Judean Storage Jars." Tel Aviv 4:28-60.
 1979 "Answers at Lachish." BAR 5/6:16-39.
- VAN DEN BRANDEN, A.
 1961 "La tavolette magica di Arslan Tash." BeO 3:41-47.
- VAN DER TOORN, K.
 1995 "Rakib-El." Pp. 1296-1297 in DDD.
- VANSCHOONWINKEL, J.
 1990 "Mopsos: Légendes et réalité." Hethitica 10:185-211.
- VAUGHAN, A. G.
 1996 "The Chronicler's Account of Hezekiah: The Relationship of Historical Data to a Theological Interpretation of 2 Chronicles 29-32. PhD. dissertation Princeton Theological Seminary.
 1999 Theology, History, and Archaeology in the Chronicler's Account of Hezekiah. Archaeology and Biblical Studies 4. Atlanta: Scholars Press.
- DE VAUX, R.
 1961 Ancient Israel. New York: McGraw Hill.
- VERHOEVEN, U.
 1993 Das samitische Totenbuch der Jahreszeit. Bonn: R. Habelt.
- VIROLLEAUD, Ch.
 1957 Le Palais royal d'Ugarit. Vol. 2. Textes en cunéiformes alphabétiques des Archives Est, Ouest et Centrales. Ed. by Ch. Virolleaud. Paris: n.p.
- VRIEZEN, Th. C.
 1965 "The Edomite Deity Qaus." OTS 14:330-353.
- WALLIS, G.
 1965 "Die vierzig Jahre der achten Zeile der Mesa-Inschrift." ZDPV 81:180-186.
- WEINFELD, M.
 1984 "Kuntillet 'Ajrud Inscriptions and Their Significance." SEL 1:121-130.
- WEIPPERT, H.
 1988 Palästina in vorhellenistischer Zeit. Handbuch der Archäologie, Vorderasien 2/1. Munich: C. H. Beck.
- WEIPPERT, M.
 1964 "Archäologischer Jahrsbericht." ZDPV 80:150-195.
 1969 "Elemente phönikischer und kilikischer Religion in den Inschriften vom Karatepe." XVII. Deutscher Orientalistentag. Vorträge, I. ZDMGSup 1/1:191-217.
 1981 "Assyrische Propheten der Zeit Asarhaddons und Assurbanipals." Pp. 71-117 in ARINH.
- WILLIAMS, R. J.
 1977 "Ägypten und Israel." TRE 1:492-505.
- WILLIAMSON, H. G. M.
 1992 "Sanballat." ABD 5:973-975.
- WINNETT, F. V.
 1937 A Study of the Lihyanite and Thamudic Inscriptions. Toronto: University of Toronto.
- WIRGIN, W.
 1960 "The Calendar Text from Gezer." EI 6:*9-*12.
- WUTHNOW, H.
 1930 Die semitischen Menschnennamen in griechischen Inschriften und Papyri des vorderen Orients. Leipzig: Dietrich.
- XELLA, P.
 1991 Baal Hammon. Recherches sur l'identité et l'histoire d'un dieu phénico-punique. Collezione di Studi Fenici 32. Rome: Consiglio nazionale delle ricerche.
- YADIN, Y.
 1969 "Excavations at Hazor, 1968-1969: Preliminary Communiqué." IEJ 19:1-19.
- YADIN, Y., J. C. GREENFIELD, and Y. YARDENI.
 1996 "A deed of Grant in Aramaic Found in Nahal Hever; Papyrus Yadin 7." EI 25:383-403 (Joseph Aviram Volume) (Hebrew).

- YARDENI, A.
1991 "Remarks on the Priestly Blessing on Two Ancient Amulets from Jerusalem." VT 41:176-185.
- YASSINE, Kh., and J. TEIXIDOR.
1986 "Ammonite and Aramaic Inscriptions from Tell El-Mazar in Jordan." BASOR 264:48-49.
- YEVIN, S.
1954 "ben-hamelekh." Col. 160 in Ensiqlpedya Miqra'it (Encyclopaedia Biblica). Ed. by E. L. Sukenik, et al. Jerusalem: Mosad Bialik.
1971 "peqidut." Cols. 547-548 in Ensiqlpedya Miqra'it (Encyclopaedia Biblica). Ed. by E. L. Sukenik, et al. Jerusalem: Mosad Bialik.
- YOUNG, I.
1993 "Klmw br Tml." Syria 70:95-98.
- YOUNGER, K. L., Jr.
1986 "Panammuwa and Bar-Rakib: Two Structural Analyses." JANES 18:91-103.
1994 "The Siloam Tunnel Inscription — An Integrated Reading." UF 26:543-556.
1998 "The Phoenician Inscription of Azatiwada. An Integrated Reading," JSS 43:11-47.
- YOYOTTE, J.
1995 "Berlin 7707. Un détail." Transeuphratène 9:91.
- ZADOK, R.
1988 The Pre-Hellenistic Israelite Anthroponymy and Prosopography. Leuven: Peeters.
- ZEVI, Z.
1977 "A Phoenician Inscription and Biblical Covenant Theology." IEJ 27:110-118.
1984 "The Khirbet el-Qôm Inscription Mentioning a Goddess." BASOR 255:39-47.
1990 "Phoenician nbš/npš and its Hebrew Semantic Equivalents." Maarav 5/6:337-344.
- ZOBEL, H.-J.
1971 "Das Gebet um Abwendung der Not und seine Erhöhung in den Klageliedern des Alten Testaments und in der Inschrift des Königs Zakir von Hamath." VT 2:91-99.
-

AKKADIAN MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS

This page intentionally left blank

A. BUILDING AND DISPLAY INSCRIPTIONS
(Akkadian and Sumerian)

This page intentionally left blank

1. OLD AKKADIAN INSCRIPTIONS

INSCRIPTION OF SARGON: FOUNDATION OF THE AKKADIAN EMPIRE (2.89)

Burkhard Kienast

This inscription, originally encarved on the socle of a statue, is preserved only on two clay tablets containing a collection of several inscriptions of Sargon (2334-2279 BCE), Rīmuš (2278-2270 BCE) and Maništūsu (2269-2255 BCE). The text deals with the defeat of Lugalzagesi of Uruk and his allies, a victory which eventually led to the foundation of the Akkadian Empire.

Titles of the king (lines 1-11)

Sargon, king of Akkade, solicitor of Ištar,
king of the Universe,
anointed priest of An,
king of the Land,
governor of Enlil.

Victory over Lugalzagesi of Uruk (lines 12-34)

He won in battle with Uruk.
Fifty city-rulers he ...¹ with the mace of Abā²
and he conquered the city.
and tore down its walls.
And he captured
Lugalzagesi, king of Uruk, in battle
(and) led him in a neck-stock to the Gate (of the temple) of Enlil.

Victory over the city of Ur (lines 36-46)

Sargon, king of Akkade, won in battle with Ur
and he conquered the city
and tore down its walls.

Victory over the state of Lagaš (lines 47-61)

He conquered É-nin-MAR.KI
and tore down its walls.
He conquered its territory
as well as Lagaš (down) to the sea;
he washed his weapons in the sea.

Victory over Umma (lines 62-70)

He won in battle with Umma
and he conquered the city
and tore down its walls.

Description of the empire (lines 71-108)

Sargon, king of the Land:
Enlil did not give him a rival,
(but) he gave him indeed
the Upper Sea and the Lower (Sea)
From the Lower Sea up to the Upper Sea citizens of Akkade (now)
hold governorships.
Even Mari and Elam
stand (at service) before Sargon, king of the Land.
Sargon, king of the Land,
restored (?) Kiš
(and) let them both ... the city.³

Curse formula (lines 109-131)

As for one who removes this inscription, may Enlil and Šamaš pull out his roots
and pick up his seed.
Whoever takes away this statue,
may Enlil take away his son;
may he break his weapon:
He shall not last before Enlil.

Colophon

Inscription on the socle (of a statue);
it is written in front of Lugalzagesi.

¹ The syntax requires at this place a predicate left out by the copyist.

² Abā is the clan god of the Sargonic kings. The name (*A-ba₄) is read ū-a-ba₄ by others on ground of a late entry in a god list; see in detail Kienast 1990:203.

³ Lines 103-108 are difficult. Frayne translates: "Sargon ... altered the two sites of Kiš. He made the two (parts of Kiš) occupy (one) city" following Edzard 1980:610f. This refers to the unification of Kiš and Īursagkalama in one city, which seems to be out of date. Our translation is based on the Sum. version of a bilingual parallel.

REFERENCES

Text: Gelb and Kienast 1990:170-174; Frayne 1993:13-15.

INSCRIPTION OF NARĀM-SĪN: DEIFICATION OF THE KING (2.90)

Burkhart Kienast

This inscription is preserved on the socle of a statue made of copper, representing a crouching male figure of a laḫmu-Monster with the upper part of the body missing. The statue was found 1975 near Bāšetkī, a small village on the way from Mossul to Zākhō, during road construction. The text deals with the background of the deification of Narām-sin and the erection of his chapel at Akkade. Henceforth rulers of Babylonia often wrote their name with the divine determinative to underline the claim of rulership over all of Babylonia, a custom that ended with the foundation of the Hammurabi Empire.

The king's title (lines 1-4)

Narām-Sin, the Mighty, king of Akkade:^a

Summary of the great revolt (lines 5-19)

When the Four Quarters (of the world)
all together revolted against him, he won nine battles in only one year through the love Ištar showed to him and he captured the kings who had risen against him.

Request for deification (lines 20-56)

Because he strengthened the base of his city
in these hard times,
(the citizen of) his city requested him
from Ištar in E'anna, from Enlil in Nippur,

^a Gen 10:9-10

from Dagān in Tuttul,^b from Ninḫursag in Keš, from Enki/E'a in Eridu,
from Sin in Ur,
from Šamaš in Sippar
(and) from Nergal in Kutha^c
(to become) the god of their city and they built a temple for him in the midst of Akkade.

^b 1 Sam 5:2-7, etc.

^c 2 Kgs 17:30

Curse formula (lines 57-74)

As for one who removes this inscription, may Šamaš and Ištar and Nergal,
the solicitor of the king,
and all those gods (mentioned) pull out his roots
and pick up his seed.

REFERENCES

Text: Gelb and Kienast 1990:81-83; Frayne 1993:113-114. Studies: Hallo 1999b.

INSCRIPTION OF NARĀM-SĪN: CAMPAIGN AGAINST ARMĀNUM AND EBLA (2.91)

Burkhart Kienast

This inscription was originally encased on the socle of a statue also showing the relief of a city on top of a mountain; it is preserved in three Old Babylonian copies on clay tablets from Ur. Exemplar A contains lines 1-118 and the captions describing the city, exemplar B has the lines 119-185 and two short captions while exemplar C seems to contain the complete text of A and B; the beginning of C is lost and therefore only a few lines (100-106) are parallel with A. The text deals with a campaign of Narām-Sin to northern Syria and with the conquest of Armānum and Ebla.

Summary of the campaign (lines 1-60)

Concerning the fact¹ from old from the creation of men no one among the kings

had overthrown
Armānum and Ebla:
With the help of the weapon of Nergal
Narām-Sin,² the Mighty,

¹ The beginning of the inscription is not given in the copy, probably because the original was in a fragmentary condition when copied. We expect the king's titles and a report on the cities conquered and the enemies captured or killed.

² The name of the king is written here and elsewhere in exemplar A with the divine determinative (⁴*Na-ra-am-EN.ZU*), in exemplars B and C without it (Na-ra-am-EN.ZU). Therefore, Frayne argues that B and C represent an inscription different from A. But the reconstruction of C shows there is exactly the space needed for A lost and both exemplars, A and C overlap just in the unusual "Declaration of Narāmsin" (see note 4). Given the fact that we deal here with an OB copy of unknown history the problem is still open for discussion.

opened the only path (there) and he (Nergal) gave him
Armānum and Ebla.
He also granted him
the Amanus, the Cedar Forest, and the Upper Sea.
Indeed,
with help of the weapon of Dagān,
who has made his kingship great,
Narām-Sîn, the Mighty, conquered
Armānum and Ebla.
And from the bank of the Euphrates until Ulišum
he subjugated the people whom Dagān granted him recently and they now carry the basket (in service) of Abā, his god.
Finally, he won control over the Amanus, the Cedar Forest.

Dedication formula (lines 61-81)

When Dagān had rendered judgement
for Narām-Sîn, the Mighty, and given Riš-Adad, king of Armānum,³ in his hand,
so that he (Narām-Sîn) himself could take him (Rišadad) prisoner in the midst of his 'entrance',⁴ he (Narām-Sîn) fashioned his statue from diorite
and dedicated it to Sîn.

Declaration of Narām-Sîn (lines 82-118)⁴

Thus (said) Narām-Sîn, the Mighty,
king of the Four Quarters (of the world):
'Dagān gave me Armānum and Ebla and I captured Riš-Adad, king of Armānum.
And at that time I fashioned a likeness of myself
and dedicated it to Sîn.
No one shall remove my name!
May my statue stand in front of Sîn.
What(ever) his god allots to someone may he perform;
(but) the task I had to perform was exceeding.'⁵

Curse formula (lines 119-185)⁶

Whoever removes the name
of Narām-Sîn, the Mighty,
king of the Four Quarters (of the world),
and puts his name on the statue
of Narām-Sîn, the Mighty,
saying "(it is) my statue", or shows (the statue) to another man saying "remove his name and put my name in,"
may Sîn, the owner of this statue,
and Ištar Annunītum,
An,
Enlil,
Abā, Sîn, Šamaš,
Nergal,
Ūm,
Ninkarak
(and) the great gods
all together
curse him with an evil curse;
he shall not hold the scepter for Enlil
nor the kingship for Ištar;
he shall not last before his god;
Ninhursag and Nintu shall not grant him
a son or heir;
Adad and Nisaba
shall not make his furrow prosper; Enki/E'a shall fill his (irrigation) ditch with mud and not increase his understanding.
... ..⁷

Captions according to exemplar A:

Description of Armānum

- (a) From the strong wall to the great wall:
130 cubits (is) the height of the mountain,
44 cubits (is) the height of the wall.
- (b) From the outer wall to the strong wall:
180 cubits (is) the height of the mountain,
30 cubits (is) the height of the wall.
- (c) In total: 404 cubits height from the ground to the top of the wall.

³ The name of the king of Armānum is rendered Ri-DA-IM in line 67 and Ri-ID-IM in line 93. The affair of Armānum has been compared with the Babylonian historical tradition, as e.g. given in the Chronicle of Early Kings (cf. Grayson 1975:154): "Narām-Sîn, the son (sic!) of Sargon marched against Apišal. He made a breach (in the city wall) (pišū ip-luš-ma) and captured Rišadad (Ri-iš-IM), king of Apišal, and the vizier of Apišal with his (own) hand." Here the name of the city of Apišal is obviously a play on the phrase pišū ip-luš-ma, and the "breach (in the city wall)" is a reference to the "entrance" (nārabtum) of our inscription. Since Riš-Adad is not attested otherwise in the onomasticon, the emendation into Riš-Adad is justified.

⁴ The passage called "Declaration of Narām-Sîn" has a parallel only once in an inscription of Erridupizir (see Gelb and Kienast 1990:303-307, lines 58-80; Frayne 1993:221-223, lines ii 13-10'). It would be a very peculiar coincidence if in exemplars A and C of our text two different inscriptions with a "Declaration of Narām-Sîn" were represented, especially in view of the facts given in note 2.

⁵ Lines 110-118 are difficult and especially the two last lines are without translation in Frayne and open to discussion.

⁶ We expect in accordance with the parallel from an inscription of Erridupizir (see note 4) after the "Declaration of Narām-Sîn" some curse formulas; these are, in our view, given in exemplars B and C or otherwise lost as the beginning of the inscription of exemplar A.

⁷ No translation is possible.

(d) He destroyed (?) the city Armānum. Colophon 1 What (is written) on the side (of the statue) (facing) the chapel of the New Court.	30 cubits (is) the height of the wall. Colophon 2 What (is written) on the side (of the statue) (facing) the large statue of Sīnerībam.
(e) From the river to the outer wall: 196 cubits (is) the height of the mountain, 20 cubits (is) the height of the wall.	Captions according to exemplar B:
(f) From the outer wall to the strong wall: 156 cubits (is) the height of the mountain,	(a) [Above:] ..., Imlik. ⁸ (b) Below: The general of Sumer and Akkad, PN ⁸

⁸ Since we are dealing with a fragmentary inscription no arguments can be drawn from these two captions as to the relationship between exemplars A and B+C.

REFERENCES

Text: Foster 1982:27-36; Gelb and Kienast 1990:253-264; Frayne 1993:132-135.

2. EARLY OLD BABYLONIAN INSCRIPTIONS

ISIN DYNASTY

Hegemony over the land of Sumer and Akkad eventually passed from Akkad(e) to Ur (COS 2.138-141) and from Ur to Isin with the collapse of the Ur III state ca. 2004 BCE. Isin, the new center of power, was located at modern Ishan Bahrīyat. The site has been excavated since 1973 by an expedition of the Deutsche Forschungsgemeinschaft under the direction of B. Hrouda. The names of fifteen kings of the Isin I dcynasty are known; they reigned from 2017-1794 BCE.

ISHBI-ERRA (2.92)

Douglas Frayne

Ishbi-Erra, the first king of the Isin Dynasty, reigned ca. 2017-1985 BCE. A Sumerian royal inscription known from a contemporary tablet copy from Nippur records the fabrication by the king of a lyre for the god Enlil of Nippur.

(1-3) For the god Enlil, lord of the foreign lands, his lord, (4-6) Ishbi-Err[a], mighty king, lord of <his> land (7-9) fashioned a great lyre ^a for him, which ... the heart.	^a Psc 33:2; 43:4; 49:4; 57:8; 71:22; 81:2; 92:3; 98:5; 108:2; 137:2; 147:7; 149:3	(10) He dedicated it [for his own] life. (12-15) The name of the lyre is "Ishbi-Erra trusts in the god Enlil."
---	--	--

REFERENCES

Text: Kärki 1980:2; Frayne 1990:6-7.

SHU-ILISHU (2.93)

Douglas Frayne

The name of what is probably the third year of Shu-ilishu (the second king of the Isin I dynasty, who reigned ca. 1984-1875 BCE) commemorates the construction of a standard for the moon god Nanna, tutelary deity of Ur. The deed is recorded in a Sumerian school tablet copy excavated by Sir Leonard Woolley at Ur.

Standards, with divine or animal images on their tops, were often used in ancient Mesopotamia to muster and lead troops in battle (cf. for example, the depiction of troops with standards standing behind Naram-Sin in the famous "Victory Stele" in the Louvre; see ANEP fig. 309). They are directly comparable to the standards of the Israelite tribes mentioned in Num 2:10.

(i.1-7) For the god Nanna, trusted one of heaven and earth, true princely son of the god Enlil, the lord who, as far as heaven and earth, uniquely surpasses the gods, (i.8-14) Shu-ilishu god of his land, mighty king, king of Ur, beloved of the gods An, Enlil, and Nanna, (i.15-22) a great divine standard, ^a a tree fit for a (rich) harvest, evoking wonder, colored with gold, silver, and shining lapis lazuli, ...	^a Exod 17:15, 16; Num 2:10; Isa 5:26; 13:2; 18:3; Jer 4:21; 50:2; 51:27; Ps 74:4; Cant 2:4; 6:4, 10	a sil[ver] image ... Lacuna (ii.1-7) he fashioned for him (the god Nanna) [when] he (Shu-ilishu) establish[ed] in their abodes [in U]r(?) the people] scattered as far away as A[nshan]. (ii.8-9) He dedicated it for his own life. (A curse formula follows).
--	--	--

REFERENCES

Kärki 1980:2-3; Frayne 1990:16-18.

ISHME-DAGAN (2.94)

Douglas Frayne

A Sumerian inscription found on various stamped or inscribed bricks from Nippur indicates that they originally came from a socle built by Ishme-Dagan (third king of the Isin I dynasty, who reigned c. 1953-1935 BCE) for the ceremonial mace of the god Ninurta, the god Enlil's second in command at Nippur. Isin-Larsa period account texts from Nippur record offerings made for this mace, an apparently impressive monument (Sigrist 1984:150). For a depiction of a possibly similar ceremonial mace erected to the god Ningirsu (a local variant of Ninurta at Girsu) by Gudea, see Börker-Klähn 1982:Plate volume fig. 89a.

Archaeological excavations in Mesopotamia have turned up numerous examples of stone and metal mace-heads (see Solyman 1968). They are comparable to the "war club" (KJV "maul") mentioned in the Bible.

(1-7) When the god Enlil had Ishme-Dagan, king of the land of Sumer and Akkad, take the god Ninurta, his might champion as bailiff, (8-9) (Ishme-Dagan) fashioned for him (Ninurta) the	^a Prov 25:18	Šita -weapon, the mace ^a with fifty heads (10-12) (and) set up his beloved weapon on a baked brick platform for him.
--	-------------------------	---

REFERENCES

Kärki 1980:8-9; Frayne 1990:35-36.

LIPIT-ESHTAR (2.95)

Douglas Frayne

Numerous clay cones found or excavated at Isin record the construction by Lipit-Eshtar (the fourth king of the Isin I dynasty, who reigned ca. 1934-1924 BCE) of a storehouse (ganthum) for the gods Enlil and Ninlil.

This text provides us with the earliest Akkadian translation of the Sumerian royal title lugal KI-EN-GI KI-URI, Akkadian šar māt šumerim u akkadim, "king of the land of Sumer and Akkad."

(1-19) I, Lipit-Eshtar, humble shepherd of Nippur, true farmer of Ur, unceasing (provider) for Eridu, en -priest suitable for Uruk, king of Isin, king of the land of Sumer and Akkad, ^a favorite of the goddess Eshtar, (20-23) a storehouse of the ... offerings of the gods	^a Gen 10:10	Enlil and Ninlil, (24-26) in Isin, my royal city, at the palace gate, (27-29) I, Lipit-Eshtar, son of the god Enlil, (30-35) when I established justice in the land of Sumer and Akkad, (36) built (it).
---	------------------------	--

REFERENCES

Kärki 1980:19-20; Frayne 1990:49-51.

UR-NINURTA (2.96)

Douglas Frayne

A tablet from Nippur contains the copy of one (or more) Sumerian royal inscriptions of Ur-Ninurta (the fifth king of the Isin I dynasty, who reigned ca. 1923-1896 BCE). The excerpted section deals with the fashioning of a statue depicting the king holding a votive goat kid at his breast; the statue was set up in the courtyard of the goddess Ninlil (Enlil's spouse) in Nippur. In Mesopotamia, as in Israel, kids were commonly used for sacrificial purposes.

(vi.6'-12') I fashioned (for the goddess Ninlil[?]) a [copper] statue, whose form was endowed with my face, clasping a votive kid, standing to make supplications for me, an ornament of the main	a Num 15:11	courtyard of the Gagishshua (temple). (vi.13'-14') I dedicated it to her for my own life. (A curse formula follows).
---	-------------	--

REFERENCES

Kärki 1980:24-26; Frayne 1990:66-68.

UR-DUKUGA (2.97)

Douglas Frayne

A Sumerian cone inscription of Ur-dukuga, the thirteenth king of the Isin I dynasty (who reigned ca. 1830-1828 BCE), records the construction of a temple of the god Dagan in the royal city of Isin.

Dagan was an important Mesopotamian and West Semitic deity with major cult centres at ancient Tuttul (modern Tell Bi'a near the junction of the Euphrates and Balih rivers) and Terqa (modern Tell 'Asherah on the Euphrates about 13 km upstream from Mari). The etymology of the DN is unknown. While a connection with Hebrew dag "fish" is highly unlikely, a connection of the Semitic root dgn when translated as "grain" is possible (ABD 2:2).

(1-3) For the god Dagan, "great lord of the foreign lands, the god who created him, (4-20) Ur-dukuga, shepherd who brings everything (needed) for Nippur, superb farmer of the gods An and Enlil, provider of Ekur, who provides abundance for Eshumesha (and) Egalmah, who returned to the gods the regular offerings which had been	a Judg 16:23; 1 Sam 5:2-7; 1 Chr 10:10; 1 Macc 10:84; 11:4	expropriated from the sanctuaries, mighty king, king of Isin, king of the land of Sumer and Akkad, spouse steadfastly looked upon by the goddess Inanna, (21-24) built for him the Edurkigara ("House — the well founded residence") in Isin, his shining beloved residence.
--	--	---

REFERENCES

Kärki 1980:34-35; Frayne 1990:94-95.

LARSA DYNASTY

The city of Larsa (modern Sinkara) struggled with Isin for hegemony over the land of Sumer and Akkad in early Old Babylonian times. The site has been dug by a series of French expeditions in 1933-34 and 1967 (directed by A. Parrot), 1969-70 (directed by J.-Cl. Margueron) and since 1970 (directed by J.-L. Huot).

The names of fourteen kings of the Larsa dynasty are known; they reigned from ca. 2025-1763 BCE.

GUNGUNUM (2.98)

Douglas Frayne

Gungunum, the fifth member of the Larsa dynasty and its first effective king, reigned from ca. 1931-1906 BCE. A Sumerian cone inscription from Ur deals with the construction there of a storehouse for the sun god by En-ana-tuma, en-priestess of the moon god Nanna. Though installed by her father Ishme-Dagan of Isin (above, 2.94), she was allowed to keep her priestly office even after Larsa captured Ur from Isin. The sun god, Sumerian Utu, Akkadian Shamash, was the tutelary deity of the dynastic capital of Larsa.

(1-7) For the god Utu, offspring of the god Nanna, ... son of the Ekishnugal, whom the goddess Ningal bore, her lord,	the god Nanna in Ur, daughter of Ishme-Dagan, king of the land of Sumer and Akkad,
(8-11) for the life of Gungunum, mighty man, king of Ur,	(18-20) built his Ehili ("Charming House"), built his shining storehouse for him.
(12-17) En-ana-tuma, zirru -priestess, en -priestess of	(21-22) She dedicated it to him for her own life.

REFERENCES

Kärki 1980:41; Frayne 1990:115-117.

NUR-ADAD (2.99A)

Douglas Frayne

A Sumerian inscription from Ur belonging to Nur-Adad, eighth king of the Larsa dynasty (who reigned ca. 1865-1850 BCE) deals with the king's construction of a KIR₄-MAĜ "great (bread) oven" and a DU₃-MAĜ (possibly "great cauldron") for the moon god Nanna. Copies of the text are inscribed on three copper cylinders and several clay cones that were found in a room northwest of the ziqqurat at Ur; it is to probably to be identified as a temple kitchen. The Sumerian word KIR, "(bread) oven" was apparently borrowed into Akkadian as kīru(m) "kiln (for lime and bitumen)" and, in all likelihood is to be connected with Akkadian kūru(m), "crucible, kiln, brazier" and Hebrew kwr "pot or furnace for smelting metals," (see reference a).

(1-6) For the god Nanna, crown of heaven and earth, whose face is adorned with charming rays, the god Enlil's first-born son, his lord,	a Deut 4:20; 1 Kgs 8:51; Isa 48:10; Jer 11:4; Ezek 22:18, 20, 22 Prov 17:3; 27:21	the god Nanna, his lord, his (proper) boundary, (37-41) at that time, a great (bread) oven ^a for the meals of the god Suen, which (also) provides bread for all the gods
(7-25) Nur-Adad, mighty man, provider of Ur, king of Larsa, who makes first fruit offerings reach the Ekishnugal, who looks after the shrine Ebabbar, whom the youth, god Utu has truly chosen in his heart, one given the scepter by the god Nanna, subduer of the foreign lands for the god Utu, called by a good name by the god Ishkur,		(42-46) (and) a great cauldron cared for in the (dining) hall, roaring loudly at the morning and evening meals,
(26-36) when he had made Ur content, had removed evil (and the cause for any) complaint from it, had regathered its scattered people (and) had given to		(47-48) he made for him (the god Nanna) and for his own life.
		(49-50) He restored the traditional cleansing rites.
		(51-56) May a long life-span (and) a reign of abundance come forth from the Ekishnugal for Nur-Adad, shepherd of righteousness.

REFERENCES

Kärki 1980:51-52; Frayne 1990:140-142.

NUR-ADAD (2.99B)

A Sumerian clay cone records Nur-Adad's construction of Enki's abzu temple at Eridu.

(1-3) [For] the god En[ki], lord of Eridu, [his] lord,	god Utu,
(4-8) Nur-[Adad], mighty man, provider of Ur, king of Larsa, subduer of the foreign land for the	(9-16) when he had restored Ur and Larsa, had resettled their scattered people in their residence, their captive people ... the foundation tru[ly ...], Eridu [...], (17-19) at that time (he did not let) any one who might do evil (against) the god Enki [enter] it. (20-21) Divine lord Nudimmud was pleased at this.	(22-24) Beside his ancient temple (Nur-Adad) built anew for him (Enki) his Abzu (temple), the Eme- kukuga ("House which purifies the me's"). (25-28) Into it he brought his throne, standard, (and) ancient treasures.

--	--

REFERENCES

Frayne 1990:146.

SIN-IDDINAM (2.100)

Douglas Frayne

A Sumerian inscription known from an Old Babylonian period tablet copy deals with the construction by Sin-iddinam (the ninth king of the Larsa dynasty, who reigned ca. 1849-1843 BCE) of a throne for the storm god Ishkur/Adad.

The inscription's account of two butting bull (figures) standing on either side of the base of the throne (lines 75-78) can be compared with the passage in 1 Kings 10:14 describing two lion (figures) standing by the armrests of king Solomon's throne. The biblical account, in turn, can be compared with the relief found on the stone sarcophagus of Ahiram, king of Byblos (*ANEP*² #458; cf. above, 2.55) and the scene carved on an ivory plaque from Megiddo (*ANEP*² #332); both show lion figures standing below the armrests of the ruler's throne (cf. IDB 4:637). In these two cases the lions have wings spreading backward in an apparent attitude of flight. They are, then, comparable to the Biblical winged cherubim which stood as sentinels and supports by God's throne (IDB 1:131). Hebrew cherubim, in turn, are likely connected with the Akkadian word kuribu(m) "representative of a protective genius with specific non-human features" (cf. IDB 1:131); kuribu(m) genii stood guard with other demons at doorways in Babylonian and Assyrian temples.

(1-8) For the god Ishkur, lord, an[gry] storm, [...] great storm of heav[en and earth], who trusts in his supremacy, foremost one, advocate, son of An, whose head is clothed in magnificence, lord, raging leader, great storm, in whose ... has no rival, who masses the clouds, at his rushing in the storm wind he causes the earth to tremble.

(9-17) In broad heaven he is a mighty wind which roars, whose [rum]ble is abundance. At his roar the land and the great mountains are afraid. Great champion, who holds the sceptre in the hand (and) is clothed in authority. At his thundering (over) the sea (and) covering the land with ra<diance>), great (hail)stones rain ... (which are) difficult to see through,

(18-24) In their ... they set up for him ... like a (19-21) [...] like a reed.

(22-23) On their own accord, at his presence they lift ... to him. He spies the numerous people.

(25-33) Lord of abundance, who makes splendor plentiful, who gives sustenance to the land, merciful prince whose compassion is good, shade of Larsa, helper of Sin-iddinam in the field of battle, who stands in combat with the troops at his side, great lord, canal inspector of the gods An and Enlil, whose destiny cannot be rivalled, for his lord, (34-40) Sin-iddinam, mighty man, humble prince who reverences the god Enlil, he is the "yea" of the Ekur, youth called by a good name by the god Nanna, provider of Ur, king of Larsa, king of the land of Sumer and Akkad, (41-53) given broad wisdom and surpassing intelligence by the god Nudimmud, granted a good reign, a long life-span, and abundance without end by the god Ishkur, his personal deity, who puts in order the rites of Eridu, who perfects the offerings of the gods, wise one, who [r]estored the ancient me's, one whom his numerous people truly [ch]ose — (54-67) a lofty [thron]e, [...] with surpassing form, placed for his [personal deity], [grand]ly made with [...] refined silver, [...] of the green heaven, [...] befitting his greatness, suitable for sitting on — amidst jubilation, he finished the work there.

(68-82) At that time, the god Ishkur, his (personal) deity, grandly sat down there on his throne of glory. Then, for the future (Sin-iddinam) made its form surpassing. He sought out a place for its rites and supreme me's. He set below, on the right and left, two great wild bulls at the throne butt[ing] at the enemies of the king, a ... beast ... the A[nunna gods] set u[p] abundance [from] the horizon ... beside him. He [fashioned] its (cult) statue and [set it] on its (the throne's) lap.

(85-88) He ... there [...]

REFERENCES

Michalowski 1988:265-275; Frayne 1990:177-179.

WARAD-SIN (2.101A)

Douglas Frayne

A Sumerian cone inscription of Warad-Sin (the thirteenth king of the Larsa dynasty who reigned from 1834-23 BCE) records the construction of the chief storehouse in Ur. This building was apparently not a storeroom for grain, but rather a repository for precious objects donated to the city temples.

(1-4) For the god Nanna, lord who beams forth brightly in shining heaven, first-born son of the god Enlil, his lord,	(as for) myself, what am I?"
(5-13) I, Kudur-mabuk, father of the Amorite land, son of Simti-shilhak, the one who is attentive to the god Enlil, who finds favor with the goddess Ninlil, who reverences the Ebabbar, provider of the Ekur, constant (attendant) for the Ekishnugal, the one who makes Nippur content,	(25-27) In respect of this, to the god Nanna, my lord, as I prayed fervently,
(14-15) when the god Nanna agreed to my entreaty	(28-38) I built the Ganunmah, the house of silver and gold, the god Suen's storehouse with heavy treasure — it had been built in the past (and) had become dilapidated — for my own life and for the life of Warad-Sin, my son, king of Larsa.
(6-18) (and) delivered into my hands the enemies who had thrown down the top of the Ebabbar temple,	(39) I restored it.
(19-21) he (the god Nanna) returned Mashkan-shapir and Kar-Shamash to Larsa.	(40-42) May the god Nanna, my lord, rejoice at my deed
(22-24) "Nanna, my lord, it is you who has done it,	(43-47) (and) grant to me a destiny of life, a good reign, (and) a throne with a secure foundation.
	(48-49) May I be the shepherd, beloved of the god Nanna.
	(50) May my days be long.

REFERENCES

Kärki 1980:97-98; Frayne 1990:214-216.

WARAD-SIN (2.101B)

Kudur-mabuk's construction of the throne of the god Nanna of Ur for his son Warad-Sin is known from two Sumerian school tablet copies found in Sir Leonard Woolley's excavations at Ur. The deed was commemorated in the name of the sixth year of Warad-Sin.

The two protective genie (Sumerian LAMMA) described in lines 68-75 of this text as protecting the god Nanna's throne may be compared with the Hebrew cherubim who guarded Yahweh's throne (IDB 1:131). Although the probable animal nature of these lamina's is not specified in this text, their description as genii "stretched out towards the statue of me praying, as if (making) new šuilā prayers and entreaties" suggests a connection with the Akkadian karibū noted above (2.100), since the latter word is derived from a root (krb) meaning "to bless." What they stretched out is not specified; comparative evidence suggests it might have been wings. The four breed bulls mentioned in lines 78-79 can be compared with the two small bull heads depicted on the arm-rests of the throne of the Aramean ruler Bar-Rakib in the relief from Zinjirli (ancient Sam'al) (*ANEP*² fig. 460; for the Bar-Rakib inscription see COS 2.38); in all four bull heads would have been placed at the corners of the king's throne.

(1-6) For the god Nanna, great lord, light which fills shining heaven, who holds the princely crown aloft, reliable god, who alternates days and nights, who establishes the months, who completes the year.	favor for the Ebabbar temple (and) adorned it for the god Utu, his lord, who gathered the scattered people (and) put in order their disorganized troops, who made his land peaceful, who smote the head of its foes, snare of his land, who smashed all the enemies, who made the youth, god Utu, supreme judge of heaven and earth, reside contentedly (in) his princely residence, in Larsa, the place of regular offerings.
(7-9) In the Ekur he humbly receives the true decisions from the father who engendered him (Enlil) —	(36-38) I, Kudur-mabuk, humble shepherd, who stands in supplication for the shrine Ebabbar,
(10) son beloved of the goddess Ninlil,	(39-46) when the gods An, Enlil, Enki, and Ninmah had given to me, on account of my order by the (11-13) (for) the god Ashimbabbar, who listens to prayers and entreaties, his lord, (14-35) (I), Kudur-mabuk, father of the Amorite land, son of Shimti-shilhak, the one who repaid a supreme decree of the gods Nanna and Utu, the true scepter suitable to lead the people (and) a reign with eternal me 's, whose me 's cannot be altered, (47) on account of this, as I made an ardent prayer ...	^a Exod 25:18-20; 37:7-9; 1 Kgs 6:23-28; 8:6-7 Isa 37:16	(72-75) I fixed them there here at the perimeter of that throne (area with their ...) stretched out towards the statue of me praying, as if (making) new šuilā prayers and entreaties. ^a

(48-58) ..., shining star(s) radiance ... a ... awe-inspiring,	^b 1 Kgs 10:19	(76-77) I sought out will-chosen me 's for the calf of heaven, ^b that was in its entirety a masterpiece.
(59-60) that throne [was inlaid] with red gold,		(78-79) I fixed there four breed bulls.
(61-67) [...] the days which I live ... a work ... [...] a statue of the god Nanna [whose] fo[rm] was fashioned correctly ..., [...], ... grandly I ...		(80-82) Its great seat was of kiškanūm wood. Its crosspieces, (depicting) a lion seizing a kid, were inlaid with refined silver.
(68-71) A pair of protective genii ... [giving] good omens [...], being there daily ... [...] I set up on either side of it.		(83-88) I dedicated it to him for my life and for the life of Warad-[Sin], my son, offspring of ... eternal name, son of ..., provider of Ur, who reverences] the E[babbar, king] of Larsa.

REFERENCES

Kärki 1980:122-126; Frayne 1990:219-222.

RIM-SIN (2.102A)

Douglas Frayne

A Sumerian cone inscription of Rim-Sin (the fourteenth king of the Larsa dynasty, who reigned ca. 1822-1763 BCE) records the construction of a temple of the god Dumuzi in Ur.

Dumuzi was in origin a Sumerian shepherd god who, with the goddess Inanna, served as tutelary deity of the ancient city of Badtibira (var.: Patibira), modern Tell al-Mada'in. For the most recent discussion of the cult of Dumuzi see Kutscher 1990:29-44.

Dumuzi was the parade example of the tragic lover in Sumerian mythology; the Sumerian myth "Death of Dumuzi" describes how the hapless god was pursued and finally killed by five evil demons.

In astral terms, Dumuzi was equated by the ancients with the constellation they called the "Hired Man"; it corresponded in the main to the modern constellation of Aries ("The Ram") (Foxvog 1989). The heliacal setting of the constellation Aries during the fourth month of the Babylonian year (month Dumuzi) was apparently the annual occasion for wailing rites for the disappearing god. A Mari text (Dossin 1975:27-28; Kutscher 1990:42) dated to the month Abum (which alternates with Dumuzi) refers to cleansing rituals for (the statues of) Ishtar and Dumuzi, and another Mari text dated to the same month (but two years later) (Biot 1960 ARM(T) 175; Kutscher 1990:40) records a disbursement of grain for "wailing women" (MUNUS.MEŠ ba-ki-tim). The wailing that accompanied the Dumuzi cult was evidently a female prerogative.

Dumuzi was adopted as a fertility god under the name Tammuz by the inhabitants of Syro-Palestine. A passage in Ezekiel condemns the women of Jerusalem for their apostasy in wailing for "the Tammuz." In Syria Tammuz was often designated by his title Adonis (Greek Adonis from Semitic adōn "lord").

(1-6) For the god Dumuzi, ^a lord of offerings, beloved husband of the goddess Inanna, shepherd of the broad steppe, fit to to care for (all the creatures), his lord,	^a Ezek 8:14	filled with butterfat"), his beloved residence suitable for his habitation, for his own life and for the life of Kudur-mabuk, the father who engendered him.
(7-11) Rim-Sin, prince who reverences Nippur, provider of Ur, king of Larsa, king of the land of Sumer and Akkad,		(20-24) On account of this may the god Dumuzi, his lord, rejoice in him and multiply cattle and sheep for him in the pens and folds.
(12-19) built for the future the Eigarasu ("House

REFERENCES

Kärki 1980:153; Frayne 1990:275-276.

RIM-SIN (2.102B)

A different Sumerian cone inscription of Rim-Sin commemorates the construction of a temple of Nergal in Ur.

Nergal was a deity venerated by Assyrian deportees (especially those from Cuthah) who were re-located in Samaria following the downfall of Israel in 722 BCE.

(1-6) For the god Nergal, ^a supreme lord, who possesses great might, the one with a perfect fearsome splendor and aura, foremost one, who destroys all the evil foreign lands (and) piles up the rebellious land in heaps, his god, (7-11) Rim-Sin, prince who reverences Nippur, provider of Ur, king of Larsa, king of the land of Sumer and Akkad, (12-19) built for the future Eerimhashhash ("House	a 2 Kgs 17:30	which smashes the enemy"), his residence of valor suitable for habitation, for his own life and for the life of Kudur-mabuk, the father who engendered him. (20-28) On account of this may the god Nergal, his divine creator, look at him with shining eyes, and dwell at his right side in the field of battle. May he conquer the foreign land that rebels against him.
---	---------------	---

REFERENCES

Kärki 1980:157-158; Frayne 1990:277-278.

RIM-SIN (2.102C)

A Sumerian cone inscription from Ur records Rim-Sin's construction of the temple of Ninsi²ana, here taken to be a male deity, who (as noted, see COS 2.139A) was likely a manifestation of the planet Venus as "Morning Star."

(1-16) For the god Ninsi ² ana, god whose station shines from clear heaven, whose light shines forth, lofty one, who fills the great hall, whose utterance is favorable, aristocrat, whose fiat (carries) weight in the assembly, who goes at the fore of the great gods, foremost hero, who perfectly executes the artful me 's, who truly puts instruction and counsel in heaven, judge, supreme adviser, who distinguishes (between) truth and falsehood, god with patient mercy, who provides a protective genius of well-being, a ... guardian spirit, and a very great life-span for the one who is in awe of him, for my lord, (17-26) I, Rim-Sin, mighty man, whose offerings	are the greatest for the shrine Nippur, who perfectly executes the me 's and rites of Eridu, reliable provider of Ur, who reverences Ebabbar, king of Larsa, Uruk, (and) Isin, king of the land of Sumer and Akkad, (27-29) when the god Ninsi ² ana delivered all my enemies into my hands, (30-40) on account of this, for the god Ninsi ² ana my lord, as I established a colleagueship (with him), I built in a pure place the Eeshbarzida ("House of reliable decisions"), suitable for his divinity, his residence which pleases him. I wrote my name there, on the lintel (and) door jamb of the temple, for the future.
--	--

REFERENCES

Kärki 1980:160-161; Frayne 1990:297-298.

RIM-SIN (2.102D)

A rock-crystal jar, probably once used to hold unguent, was dedicated in Sumerian to the god Mardu/Amurrum for the life of Rim-Sin by the king's chief physician.

The evidence of the vessel's inscription suggests that this purchased piece originally came from Larsa. It apparently belonged to a hoard from the Amurrum temple in Larsa that consisted of at least four pieces (see Braun-Holzinger 1984 nos. 192-194): (a) this vessel, (b) a "bronze" statue of a kneeling figure with an inscription dedicating the piece to the god Amurrum for the life of Hammu-rapi (see COS 2.107C below); (c) a "bronze" figure of a recumbent ram with an inscription dedicating the piece to the god Amurrum for the life of a king of Larsa whose name is unfortunately corroded away, and (d) a "bronze" statuette depicting three rampant goats standing on a pair of divine figures, likely Amurrum and Ashratum (their divine status is indicated by their horned crowns). All were apparently obtained through illicit excavations around the time of A. Parrot's excavations at Larsa in 1933-34. For color photos of objects (b) and (d), see Strommenger 1964:pl. xxx.

The cult of the god Amurru, eponymous deity of the Amorites, was elevated to high status during the reigns of Warad-Sin and Rim-Sin of Larsa. This may be accounted for by the fact that the family dynasty at Larsa at this time was apparently of Amorite origin; Kudur-mabuk, father of Warad-Sin and Rim-Sin, styles himself in his royal inscriptions as "father of the Amorite land" and "father of Emutbala," the latter an Amorite tribal designation. Further evidence of the veneration of the god Amurru at Larsa during the reign of Rim-Sin is provided by a hymn dedicated to the god Amurru and his wife Ashratum; it ends with a prayer for the life of Rim-Sin (Gurney 1989:text no. 1; von Soden 1989).

At Ugarit a divine name cognate with Amurru is the element Amrr in the compound Qdš-w-Amrr. While in Mesopotamia the divine pair Amurru and Ashratum (the latter is cognate with Ugaritic Atirat) are linked as husband and wife, in Ugarit Amrr is demoted to a subservient role as helpmate of Atirat.

(1-2) To the god Mardu/Amurru, his lord,		the servant who reverences him, dedicated to him
(3-5) for the life of Rim-Sin, king of Larsa,		(this) vessel of rock-crystal, whose lip is inlaid
(6-12) Shep-Sin, son of Ipqusha, the chief physician,		with gold (and) whose base is inlaid with silver.

REFERENCES

Frayne 1990:305-306.

ESHNUNNA

Year names of Ibbi-Sin, the last king of the Ur III dynasty, cease on tablets from Eshnunna (modern Tell Asmar) during the third year of the king. Shortly thereafter Eshnunna became independent and remained so until it was defeated by Hammu-rapi of Babylon. Most of the extant Eshnunna inscriptions stem from excavations carried out by the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago at Tell Asmar under the direction of H. Frankfort during the years 1930-35.

IPIQ-ADAD II (2.103)

Douglas Frayne

One of the most energetic of the rulers of Eshnunna was king Ipiq-Adad II; during his lengthy reign he greatly expanded the territory controlled by Eshnunna, a fact proclaimed by his adoption of the title "king who enlarges Eshnunna." A brick inscription from ancient Nerebtum (modern Ishchali) commemorates his donation of the city to the goddess Eshtar-Kititum.

(1) To the goddess Eshtar-Kititum,		(people), beloved of the god Tishpak, son of Ibal-
(2-9) Ipiq-Adad (II), mighty king, king who en-		pi-El (I) larges Eshnunna, shepherd of the black-headed		(10) donated Nerebtum to her.

REFERENCES

Greengus 1979:1; Frayne 1990:545-546.

URUK

About the time of Sin-iddinam of Larsa a small independent kingdom was established on the Lower Euphrates with its capital at the city of Uruk. The names of eight of its rulers are known. The kingdom came to an end ca. 1800 BCE with its capture by king Rim-Sin of Larsa.

SIN-KASHID (2.104)

Douglas Frayne

German excavations at Uruk have unearthed a large palace built by Sin-kashid, the probable founder of the Old Babylonian period Uruk dynasty. Innumerable bricks and clay tablets found in the walls of the palace (and scattered over the surface of the mound) commemorate its construction in Sumerian. Of interest is Sin-kashid's title "king of Amnanum," an Amorite tribal name.

(1-7) Sin-kashid, mighty man, king of Uruk, king of	the Amnanum, built his royal palace.
---	--------------------------------------

REFERENCES

Kärki 1980:176-177; Frayne 1990:441-444.

ANAM (2.105)

Douglas Frayne

A Sumerian inscription found on small stone tablets from Uruk commemorates king Anam's construction of the wall of Uruk, a structure said to have been built in ancient times by divine Gilgamesh.

(1-4) Anam, chief of the army of Uruk, son of Ilan-shemea,	work of divine Gilgamesh,
(5-8) who restored the wall of Uruk, the ancient	(9-12) constructed in baked brick (the moat) "Water roars as it goes around."

REFERENCES

Kärki 1980:190; Frayne 1990:474-475.

SIMURRUM — IDDI(N)-SIN (2.106)

Douglas Frayne

The city of Simurru (for a possible location see Frayne 1997b), long the target of military campaigns waged by the Ur III kings Shulgi and Amar-Suena, gained its independence after the fall of the Ur III dynasty. In Early Old Babylonian times it served as the capital of a kingdom that likely stretched along the Zagros foothill road that ran from the area of the Diyala River to Arrapha (modern Kirkuk). Inscriptions naming two of its rulers, Iddi(n)-Sin and Zabazuna, are known. One of these, a rock inscription found near the village of Bardi-Sanjian in the Bitwatah district, deals with the setting up of a table for the goddess Eshtar.

(1-3) Iddi(n)-Sin, mighty king, king of Simurru,	inscription of because of its curse incites another
(4-5) Zabazuna (is) his son —	(to do so),
(6-11) Kullunum rebelled and waged war against Zabazuna.	(34-53) that man — may the gods Anum, Enlil, Ninhursag, Ea, Sin, Adad, lord of weapons, Shamash, lord of judgements, Eshtar, lady of battle, Ninsi'ana, my god (and) the god Nishba, my lord, inflict on him an evil curse.
(12-21) The gods Adad, Eshtar, and Nishba heard the word of Zabazuna (and) he (Zabazuna) destroyed the city (of Kullunum) and consecrated it to those gods.	(54-57) May they destroy his seed and rip out his foundation.
(22-25) He set up a table of the goddess Eshtar, his lady.	(58-66) May they not grant him heir or offspring. May life be his taboo. As (when) there is no harvest, may it be difficult for his people.
(26-33) He who removes my work, or erases my

REFERENCES

Al-Fouadi 1978; Frayne 1990:708-709.

3. LATE OLD BABYLONIAN INSCRIPTIONS

BABYLON

About the time of king Sumu-El of Larsa, an Amorite chief named Sumu-abum installed himself as ruler of Babylon, then an inconsequential town on the Arahnum canal north of Dilbat. Subsequently, kings of an Amorite dynasty were to rule in Babylon for a period of almost 300 years. Under the reigns of kings Sin-muballit and Hammu-rapi there was a great expansion in the Babylonian realms; it culminated with Hammu-rapi's defeat of kings Rim-Sin of Larsa and Silli-Sin of Eshnunna. In so doing Hammu-rapi was able establish the hegemony of Babylon over the entire land of Sumer and Akkad, a feat unparalleled since the days of the Ur III state.

HAMMU-RAPI (2.107A)

Douglas Frayne

Hammu-rapi, the sixth king of the Babylon I dynasty reigned ca. 1792-1750 BCE. The name of his 23rd year commemorates the laying of the foundation of the wall of Sippar, that of year 25 the construction of the wall itself. These deeds were commemorated in a long cone inscription known in both Sumerian and Akkadian versions.

Ancient Sippar, cult center of the sun god Utu/Shamash was located at modern Abu Hatab. Excavations were carried out at the site for the British Museum by H. Rassam (1879-82), for the Imperial Ottoman Museum by V. Scheil (1894), for the Notgemeinschaft der Deutschen Wissenschaft by J. Jordan (1927), and for the College of Arts, Baghdad University by W. al-Jadir (since 1978).

The name Sepharvaim of 2 Kgs 17:24 was connected by early scholars with Mesopotamian Sippar. The equation is almost certainly false; a more likely hypothesis connects Sepharvaim with the GN Sibraim of Ezek 47:16, a city situated between Hamath and Damascus (IDB 4:273). Unfortunately, the old reading Sippar has stuck and is now conventional; the correct form of the name would be Sippir.

A long held Mesopotamian tradition considered Sippar to be "the eternal city" (Akkadian al šāti) normally spared from attack and exempted from corvée obligations.

(1-12) When the god Shamash, great lord of heaven and earth, king of the gods, with his shining face, joyfully looked at me, Hammu-rapi, the prince, his favorite, granted to me everlasting kingship (and) a reign of long days,	mountain. I built (that) high wall.
(13-27) made firm for me the foundation of the land which he had given me to rule, spoke to me by his pure word which cannot be changed to settle the people of Sippar and Babylon in peaceful abodes, (and) laid a great commission on me to build the wall of Sippar (and) to raise its head,	(46-50) That which from the past no king among the kings had built, for the god Samas, my lord, I grandly built.
(28-35) at that time, I, Hammu-rapi, mighty king, king of Babylon, reverent one, who heeds the god Shamash, beloved of the goddess Aia, who contents the god Marduk, his lord,	(51-55) The name of that wall is "By the decree of the god Shamash, may Hammu-rapi have no rival."
(36-45) by the supreme might which the god Shamash gave to me, with the levy of the army of my land, I raised the top of the foundation of the wall of Sippar with earth (until it was) like a great	(56-61) In my gracious reign which the god Shamash called, I cancelled corvée duty for the god Shamash for the men of Sippar, the ancient city of the god Shamash.
	(62-69) I dug its canal (and) provided perpetual water for its land. I heaped up plenty and abundance. I established joy for the people of Sippar.
	(70-81) They pray (Sumerian: they prayed) for my life. I did what was pleasing to the god Shamash, my lord, and the goddess Aia, my lady. I put my good name in the mouths of the people (in order) that they proclaim it daily like (that of) a god and that it not be forgotten forever.

REFERENCES

Kärki 1983:6-10; Frayne 1990:333-336.

HAMMU-RAPI (2.107B)

The name of year 33 of Hammu-rapi commemorates the digging of the canal named "Hammu-rapi is the abundance of the people." This deed is commemorated in a stone foundation tablet which also describes the construction of "Fort-Sin-muballit" (Sin-muballit was Hammu-rapi's father). The foundation tablet likely came from this fortress.

(1-9) I, Hammu-rapi, mighty king, king of Babylon, king who makes the four quarters be at peace, who achieves the victory of the god Marduk, shepherd who satisfies him, (10-16) when the gods Anum and Enlil gave to me the land of Sumer and Akkad to rule, (and) entrusted their nose-rope into my hands, (17-20) I dug the canal Hammu-rapi-nuhush-nishi ("Hammu-rapi is the abundance of the people"), which brings abundant water to the land of Sumer and Akkad. (21-37) I turned both its banks into cultivated areas. I kept heaping up piles of grain. I provided perpetual water for the land of Sumer and Akkad (and) gathered the scattered peoples of the land of Sumer	a Ps 23:2	and Akkad (and) provided for them pastures and watering places.^a In abundance and plenty I shepherded them. I settled them in peaceful abodes. (38-49) At that time, I, Hammu-rapi, mighty king, favorite of the great gods, by the mighty strength which the god Marduk gave to me, raised high a tall fortress with great (heaps of) earth, whose tops were like a mountain. I built (it) at the intake of the Hammu-rapi-nuhush-nishi canal. (50-57) I named that fortress Dur-Sin-muballit-abim-walidiia ("Fort Sin-muballit, father who engendered me"). (Thus) I made the name of Sinmuballit, the father who engendered me, preeminent (throughout) the (four) quarters.
---	------------------	---

REFERENCES

Sollberger and Kupper 1971:216-217; Kärki 1983:13-15; Frayne 1990:340-342.

HAMMU-RAPI (2.107C)

A copper figurine in the Louvre bears a Sumerian dedicatory inscription to the god Mardu/Amurru for the life of Hammu-rapi.

As noted (see COS 2.102D above), this figurine likely came from the hoard unearthed in illicit excavations in the area of the Amurru temple in Larsa.

(1-2) For the god Mardu/Amurru, his god, (3-5) for the life of Hammu-rapi, king of Babylon, (6-11) Lu-Nanna [...], son of Sin-le²i, fashioned for		him, for his life, a suppliant statue of copper, [its] face [plated] with gold. (12-13) He dedicated it to him as his servant.
---	--	--

REFERENCES

Sollberger and Kupper 1971:219; Frayne 1990:360.

HAMMU-RAPI (2.107D)

A limestone slab from Sippar was dedicated in Sumerian to the goddess Ashratum, wife of the god Mardu/Amurru, for the life of Hammu-rapi.

Ashratum's name is cognate with Ugaritic ²Aṭirat. Ashratum's epithet "daughter-in-law of An" follows from the fact that her husband Amurru was conceived by the ancient Mesopotamians to be the offspring of the sky-god An. Similarly her connection with the mountain echoes Amurru's epithet "lord of the mountain" (bēl šadī).

(1-10) For [the goddess Ash]ratum, daughter-in-law of the god An, the one suitable for ladyship, lady of voluptuousness and joy, tenderly cared for in the mountain, lady with patient mercy, who prays reverently for her spouse, his lady,		(11-13) for the li[fe] of Hammu-r[api], king of the Amo[rites], (14-20) Itur-ashd[um], chief of the [Si]lakku canal (district), son of Shuba-il[an], the servant who re[verences] her, set up] as a wonder a protective genius befitting her d[ivi]nity, [in her] beloved | residence.
---	--	---

REFERENCES

Sollberger and Kupper 1971:219; Frayne 1990:359-360.

SAMSU-ILUNA (2.108)

Douglas Frayne

A royal inscription of Hammu-rapi's son Samsu-iluna (the seventh king of the Babylon I dynasty who reigned ca. 1749-1712 BCE) known in both Sumerian and Akkadian versions on clay cylinders excavated at Tutub (modern Hafaji) records the construction of "Fort Samsu-iluna" on the banks of the Turul (Diyala) river. The deed was also commemorated in the name of year 24 of Samsu-iluna.

(1-6) Samsu-iluna, mighty king, king of Babylon, king of Kish, king who makes the four quarters be at peace, (7-19) king who at the order of the gods An and Enlil slew all those who engaged in hostility against him, shepherd to whom the goddess Inanna gave her favorable omen and help, who bound the hands of all those who were disloyal, who made all evil ones disappear in the land, (20-24) who caused bright daylight to come forth for the numerous people, foremost first-born son of Hammu-rapi, the lord who extended the land, (25-41) king who subjugated the land of Idamaraz from the border of Gutium to the border of Elam with his mighty weapon, who conquered the numerous people of the land of Idamaraz, who demolished all the various fortresses of the land of Warum who had resisted him, who achieved his victory and made his strength apparent. (42-49) After two months had passed, having set free and given life to the people of the land of Idamaraz whom he had taken captive, (and) the troops of Eshnunna, as many prisoners as he had	taken, (50-56) he (re)built the various fortresses of the land of Warum which he had destroyed (and) regathered and resettled its scattered people. (57-65) At that time, Samsu-iluna, mighty man, in order that the people who dwelled along the banks of the Turul and Taban rivers might reside in peaceful abodes, that they might have no one who terrified them, (and) in order that all the land might sing the praise of his mighty valor, (66-76) in the course of two months, on the bank of the Turul river, he built Fort Samsu-iluna. He dug its (surrounding) moat, piled up its earth there, formed its bricks, (and) built its wall. He raised its head like a mountain. (77-89) On account of this the gods An, Enlil, Marduk, Enki, and goddess Inanna determined as his destiny (and) gave to him a mighty weapon that has no rival, (and) a life that like (that of) the gods Nanna and Utu is eternal. (90-94) The name of that wall is "The god Enlil has made the land of those who had become hostile to him bow down to Samsu-iluna."
---	---

REFERENCES

Sollberger and Kupper 1971:226-227; Kärki 1983:39-43; Frayne 1990:388-391.

AMMI-DITANA (2.109)

Douglas Frayne

Ammi-ditana, Hammu-rapi's grandson and ninth king of the Babylon I dynasty, reigned ca. 1683-1647 BCE. A Sumerian inscription known from an original cone fragment and a much later Neo-Babylonian tablet copy commemorates his construction of the wall of Babylon.

(i.1-12) I, Ammi-di[an]a, mighty king, king of Babylon, king of Kish, king of the land of Sumer and Ak[kad], king of all the Amorite land, I, descendant of Sumu-la-Il, [s]on of the great champion Abi-eshuh, favor[ite] of the god Enlil, belo[v- ed of the goddess ...]	Lacuna (ii.1-4) In Babylon, the city of my kingship, he proc[laime]d his lofty decree [in] heaven and earth. (ii.5-10) At that time, by the wisdom that the god En[ki verily granted] to me,
---	--

Lacuna

(ii.1'-3') I made (Babylon) dwell in an abode of joy.
 (ii.4'-8') The name of that wall is "May Asarluhi turn into clay in the underworld the one who makes a breach in the clay (of the wall)."

(Colophon): (Property) of Bel-ushallim, son of D[fa-bi]bi, the exorcist.

REFERENCES

Kärki 1983:45; Frayne 1990:411-412.

EKALLATUM — SHAMSHI-ADDU (2.110)

Douglas Frayne

Arguably the most energetic rulers of Old Babylonian times was the king Shamshi-Addu. The origins of this remarkable figure are obscure; while we know the name of his father (Ila-kabkabu) and his brother (Aminum), the original seat of his dynasty is still uncertain (it may have been ancient Ekallatum, probably modern Tell Haikal 17 km north of Aššur). Because of the campaigns directed by king Naram-Sin of Eshnunna against Ekallatum and Aššur eighteen years after Shamshi-Addu's accession to the throne, Shamshi-Addu fled southwards, finding refuge in Babylon. Shortly after the death of Naram-Sin of Eshnunna he returned to Ekallatum and three years later conquered Aššur. The king continued his conquests, founding a new capital city at Shubat-Enlil (modern Tell Leilan) in the Upper Habur region. His campaigns in the west culminated with the taking of the city of Mari and the installation of his son Iasmah-Addu as city ruler there.

In a long inscription found on stone foundation tablets from Aššur Shamshi-Addu records the construction of the Aššur temple equating it with the temple of the god Enlil.

(1-17) Shamshi-Addu king of the universe, builder of the temple of the god Aššur, pacifier of the land between the Tigris and Euphrates, by the command of the god Aššur who loves him, whom Anu and Enlil called by name for greatness among the kings who went before:

(18-58) The temple of the god Enlil which Erishum (I), the son of Ilu-shumma, had built and which had become dilapidated, and I abandoned it. I constructed the temple of the god Enlil, my lord, the fearful dais, the large chapel, the seat of the god Enlil, my lord, which were methodically made by the skilled work of the building trade within my city Aššur. I roofed the temple with cedar (beams). I erected in the rooms cedar doors with silver and gold stars. (Under) the walls of the temple (I placed) silver, gold, lapis lazuli, (and) carnelian; cedar resin, best oil, honey, and ghee I mixed in the mortar. I methodically made the temple of the god Enlil, my lord, and called it Eamkurkurra, "The Temple — Wild Bull of the Lands," the temple of the god Enlil, my lord, within my city, Aššur.

(59-72) When I built the temple of the god Enlil, my lord, the prices in my city Aššur, (were): two kor of barley could be purchased for one shekel of silver; fifteen minas of wool for one shekel of silver; and two seahs of oil for one shekel of silver, according to the prices of my city Aššur.

a Jos 9:1

(73-87) At that time I received the tribute of the kings of Tukrish and of the king of the Upper Land, within my city, Aššur. I set up my great name and my monumental inscription in the land of Lebanon of the shore of the Great Sea."

(88-98) When the temple becomes dilapidated: may whoever among the kings, my sons, renovates the temple anoint my clay inscriptions with oil, make a sacrifice, and return them to their places.

(99-135) Who(ever) does not anoint my clay inscriptions and my monumental inscriptions with oil, does not make a sacrifice, does not return them to their places, (but) instead alters my monumental inscriptions, removes my name and writes his (own) name (or) buries (the monumental inscriptions) in the earth (or) throws (them) into the water: may the gods Shamash, Enlil, Adad and Sharru-matim pluck the offspring of that king; may he and his army not prevail in the face of a king who opposes him; may the god Nergal take away by force his treasure and the treasure of his land; may the goddess Eshtar, mistress of battle, break his weapon, and the weapons of his army; may the god Sin, "god of my head," be an evil demon to him forever.

REFERENCES

Meissner 1926:12-27; Grayson 1972:19-21; Grayson 1987:47-51.

MARI

The ancient city of Mari (modern Tell Hariri) was a major player on the Mesopotamian stage from Early Dynastic to Old Babylonian times. The site has been excavated by a long series of French expeditions led by A. Parrot (1933-38, 1951-74) and J.-Cl. Margueron (since 1979).

After a long period of rule by "viceroys" (šakkanakāi) in the Sargonic, Ur III and early Old Babylonian periods, the Amorite leader Iahdun-Lim was installed as "king" (LUGAL) in Mari. In a lengthy inscription found on foundation tablets from the Shamash temple in Mari he records his defeat of a coalition of Amorite tribes on the Upper Euphrates and his trip to the Mediterranean Sea.

IAHDUN-LIM (2.111)

Douglas Frayne

(1-16) To the god Shamash, king of heaven and earth, judge of gods and mankind, whose concern is justice, to whom truth has been given as a gift, shepherd of the black-headed (people), resplendent god, judge of those endowed with life, who is favorably inclined to supplications, who heeds prayers, who accepts entreaties, who gives a long-lasting life of joy to him who reveres him, who is the lord of Mari:

(17-27) Iahdun-Lim, son of Iaggid-Lim, king of Mari and the land of Hana, opener of canals, builder of walls, erector of steles proclaiming (his) name, provider of abundance and plenty for his people, who makes whatever (is needed) appear in his land, mighty king, magnificent youth, (28-33) when the god Shamash agreed to his supplications and listened to his words, the god Shamash quickly came and went at the side of Iahdun-Lim.

(34-40) From distant days when the god El built Mari, no king resident in Mari reached the sea, reached the mountains of cedar and boxwood, the great mountains, and cut down their trees, (41-50) But Iahdun-Lim, son of Iaggid-Lim, powerful king, wild bull of kings, by means of his strength and overpowering might went to the shore of the sea, and made a great offering (befitting) his kingship to the Sea. His troops bathed themselves in the Sea.

(51-66) (Next) he entered into the cedar and boxwood mountains, the great mountains, and cut down these trees — box, cedar, cypress, and elammakum. He made a commemorative monument, established his fame, and proclaimed his might. He made that land on the shore of the Sea submit, made it subject to his decree, and made it follow him. Having imposed a permanent tribute on them, they now bring their tribute to him.

(67-91) In that same year, — La²um, king of Samanum and the land of the Ubrabium, Bahlukullim, king of Tuttul and the land of the Amnanum, Aialum king of Abattum and the land of the Rabbum — these kings rebelled against him. The troops of Sumu-Epuh of the land of Iamhad came as auxiliary troops (to rescue him) and in the city of Samanum the tribes gathered together against him, but by means of (his) mighty weapon he defeated these three kings of ... He vanquished their troops and their auxiliaries and inflicted a defeat on them. He heaped up their dead bodies. He tore down their walls and made them into mounds of rubble.

(92-98) The city of Haman, of the tribe of Haneans, which all the leaders of Hana had built, he destroyed and made into mounds of rubble. Now, he defeated their king, Kasuri-Hafa. Having taken away their population he controlled the banks of the Euphrates.

(99-107) For his own life he built the temple of the god Shamash, his lord, a temple whose construction was perfect with finished workmanship, befitting his divinity. He installed him in his majestic dwelling. He named that temple Egirzal-anki ("House—rejoicing of heaven and earth").

(108-117) May the god Shamash, who lives in that temple, grant to Iahdun-Lim, the builder of his temple, the king beloved of his heart, a mighty weapon which overwhelms the enemies (and) a long reign of happiness and years of joyous abundance, forever.

(118-131) (As for) the one who destroys that temple, who ... it to evil and no good, who does not strengthen its foundation, does not set up what has fallen down, and cuts its regular offerings off from it, who effaces my name or has it effaced and writes his own name previously not there, or has it written there, or because of (these) curses incites another to do so,

(132-136) that man, whether he be king, viceroy, mayor, or common man, (137-157) may the god Enlil, judge of the gods make his kingship smaller than that of any other king. May the god Sin, the elder brother among the gods, his brothers, inflict on him a great curse. May the god Nergal, the lord of the weapon, smash his weapon in order that he not confront warriors. May the god Ea, king of destiny, assign him an evil destiny (and) may the goddess bride Aia, the great lady, put in a bad word about him before the god Shamash forever. May the god Bunene, the great vizier of the god Shamash, cut his throat;

may he take away his progeny and may his offspring and descendants not walk before the god	Shamash.
--	----------

REFERENCES

Text: Dossin 1955:1-28; Sollberger and Kupper 1971:245-249; Frayne 1990:604-608. Studies: Malamat 1989:41-43, 107-121.

ZIMRI-LIM (2.112)

Douglas Frayne

After a period of rule over Mari by Shamshi-Addu of Ekallatum and his son Iasmah-Addu, Zimri-Lim, son of Iahdun-Lim, was able to reassert control of the "Lim" dynasty over Mari. He reigned in Mari for a period of about 15 years until his defeat at the hands of Hammurabi of Babylon.

An inscription known from four clay tablet copies records Zimri-Lim's building of an ice-house for the god Dagan in Terqa.

(1-4) Zimri-Lim, son of Iahdun-Lim, king of Mari, [Tuttul], and the land [of Hana], (5-8) builder of an ice-house, (something) which formerly n[o] k[ing] had built on the bank of the Euphrat[es],	(9) had ice of ... brought over and (11-14) [had] an ice-house [built] on the bank of the Euphrat[es], in Terq[a, the city] beloved of the god [Dagan].
--	--

REFERENCES

Sollberger and Kupper 1971:249; Frayne 1990:625.

4. NEO-ASSYRIAN INSCRIPTIONS

SHALMANESER III (2.113)

KURKH MONOLITH (2.113A)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

Inscribed on a large stone stela discovered at Kurkh, this version of the annals of Shalmaneser III is identified by Schramm as Recension A (EAK 2:70-72, 87-90). Since the text ends abruptly with the last narrated event being the battle of Qarqar (853 BCE), the inscription seems to date from 853-852 BCE. The monument was apparently carved in great haste resulting in numerous scribal errors (Tadmor 1961a:143-144). This is quite unfortunate since the stela contains the most detailed extant account of the battle of Qarqar in which Ahab, king of Israel, participated in an alliance with other kings of the west in opposition to Shalmaneser III.

(i.29b-36a)

In the month of Iyyar, the thirteenth day, I departed from Nineveh. I crossed the Tigris River (and) I traversed Mount Hasamu and Mount Dihnu. I approached the city of La²la²tu, which belonged to Ahuni,¹ (the man) of Bit-Adini.² * The fear of the splendor of Aššur, my lord, overwhelmed them. In order to save their lives they went up(stream). I razed, destroyed and burned the city.

* Amos 1:5

I departed from the city of La²la²tu. I approached the city of Til-Barsip,³ the fortified city of Ahuni, (the man) of Bit-Adini. Ahuni, (the man) of Bit-Adini trusted in the massed might of his troops, and he became hostile against me in order to make war and battle. With the support of Aššur and the great gods, my lords, I fought with him. I decisively defeated him. I confined him to his city.

¹ While Ahuni paid tribute and gave up hostages to Aššurnasirpal II, he rebelled against Assyrian rule under Shalmaneser III. See PNA 1:84-85.

² For Bit Adini, see Dion 1997:86-96; Millard 1993; Sader 1987:47-98. For Shalmaneser's campaign against Bit Adini, see Ikeda 1999:271-273. For the equation with Bet-Eden (Amos 1:5), see Hallo 1960:38f.

³ For Til Barsip (Tell Ahmar), see Dornemann 1997b; Bunnens 1995. The hieroglyphic Luwian inscriptions indicate that the Luwian name of the city was Masuwari (see Hawkins 1996-97:110-111).

I departed from the city of Tīl-Barsip.⁴ I approached the city of Burmar²ina, which belonged to Aḥuni, (the man) of Bīt-A[dini]. Besieging the city, I captured it. I felled with the sword 300 of their fighting men. I made a pile of heads in front of his city. In the course of my advance, I received the tribute of Ḥapini, the Tīl-Abnīan, Ga²uni, the Sarugaeon,⁵ Gīri-Adad, the Immerinaean: silver, gold, oxen, sheep, (and) wine.

(i.36b-39)

I departed from the city of Burmar²ina. I crossed the Euphrates in rafts (made of inflated) goatskins.⁶ I received the tribute of Qatazilu, the Kummūhite:⁷ silver, gold, oxen, sheep, (and) wine. I approached the city of Paqaruḥbuni,⁸ one of the cities belonging to Aḥuni, (the man) of Bīt-Adini, which is on the opposite bank of the Euphrates. I decisively defeated his land. I laid waste his cities. I filled the wide plain with the corpses (lit. "defeat") of his warriors. I felled with the sword 1,300 of their battle troops.

(i.40-41a)

I departed from the city of Paqaruḥbuni. I approached the cities of Mutalli, the Gurgumite.⁹ I received the tribute of Mutalli, the Gurgumite: silver, gold, oxen, sheep, wine, (and) his daughter with her rich dowry.

(i.41b-51a)

I departed from the city of Gurgum. I approached the city of Lutibu, the fortified city of Ḥayāni,¹⁰ the Sam²alite. Ḥayāni, the Sam²alite, Sapalulme, the Patinaean,¹¹ Aḥuni, (the man) of Bīt-Adini, (and) Sangara, the Carchemishite, put their trust in each other. They prepared for war. They marched against me to do battle. With the exalted power of the divine standard which goes before me (and) with the fierce weapons which Aššur, my lord, gave, I fought with them. I decisively defeated them. I felled with the sword their fighting men. Like Adad, I rained down upon them a devastating flood. I piled them in ditches (and) filled the extensive plain with the corpses of their warriors. Like wool, I dyed the mountain with their blood. I took away from them (lit. "him," i.e. Ḥayāni) numerous chariots (and) teams of horses. I made a pile of heads in front of his city. I razed, destroyed (and) burned his cities.

At that time, I praised the majesty of the great gods; I proclaimed the valor of Aššur and Šamaš. I made a large royal statue of myself (and) I wrote on it my heroic deeds (and) my victorious achievements. I erected (it) before the source of the Saluara River, at the foot of Mt. Amanus.

(i.51b-ii.10a)

I departed from Mt. Amanus. I crossed the Orontes River. I approached the city of Ališir (or Alimuš), the fortified city of Sapalulme, the Patinaean. Sapalulme, the Patinaean — in order to save his life — received into his military forces Aḥuni, (the man) of Bīt-Adini, Sangara, the Carchemishite, Ḥayāni, the Sam²alite, Katē, the Qucan, Piḥirim, the Ḥilukaean,¹² Bur-Anate, the Yasbuqaeon, Adānu, the Yaḥanaean. By the command of Aššur, my lord, I scattered their combined forces. Besieging the city, I captured it. I carried off valuable booty — numerous chariots (and) teams of horses. I felled with the sword 700 of their fighting men. In the midst of the battle, I captured Bur-Anate, the Iasbuqaeon. I ca[ptured] the great cities of the Patinaean. I overwhe[elmed] like ruin mounds of the flood [the cities on the shore of the] upper [sea] of the land Amurru, also called the western sea. I received the tribute of the kings on the seashore. I marched justly (and) victoriously throughout the extensive region of the seashore. I made a statue of my lordship, establishing my reputation (lit. "name") for eternity. I erected (it) by the sea. I climbed Mt. Amanus (and) cut down beams of cedar (and) juniper. I marched to Mt. Atalur,¹³ where the image of Anum-ḥirbe stands. (And) I erected my image with his image.

(ii.30b-35a)

In the eponymy of Aššur-bēlū-ka²²in,¹⁴ in the month of Iyyar, the thirteenth day, I departed from Nineveh. I crossed the Tigris (and) I traversed Mounts Hasamu and Diḥnunu. I <approached> the city of Tīl-Barsip, the fortified city of Aḥuni, (the man) of Bīt-Adini. I captured (it). Aḥuni, (the man) of Bīt-Adini, in the face of the splendor of my fierce weapons and my ferocious battle array, crossed the Euphrates, which was [in flood], in order to save his life. He crossed over to strange lands. By the command of Aššur, the great lord, my <lord>, I seized the cities of Tīl-Barsip, ⁴ For the reading of Tīl-Barsip in this line (i.33), see Yamada 1995 and Grayson RIMA 3:15 (note i.33).

⁵ See Dion 1997:46, n. 106.

⁶ See CAD D 202, s.v. dušā.

⁷ The name Kummūh was applied to both the land and its capital city, which should be identified with the enormous site, hōyūk and lower town, of Samsat (Hawkins 1995b:92-93).

⁸ Paqaruḥbuni (Paqaruḥbuni in Aššur Clay Tablet, RIMA 3:38, iii.17) was located in the modern province of Gaziantep (Hawkins 1995b:94).

⁹ The land of Gurgum was located in the Maraš plain (Hawkins 1995b:93-94).

¹⁰ Hayya of the Kulamuwa Inscription. See COS 2.30, n. 2. Sam²al, also known as Bīt-Gabbari, is modern Zinjirli.

¹¹ Patina is equated with Umq/Unqi, the modern Amuq, the plain of Antioch (Hawkins 1995b:94-95).

¹² The land of Ḥilakku was Plain and Rough Cilicia.

¹³ Or Mt. Lallar. For a discussion of the mountain's name, see Grayson, RIMA 3:17, n. ii.10.

¹⁴ I.e., 856 BCE. See Millard 1994:27. For this individual, see PNA 1:172.

Alligu, [Nappigu], (and) Rugulitu as my royal cities. I settled Assyrians in their midst. I founded inside palaces as my royal residences. I renamed Til-Barsip as Kār-Shalmaneser, Nappigu as Lita-Aššur, Alligu as Ašbat-lā-kunu, (and) Rugulitu as Qibīt-[Aššur].

(ii.35b-40a)¹⁵

At that time, the city of (Ana)-Aššur-utēr-ašbat, which the people of the land of Ḫatti call Pitru¹⁶ (and) which is on the River Sagur[ra by the opposite bank] of the Euphrates, and the city of Mutkīnu, which is on the bank of the Euphrates, which Tiglath-pileser (I), my ancestor, a prince who preceded me, had established — at the time of Aššur-rabi (II), king of Assyria, the king of Aram¹⁶ had taken (these two cities) away by force — I restored these cities. I settled Assyrians in their midst. While I was residing in the city of Kār-Shalmaneser, I received the tribute of the kings of the seashore and kings on the banks of the Euphrates: silver, gold, tin, bronze, bronze (and) iron vessels, oxen, sheep, garments with multi-colored trim, and linen garments.

(ii.78b-81a)

In the eponymy of Dayān-Aššur,¹⁷ in the month of Iyyar, the fourteenth day, I departed from Nineveh. I crossed the Tigris. I approached the cities of Giammu on the River Balīḫ. They were afraid of my lordly fearfulness (and) the splendor of my fierce weapons; and with their own weapons they killed Giammu, their master. I entered the cities of Saḫlala and Til-ša-turaḫi. I took my gods into his palaces; (and) celebrated the tašlitu-festival in his palaces. I opened his treasury (and) saw his stored-away wealth. I carried off his possessions (and) property. I brought (them) to my city, Aššur.

(ii.81b-86a)

I departed from the city of Saḫlala. I approached

b Num 22:5;
Deut 23:5

c 2 Sam 8:9;
10; 2 Kgs
14:28; 1 Chr
18:9-10

d 1 Kgs 17,
etc.

e Gen 10:18;
Ezek 27:8,
11; 1 Chr
1:16

the city of Kār-Shalmaneser. I crossed the Euphrates in its flood, for a second time^{17a} in rafts (made of inflated) goatskins. In the city of Ana-Aššur-utēr-ašbat, which is by the opposite bank of the Euphrates on the River Sagura (and) which the people of the land of Ḫatti call the city of Pitru, in (this city) I received the tribute of the kings on the opposite bank of the Euphrates — Sangara, the Carchemishite, Kundašpu, the Kummuhite, Arame, (the man) of Bīt-Agūsi, Lalla, the Melidite, Ḫayāni, (the man) of Bīt-Gabbari, Qalparuda, the Patinacian, (and) Qalparuda, the Gurgumite: silver, gold, tin, bronze, (and) bronze bowls.

(ii.86b-102)

I departed from the Euphrates. I approached the city of Aleppo (Ḫalman). They were afraid to fight. They seized my feet. I received their tribute of silver (and) gold. I made sacrifices before Hadad¹⁸ of Aleppo (Ḫalman).

I departed from the city of Aleppo (Ḫalman). I approached the cities of Irḫulēni,¹⁹ the Hamathite.²⁰ I captured Adennu, Pargā, (and) Arganā, his royal cities.²¹ I carried off captives, his valuables, (and) his palace possessions. I set fire to his palaces.

I departed from the city of Arganā. I approached the city of Qarqar.²² I razed, destroyed and burned the city of Qarqar, his royal city. 1,200 chariots, 1,200 cavalry, (and) 20,000 troops of Hadad-ezer (Adad-idri)²³ of Damascus;²⁴ 700 chariots, 700 cavalry, (and) 10,000 troops of Irḫulēni, the Hamathite; 2,000 chariots,²⁵ (and) 10,000 troops of Ahab,²⁶ the Israelite (Sir²alāia); 500 troops of Byblos;²⁶ 1,000 troops of Egypt;²⁷ 10 chariots (and) 10,000 troops of the land of Irqanatu (Irqata);²⁸ 200 troops of Matinu-ba'al of the city of Arvad;²⁹ 200 troops of the land of Usanatu (Usnu);³⁰ 30 chariots (and) [],000 troops of Adon-ba'al of the land of ¹⁵ Cf. Aššur-dan II (RIMA 2:133-135; lines 23-32, 60-67); and Adad-nirari II (RIMA 2:150-151, 49b-60). Also possibly the Assyrian Chronicle, Fragment 4 (Grayson ABC 189); but see Pitard 1996:299.

¹⁶ MAN KUR a-ru-mu. The king's identity is enigmatic. Malamat (1973:142) suggests Hadad-ezer (2 Sam 8:3; 10:16). But see Ikeda 1999:275.

¹⁷ 853 BCE. See Millard 1994:27, 93. For the individual, see PNA 1:368.

^{17a} Yamada (1998:92-94) argues that the phrase ša kanālešu means "another time, again," not "for a second time."

¹⁸ Adad the stormgod, the city god of Aleppo. Cf. also the Sefire Inscription A (line 10), COS 2.82.

¹⁹ For Irḫulēni, see Hawkins 1976-80a:162.

²⁰ For Hamath, see Hawkins 1972-75a:67-70; Dion 1997:137-170.

²¹ These Hamathite campaigns with the captures of the cities Pargā, Adā (= Adennu), Qarqar, and Aštamaku (captured in the 848 campaign) are represented in the reliefs of Shalmaneser's bronze gates. See the discussion of Marcus 1987.

²² See Domeneq 1997a.

²³ There is disagreement whether Hadad-ezer (Adad-idri) should be equated with the Ben-Hadad (II) of 1 Kgs 20-22. Favoring this identification, see Hallo 1960:39-40; Wiseman 1972-75. Against this identification, see Pitard 1987:114-125; 1992a; and Kuan 1995:36-38; PNA 1:46.

²⁴ For the name KUR ANŠE-ŠU (Imērišu / Ša-Imērišu), see Pitard 1987:14-17.

²⁵ There is debate over the accuracy of the numbers in this passage and especially the number of chariots attributed to Ahab. Some scholars argue that this is an accurate number (e.g. Elat 1975:29; Briquel-Chatonnet 1992:80-81; Kuan 1995:34-36). Others argue that this is a scribal error (e.g. Na'aman 1976:97-102; Mitchell *CAH*³ 3/1:479). De Odorico (1995:103-107) discusses the problem and concludes that the scribe decided on what had to be the approximate size of the Syro-Palestinian army ($\approx 70,000$) and renfolded some numbers until he got this value.

²⁶ Tadmor argues for the emendation: Gu-<ba>-a-a "Byblos" (1961:144-145).

²⁷ Mu-us-ra-a-a = "Egyptian." See Tadmor 1961:144-145; Borger TUAT 1/4:361, n. 92a; and Redford 1992:339. However, Lemaire (1993:152) and Dion (1997:164-165) read Šumur.

²⁸ Tell 'Arqā northeast of Tripoli, Lebanon (Borger TUAT 1:361, n. 92b). See also Thalmann 1991. Cf. Gen 10:17.

²⁹ See Badre 1997; Bonatz 1993; Dion 1997:113-136.

³⁰ See Dion 1997:185, n. 66.

Šianu (Siyannu);³¹ 1,000 camels of Gindibu³² of Arabia;³² [] hundred troops of Ba³asa, (the man) of Bīt-Ruḥubi, the Ammonite³³ — these 12 kings³⁴ he took as his allies.

They marched against me [to do] war and battle. With the supreme forces which Aššur, my lord, had given me (and) with the mighty weapons which the divine standard, which goes before me, had granted me, I fought with them. I decisively defeated³⁵ them from the city of Qarqar to the city of Gil-zau.³⁶ I felled with the sword 14,000 troops,³⁷ their fighting men. Like Adad, I rained down upon them a devastating flood. I spread out their corpses (and) I filled the plain. <I felled> with the sword their extensive troops. I made their blood flow in the wadis(?)³⁸ [39]. The field was too small for laying flat their bodies (lit. "their lives"); the broad countryside had been consumed in burying them. I blocked the Orontes River with their corpses as with a causeway.⁴⁰ In the midst of this battle I took away from them chariots, cavalry, (and) teams of horses.

³¹ See Bounni and al-Maqdissi 1992.

³² Eph^al 1982:75-76.

³³ The debate concerning the last allied participant has centered primarily on the word KUR A-ma-na-a-a. Commonly scholars (Luckenbill ARAB 1:§611; Oppenheim ANET 279; Na³aman 1976:98, n. 20; Millard 1992:35) have understood this to refer to Ammon, the small Transjordanian state (Gen 19:38, etc.). Some scholars (Cogan 1984:255-259; Dion 1997:176, 186; PNA 1:275) have understood the word to refer to Amanah, the Anti-Lebanon mountain range (cf. 2 Kgs 5:12Q, Song 4:8). Moreover, beside the similarity of place name, Forrer (1928:134, 328) equated the patronym with Rehob, father of Hadad-ezer of Sobah, named in 2 Sam 8:3, suggesting Rehob was the dynastic name of the kings of Sobah. For a fuller discussion, see Rendsburg 1991.

³⁴ Possibly an erroneous addition since only eleven kings are listed (see Grayson RIMA 3:23, note ii.90-95); or possibly the twelfth king was erroneously omitted (Tadmor 1961:144-145); or as Reinhold suggests "das angegriffene Karkar" was the twelfth state (1989:125); or "Ba³asa, (the man) of Bīt-Ruḥubi, the Ammonite" is really a reference to two entities: Beth-Rehob and Ammon (Kuan 1995:32-34; Ikeda 1999:278); or possibly a rounding of the number to an even dozen, a conventional number with symbolic significance (De Odorico 1995:133-136). The last option seems preferable. Interestingly, one text of Shalmaneser III, carved along with a second inscription into a rock face at the Tigris' source, gives the number of the allied enemies as "15 cities of the seashore" (RIMA 3:94-95, line 21).

³⁵ While Shalmaneser may have captured the city of Qarqar, most scholars believe that his claim to victory over the coalition in the ensuing battle was in reality an Assyrian defeat, since he returned in 849 (his 10th year), 848 (his 11th year) and 845 (his 14th year) to fight against this same coalition with little greater success (see Hawkins 1972-75a:67). The two rock face inscriptions at the source of the Tigris refer to the "4th time" in which Shalmaneser faced this coalition (see RIMA 3:94-95, 95-96). There may have been some limited successes in these campaigns. E.g., in 848 he was apparently able to capture Aššammaku (see below COS 2.113B, ii.68-iii.15). For the resistance to Shalmaneser, see Dion 1995c.

³⁶ URU gīl-za-ū. However, Fort Shalmaneser Stone Throne Base (RIMA 3:107 line 32) and Fort Shalmaneser Door Sill (RIMA 3:107 line 27) read: URU di-il-zi-a-ū.

³⁷ In later versions of the annals, the number of enemies killed is 20,500, 25,000 and 29,000. See the discussions of De Odorico (1995:107) and Mayer (1995:46-47).

³⁸ Grayson RIMA 3:24.

³⁹ "The end of the line is incomprehensible" (Grayson RIMA 3:24, n. ii.99).

⁴⁰ Grayson (RIMA 3:24) and Borger (TUAT 1:362) translate tiṭurri "bridge." See also AHW 1363 s.v. tiṭurum, tiṭurru "bridge." However, in this context with this verb (kesēru "to dam, stop up, clog, etc.") CAD's "causeway" seems better. See CAD K 313.

REFERENCES

Text: 3 R pla. 7-8; RIMA 3:11-24; Brinkman 1978. Translations and studies: DOTT 47-49; ARAB 1:§§594-611; ANET 277-278; TUAT 1:360-362; Tadmor 1961a; Schramm EAK 2:70-72, 87-90; Kuan 1995:27-47; Dion 1997:184-190.

ANNALS: AŠŠUR CLAY TABLETS (2.113B)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

Written on clay tablets from Aššur dating to 842 BCE, this edition of the annals is identified as Recension C.¹ It narrates the military campaigns of Shalmaneser III in chronological order from the accession year to the sixteenth year by using regnal year formula: "in my Xth regnal year (palū).² It includes narration of Shalmaneser's campaigns against the coalition of kings that fought him in years 853, 849, 848 and 845 BCE. The text concludes with a summary of Shalmaneser's mighty achievements: a geographically arranged résumé of his conquests, a description of the appointment of governors, the increase of agricultural production, and the growth of the Assyrian army.²

(ii.19b-33)

In my sixth regnal year, I departed from Nineveh. I approached the cities on the banks of the Balih (Palih) River. They became afraid in the face of my mighty weapons (and) they killed Giammu, their city ruler. I entered the city of Tīl-turahi. I

¹ Schramm EAK 2:73-75. A unique feature of this text is the use of dividing lines on the tablet to separate the regnal years.

² Many of these are motifs first encountered in the annals of Tiglath-pileser I (see Grayson RIMA 2:7-8).

claimed the city as my own.

I departed from the Balih (Palih) River. I crossed the Euphrates in its flood. I received the tribute of the kings of the land of Ḫatti.

I departed from the land of Ḫatti. I approached the city of Aleppo (Ḫalman). I made sacrifices before Hadad of Aleppo (Ḫalman).

I departed from Aleppo (Ḫalman). I approached the city of Qarqar. Hadad-ezer (Adad-idri), the Damascene, (and) Irḫulēni, the Hamathite, together with twelve kings of the shore of the sea, trusted in their combined forces; (and) they marched against me to do war and battle. I fought with them. I felled with the sword 25,000 troops,³ their fighting men. I took away from them their chariots, their cavalry (and) their military equipment. In order to save their lives they ran away. I boarded ships (and) I went out upon the sea.

(ii.55-67)

In my tenth regnal year, I crossed the Euphrates for the eighth time. I razed, destroyed, (and) burned the cities of Sangara, the Carchemishite.

I departed from the cities of the Carchemishite. I approached the cities of Arame. I captured the city Arnē, his royal city. I razed, destroyed (and) burned (it) together with 100 cities in its environs. I slaughtered their people. I plundered them.

At that time, Hadad-ezer (Adad-idri), the Damascene, (and) Irḫulēni, the Hamathite, together with twelve kings on the shore of the sea, trusted in their combined forces; and they marched against me to do war and battle. I fought with them. I decisively defeated them. I took away from them (their) chariots, their cavalry, (and) their military equipment. In order to save their lives they ran away.

(ii.68-iii.15)

In my eleventh regnal year, I departed from Nineveh. I crossed the Euphrates in its flood for the ninth time. I captured 97 cities of Sangara. I captured, razed, destroyed (and) burned 100 cities of Arame. I took to the slopes of Mt. Amanus.

I crossed Mt. Yaraqū (and) I descended to the cities of the people of Hamath. I captured the city of Aštammaku⁴ together with 89 cities. I slaughtered their people. I plundered them.

At that time, Hadad-ezer (Adad-idri), the Damascene, (and) Irḫulēni, the Hamathite, together with twelve kings on the shore of the sea, trusted in their combined forces; and they marched against me to do war and battle. I fought with them. I decisively defeated them. I felled with the sword 10,000 troops, their fighting men. I took away from them (their) chariots, their cavalry, (and) their military equipment. On my return, I captured Aparāzu, the fortified city of Arame.

At that time, I received the tribute of Qalparunda: silver, gold, tin, horses, donkeys, oxen, sheep, blue-dyed wool, (and) linen garments. I climbed Mt. Amanus; (and) I cut beams of cedar.

(iii.24-33)

In my fourteenth regnal year, I mustered (the troops of my) extensive land in countless numbers. With 120,000 troops⁵ I crossed the Euphrates in its flood.

At that time, Hadad-ezer (Adad-idri), the Damascene, (and) Irḫulēni, the Hamathite, together with twelve kings on the shore of the sea, above and below, mustered their troops in countless numbers. They marched against me. I fought with them. I decisively defeated them. I destroyed their chariots (and) their cavalry. I took away their military equipment. In order to save their lives they ran away.

(iv.26-36)

Conqueror from the upper and lower seas of the land of Nairi and the great sea of the west as far as Amanus mountain range, I ruled over the land of Hatti in its entirety. I (lit. "he") conquered from the source of the Tigris to the source of the Euphrates. I devastated like a flood from the land of Enzi to the land of Suḫni (Su²unu), from the land of Suḫni to the land of Melid, from the land of Melid to the land of Daiēnu, from the land of Daiēnu to the city of Aršaškun, from the city of Aršaškun to the land of Gilzānu,⁶ (and) from the land of Gilzānu to the city of Ḫubuškia.⁷

(iv.37-39)

In the lands and mountains over which I ruled, I appointed governors everywhere and imposed upon them tax, tribute, (and) corvée.⁸

(iv.40-44)

The gods Ninurta and Nergal, who love my priesthood, gave to me the wild beasts and commanded me to hunt. I killed from my ... chariot 373 wild bulls (and) 399 lions with my valorous assault. I

³ See COS 2.113A note 37.

⁴ For the identification of Aštammaku with Sūma between Idlib and Rīḥa, see Sader 1987:225.

⁵ For a discussion of the size of the Assyrian army (120,000), see De Odorico 1995:107-112.

⁶ Gilzānu may have been located on the western shores of Lake Urmia (Liverani 1992a:23); and/or perhaps on the plain of Ushnu (Ushnaviyeh) and Solduz with its most important center at Hasanlu (Reade 1979:175; 1995:35-36). Until the end of the 9th century, Gilzānu furnished the Assyrians with their best horses.

⁷ For Ḫubuškia, see Lanfranchi 1995 and Medvedskaya 1995.

⁸ Lit. "basket carriers."

drove 29 elephants into ambush. (iv.45-48) I hitched up plows in the districts of my land. I piled up more grain and straw than ever before. I hitched up teams of horses to 2,002 chariots (and	equipped) 5,542 cavalry for the horses of my land. (iv. 49-51) The month of Tashrit, the twenty-second day, eponymy of Taklāk-ana-šarri, governor of the city of Nēmed-Ištar. ⁹
--	--

⁹ 842 BCE. See Millard 1994:28, 56.

REFERENCES

Text: RIMA 3:32-41; Michel 1947-52:7-20, 63-71, 454-475, pls. 1-3, 5-6, 22-24; Cameron 1950. Translations and studies: ARAB 1:§§627-639; ANET 278-279; Schramm EAK 2:73-75, 87-90.

ANNALS: CALAḤ BULLS (2.113C)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

This is a reconstructed recension (Recension D according to Schramm EAK 2:76-77) based on inscriptions on two monumental bulls found at Calah and supplemented by two small fragments of inscribed stones. The edition apparently dates to 841 BCE¹ and is the first edition of Shalmaneser's annals that documents Shalmaneser's campaign in his eighteenth regnal year against Hazael of Damascus, and which also mentions the tribute paid to Shalmaneser by Jehu of Israel.

(12'6-19')
In my sixth regnal year, I departed from Nineveh. I approached the cities on the banks of the Baliḥ (Paliḥ) River. They became afraid in the face of my mighty weapons (and) they killed Giammu, their city ruler. I entered the city of Til-turaḥi. I claimed the city as my own.
I departed from the Baliḥ (Paliḥ) River. I crossed the Euphrates in its flood. I received the tribute of the kings of the land of Ḫatti.
I departed from the land of Ḫatti. I approached the city of Aleppo (Ḫalman). I made sacrifices before Hadad of Aleppo (Ḫalman).
I departed from Aleppo (Ḫalman). I approached the city of Qarqar. Hadad-ezer (Adad-idri), the Damascene, (and) Irḫulēni, the Hamathite, together with twelve kings of the shore of the sea, trusted in their combined forces; and they marched against me to do war and battle. I fought with them. I felled with the sword 25,000 troops, their fighting men. I took away from them their chariots, their cavalry (and) their military equipment. In order to save their lives they ran away. I boarded ships (and) I went out upon the sea.
(29'-34')
In my tenth regnal year, I crossed the Euphrates for the eighth time. I razed, destroyed, (and) burned the cities of Sangara, the Carchemishite.
I departed from the cities of the Carchemishite. I approached the cities of Arame. I captured the city Arnē, his royal city. I razed, destroyed (and) burned (it) together with 100 cities in its environs. I slaughtered their people. I plundered them.

At that time, Hadad-ezer (Adad-idri), the Damascene, (and) Irḫulēni, the Hamathite, together with twelve kings on the shore of the sea, trusted in their combined forces; and they marched against me to do war and battle. I fought with them. I decisively defeated them. I took away from them their chariots, their cavalry, (and) their military equipment. In order to save their lives they ran away.
(35'-41')
In my eleventh regnal year, I departed from Nineveh. I crossed the Euphrates in its flood for the ninth time. I captured 97 cities of Sangara. I captured, razed, destroyed (and) burned 100 cities of Arame. I took to the slopes of Mt. Amanus.
I crossed Mt. Yaraqū (and) I went down to the cities of the Hamathites. I captured the city of Aštammaku together with 99 cities. I slaughtered their people. I plundered them. At that time, Hadad-ezer (Adad-idri), the Damascene, (and) Irḫulēni, the Hamathite, together with twelve kings on the shore of the sea, trusted in their combined forces; and they marched against me to do war and battle. I fought with them. I decisively defeated them. I felled with the sword 10,000 troops, their fighting men. I took away from them their chariots, their cavalry, (and) their military equipment. On my return, I captured Aparāzu, the fortified city of Arame.

¹ The date depends somewhat on whether one understands there to be a lacuna at the end of the text or not (see Grayson RIMA 3:42).

At that time, I received the tribute of Qalparunda, the Patinaean: silver, gold, tin, horses, oxen, sheep, (and) linen garments. I climbed Mt. Amanus; (and) I cut beams of cedar.

(44'b-47'a)

In my fourteenth regnal year, I mustered (the troops of my) extensive land in countless numbers. With 120,000 of my troops² I crossed the Euphrates in its flood.

At that time, Hadad-ezer (Adad-idri), the Damascene, (and) Irhulēni, the Hamathite, together with twelve kings on the shore of the sea, above and below, mustered their troops in countless numbers. They marched against me. I fought with them. I decisively defeated them. I destroyed their chariots (and) their cavalry. I took away their military equipment. In order to save their lives they ran away.

(1'-27'')

In my eighteenth regnal year, I crossed the Euphra-

a 2 Kgs 8:7-15; 10:32-34

b Deut 3:9

c Deut 20:19

d 2 Kgs 9:1-10:36

tes for the sixteenth time. Hazael^a of Damascus trusted in the massed might of his troops; and he mustered his troops in great numbers. He made Mt. Saniru/Senir,^b a mountain peak, which (lies) opposite Mount Lebanon, his fortress. I fought with him. I decisively defeated him. I felled with the sword 16,000 of his troops, his fighting men. I took away from him 1,121 of his chariots, 470 of his cavalry, together with his camp. In order to save his life he ran away. I pursued after him. I confined him in Damascus, his royal city. I cut down his orchards.^c I marched to the mountains of Haurāni. I razed, destroyed and burned cities without number. I carried away their booty without number. I marched to the mountains of Ba³li-rasi^d at the side of the sea. I erected a statue of my royalty there.

At that time, I received the tribute of the Tyrians and the Sidonians, and of Jehu (Ja-ū-a),^d (man of) Bīt-Humrī (Omri).⁵ (lacuna?)

² See COS 2.113B, note 5.

³ For the destruction of orchards, see Cole 1995. For a similar context, see Tiglath-pileser III, COS 2.117A, note 32, and COS 2.2A, note 61.

⁴ The identification of Ba³li-rasi is debated. Three locations have been proposed: (1) in the neighborhood of Tyre (Borger TUAT 1:366, n. 21a); (2) in the vicinity of the Nahr el-Kelb (Wiseman DOTT 49; Honigsmann RLA 1:395); and (3) Mt. Carmel (Astour 1971:384-385; Green 1979:36). See the discussion in Dion 1997:196-197. "The ravaging of Beth-arbel by Shalman on the day of battle" (Hos 10:14) is understood by some scholars as a reference to an attack on the Israelite town by an Assyrian king, perhaps Shalmaneser III in connection with this campaign in 841 BCE (Astour 1971; Timm 1989:319-320).

⁵ Clearly a reference to Jehu (Ungnad 1906; Halpern 1987:81-85). Na³aman (1997a:19-20) argues that the transcription should be Ja-ū-a mār Ḥumrī (see also Zadok 1997:20). Schneider (1995; 1996) has suggested that the phrase mār "ḥu-um-ri-i means "son (descendent) of Omri" and that Jehu was a descendent of the Omride dynasty, perhaps by a different branch than the ruling descendants of Ahab. But see the criticisms of Na³aman (1998a:236-238) and Dion (1997:231, n. 36). The Assyrians often denoted countries by the name of the founder of the ruling dynasty at the time of their first acquaintance with it (e.g. "Bīt Baḥlani, Bīt Agusi, Bīt Ḥumrī"), regardless of which dynasty was currently in power.

REFERENCES

Text: RIMA 3:42-48; Michel 1947-52:265-268. Translations and studies: ARAB 1:§§640-663, 671-672; ANET 279-280; TUAT 1:363-366; EAK 2:76-77, 87-88.

ANNALS: MARBLE SLAB (2.113D)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

Engraved on a large marble tablet (80 x 60 cm) found in the wall of the city of Aššur, this version of the annals can be identified as Recension E (Schramm EAK 2:77-78). The narration covers through Shalmaneser's twentieth year and therefore dates to 839 BCE.

(ii.13-25)

In my sixth regnal year, I approached the cities on the banks of the Baliḥ River. They killed Giammu, their city ruler. I entered the city of Tīl-turaḥi.

I crossed the Euphrates in its flood. I received the tribute of the kings of the land of Ḥatti.

Hadad-ezer (Adad-idri), the Damascene, (and) Irhulēni, the Hamathite, together with twelve kings of the shore of the sea, trusted in their combined forces; and they marched against me to do war and battle. I fought with them. I decisively defeated them. I took away from them their chariots, their cavalry (and) their military equipment. I felled with the sword 25,000 troops, their fighting men.

(ii.51-iii.5)

In my eleventh regnal year, I crossed the Euphrates for the ninth time. I conquered 97 cities of Sangara. I took (the way) along the slopes of Mt. Amanus. I crossed Mt. Yaraq. I went down to the cities of the Hamathites. I captured the city of Abšimaku (Aštammaku?) together with 89 cities.

At that time, Hadad-ezer (Adad-idri), the Damascene, (and) Irhulēni, the Hamathite, together with twelve kings on the shore of the sea, trusted in their combined forces; and I fought with them. I decisively defeated them. I felled with the sword 10,000 troops, their fighting men.

(iii.14-25)

In my fourteenth regnal year, I mustered (the troops of my) extensive land in countless numbers. With 120,000 of my troops I crossed the Euphrates in its flood.

At that time, Hadad-ezer (Adad-idri), the Damascene, (and) Irhulēni, the Hamathite, together with twelve kings on the shore of the sea, above and below, mustered their troops in countless numbers. They marched against me. I fought with them. I decisively defeated them. I took away their chariots, their cavalry (and) their military equipment. In order to save their lives they ran away.

(iii.45b-iv.15a)

In my eighteenth regnal year, I crossed the Euphra-

a 2 Kgs 8:7-15; 10:32-34

b Deut 3:9

c 2 Kgs 9:1-10:36

tes for the sixteenth time. Hazael ^a of Damascus trusted in the massed might of his troops; and he mustered his army in great number. He made Mt. Saniru/Senir ^b a mountain peak, which (lies) opposite Mount Lebanon, his fortress. I felled with the sword 16,020 troops, his fighting men. I took away from him 1,121 of his chariots, 470 of his cavalry, together with his camp. In order to save his life he ran away. I pursued after him. I confined him in Damascus, his royal city. I cut down his orchards. I burned his shocks. I marched to the mountains of Haurānu. I razed, destroyed and burned cities without number. I carried away their booty. I marched to the mountains of Ba³li-ra³si at the side of the sea and opposite Tyre. I erected a statue of my royalty there. I received the tribute of Ba³almanzēr, ¹ the Tyrian, and of Jehu (Ja-a-ū), ² ^c (the man) of Bīt-Humri (Omri).

On my return, I went up on Mt. Lebanon. I set up a stela of my royalty with the stela of Tiglath-pileser (I), the great king who went before me.

¹ See PNA 1:242; Lipiński 1970 (note Josephus, Against Apion i.124).

² See COS 2.113C, note 5.

REFERENCES

Text: RIMA 3:50-56; Michel 1954-59:27-45; Safar 1951. Translations and studies: Schramm EAK 2:77-78; TUAT 1:366-367; Cogan and Tadmor 1988:334.

KURBA³IL STATUE (2.113E)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

Engraved on a statue of Shalmaneser (measuring 103 cm in height), the text belongs to Recension E of his annals. Since the last regnal year narrated is the twentieth, the statue must date to 839-838 BCE. While it belongs to the same recension as the Marble Slab (COS 2.113D), the narrative concerning Shalmaneser's eighteenth year campaign against Hazael more closely follows that of the Calah Bulls (COS 2:113C). The statue was dedicated to the god Adad of Kurba³il, but was discovered in excavations of Calah. While it may have been brought to Calah for repair (Oates 1962:16), it seems more likely that there was a shrine to Adad of Kurba³il at Calah since this deity was an important god in the Neo-Assyrian period.¹ Here only the eighteenth regnal year (841 BCE) is translated.²

(lines 21-30a)

In my eighteenth regnal year, I crossed the Euphrates for the sixteenth time. Hazael ^a of Damascus trusted in the massed might of his troops; and he mustered his army in great numbers. He made Mount Saniru/Senir, ^b a mountain peak, which (lies) opposite Mount Lebanon, his fortress. I fought with him. I decisively defeated him. I felled with the sword 16,000 of his men-of-arms. I took away from him 1,121 of his chariots, 470 of his cavalry, together with his camp. In order to save his life he

a 2 Kgs 8:7-15; 10:32-34

b Deut 3:9

c 2 Kgs 9:1-10:36

ran away. I pursued after him. I confined him in Damascus, his royal city. I cut down his orchards. I marched to the mountains of Haurāni. I razed, destroyed and burned cities without number. I carried away their booty without number. I marched to the mountains of Ba³li-ra³si at the side of the sea. I erected a statue of my royalty there.

At that time, I received the tribute of the Tyrians, the Sidonians, and Jehu ^c (Ja-a-ū), (the man) of Bīt-Humri (Omri).

¹ Besides in the city of Kurba³il, the deity, Adad of Kurba³il, also had a major shrine in Assur. See Postgate 1983:367-368.

² Grayson notes: "The whole narrative begins with a broad geographical sweep of Shalmaneser's conquests, except for Babylonia, ending with a more explicit narrative of recent campaigns to the west and concluding with the first invasion of Que. This initial campaign against Que was apparently a great success (see CAH 3/1 p. 263) and it is not surprising that a statue would have been sculpted to commemorate it" (RIMA 3:59).

REFERENCES

Text: RIMA 3:58-61; Kinnier Wilson 1962:90-115. Translations and Studies: Schramm EAK 2:78-79; Oates 1962:16-17.

BLACK OBELISK (2.113F)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

Sculpted from black alabaster, the famous "Black Obelisk," is 2.02 meters in height and contains the longest account of Shalmaneser's reign, stretching down to the king's thirty-first regnal year.¹ It was discovered by Layard at Calah in 1846. The text is identified as Recension F and dates to 828-827 BCE. The Obelisk is formed in the shape of a ziggurat, having four sides with five panels on each side containing reliefs of the tribute being brought to the king (ANEP 120-121). This form may reflect the special appeal which these temple towers appear to have had for the Assyrians (Porada 1983:16).² While each panel has an epigraph, the main text is found above and below the five panels on all four sides.

On the front side, the second panel or register contains the famous relief of Jehu of Israel (or his envoy) paying his tribute to Shalmaneser (see epigraph 2 below). The first or top register holds a scene of the ruler of Gilzānu, a land near Lake Urmia, paying his tribute (see epigraph 1 below). By juxtaposing the portrayals of the tribute from these two countries — the first being in the easternmost area of the empire and the second being in the southwesternmost area — the obelisk creates a pictorial merism stressing the gigantic extent of Shalmaneser's Assyrian empire (Green 1979; Porada 1983; Lieberman 1985).

(54b-66)³

In my sixth regnal year, I approached the cities on the banks of the Balih River. They killed Giammu, their city ruler. I entered the city of Til-turahi. I crossed the Euphrates in its flood. I received the tribute of [all] the kings of the land of Hatti. At that time, Hadad-ezer (Adad-idri), the Damascene, (and) Irhulēni, the Hamathite, together with the kings of the land of Hatti and on the shore of the sea, trusted in their combined forces; and they marched against me to do war and battle. By the command of Aššur, the great lord, my lord, I fought with them. I decisively defeated them. I took away from them their chariots, their cavalry (and) their military equipment. I felled with the sword 20,500 troops, their fighting men.

(87-89a)

In my eleventh regnal year, I crossed the Euphrates for the ninth time. I captured cities without number. I went down to the cities of the Hamathites. I captured 89 cities. Hadad-ezer (Adad-idri), the Damascene, (and) twelve kings of the land of Hatti stood together with their combined forces. I decisively defeated them.

a 2 Kgs 8:7-15; 10:32-34

(91b-92a)

In my fourteenth regnal year, I mustered (my) land. I crossed the Euphrates. Twelve kings marched against me. I fought <with them.> I decisively defeated them.

(97b-99a)⁴

In my eighteenth regnal year, I crossed the Euphrates for the sixteenth time. Hazael⁵ of Damascus attacked to do battle. I took away from him 1,121 of his chariots, 470 of his cavalry together with his camp.

(102b-104a)

In my twenty-first regnal year, I crossed the Euphrates for the twenty-first time. I marched to the cities of Hazael of Damascus. I captured 4 of his fortified settlements. I received the tribute of the Tyrians, the Sidonians, and the Byblians.

Epigraph 1 (RIMA #87)

I received the tribute of Sūa,⁶ the Gilzānean:⁶ silver, gold, tin, bronze vessels, the staffs of the king's hand, horses, (and) two-humped camels.

¹ Since the Black Obelisk relates that the aged Shalmaneser dispatched Dayan-Aššur for the military expedition against the lands of Mušāšir and Gilzānu in 828 BCE (while he himself stayed in Calah), the obelisk, in a way, is effectively a memorial to Dayan-Aššur as well as to Shalmaneser III. See Reade 1981:159.

² The Assyrians may have thought that inherent in the shape of the ziggurat was the protective function of the deity of the ziggurat. Thus this protective function of the deity may explain the use of the miniature ziggurats at the tops of the obelisks on which were portrayed the king's important actions in the Middle Assyrian examples and the tribute of subjected peoples in the extant Neo-Assyrian obelisks (Porada 1983:17). See also Reade 1980:20-21.

³ Cf. with the Kurkh Monolith's description of this campaign above (COS 2.113A, ii.86b-102).

⁴ Cf. with the Calah Bulls above (COS 2.113C, 1"-27").

⁵ "Šu-ā-a. In the Kurkh Monolith, this name is also spelled "a-su-ū (RIMA 3:15, i.28) and "a-sa-a-ū (RIMA 3:21, ii.61).

⁶ For the location of Gilzānu, see COS 2.113B, note 6.

Epigraph 2 (RIMA #88)

I received the tribute of Jehu (Ia-ú-a) (the man) of Bīt-Ḫumri: silver, gold, a golden bowl, a golden goblet,⁷ golden cups, golden buckets, tin, a staff of the king's hand,⁸ (and) javelins(?).⁹

Epigraph 3 (RIMA #89)

I received the tribute of Egypt:¹⁰ two-humped camels, a water buffalo (lit. "river ox"), a rhinoceros, an antelope, female elephants, female monkeys, (and) apes.

⁷ See CAD Z 166 s.v. zuqutu; Landsberger and Gurney 1957:58:442.

⁸ Elat notes that another monarch, Šia, king of Gilzānu, is pictured on the Obelisk giving Shalmaneser ḫuḏre "staffs." He argues for a distinction between ḫuḏru and ḫaḏu. The latter he sees as a symbol of royal authority, i.e. a scepter. The former was a symbol of protection or ownership of property. Thus Jehu and Šia, in handing over the ḫuḏru to Shalmaneser III, "wished to symbolize that their kingdoms had been handed over to the protection of the king of Assyria" (1975:33-34). See CAD H 265 s.v. ḫuḏru A.

⁹ The transliteration and meaning is uncertain. Michel suggests that it is a kind of weapon, based on the reading Giš bu-dū-ḫa-ti (Michel 1954:59:141). Luckenbill translates "javelins" (ARAB 1:§590) (so also Cogan and Tadmor 1988:335). Oppenheim transliterates as Giš pu-ru-ḫa-ti, but does not translate (ANET, 281, n. 2). Wiseman translates "puruhati-fruits" (DOTT 48-49). Apparently following von Soden (AHw 844, s.v. pašḫu II). Grayson (RIMA 3:149) transliterates: Giš pu-aš-ḫa-ti and translates "spears."

¹⁰ The date of this tribute is uncertain. While Egypt participated in a minor way in the battle of Qarqar (853 BCE), it is doubtful that the tribute is connected to this conflict.

REFERENCES

Text: RIMA 3:62-71, 149-150; Michel 1954-59:137-157, 221-233. Translations and Studies: ARAB 1:§§553-593; DOTT 48-50; ANET 278-281; TUAT 1:362-363; ANEP² figs. 351-355; Schramm EAK 2:79-81, 87-90; Porada 1983; Lieberman 1985; Cogan and Tadmor 1988:335; Marcus 1987.

AŠŠUR BASALT STATUE (2.113G)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

This is a Summary or Display inscription which is incised on the front, left hip and back of a broken basalt statue of Shalmaneser. It was discovered in the 1903 German excavations at the entrance to a Parthian building where it had been moved from its original location at the Tabira Gate. The statue had been broken into two large and many small pieces and the head was missing. The text appears to date to 833 BCE based on the its inscriptional content.

The two portions translated here narrate Shalmaneser's campaign against the western "12" king coalition in 853 BCE and his campaign against Hazael of Damascus in 841 BCE.

(i.14-24)¹

I decisively defeated Hadad-ezer (Adad-idri), the Damascene together with 12 kings, his allies. I laid low 29,000 of his men-of-arms like sheep. I threw the rest of their troops into the Orontes River. In order to save their lives, they ran away.

(i.25-ii.6)²

Hadad-ezer (Adad-idri) passed away. Hazael,³ son

a 2 Kgs 8:7-15; 10:32-34

of a nobody,³ took the throne. He mustered his numerous troops; (and) he moved against me to do war and battle. I fought with him. I decisively defeated him. I took away from him his walled camp. In order to save his life he ran away. I pursued (him) as far as Damascus, his royal city. I cut down his orchards.

(Remainder of column too fragmentary for translation)

¹ Cf. the account of this campaign in the Kurkh Monolith (COS 2.113A, ii.86b-102).

² Cf. the narration of this campaign with its counterparts translated above: COS 2.113C (1"-27"); 2.113D (iii.45b-iv.15a); and 2.113E (21-30a).

³ A clear declaration of Hazael's illegitimate regnal status. For discussion, see Pitard 1987:132-138. For the form of the name in the Šeh Ḥamad texts, see Fales 1993.

REFERENCES

Text: RIMA 3:117-119; Michel 1947-52:57-63; Messerschmidt 1911: no. 30. Translations and Studies: ARAB 1:§§679-683; ANET 280; Schramm EAK 2:82-83, 87-90; Pitard 1987:132-138; Cogan and Tadmor 1988:334.

BLACK STONE CYLINDER (2.113H)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

This short inscription is engraved on a small, black and white marble cylinder (1.5 x 4.1 cm) discovered on the northeast side of the small ziqqurra in Aššur (i.e., the Anu-Adad temple). The cylinder was brought to Aššur by Shalmaneser as booty from Hazael of Damascus;¹ and was perhaps used as a foundation deposit for the city wall.

(lines 1-8)

Booty from the temple of the god Šēru² of the city of Malaḫa,³ a royal city of Hazael of Damascus, which Shalmaneser, son of Aššur-našir-pal, king of

α 2 Kgs 8:7-15; 10:32-34

Assyria, brought back inside the wall of the Inner city (Aššur).

¹ For a contrast, see Hazael's Booty Inscriptions (COS 2.40).

² The deity mentioned here cannot be identified with certainty.

³ The location of Malaḫa is uncertain.

REFERENCES

RIMA 3:151; Galter 1987:1, 13, 19; Michel 1947-52:269-270. Translations and Studies: ANET 281; Schramm EAK 2:92; TUAT 1:367.

THE DIE (PŪRU) OF YAḪALI (2.113I)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

In ancient Assyria, the system of dating was by eponym (see COS 1.136). Each year was named after the ltmu, "eponym," who was a high officer of state. Inscribed clay cubes were used as dice for casting lots to determine the eponyms. This die (27 x 27 x 28 mm) belonged to Yaḫali, an official of Shalmaneser III. He held the office of eponym twice during Shalmaneser's reign (833 and 824 BCE).

The use of lots for many legal and commercial purposes is well attested throughout ancient Mesopotamian history. Presumably the inscribed lots were thrown, either by their owners or by an impartial third party, and priority was established by the location in which they fell. In the case of Yaḫali, perhaps the lot which fell closest to the statues of the gods Aššur and Adad took first place. On the other hand, it is possible that the lots were placed in a container and whichever "fell" out first was the lot taken.¹

The term in this inscription translated "die" (i.e. pūru) provides the name for the festival of Purim in the book of Esther (cf. Esth 3:7) (Hallo 1983). Lots were used in a number of instances in the Hebrew Bible.²⁻⁴

(Panel i)

Aššur, the great lord! Adad, the great lord!
(This is) the die of Yaḫali, the Chief Steward (mašennu)³

(Panel ii)

of Shalmaneser, king of Assyria; governor⁴ of the city of Kibšuni, the land of Qumēni, α Lev 16:7-10, 21-22;

Josh 7:14;
14:2; 18:6;
1 Sam 14:42;
1 Chr 6:39-50, 54-60;
Prov 16:33;
Neh 10:34;
Esth 3:7

(Panel iii)

the land of Meḫrāni, the land of Uqi, (and) the land of Erimmi;⁵ chief of customs. In his eponymy (assigned to him by) his die (pūru),

(Panel iv)

may the harvest of Assyria prosper and thrive.
Before Aššur (and) Adad, may he throw his die.⁶

¹ Hallo 1983:20. The typical verb used in all these contexts, in Sum. as well as in both dialects of Akk., is one of the many terms for "to fall" or "to throw."

² The Urim and Thummim may have also been a type of lot. See Exod 28:30; Deut 33:8; and Ezra 2:63.

³ See Parpola, 1995:379-401. See also CAD M 1:363-364 s.v. mašennu. Importantly, Whiting notes: "The reading ^(maš)mašennu for ^(lu)IGL DUB is preferred over ^(maš)abaraku for the Neo-Assyrian period. There is no doubt, both from syllabic writings and Aramaic correspondences, that mašennu was the correct reading in the seventh century. Since a syllabic writing of mašennu appears already in the Nuzi texts and, apart from literary sources, there are no syllabic writings of abaraku after the Old Babylonian period (see CAD s.v. abaraku and mašennu), it is extrapolated that mašennu was correct for the ninth and eighth centuries and probably for the Middle Assyrian period as well" (see Millard 1994:7, n. 14).

⁴ Postgate (1995a:6-7) discusses this governorate of the mašennu. He states: "There is clear evidence that this territory is in the mountains north and east of the Al-Kosh plain, in the region of Atrush."

⁵ Both Millard and Hallo translate: "the Cedar Mountain." But Grayson comments: "The reading proposed by some scholars for our passage of KUR (= šadē) e-ri-ni[m?]) is unlikely; 'cedar mountain' would hardly be the name of a province." See also Postgate 1995a:6.

⁶ Grayson reads: li-ḫa from nadū "to throw, cast." Millard reads: li-ḫa from elū "come up," and translates: "may his lot come up (or fall out).¹ Hallo: "may his lot (paṛu) fall." Interestingly, the Black Obelisk reads: ina 31 BALA.MEŠ-ia šá-nu-te-šú pu-ú-ru^{1 078} ina 101 aš-šur ¹ŠKUR ak-ru-ru "In my thirty-first regnal year, I threw the die for a second time before Aššur and Adad" (RIMA 3:70, 174b-175a).

REFERENCES

RIMA 3:179; Hallo 1983; Millard 1994:8; Postgate 1995a:6-7.

ADAD-NIRARI III (2.114)

ANTAKYA STELA (2.114A)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

This inscription is carefully incised on a stone stela which was discovered by a farmer digging a well near the Orontes river about 1.5 km outside the city of Antakya (undoubtedly in the ancient territory of Unqi, see Hawkins 1995b:96). While the stela is damaged on the left side, from top to bottom, and on the top and top right corner, it records clearly the establishment of a boundary between Zakkur of Hamath and Ataršumki of Arpad, in which there was a cession to Arpad, presumably at the expense of Hamath, of an unknown city Nahlasi and a stretch of the Orontes river.¹ Notably, it is the king Adad-nirari and his commander-in-chief (turtānu), Šamši-ilu, who are recorded as jointly² establishing the boundary. The historical background seems to fit with the events of 796 BCE, the year of Adad-nirari's final western campaign. For the possibility that he is alluded to as a "savior" of Israel in 2 Kgs 13:5, see Hallo 1960:42 and n. 44.

(lines 1-3)

Adad-nirari,³ great king, mighty king, king of the universe, king of Assyria, son of Šamši-Adad, mighty king, king of the universe, king of Assyria, son of Šalmaneser, king of the four quarters.

(lines 4-8a)

The boundary⁴ which Adad-nirari, king of Assyria, (and) Šamši-ilu, the commander-in-chief (turtānu), established between Zakkur,⁵ the Hamathite, [and] Ataršumki,⁶ son of Adrame: the city of Nahlasi together with all its fields, its orchards [and] its settlements is Ataršumki's property. They divided the Orontes River between them. *This is*⁷ the border.

(lines 8b-11a)

Adad-nirari, king of Assyria (and) Šamši-ilu, the commander-in-chief (turtānu), have released it

(from obligations) free and clear to Ataršumki, son of Adrame, to his sons, and his subsequent grandsons. He has established his city (and) its territories [...] to the border of his land.

(lines 11b-19)

By the name of Aššur, Adad and Ber, the Assyrian Enlil,⁸ the Assyrian [Ninlil],⁹ and the name Šin, who dwells in Harran, the great gods [of] Assyria: whoever afterwards speaks ill of the terms of this stela, and takes away by force this border from the possession of Ataršumki, his sons, or his grandsons, [and] destroys the written name (and) writes another name: may [Aššur], Adad, and Ber, Šin who dwells in Harran, the great gods of Assyria [whose] names are recorded [on] this stela, not listen to his prayers.

¹ It is very difficult to identify the scene of this action with the find-spot of the stela in the middle of Unqi (as does Weippert 1992:58-59). It is easier to suppose that the stela was somehow conveyed down the Orontes from an original emplacement in the neighborhood of Jisr eš Šagur, where the location of an Arpad-Hamath frontier seems much more probable (Hawkins 1995b:96).

² The stela has a broken relief at the top which portrays two figures (Adad-nirari and Šamši-ilu) with a perpendicular object standing between them.

³ For Adad-nirari III, see PNA 1:31-34.

⁴ The word taḫḫumu is used in these inscriptions with the meaning "border, territory" (AHW 1303) and with the meaning "boundary stone" (Donbaz 1990:5-7).

⁵ For Zakkur, see COS 2.35.

⁶ See Sefire treaty COS 2.82 (KAI 222 A lines 1.3, 14), and a seal (Bordreuil 1986) (Dion 1997:374). The name is spelled ʿtrsmk :: ʿAttarsumki(?) "(the deity) ʿAttar is my support" (Lipiński 1975:61-62; PNA 1:236).

⁷ NAM A is a problem. Grayson notes (following Donbaz): "One could read NAM as ana (an attested value of NAM), giving ana-a = anā. Or should one regard this as metathesis for a-nam = anām?" (RIMA 3:203, n. 8).

⁸ See Donbaz 1990:7.

⁹ The Assyrian name of Ninlil is Mullissu.

REFERENCES

Text: RIMA 3:203; Donbaz 1990. Translations and studies: Weippert 1992.

PAZARCIK / MARAŞ STELA (2.114B)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

This stela was discovered during the construction of the Pazarcık dam in the village of Kızkapanlı near Maraş, Turkey. The inscription found on the obverse of the stela belongs to Adad-nirari III (on the reverse is an inscription of Shalmaneser IV, see below COS 2.116). The text records the establishment of the boundary (taḫāmu) between Kummuh and Gurgum by Adad-nirari III (and surprisingly, his mother Sammuramat, also called Semiramis, see COS 2.114H below). This followed a battle at the city of Paqirahubuna against an Arpad-led alliance of nine kings (including Arpad). This event may be dated to 805 BCE¹ and Kummuh clearly appears here as an Assyrian client. Since Pazarcık lies on the Maraş-Malatya road,² it appears that the stela was found more or less in situ.

Not only is the text unusual for the mention of Adad-nirari's mother Sammuramat (Semiramis), but also for the fact that she is said to have crossed the Euphrates with Adad-nirari to attack Ataršumki of Arpad and his allies.

(lines 1-7a)

Boundary stone of Adad-nirari, king of Assyria, son of Šamši-Adad, king of Assyria,
(and) Sammuramat (Semiramis), the palace-woman³ of Šamši-Adad, king of Assyria, mother of Adad-nirari, mighty king, king of Assyria, daughter-in-law of Shalmaneser, king of the four quarters.

(lines 7b-15a)

When Ušpilulume,⁴ king of the Kummuhites, caused Adad-nirari, king of Assyria, (and) Sammuramat (Semiramis),⁵ the palace woman, to cross the Euphrates, I fought a pitched battle with them — with

a 2 Kgs 18:34

Ataršumki,⁶ the son of Adrame, the Arpadite,⁷ together with eight kings who were with him at the city of Paqirahubuna.⁸ I took away from them their camp. In order to save their lives they ran away.

(lines 15b-18)

In this year, they erected this boundary stone between Ušpilulume, king of the Kummuhites, and Qalparuda, son of Palalam, the king of the Gurgumites.

(lines 19-23)

Whoever takes (it) away from the possession of Ušpilulume, his sons, (or) his grandsons, may Aššur, Marduk, Adad, Šin, and Šamaš not stand (with him) in his lawsuit. Interdict⁹ of Aššur, my god, (and) Šin,¹⁰ who dwells in Ḫarran.

¹ The Eponym Chronicle records a campaign against Arpad for this year. See Millard 1994:33, 57; and Weippert 1992:55-60.

² See Astour 1979:82.

³ See Parpola 1983:73-76.

⁴ Hieroglyphic Luwian inscriptions from the region mention a king named Suppiluluma who is probably the same king as Ušpilulume in this inscription. See the discussion of Hawkins 1995b:93.

⁵ See Pettinato 1988; Weinfeld 1991. For other references see Hallo Origins 253-255.

⁶ See previous inscription (Antakya) COS 2.114A, note 6.

⁷ Arpad is modern Tell Rifāt, 30 km northwest of Aleppo. The capital of Bīt-Agusi only from the time of Adad-nirari III.

⁸ See COS 2.113A (Shalmaneser III), note 8.

⁹ See CAD I/J 57 s.v. ikkibu.

¹⁰ See Stol 1995:1480-1481; Green 1992.

REFERENCES

Text: RIMA 3:204-205; Timm 1993; Donbaz 1990.

ORTHOSTAT SLAB OF UNKNOWN PROVENANCE (2.114C)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

This text is inscribed on a very fragmentary stone slab of unknown provenance. It seems to describe a western campaign of Adad-nirari III that may have included the defeat of Ataršumki of Arpad.

... [...]

They drew the yoke of [my lordship. The kings of the extensive land of Ḫatti] who, in the time of Šamši-[Adad, my father, had become strong and caused] the lords of the river¹ Or[ontes?] / Eu[phrates? to rebel ...] he heard [of my approach]

¹ The reading [D.A. [...]] can be restored as either [D.A. [RAD]] "the Euphrates" or [D a-[ramtu]]. The text of the Antakya stela associates Ataršumki with the Orontes and may argue in favor of that restoration (see Grayson RIMA 3:206, n. 4'; Scheil 1917:159). However, Millard notes that the and Atarš[umki ² ...] trusted [in his own strength, attacked to wage war and battle. I decisively defeated him. I took away his camp. [...] the treasure of [his pal]ace [I carried off.] [... Ataršum-	ki], the son of Aramê, ³ [...] I received without number [...] (lacuna) river is the Euphrates in the Tell Sheik Hammad stela (COS 2.114D) which rules out the Orontes (Millard and Tadmor 1973:61).

--	---

² The restoration is "quite conjectural, but seems to fit the traces" (Millard and Tadmor 1973:61).

³ The father of Ataršumki is Adrame in the Antakya Stela (COS 2.114A) and the Pazarcık Stela (COS 2.114B). Arame, (the man) of Bit-Agüsi, was a tributary to Shalmaneser III. See Kurkh Monolith (COS 2.113A, ii.83).

REFERENCES

Text: RIMA 3:205-206; Millard and Tadmor 1973:60-61; Scheil 1917. Studies: Schramm EAK 2:118.

TELL SHEIK HAMMAD STELA (2.114D)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

This fragmentary text (81 x 48 cm) is inscribed on a broken black basalt stela found in 1879¹ at Tell Sheik Hammad (ancient Dūr-Katlimmu).² The fragment also preserves a partial relief of the king's portrait and divine symbols.

(lines 1-2) [Adad-nirari, the great king,] the mighty [king], king of the universe, king of Assyria, son of Šamši-Adad, [king of the universe, king of Assyria, son of] Shalmaneser, king of the four quarters.	march] to the land of Ḫatti. I crossed the Euphrates in its flood. I descended [to the city of Paqarhu]-buna. ³ Ataršumki ⁴ [the Arphadite and the kings] of the land of Ḫatti who had rebelled and [trusted in their own strength,] the fearful splendor of Aššur, my lord, [overwhelmed them]. [...] [In a sin]gle year, I con[quered] the land of Ḫatti [in its entirety ...].
(lines 3-10) [At the command of Aššur], I mustered my [chariotry, troops] (and) camp. [I ordered (them) to ¹ For a description of its discovery and description, see Millard and Tadmor 1973:57.

² See Kühne 1994; 1995:69-87, esp. 72. Assyrian attention to the steppe during the reign of Adad-nirari III is attested by inscriptions of this king from Tell Sheik Hammad / Dūr-Katlimmu, from Para (the western edge of the Sinjar), from Tell al Rimah (see COS 2.114F) and from Saba'a (COS 2.114E). See Weippert 1992:43.

³ See COS 2.113A (Shalmaneser III), note 8.

⁴ See the Antakya inscription, COS 2.114A, note 6.

REFERENCES

Text: BM 131124; RIMA 3:206-207; Millard and Tadmor 1973. Translations and Studies: Schramm EAK 2:118; Tadmor 1973:141; TUAT 1:369.

SABA'A STELA (2.114E)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

This inscription is engraved on a badly worn stone stela from Saba'a, south of Jebel Sinjar. The stela is 192 cm in height and contains a relief of the king along with divine symbols on its top and text below. Interestingly, about two-thirds of the text (lines 1-22) are a royal dedicatory inscription; then Nergal-ēreš, a governor under Adad-nirari III, is introduced with his titles (lines 23-25). Finally, the last lines (26-33) are concluding curses given by Nergal-ēreš. The text dates to 797 BCE or perhaps later, since it was in that year that Ḫindānu was added to Nergal-ēreš's domain by royal decree.¹

(lines 1-5) [To] Adad, canal-inspector of heaven and earth, son of Anu, the perfectly splendid hero who is mighty in strength, foremost of the Igigi-gods, warrior of	the Anunnakki-gods, who is clothed with luminosity, who rides the great storms (and) is clothed with fierce splendor, who causes the evil one to fall, who carries the holy whip, who causes the lightning bolt, the great lord, his lord.
--	---

¹ For this decree, see RIMA 3:213-216, obv. 4-5.

(lines 6-11a)

[Adad-nir]ārī, great king, mighty king, king of the universe, king of Assyria, unrivalled king, wonderful shepherd, exalted vice-regent, who likes to pray (and) to offer sacrifices, whose shepherdship the great gods have made pleasing to the people of Assyria like a healing drug, and whose land (the gods) have widened; son of Šamši-Adad, mighty king, [king of the universe], king of Assyria; son of Šalmaneser, commander of all rulers, scatterer of (the inhabitants of) enemy lands.

(lines 11b-20)

In the fifth year, <after> I had ascended nobly the royal throne, I mustered the land. I ordered the extensive troops of the land of Assyria to march to the land of Ḫatti. I crossed the Euphrates in its flood. The kings of the extensive [land of Ḫatti] who, in the time of Šamši-Adad, my father, had become strong and had withheld(?) their [tribute], by the command of Aššur, Marduk, Adad, Ištar, the gods who support me, (my) fearful splendor overwhelmed them and they submitted to me (lit. "they seized my feet"). Tribute (and) tax [...] they brought to Assyria (and) I received.

I ordered [my troops to march to the land of Damascus²]. I [confined] Mari³ in the city of Damascus. [He brought to me] 100 talents of gold

α2Kgs 13:24-25

Isaiah 6:5; 7:12; Joel 1:4

(and) 1,000 talents of silver as tribute. [...]

(lines 21-22a)

At that time, I made a stela of my lordship. I inscribed on it my heroic victories (and) achievements. I erected it in Zabanni.

(lines 22b-25)

[The inscribed stone(?) of Nergal-ēreš,⁴ governor of the cities of Nemed-Ištar, Apku, Mari, the lands of Rašappa,⁵ Qatru, the city of Dūr-katlimmu, Kār-Aššurnasirpal, Sirqu, the land of Laqê, the land of Ḫindānu, the city of Anat, the land of Suḫu (and) the city of (Ana)-Aššur-utēr-ašbat.

(lines 26-33)

A later prince who takes this stela from its place; whoever covers (it) with dirt or puts (it) in a Taboo House, or erases the name of the king, my lord, and my name, and writes his own name;

may Aššur, the father of the gods, curse him and destroy his seed (and) his name from the land.

May Marduk [...] overthrow his rule. May he give him up to be bound by the hands (and) over the eyes.

May Šamaš, judge of heaven and earth, cause there to be darkness in his land so that no one can see the other.

May Adad, canal-inspector of heaven (and) earth, tear out (his) name; (and) may he attack like an onslaught of locusts⁶ so that his land falls.

² Tadmor (1973:145) restores: ana KUR šā-ANŠE-šā DU.

³ While there have been different proposals for the identity of Mari² of Damascus, most scholars identify him with Ben-Hadad III, the son of Hazael, mentioned in the Zakkur inscription (see COS 2.35). For further discussion see Pitard 1987:166-167.

⁴ For Nergal-ēreš (803-775 BCE), see Galter 1990; Grayson 1993:27-28; Liverani 1992b:38-39; Fales 1992:106-107.

⁵ The geographic pattern is counter-clockwise (Liverani 1992b:38). Cf. the counter-clockwise border descriptions for Judah (Josh 15:1-12) and Benjamin (18:12-20). For the province of Rašappa, see Liverani 1992b and Fales 1992.

REFERENCES

Text: RIMA 3:207-209; Tadmor 1973:144-148; Unger 1916:8-12. Translations and studies: ARAB 1:§§734-737; DOTT 51-52; ANET 282; TUAT 1:369; Tadmor 1969; Schramm EAK 2:111-113.

TELL AL RIMAH STELA (2.114F)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

The stela was discovered at Tell al Rimah, near Jebel Sinjar, where it stood in "position inside the cella of a Late Assyrian shrine, set beside the podium, a placing that is unparalleled among the find spots of other royal stelae" (Page 1968:139). The monument is 130 cm in height and 69 cm in width. Like the Saba²a stela it has a relief of the king with divine symbols on the top and the text below. It also contains, like the Saba²a stela, an inscription of Adad-nirari III with a text of Nergal-ēreš, although this portion has been deliberately erased. It is uncertain when Nergal-ēreš fell from power and when the erasure would have taken place. Finally, like the Saba²a stela, it must date to 797 BCE or perhaps later, since it was in that year that Ḫindānu was added to Nergal-ēreš's domain by royal decree.¹

To Adad, the greatest lord, powerful noble of the gods, first-born son of Anu, unique, awesome, lofty, the canal-inspector of heaven and earth, who rains abundance, who dwells in Zamaḫu, the great lord, his lord.

¹ For this decree, see RIMA 3:213-216, obv. 4-5.

Adad-nirari, mighty king, king of the universe, king of Assyria; son of Samši-Adad, the king of the universe, king of Assyria; son of Shalmaneser, the king of the four quarters.

I mustered (my) chariots, troops and camps; I ordered (them) to march to the land of Ḫatti. In a single year,² I subdued the entire lands of Amurru (and) Ḫatti. I imposed upon them tax and tribute forever.

I (text: "he") received 2,000 talents of silver, 1,000 talents of copper, 2,000 talents of iron, 3,000 linen garments with multi-colored trim — the tribute of Mari³ of the land of Damascus. I (text: "he") received the tribute of Joash (ḫu²asu)⁴ the Samarian, of the Tyrian (ruler), and of the Sidonian (ruler).

I marched to the great sea in the West. I erected a statue of my lordship in the city of Arvad which is in the midst of the sea. I climbed Mt. Lebanon; (and) I cut down timbers: 100 mature cedars, material needed for my palace and temples.

a2Kgs 13:24-25

I (text: "he") received tributes from all the kings of the land of Nairi.

b2Kgs 13:10-25

At that time, I ordered Nergal-ēreš, the governor of the lands of Rašappa, Laqē, Ḫindānu, the city of Anat, the land of Suḫu, and the city of (Ana)-Aššur-(uṭēr)-ašbat, my courtier: the city of Dūr-Ištar with its 12 villages, the city of Kār-Sîn with its 10 villages, the city of Dūr-katlimmu with its 33 villages, the city of Dūr-Aššur with its 20 villages, the city of Dūr-Nergal-ēreš with its 33 villages, the city of Dūr-Marduk with its 40 villages, the city of Kār-Adad-niriri with its 126 villages, in (the area of) Mt. Sangar, 28 villages in (the area of) Mt. Azalli?, the city of Dūr-Adad-niriri with its 15 villages in the land of Laqē, the city of Adad with its 14 villages in the land of Qatnu, — altogether 331 small towns, which Nergal-ēreš undertook to rebuild by the order of his lord.

Whoever shall blot out a single name from among these names, may the great gods fiercely destroy him.

² A literary convention in which several campaigns to Syria have been telescoped into one. See Younger 1990:122; Tadmor 1973:62, 143. Page 1968:141; 1969:483-484. For the campaigns, see Millard 1973; Weippert 1992.

³ See COS 2.114E, note 3.

⁴ ḫu²-a-su is to be identified with Joash. See Cogan and Tadmor 1988:147-152.

REFERENCES

Text: RIMA 3:209-212; Page 1968. Translations and Studies: Page 1969; Donner 1970; Millard 1973; Schramm EAK 2:113-115; Tadmor 1973; TUAT 1:368; Cogan and Tadmor 1988:335.

CALAH ORTHOSTAT SLAB (2.114G)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

Discovered in 1854 at Calah, the text was inscribed on a broken stone slab which was left on the mound of Nimrud. It is known only through its publication based on the paper squeezes¹ made by Norris on the site. Only the latter half of the inscription is translated here.

(lines 11-14)

I subdued from the bank of the Euphrates, the land of Ḫatti, the land of Amurru in its entirety, the land of Tyre, the land of Sidon, the land of Israel (Ḫumri),² the land of Edom,³ the land of Philistia,⁴ as far as the great sea in the west. I imposed tax (and) tribute upon them.

(lines 15-21)

I marched to the land of Damascus. I confined

Mari⁵,⁶ the king of Damascus in the city of Damascus, his royal city. The fearful splendor of Aššur, my ("his") lord, overwhelmed him; and he submitted to me.⁶ He became my vassal. 2,300 talents of silver, 20 talents of gold, 3,000 talents of bronze, 5,000 talents of iron, linen garments with multi-colored trim, an ivory bed, a couch with inlaid ivory, his property (and) his possessions without number — I received inside his palace in Damascus, his royal city.

¹ These paper squeezes were subsequently destroyed. See Galter, Reade and Levine 1986:27.

² KUR ḫu-un-ri-i. Cf. the attribution of Joash's tribute in Tell al Rimah Stela (2.114F, note 4): Joash, the Samarian.

³ On Edom, see Millard 1992:35-39.

⁴ KUR pa-la-as-ti.

⁵ See COS 2.114E, note 3.

⁶ Lit. "he seized my feet."

(lines 22-24)

The kings of the land of Chaldea became my vassals. I imposed on them tax and tribute in perpetuity. At Babylon, Borsippa, (and) Cuthah they delivered up the remnant offerings of the gods Bēl, Nabû, (and) Nergal. [I made] pure sacrifices. (Lacuna)

REFERENCES

Text: RIMA 3:212-213; Tadmor 1973:148-150. Translations and studies: ARAB 1:§§738-741; DOTT 51; ANET 281-282; Schramm EAK 2:115-116; Millard 1973; TUAT 1:367-368.

STELA OF SAMMURAMAT (SEMIRAMIS) (2.114H)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

This engraved stela was discovered in the row of stelae unearthed by the German excavations in the southern part of the city wall built by Shalmaneser III at Aššur (Andrae 1913). Sammuramat (classical references know her as Semiramis) was the wife of Šamši-Adad V and mother of Adad-nirari III. It is a most unusual aspect of the reign of Adad-nirari that the queen mother attained such a high profile with her name appearing in royal inscriptions (see COS 2.114B above) and in her own inscribed stela translated here.

While Andrae theorized that the stelae formed a type of calendar for reckoning the years, it is more likely that the place was a depository for discarded monuments removed from the temple from time to time and placed respectfully in the position in which they were found. The stones would have stood in a shrine as substitutes for the persons named, possibly commemorating them after their lifetimes, as well as during them, as did stelae of similar shape in the west (Millard 1994:12).¹

(lines 1-7)

Stela of Sammuramat (Semiramis), the palace-woman² of Šamši-Adad, king of the universe, king of Assyria, mother of Adad-nirari, king of the universe, king of Assyria, daughter-in-law of Shalmaneser, king of the four quarters.

¹ See further Miglus 1984 and Canby 1976. Canby suggests possible links with the biblical maššēbôr. Gen 28:18, 22; 31:13; 35:14; Exod 23:24; 34:13; Deut 7:5; 12:3; 1 Kgs 14:23; 2 Kgs 3:2; 10:27; 18:4; 23:14; Hos 3:4; 10:1; etc.

² See Parpola 1988.

REFERENCES

Text: RIMA 3:226; Andrae 1913: no. 5. Translations and studies: ARAB 1:§§730-731; Schramm EAK 2:111; Canby 1976; Miglus 1984; Weinfeld 1991; Millard 1994:11-12.

OFFICIALS' INSCRIPTIONS (2.115)

The recent discoveries of cuneiform tablets from the Middle Euphrates, combined with older known documents, have enabled a more comprehensive picture to emerge of the situation in the Assyrian state during the eighth century BCE. During this period, Assyrian influence had so declined that the cohesive political entity represented in the rulers Aššur-nasir-pal II and Shalmaneser III had become geographically fragmented with various districts being ruled by a select few powerful men who might or might not pay lip service to the Assyrian king. In fact, while most of these individuals were high officials or governors in the "Assyrian" kingdom, this is clearly just a sham, because they otherwise behave like independent rulers (in some cases even alluding to their roles as "kings").¹ Brinkman has designated this a "period of local autonomy" in Assyrian regions as well as in Babylonia.² (For Nergal-ēreš, see above, COS 2.114E).

¹ For more discussion, see Dion 1995a; 1995b; Grayson 1993; 1994; 1995.

² Brinkman 1968:218-219.

ŠAMŠI-ILU — STONE LIONS INSCRIPTION (2.115A)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

This inscription was incised on two colossal, dark gray basalt lions that were discovered at Tell Ahmar (Til-Barsip/Kār Shalmaneser)¹ originally in 1908. A study of one of the lions in 1988 revealed that it was 258 cm in height; with a length of 250 cm; and a width of 120 cm (Roobaert 1990:127). While the text is in the form of a royal dedicatory inscription, its author is not an Assyrian monarch, as would be expected, but a commander-in-chief (the turtānu) named Šamši-ilu.² Thus it highlights his victorious campaign against the Urartian king Argištu (I) and erection of the two lions with their fierce names. There is no mention of the Assyrian king.

(lines 1-8a)

Aššur, great lord, king of the gods, [who] determines destinies;

Anu, mighty, foremost, progenitor of the great gods;

Enlil, father of the gods, lord of the lands, who makes kingship great;

Ea, the wise, king of the apsū, who grants wisdom;

Marduk, sage of the gods, lord of omens, commander of all;

Nabū, scribe of Esagil, possessor of the tablet of destinies³ of [the gods], who resolves conflicts;

Sin, luminary [of heaven and earth], lord of the lunar disk, who brightens the firmament;

Ištar, lady of wa[r and] battle, overturner of the fierce;

Gula, the great chief woman physician, wife of the hero of the gods, the son of mighty Enlil.

(lines 8b-11a)

[Šamši]-ilu, the commander-in-chief (turtānu),⁴ the great herald,⁴ [the administrator of] temples, chief of the extensive army, governor of the land of Ḫatti (and) of the land of the Guti, and all the land of Namri, conqueror of the mountains in the West, who lays waste [...], who overthrows the lands of Mušku and Urartu, who plunders its people, who devastates the lands of Utū, Rubū, Ḫatallu,⁵ (and) Labdudu, who brings about their annihilation.

(lines 11b-13a)

When (at that time) Argištu,⁶ the Urartian, the number of whose forces is massive like a heavy fog and who had not had relations with⁷ any previous

α2Kgs 18:17;
Isa 20:1

king, he (Argištu) rebelled and assembled the people together at the land of the Guti. He put his battle array in good order. All his troops marched toward the battleground in the mountains.

(lines 13b-18)

By the command of the father, Aššur, the great lord, and the lofty mother of Ešarra, foremost among the gods, the goddess Ninlil; Šamši-ilu, the commander-in-chief (turtānu), the great herald, [the administrator of] temples, chief of the extensive army, concentrated the soldiers within these mountains. With the loud noise of the drums⁸ (and) prepared weapons that dreadfully roar, he blew like the imḫullu wind.⁹ He had his high-mettled horses that were harnessed to his chariot fly against him (Argištu) like the Anzu-bird;¹⁰ and he decisively defeated him. He (Argištu) deserted; and his army (and) his assembly scattered. He was frightened by the battle. Like a thief I took (his) arrows away from him. I personally captured his camp, his royal treasure, (and) his [...].

(lines 19-24)

At that time, I erected two outstanding lions in the gate of the city of Kār-Shalmaneser, the city of my lordship, on the right and on the left; and I named them. The name of the first is: "The lion who [...], fierce Amu-demon, unrivalled attack, who overwhelms the insubmissive, who obtains what his heart desires." The name of the second, which stands before the gate, is: "Who goes through resistance, who levels the enemy country, who casts out evildoers, (and) who brings in good people."

¹ For Tell Ahmar, see Bunnens 1990; 1995. See COS 2.113A (Shalmaneser III), note 3.

² See Grayson 1993:27; 1994:74-80. Malamat (1953:25-26) argues that Šamši-ilu is referred to in Amos 1:5; Millard (1993:173*-177*) argues for a different understanding. For his golden cup inscription, see Fadlil 1990:482. For his votive inscription, see Reade 1987; Watanabe 1994:248.

³ For the "Tablet of Destinies," see Paul 1973.

⁴ For this office, see Sassmannshausen 1995.

⁵ KUR ḫa-ḫa(?)¹-lu. For the reading, see Grayson's remarks, RIMA 3:232, 11a. Liverani (1992b:37) reads this as a reference to the Ḫatallu tribe (or better, confederation of tribes). For the Ḫatallu, see COS 2.115B, note 7.

⁶ For Argištu I, see PNA 1:129-130. For Urartu, see Zimansky 1995.

⁷ Lit. "stretched out his hand to."

⁸ Following Grayson RIMA 3:3:233.

⁹ imḫullu wind refers to a specific type of destructive wind with supernatural qualities. See CAD I/J 116.

¹⁰ The Anzu-bird was a monstrous bird, subject of various mythological stories.

REFERENCES

Text: RIMA 3:231-233; Thureau-Dangin 1930:11-21. Studies: Schramm EAK 2:120-121; Kuan 1995:108-112; Grayson 1993.

NINURTA-KUDURRĪ-UŠUR — SUĦU ANNALS #2 (2.115B)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

Discovered by Iraqi archaeologists in salvage work in the Ḥadītha Dam area, this four-column clay tablet was found at Sūr Jar^a and contains a lengthy account of Ninurta-kudurri-ušur. It was apparently composed in the seventh year of his "governorship" (see lines iv.38b'-40').¹ Written in the Babylonian dialect with both Assyrian and Aramaic influences, the text describes Ninurta-kudurri-ušur's mighty achievements, especially his defeat of the Ḥatallu tribal confederation headed by the wily leader Šama²gamni. It also records Ninurta-kudurri-ušur's victory over the city of Ra³il and the capture of a caravan from Temā and Šaba².

(lines i.1-7a)

I, Ninurta-kudurri-ušur, governor of the land of Suḫu and the land of Mari, son of Šamaš-rēša-ušur,² ditto³ (governor of the land of Suḫu and the land of Mari), son of Iqīša-Marduk, ditto (governor of the land of Suḫu and the land of Mari), descendant of Adad-nādin-zēri, ditto (governor of the land of Suḫu and the land of Mari), the one of everlasting seed, distant descendant of Tunamissah, son of Ḥammu-rāpi,⁴ king of Babylon: the chosen, upon whom Šamaš and Marduk, Adad and Apla-Adad⁵ joyfully (and) radiantly glanced with their powerful shining faces; to whom they gave complete power and kingship⁶ over the land of Suḫu; and for my allotted destiny they bestowed justice.

(lines i.7b-16a)

Barely three months had passed in the initial year of my governorship, when I sat on the throne of my father, when 2000 men of the Ḥatallu tribe⁷ — from the Sarugu (clan) to the Luḫūāya⁸ (clan) — with their archers and their military commanders⁹ gathered together; and they imparted a command to each other.¹⁰ Šama²gamni, the herald (nāgiru)¹¹ of the Sarugu, who is thoroughly confused by falsehood, was their chieftain. They came up for a raid against the land of Laqē. And while in the steppe they thought to themselves, thus: "the governor of

^a Job 2:11;
8:1; 18:1;
25:1; 42:9

^b Num 20:24

^c Deut 20:19;
20

Suḫu is hostile to us. How will we go past to make a raid on the land of Laqē?"

(lines i.16b-27a)

Šama²gamni, the herald (nāgiru) of the Sarugu and Iā²e, the son of Balammu,¹² ^b the Amatite,¹³ their military commanders, said the following to them:

"Among the governors of the land of Suḫu, his ancestors, none dared to go to war against 1,000 Arameans. Now he must go to war against 2000 Arameans! If he does attack us, we will go to war against him and gain possession of the land of Suḫu. But if he does not attack, we will bring down the booty; and (more) troops will join us; and we will go and attack the houses¹⁴ of the land of Suḫu; we will seize his cities of the steppe; and we will cut down their fruit trees."¹⁵ ^c

(lines i.27b-30a)

They trusted in their strength and they advanced against the land of Laqē. They seized 100 villages of the land of Laqē; they plundered booty without number; and they turned the land of Laqē into ruin mounds.

(lines i.30b-32)

Adad-da²²ānu, the governor of the land of Laqē, came to me with 4 chariots and 200 troops. He kissed the ground before me; and he entreated me

¹ While Ninurta-kudurri-ušur never specifically calls himself "king," he does state in this inscription that the gods Šamaš, Marduk, Adad and Apla-Adad gave him "kingship over the land of Suḫu" (see note 6 below).

² Concerning this individual, see Mayer-Opificius 1995.

³ The cuneiform repeating sign is used.

⁴ See COS 2.107A-D.

⁵ Apla-Adad (lit., "son of Adad") was a deity that was, in particular, worshipped in the Middle Euphrates region. The deity's name is known from personal names and from texts as well as on a cylinder seal discovered at Beer-Sheba (see COS 2.125A below). See Rainey 1973; Lipiński 1975. The strong link between Apla-Adad (Apladad) and the land of Suḫu may help the explication of the second friend of Job "Bildad the Shuhite" (Job 2:11; 8:1; 18:1; 25:1; 42:9). The name, Bildad, may be equated with the name, Apla-Adad (Apladad), and Shuhite may be equated with Suḫu. See Dion 1995a:72.

⁶ LUGAL-ū-tu šā KUR Su-ḫi. This is a clear claim of kingship by Ninurta-kudurri-ušur. Cf. Hadad-yith^ci, COS 2.34, note 5.

⁷ The Ḥatallu tribe was a confederation of tribes composed of those mentioned here (i.e., the Sarugu and the Luḫūāya) and the Amatu (i.17 below). The confederation's homeland was located northeast of Suḫu in the Wadi Tharthar area. See Liverani 1992b and COS 2.115A, n. 5.

⁸ lu-ḫu-ū-a-a: Frame RIMB 2:295.

⁹ LÚ SAG KALxBAD.MEŠ-šā-nu, "their head(s) of camps." See Dion 1995b:9 "heads of tents." Cf. the much later phrase rwš hnhnyh "the head of the camp" in DJD ii 42².

¹⁰ I.e., came to an agreement.

¹¹ For this title, see Sassmannshausen 1995; Parpola 1995.

¹² The name is spelled here: "Ba-la-am-mu" (i.17); in RIMB 2:301, it is spelled: "Ba-ii-am-mu" (i.8). Dion (1995a:68-69) connects the paternal name to the biblical form Balaam, and the Amatu with Hamath. Cf. also the Deir 'Alla Inscription (COS 2.27).

¹³ The Amatu clan.

¹⁴ The word "houses" (É.MEŠ) probably refers to households, families, clans, etc. rather than to physical structures.

¹⁵ For the cutting down of orchards, see Shalmaneser text COS 2.113C, note 3.

(for help). I accepted his entreaty.

(lines i.33-35)

Furthermore, Šin-šallimanni,¹⁶ the provincial governor of the land of Rušapu/Rašappu, came against them (the Arameans) together with the entire strength of the land of Rušapu/Rašappu. But (when) he saw them, he became afraid [...]

(lines i.36-?)

(But) I am Ni[nurta-kudurri-ušur ...]

(lacuna)

(lines ii.1-29a)

I brought upon them an inundation. From inside my chariot, I washed them away like [barley] reeds.¹⁷ Like locusts the arrows whizzed over my camp. (But) no one in my camp fell dead! Although they wounded 38 soldiers in my camp, not one among them fell dead in the steppe.¹⁸ I fell upon them (the Arameans) like a blazing fire, and I put to the sword 1,616 of their troops.¹⁹ Furthermore, I removed the hands and lower lips of 80 of their troops; and I let them go free to (spread the news of my) glory. From the well of Makiri (and) the well of Gallabu and up to the well Suribu, at (these) three wells, I decisively defeated them. I annihilated them. I scattered their substantial auxiliary troops; and I broke up their troop contingents. I captured those who attempted to escape. I caused their blood to flow like waters of a river. The road with their corpses was visible²⁰ to the eagles and vultures.²¹ I filled the mountains and wadis with their skulls like mountain stones. Birds made nests in their skulls. 304 of their troops had quickly fled before me. (Since) my horses and my troops had become thirsty for water due to the fighting, I did not pursue them. 40 of (these) troops perished due to thirst for water. 254 of their troops got away. I killed 1,846 of their troops. This is a single defeat that Ninurta-kudurri-ušur, governor of the land of Suḫu and the land of Mari, inflicted

d Gen 15:11;
1 Sam 17:44

upon the Ḫatallu (tribesmen). Šamašgamni, the herald (nāgiri) of the Sarugu (clan), their leader, the dishonest servant whom the land of Suḫu, the land of Assyria and my fathers rejected,²² I captured him. When I killed him, my heart calmed down. Having stripped off his skin like the skin of a sheep, I set (it) in front of the gate of Āl-gabbāri-bānī. I inflicted such a defeat as none of <my ancestors> had ever inflicted. My ancestors had defeated the enemy ten times, but they did not achieve as much as I.²³ In inflicting a single defeat, I surpassed my ancestors.

(lines ii.29b-35)

Anyone in the future who comes forward and says: "How [did] Ninurta-kudurri-ušur, governor of the land of Suḫu and the land of Mari, [inflict] this defeat?" (should be told that) I did [not] inflict (this) [by my own power, (but rather) I inflicted this]²⁴ defeat by the power of Šamaš and Marduk, A[dad and Apla-Adad, the great gods]. [Anyone in the future] who comes forward and [should ask] the elders of [his] la[nd] ...]

(lacuna)

(lines iii.1'-22a')²⁵

[...] I saw [... at] the well of Bukrê, but [...] had not been built(?). Above the well of Buk[rê ...] I discovered. It was depressions(?), a reed marsh. I opened it up and its water was abundant. Three routes which [...] which go to the land of Laqê, the city of Ḫindānu²⁶ and the land of Suḫu, which in the days of the governors of the land, my ancestors, who had left no mounted troops there <...> Anyone in the future who comes forward and says: "How is it that a stranger who passes by may drink from this water?" (should be told) that he may drink from the well which we formed(?).²⁷ Before my time, no city had been built there. I conceived the idea to build this city. While the priestly workforce²⁸ was making the bricks for it, before the city

¹⁶ Šin-šallimanni was governor of Rašappu and held the office of eponym in 747 BCE (Millard 1994:43, 59). His march against the Arameans and his subsequent flight without battle, "no doubt, displeased his master the Assyrian king who removed him from office and possibly had him executed" (Grayson 1993:23).

¹⁷ Restoration is based on RIMB 2:302 (ii.4-5) and RIMB 2:308 (i.15').

¹⁸ Lit., "no one among them (i.e. the 38), his corpse fell in the steppe."

¹⁹ For an attempt to reconcile the various figures cited in these texts for the numbers of enemy who were killed and who got away alive, see Cavigneaux and Ismail 1990:352-353.

²⁰ Lines 14b-15a read: ḫar-ṣar-nu ina lū.ūš.MEŠ-šū-nu a-ru-ū u zi-bu in-na-aṭ-tal. Cavigneaux and Ismail (1990:355) see possibly an Aramaic influence. They translate: "über ihre Leichen schwebten Adler und Geier hinunter :: over their corpses eagles and vultures hover." See also Frame RIMB 2:296. However, the verb could be a N Durative 3cs of naṭṭu "to appear, become visible." The verb is singular; hence it seems that ḫarrānu is the subject. See CAD N 2:128 for this very form. However, RIMB 2:310 (i.19'-20') reads: [ḫar-ra]-[a]-ni i-na lū.ūš.MEŠ-šū-nu TL₁MUSEN²⁰ [u zi-bu in-na-aṭ-tal].

²¹ For birds of prey, cf. Gen 15:11; 1 Sam 17:44.

²² Frame suggests reading for ii.25: ū-šā-an-si()-<ku(?)>-šu*. See RIMB 2:293, n. i.41.

²³ For the motif of achieving what the ancestors could not, see Kulamawa (COS 2.30, lines 2-5a).

²⁴ Following the suggested restorations of Frame RIMB 2:297.

²⁵ For this section cp. the inscription of Azatiwada (COS 2.31).

²⁶ The land of Ḫindānu was located between Laqê and Suḫu. The location of the city of Ḫindānu is uncertain (perhaps in the area of Abu Kemal, Dion 1995a:55-57; 1995b:6). See also Postgate 1972-75:415.

²⁷ See Cavigneaux and Ismail 1990:356; Frame RIMB 2:298, n. iii.11'.

²⁸ Following Frame (RIMB 2:298, n. iii.13'), the term kīnaltu/kīništu is translated "the workforce," even though it is normally used in connec-had been built (i.e. finished), a twenty-man band²⁹ of Arameans came there, but one officer of the mounted troops whom I had stationed there on guard captured them! I built a city there and named it Dūr-Ninurta-kudurrī-ušur.³⁰ I settled people in it (and) stationed mounted troops in it. For the sake of the security of the land of Suḫu, it (the city) is the open eyes of the land of Suḫu. No one in the future who comes forward should become negligent of this city (or) expel the inhabitants whom I settled in this city. For the sake of the security of the land of Suḫu, they should (continually) guard against the enemy. Just as I (did), he should not become negligent of this city.

(lines iii. 22b'-32')

I, Ninurta-kudurrī-ušur, governor of the land of Suḫu and the land of Mari, discovered a tract of land (capable of being) cultivated on the top of a cliff and I conceived the idea of building a city there. When I had laid a stone foundation, I reinforced (it). I built a city upon (it), and named it Kār-Apla-Adad.³¹ I [settled] 50 ..., citizens of the land of Suḫu, who had approached (me), Ninurta-kudurrī-ušur, governor of the land of Suḫu and the land of Mari, about settling in (this) city, saying: "Settle us in your city!" I planted orchards near it. I built a temple to Apla-Adad and [...]. I settled inside (it) [...] of Apla-Adad, who had (previously) dwelt in the city of Anat. I established one *sānu*³² of bread and fine beer [...] as regular offerings for him. I presen[ted] (them) to the temple entrants³³ and the mayor. I built a palace for the governor there. I repaired the embankment(?) from the Euphrates; and I made it high; (and) I built a [...] upon it.

(lacuna)

(lines iv. 1'-9a')

I, Ninurta-ku[du]rrī-ušur, governor of the land of Suḫu and the land of Mari: the Aktu-temple of the gods Adad and Mešar (Mišarum) — the great gods who dwell in the city of Udada — had become old and had been abandoned. None am[ong] my ancestors had paid attention (to it) and had rebuilt (it). I completely rebuilt this Aktu-temple; and I dedicated (it) to Adad and Mešar (Mišarum), the great gods, my lords, in order to ensure my good health

e 2 Kgs 5:2;
6:15-23;
13:20;
Hos 6:9

f Pss 45:7;
67:5; etc.

g Ezek 27:17;
22f.

(and) the well-being of my offspring, to prolong my days, to make my reign firm, (and) to defeat the land of the enemy.

(lines iv. 9b'-15a')

The palace of Enamḫe-zēra-ibni, governor of the land of Suḫu, (which is located in) the district of the city of Ra'il, which is in the middle of the Euphrates (river), had become old and I abandoned it. I built another palace above it: 64 cubits is its length (and) 12½ cubits is its width. I made it 20 cubits longer (and) 4 cubits wider than the palace of Enamḫe-zēra-ibni. I built (even) another palace above it. I made it 45 cubits long (and) 9 cubits wide.

(lines iv. 15b'-26a')

The people of Ra'il (and) their rebels, they had rebelled against my father, but my father had defeated them. At the beginning of my governorship, when I had sat on the throne of my father, the people of Ra'il rebelled against me; but I defeated them. In this regard, I did not pay (much) attention to it and did not make a relief (commemorating) it. No one in the future who comes forward should become negligent of the people of Ra'il! Regarding the city of Āl-gabbāri-bānī, the city which Šamaš-rēša-ušur, governor of the land of Suḫu and the land of Mari, had built, I built an enclosure³⁴ around it. I made the city longer and wider, and I strengthened (it). The wall of the enclosure which I built is 13 cubits thick. I dug a moat around the city; and I surrounded the city on all sides with water.

(lines iv. 26b'-38')³⁵

I, Ninurta-kudurrī-ušur, governor of the land of Suḫu and the land of Mari: regarding the Temanites and Sabaeans,³⁶ whose country is far away, from whom no messenger had ever come to me, and (who) had never travelled to meet me, their merchant caravan³⁷ came near to the water of the wells of Martu (Amurru?) and Ḫalatu, but it passed by and entered into the city of Ḫindānu. While in the city of Kār-Apla-Adad, I heard a report about them at noon; and I (immediately) harnessed (the horses of) my chariot. I crossed the river during the night and reached the city of Azlāyanu before noon of the next day. I waited in the city of Azlā-tion with temple personnel. See CAD K 386 s.v. kinīštu "a class of priests of lowly status concerned with the preparation of food offerings."

²⁹ The word gudūdu is cognate to Heb./Aram. g'dūd (See Cavigneaux and Ismail 1990:356, n. iii.14). The activities of these Aramean bands in this text parallels chronologically those of the Aramean and Moabite g'dūdīm "bands" mentioned in the Elisha cycle (2 Kgs 5:2; 6:15-23; 13:20); and Hos 6:9; 7:1. Earlier cf. 1 Kgs 11:23-25; later 2 Kgs 24:2.

³⁰ For a similar episode, cf. the Azatiwada inscription (COS 2.31, ii.9-iii.2).

³¹ Lit. "Quay of Apla-Adad."

³² Approximately 10 liters.

³³ I.e., those privileged to enter the temple.

³⁴ The word written a-di-ri is a hapax and following the suggestion of Cavigneaux and Ismail (1990:357) and Frame (RIMB2:299) it is translated here as "enclosure." It may be connected to the Heb. root ʔzr.

³⁵ For this passage and a discussion of Taimā, see Liverani 1992c; Livingstone 1995:137-140; Kitchen 1997:134-135.

³⁶ Saba, South Arabia, biblical Sheba. See Kitchen 1997:127-128.

³⁷ Postgate (1995b:404) remarks: "alaktu has the sense of 'a (single) trip' especially with the concrete nuance of a merchant caravan."

yanu for three days and on the third day they approached. I captured 100 of them alive. I captured their 200 camels, together with their loads — blue-purple wool, ... wool, iron, <pappār> dilū-stones,³⁸ every kind of merchandise. I plundered their abundant booty and brought it back into the land of Suḫu.

In the 7th year of Ninurta-kudurrī-ušur, governor of the land of Suḫu and the land of Mari, this report was made. Collated.

³⁸ Agates and onyxes were often used for their magical powers (Sax 1992). The pappardilū stone was one of these (Dalley 1999:77; Tallon 1995; Gaher 1987:15). Agates for seals and beads were items traded by the South Arabians. Note the seal from 'Ana with a South Arabian inscription made of agate (Collon 1987: #379).

REFERENCES

Text, translations and studies: Frame RIMB 2:294-300; Cavigneaux and Ismail 1990:343-357; Dion 1995a; 1995b; Grayson 1993; 1994; 1995.

NINURTA-KUDURRĪ-UŠUR — SUḪU ANNALS (#18) (2.115C)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

Inscribed on a stone stela discovered on the island of ʿAnā, this text describes a revolt of the city of Anat (before the days of Ninurta-kudurrī-ušur) and the subsequent disaster when “the Assyrian” took action against the city. It records Ninurta-kudurrī-ušur’s restoration of the city, emphasizing his goodness and kindness.

(lines i.1-5)

I, Ninurta-kudurrī-ušur, governor of the land of Suḫu and the land of Mari, son of Šamaš-rēša-ušur, ditto¹ (governor of the land of Suḫu and the land of Mari), descendant of Adad-nādin-zēri, ditto (governor of the land of Suḫu and the land of Mari), the one of everlasting seed of Tunamissah, son of Hammu-rāpi, king of Babylon.

(lines i.6-22a)

Tabnēa, the governor of the land of Suḫu, went up to Assyria with his tribute for an audience, but he (“the Assyrian”) killed him in Assyria. Then the inhabitants of the city of Anat rebelled against the land of Suḫu. They joi[ned] hands with the Assyrian² and brought the Assyrian up to the city of Anat. (However) the Assyrian [to]ok the city of Anat neither by force nor by battle; (instead) the men — the citizens of the city themselves — (simply) gave (it) [to] the Assyrian. Afterwards, the Assyrian exited them and scattered them over (all) the lands. He turned the houses on (both) the landside and the hillside of the city of Anat into heaps of ruins. Then the Assyrian settled his own men in the city of Anat.

(lines 22b-ii.19a)

From (the time of) Tabnēa, Iqīša-Marduk, and Našir-Adad — three governors (in all) — for fifty years, the city of Anat was (under the control) of the Assyrian, (and also) for three years, in the days of Šamaš-rēša-ušur, ditto (governor of the land of Suḫu and the land of Mari), my father, be[fore] ...

[... I sat on] the throne of [my] father. When the gods Adad and Apla-[Adad] set [...], the city of A[nat] returned (its allegiance) [to my father]. After four(?) [years], during which the city of Anat pros[pered(?)], [my father di]ed.³ I [sat on] the throne of my father, I (re-)established the regular offerings, offe[rings, (...)] and religious festivals of the god Adad [...] according to the wording (of the commands) of Ham[mu]-rāp[i], king of Babylon, and] the father who begot me. [...] In addition, I settled people in the city of Anat on (both) the landside and on the hi[ll]side. I settled the city of Anat as (it had been) before, on (both) the landside and the hillside. I returned the gods of (both) the landside [and the hillside of] the city of Anat who had gone [t]o the city of Ribaniš⁴ on account of the Assyrian [...] and I settled them in their dwelling(s), (just) as (they had been) before.

(lines ii.19b-25)

I built an Aktu-temple in the city of Anat: 1[00] cubits is its length (and) 16 cubits is its width. I built a ... palace beside (it): 47 cubits is its length (and) 8 cubits is its width. A palace of gladness [...]

(lines iii.1-7)

(No translation possible)

(lines iii.8-18)

[Anyone in the future who] comes forward [... I made] this foundation [10 cubits] deep. [I qua]rried large mountain-stones, laid the foundation, [and]

¹ The cuneiform repeating sign is used.

² It is unclear who “the Assyrian” is. While it may refer to an Assyrian governor, it more probably refers to the Assyrian king (cf. Cavigneaux and Ismail 1990:386). Apparently, Tabnēa would have taken his tribute to Assyria for an audience with the Assyrian monarch.

³ Lit. “[went] to his fate.”

⁴ On the identification of this city, see the comments of Frame (RIMB 2:279).

made (it) firm. [I s]et my own name [with] his own [na]me. Anyone in the future [who] comes forward should revere the gods Adad and Apla-[Adad] and	not become negligent of those who are favorable and those who are hostile to the city of Anat. Like me, may he (then) enjoy happiness!
---	--

REFERENCES

Text and translations: Cavigneaux and Ismail 1990:383-388, 437-439; RIMB 2:315-317.

NINURTA-KUDURRĪ-UŠUR — SUĦU ANNALS (#17) (2.115D)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

This inscription is engraved on a stone stela found on the island of ^cĀnā. It also contains a relief of Ninurta-kudurri-ušur venerating the goddess Anat. In the text, Ninurta-kudurri-ušur describes his restoration of the statue and cult of the goddess after the desecration of the Assyrian following a revolt of the city of Anat against the land of SuĦu, narrated in COS 2.115C above. The same events are presented through political and religious filters.

(lines 1-9a)

For the goddess Anat, the perfect lady, most exalted of goddesses, strongest of goddesses, greatest of the Igīgu gods, excellent lady, whose godhead is splendid, splendid lady, whose valor is not equalled by (any of the other) goddesses, one who grasps the hand of the powerless, grants life, and gives instruction(s) to the king who reverences her, (one who) presents to the people of her settlements prosperity and abundance, who dwells in Ešuziana¹ — holy cella, the excellent shrine — the great lady, his lady.

(lines 9b-14)

I, Ninurta-kudurri-ušur, governor of the land of SuĦu and the land of Mari, son of Šamaš-rēša-ušur, governor of the land of SuĦu and the land of Mari, descendant of Adad-nādin-zēri, governor of the land of SuĦu and the land of Mari, distant descendant of Tunamissaḥ, son of Ḥammu-rāpi, king of Babylon.

(lines 15-23a)

The people of Anat who live in the city of Anat rebelled against the land of SuĦu. They joined hands with the Assyrian and brought the Assyrian up to the city of Anat. (However), he defiled the city of Anat and its gods. He defiled the fine garment of the goddess Anat, the šarīru-gold, the precious stones, and all the (other) things befitting her godhead. Then he placed her (statue) by itself in a hidden place.

(lines 23b-32)

I, Ninurta-kudurri-ušur, governor of the land of SuĦu and the land of Mari, the servant who reverences her great godhead, brought Anat out from (that) hidden place and [returned] (her) fine garment, the šarīru-gold, and ... the precious stones. [I] made her godhead complete (again). Then I caused her to reside in [...]. I (re-)established the regular [offerings ... and] her [...] according to the wording (of the commands) of Ḥammu-rāpi, king of Babylon, a king who preceded me.

(lines 33-34)

(No translation possible)

(lacuna)

¹ Lit., "House, True hand of Heaven."

REFERENCES

Text and translations: Cavigneaux and Ismail 1990:380-383, 435-436; RIMB 2:317-318.

SHALMANESER IV — PAZARICIK / MARAŞ STELA (2.116)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

This inscription is incised on the back of the stone stela that contains an inscription of Adad-nirari III (see its description in COS 2.114B above). Like that earlier inscription, Shalmaneser IV's text confirms the boundary of Ušpilulume, king of Kummuh. It also contains the mention of another individual in a significant role in addition to the king of Assyria; in this case, Šamši-ilu, the commander-in-chief (nurtanu) (see his inscription, COS 2.115A); Adad-nirari's text mentions his mother Sammuramat. Finally, the inscription makes reference to a campaign by Šamši-ilu against a Ḥadiyāni (ḥa-di-a-ni) of Damascus which resulted in tribute being given to the Assyrian monarch by the Damascene. This inscription dates to 773/772 BCE, the date of this particular campaign against Damascus.

(lines 1-3)

Shalmaneser, mighty king, king of Assyria, son of Adad-nirāri (III), mighty king, king of the universe, king of Assyria, son of Šamši-Adad (V), king of the four quarters.

(lines 4-10)

When Šamši-ilu, the commander-in-chief (turtānu), marched to the land of Damascus, the tribute of Ḫadiyāni,¹ the Damascene — silver, gold, copper, his royal bed, his royal couch, his daughter with her extensive dowry, the property of his palace without number — I received from him.

(lines 11-13a)

On my return, I gave this boundary stone to Ušpiα For a king having this name, though not the individual mentioned here, see 1 Kgs 15:18

lulume, king of the Kummuhites.

(lines 13b-20)

Whoever takes (it) away from the possession of Ušpilulume, his sons, and grandsons, may Aššur, Marduk, Adad, Sin, (and) Šamaš not stand (with him) at his lawsuit; may they not listen to his prayers; may they quickly smash his country like a brick; (and) may he no longer give advice to the king.²

Interdict of Aššur, my god, (and) Sin, who dwells in Ḫarran.

¹ For "ḫa-di-a-ni, see Dion 1997:182, n. 47, 208-209; Timm 1993:75-77. Cp. the name "ra-ḫi-[a]-ni "Rezin" (see COS 2.117A, n. 2).

² These last two sentences (lines 18 and 19) pose great difficulties in both the correct reading of the cuneiform and the proper translation. For recent full discussions, see Zaccagnini 1993 and Ponchia 1991:8-12. Donbaz (1990:10), Timm (1993:58-59) and Grayson (RIMA 3:240) transliterate: ⁽¹⁸⁾ KUR-su ki-i SIG₄ lu-ša-bi(?)⁽¹⁹⁾ ur-ru-uḫ ⁽¹⁹⁾ mim-ma ina UGU MAN la i-ma-līk, and translate: "may they quickly smash his country like a brick; (and) may he no longer give advice to the king." Ponchia 1991:8-11 follows Donbaz's transliteration and translation of line 18, but reads line 19 as: mām-ma ina UGU-šā¹ la i-ma-līk "nessuno gli darà consiglio(?)." She proposes alternative interpretations of the line as "nessuno (gli) darà consigli (come) ad un re (ina UGU MAN)" or "mai più darà consigli al re." Zaccagnini (1993:55) argues for a different transliteration and translation of both lines: "May his country become quickly as small as a brick, in no way may he exercise kingship over the (legitimate) king."

REFERENCES

Text, translations and studies: RIMA 3:239-240; Zaccagnini 1993; Timm 1993; Ponchia 1991:8-12; Donbaz 1990.

TIGLATH-PILESER III (2.117)

THE CALAH ANNALS (2.117A)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

In the final years of Tiglath-pileser's reign,¹ the royal scribes composed what became the final "full" edition of his Annals, made up of seventeen palū's (or regnal years). This edition was inscribed between two registers of reliefs on stone slabs already in place decorating the walls of Tiglath-pileser's palace at Calah (Nimrud). However, the palace was never completed, and the slabs were later dismantled by Esarhaddon. During early excavations, some of these slabs were recovered in Tiglath-pileser's palace while others were discovered in Esarhaddon's South-West Palace.

But many slabs were lost or destroyed in antiquity, or while being excavated. In fact, major portions of the originals have survived only in squeezes or hand copies made by the early discoverers: A. H. Layard, H. Rawlinson and G. Smith. The fragmentary state of the extant texts, along with difficulties in the squeezes and hand copies, makes it difficult to understand the Annals' contents and to arrange the material chronologically. Nevertheless, it is clear that the Annals of Tiglath-pileser can be divided into parallel series that differ in the number of lines per column: the seven-line series, the twelve-line series, and the sixteen-line series, originating from different halls. Finally, through much hard work and persistence of study, H. Tadmor has recently published the Calah recension of the Annals following the chronological order of the preserved twenty-eight annal units (1994:27-89).

(Ann. 21:1'-10'; Tadmor 54-55)

Bī-[Agusi ...] in the midst of [...] of Ma[ti²il ...] I placed there. From Rezin³ α [...] x talents of gold, 300 talents of silver, 200 talents of [...] 20 talents of ladanum,³ 300 ... 30 [...] Kuštašpi, the Kumα2Kgs 15:37; 16:5-9; Isa 7:1-8; 8:6

muḫite, [...], the Tyrian, Urikki,⁴ [the Queen], [...] Pisiris, the Carchemishite, Tarḫulara, [the Gur-gumite], [...] iron, elephant hides, elephant tusks (ivory), red-purple wool, [...]

¹ The biblical texts concerning Tiglath-pileser are: 2 Kgs 15:16; Isa 7: 8:1-10, 23; 10:9; 17:1-3; Amos 6:2; 1 Chr 5:6, 26; 2 Chr 28:16-21.

² Concerning the name "ra-ḫi-[a]-ni, i.e., Rezin, see Pitard 1987:181; 1992b; Na'aman 1995c.

³ šim-la-du-nu "the aromatic plant." See CAD L 36 s.v. ladanu.

⁴ See the Karatepe bilingual: Hieroglyphic Luwian: COS 2.21, n. 11; Phoen.: COS 2.31. See also the Cebel Ires Daği inscription (COS 3).

(Ann. 25:1'-12'; Tadmor 56-59)

elephant hides, elephant tusks (ivory), red-purple wool, multi-colored garments, linen garments — numerous clothes of their lands. [...] weapons, spindle(s)⁵ [...] I received within the city of Arpad. [Tutammu, king of the land of Unqi]⁶ broke [the loyalty oath sworn by the great gods] (and) forfeited his life.⁷ My enemy [...] [he did not consult me. In my fury [...] of Tutammu, together with [his] nobles [...] I captured Kinalia,⁸ his royal city. His people, together with their possessions, [...] mules I counted in the midst of my army like sheep. [...] I set up my throne inside Tutammu's palace. [...] 300 talents of silver, by the heavy standard, 100 talents of [...] war equip[ment], multi-colored garments, linen garments, all kinds of spices,⁹ the furnishings of his palace, [...] I reorganized (the administration of) Kinalia (as an Assyrian provincial capital). I [subdued] Unqi to its full extent. [...] I placed my eunuchs as governors over them.

(Ann. 19*:1-12; Tadmor 58-63)

[...] Azriyau¹⁰ [...] I seized and [...] tribute like that [of the Assyrians ...] the city of [...] his helper(s). The city of El[...] the cities of [Usnu], Siannu, [...] Kašpuna, which are on the seashore, together

b Isa 10:9;
Amos 6:2c 2 Kgs 15:14-
22, esp. 19

with the towns [...] [up to Mount Saue], which nudges¹² the Lebanon, Mount Ba'ali-šapūna,¹³ up to Anti-Lebanon,¹⁴ the boxwood mountain, all the Mount Saue,¹⁵ the province of Kar-Adad,¹⁶ the city of Hatarikka,¹⁷ the province of Nuqudina, [Mount Hasu], together with the towns of its environs, the city of Ara [...], both of them, the towns of their environs, all of Mount Sarbua, the city of Ašḫani, (and) the city of Yatabi, all of Mount Yaraqū, ... the city of Ellitarbi, the city of Zitanu, up to the city of Atinni ..., the city of Bumame¹⁸ — 19 districts of Hamath together with the towns of their environs, which are on the western seashore, which in sin and criminal outrage were seized for Azriyau, I annexed to Assyria. I placed two of my eunuchs¹⁹ over them as governors. [...] 83,000 (people) [...] in/from those cities in the province of Tuš[han] I settled. I settled 1,223 people in the province of Ulluba.²⁰

(Ann. 13*:10-Ann. 14*:5; Tadmor 69-71)

I received the tribute of Kuštašpi, the Kummūḫite, Rezin, the Damascene, Menahem,²¹ the Samarian, Hiram, the Tyrian, Sibittibi'il,²² the Byblian, Urikki, the Quean, Pisiris, the Carchemishite, Eni-il, the Hamathite, Panammuwa,²³ the Sam'alite, Tarḫulara, the Gurgumite, Sulumal, the Melidite,

⁵ Giš.pilaqu "spindles." Cf. Esarhaddon's Succession Treaty, SAA 2:56 (lines 616-617): ki-i Giš.pil-laq-qi lu-ša-aš-bi-ru-ku-nu ki-i Ml ina IGi LÜ.KÜR-ku-nu le-pa-šu-ku-nu "May (the gods) spin you around like a spindle, may they make you like a woman before your enemy."

⁶ For the restoration, see Tadmor 1994:56, n. 2'.

⁷ The Akk. lī-miš nap-ša-ti-šu appears cognate to the Heb. mw's npsw (Prov 15:32). See Tadmor 1994:56.

⁸ Kinalia/Kinalua (Tell Tayinat) was the capital of Unqi. Unqi was conquered and annexed in 738 BCE according to the evidence of the Eponym Chronicle. It is to be equated with biblical Kullani (Na'aman 1974:82-83; Tadmor 1994:58; Hawkins 1995b:95). Cf. Isa 10:9; Amos 6:2.

⁹ Šim.tl.A DU.A-ma (riqqē kalāma) "all kinds of spices."

¹⁰ The identification of this individual is uncertain. Three proposals have been made. Two of these proposals were based on a supposed join to ITP Ann 19* (= ICC 65), namely K 6205 — a fragmentary tablet that contains an account of a war against the land of Yaudi and a certain individual called [...] ša-a-u KUR Ia-u-da-a-a. Thus some scholars have proposed that Azriyau was the king of Y²dy/Sam'al, the southeastern Anatolian state (e.g. Winckler 1893). This view, however, is the least likely since Y²dy/Sam'al was always rendered KUR/URU Sam'al(la) in Assyrian records, whereas Yaudi exclusively refers to Judah. Others suggested that Azriyau was Azariah, the powerful king of Judah (Tadmor 1961b; see also Roberts 1985). The third proposal was put forth by Na'aman (1974). He argued convincingly that K 6205 should be joined to another fragment and that both of these derive from the reign of Sennacherib (see the Azekah inscription, COS 2.119D below). This meant that the Azriyau of Tiglath-pileser's annals no longer was attributed to a particular country. Thus Na'aman (1995b:276-277) argued that this Azriyau was an otherwise unattested king of Hatarikka (biblical Hadrach), a Syrian state neighboring Hamath, and postulated an alternative reconstruction of the events of 739 and especially 738, the year in which Tiglath-pileser annexed Unqi, Hatarikka and the "19 districts of Hamath" (Ann 19*:9-10). See also Weippert 1976-80; Hawkins 1976-80b:273. Until new evidence is discovered, any interpretation of the Azriyau episode must remain conjectural. For further discussion, see Tadmor 1994:273-276; and PNA 1:240.

¹¹ Borger (TUAT 1:370) reads "Simya," which was a city south of Arvad.

¹² it-tak-ki-pu-ni. Tadmor (1994:61) notes that in a geographic context nakāpu is unattested in Akk. and compares Heb. "pg^c b..." in similar delimitations of boundaries (e.g. Josh 16:7; 19:22, 26; etc.).

¹³ Ba'al-šapūna. Jebel el-Aqra in northern Syria. See Röhlig RIA 4:241-242.

¹⁴ Lit. Mt. Ammanana. See Cogan 1984:255-259.

¹⁵ For a discussion of the reading, see Tadmor 1994:60.

¹⁶ Kar-Adad. Perhaps Aleppo, the center of storm-god worship. Cf. Hawkins 1972-75:53.

¹⁷ Hatarikka is the Hazrik of the Zakkur inscription (COS 2.35). Cf. Heb. Hadrach (hadrk) of Zech 9:1.

¹⁸ Perhaps this should be emended to URU Bu-ta-me. See Weippert 1973:42, n. 61.

¹⁹ See Grayson 1995.

²⁰ The province was organized immediately after the campaign to Ulluba in 739 BCE.

²¹ On the date of Menahem's tribute see Tadmor 1994:274-276. According to 2 Kgs 15:19, Menahem gave Pul of Assyria 1,000 talents of silver. That the names Tiglath-pileser (Tukulti-apil-Ešarra) and Pul (Pālu) were used to designate a single ruler is no longer seriously called in question (Brinkman 1968:61). The name Pul is often understood as Tiglath-pileser's Babylonian throne name (Oded 1997:109). On the other hand, Brinkman (1968:61-62, n. 317; 240-241, n. 1544) and Tadmor (1994:280, n. 5) understand it either as Tiglath-pileser's original name or as a quasi-hypocoristic for the second element of the name Tiglath-pileser — apil. In either case, pālu, pālu, i.e. "limestone block," could also have served in folk etymology as a nickname for the ruthless empire-builder. See further Loretz and Mayer 1990:228-229.

²² Spelled here (Ann. 13*:11): "Si-bi-i-bi-i-ili. Spelled in Iran Stela (iii.A.7): "Si-bi-ba-il."

²³ See the Panammuwa inscription, COS 2.37.

Dadīlu,²⁴ the Kaskean, Uassurme, the Tabalian,²⁵ Ušhitti, the (A)Tunean,²⁶ Urballā,²⁷ the Tuḥanean, Tuḥamme, the Ištundian, Uirime, the Hubišnean, Zabibe, queen of the land of Arabia: gold, silver, tin, iron, elephant hides, elephant tusks (ivory), multi-colored garments, linen garments, blue-purple wool, and red-purple wool, ebony,²⁸ boxwood, all kinds of precious things from the royal treasure, live sheep whose wool is dyed red-purple, flying birds of the sky whose wings are dyed blue-purple, horses, mules, cattle and sheep, camels, she-camels together with their young.

(Ann. 23*:1'-18'; Tadmor 78-81)

[... of] Rezin²⁹ [the Damascene ...]. [I captured] heavy [booty] [...] his advisor [...] [(With) the blood of his] war[riors] I dyed a reddish hue the river of [...], raging [torrent]; [...], his courtiers, charioteers and [...], their weapons I smashed; and [...] their horses I [...]. I captured his warriors, archers, shield- and lance-bearers; and I dispersed their battle array. That one (i.e. Rezin), in order to save his life, fled alone; and he entered the gate of his city [like] a mongoose. I impaled alive his chief ministers; and I made his country behold (them). I set up my camp around the city for 45 days;³⁰ and I confined him like a bird in a cage.³¹ His gardens, [...] orchards³² without number I cut down; I did not leave a single one.

... the town of ...[h]adara, the home of the dynasty of Rezin the Damascene, [the pl]ace where he was born, I surrounded (and) captured. 800 people with their possessions, their cattle (and) their sheep I took as spoil. I took as spoil 750 captives from the city of Kurūṣṣa (and) the city of Sama, 550 captives from the city of Metuna. I destroyed 591 cities of 16 districts of Damascus like mounds of ruins after the Deluge.

Annals 18 compared with Annals 24 (Tadmor 80-84)³³

(Ann. 18:3'-13')

[... of 16] districts of Bīt-[H]umria (Is[rael]) I [leveled to the grou]nd ...
[... captives from the city of ...]bara,
625 captives from the city of [...]
[...]
[... x captives from the city of] Hīnatuna,^d
650 captives from the city of Ku[...]
[...]
[... x captives from the city of Ya]tbite'
656 captives from the city of Sa... [...]
[...]
[...]
[... the cities of Aruma' and Marum^e [...]
[...]

^d Josh 19:14

^e 2Kgs 21:19

^f 2Kgs 23:36

^g Josh 11:1,
5

(Ann. 24:3'-16')

of 16 di[stricts] of Bīt-Humria (Israel))
[...]
[... capti]ves from ...
[...]
226 [captives from ...] captives [from ...]
[...]
400 [(+ x) captives from ...]
[...]
656 captives from the city of Sa... (altogether)]
13,520 [people ...]
with their possessions [I carried off to Assyria]
[... the cities of Aruma and Marum]
[situated in] rugged mountains [I conquered (?) ...]

²⁴ Dadīlu or Tadihu. Apparently a Luwian PN, see PN4 1:364.

²⁵ Uassurme of Tabal (Bīt-Burutaš) is known from Hieroglyphic Luwian as Wasussamma and ruled a minimum 738-730 BCE. See Hawkins and Postgate 1988:38. For a possible connection with Ben-Tab'al (Isa 7:6), see Hallo 1960:49.

²⁶ Or Annanean (Iran Stela, COS 2.117B). See Hawkins and Postgate 1988:35, 37-38.

²⁷ Urballa of Tuḥana is attested in a recently discovered Hieroglyphic Luwian-Phoenician bilingual found in 1986 in Ivriz, near Ereğli, Turkey. The inscription was commissioned by Muwahama, the son of Warpalawa, king of Tuwana (Tuḥana, classical Tyana). Warpalawa may be identified with Urballu of Tuḥana (ca. 738-710 BCE). See Dinçol 1994:117-128 and Röllig 1992:98.

²⁸ Giš ušū is probably "ebony." For a discussion of the ušū tree, see Stol 1979:34-49; AHW 1442.

²⁹ For the reading, see Tadmor 1994:78.

³⁰ The capture of Damascus and the execution of Rezin are only recorded in 2 Kgs 16:9.

³¹ GIM iṣ-sar qu-up-pi e-sir-šū. This motif recurs in Sennacherib's description of his siege of Jerusalem during his campaign against Hezekiah in 701 BCE (COS 2.119B, note 9). Tadmor remarks: "The true sense of these passages is that of a total blockade, and the hyperbole is employed as a face-saving device to cover for a failure to take the enemy's capital and punish the rebellious king. In the case of Rezin, this was accomplished in the following year (732); in the case of Hezekiah, Sennacherib was forced to make do with heavy tribute delivered to Nineveh after his retreat" (1994:79, n. to 11').

³² For this motif in the earlier inscriptions of Shalmaneser III (also concerning a siege of Damascus), see Calah Annals COS 2.113C, note 3.

³³ See Na'aman 1993:105; 1995b:271-275; Younger 1998:210-214.

REFERENCES

Text: Smith 1875; Rost 1892; Tadmor 1994:58-63; 69-71; 78-81; 80-84. Translations: ARAB 1:§§770-771, 772-774; 776-779; DOIT 54-55; ANET 282-283; TUAT 1:370-373; Na'aman 1986a:125; 1995b:271-275.

THE IRAN STELA (2.117B)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

This inscription is incised on a stela from somewhere in western Iran, perhaps Luristan (Levine 1972:11). The exact provenance is unknown. It is the only known stela of Tiglath-pileser III. After his second campaign in the area in his 9th palû (regnal year) (i.e. 737 BCE), he set it up on the border of one of the states that he had defeated during that campaign.¹

(lines iii.A.1-23)

The kings of the land of Ḫatti, (and of) Aram of the western seashore, the land of Qedar² (and) the land of Arabia:³ Kuštašpi, the Kummuḫite, Rezin,⁴ the Damascene, Menahem,⁵ the Samarian, Tu-ba⁶il,⁷ the Tyrian, Sibitba⁸il,⁶ the Byblian, Urik-(ki),⁷ the Quean, Sulumai, the Melidite, Uassurme, the Tabalian,⁸ Ušḫiti, the Atunean, Urballā, the Tuḫanean, Tuḫamme, the Ištundian, Uirime, the Ḫubišnean, Dadi-ilu, the Kaskean,⁸ Pisiris, the Carchemishite, Panammuwa,⁹ the [Sa]m²alite, Tarḫularu, the [Gur]gumite, Zabibe, the queen of the land of Arabia — I imposed on them tribute of silver, gold, tin, iron, elephant hides, elephant tusks (ivory), blue-purple (and) red-purple garments, multi-colored garments, linen garments, camels, (and) she-camels.

a Gen 25:13;
Isa 21:16-17;
42:11; Jer
2:10; 49:28;
Ezek 27:21;
Ps 120:4[5];
1 Chr 1:29

b 2Kg515:19

(lines iii.A.24-30)

And as for Iranzu, the Mannaeen,¹⁰ Daltā,¹¹ the Ellipian, the city rulers of the land of Namri, the land of Singibutu (and) all the eastern mountains — I imposed on them (as tribute) horses, mules, Bactrian camels, cattle (and) sheep (so that) I might receive¹² (it) regularly on an annual basis in the land of Assyria.

(lines iii.A.31-36)

I caused a stela to be made in the vicinity of the mountain, (and) I depicted on it (the symbols of) the great gods, my lords, (and) I engraved upon it my own royal image; and the mighty deeds of Aššur, my lord, and achievements of [my] hands, which were done throughout all the lands, I wr[ote] on it. [At] the border, which is at ... [...].

¹ See lines iii.A.31-36 and iii.B.1'-10'. See Levine 1972:15; Tadmor 1994:92. For different views on the stela's dating see Cogan 1973:97-98; Na'aman 1986b:81-82; Kuan 1995:150-152.

² KUR Qid-ri. This is the earliest mention of the Qedarites. See Eph'el 1982:83; Kitchen 1994:49-51, 117-119, 167-169, 237.

³ Weippert treats KUR a-ri-bi as an appositive of KUR qid-ri. While this is possible, it is more likely that they are two separate entities parallel in ways to Ḫatti and Aram in the previous line.

⁴ Here spelled: "Ra-qi-a-nu. In other texts the name is spelled: "Ra-ḫi-a-nu (e.g. COS 2.117A, note 1 above).

⁵ "Tu-ba-il is most likely the Phoen. name "tb²i, "Ehba'al/Inoba'l. See Zadok 1978:70-71 for the transcription of ba-il for b²i. See also Pitard 1987:185; Kuan 1995:153.

⁶ See COS 2.117A note 22 above.

⁷ See COS 2.117A note 4 above.

⁸ For these kings, see COS 2.117A notes 24-26; Hawkins and Postgate 1988. For Dadi-lu, see COS 2.117A, note 24.

⁹ See the Panamuwa inscription, COS 2.37.

¹⁰ See Postgate 1987-90. Ir²anzi seems to have remained pro-Assyrian until his death in ca 717 BCE.

¹¹ For Daltā, the king of Ellipi, who plays a role in Tiglath-pileser III's and Sargon II's reigns, see PNA 1:375.

¹² šat-ti-šam-ma am-da-na-ḫa-ra. This verbal form is a GTN durative 1cs + vent. Both the -tan- infix and the durative tense stress the expected regularity of the tribute on a yearly basis.

REFERENCES

Text: Levine 1972; Tadmor 1994:90-110 (106-109). Translations and Studies: TUAT 1:378; Weippert 1973:29-32.

SUMMARY INSCRIPTION 4 (2.117C)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

Incised on fragmentary pieces of an apparent pavement slab, this summary inscription was discovered in excavations at Nimrud and left in situ. It is preserved in squeezes that are no longer extant. Thought originally to be part of the Tiglath-pileser's Annals (note Luckenbill ARAB 1:§§ 815-819 and Oppenheim ANET 283), Wiseman (1956:118) recognized correctly the text's affinity to Summary Inscriptions 1 and 9.

(lines 1'-8'a)

[...] which [...] the city of Hatarikka up to Mount Sau[e], [...] the city of] Byblos, [...] the city of Šimarra, the city of Arqa, the city Zimar[ra], [...]

the city of] Usnu, [the city of Siannu, the city of Ma]araba, the city of Ri²sišu[ri] [...] the cities [...] of the Upper [Sea] I ruled. I placed six [of my] eunuchs¹ [over] them [as governors].

[... the city of Kaš]puna,² which is on the shore of the Upper (text: Lower) Sea [... the city of ...]nite,³ the city of Gil[ead?],⁴ and [the city of] Abel-...,⁵ which are the border of Bit Ĥumri[a]⁶ — I annexed to Assyria the en[tire] wide land of [Bit-Ĥaza⁷i]li.⁷ [I plac]ed [x eunuchs over them] as governors.

(lines 8'b-15'a)⁸

Ĥanunu of Gaza, [who] fle[d before] my weapons, (and) escaped [to] Egypt — [I conquered] Gaza [... his royal city], [I seized] his property (and) his gods. [I made a (statue) bearing the image of the gods my lo]rds and my (own) royal image [out of gold]. I set (it) up in the palace [of Gaza]; (and) I counted it among the gods of their land; I established [their ...].

As for [him (i.e. Hanunu), the fear of my majesty] overwhelmed him and like a bird he flew (back) [from Egypt]. [...] I returned him to his position and [I turned his city(?) into an Assyrian] em[porium (kāru)]. I received [gold], silver, multi-colored garments, linen garments, large [horses], [...].

(lines 15'b-19'a)

I carried off [to] Assyria the land of Bit-Ĥumria (Israel),¹⁰ "auxiliary [army,]" [...] all of its people, [...] [I/they killed]¹¹ Pekah,¹² their king, and I installed Hoshea¹³ [as king] over them. I received from them 10 talents of gold, x talents of silver, [with] their [possessions] and [I car]ried them [to Assyria].

a2Kgs 15:29;
1 Chr 5:26

b2Kgs 15:25-31;
16:5; Isa 7:1-8:6

c2Kgs 15:30;
17:1-6

d Gen 25:13-15;
Prov 30:1; 31:1;
1 Chr 1:29-30

e Job 1:15; 6:19

f Gen 25:4;
1 Chr 1:33

(lines 19'b-36')¹²

As for Samsi, the queen of the land of Arabia, at Mount Saqurri I sle[w 9,400] of her warriors. I seized 1,000 people, 30,000 camels, 20,000 cattle [...] 5,000 (leather pouches) of all kinds of spices¹³ [...] seats of her gods, [arms (and) staffs of her goddesses,] and her property. And she, in order to save her life, [...] to] a desert, an arid place, like an onager [made off]. [The rest of her possessions] (and) her [ten]ts, her people's watchmen,¹⁴ within her camp [I set on fire].

[Samsi], who took fright at my mighty [weapo]ns, she brought [to Assyria] to my [presence] camels, she-camels, [together with their young]. I installed an official administrator (qēpu)¹⁵ over her; and [...] 10,000 soldiers ...].

The people of Massa¹⁶,¹⁶ Temā, Saba¹⁷,¹⁷ [Hayap-pā],¹⁸ Badanu, Ĥatte, Idiba¹⁹ilu, [...], who dwell] on the border of the countries of the setting sun (western lands) [of whom no one (of my ancestors) knew and whose place is far] away, the fame of my lordship [(and of) my heroic deeds they heard, and they made supplication to] my lordship. [They brought before me]: gold, silver, [camels, she-camels, all kinds of spices], their tribute, as one; [and they kissed] my feet. I appointed [Idibi²⁰ilu¹⁷ as the prebend of the "Gatekeeper"¹⁸] facing Egypt [...] of] Aššur I placed therein. [...] I made and [...] the yoke of Aššur, my lord, [I placed over them ... in all the lands through which] I have marched.

¹ Concerning eunuchs, see Grayson 1995; Deller 1999.

² Concerning the erroneous reading Rašpuna, see Wiseman 1951:21-24; and Tadmor 1985b.

³ "One might restore here [adi libbi ^{nu}Qa]-[ni¹]-se: Biblical Kenath (Num 32:42, 1 Chr 2:23) modern Qanawat in the Hauran. However, other restorations are not excluded" (Tadmor 1994:139, n. 6'). Na²aman (1995:105-106) suggests the restoration: [Min]nite. Cf. Judg 11:33.

⁴ For the reading "the city of Gil[ead?]," see Tadmor 1994:139, 186. Cf. Hos 6:8. Na²aman suggests that this is a reference to Mizpeh-Gilead (Judg 10:17; 11:29) (1995c:105-106). See also COS 117F, note 5.

⁵ ^{nu}A-bi-il-x₁-x₂ has been identified with Abel-beth-Ma²acah of 2 Kgs 15:29. In fact, Rost read ^{nu}A-bi-il-ak-k[a] (1892:78) and ^{nu}A-bi-il-ak¹-[ka¹] (pl. xxv). Tadmor, however, states: "This reading cannot be sustained any longer ... One might read ^{nu}A-bi-il-¹šit¹-¹il¹. Perhaps it is ²bi-¹šit¹ of Num 33:48-49" (Tadmor 1994:139, note to 6'). Tadmor also adds: "If A-bi-il-x₁-x₂ is read A-bi-il-¹šit¹-¹il¹ and identified with Abel-shittim, 'located in the plains of Moab by the Jordan at Jericho' (Num 33:48-49), this would indicate that Aram on the eve of its fall controlled a much larger territory east of Jordan than I had suggested in IEJ 12 (1962) 114-122" (1994:281, n. 10). Na²aman (1995c:105-106) argues for an identification with Abel-shittim. Recently, Oded suggested Abila (1997:110).

⁶ On the spelling Bit-Ĥumria instead of Bit-Ĥumri, see Zadok 1978:306.

⁷ I.e. Aram Damascus.

⁸ The prominence given to Gaza is probably due to economic factors, esp. in connection with the spice trade. See Ehrlich 1991, esp. 54.

⁹ Tadmor (1994:140, n. 13') suggests that this lacuna probably included a statement about Hanunu's submission and plea for forgiveness. On Hanunu's return and restoration to power in Gaza, see Ehrlich 1996:94-98.

¹⁰ Concerning Tiglath-pileser III's deportations of the northern kingdom, see Younger 1998:201-214; Na²aman 1993.

¹¹ The restoration of the verb describing Pekah's fate is uncertain. Possible restorations include: [i]-du-[ku-ma] "they killed" or [a]-du-[uk-ma] "I killed" (Tadmor 1994:141, n. 17'). Rost's restoration is-ki-pu-ma is doubtful. According to 2 Kgs 15:30, Hoshea assassinated Pekah.

¹² For this episode, see Eph^al 1982:33-36, 83-86; Tadmor 1994:225-230.

¹³ See Eph^al 1982:128, n. 447; cf. COS 2.117A, note 9.

¹⁴ ḥurādāt nišēša ... ašrup. Tadmor (1994:143, n. 24') argues that in this context the phrase seems unlikely to refer to the burning of watchmen (ḥurādu). Thus he understands the phrase metaphorically and renders "safeguard(?)," referring to Samsi's encampment. However, if adolescent boys and girls could be burned (e.g. by Aššur-nasir-pal II), why not watchmen? The term ḥurādu seems to refer to a type of soldier (CAD H 244). See also Borger TUAT 1:374.

¹⁵ This title was generally given to Assyrian officials of various ranks who supervised the policy and administration in provinces and vassal states. See CAD Q 264-268 s.v. qēpu.

¹⁶ For these tribes, see Eph^al 1982:215-218.

¹⁷ See Eph^al 1982:43.

¹⁸ See CAD A 2:522 s.v. atūtu.

REFERENCES

Text: Smith 1875:284-285; Rost 1892:78-83; Tadmor 1994:136-143. Translations and studies: ARAB 1:§§ 815-819; ANET 283; DOTT 55; Spieckerman 1982:324-327; TUAT 1:373-374; Irvine 1990:62-69; Kuan 1995:62-69.

SUMMARY INSCRIPTION 7 (2.117D)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

This inscription is written on about half of a large tablet (23.4 x 17.5+ cm) which though it bears the label K 3751, was most probably discovered at Nimrud. The most detailed of Tiglath-pileser's summary inscriptions, it was likely composed in or shortly after his 17th palû (regnal year) (i.e., 729 BCE) (Tadmor 1994:154, 238-259). It preserves the only complete building account of Tiglath-pileser from Calah.

(lines R. 1'-6')¹

[...] I set on fire. [Samsi who took fright at my mighty weapons]; [she brought to As]syria to my presence [camels, she-camels, together with their young]. I installed an official administrator (qēpu)² ov[er] her; and [... 10,000 soldiers ...].

[The people of Mas]sa³, Temā, Saba⁴, Hayappā, Badanu, [Ḥatte, Idiba]ilu, ... who dwell on the border of the countries of the setting sun (western lands)] of whom no one (of my ancestors) knew and whose place is far away, the fame of my lordship [(and of) my heroic deeds they heard, and they made supplication to my lordship]. [They brought] be[fore] me [gold, silver], camels, she-camels, all kinds of spices, their tribute, as one; [and they kissed my feet]. I appointed [Idi]bi⁵ilu⁶ as the prebend of the gatekeeper⁷ facing Egypt. In all the (foreign) lands which [...]

(lines R. 7'-13')⁸

[I received the tribute] of Kuštašpi, the Kummuh-ite, Urik(ki), the Quean, Sibittibi⁹il, the [Byblian, Hiram, the Tyrian, Pisiris, the Carchemishite, Eni]-il, the Hamathite, Panamuwa,⁶ the Sam²al-ite, Tarḫulara, the Gurgumite, Sulu[mal, the Melidite, Dadīlu, the Kaskaean, U]assurme, the

^a 2 Kgs 16:5-8

Tabalite, Ušhitti, the Tunaeen,⁷ Urballā,⁸ the Tuḥanaean, Tuḥam[me, the Ištundaeen, Urimmi, the Hubišnaean, Ma]tanbi⁹il, the Arvadite, Sanipu, Ammonite, Salamanu, Moabite, [...] [Mi]tinti,⁹ the Ashkelonite, Jehoahaz,¹⁰ the Judahite, Qaušmalaka, the Edomite, Muš[... the ...] (and) Hanunu, the Gazaeen: gold, silver, tin, multi-colored garments, linen garments, red-purple wool, [all kinds of] costly articles, produce of the sea (and) dry land, the commodities of their lands, royal treasures, horses (and) mules broken to the yo[ke ...].

(lines R. 14'-15')

Uassurme, the Tabalite, acted as if he was the equal of Assyria and did not appear before me. [I sent to Tabal] my eunuch, the Chief-[Eunuch (rāb ša-rēši), ...]. I placed on his throne [Ḥu]lli, the son of a nobody. [I received as his tribute] 10 talents of gold, 1,000 talents of silver, 2,000 horses, [... mules].

(line R. 16')

I sent my eunuch, the Chief-Eunuch (rāb ša-rēši)¹¹ to Tyre. [I received] from Metenna, the Tyrian, [his tribute]: 150 talents of gold¹² (and) [2,000 talents of silver].

¹ See Eph^al 1982:34-36.

² See COS 2.117C, note 15.

³ See Eph^al 1982:93.

⁴ See Summary Inscription 4 (COS 2.117C, note 18).

⁵ Noticeably missing from this list are references to Damascus, Samaria, Tyre and Arabia, nations that had paid tribute on earlier occasions. There are also new nations that are listed as tributaries (including Judah). Thus the list includes vassal kings who submitted in 738 BCE as well as those who submitted in 734 BCE. Concerning the composition of the list, see Weippert 1973:53; Eph^al 1982:29, n. 76; Tadmor 1994:258; but note Irvine 1990:43; Kuan 1995:162-163.

⁶ See the Panamuwa inscription, COS 2.37.

⁷ Or Atunaeen. See Iran Stela, COS 2.117B.

⁸ See COS 2.117A, note 27.

⁹ For a recent discussion of this Mitinti and the fragmentary annalistic passages concerning him, see Na²aman 1998c.

¹⁰ Ja-ū-ḥa-zī* KUR la-ū-da-a + a. This is the full name of Ahaz, king of Judah who sent to Assyria to ask for aid against Rezin of Damascus and Pekah of Israel (2 Kgs 16:5-8). See Wiseman 1976-80; Hallo 1999a:36 and nn. 3-5.

¹¹ LÚ.GAL.SAG is the rāb ša-rēši, not the rāb šaqē (contra Luckenbill ARAB 2:§§ 802-803; Oppenheim ANET 282; Wiseman DOTT 56). See Tadmor 1983; Grayson 1995.

¹² Concerning the amount of gold paid in tribute, see Tadmor's remarks (1994:171, n. 16').

REFERENCES

Text: Smith 1875:256-285; Rost 1892:54-77; Tadmor 1994:154-175. Translations and studies: ARAB 1:§§787-804; ANET 282; DOTT 55-56; Spieckermann 1982:324-327; TUAT 1:374-375; Na²aman 1986b:72-73; Irvine 1990:40-41; Kuan 1995:161-164.

SUMMARY INSCRIPTION 8 (2.117E)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

This inscription (ND 400, now BM 131982) is found on a well-baked tablet fragment (8.6 x 10.8 cm) discovered at Nimrud in 1950. While it may be possible that the inscription is part of the same tablet as Summary Inscription 7 (K 3751), this is far from certain (it may be an additional copy).

(lines 1'-9')

[...] [...] his [...] on dry land [...] [...] I made (them) pour out [their lives]. That city¹ to[gether with [...] [...] in the midst of the sea I devastated them and anni[hilated them]. [...] and he was afraid. He put on sackcloth² [...] [...] of ivory, ebony, inlaid with precious stones and gold, together with [...] [...] ivory, fine oil, all kinds of spices, horses³ of E[gypt] [...] from Kašpuna, which is on the shore of the [Upper] Sea, [as far as [...] under the control of my eunuch, the governor of Ši[mirra, I placed].

(lines 10'-13')⁴

[...] I filled [the plain] with the bodies of their warriors [like gras], [together with] their belongings, their cattle, their sheep, their asses [...] [...] within his palace [...] [...] I accepted their plea to [forgive] their rebellion (lit. "sin") and s[pared] their land.

(lines 14'-19')

[...] [Han]unu, the Gazaeen⁵ feared my powerful weapons and [escaped to Egypt]. [I conquered Gaza ...]. [x talents] of gold, 800 talents of silver, people together with their possessions, his wife, [his] sons, [his daughters ...] [I seized his property (and) his gods]. [I made] an image of the great gods, my lords, <and> an image of my lordship out of gold.⁶ [I set (it) up in the palace of Gaza; (and) I

α Amos 1:6-8

β 1 Chr 4:41;
2 Chr 20:1;
26:7

counted it among the gods of their land]; I established the[ir ...].

As for him (i.e. Hanunu), like a bird [he flew (back)] from Egypt. [...] I returned him to his position and] I turned [his city(?)] into an Assyrian [emporium]. [I set up] my royal stela in the city of the brook of Egypt,⁶ a river[-bed ...] I removed [...] from ... x talents of gold, x + 100 talents] of silver and [I brought] (it) to Assyria.

(lines 20'-23')

[...] had not submitted [to the kings], my predecessors and who had not sent (them) any message, [heard about] the conquest of the land of [...] [...] the fear of the splendor of Aššur, my lord, overwhelmed him] and fear seized him. [He sent me] his ambassadors⁷ to do obeisance [...] [...] Siruatti, the Me²unite,⁸ whose [territory is] "below" Egypt,⁹ [...] exalted [...], my own extensive conquest he he[ard], and fear overwhelmed him [...]. [...]

(lines 24'-27')

[As for Samsi, the queen of the land of Arabia], I defeated 9,400 (of her people) at Mount Saqurri [...] [...] [I seized] her [gods], arms (and) staffs of her goddess, [and her property]. [And she, in order to save her life, ... to a desert, an arid place], made off [like an on]ager. The res[t of her posses-

¹ Two proposals for the identification of this island city have been made: 1) Arvad (Alt 1953:152-153; Oded 1974:46; Irvine 1990:47-48; Tadmor 1994:282); and 2) Tyre (Eph²al 1982:30; Na²aman 1995b:268-271). It is more likely that Tyre is the entity in view, though this cannot be absolutely certain due to the fragmentary state of the tablet. See also Kuan 1995:166.

² ṭūg-sa-gu. While both CAD and AHw distinguish between sagu, a type of clothing ("penitential garb" CAD S 289) and saqu "sack," Tadmor suggests that it is likely that the distinction is phonological/dialectical rather than lexical, sagu being the Assyrian form. Hence not only was sackcloth worn among West Semites as a sign of mourning and penitence, but also in Assyria. Cf. Jonah 3:6-9.

³ Egypt was known for its special breed of "large horses."

⁴ The identification of the enemy of Tiglath-pileser in these lines is uncertain. Scholars have suggested the following: Tyre (Tadmor 1994:282); Israel (Alt 1953:151-157; Na²aman 1986b:72-73; 1995:268-271); or either Damascus, a Phoenician city-state, or Israel (Eph²al 1982:30).

⁵ According to Tadmor (1994:177) there was only one object (not two) that was set up in Gaza — a golden statue of the king with symbols of the deities engraved on it. Concerning the Assyrian imperial cult, see Cogan 1974:48-52 and 1993.

⁶ Concerning the reading, see Tadmor 1994:178. While Na²aman identifies the Nahal Mišraim with Wadi Besor (1979; 1980a), it is still preferable to identify it with Wadi el-Arish (see Rainey 1982).

⁷ šrāni. This term becomes an Akk. loanword in Heb. šir (cf. Isa 18:2; Jer 49:14; Prov 13:17). See Machinist 1983:730, n. 65.

⁸ This is an extra-biblical attestation of the Menuites. See the discussion of Eph²al 1982:68-71, 219-220. For Siruatti, the Me²unite, see Na²aman 1997b.

⁹ Probably refers to northern Sinai.

sions (and) her tents, her people's watchmen], [within her camp] I set on fire. Samsi took fright at my mighty weapons, [she brought to Assyria to my	presence camels], she-camels, together with [their young], [...]
---	---

REFERENCES

Text: Wiseman 1951; Tadmor 1994:154-157, 176-179. Translations and studies: Spieckermann 1982:324-327; TUAT 1:375-376; Na²aman 1986b:72-73; 1995b; Irvine 1990:44-56; Kuan 1995:164-167.

SUMMARY INSCRIPTION 9-10 (2.117F)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

The text is written on a large, very fragmentary clay tablet¹ (18.4 cm wide) which was recovered in excavations at Nimrud in 1955. The reverse of the tablet preserves narrations of Tiglath-pileser's Levantine campaigns, arranged geographically and set off by rulings across the surface of the tablet.

Summary Inscription 10 (K 2649),² following Tadmor's designation (1994:180), is a tiny fragment (2.5 x 5.6 cm) which may be a part of the same tablet as Summary Inscription 9.³ Tadmor uses K 2649 to restore some missing parts of Summary 9. As in his edition, these restorations are italicized in the translation.

(lines R. 1-31)

[The city of Hata]rikka, as far as Mount Sa[ue], the city of Kaspuna on the shore of the Upper (text: Lower) Sea, [(and) the city of Šimirra and the city of Arqa] I annexed to Assyria. [I placed over them]
two eunuchs as governors.

The wide [land of Bit]-Haza²ili (Aram-Damascus) in its entirety,⁴ from Mount [Leb]anon as far as the city of Gilead,⁵ Abel ...⁶ [on the border of Bit-Hurmia (Israel) I annexed to Assyria. [I placed] my eunuch [over them as governor].

[Hi]ram, the Tyrian, who plotted(?)⁷ together with Rezin [...]. I captured [the city of] Maḥalab,⁸ his fortified city, together with (other) large cities.
Their plunder [...]. He came before me and kissed my feet. [I received] 20 talents of [gold ...] multicolored [garments], linen garments, eunuchs, male singers and fem[ale] singers ... [horses] of Egypt
[...].

[I captured the land of Bit-Hurmia (Israel)] to its fu[ll extent ...] [I carried off to Assyria] ... [together with] their possessions. [... [I placed Hoshea]⁹ as king over them. [...] before me to the city of Sarraσ 2Kgs 15:30

bani⁹ [...]

[... from ...] x + 100 talents of silver I carried off and [brought to Assyria].

[Hanunu, the Gazaeen, feared my powerful weapons and] escaped [to Egypt]. [I conquered] Gaza, [his royal city]. I made [a statue bearing the image of the great gods, my lords, and my (own) royal image out of gold]. [I set it up] in the palace of Ga[za]. [I counted it among the gods of their land
... As for him (i.e. Hanunu), like] a bird [he flew (back)] from Egypt. [...] I returned him to his position and I turned] his [city] into an Assyrian emporium (kāru).

[As for Samsi, the queen of the land of Arabia], I felled with the sword [...] at Mount Saqurri]. And all of [her] ca[mp ...] [...] all kinds of spices] without number, [her] gods [I seized]. [And she, in order to save her life, ... to a desert], an arid place, [made off] like an onager. [The rest of her possessions (and) her tents, her people's watchmen], within her camp [I set on fire]. [Samsi took fright at my mighty weapons; camels], she-camels together with [their you]ng, [she brought to Assyria to ¹ These ND-fragments (ND 4301 + ND 4305 + ND 5422) were published by Wiseman 1956 and 1964.

² K 2649 was published by Leeper 1918:35.

³ Borger (TUAT 1:376-378) gives a translation based on a composite text drawn from the fragments.

⁴ Probably a reference to all of Rezin's territories (including any Israelite holdings), not simply Aram-Damascus proper.

⁵ URU Ga-al-a²a²(?)-[d]. Cf. Hos 6:8. For the reading see Tadmor 1994:186, n. 3. See Summary Inscription 4, COS 2.117C, note 4.

⁶ See Summary Inscription 4, COS 2.117C, note 5.

⁷ ND 4301 reads: ŠA.KU.NA. Tadmor emends to š(sic)-ku-na, and from K 2649 adds: 'pi¹-l¹(1)-l¹š¹.

⁸ The conquest of Maḥalab and the submission of Hiram are only mentioned here.

⁹ This sentence appears to mention Hoshea's (or more likely, his messengers') appearance before Tiglath-pileser with tribute at Sarabani in southern Babylonia (see Parpola NAT 306).

my presence]. I installed over her [an official administrator (qēpu)] and 10,000 soldiers [...]

[... who] had not submitted to the kings, my predecessors, and [had never sent his message] [...] heard about [the conquest of the land of Ḥaṭ]ti. The fear of the splendor of Aššur, my lord, [overwhelmed him] [and fear seized him. He sent his ambassadors¹⁰] to my presence, to Calah, [to do obeisance].

[... From Metenna the Tyr]jian 50 talents of gold,

2,000 talents of silver [I received as his trib]ute.

[Uassurme, the Tabalite, acted as if he was the equal of Assyria and] did not appear before me. [I sent to Tabal] my eunuch, [the Chief-Eunuch (rāb ša-rēš)]. [I placed on his] thr[one Ḥul]i, the son of a nobody. [I received as his tri]bute [10 talents of gold, 1,000 talents of silver, 2,000 horses, ...].

[...] nobody [among] the kings, my ancestors, [...]; [I received] his tribute.

¹⁰ See Summary Inscription 8, COS 2.117E, note 7.

REFERENCES

Text: Wiseman 1956; 1964; Tadmor 1994:180-191, esp. 186-191. Translations and studies: Weippert 1973:37; Eph^cal 1982:33-36; Spieckermann 1982:324-327; TUAT 377-378; Irvine 1990:56-62; Kuan 1995:182-186.

SUMMARY INSCRIPTION 13 (2.117G)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

This inscription is engraved on a poorly preserved colossal bas-relief from Nimrud that depicts a large figure with a mace. The inscription is incised across the large figure. While a number of scholars have treated the text as a part of Tiglath-pileser's Annals,¹ others have noted its non-chronological elements as evidence of its summary type. In Tadmor's recent treatment, he suggests that the inscription is a summary inscription of a special category (1994:198-199).

(lines 1'-2')²

[...] [...] to Calah before me [...]

(lines 3'-16')³

[As for Samsi, the queen of the land of] Arabia, at Mount Saḡurri [...] [...] her [ent]ire camp [...] [...] And she, who] took fright [at my (mighty) weapons], [...] brought to Assy]ria [to my presence]. [I ins]talled [an official administrator (qēpu) over her]; and [10,000 sold]iers⁴ [...] I made [...] bow down to my [feet]. The people of [Massa⁵, Temā, Sab]a⁶, Ḥayaḡpā, [Badanu, Ḥa]ṭte, I[ḡ]ba⁷ilu, [...], who dwell on the bor]der of the countries of the setting sun (western lands) [whose place is far away, the fa]me of my lordship (and [of] my heroic] deeds they heard], [They brought before] me: gold, silver, camels, [she-camels], all kinds of spices, their tribute, as [one]; [and they kis]sed my feet. Their gifts [...] I appointed Iḡbi⁵ilu⁵ as [the prebend of the "Gatekeeper"]⁶ facing [Egyp]t.

(lines 17'-18')

[The land of Bīt-Ḥumria (Israel)], all [of whose] cities I leveled [to the ground] in my former campaigns, [...] I plundered its livestock, and I spared only (isolated) Samaria. [I/They overthrew] Pek]ah, their king.⁷

¹ E.g. Rost 1872:211-228; Luckenbill ARAB 1:§§778-779; Oppenheim ANET 283; Borger TUAT 372.

² An apparent reference to the arrival of tribute from a foreign king (Tadmor suggests the king of Egypt(?), 1994:198) while Tiglath-pileser is staying in Calah. This may be linked to the statement in the Eponym Chronicle for the year 730 BCE that the king stayed "in the land" (Millard 1994:45, 59).

³ This is the shortest version concerned with the defeat of Samsi.

⁴ For the reading with a discussion of past misunderstandings of the text, see Tadmor 1994:200-201.

⁵ See Summary Inscription 4, COS 2.117C, note 17.

⁶ See Summary Inscription 4, COS 2.117C, note 18.

⁷ See Summary Inscription 4, COS 2.117C, note 11.

REFERENCES

Text: Layard 1851:66; Smith 1875:285-286; Rost 1892:36-38; Tadmor 1994:198-203. Translations: ARAB 1:§§778-779; ANET 283; TUAT 372.

SARGON II (2.118)

THE ANNALS (2.118A)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

In very early excavations (1843-44), P. E. Botta uncovered fourteen large rooms of the palace of Sargon II¹ at ancient Dūr-Šarrukīn (modern Khorsabad). The doorways and walls of these rooms were adorned with slabs having sculptured reliefs along with inscriptions. Further excavations were undertaken at the site by T. V. Place in 1852-54. In connection with the early excavations, E. N. Flandin made excellent drawings of the slabs. These together with Botta's copies were published in 1849-50.² Based on the drawings and especially on plaster squeezes that were also made during the early excavations, H. Winckler (1889) and A. G. Lie (1929) attempted to restore the Annals of Sargon from Khorsabad.³ Through further discoveries of texts of Sargon II as well as additional work, a very useful edition of Sargon's Annals has recently been published (Fuchs 1994).

(lines 10-18)⁴

[...] [the Samar]ians,⁵ [who had agreed with a hostile king] [...] [...] who c[ause] my victory. [I fought with them and decisively defeated them]. [...] [...] carried off as spoil. 50 chariots for my royal force [I [...] [the rest of them I settled in the midst of Assyria.⁶] [...] I re]settled and I made it greater than before. People of lands conquer[ed ...] [...] tax I imposed upon them as on Assyrians. [I opened the sealed] har[bor of Egypt]. [The Assyrians and the Egyptians] I mingled [t]ogether and made them trade with each other.

(lines 23b-25)

In my second regnal year, Ilu-bi⁷di,⁸ [the Hamathite],⁹ [...] the wide [land ...] at Qarqar⁸ he gathered. The oath [...] [...] Arpad, Šimīrra] Damascus, and Sa]mari[a he caused to rebel against me] [...]

(lines 53-57)

[...] and Re¹⁰e, his [commander-in-chief (turtānu)], came to his assistance, and he marched against me to do war and battle. In the name of Aššur, my lord, I inflicted a defeat on them. Re¹⁰e fled alone like a shepherd⁹ whose flock is robbed, and he disappeared.

[H]a]nunu I seized with the hand; and I brought him as a prisoner to my city Aššur. I razed, destroyed, and burned Raphia. I carried off 9,033 inhabitants

2 Kgs 17:6, 23; 18:11

8 Gen 10:2

together with their great property.

(lines 72-78)

In my fifth regnal year, Pisiri, the Carchemishite,¹⁰ sinned against the treaty of the great gods, and he sent a message to Mita (Midas),¹¹ the king of Muski.¹² I lifted up my hands to Aššur, my lord; and I brought forth him together with his family as prisoners. I plundered gold, silver, along with the property of his palace, and the sinful inhabitants of Carchemish, who (had supported) him, along with their possessions. I brought them to Assyria. I gathered 50 chariots, 200 cavalry, and 3000 infantrymen from them and I added (them) to my royal contingent. I settled inhabitants of the land of Assyria in the city of Carchemish; and I imposed on them the yoke of Aššur, my lord. The people of Papa and Lallakna — dogs who were brought up in my palace, had spoken ...ly to Kakmē — I deported them from their place and [settled them] in Damascus, in the land of Amurru [...]

(lines 120b-123a)

The Tamudi, Ibadidi, Marsima[ni] and Hayappā, who live in distant Arabia, in the desert, who knew¹³ neither overseer nor commander, who never brought tribute to any king — with the help of Aššur, my lord, I defeated them. I deported the rest of them. I settled them in Samaria/Samerina.

¹ The biblical texts that may be related to Sargon II are: 2 Kgs 17:1-24; 18:1-12; Isa 10:27-32; 14:4b-21; 20:1.

² For further discussion of these wall reliefs, see Albenda 1986.

³ For some of the problems and difficulties with these editions, see Tadmor 1958.

⁴ The restoration of this section is very dependent on the Nimrud Prisms (esp. Prism D).

⁵ Becking (1992:39-45) has recently argued that since the Annals are fragmentary at this particular point, they may, in fact, not refer to the conquest of Samaria. However, see Fuchs 1994:82. For the issues surrounding the fall of Samaria, see Younger 1999.

⁶ In Sargon's inscriptions, the name of the king of Hamath is spelled Ilu-bi⁷di and Yau-bi⁷di. Some scholars interpret the Yau- as a Yahwistic theophoric element (Malamat 1963:7; Cogan and Tadmor 1988:166; with variation, Dalley 1990:27, 31; Zevit 1991:363-366). Other scholars are doubtful of a Yahwistic theophoric element in the name (Lipiński 1971:371-373). See also Hawkins 1976-80c; Dion 1997:169, n. 142.

⁷ For Hamath, see Hawkins 1972-75a:67-70; Dion 1997:137-170.

⁸ Same site as Shalmaneser III's battle in 853 BCE (see COS 2.113A, note 22).

⁹ Akk. re¹⁰u which is used as a wordplay on the name of the Egyptian commander Re¹⁰e. For older attempts to link his name with "So, king of Egypt" (2 Kgs 17:4), see Borger 1960; Kitchen 1986:374-375; Cogan and Tadmor 1988:196.

¹⁰ For Carchemish, see Hawkins 1997; 1976-80c.

¹¹ I.e., Midas of Phrygia.

¹² Muski or Muski is identified with Meshech (Gen 10:2).

¹³ The Arab tribes are the subject and not the object of idāma (see Cogan and Tadmor 1988:337; and Becking 1992:103).

(lines 249-262)¹⁴

Azuri,¹⁵ the king of Ashdod,¹⁶ [plo]t[te]d to with[hold] his tribute], and he sent (messages) to the neighboring kings [hostile to Assyria]. Because he committed crimes again[st] the people of his country], I abo[lished] his ru[le] (and) plac[ed] Ahimiti, his favorite brother, as king [over them]. The Hittites,¹⁷ who (always) speak treachery, [hated] his rule. [Ya]jdna,¹⁸ who had no claim to the throne, who was like them, and had [no respect for rulership], they elevated over them. [In the anger of my heart], with my own chariot and with my cavalry — who never leave my [side in (hostile or) friendly territory] — I [quickly] marched to Ashdod, [his royal city]. I besieged (and) conquered Ashdod, Gi[mtu]¹⁹ and [Ashdod-Yam].²⁰ I counted as boo[ty] the gods who dw[elt] in them, him[self], [together with the people of his land, gold, silver, (and) the property of his palace]. I reorganized those cities. I settled there the people of the lands, the conquest of my hands. I placed my eunuchs as governors over them; and I counted them with the people of Assyria; and they bore my yoke.

¹⁴ Tadmor (1958:79) states: "The assumption that an Assyrian Commander-in-Chief (turtanu) fought against Ashdod in 712 BC agrees with the date in Isa. 20:21ff. 'The year that Tartan came into Ashdod ... and took it.'" He also argues: "There are, however, some indications that Sargon had intervened in the affairs of Ashdod prior to the expedition of 712: e.g., the replacement of Azinu with Ahimtu. However, the narrative of the campaign against Ashdod in the Annals (11th yr. = 711) was shifted by the scribes from the 9th yr. = 712 in the prism in order to extend the brief narrative of events of 712" (1958:92-94).

¹⁵ For this monarch, see PNA 1:240.

¹⁶ For Ashdod, see Dothan 1993. Fragments of an Assyrian victory stela were found in excavations at Ashdod. See Tadmor 1971; Kapera 1976; Cogan and Tadmor 1988: pl. 11b.

¹⁷ Used figuratively of the Westerners, namely, here, the Ashdodites.

¹⁸ Elsewhere Yamani. Yajna may be a scribal error (Berger TUAT 1:380, n. 254a; Edzard 1976-80). For the campaign against Ashdod, see Kapera 1972-73; 1987; Mattingly 1981; Reade 1976; Redford 1992; Spalinger 1973; 1978; Tadmor 1958. Cf. Tang-i Var (COS 2.118J) below.

¹⁹ Generally identified with Gath.

²⁰ This site (located on the coast) was evidently built by Yamani to serve as a rear base for the main city in times of danger. See Kaplan 1993.

REFERENCES

Text: Fuchs 1994:82-188, 313-342; Lie 1929:2-13, 20-23, 38-41; Winckler 1889:4-7, 12-13, 16-17, 24-25, 40-43. Translations and studies: ARAB 2:84; ANET 284; TUAT 1:378-379; Tadmor 1958:34; Becking 1992:39-45.

THE BOROWSKI STELA (2.118B)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

This text is inscribed on a broken stone stela,¹ belonging to a type of stela which was set up locally to commemorate events in the district. Thus it was probably incised after the successful completion of the campaign in Syria and Palestine in 720 BCE. This document reveals what had not been known before its publication, namely that thousands of Assyrians were "guilty" of rebellion according to Sargon. Those mentioned in the stela, however, he pardoned and deported to Hamath.

I gathered from them 200 chariots, 600 cavalry, shield and lance (bearers); and I added them to my royal contingent. I pardoned 6,300 guilty Assyrians;² and showed mercy on them; and I settled them in Hamath. I imposed on them tribute, gifts, and corvée work, as my royal fathers³ had imposed on Irḫulēni⁴ of Hamath. Future rulers should heed the kindly deeds of the god Aššur, and they should teach later generations to reverence him. The people of of the land Ḫatti and of the land of Arime, who live in Bīt-Agusi and Unqi, to their whole extent ...

¹ It is only 58 cm in height and 35.6 cm in width.

² Most likely these were part of the Assyrian army units who had offended Sargon by supporting a more legitimate successor to Shalmaneser V (Lambert 1981:125).

³ Sargon's rise to power came on the heels of the death of Shalmaneser V, whose death recent research has shown was the result of natural causes (see Younger 1999:468, n. 28). Some scholars conclude that since Shalmaneser V died a natural death, Sargon II was not a usurper (Becking 1992:22, n. 6; Na'aman 1990:218, n. 37; Vera Chamaza 1992:21-33). But just because Shalmaneser V may have died a natural death does not mean that Sargon was the legitimate heir to throne. The ensuing internal difficulties indicated in the sources demonstrate a significant struggle for the throne in Assyria at this time. The cumulative evidence seems to point to an illegitimate power seizure by Sargon. See Tadmor 1981:26-29; Dalley 1985:33.

⁴ A king of Hamath in the days of Shalmaneser III. See COS 2.113A, ii.86b-102.

REFERENCES

Text and translation: Lambert 1981.

THE AŠŠUR "CHARTER" (2.118C)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

The text (K. 1349) is inscribed on a fragmentary tablet 6.9 cm x 12.0 cm and describes the restoration of privileges¹ to the city of Aššur. The fragment offers a brief but clear representation of the internal political situation of Assyria during Sargon II's ascent to the throne. It appears that the text was written only a few years² after Sargon came to power since he states in line 16 "in my second regnal year." In the section of the document relating Sargon's activities of 720 BCE (lines 16-28), Samaria's involvement in the coalition against Sargon is clearly linked to the leadership of Ilu-bi³di (Yau-bi³di) of Hamath (see Younger 1999:471-473).

(lines 16-17a)

In my second regnal year,³ when I had sat on the royal throne and had been crow[ned] with the crown of lordship, I smashed the forces of Humbanigaš, king of Elam; I decisively defeated him.⁴

(lines 17b-28)

Il[ubi³di⁵ of] Hamath, not the rightful holder of the throne, not fit(?) for the palace, who in the shepherdship of his people, did [not attend to their] fate, [but] with regard to the god Aššur, his land (and) his people he sought evil, not good, and he treated contemptuously. He gathered Arpad and Samerina, and he turned (them) to his side [...] h[e] kill[ed] [a]nd he did not leave anyone alive [...] I raised [my hand to Aššur]; and in order to conquer H[a]math [...] [...] of the extensive the land of Amurru. I prayed⁶; and Aššur, the [great] god ... heard [my prayer] and received my supplication [...] I caused [my forces] to take [the way to the land of Amu]rru.⁷ Ha[math] [...] earlier times, who had learned fame [...] I subdued [the inhabitants of the land of Amu]rru. [...] I brought [them t]o my [c]ity, the city of Aššur, a[nd ...]

¹ What made up this "privileged status" (kidinnu or kidinnātu) was apparently exemption from both ilku and tupšikku (Vera Chamaza 1992:26-27).

² Tadmor concludes that the Aššur Charter is "superior to all other Annalistic sources of Sargon as to historical reliability and exactness of dating" (1958:32).

³ See Sargon's Annals above, COS 2.118A, lines 23-25.

⁴ The reference is to the Battle of Der; see COS 2.118I, n. 2.

⁵ See Sargon's Annals, COS 2.118A, note 6.

⁶ Here understanding maḫḫū meaning "to pray (to a deity)." See CAD M 1:61.

⁷ I.e., Syria-Palestine.

REFERENCES

Text: Saggs 1975; Winckler 1893-94:pl. 1; 1897 1:403-405. Translations and studies: ARAB 2:§§133-135; TUAT 1:387; Tadmor 1958:31-32; Becking 1992:34-36; Vera Chamaza 1992.

NIMRUD PRISMS D & E (2.118D)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

A number of fragmentary clay prisms were discovered in excavations at Nimrud in 1952-53. These fragments form two prisms: D, comprised of ND 2601 + 3401 + 3417, and E, comprised of ND 3400 + 3402 + 3408 + 3409.¹ These two prisms are duplicate and fortunately allow restoration of a more continuous text. Most of the column translated here comes from prism D.

(iv.25-41)

[The inhabitants of Sa]merina, who agreed² [and plotted]³ with a king [hostile to]⁴ me, not to do service and not to bring tribute [to Aššur] and who did battle, I fought against them with the power of

a 2 Kgs 17:7-8

the great gods, my lords. I counted as spoil 27,280 people, together with their chariots, and gods,⁵ in which they trusted. I formed a unit with 200 of [their] chariots for my royal force. I settled the rest of them in the midst of Assyria. I repopulated

¹ There were additional fragments discovered as well. But only the two prisms are relevant here.

² Dalley (1985:36) suggests reading kaṁālu instead of gamālu. However, kaṁālu is doubtful since it is not found in such contexts in the royal inscriptions. It is most often used with deities as the subject (CAD K 109). Thus gamālu seems more probable.

³ The most probable restoration seems to be either [ikpudu] — used twice by Sargon in his Letter to the God and used by Assurbanipal in the phrase: ša ini RN ikpudu lemutu "who plots evil against Assurbanipal" (CAD K 173), or ibbalkitu — seems less likely though it is used in Sargon's inscriptions (CAD N 1:13-14).

⁴ For the restorations of lines 25-28, see Younger 1999:469-471.

Samerina more than before.⁵ I brought into it people from countries conquered by my hands. I appointed my eunuch as governor over them. And I counted them as Assyrians.

(lines 42-49)

I caused the awe-inspiring splendor of Aššur, my lord, to overwhelm the people of the land of Egypt and the Arabians; and at the mention of my name their hearts palpitated, (and) their arms collapsed. I opened the sealed [borders(?)]⁶ of Egypt, and I mingled together the people of Assyria and Egypt. I made them trade [with each other].

⁵ Dalley (1985:36) reads this as a hendiadys, utir ... ušešib "I made the population greater." Tadmor (1958:34) reads "the city of Samaria I resettled and made it greater than before," reading ū-še-me (from ewū, emū) instead of ū-še-šib (from ašābu).

⁶ Borger (TUAT 1:382) proposes [ki-sūr-re]; Tadmor (1958) suggests [ka]r-ri.

REFERENCES

Text: Gadd 1954:179-180, pls. xlv, xlvj; Tadmor 1958:34; Spieckermann 1982:349-350. Translations and studies: Cogan and Tadmor 1988:200, 336; TUAT 1:382; Dalley 1985:36; Naʿaman 1990:209-210; Becking 1992:28-31.

THE GREAT "SUMMARY" INSCRIPTION (2.118E)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

Discovered at Khorsabad (see introduction to Sargon's Annals above, COS 2.118A), this summary inscription stood on the wall slabs of rooms 4, 7, 8 and 10 in Sargon's palace.

(lines 23-27)

From my accession year to my fifteenth regnal year, I decisively defeated Humbanigaš, the Elamite, in the district of Der.

I besieged and conquered Samarina. I took as booty 27,290¹ people who lived there. I gathered 50 chariots from them. I taught the rest (of the deportees) their skills.² I set my eunuch over them, and I imposed upon them the (same) tribute as the previous king (i.e. Shalmaneser V).

Hanunu, the king of Gaza, along with Reʿe, the commander-in-chief (turtānu) of Egypt, marched against me to do war and battle at Raphia. I inflicted a decisive defeat on them. Reʿe became afraid at the noise of my weapons, and he fled, and his place was not found. I captured with my own hand Hanunu, the king of Gaza. I received the tribute of Pharaoh,³ the king of Egypt, Samsi,⁴ the queen of Arabia, Ithamar, the Sabeans: gold, herbs of the mountain, horses and camels.

(lines 33-36a)

Yau-biʿdi, the Hamathite, a ḥupšu-man,⁵ with no claim to the throne, an evil Hittite, was plotting in his heart to become king of Hamath. He caused Arpad, Šimarra, Damascus and Samaria to rebel against me, had unified them (lit. made them one mouth) and prepared for battle. I mustered the masses of Aššur's troops and at Qarqar, his favorite city, I besieged and captured him, together with his warriors. I burned Qarqar. Him I flayed. I killed the rebels in the midst of those cities. I established harmony. I gathered 200 chariots, 600 cavalry from among the people of Hamath, and I added (them) to my royal contingent.

(lines 90-112a)

Azuri, the king of Ashdod, plotted in his heart to withhold tribute, and he sent (messages) to the neighboring kings, hostile to Assyria. Because he committed crimes against the people of his country, I abolished his rule. I placed Aḥimiti, his favorite [brother],⁷ as king over them. The Hittites, who (always) speak treachery, hated his rule.

Yamani,⁸ who had no claim to the throne, who was like them, and had no respect for rulership, they elevated over them. In the ebullience of my heart, I did not gather the masses of my troops, nor did I organize my camp. With my warriors — who never leave my side in (hostile or) friendly territory — I marched to Ashdod. Now when this Yamani heard from afar the approach of my cam-

¹ Nimrud Prism has 27,280 deportees, COS 2.118D. For the Battle of Der, see COS 2.118C, n. 4.

² For the interpretation of this sentence, see Younger 1999:469.

³ For Piʿu šār Mušuri (ca. 713 BCE), see Naʿaman 1974:32 and n. 29. For Reʿe, see COS 118A, n. 9.

⁴ See Tiglath-pileser III COS 2.117C, note 12.

⁵ Kitchen 1994; 1997. Cf. the name of Aaron's youngest son, Exod 6:23, etc.

⁶ Following Borger TUAT 1:383, n. 33b. Cf. Heb. ḥopšl denoting a lower class; Ug. ḥpī, ḥbt; see Heltzer 1981:54, n. 56.

⁷ AHW 1310 "bevorzugter Bruder."

⁸ For Yamani and this campaign of Sargon, see COS 2.118A, note 18 above.

paig, he fled to the border area of Egypt which is on the border with Meluhha,⁹ and his place was not found. I besieged (and) conquered Ashdod, Gintu (Gath) and Ashdod-Yam. I counted as booty his gods, his wife, his sons, his daughters, the property, the possessions (and) treasures of his palace, together with the inhabitants of his land. I reorganized those cities. I settled there the peoples of the lands, the conquest of my hands, from [the area] of the east. [I placed my eunuchs as governors over them]. I counted them with the people of Assyria and they bore my yoke.

The king of Meluh[ha]⁹—who in ... land of U[r]iz-zu, an inaccessible place, a way [... whose] ancestors [from the] distant [past] until now had nev[er] se[nt] their messengers to the kings, my ancestors, in order to inquire about their well-being — heard from a[ar] of the might of the gods [Aššur, [Nabû], (and) Marduk. The [fear]ful splendor of my majesty overwhelmed him and panic overcame him. He put him (Yamani) in handcuffs and manacles, [fe]tters of iron, and they brou[ght] (him) the long journey to Assyria (and) into my presence.

⁹ In the Neo-Assyrian texts, Meluhha refers to Nubia. Heimpel 1987 and 1993-97 overlooks these references. For this king see COS 2.118J, lines 19-21.

REFERENCES

Text: Fuchs 1994:189-248, esp. 197, 343-355; Winckler, Sargon, 100-103; 114-117. Translations and studies: ARAB 2:§§55, 62; ANET 284-285; TUAT 1:383-384; Dalley 1985:34-35; Tiram 1989-90:73; Becking 1992:25-26.

THE SMALL "SUMMARY" INSCRIPTION (2.118F)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

The text was discovered in room 14 of Sargon's Khorsabad palace.

(lines 11b-18a)

Yamani,¹ the Ashdodite, became afraid of my weapons, and he abandoned his wives, his sons, (and) his daughters, and he fled to the border area of Egypt which is on the border with Meluhha,² and lived like a thief (there). I placed my eunuchs as governors over all of his extensive land and his flourishing³ people. I extended the territory of Aššur, king of the gods.

[...] The fearful splendor of Aššur, my lord, [ov]erwhelmed [the king of the land of M]eluhha² and they put iron fetters on his (Yamani's) hands and feet. He (the king of Meluhha) had him (Ya-mani) brought to Assyria into my presence. [...] I plundered Šinuhtu, Samerina⁴ and the entire land of Bit-Humria (Israel). The Ionians, who live in the midst of the western sea, I caught like fish. I deported the land of Kasku, the land of Tabal (and) the land of Hīlakku. I drove away Mita (Midas), king of Muski. I decisively defeated Egypt at Raphia, and I counted Hanunu, the king of Gaza, as booty.

I subdued the seven kings of the land of Ia,⁵ a district of the land of Iadnana,⁶ whose homes lie a seven days' journey in the middle of the western sea.

¹ See COS 2.118A, note 18 above.

² See COS 2.118E, note 9.

³ See AHW 1156 s.v. šamtu and Fuchs 1994:308, n. 308.

⁴ Becking comments: "it is a remarkable fact that 'Samerina and the whole land of Omri' are mentioned in one line with URU Ši-nu-uh-ni in Cilicia which Sargon conquered during a campaign in his fourth palū = 718 BCE" (1992:27-28). For Šinuhtu, see COS 2.118I, n. 5.

⁵ For the subjugation of these Cypriot kings, see Na'aman 1998b.

⁶ Lipiński (1991) argues that the term Iadnana, the most common name for Cyprus in the Assyrian royal inscriptions, may be interpreted as "the island of the Danunians."

REFERENCES

Text: Fuchs 1994:75-81, esp. 76, 307-312; Weissbach 1918:175-185; Winckler 1889:82-83; Translations: ARAB 2:§79-80; ANET 285; TUAT 1:385; Becking 1992:27-28.

PAVEMENT INSCRIPTION 4 (2.118G)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

The text was inscribed on a pavement slab for the gates at Dūr-Šarrukīn (Khorsabad).

(lines 31-41) (Sargon II) ... who conquered Samaria and the entire land of Bīt-Ḫumria (Israel); ¹ who plundered Ashdod (and) Šinuḫtu, ² who caught the Ionians ³ like fish in the middle of the sea; who deported	the Kasku, all of Tabal, and Ḫitakku; who drove away Mita (Midas), the king of Muski; who decisively defeated Egypt at Raphia, and counted Hanunu, king of Gaza, as spoil.
---	--

¹ Var.: ka-a-šid ^{ms} sa-mir-i-na gi-[nu]-ir É Ḫum-ri-a.
² See Nimrud Inscription (COS 2.118I, note 5).
³ KUR la-am-na-a-a. Perhaps these are Ionian pirates on the Cilician coast. See Röllig 1976-80b.

REFERENCES

Text: Fuchs 1994:259-271, esp. 261, 359-362; Borger *BAL*², 59-63, 131-132, 322-326; Winckler 1889 1:146-157, 2:pls. 38-40. Translations: ARAB 2:§§99-100; ANET 284; TUAT 1:386; Becking 1992:27.

THE CYLINDER INSCRIPTION (2.118H)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

Discovered at Khorsabad, the text is inscribed on four barrel cylinders (two in the Louvre at Paris and two in the British Museum in London). The inscription commemorates the founding of Sargon's new capital at Dūr-Šarrukīn.

(lines 19-20) ¹ (Sargon) who subjugated the extensive land of Bīt-Ḫumria (Israel), who inflicted a decisive defeat on Egypt at Raphia, and who brought Hanunu, king of	Gaza, to Aššur as a prisoner, who conquered the Tamudi, the Ibadidi, the Marsimani and the Hayap-pā, of whom the remainder I removed and settled in the land of Bīt-Ḫumria (Israel).
--	--

¹ Interestingly, events of 720 BCE (subjugation of Israel, the defeat of Hanunu of Gaza, Egyptians at Raphia) are joined with events of 717 BCE (the conquest of the Arab tribes and their deportations to Samaria).

REFERENCES

Text: Fuchs 1994:34 (lines 19-20); Lyon 1883 4:19-20. Translations: ARAB 2:§§116-118; TUAT 1:386.

THE NIMRUD INSCRIPTION (2.118I)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

Inscribed on two slabs from Calah (Nimrud), this text is a summary inscription recording Sargon's restoration of Aššur-našir-pal II's palace. One slab is in Assyrian characters, the other in Babylonian. While the inscription is not dated, it appears to date to late 717 or early 716 BCE (Na²aman 1994:19-20).

(line 7-12) Pious prince, who met with Ḫumbanigaš, ¹ king of Elam, in the district of Der ² and defeated him; the	^a lsa 10:27. 32 subduer of Judah ^a which lies far away; ³ deporter of the land of Hamath, whose hands captured Yaubi ² di, their king; repulser the land of Kakmé,
--	--

¹ The battle against Ḫumbanigaš at Der, the subjugation of Hamath, and the subduing Judah took place in 720 BCE. See COS 2.118C, n. 4.
² Concerning the site of Der, see de Meyer 1997. Concerning the battle, see Brinkman 1984:40-50, esp. p. 48. Sargon's texts claim that he was the winner of the battle of Der. See Annals (lines 21-22); Nimrud inscription (line 7); Tang-i Var Inscription (line 16). The other sources declare the Elamites as winners (see the Babylonian Chronicle I i.33-37); or the Elamites/Babylonians (Marduk-apla-iddina Nimrud stela, lines 17-18; Gadd 1953:123). See Hallo 1960:53.
³ For possible connections of this phrase to a campaign of Sargon II against Judah in the 720 BCE context, see Sweeney 1994; Younger 1996;

the wicked enemy; who set in order the disordered land of the Manneans; who gladdened the heart of his land; who extended the border of Assyria.

Diligent ruler, snare of the unsubmissive, whose hand captured Pisiri, king of Ḫatti, and set his official over Carchemish,⁴ his city; deporter of the city of Šinuḫtu,⁵ who brought Kiakki,⁶ king of Tabal, to Aššur, his city, and placed his yoke on the land of Muski; conqueror the land of the Manneans, the land of Karallu and the land of Pattiru; avenger of his land; who defeated the distant Medes as far as the rising sun.

Na³aman 1994; Hallo 1999a:36f. Cf. the interesting parallel in the Nimrud Prism: mu-šak-niš KUR Ma-da-a-a ru-qu-ú-ii "the subduer of the distant Medes" (Gadd 1954:200; Tadmor 1958:38-39). For the Isaianic passage, see Christensen 1976.

⁴ The conquest of Carchemish dates to 717 BCE.

⁵ Šinuḫtu is to be located at Aksaray (Hawkins 1995b:99). For the episode recording this deportation, see Annals lines 68b-71.

⁶ In 718 BCE, Sargon removed Kiakki of Šinuḫtu for disloyalty and intrigue with Mita of Muski (Midas of Phrygia). He gave Šinuḫtu to Kuri of Atuna, a successor of Tiglath-pileser III's contemporary Ušḫiti (see the Iran Stela of Tiglath-pileser, COS 2.117B). A stela from Aksaray names a ruler Kiyakiya, who seems likely to be the same as Kiakki of Šinuḫtu. See Hawkins 1995b:99; Hawkins and Postgate 1988:37.

REFERENCES

Text: Winckler 1889 1:168-173. Translations: ARAB 2:§§136-138; ANET 287; TUAT 1:387; Na³aman 1994:17-18.

THE TANG-I VAR INSCRIPTION (2.118J)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

Discovered in Iranian Kurdistan in 1968, this cuneiform inscription is found on a Neo-Assyrian relief that is carved into a niche in a rock face on the flanks of the Kūh-i Zīnāneh in the Tang-i Var mountain pass. The niche is approximately 170 cm in height and 150 cm in width and some 40 m above ground level. The relief depicts an Assyrian king in a standard pose, standing and facing right with his right hand raised and his left hand holding an object (perhaps a scepter). Apparently, the relief and inscription were engraved in this niche to commemorate the Assyrian campaign of 706 BCE carried out against the land of Karalla¹ by Sargon's officials and very likely carved in that year (Frame 1999:51). This is the only Assyrian rock relief known to have been made in the time of Sargon II. Unfortunately, the inscription is badly worn. Nevertheless, through photographs taken in the early 1970s,² G. Frame has recently published a very informative preliminary edition (Frame 1999).

(lines 11-12)

Sargon, great king, mighty king, king of the world, king of Assyria, governor of Babylon, king of the land of [Sumer and Ak]kad, favorite of the great gods, perfect hero, [...] man, pious [prince], marvellous man, [...] shepherd, [...].

(lines 13-15)³

Aššur, Nabû(?), (and) Marduk, the gods [my] helpers, granted [me] a kingship [without] equal and [have ex]tolled my good [fa]me reach to the utmost. I un[der]took⁴ the [re]stor[at]ion of Sippar, Ni[ppur], (and) Babylon (and) I recom[pen]sed the citizens of [kidinnu-status],⁵ as man[y] as there were, for all the wrongful damage (suffered by) [them]. I re[in]stated the exemption from taxation of Bal[til]⁶ which had been interrupted. Regarding the city of Ḫarran [...] gate of [the peo]ple [...] I set up a kidinnu-symbol⁷ (indicating their privileged status).

(lines 16-18)⁸

I smashed the army of Ḫumbanigaš, the Elamite. I destroyed the land of K[aral]la,⁹ the land of Šurda, the city of Ki[šes]im, the city of Ḫarḫar, [the land] of the Medes, (and) the land of Ellifpi [...]. I laid waste to the land of Urartu, plundered the city of [Mušašir] (and) the land of the Manneans; I mauled the land[s] of Andia (and) Zikirtu, (and) allowed [...] all their settlements to live [...]. I conquered

¹ The passage (lines 37-44) that narrates this campaign in the inscription is badly preserved and only partially legible.

² François Vallat took these photographs while dangling from a rope! (see Frame's description, 1999:34).

³ See Display Inscription from Room 14 (lines 2-3 and 5).

⁴ ša PN, PN, PN zānināssun eteppuša (e-tep-pu-ša). CAD E 225 s.v. epēšu + zāninātu "to act as provider and caretaker." Cf. ša Sippar Nippur Bābīlī u Barsip zānināssun e-tep-pu-ša "I undertook the restoration of Sippar, Nippur, Babylon and Borsippa." Winckler 1889 no. 56:3, and passim in Sargon.

⁵ I.e. "privileged status."

⁶ I.e. Aššur.

⁷ CAD K 343 s.v. kidinnu.

⁸ See Display Inscription from Room 14 lines 7-10 and note such texts as Pavement Inscription no. 4 lines 14-27.

⁹ See Röhlig 1976-80a; and esp. Frame 1999:48-52.

the rulers of the land of Hamath, the city of Car-che[mish, the city of Kummul]hi, (and) the land of Kammanu; I set governors over their lands [...].

(lines 19-21)

I plundered the city of Ashdod. Yamani, its king, feared [my weapons] and [...]. He fled to the region of the land of Meluhha and lived like a thief¹⁰ (there). Šapataku¹¹ (Shebitku¹²),¹³ king of the land of Meluhha, heard about the mig[ht] of Aššur, Nabû, (and) Marduk which I had [demonstrated] over all lands [...]. He put (Yamani) in manacles and handcuffs [...] he had him brought before my presence like a captive.

(line 22)

[I depopulated] all the lands of Tabālu, Kasku (and) Hīlakku; I [took away] settlements belonging to Mita (Midas), king of the land of [Mu]sku, and reduced his land.

a Gen 10:7;
Isa 18:1-3; 20: 30:1-7

b 2Kgs 20:12;
Isa 39:1

(line 23)

At the city of Raphia (Rapihu) [I defeated] the vanguard of the army [of Egypt]; and I counted as bo[ot]y the king of the city of Gaza who had not submitted to my [yo]ke.

(line 24)

I subdued seven kings of the land of Iā¹⁴, a region of the l[and of] Iadnāna (Cyprus)¹³ — whose home is situated at a distance¹⁴ of [...] [in the mid]dle of the Western Sea.

(line 25-26a)

Moreover, my hands defeated Marduk-apla-iddina (Merodach-baladan),¹⁵ king of the land of Chaldea, who dwelled on the shore of the sea (and) who ex[erc]ised kingship over Babylon against the wi[th] of the gods. Moreover, all the land of Bīt-Yakin [...]

¹⁰ I.e. "in hiding."

¹¹ From the photographs published by Frame. I read the signs of the name: [m] [šá] -pa- [ra] -ku- [u] -[u].

¹² The Tang-i Var inscription indicates, by naming Shebitku as the king who extradited Yamani from Egypt, that Shebitku was already ruler by 706, at least four years earlier than has generally been thought. See the discussion of Frame 1999:52-54 and Redford 1999. Cf. COS 2.118A, note 18. For the possible biblical allusions, see Astour 1965.

¹³ See Lipiński 1991:64. He argues that the word Iā¹⁴ renders the Phoen. ʿy "island," and Iadnāna should probably be interpreted in the sense of "Island of the Danunians."

¹⁴ For this line, see Frame 1999:45.

REFERENCES

Text: Frame 1999; Sarfarāz 1968-69. Translation: Frame 1999. Studies: Frame 1999; Redford 1999.

SENNACHERIB (2.119)

SENNACHERIB'S FIRST CAMPAIGN: AGAINST MERODACH-BALADAN (2.119A)

Mordechai Cogan

The date of this earliest of Sennacherib's campaigns is disputed; it was directed against Merodach-baladan, who had seized the opportunity of Sargon's death (705 BCE) to proclaim himself king of Babylon, in opposition to the upstart rebel Marduk-zakir-shumi. Levine (1982) favors a date from winter 704 through early 702, while Brinkman (1984) opts for 703-702, considerably shortening the time span of the abundant military activities detailed in the inscription. Unlike his predecessors, Sennacherib did not reign as king of Babylon upon routing Merodach-baladan; rather he appointed the pro-Assyrian Bel-ibni to the throne.

The Babylonian mission sent by Merodach-baladan to Jerusalem¹⁶ is frequently associated with the period of rebellion prior to the campaign described, suggesting that Babylonians and Judeans coordinated their insurgencies against Assyria (Brinkman 1964:31-33; Hallo 1999a:37). Another option dates the Jerusalem visit to the reign of Sargon, ca. 713 BCE, during Merodach-baladan's earlier rule in Babylon (Cogan and Tadmor 1988:260-263).

The text bears no colophon date, but certainly predates the "Bellino cylinder" inscription that relates both the first and second campaigns and is dated to mid-702 BCE.

(lines 5-15) At the beginning of my reign, when I had majestically ascended the throne and ruled the people of Assyria with obedience and peace, Merodach-baladan, king of Karduniaš (i.e., Babylonia),

a 2Kgs 20:12-19; Isa 39:1-8; 2Chr 32:31

an evil rebel, of treacherous mind, doer of evil, for whom truth is sinful, turned to Shutur-Nahhunte, the Elamite, for help, sent him gold and silver and precious stones, requesting his help. He (i.e., the Elamite) sent him General¹ b Imbappa, with his troops, Tannanu, the "third man,"^c 10 commanders, together with Nergal-nasir, the Sutean, fearless in battle, 80,000 bowmen, [chariots, wagons, mules and horses, to his aid in Sumer and Akkad. He, [Merodach-baladan, Larsa], Ur, Eridu, Kullab, Kissik, Nimid-Laguda, Bit-Yakin, Bit-Amukkani, Bit-Salli, Bit-Dakkuri, all the Chaldeans, as many as there were, who (dwell) by the banks [of the Tigris, the Tu²umuna, the Ri³hila, the Ubudu], the Yadaqu, the Kipre, the Mali⁴u, [who (dwell) by the banks of the Euphrates, the Gurumu, the Ubulu, the Damu⁵nu, the Gambulu, the Hindau, the Ru⁶ua, the Buqudu, [who (dwell) by the banks of the Uqu, the Hamranu, the Hagru], the Nabatu, the Li⁷tau — unsubmissive Arameans who do not know field crops,² Nippur [...], Borsippa, Kutha, all of Babylonia, he gathered together as one and prepared for battle.

(lines 16-19) They reported these evil deeds to me, Sennacherib, who is pious in heart. I raged like a lion and gave the order to march into Babylonia against him. He, the image of an evil demon, heard of the march of my campaign. Horses and bowmen of the Elamites, Arameans, and Chaldeans, together with Nabu-nasir and the 10 commanders of Elam who do not know field crops — a force without number with them — he strengthened their ranks and brought them into Kutha. He set watch at the outposts against the advance of my campaign. I readied my chariot teams, (and) on the twentieth day of Shebat,^d I set out from Assur at the head of my army, like a mighty wild ox. I did not wait for my forces, nor did I hold back for the rear guard.

(lines 20-30) I ordered the Rabshakeh^e and my governors to Kish ahead of me: "Take the road against Merodach-baladan (and) keep him under strong watch." He (i.e., Merodach-baladan) saw my governors and sallied forth with all his troops through the gate of Zamana and did battle with my officers in the plain of Kish. The enemy's onslaught was great against my officers and they could not withstand it. They sent messengers for help to me (while I was) in the plain of Kutha. In my wrath, I made a fierce assault upon Kutha; I slaughtered their warriors round about its wall like sheep and took the city. I took out and counted as spoil the horses and bowmen of the Elamites, the Arameans, and the Chaldeans, the commanders of the king of Elam, Nabu-nasir, as well as the rebel inhabitants of the city. I raged like a lion; I stormed like the flood. I set my face, together with my merciless

b 2 Kgs 18:17;
Isa 20:1

c 1 Kgs 9:22;
2 Kgs 7:2;
9:25; 15:25,
etc.

d Zech 1:7

e 2 Kgs 18:17,
etc.

warriors, against Merodach-baladan. And he, doer of evil, saw the advance of my campaign from afar. Fear fell upon him and he abandoned all of his forces and fled to Guzummani. Tannanu, together with the armies of the Elamites, the Chaldeans and the Arameans, who stood at his side and had come to his aid — I defeated them and shattered his forces. Adinu, son of the wife³ of Merodach-baladan, together with Bazqanu, brother of Iatie, queen of the Arabs, together with their armies, with my own hands I took alive as captives. I myself seized the chariots, wagons, horses, mules, asses, dromedaries (and) Bactrian camels which had been abandoned during the battle. In the joy of my heart and with shining countenance, I hurried to Babylon and entered the palace of Merodach-baladan to oversee the property and goods (stored) there.

(lines 31-38) I opened his treasuries. Gold, silver, vessels of gold and silver, precious stones, beds, armchairs, a processional carriage — a royal appurtenance — inlaid with gold and silver, property and goods of all kinds, without number, an enormous treasure, his wife, the women of his palace, his housekeepers, male and female musicians, eunuchs, courtiers, attendants, palace slaves who keep his royalty in good spirits, all the craftsmen as many as there were, I brought (them) out and counted as spoil.

I hurried after him. I sent my warriors to Guzummani into the swamps and the marshes. They searched for him for five days, but his (hiding) place was not found. The rest of the horses of his troops, which had no place to rest and had fled from him (as swiftly) as deer, and had not gone with him, I gathered together from the steppe and the hills.

(lines 39-50) In the course of my campaign, ... (the names of 26 towns are listed),⁴ in all 33 fortified towns, walled towns of Bit-Dakkuri, with 250 villages within their borders; ... (the names of 8 towns are listed), in all 8 fortified towns, walled towns of Bit-Sa²alli, with 120 villages within their borders; ... (the names of 39 towns are listed), in all 39 fortified towns, walled towns of Bit-Amukkani, with 350 villages within their borders; ... (the names of 8 towns), in 8 fortified towns, walled towns of Bit-Yakin, with 100 villages within their borders; a total of 88 fortified towns, walled towns of Chaldea (i.e., Babylonia), with 820 villages within their borders, I besieged, I conquered, I plundered.

¹ Lit. "the tartan."

² An expression referring to the nomadic life style of the Arameans. In a similar manner, the Amorite tribes who entered Mesopotamia in the late 3rd millennium BCE were styled "who know no grain" and "who dig up mushrooms at the foot of the mountain." See Klein 1996. For Nergal-nasir, the Sutean, see Heltzer 1981:96.

³ Perhaps to be read "sister" (Brinkman 1964:25, n. 140).

⁴ An error of transcription may account for the missing seven names; cf. Eph'al 1982:40, n. 106.

(lines 51-62) I provisioned my troops with barley and the dates of their groves, (and) their produce from outlying regions. I destroyed, devastated and burned (their towns) and turned them into forgotten tells. I took out the Aramean and Chaldean elite forces who were in Uruk, Nippur, Kish and Hursagkalamma, together with their rebel inhabitants and counted (them) as spoil. I provisioned my troops with barley and dates of their groves, from the field which they had worked, (and) the produce from outlying regions, for their sustenance.

I installed Bet-ibni, son of a building inspector, a native-born Babylonian, who was raised in my palace like a young puppy.

On my return, I captured the Tu²muna, Ri³hilu, Yadaqu, Ubudu, Kip⁴re, Mali⁵hu, Gurumu, U⁶jbulu, Damunu, Gambulum, H⁷indaru, Ru⁸ua, Baqudu, Hamranu, H⁹agranu, Nabatu, Li¹⁰ta¹¹fu, all of them unsubmitive Arameans], and despoiled them.

In the course of my campaign, I received the heavy tribute of Nabu-bel-shumati, the administrator of Hararati: gold, silver, large musukkanu-timber, asses, dromedaries, cattle and sheep. I slew the warriors of Hirimmu, a dangerous enemy, who had not submitted to any of the kings, my predecessors. Not a soul escaped. I reorganized that district: one ox, 10 lambs, 10 homers of wine, 20 homers of the best quality dates, I imposed as dues for (the temples of) the gods of Assyria, my lords. I returned to Assyria with the great spoil of 208,000 men, 7,200 horses and mules, 11,073 asses, 5,230 camels, 800,100 ewes, excluding the men, asses, camels, and sheep, the shares which my troops had carried off and appropriated for themselves; and the enemy warriors, strong power, who had not submitted to my yoke, I cut down with the sword and hung on stakes.

REFERENCES

Text: BM 113203; Smith 1921; Luckenbill 1924:48-55; Frahm 1997:42-45; Studies: Brinkman 1964:6-53; 1984:54-59; Eph¹al 1982; Frahm 1997:42-45; Klein 1996; Levine 1982:29-40; Smith 1921.

SENNACHERIB'S SIEGE OF JERUSALEM (2.119B)

Mordechai Cogan

This is probably the most discussed Neo-Assyrian inscription, due to its providing a complimentary report, from the Assyrian point of view, of the military operations in Judah, in particular the investment of Jerusalem, portrayed so extensively in the Bible (2 Kgs 18:13-19:37; Isa 36-37; 2 Chr 32:1-22). The cuneiform text summarizes the campaign of Sennacherib in 701 BCE, undertaken to quell the revolt of vassal states in the West which had broken out upon the death of Sargon four years earlier. Because of the literary nature of compositions in which events are grouped topically rather than chronologically, i.e., they are grouped under the rubrics of "the submissive" or "the defeated" (Tadmor 1985a), a strict itinerary of the campaign cannot be re-created. Sennacherib's scribes portray Hezekiah as being roundly defeated, submitting to his overlord and sending a substantial tribute payment to Nineveh at the conclusion of the campaign. The contradictory conclusion in the biblical record, which describes the miraculous defeat of the Assyrian army (2 Kgs 19:35), has given rise to a number of alternative reconstructions (Gonçalves 1986), no one of which has gained general scholarly assent.

There is no record of a further western campaign during Sennacherib's reign, and the oft-times posited second encounter between Hezekiah and Sennacherib some fifteen years later is untenable, considering the development of events in the West during the first quarter of the seventh century.

The earliest copy of the cuneiform text (= the Rassam cylinder) bears the date Iyar 700 BCE, a half year or so after the end of hostilities.

In my third campaign, I marched against Hatti.¹ The awesome splendor of my lordship overwhelmed Lulli, king of Sidon, and he fled overseas far-off.² The terrifying nature of the weapon of (the god) Ashur my lord overwhelmed his strong cities, Greater Sidon, Lower Sidon, Bit-zitti, Sarpitu, Mahaliba, Ushu, Akzib, Akko, walled cities (provided) with food and water for his garrisons, and they bowed in submission at my feet. I installed Tuba³lu on the royal throne³ over them and im-

¹ I.e., "Upper Syria."
² Added in prism dated 697: "and disappeared forever" (i.e., died).
³ Var.: "his royal throne," posed upon him tribute and dues for my lordship (payable) annually without interruption.

The kings of Amurru,⁴ all of them — Minuḫimmu of Samsimuruna,⁵ Tuba³lu of Sidon, Abdili³ti of Arvad, Urumilki of Byblos, Mitinti of Ashdod, Puduilu of Beth-Ammon, Chemosh-nadbi of Moab, Ayarammu of Edom — brought me sumptuous presents as their abundant audience-gift, fourfold, and kissed my feet.

As for Šidqa, king of Ashkelon, who had not submitted to my yoke — his family gods, he himself, his wife, his sons, his daughters, his brothers, and (all the rest of) his descendants, I deported and brought him to Assyria. I set Šarruludari, son of Rukubti, their former king, over the people of Ashkelon and imposed upon him payment of tribute (and) presents to my lordship; he (now) bears my yoke. In the course of my campaign, I surrounded and conquered Beth-Dagon, Joppa, Bene-berak, Azor, cities belonging to Šidqa, who did not submit quickly, and I carried off their spoil.

The officials, the nobles, and the people of Ekron who had thrown Padi,⁶ their king, (who was) under oath and obligation to Assyria, into iron fetters and handed him over in a hostile manner to Hezekiah, the Judean, took fright because of the offense they had committed. The kings of Egypt, (and) the bowmen, chariot corps and cavalry of the kings of Ethiopia assembled a countless force and came to their (i.e. the Ekronites') aid. In the plain of Eltekeh, they drew up their ranks against me and sharpened their weapons. Trusting in the god Ashur, my lord, I fought with them and inflicted a defeat upon them. The Egyptian charioteers and princes, together with the charioteers of the Ethiopians, I personally took alive in the midst of the battle. I besieged and conquered Eltekeh and Timnah and carried off their spoil. I advanced to Ekron and slew its officials and nobles who had stirred up rebellion and hung their bodies on watchtowers all about the city. The citizens who committed sinful acts I counted as spoil, and I ordered the release of the rest of them, who had not sinned. I freed Padi, their king, from Jerusalem and set him on the throne as king over them and imposed tribute for my lordship over him.

a 2Kgs 18:13-19:37; Isa 36-37; 2 Chr 32:1-22

b 2Kgs 18:14

As for Hezekiah, the Judean,⁷ I besieged forty-six of his fortified walled cities and surrounding smaller towns, which were without number. Using packed-down ramps and applying battering rams, infantry attacks by mines, breeches, and siege machines,⁸ I conquered (them). I took out 200,150 people, young and old, male and female, horses, mules, donkeys, camels, cattle, and sheep, without number, and counted them as spoil. He himself, I locked up within Jerusalem, his royal city, like a bird in a cage.⁹ I surrounded him with earthworks, and made it unthinkable¹⁰ for him to exit by the city gate. His cities which I had despoiled I cut off from his land and gave them to Mitinti, king of Ashdod, Padi, king of Ekron and Šilli-bel, king of Gaza,¹¹ and thus diminished his land. I imposed dues and gifts for my lordship upon him, in addition to the former tribute, their yearly payment.

He, Hezekiah, was overwhelmed by the awesome splendor of my lordship, and he sent me after my departure to Nineveh, my royal city, his elite troops (and) his best soldiers, which he had brought in as reinforcements to strengthen Jerusalem, with 30 talents of gold, 800 talents of silver,⁸ choice antimony, large blocks of carnelian, beds (inlaid) with ivory, armchairs (inlaid) with ivory, elephant hides, ivory, ebony-wood, boxwood,¹² multicolored garments, garments of linen, wool (dyed) red-purple and blue-purple, vessels of copper, iron, bronze and tin, chariots, siege shields, lances, armor, daggers for the belt, bows and arrows, countless trappings and implements of war, together with his daughters, his palace women, his male and female singers.¹² He (also) dispatched his messenger to deliver the tribute and to do obeisance.

⁴ I.e., the West.

⁵ To be distinguished from Menachem of Israel; see Weippert 1993-97.

⁶ For this royal name at Ekron, see above, COS 2.42.

⁷ Added in "Chicago" Prism dated 691: "who had not submitted to my yoke."

⁸ Perhaps "storm ladders."

⁹ For this cliché, see COS 2.117A, n. 31.

¹⁰ Lit.: "taboo."

¹¹ Var. in Bull Inscription (Frahm, No. 4): "I gave it (i.e. his land) to the kings of Ashdod, Ashkelon, Ekron and Gaza."

¹²⁻¹² Omitted in "Chicago" Prism; replaced there by: "abundant treasure of all kind."

REFERENCES

Text: Frahm 1997:53-55, lines 32-58; Luckenbill 1924:29-34, col. ii:37-iii:49; p. 60, lines 56-58. Translations: ARAB 2.239-240, 284; ANET 287-288; DOT 66-67; Borger in K. Galling, TGI² 67-69; TUAT 1/4 388-390. Studies: Tadmor 1985a; Hallo 1999a (with previous literature).

SENNACHERIB — LACHISH RELIEF INSCRIPTION (2.119C)

Mordechai Cogan

A four-line epigraph, inscribed in a rectangular block to the left of the seated figure of the king reviewing captives filing out of Lachish. The detailed relief,¹ which depicts the assault and capture of the Judean city, enjoyed a most prominent position in a suite of rooms in the palace of Sennacherib at Nineveh, so that “a visitor [to the palace] might justifiably conclude that the surrender of Lachish was the high point of the western campaign” (Russell 1991:252). Though commemorated in outstanding fashion in this wall relief, the battle of Lachish did not come in for specific mention in the “official” annal account of the campaign of 701 BCE (cf. COS 2.119B); the choice of Lachish as the representative of the battles in Judah may have been influenced by the presence of the king on the scene.

Sennacherib, king of the universe, king of Assyria, seated upon a sedan chair,	a 2 Kgs 19:8; 2 Chr 32:9	the spoils of Lachish ^a passed before him.
---	-----------------------------	--

¹ For photograph of reliefs and their reconstructions in the archaeological context, see Ussishkin 1982; for artistic and architectural analysis, see Russell 1991:202-209; 252-257. Cf. also Yadin 1963:428-439; Hallo 1960:59 and figs. 2-3.

REFERENCES

Luckenbill 1924:156, i.37; ANET, 288; TUAT 1:391.

SENNACHERIB: THE “AZEKAH” INSCRIPTION (2.119D)

Mordechai Cogan

The remains of twenty-one lines of a tablet, one fragment of which (K 6205) was formerly ascribed to Tiglath-pileser III (ANET 282b), the other (82-3-23, 131) to Sargon. The reference to the Judean city of Azekah, as well as the name of Hezekiah (partially restored) definitively set the location of the battles in Judah, but there is still some question as to their date. Naʾaman (1974), who joined the two fragments, opined that the description fits the western campaign of Sennacherib in 701 BCE; others (e.g., Frahm 1997) argue for a date during Sargon’s reign (712 or even earlier 720). In either case, the elevated, poetic style of the surviving lines resembles that of Sargon’s “Letter to the god Ashur,” written at the end of the campaign to Urartu, reporting in magnificent detail the king’s triumph.

1-2 (scattered signs)	a Jer 34:7	spoil. I tore down, I destroyed []
3 [Ashur, my lord, support]ed me and to the land of Ju[dah I marched. In] the course of my campaign, the tribute of the ki[ngs of ... I re- ceived].	b Mic 1:10- 16	11 [the city X] a royal [city] of the Philistines, ^b which He[zek]iah had taken and fortified for himself []
4 [by the mig]ht (?) of Ashur, my lord, the district [of Hezek]iah of Judah, like []		12 [] (scattered signs) [] like a tree []
5 [] the city of Azekah, ^a his stronghold, which is between my [] and the land of Judah []		13 [] surrounded by great t[o]wers, most diffi- cult []
6 [] located on a mountain peak, like countless pointed ir[on] daggers, reaching to high heaven		14 [] a palace, like a mountain, was barred in from of them, high []
7 [] were strong and rivaled the highest moun- tains; at its sight, as if from the sky []		15 [] it was dark, and the sun never shone on it, its waters were located in dar[kn]ess, its out- flow []
8 [by packed-down ra]mps, and applying mighty (?) battering rams, infantry attacks by mi- n[es]		16 [] its mo[uth (?) was cut with axes and a moat was dug around it []
9 [the approach of my cav]alry they saw, and heard the sound of Ashur’s mighty troops and they were afraid []		17 [soldiers] skilled in battle, he stationed in it, he girded his weapons, in order to []
10 [I besieged (?) I conquered, I carried off its		18 [] I had the people of Amurru, ¹ all of them, carry earth []
		19 [against them. For a third time, [] great, like a pot [I smashed]

¹ I.e., the West.

20 [cattle and sh]eep, from its midst I t[ook out, and as] spo[il I counted.]	21 (illegible signs)
---	----------------------

REFERENCES

Na²aman 1974:25-39; Galil 1992:113-119; Frahm 1997:229-232; Hallo 1999a:40.

SENNACHERIB: THE CAPTURE AND DESTRUCTION OF BABYLON (2.119E)

Mordechai Cogan

The Bavian Rock Inscription of Sennacherib was chiseled on the walls of the gorge of the Gomei River, whose waters were fed into the Jerwan aqueduct, a major link in the king's project to irrigate the plains surrounding Nineveh. The historical section of the inscription concentrates on the "second campaign" against Babylon that varies from the prism text (where it is numbered the "eighth" and last campaign of the king) in tone; its dispassionate description reflects a sense that Sennacherib's "Babylonian problem" was behind him (Brinkman 1973; Weissert 1997). The date of the events in Babylonia, as determined by the prism inscriptions, is 689 BCE.

The standard introduction praising the gods and king is followed, in an unusual editorial displacement, by a description of the building project commemorated in this inscription. Detailed are the canals and water courses constructed to bring water to the thirsty fields of Nineveh, their dedication and the rewarding of the builders. The king's military undertakings follow.

(lines 34-43) In the same year as the flowing of that canal which I dug, I arrayed the forces in the plain of Halule against Ummannenu king of Elam and the king of Babylon, with the many kings of the mountains and sea who (had come) to their aid. By the word of the god Ashur, the great lord, my lord, I advanced into their midst like a fierce arrow and defeated their armies. I scattered their concentrations (and) I shattered their troops. I took alive in that battle the princes of the king of Elam, together with Nabu-shum-ishkun, son of Merodach-baladan king of Babylon.^a (As for) the king of Elam and the king of Babylon, the fear of my mighty battle overcame them and they defecated in their chariots and they fled back to their lands in order to save their lives. And they did not return, (thinking): Perhaps Sennacherib king of Assyria will become angry and will set out for Elam once again. Fear and terror were poured out over all of Elam and they left their land to save their lives. Like an eagle, they settled on steep mountains; like a pursued bird, their hearts were beating and they did not come down as long as they lived (lit. "until the day of their fate" [i.e., their death]), (nor) did they make war.

(lines 43-54) In my second campaign, I marched quickly against Babylon which I was set upon conquering. Like the onset of a storm I swept, (and) like a fog I enveloped it. I laid siege to that

^a 2Kgs 20:12;
Isa 39:1

^b Gen 6:17-
8:22;
Ps 29:10

city; with mines and siege machines, I personally took it — the spoil of his mighty men, small and great. I left no one. I filled the city squares with their corpses. Shuzubu,¹ king of Babylon, together with his family and his [], I brought alive to my land. I handed out the wealth of that city — silver, gold, precious stones, property and goods — to my people and they made it their own. My men took the (images of the) gods who dwell there and smashed them. They took their property and their wealth. Adad and Shala, the gods of Ekallate, which Marduk-nadin-ahhe, king of Babylon had taken and carried off to Babylon during the reign of Tiglath-pileser (I), king of Assyria, I brought out of Babylon and returned them to their place in Ekallate.

I destroyed and tore down and burned with fire the city (and) its houses, from its foundations to its parapets. I tore out the inner and outer walls, temples, the ziggurat² of brick and earth, as many as there were, and threw them into the Arahtu river. I dug canals through the city and flooded its place with water, destroying the structure of its foundation. I made its devastation greater than that of "the Flood."^b So that in future days, the site of that city, its temples and its gods, would not be identifiable, I completely destroyed it with water and annihilated it like inundated territory.

¹ I.e., Mushezib-Marduk of Bit-Dakkuri; he had seized the throne towards the end of 693 BCE.

² I.e., "temple-tower."

REFERENCES

Luckenbill 1924:78-85; Levine 1982:48-51; Brinkman 1984:63-65, 67-68; Frahm 1996:151-154; Weissert 1997.

ESARHADDON (2.120)

William W. Hallo

Sennacherib's destruction of Babylon (see COS 2.119E) was condemned by the city's later Chaldaean rulers. Nabopolassar, the founder of the Chaldaean Dynasty, declared war on the Assyrians and saw their destruction as just retribution (Gerardi 1986); Nabonidus, the last king of the Dynasty, also considered Sennacherib's assassination as evidence of divine retribution (ANET 309; Beaulieu 1989:105, 115). In much the same spirit, Sennacherib's assassination was juxtaposed with his (failed) siege of Jerusalem in 701 BCE by the biblical author (2 Kgs 19:36f. = Isa 37:37f.) as if to say post hoc ergo propter hoc (Hallo 1999a). Under these circumstances, it was understandable that his son and successor, Esarhaddon (681-669 BCE), marshalled all the physical and spiritual resources of the Assyrian empire to reverse the effects of his father's depredations (Porter 1993). He rebuilt Babylon and, in his inscriptions from and about the city, he went out of his way to express his solicitude for it, and for Marduk, its patron deity. Recension B of his major Babylon inscription includes the following passage ("episode 10" in Borger's edition):

Until the days were elapsed that the heart of the great lord Marduk should be appeased and he would find peace with the country against which he	had raged, 70 years were to elapse, but he wrote [11] years (instead) and took pity and said: Amen!
--	---

This is explained more fully in Recensions A and D as follows:

He (Marduk) had written 70 years as the quantity of its (the city's) exile (lit.: lying fallow) but merciful Marduk — soon his heart was appeased	and he turned the upper into the lower (figure) so that he decreed its resettlement for 11 years.
---	---

The meaning is that the numeral 70, written in cuneiform as 60 + 10, was turned into 11 by the simple device of writing 10 + 60, or rather 10 + 1 (60 and 1 are alike written with a single vertical wedge), i.e. turning the left (= upper in the older direction of cuneiform writing) into the right (= lower) wedge (Shaffer 1981). For other examples of "metathesis of numerals" see Beaulieu 1995. An exile of 70 years is also predicted by Jeremiah (25:12, 29:10), and alluded to in 2 Chr 36:22 = Ezra 1:1, though in fact it proved to be closer to 50 years (Tadmor 1999).

REFERENCES

Borger 1956:15.

5. NEO-BABYLONIAN INSCRIPTIONS

Paul-Alain Beaulieu

After the fall of the Assyrian Empire at the end of the 7th century BCE, power shifted back to Babylon, whose rulers inherited most of the territories formerly ruled by the kings of Assyria. During this relatively short but brilliant period (626-539 BCE) the kings of the Neo-Babylonian dynasty embellished their capital with numerous architectural wonders. They also extensively rebuilt the temples of Babylonia,¹ which had been left in a state of disrepair for centuries because of economic stagnation, civil disorders, and repeated foreign interference. Almost all the inscriptions of the Neo-Babylonian empire are building inscriptions which contain little historical information. In fact two of the inscriptions translated here (COS 2.121, 123A) are among the few such texts which allude to historical events. On the other hand, these inscriptions are of great importance for understanding the culture and religious ideology of that period. They are written in the Standard Babylonian idiom of Akkadian, but display a number of peculiarities derived from their imitation of much older styles of royal inscriptions, in particular the inscriptions of the First Dynasty of Babylon (ca. 1894-1595 BCE). Many of them are written in an archaizing script which imitates the lapidary script of the Old Babylonian period. For many inscriptions two editions are known, one in archaizing, the other in Neo-Babylonian script. In spite of these antiquarian tendencies, Neo-Babylonian building inscriptions display several important innovations, notably the concluding prayer to the deity to whom the inscription is dedicated.²

¹ The essential information on each temple is collected in George 1993. For Babylon itself, see COS 2.120.

² Similar prayers occasionally occur in the inscriptions of the Sargonid kings of Assyria, but they became a regular feature of building inscriptions only during Neo-Babylonian empire.

NABOPOLASSAR (2.121)

NABOPOLASSAR'S RESTORATION OF IMGUR-ENLIL,
THE INNER DEFENSIVE WALL OF BABYLON (2.121)

Paul-Alain Beaulieu

Nabopolassar (626-605 BCE) was the founder of the Neo-Babylonian dynasty. He revolted against the Assyrians, ousted them from Akkad (i.e. Babylonia), and eventually helped the Medes to destroy the Assyrian empire. The following inscription discovered during the Iraqi restoration work on the site of Babylon and first published in 1985 commemorates Nabopolassar's rebuilding of the inner defensive wall of Babylon, the wall Imgur-Enlil "the god Enlil has been favorable."¹ The king also states his humble origins and his defeat of the Assyrians.² This composition is remarkable for its elaborate poetic praise of the wall Imgur-Enlil, for the royal oath recorded in the third section, and finally for its concluding part where the traditional curse against eventual violators has been transformed into a wisdom address to future generations, a theme borrowed from Akkadian pseudo-historical and sapiential literature. It is written in archaizing script.

Royal Titulary (i.1-6)

Nabopolassar, the king of justice, the shepherd called by Marduk, the creature of Nimmenna³ - the supreme lady, the queen of queens - the one to whom Nabû and Tashmêtu⁴ stretch their hand, the prince beloved by Ninshiku.⁵

Royal Autobiography (i.7-ii.5)

When I was young, although I was the son of a nobody, I constantly sought the sanctuaries of Nabû and Marduk my lords. My mind was preoccupied with the establishment of their prescriptions and the complete performance of their rituals. My attention was directed at justice and equity. Shazu,⁶ the lord who fathoms the hearts of the gods of heaven and the netherworld,⁷ who constantly observes the conduct⁸ of mankind, perceived my inner thoughts and elevated me, me the servant who was anonymous among the people, to a high status in the country in which I was born. He called me to the lordship over the country and the people. He caused a benevolent protective spirit to walk at my side. He let (me) succeed in everything I undertook. He caused Nergal, the strongest among the gods, to march at my side; he slew my foes, felled my enemies. The Assyrian, who had ruled Akkad because of divine anger and had, with his heavy yoke, oppressed the inhabitants of the country, I, the weak one, the powerless one, who constantly seeks the lord of lords, with the mighty strength of Nabû and Marduk my lords I removed them⁹ from Akkad and caused (the Babylonians) to throw off their yoke.

Rebuilding of Imgur-Enlil (ii.6-41)

At that time Nabopolassar, king of Babylon, the one who pleases Nabû and Marduk, I, (for) Imgur-Enlil - the great fortification wall of Babylon, the original boundary-post which has been made manifest since olden days, the solid border as ancient as time immemorial, the lofty mountain peak¹⁰ which rivals heavens, the mighty shield which locks the entrance to the hostile lands, the wide enclosure of the Igigi, the spacious courtyard of the Anunnaki, the staircase to heaven, the ladder to the netherworld, the station of Lugalirra and Meslamtae, the outdoor shrine¹¹ of Ishtar the great lady, the place of the throwing stick¹² of Dagan the hero, the camp enclosure of warrior Ninurta, the temple of the divine protection of Anu and Enlil, the shrine artfully designed by Ea the lord of Eridu, the fortification ground of the great gods, whose foundations the Igigi and the Anunnaki had (originally) established in the jubilation of their hearts, (whose work) they had artfully carried out (and which) they had raised to its top, (which) because of old ¹ For a history of the walls of Babylon, Imgur-Enlil and Nemetti-Enlil, see George 1992:343-351.

² The chronology of Nabopolassar's war against the Assyrians in Babylonia is discussed in Beaulieu 1997:367-394.

³ Lit., "the lady of the tiara," a mother goddess at home in southern Babylonia, mostly Ur and Uruk. This might point to Nabopolassar's southern origin.

⁴ The consort of the god Nabû.

⁵ A name of the god Ea/Enki, the god of wisdom, magic, and of the Apsu (the subterranean waters). Ea/Enki was at home in Eridu, located in the southernmost area of Iraq. This might also indicate Nabopolassar's southern origin.

⁶ A name of the god Marduk which means "he who knows the heart."

⁷ This is an explanation of the name Shazu, which also occurs in the Babylonian Epic of Creation, Tablet VII, line 35.

⁸ The word is takkaltu, perhaps to be emended to tallaktu "way, conduct." See al-Rawi 1985:6-7, note to col. i.16.

⁹ Namely, the Assyrians, referred to in the singular in the preceding verses.

¹⁰ For a different interpretation see al-Rawi 1985:7, note to col. ii.11. I follow CAD G s.v. ginû B.

¹¹ The word ibratu refers to outdoor shrines, probably niches located on the street or in private courtyards. Topographical descriptions of Babylon mention 180 such shrines of Ishtar in the capital (George 1992:68-69, line 86).

¹² Since the word ilpanu, translated here as "throwing stick," can also denote the bow in late royal inscriptions (AHw s.v.), it is possible that this passage refers to the battlements on the wall from which the soldiers threw spears and javelins at the besieging enemy.

age had weakened and caved in, whose walls had been taken away¹³ because of rain and heavy downpours (and) whose foundations had heaped up and accumulated into a mound of ruins — I levied the troops of Enlil, Shamash and Marduk, had (them) wield the hoe, imposed (on them) the corvée basket. From the bank of the Arahtu canal, (on) the upper side near the gate of Ishtar, down to the (other) bank of the Arahtu canal, (on) the lower side near the gate of Urash, I removed its accumulated debris, surveyed and examined its old foundations, and laid its brickwork in the original location. On the edge of the netherworld I established its base. I surrounded the east bank with a mighty mountainous belt.¹⁴

Burying the Foundation Deposit (iii.1-21)

Nabopolassar, the humble one, the submissive one, the worshiper of Nabû and Marduk, the shepherd who pleases Papnunanki,¹⁵ the one who inspects the old foundations of Babylon, the one who discovers (inscribed) brick(s) from the past,¹⁶ the one who carries out the work on the original, eternal foundations, the one who wields the hoe of the Igigi, the one who carries the corvée basket of the Anunnaki, the builder of Imgur-Enlil for Marduk my lord, I, in order that no future king whosoever remove my well chosen words (and) in order that no words are made to supersede my speech, I swore the oath of Marduk, my lord, and of Shamash, my god: "(Woe on me) if my utterances are not true, but false!"¹⁷ At that time I found the royal statue of one of my predecessors who had rebuilt that wall and, in a secure place, in the great foundations, together with my own statue, I placed (it) for eternity.

Wisdom Address to Future Generations (iii.22-36)

Any king, at any time, whether a son or a grandson who will succeed me, (and) whose name Marduk will call to rulership of the country, do not be concerned¹⁸ with feats of might and power. Seek the sanctuaries of Nabû and Marduk and let them slay your enemies. The lord Marduk examines utterances and scrutinizes the heart. He who is loyal to Bēl,¹⁹ his foundations will endure. He who is loyal to the son of Bēl²⁰ will last for eternity. When that wall becomes dilapidated and you relieve its disrepair, in the same manner as I found the inscription of a king who preceded me and did not alter its location, find my own inscription and place it with your inscription. By the command of Marduk the great lord, whose command is not revoked, may your fame be established forever.

¹³ The verb ut-ta-as-sá-ú must be a Dt stem of nesá, previously unattested for this root.

¹⁴ Al-Rawi emended this passage from e-bi-iš dan-num to e-pé-šum! dan-num, but this seems unnecessary. Different interpretations of e-bi-iš have since been offered: George 1991 ("cincture, belt") and Farber 1991 ("mount Ebih, mountain"). I follow Vanstiphout 1991, who posits a deliberate ambiguity. This ambiguity is already expressed in the Sum. composition Isanna and Ebih. It should be noted that the interpretation of ebih as a proper noun (mount Ebih) solely because it lacks an ending is not mandatory in consideration of the occurrence of several endless nouns in the same text (e.g. col. i.17: ib-rat šá INNIN šar-rat ra-bi-tim).

¹⁵ A name of Zarpanitu, the wife of Marduk, who was also known under the designation Bēliya "my lady."

¹⁶ The phrase mušā libiti ša waḫrātū means lit. "who discovers the brick(s) of the future," but in this context (w)ahṛātu must mean "past." Akk. expressions of remote time usually apply to both past and future, but this is the first occurrence of (w)ahṛātu referring to the past. Al-Rawi emends to ma!-aḫ-ra-tim, but this does not seem necessary.

¹⁷ This oath formula recalls very similar oaths found in the inscriptions of Rīmush and Manishtūshu, the two sons and successors of Sargon of Akkad, nearly two millennia earlier. Is it possible that Nabopolassar is here emulating an inscription of one of these rulers found during the restoration of Imgur-Enlil, and that it is the same ruler of whom he claims to have discovered a statue? Building activities in Babylon are mentioned as early as the reign of Shar-kali-šarri, who claims to have built the temples of Anuñtu and Ilaba in KÁ.DINGIR.KI.

¹⁸ The shift from third to second person, and vice versa (COS 2.123A, n. 21), is customary in this type of address.

¹⁹ Bēl, literally "lord," is a name of Marduk.

²⁰ The son of Bēl is presumably Nabû, the son and vizier of Marduk and patron god of Borsippa.

REFERENCES

Text: Al-Rawi 1985; Farber 1991; George 1991a; 1991b; Vanstiphout 1991; Beaulieu 1997.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR II (2.122)

NEBUCHADNEZZAR II'S RESTORATION OF THE EBABBAR TEMPLE IN LARSA (2.122A)

Paul-Alain Beaulieu

This inscription is recorded on several clay cylinders and baked bricks found at Larsa, all written in Neo-Babylonian script. It commemorates the rebuilding of Ebabbar, the temple of the sun god Shamash at Larsa, by Nebuchadnezzar II (605-562 BCE), the son and successor of Nabopolassar and the real architect of Neo-Babylonian hegemony.

Nabonidus restored Ebabbar again in his 10th regnal year (546-45 BCE). He claims that Nebuchadnezzar did not find the original foundation deposit before rebuilding the temple, this being apparently the reason why it quickly fell into disrepair. Nebuchadnezzar's inscription is indeed ominously silent concerning the finding of a foundation deposit, but insists that the god Marduk directly ordered him to restore the temple. The Sippar cylinder of Nabonidus, translated below (COS 2.123A), makes the same observation for the other temple of Shamash, the Ebabbar of Sippar. The inscription follows the standard Neo-Babylonian pattern, with the royal titulary in first position (royal name — epithets — anaku "I"), then the description of the building work with its surrounding circumstances (clauses inu "when" and ina ūmišu "at that time"), and the concluding prayer.

Royal titulary (i.1-6)

Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, the humble one, the submissive one, the pious one, the worshiper of the lord of lords, the caretaker of Esagil and Ezida, the legitimate heir of Nabopolassar, king of Babylon, I,

Rebuilding of Ebabbar (i.7-ii.11) when Marduk, the great lord, the wisest among the gods, the proud one, gave me the shepherdship of the country and the people, at that time Ebabbar, the temple of Shamash in Larsa, which since distant days had turned into a mound of ruins, in whose midst sand had accumulated and (whose) ground plan could no longer be identified, during my reign the great lord Marduk became reconciled to that temple. He aroused the four winds and removed the sand inside it so that the ground plan could be discovered. He specifically ordered me, Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, the servant who worships him, to restore that temple. I surveyed and inspected its old foundations, spread consecrated soil above its old foundations and set up its brickwork. Ebabbar, the legitimate temple (and) residence of Shamash, my lord, for Shamash, who dwells in Ebabbar in the midst of Larsa, the great lord, my lord, did I rebuild.

Concluding prayer to Shamash (ii.12-26)

O Shamash, great lord, when you enter Ebabbar, your lordly seat, in joy and gladness, look joyfully upon the work of my gracious hands, and may a life of distant days, the stability of the throne, the long duration of my reign (and) [the defeat of my enemies]¹ be set (for me) on your lips. May the thresholds, the locks, the bolts (and) the doors of Ebabbar, without ceasing, speak of me favorably in your presence.

¹ The passage between brackets appears only in the Yale exemplar published as YOS 9:140.

REFERENCES

Text: I R, plate 51, no.2 (copy); Stephens 1937:35-36; Langdon 1912:96-97; Berger 1973:249-251. Translations: Seux 1976:510; Foster 1993 2:746.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR II'S RESTORATION OF E-URIMIN-ANKIA,
THE ZIGGURAT OF BORSIPPA (2.122B)

Paul-Alain Beaulieu

This inscription is recorded on clay cylinders found in the ruins of the ziggurat of Borsippa. Duplicates are known in both Neo-Babylonian and archaizing scripts. Like the preceding, this inscription follows the standard Neo-Babylonian pattern, but the inu clause has been expanded to include a review of the previous building works of Nebuchadnezzar dedicated to the gods Marduk and Nabû, the patron deities of the Neo-Babylonian dynasty.

Royal titulary (i.1-9)

Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, the loyal shepherd, the one permanently selected by Marduk, the exalted ruler, the one beloved by Nabû, the wise expert who is attentive to the ways of the gods, the tireless governor, the caretaker of Esagil and Ezida, the foremost heir of Nabopolassar, king of Babylon, I,

Previous work on the shrines of Marduk and Nabû
(i.10-26)

when Marduk, my great lord, duly created me and ordered me to take care of him, Nabû, the administrator of the totality of heaven and the netherworld, put in my hands the just scepter. (In) Esagil, the temple of heaven and the netherworld, the residence of the Enlil¹ of the gods, Marduk, (and) Eumusha, his lordly cella, I applied shining gold (glaze) instead of plaster. Ezida² I built anew and with silver, gold, choice gems, copper, musukkan-nu-wood (and) cedar-wood, I completed its work. E-temen-anki, the ziggurat of Babylon, I rebuilt (and) completed and with glazed bricks of pure blue color I raised it to its summit.

¹ Enlil was the head of the pantheon before Marduk usurped that position at the end of the second millennium BCE, after which the title "Enlil of the gods" was commonly applied to the latter to celebrate his role as king of the gods.

Rebuilding of E-urimin-ankia (i.27-ii.15)

At that time E-urimin-ankia, the ziggurat of Borsippa, which a former king had built and elevated to forty-two cubits but had not raised to its summit, (which) since remote days had fallen into ruins and whose drainage openings had not been kept in order, whose brickwork rain and downpours had taken away, whose covering of glazed bricks had become dismantled and the brickwork of whose cella had accumulated into a mound of debris, Marduk, my great lord, prompted me to rebuild it. I did not change its location and did not alter its foundations. In a propitious month, on an auspicious day, I (began to) repair the destroyed brickwork of its cella and its destroyed glazed bricks

aExo432:32-33; Isa 4:3

covering (and to) set back up its ruined portions, and I placed my own inscription in its repaired parts. (Then) I began to rebuild it and to raise it to its summit. [I built it anew as in olden times, I raised it to its summit as in days of yore].³

Concluding prayer to Nabû (ii.16-31)

O Nabû, legitimate heir, exalted vizier, pre-eminent one, beloved by Marduk, look joyfully (and) favorably upon my deeds and grant me as a gift a long life, satiety with extreme old age, stability of throne, long duration of reign, defeat of adversaries, (and) conquest of the land of the enemies. On your reliable writing board which establishes the border of heaven and the netherworld, decree the lengthening of my days, inscribe for me extreme old age.⁴ Cause my deeds to find acceptance before Marduk, the king of heaven and the netherworld, the father your begetter. Speak favorably on my behalf, (and) let (these words) be set on your lips: "Nebuchadnezzar is indeed the king (who is) a caretaker!"⁵

² The temple of the god Nabû in the city of Borsippa.
³ The passage between brackets, though apparently essential to complete this section, appears in only one of the duplicates. It is possible that this expanded version was written after the actual rebuilding of the temple, while the others may have been composed before and served primarily as foundation deposits, which were of course put in the foundations before the rebuilding began.
⁴ Nabû is hailed here as the god of the scribal art, who holds the "tablets of destinies" on which are inscribed the fates of all individuals. Cf. Paul 1973.
⁵ Seux (1976:512, n. 1) argues for translating this as a precativ: "May Nebuchadnezzar be a king (who is) a caretaker." Foster (1993 2:744) prefers an asseverative meaning "Nebuchadnezzar is surely a provident king," and this indeed fits the context better.

REFERENCES

Text: I R, plate 51, no.1 (copy); Berger 1973:270-272; Translations: Langdon 1912:98-101; Seux 1976:511-512; Foster 1993 2:744.

NABONIDUS 2.123

THE SIPPAR CYLINDER OF NABONIDUS (2.123A)

Paul-Alain Beaulieu

This long and complex inscription occurs in several exemplars and fragmentary duplicates, all clay cylinders inscribed in Neo-Babylonian script and found in the remains of the Ebabbar temple in Sippar. One exemplar was found in Babylon, in the so-called "palace museum," along with many older inscriptions removed from their original contexts; it is now preserved in Berlin. The inscription commemorates the rebuilding of three temples by Nabonidus (556-539 BCE), the last king of Babylon, and it dates after Nabonidus' return from northern Arabia in his thirteenth regnal year. The first section, devoted to the rebuilding of Ehulhul, is remarkable for its direct historical allusions to the war between the Persians and the Medes. This war resulted in the victory of Cyrus, who was very probably Nabonidus' ally before he turned against him and conquered the Neo-Babylonian empire in the fall of 539 BCE. The second section is devoted to the Ebabbar temple of Sippar, which was restored in the third year of Nabonidus. It is a new, shorter edition of the building inscription originally composed for that occasion. Finally the third section is devoted to the rebuilding of Eulmash, the temple of the goddess Anunîtu, a form of Ishtar, in Sippar-Anunîtu. The entire inscription was probably composed on the occasion of the rebuilding of Eulmash.

Royal titulary (i.1-7)

I, Nabonidus, the great king, the strong king, the king of the universe, the king of Babylon, the king of the four corners, the caretaker of Esagil and Ezida, for whom Sin and Ningal in his mother's womb decreed a royal fate as his destiny,⁶ the son of Nabû-balâssu-iqbi, the wise prince, the worshiper of the great gods,¹ I,²

a Jer 1:4-5

Rebuilding of Ehulhul in Harran (i.8-ii.25)

Ehulhul, the temple of Sin in Harran, where since days of yore Sin, the great lord, had established his favorite residence - (then) his heart became angry against that city and temple and he aroused the Mede, destroyed that temple and turned it into ruins³ - in my legitimate reign Bêl (and) the great lord, for the love of my kingship, became reconciled with that city and temple and showed compassion.⁴ In the beginning of my everlasting reign they sent me a dream, Marduk, the great lord, and Sin, the luminary of heaven and the netherworld, stood together.⁵ Marduk spoke with me: "Nabonidus, king of Babylon, carry bricks on your riding horse, rebuild Ehulhul and cause Sin, the great lord, to establish his residence in its midst." Reverently I spoke to the Enlil of the gods, Marduk: "That temple which you ordered (me) to build, the Mede surrounds it and his might is excessive."⁶ But Marduk spoke with me: "The Mede whom you mentioned, he, his country and the kings who march at his side will be no more." At the beginning of the third year they aroused him, Cyrus, the king of Anshan, his second in rank.⁷ He scattered the vast Median hordes with his small army. He captured Astyages, the king of the Medes, and took him to his country as captive. (Such was) the word of the great lord Marduk and of Sin, the luminary of heaven and the netherworld, whose command is not revoked. I feared their august command, I became troubled, I was worried and my face showed signs of anxiety. I was not neglectful, nor remiss, nor careless. For rebuilding Ehulhul, the temple of Sin, my lord, who marches at my side, which is in Harran, which Assurbanipal, king of Assyria, son of Esarhaddon, king of Assyria, a prince who preceded me, had rebuilt, I mustered my numerous troops, from the country of Gaza on the border of Egypt, (near) the Upper Sea⁸ on the other side of the Euphrates, to the Lower Sea,⁹ the kings, princes, governors and my numerous troops which Sin, Shamash and Ishtar my lords had entrusted to me, (and) in a propitious month, on an auspicious day, which Shamash and Adad revealed to me by means of divination, by the wisdom of Ea and Asalluhi, with the craft of the exorcist, according to the art of Kulla, the lord of foundations and brickwork, upon (beads of) silver (and) gold, choice gems, logs of resinous woods, aromatic herbs (and cuts of) cedar (wood), in joy and gladness, on the foundation deposit of Assurbanipal, king of Assyria, who had found the foundation deposit of Shalmaneser,¹⁰ the son of Assurnasirpal, I cleared its foundations and laid its brickwork. I mixed its mortar with beer, wine, oil and honey and anointed its excavation ramps with it. More than the kings my fathers (had done), I strengthened its building and perfected its work. That temple from its foundations to its parapet I built anew and completed its work. Beams of lofty cedar ¹ These two epithets refer to the father of Nabonidus, Nabû-balâssu-iqbi, who does not appear in ancient sources outside his son's inscriptions.

5 Isa 42:1;
45:1

² The prologue with the royal titulary adheres to the pattern andku - royal titulary - andku, also found in some inscriptions of Assurbanipal. The restoration of Ehulhul is also recorded in the inscriptions of that king, and not surprisingly many coincidences of wording between them and the present inscription can be detected. Nabonidus in fact mentions that he discovered the old foundation deposits of Assurbanipal during the excavations of Ehulhul.

³ The Medes, who allied themselves with Nabopolassar, the founder of the Neo-Babylonian dynasty, to overthrow the Assyrian empire in the last quarter of the 7th century, are presented here as the agents of divine wrath. Another inscription of Nabonidus informs us that in 610 BCE they sacked the city of Harran, which had become the last stronghold of Assyrian resistance after the fall of Nineveh two years earlier.

⁴ Here the British Museum exemplar has "EN EN GAL-û "Bêl, the great lord," which is the common name of Marduk, while the Berlin exemplar has "EN.ZU EN GAL-û "Sin, the great lord." This variant was very probably intentional, providing one more example of Nabonidus trying to assimilate Marduk to Sin. In addition, the verbs is-li-mu and ir-šu-û ta-a-a-ri in that same sentence are plural: "they became reconciled and showed mercy." Therefore the sequence "EN/EN.ZU EN GAL-û" must be interpreted as "Bêl/Sin (and) the great lord," the "great lord" being Sin in one exemplar, and Marduk in the other. In the following passage Sin and Marduk indeed act as one deity.

⁵ This passage probably refers to an astronomical conjunction of the moon (the god Sin) and the planet Jupiter, identified in Babylonia with the god Marduk. An actual astronomical observation need not be involved, however, since conjunctions of celestial bodies seen in dreams possessed equal significance. Cf. Oppenheim 1956:202f.

⁶ The region of Harran was evidently still under Median control at the time of Nabonidus' accession to the throne.

⁷ The interpretation of Cyrus' epithet is uncertain. The Akkadian reads IR-su qa-ah-ri (arassu qahri), lit. "his young servant." CAD (§ 182, s.v. sihru) proposes the following translation: "Cyrus, king of Anshan, his (Astyages') subject, the second (of his name)." Seux (1969:228-229) follows CAD and translates the passage as follows: "ils (= Marduk et Sin) dressèrent contre lui Cyrus II, roi d'Anzan, son vassal, et avec son armée réduite il mit en pièces l'immense (armée des) Mèdes." However, the evidence that qahri means "the second" is tenuous, and the more common meaning "servant, subordinate," seems more appropriate. The old theory that Cyrus is presented here as the servant of Marduk (and Sin), providing a possible parallel to Isaiah 42:1, seems difficult to uphold, mainly because the two gods act together and are grammatically the subjects of plural verbs, while the possessive pronoun suffixed to ardu "servant" (arassu) is singular. This, however, should not be viewed as impossible considering the other ambiguities deliberately embedded in this narrative. Another difficulty arises on the biblical side, since it is by no means assured that God's "servant" in Isaiah 42:1 is Cyrus. The expression refers, more likely, to Israel as God's servant. However, Cyrus is directly mentioned in Isaiah 45:1 as the instrument of God's will, in the same manner as he is the agent of the gods Marduk and Sin in the Sippar cylinder.

⁸ This is the Mesopotamian designation for the Mediterranean Sea.

⁹ This is the designation for the Persian Gulf.

¹⁰ Shalmaneser III, son of Assurnasirpal II, reigned as king of Assyria from 858 to 824 BCE. For his inscriptions, see COS 2.113A-H.

trees, a product of Lebanon,¹¹ I set up above it.¹² Doors of cedar wood, whose scent is pleasing, I affixed at its gates. With gold and silver (glaze) I coated its walls and made it shine like the sun. I set up in its chapel a 'wild bull' of shining silver alloy, fiercely attacking my foes. At the Gate of Sunrise I set up two 'long-haired heroes'¹³ coated with silver,¹⁴ destroyers of my enemies,¹⁴ one to the left, one to the right. I led Sin, Ningal, Nusku and Sadarnunna my lords in procession from Babylon my royal city and, in joy and gladness, I caused them to dwell in its midst, a dwelling of enjoyment. I performed in their presence a pure sacrifice of glorification, presented my gifts and filled Ehulhul with the finest products, and I made the city of Harran, in its totality, as brilliant as moonlight.

Prayer to Sin (ii.26-43a)

O Sin, king of the gods of heaven and the netherworld, without whom no city or country can be founded, (nor) be restored, when you enter Ehulhul, the dwelling of your plenitude, may good recommendations for that city and that temple be set on your lips. May the gods who dwell in heaven and the netherworld constantly praise the temple of Sin, the father their creator. As for me, Nabonidus, king of Babylon, who completed that temple, may Sin, the king of the gods of heaven and the netherworld, joyfully cast his favorable look upon me and every month, in rising and setting,¹⁵ make my ominous signs favorable. May he lengthen my days, extend my years, make my reign firm, conquer my enemies, annihilate those hostile to me, destroy my foes. May Ningal, the mother of the great gods, speak favorably before Sin, her beloved, on my behalf. May Shamash and Ishtar, his shining offspring,¹⁶ recommend me favorably to Sin, the father their creator. May Nusku, the august vizier, hear my prayer and intercede (for me).

Burying the foundation deposit (ii.43b-46)

The inscription written in the name of Assurbani-pal, king of Assyria, I found and did not alter. I

c. Judg 9:15;
Isa 2:13;
14:8; Ps
29:5; 104:16

anointed (it) with oil, performed a sacrifice, placed it with my own inscription and returned it to its (original) place.

Rebuilding of Ebabbar in Sippar (ii.47-iii.7)

For Shamash, the judge of heaven and the netherworld, (concerning) Ebabbar, his temple which is in Sippar, which Nebuchadnezzar, a former king, had rebuilt and whose old foundation deposit he had looked for but not found - (yet) he rebuilt that temple and after forty-five years the walls of that temple had sagged¹⁷ - I became troubled, I became fearful, I was worried and my face showed signs of anxiety. While I led Shamash out of its midst (and) caused (him) to dwell in another sanctuary, I removed (the debris) of that temple, looked for its old foundation deposit, dug to a depth of eighteen cubits into the ground and (then) Shamash, the great lord, revealed to me (the original foundations of) Ebabbar, the temple (which is) his favorite dwelling, (by disclosing) the foundation deposit of Narām-Sin, son of Sargon, which no king among my predecessors had found in three thousand and two hundred years.¹⁸ In the month Tashritu, in a propitious month, on an auspicious day, which Shamash and Adad revealed to me by means of divination, upon (beads of) silver (and) gold, choice gems, logs of resinous woods, aromatic herbs (and cuts of) cedar (wood), in joy and gladness, on the foundation deposit of Narām-Sin, son of Sargon, not a finger's breadth too wide or too narrow, I laid its brickwork. Five thousand massive (beams of) cedar wood I set up for its roofing. Lofty doors of cedar wood, thresholds and pivots I affixed at its gates. Ebabbar, together with E-kun-ankuga its ziggurat, I built anew and completed its work. I led Shamash, my lord, in procession and, in joy and gladness, I caused him to dwell in the midst of his favorite dwelling.

Burying the foundation deposit (iii.8-10)

The inscription in the name of Narām-Sin,¹⁹ son of Sargon, I found and did not alter. I anointed (it) with oil, made offerings, placed (it) with my own inscription and returned it to its (original) place.

¹¹ That is to say, for the roofing.

¹² On the identification of this mythological being as a "long-haired hero" see Green RIA 8:248-249; also Black and Green 1992:115.

¹³ The meaning of the word ēšmarū is uncertain. It refers either to a type of silver or to a silver alloy. See CAD E, s.v.

¹⁴ It is uncertain whether the phrases "fiercely attacking my foes" and "destroyers of my enemies" are just epithets or describe the posture in which these mythological beings were depicted. They could also be names given to the statues.

¹⁵ A similar statement concerning Sin of Harran occurs in the Neo-Assyrian letter SAA 10:13. It is uncertain whether the daily rising and setting of the moon is meant. The expression ina niphī u rībi could refer in this case to the beginning and end of the month, which were of particular ominous significance in Mesopotamia.

¹⁶ Lit. "the offspring of his luminous womb."

¹⁷ Nabonidus is stressing the fact that failure to find the original foundation deposit before laying the new foundations of the temple led to its premature fall into disrepair.

¹⁸ Narām-Sin reigned, according to the commonly accepted chronology, between ca. 2254 and 2218 BCE. The figure given by Nabonidus is therefore erroneous by some fifteen hundred years. He was the grandson (not son) of Sargon of Akkad. Cf. above, COS 2.90-91.

¹⁹ In ii.57 the name Narām-Sin: "the one beloved by Sin," is written 'na-ra-am-š30; in ii.64: 'na-ra-am-š30; and here, in ii.8: 'na-ra-am-DINGIR. The appellation DINGIR, Akk. ilu "god" for the moon-god is occasionally attested in Mesopotamian religious texts, but it became especially popular with Nabonidus, who made it a component of his theological reform.

Prayer to Shamash (iii.11-21)

O Shamash, great lord of heaven and the netherworld, light of the gods your fathers, offspring of Sin and Ningal, when you enter Ebabbar your beloved temple, when you take up residence in your eternal dais, look joyfully upon me, Nabonidus, king of Babylon, the prince your caretaker, the one who pleases you (and) built your august chapel, (and) upon my good deeds, and every day at sunrise and sunset, in the heavens and on the earth, make my omens favorable, accept my supplications and receive my prayers. (With) the scepter and the legitimate staff which you placed in my hands may I rule forever.

Rebuilding of Eulmash in Sippar-Anunītu (iii.22-38a)

For Anunītu — the lady of warfare, who carries the bow and the quiver, who fulfills the command of Enlil her father, who annihilates the enemy, who destroys the evil one, who precedes the gods, who, at sunrise and sunset, causes my (ominous) signs to be favorable — I excavated, surveyed and inspected the old foundations of Eulmash, her temple which is in Sippar-Anunītu, which for eight hundred years, since the time of Shagarakti-Shuriash,²⁰ king of Babylon, son of Kudur-Enlil, no king had rebuilt, and on the foundation deposit of Shagarakti-Shuriash, son of Kudur-Enlil, I cleared its foundations and laid its brickwork. I built that temple anew and completed its work. Anunītu, the lady of warfare, who fulfills the command of Enlil her father, who annihilates the enemy, who destroys the evil one, who precedes the gods, I caused her to establish her residence. The regular offerings and the (other) offerings I increased over what they were and I established for her.

Prayer to Anunītu (iii.38b-42)

As for you, O Anunītu, great lady, when you joyfully enter that temple, look joyfully upon my good deeds and every month, at sunrise and sunset, petition Sin, the father your begetter, for favors on my behalf.

Burying the foundation deposit and address to future generations (iii.43-51)

Whoever you are whom Sin and Shamash will call to kingship and in whose reign that temple will fall into disrepair and who will build it anew, may he²¹ find the inscription written in my name and not alter (it). May he anoint (it) with oil, perform a sacrifice, place it with the inscription written in his own name and return it to its (original) place. May Shamash and Anunītu hear his supplication, receive his utterance, march at his side, annihilate his enemy (and) daily speak good recommendations on his behalf to Sin, the father their creator.

²⁰ Shagarakti-Shuriash, son of Kudur-Enlil, belonged to the Kassite dynasty. He reigned between ca. 1245 and 1233 BCE. The time distance given by Nabonidus is erroneous by one century.

²¹ The change of person is here from second to third, while in the inscription of Nabopolassar translated above (COS 2.121, n. 18) the change was from third to second.

REFERENCES

Text BM exemplar: V R, plate 64 (master copy); Berlin Museum exemplar: VS 1, no. 53 (copy); Langdon 1912:218-229; Berger 1973:371-375. Translations: Seux 1976:518; Beaulieu 1989:34, 107-108, 210-211, 214; Foster 1993 2:755.

NABONIDUS' REBUILDING OF E-LUGAL-GALGA-SISA,
THE ZIGGURAT OF UR (2.123B)

Paul-Alain Beaulieu

This inscription, recorded on several clay cylinders found at Ur in the remains of the ziggurat, is probably the last building inscription of Nabonidus. It attests to the intensity of the king's personal devotion to the moon god Sin, and to his attempt to impose him as supreme deity of the Neo-Babylonian empire. Sin is praised as "king/lord of the gods of heaven and the netherworld," a position normally reserved for Marduk, and as "'gods' of the gods," an innovative title which reveals the king's fervor and theological boldness. Sin is also consistently referred to as 'gods,' a plural formation which recalls the designation elohim for the god of Israel. The inscription refers to the original builders of the ziggurat, Ur-Nammu and his son Shulgi, the first two rulers of the third dynasty of Ur (reigned ca. 2112-2095 and ca. 2094-2047 BCE; cf. COS 2.138-139). Nabonidus indirectly quotes their foundation deposits which he allegedly discovered during the excavation of the ziggurat. Although the inscriptions and year names of Ur-Nammu refer to his building works in Ur, no surviving inscription of his or of his son Shulgi specifically refers to the building of E-lugal-galga-sisa. The prayer to Sin which concludes the inscription mentions Belshazzar (Bēl-šar-ušur), Nabonidus' son and heir to the throne, who appears in many business and administrative transactions from his reign. All known copies of this inscription are written in Neo-Babylonian script.

Royal titulary (i.1-4)

Nabonidus, king of Babylon, caretaker of Esagil and Ezida, worshiper of the great gods, I,

Rebuilding of the ziggurat (i.5-ii.2)

E-lugal-galga-sisa, the ziggurat of Egishnugal,¹ which is in Ur, which Ur-Nammu, one of the kings who preceded me, had built but not completed (and) whose work his son Shulgi had completed, (for) in the inscriptions of Ur-Nammu and Shulgi his son I read that Ur-Nammu had built that ziggurat but not completed it (and that) Shulgi his son had completed its work, now that ziggurat had become old and on the ancient foundations which Ur-Nammu and Shulgi his son had built, that ziggurat, as in former times, with bitumen and baked bricks I repaired its damaged parts and for Sin, the lord of the gods of heaven and the netherworld, the king of the gods, the 'gods' of the gods, who dwells in the great heavens, the lord of Egish-

a Dan 5

nugal, which is in Ur, my lord, I built anew.

Prayer to Sin (ii.3-31)

O Sin, my lord 'gods',² king of the gods of heaven and the netherworld, 'gods' of the gods, who dwells in the great heavens, when you joyfully enter that temple, may good recommendations for Esagil, Ezida, Egishnugal, the temples of your great godhead,³ be set on your lips, and instill reverence for your great godhead (in) the hearts of its⁴ people so that they do not sin against your great godhead. May their foundations be as firm as heaven. As for me, Nabonidus, king of Babylon, save me from sinning against your great godhead and grant me as a present a life of long days, and as for Belshazzar,⁵ "the eldest son my offspring, instill reverence for your great godhead (in) his heart and may he not commit any cultic mistake, may he be satiated with a life of plenitude.

¹ The temple complex of the moon god in Ur.

² ii.3 reads as follows: *30 be-Il DINGIR.MEŠ. Although this has so far always been translated as "O Sin, lord of the gods," the text clearly says "O Sin, my lord 'gods'." The compound "lord of the gods" should be written be-el DINGIR.MEŠ or EN DINGIR.MEŠ, as is the case earlier in the inscription. The plural designation DINGIR.MEŠ, Akk. ilā, ilī or ilāni, is occasionally attested for the moon god Sin in Mesopotamian texts. Nabonidus favored it for its obvious monotheizing connotations. It should be noted that in the duplicate discovered at Ur during the 1960-61 season the same line reads *30 EN DINGIR.MEŠ (ii.5), providing one more case of Nabonidus deliberately creating ambiguities to illustrate a theological point, since the logogram EN can be read bēl "my lord" as well as bēl "lord of (the gods)" in the construct state. The ambiguity is also increased by the fact that in the somewhat artificial idiom of Neo-Babylonian building inscriptions the spelling be-li could also be understood as a frozen form borrowed from OB building inscriptions, but without its original grammatical function.

³ By attributing Esagil and Ezida, the temples of Marduk and Nabū, to the god Sin, Nabonidus is proposing a syncretism between the three deities and an outright usurpation of Marduk's prerogatives by the moon god.

⁴ UN.MEŠ-šū, where the pronoun refers either to the temple(s) mentioned before, or to Nabonidus, or to the "godhead" of Sin (with šū for šā). Another possibility is to understand šū as a logogram for kīššan, in which case UN.MEŠ šū would mean "the people of the universe."

⁵ Belshazzar appears in Dan 5 as the son of Nebuchadnezzar, though he was in reality the son of Nabonidus.

REFERENCES

Text: I R, plate 68, no.1 (master copy); Langdon 1912:250-253; As-Siwani 1964; Berger 1973:355-359; Translations: Seux 1976:521; Beaulieu 1989:35-37, 61-62; Foster 1993 2:756.

6. ACHAEMENID INSCRIPTIONS

CYRUS

CYRUS CYLINDER (2.124)

Mordechai Cogan

The Cyrus cylinder (BM 90920 + BIN II, n. 32), discovered at Babylon in 1879, has been of continuing interest for the light it sheds on Persian imperial policy towards subject peoples as reflected in its description of the restoration of the cult of Marduk in Babylon. The biblical report of the permission granted by Cyrus to rebuild the temple of YHWH in Jerusalem (Ezra 1:1-6; 6:1-5; 2 Chr 36:22-23) is considered another example of this practice (cf. Kuhrt 1983). In the cuneiform text, Cyrus reviews the history of his rise to kingship in Babylon at the summons of Marduk, who, in response to evil deeds of Nabonidus, acted to save his city. Cyrus renewed the fortunes of the enslaved Babylonians and restored the neglected cult centers of the land. The dedicatory nature of the inscription, which follows traditional Mesopotamian patterns of composition, was only recently clarified with the joining of a fragment to the end of the text which describes the restoration of the fortifications of Babylon (Berger 1975). The Cyrus cylinder is evidence for the continuity of the Babylonian scribal tradition under the Persians, whose rule was welcomed and supported by the native elite.

(lines 3-8) An incompetent person was installed to exercise lordship over his country. [...] he imposed upon them.¹ An imitation of Esagila² he ma[de ?], for Ur and the rest of the sacred centers, improper rituals [] daily he recited. Irreverently, he put an end to the regular offerings; he [], he established in the sacred centers. By his own plan, he did away with³ the worship of Marduk, the king of the gods; he continually did evil against his (Marduk's) city. Daily, [without interruption ...], he [imposed] the corvée upon its inhabitants unrelentingly, ruining them all.

(lines 9-19) Upon (hearing) their cries, the lord of the gods became furiously angry [and he left] their borders; and the gods who lived among them forsook their dwellings, angry that he had brought (them) into Babylon. Marduk [] turned (?) towards all the habitations that were abandoned and all the people of Sumer and Akkad who had become corpses; [he was reconciled and had mercy (upon them)]. He surveyed and looked throughout all the lands, searching for a righteous king whom he would support. He called out his name:⁴ Cyrus, king of Anshan;⁵ he pronounced his name to be king over all (the world). He (Marduk) made the land of Gutium and all the Umman-manda⁶ bow in submission at his feet. And he (Cyrus) shepherded with justice and righteousness all the black-headed people, over whom he (Marduk) had given him victory. Marduk, the great lord, guardian (?) of his people, looked with gladness upon his good deeds and upright heart. He ordered him to march to his city Babylon. He set him on the road to Babylon and like a companion and friend, he went at his side. His vast army, whose number, like the water of the river, cannot be known, marched at his side fully armed. He made him enter his city Babylon without fighting or battle;⁶ he saved Babylon from hardship. He delivered Nabonidus, the king who did not revere him, into his hands. All the people of Babylon, all the land of Sumer and Akkad, princes and governors, bowed to him and kissed his feet. They rejoiced at his kingship and their faces shone. Ruler by whose aid the dead were revived and who had all been redeemed from hardship and difficulty,⁷ they greeted him with gladness and praised his name.

a Isa 44:28;
45:1-4

(lines 20-22a) I am Cyrus, king of the world, great king, mighty king, king of Babylon, king of Sumer and Akkad, king of the four quarters, son of Cambyses, great king, king of Anshan, grandson of Cyrus, great king, king of Anshan, descendant of Teispes, great king, king of Anshan, (of an) eternal line of kingship, whose rule Bel (i.e., Marduk) and Nabu love, whose kingship they desire for their hearts' pleasure.

(lines 22b-28) When I entered Babylon in a peaceful manner, I took up my lordly reign in the royal palace amidst rejoicing and happiness. Marduk, the great lord, caused the magnanimous people of Babylon [to ...] me, (and) I daily attended to his worship. My vast army moved about Babylon in peace; I did not permit anyone to frighten (the people of) [Sumer] and Akkad. I sought the welfare of the city of Babylon and all its sacred centers. As for the citizens of Babylon, upon whom he imposed corvée which was not the god's will and not befitting them, I relieved their weariness and freed them from their service (?). Marduk, the great lord, rejoiced over my [good] deeds. He sent gracious blessings upon me, Cyrus, the king who worships him, and upon Cambyses, the son who is [my] offspring, [and upon] all my army, and in peace, before him,⁸ we move [about].

(lines 28-36) By his exalted [word],⁸ all the kings who sit upon thrones throughout the world, from the Upper Sea to the Lower Sea,⁹ who live in the dis[tricts far-off], the kings of the West,¹⁰ who dwell in tents, all of them brought their heavy tribute before me and in Babylon they kissed my feet. From [Ninev]eh (?), Ashur and Susa, Agade, Eshnunna, Zamban, Meturnu, Der, as far as the region of Gutium, I returned the (images of) the gods to the sacred centers [on the other side of] the Tigris whose sanctuaries had been abandoned for a long time, and I let them dwell in eternal abodes. I gathered all their inhabitants and returned (to them) their dwellings. In addition, at the command of Marduk, the great lord, I settled in their habitations, in pleasing abodes, the gods of Sumer and Akkad, whom Nabonidus, to the anger of the lord of the gods, had brought into Babylon. May all the gods whom I settled in their sacred centers ask

¹ The subject is Nabonidus, the last king of Babylon (555-539 BCE).

² The cultic misdeeds of Nabonidus, his neglect of the temple of Marduk in Babylon in favor of the temple of Sin in Harran, are the subject of a satirical composition by the king's opponents (ANET 312-315).

³ Tentative translation; with Borger: iglmur karussu.

⁴ Site in southern Iran, mentioned in titulary of Elamite kings in 2nd millennium BCE, and used by Cyrus to point to his legitimate dynastic line.

⁵ The reference is to the Medes, using terms from Sum. times for barbarian highlanders who often raided the riverine valleys of Mesopotamia.

⁶ The Babylonian Chronicle No. 7 (COF 1.137) confirms the peaceful entry into Babylon.

⁷ Berger (1970; 1973:196f., 213) understands this as a reference to the (statues of) deities saved from death and destruction.

⁸ Or: "we lavishly praised [his] exalted [divinity]."

⁹ I.e., from the Mediterranean Sea to the Persian Gulf.

¹⁰ Lit. "Amurnu."

daily of Bel and Nabu that my days be long and may they intercede for my welfare. May they say to Marduk, my lord: "As for Cyrus, the king who reveres you, and Cambyeses, his son, [] a reign." I settled all the lands in peaceful abodes.

(lines 37-44) [] I increased the offerings [to x] geese, two ducks and ten turtledoves above the former (offerings) of geese, ducks, and turtledoves []. I sought to strengthen the [construction(?)] of Dur-Ingur-Enlil, the great wall of Babylo[n]. []

The bricks at the bank of the ditch, which a former king had built, [but had not completed its construction []], on the outside, which no former king had made, a levy of workmen of Babylonians, [with bitumen] and bricks, I built anew. [] overlaid in copper. The thresholds and the pivots [] their [doors]. [An inscription with] the name of Ashurbanipal, a king who had proceeded me [I sa]w.¹¹ [(two lines missing) ... for e]ternity.

¹¹ An inscription bearing the name of the Assyrian king was discovered during the reconstruction work on the wall. For a text of Ashurbanipal commemorating his work on Ingur-Enlil, see VAB 7, 234-239.

REFERENCES

Text: Berger 1975; Kuhrt 1983. Translations: ANET, 315-316; DOTT, 92-94; Borger in Galling, TGF, 82-84.

B. VOTIVE SEAL INSCRIPTIONS

This page intentionally left blank

VOTIVE SEAL INSCRIPTIONS (2.125)

William W. Hallo

Votive objects were designed to carry inscriptions praying for the long life of the donor (who could be the king) and/or designated beneficiaries, normally members of his family (or the king). They could be pure works of art such as statues, steles, or beads, or they could be artistic replicas of objects used in the daily life of the donor, such as bowls or axes, ships for a merchant or weapons for a soldier. Seals can be recognized as votives when they were inscribed in a positive sense so that their text was to be read off from the seal itself, not from its impression on a clay tablet or vessel. For a particularly significant example, see Lee 1993.

1. Rimut-ilani (2.125A)

This seal was found in controlled excavations at Beer-Sheba in the Negev (Israel). There is no indication as to how it got there, but the seal owner's father is either identical with or at least a namesake of Hadad-idri, king of Damascus in the ninth century,¹ and the script of the inscription would be compatible with that time. Note, however, that the direction of the script (from top to bottom, not from left to right), might suggest either an earlier date or deliberate archaizing.²

To the divine Apil-Adad,³ the great lord, his lord, Rimut-ilani, son of (H)adad-idri, made and donated (this cylinder seal).

2. Nabu-apla-iddina (2.125B)

This four-sided bead is described as a seal in its inscription. It provides a parallel of sorts to the seal from Beer-sheba, since it mentions the same unusual divine name. The donor is a namesake of a king of Babylon who ruled in the first half of the ninth century, but had a different patronymic.

A seal of lapis lazuli — Nabu-apla-iddina, son of Shamash-eresh, for the well-being of his life, the length of his days (and) the furthering of his cause, to the divine Gabra the spouse of the divine Apil-Adad his lord he donated.

3. Marduk-zakir-shumi (2.125C)

At 19 cm high, this is one of the largest seals known, a worthy votive offering from a king of Babylon (second half of the ninth century BCE) to the city's principal deity.

For the divine Marduk, the great lord, heroic, lofty, exalted, lord of all, lord of lords, high judge, rendering decisions for the inhabited world, lord of foreign lands, lord of Babylon, dwelling in the temple Esagil, his lord — Marduk-zakir-shumi, king of the world, the prince who worships him — for the well-being of his life, the safety of his offspring, the length of his days, the stability of his reign, the overthrowing of his enemies, and the ever going peacefully before him — (this) seal of shining lapis lazuli which is artfully set in ruddy gold as the ornament of his (Marduk's) neck he caused it to be made and donated it.

¹ See COS 2.40.

² For dating the change, see Hallo 1982:114-115.

³ For this deity, see above, COS 2.115B, note 5 (Apla-Adad).

REFERENCES

Texts: Rainey 1973; Frame 1995:104f. Studies: Watanabe 1994.

This page intentionally left blank

C. WEIGHT INSCRIPTIONS

This page intentionally left blank

WEIGHT INSCRIPTIONS (2.126)

Marvin A. Powell

Most weights from ancient Mesopotamia bear no mark at all, partly because the vast majority are small with little room for inscription; however, many weights that could have been marked for unit of mass have no markings either. Weights with masses of one-half mina (ca. 250 grams) and higher are usually marked for mass, and more elaborate inscriptions are largely limited to these larger weights. Dating is often problematic, because a large proportion of weights in western collections derive from the antiquities market or from uncertain archaeological context, and this problem is complicated by the fact that some weights were reused, carried off as booty, and/or preserved as heirlooms. The brevity of most weight inscriptions and the tendency to use logographic-ideographic script occasionally makes identification of language a matter of an educated guess.

This selection is organized in (approximate) chronological order, oldest first. Published mass and "implied mina norms" are given to assist the reader in interpretation, but it must be borne in mind that these are approximations whose precision depends upon the accuracy of the modern weighing, the state of conservation of the object, and the accuracy of the ancient standard. There are large numbers of still unpublished and unstudied weights in Iraq and in Turkey and quite a few in Syria.

126A. Elongated barrel, from Tell Sweyhat, Syria; probably Naram-Sin or later.

1 mina.¹

126B. Duck, excavated at Susa, probably Akkad period.

(1) mina.²

126C. Ellipsoid, excavated at Susa, probably Akkad period.

1 little mina.³

126D. Duck, provenance unknown, Old Akkadian.

10 minas,⁴ in cloth/wool(?),⁵ true, of Uši-ina-pušqim.⁶

126E. Fragment, probably from a duck weight, of unknown provenance, with Old Babylonian script similar to the Laws of Hammurabi.⁷

Stone(weight), 1 talent, palace of Sin-iribam.⁸

¹ 472.2+ grams; dated by palaeography and associated pottery paralleling Mallowan's "Late Sargonic" from Brak and Jidle Level 5; Holland 1975:75-76. This weight seems to be normed on a standard distinct from the Babylonian and is perhaps related to the later "mina of Carchemish"; see Powell 1990:516.

² 538 grams; Powell 1971:255.

³ 2.90 grams; Powell 1971:271. A "little mina" is one-third of a shekel. The shekel contained three "little minas" or 180 barleycorns. The number on this weight is written with a horizontal wedge resembling those which normally precede talents but not minas and shekels. Thus, the "1" may symbolize "60 (barleycorns)." The implied mina norm is 522 grams, but the margin of error is much higher for small weights; the intended norm could easily lie anywhere within 500 to 540 grams.

⁴ 5371+ grams; Powell 1971:205, 251; Borger HKL 1:506 (correct reading of PN and identification as Old Akkadian). The stone has suffered slight damage, implying a mina norm a bit above 537 grams.

⁵ Unclear; probable reading: ša tūg.

⁶ Unidentified person.

⁷ Clay 1915:28, no. 30.

⁸ Tenth king of Larsa, 1842-1841 BCE.

126F. Elongated barrel, provenance unknown, probably late Old Babylonian.

Stone(weight), 2/3 shekel,⁹ true, of Šamaš.¹⁰

126G. Elongated barrel, provenance unknown (brought to the French excavations at Susa, where it was hastily copied and weighed), late Kassite or early Neo-Babylonian.

3 minas,¹¹ true, of Kilamdi-Marduk, temple-head of Kiš.¹²

126H. Duck, excavated at Babylon, probably early first millennium.

1 talent,¹³ true, of Mušallim-Marduk,¹⁴ "son" of the temple-head of Kiš,¹⁵ whoever takes it away, let Šamaš take him away!¹⁶ 126I. Duck, excavated at Susa, late Kassite or early Neo-Babylonian.

2 1/2 minas,¹⁷ true, of Naširi, son of Kidin-Gula, descendant of Arad-Ea.

126J. Duck, found at Nippur, Second Dynasty of Isin.

Stone(weight), 10 minas,¹⁸ Napsamenni,¹⁹ head seer,²⁰ chief priest²¹ of Enlil, servant of Marduk-šapikzeri,²² king of Babylon.

126K. Duck, found by A. H. Layard at Nimrud (perhaps carried there as booty), Second Dynasty of Isin.

30 minas,²³ true, Nabu-šumu-libur,²⁴ king of the world.²⁵

⁹ Powell 1971:207, 268. Mass published as 5.3 grams; reweighed by R. B. Y. Scott: 5.344 grams; reweighed by M. A. Powell: 5.3545 grams. It has lost a small chip: the implied mina norm is in the 500 gram range.

¹⁰ A one-third shekel weight of Shamash in Brussels was published by Speleers 1925:22 no. 215 (text, description, mass, which is given as "3" grams). Abb 13 (1994) no. 112 gives a good idea of how such temple standards functioned in the business world beyond the temple: one party has sent a second party silver on behalf of a third party and instructs the second party to pay the third party back using the "stone(weight) of Shamash."

¹¹ 1425 grams, implied mina: 475 grams; Powell 1971:207, 253.

¹² Also represented by an ellipsoid in the British Museum weighing 79.35 grams published by Thureau-Dangin 1927:71 with the inscription "[one-sixth?] mina, true, Kilamdi-Marduk(!), the temple-head of Kiš"; cf. Powell 1971:207, 261. The British Museum stone is pierced, which is not normal for ellipsoids and may reflect subsequent use as an amulet.

¹³ 29680 grams plus a small percentage due to surface loss; the implied mina is about 495 grams. Powell 1971:206, 249.

¹⁴ This Mušallim-Marduk seems otherwise unattested. He can hardly have been the Amukani chief who submitted to Shalmaneser III (discussed by Brinkman 1968:198); see Powell 1993:97.

¹⁵ "Son" means "descendant"; for a parallel to the expression, see Brinkman 1968:230 n. 1454.

¹⁶ Šā TUM (= uabbalu) "UTU ūt-bal-šu"; for parallels, see Hunger 1968:177-178 + nos. 240-241, 256 (Shamash).

¹⁷ 4915.3+ grams; Powell 1971:206, 251. The original mass was close to 5000 grams, implying a mina norm around 2000 grams. This belongs to a small group of weights whose masses represent "quadruple" norms. The metrological motives for these norms remain unclear; however, these "2 1/2 minas" correspond to 10 normal Babylonian minas and to 60 Persian/Elamite karša. Thus, one of these "quadruple minas" would contain 24 karša, suggesting an underlying duodecimal system that has been adjusted to mesh with Babylonian norms. See below (number 13) for a possible example of Babylonian norms adjusted to mesh with western standards.

¹⁸ Mass not published; Biggs 1969:16 no. 56; Brinkman 1968:335.

¹⁹ Also attested according to Biggs 1969:16 on a Nippur text dated to the 2nd year of the preceding king, Marduk-nadin-aḥḫi, where he is called "seer, chief priest."

²⁰ UGULA AZU = akil bari.

²¹ NU-ĒŠ = nešakku.

²² Seventh king of the Second Dynasty of Isin, 1081-1069 BCE (Brinkman).

²³ 14589.551+ grams; Powell 1971:206, 250. The stone has lost around 200 grams, which would make the mina standard around 493 grams.

²⁴ Eleventh and last king, 1033-1026 BCE (Brinkman), of the Second Dynasty of Isin.

²⁵ LUGAL šār = šar kiššati; what precisely is to be understood under this term in each era and context is far from clear, as is illustrated by use of this title for a Babylonian king who ruled but eight years and whose reign marked the end of a dynasty during what appears to have been an era of increasing chaos.

126L. Elongated barrel, provenance unknown, perhaps early 8th century.

20 shekels,²⁶ true, palace of Nabu-šumu-lišir,²⁷ descendant of Dakkuru, the Isinite(?), overseer of the temple(?) of Marduk.²⁸ 126M. Duck, found east of the ziqqurat at Assur, Tiglath-Pileser III (745-727 BCE).

3 (minas),²⁹ palace of Tukulti-apil-ešarra, king of the world, king of the land of [Aššur].

126N. Bronze lion, from Northwest palace at Nimrud, Shalmaneser V (727-722 BCE).

Palace of Šulman-ašarid, king of Aššur, 5 minas of the king.³⁰ 126O. Truncated pyramid with rounded top, provenance uncertain, Nebuchadnezzar II (605-562 BCE).

[2] minas³¹ true, property of Marduk king of gods, copy of a weight which Nabu-kudurri-ušur king of Babylon, son of Nabu-apla-ušur king of Babylon, made true³² as a copy of a weight of Šulgi, a former king.

²⁶ Written 1/3 (i.e., of a mina) GIN; 164.3 grams. Powell 1971:206, 259; Brinkman 1968:215 and n. 1338 (collation on squeeze), 363-364.

²⁷ Nabu-šumu-lišir cannot be dated precisely.

²⁸ Translation of the difficult last line, LÚ.PA.TE.PA.SI(?) "AMAR.UTU," is based on a provisional reading LÚ.PA.ŠE! UGULA É "AMAR.UTU. For LÚ.PA.ŠE, see Borger 1970:5-8.

²⁹ 2775+ grams; Nassouhi 1927:14-15 no. VI (text), 17 (photo). Marked with three strokes. This duck weight on the "double standard" originally weighed around 3 kilograms. For discussion of the "double standard," see Powell 1990:515-516. Powell 1992:906 has suggested that the motivation for this "double mina" was to approximate 100 western shekels. Thirty such "double minas" would be 3000 western shekels and would approximate both the Babylonian and western talent. This still seems a likely solution.

³⁰ Also inscribed in Aramaic: "five minas of the land, five minas of the king" plus 5 strokes. Published mass: 5042.805+ grams; Powell 1971:251; Mallowan 1966:109. This is again the "double" standard, for which see above (number 13, Tiglath-Pileser III).

³¹ 978,309 grams; Powell 1971:254.

³² ú-kin-ni. This use of kānu can hardly mean "to place" (so CAD K 163a) but must rather belong under the broad category of "establishing as true," already attested in Ur III inscriptions (see, e.g., COS 2.149, 5, Šulgi below).

REFERENCES

Text: 126A: Holland 1975. 126B: MDP 12:6. 126C: MDP 12:11. 126D: Stephens 1937:#63. 126E: Frayne 1990:188. 126F: BIN 2:20. 126G: Pézard RA 9 (1912) 107-109; ZDMG 70 (1916) 52. 126H: MDOG 38 (1908) 16. 126I: MDP 12:8. 126J: Biggs 1969:16 and 42 #56. 126K: Brinkman 1968:147, n. 887. 126L: Brinkman 1968:215, n. 1338. 126M: Tadmor 1994:214. 126N: Mallowan 1966:109 and nn. 9-10. 126O: MDP 12:29.

This page intentionally left blank

D. "FUNCTIONAL" INSCRIPTIONS

This page intentionally left blank

1. TREATIES

ABBAEL'S GIFT OF ALALAKH (AT 1) (2.127)

Richard S. Hess

This Old Babylonian text from Alalakh Level VII records the background behind the gift of the city of Alalakh as a reward for military efforts. Gifts of lands and towns are also reported in Joshua 13 where, as in AT 1, they serve as a recollection of past events. See also Joshua 20 and 21 and the towns of asylum and of the Levites, both of which are presented as gifts of towns from the tribes to these groups. A similar gift of towns appears in AT 456. Both in the Bible and at Alalakh these gifts either are closely attached to or actually form part of treaty documents or divine covenants (see Josh 8:30-35; 24:1-28).

Historical Background (lines 1-10)^{1 a}

When his brothers rebelled against Abbael their lord, then Abbael, aided by Hebat, Addu and the spear [of Ishtar] went to Irride.^{2 b} He [conquered?] Irride and captured his [ene]my.

At that time Abbael, according to his gracious heart, gave Alalakh in exchange for Irride, which his father gave.^{3 c}

At the same time, Yarimlim,⁴ so[n of Hammu]rapi and servant of Abbael brought up [...] Ishtar.

Stipulations (lines 11-13a)

...Ab]bael (which) ... Yarimlim ... he shall give a Gen 4; Judg 9; 2 Sam 13-14; 1 Kgs 1-2

b 1 Sam 21:1-9

c 1 Kgs 9:11-13, 16; 2 Chr 8:2

d Deut 5:32; 17:20; 28:19; Josh 1:7; 23:6; 2 Chr 34:2; Prov 4:27; Isa 30:21

e Lev 26:36-39

him city for city.

Curses (lines 13b-20)

whoever changes the word^{5 d} that Abbael has made for Yarimlim and does evil to his descendants, may Addu dash him in pieces with the weapon in his hand, may Hebat Ishtar break his spear, may Ishtar give him up to the hand of his conquerors,^{6 e} may Ishtar impress femaleness into his maleness.

¹ The rebellion of brothers is a common theme (e.g., Gen 4) and one that is known in the Bible among royalty (Judg 9; 2 Sam 13-14; 1 Kgs 1-2).

² Cf. the special dedication of the spear of Goliath in a sanctuary, 1 Sam 21:1-9.

³ For gifts and payments of towns, see 1 Kgs 9:11-13, 16; 2 Chr 8:2.

⁴ Na²aman (1980b) inserts ALAM-šu a-na É here and translates that Yarimlim "brought up [his statue to the temple] of Ishtar." This translation is based upon a reconstruction.

⁵ The expression "changes the word" (a-wa-at ... á-na-ak-ka-ru) recalls similar expressions of betrayal to covenants often expressed as warnings to turn neither to the right nor to the left, e.g., Deut 5:32; 17:20; 28:19; Josh 1:7; 23:6; 2 Chr 34:2; Prov 4:27; Isa 30:21.

⁶ That an enemy is given control over the treaty breaker forms part of biblical curses, e.g., Lev 26:36-39.

REFERENCES

Text and Translation: AT 25 and pl. i. Studies: Na²aman 1980b.

THE AGREEMENT BETWEEN IR-ADDU AND NIQMEPA (AT 2) (2.128)

Richard S. Hess

This is a treaty text from the Middle Babylonian period of Alalakh (Level IV). The stipulations are largely concerned with citizens of Niqmepa's lands who, for various reasons, find themselves in the land of Ir-Addu. The clauses provide for extradition of these people back to the lands of Niqmepa. Fugitives were a common cause for concern as witnessed in the second millennium law codes: Ur-Nammu §17; Lipit-Ishtar 12-13; Eshnunna 50; Hammurabi 16-20 (COS 2.153; 2.154; 2.130; 2.131, respectively). See Roth 1995/1997.

I. Introduction (lines 1-4)

- 1 The seal of Ir-Addu the king of Tunip
- 2 The text of the divine oath of Niqmepa king of Mukiš
- 3 and of Ir-Addu king of Tunip. In this manner Niqmepa and Ir-Addu
- 4 [...] have now made an agreement¹ between them:

II. Stipulations (lines 5-76)

- 5 [If ...] whether merchants or Sutean troops²
- 6 [...] you ... all your enemies
- 7 [...] you shall not go to war. If it is barley, emmer, or oils,
- 8 [...]
- 9 [...] [...] you] shall give.

- 10 [If ... th]ere is
- 11 [...] you] protest
- 12 [...] of] copper
- 13 [...] you shall search for them
- 14 [...] if] they should say
- 15 [...] fr]om Mukiš, we [are citizens]
- 16 you shall kill those troops.

- 17 If anyone from my country approaches your land to live there,
- 18 If you hear of it, you must report it.
- 19 If he lives in your country, you must seize him and give him up.

- 20 If there are captives from my country whom they sell in your country
- 21 you must seize them along with the one who sold them, and give them to me.

- 22 If a fugitive slave, whether male or female, flees from my country to yours,
- 23 you must seize him and return him. If anyone else seizes him
- 24 and gives him to you, you [shall keep him] in your prison.
- 25 When his owner arrives, you shall hand him over.
- 26 If the slave is not there, you shall provide an escort so that in the city where he is
- 27 the owner can seize the fugitive. (In the city where the fugitive is not residing, the mayor³ and five of his witnesses
- 28 shall declare the following oath: "If my slave stays with you, you must notify me (= the owner)."
- 29 If they do not agree to the oath, then you must return his slave to him.
- 30 If they do swear and afterwards they produce his slave,

a Deut 21:1-9

- 31 then they are thieves. Their hands shall be cut off.
- 32 6,000 copper shekels will be paid to the palace for the slave.

- 33 If a man, woman, ox, donkey, or horse in any-one's house [is found and the owner]
- 34 identifies it, but he (= the person in whose house it is found) says, "I got it by purchase,"
- 35 if he produces the merchant, then he is clear. But if he does
- 36 not produce the merchant who can identify that he took it...
- 37 he will declare with an oath. If...
- 38 But if he does not agree to the oath, then...

- 39 If you hold a man in custody, and you... with another man
- 40 he will go (free?). If (they break?) his fetters,
- 41 they shave off his slave mark...
- 42 and someone captures him, then he is a thief. If he declares...
- 43 then he will state with an oath, "If..."
- 44 If he does not agree to an oath, then he is a thief and (shall be treated) like a thief.
- 45 If the criminal, whether man, woman or child, goes from his house (and)
- 46 he (= the owner) seizes him, he is a thief and so his owner shall swear it:
- 47 "Surely I did not seize him on a journey of his own doing."

- 48 If a thief from your land steals from my land...
- 49 he breaks into a house or town and they seize him, (they shall put him) into a prison.
- 50 Whenever his owner comes, the owner of the house will take the following oath:
- 51 "You took it from the burgled house."
- 52 He shall produce his witnesses. They shall set his guilt on his head
- 53 and destroy(?) him. Then he will be a slave.
- 54 If they do not swear against him (as witnesses), then he shall go free.

- 55 [If people of my land] enter your land to preserve themselves from starvation,
- 56 you must protect them and you must feed them like (citizens of) your land.

- 57 Whenever they want to come to my land,
- 58 you must gather and return them t[o my land.]
- 59 You shall not detain a single family in your land.

- 60 If a man of my land [enters] your land to

¹ The expression, "an agreement between them," translates, fi-nja bi-ri-šu-nu. Is this related to the Heb. "covenant" (b'rith)?

² Cf. Heltzer 1981:80.

³ The use of the local officials of the town to swear judicial oaths clearing the town of guilt also occurs for the laws of the unknown murderer preserve himself from starvation, 61 and he says, "Surely there is..." 62 he is a criminal [...] 63 They shall bring him [...] 64 you [...] 65-67 [] 68 then the cri[minal] 69 If there is a city, or if ... [] 70 They live with the guards of my city ... [] 71 a city ... [] you will seize them 72 If their city ... [] you will seize them. 73 As for the king of the Hurrian lord's army, if there is en[mity with the army of the Hurrian, my lord], then I 74 will not break the oath of my lord, the king of the Hurrian army, 75 (unless) he shall indeed release (me from) the words from the oath.	8 Deut 28:49-68 76 Seal of Niqmepa, the king of Alalakh. III. Curses (lines 77-79) (left side) 77 Whoever transgresses these matters, Addu the l[ord of divination, Shapash the lord of judg- ment, 78 Sin, and the great gods will destroy him. [Let] his name and seed⁴ [per]ish from the lands. 79 Let them make him forsake his throne and his scepter ... (Seal) 1. The great king Abban 2. son of Sharran 3. servant of Addu 4. favored of Addu 5. possession⁵ 6. of Hebat.

---	---

in Deut 21:1-9, although the exact number of elders is not specified in the Bible.

⁴ Cf. the covenant curses involving loss of land and seed in Deut 28:49-68.

⁵ The term translated here as "possession" is sikiltu. It is cognate to that used by Israel's God to describe a special relationship with Israel in Exod 19:5 (s'gullā). As a divine epithet of a special relationship with a person, this term is almost exclusive to Alalakh. In two additional occurrences (not epithets) it is used in Middle Babylonian (CAD S 245; Hess 1994a:204).

REFERENCES

Text: Photo: Smith 1939 pl. xviii, 3 and 5. Copy: AT pls. i-iii. Transliteration: AT 26-28; Dietrich and Loretz 1997:214-222. Translations: AT 28-30; Speiser 1954:23; Tsevat 1958:111-112; Reiner 1969:531-532; Dietrich and Mayer 1996:177-179; Dietrich and Loretz 1997:215-223.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN PILLIA AND IDRIMI (AT 3) (2.129)

Richard S. Hess

Like AT 2, this text stipulates only the extradition of fugitives.

I. Introduction (lines 1-5)	9 Lev 27:2-8	10 to Pillia
1 A tablet of agreement (was made)		11 he shall return.
2 when Pillia		12 Idrimi's fugitive
3 swore a divine oath,		13 whom Pillia seizes
4 and made this agreement		14 to Idrimi
5 [be]tween them.		15 he shall return. Whoever
		16 seizes a fugitive
II. Stipulations regarding fugitives (lines 6-43)		17 shall return him to his owner.
6 Fugitives who are among them		18 If he is a man, ¹ 500 (shekels) of copper
7 they shall always return.		19 (the owner) will give as his reward. ²
8 Pillia's fugitive		20 If she is a woman, ¹
9 whom Idrimi seizes		21 he will give 1,000 (shekels) of copper

¹ The value of a female fugitive here is twice that of a male. This contrasts with the biblical values of men and women set for the votive offerings in Lev 27:2-8. See Wenham 1978.

² The meaning of "equivalent price" for mištanuu, was suggested by Wiseman who derived it from Akk. šina "two." A different meaning, "reward, pay," was suggested on the basis of an Indo-Iranian etymology proposed by Mayrhofer 1965. This has been followed by the Akk. dictionaries CAD and Afhw. The question of the derivation raises issues for the translation of mišneh in biblical texts such as Deut 15:18. See Tsevat 1994. Tsevat provides bibliography of the earlier discussion and summarizes the issues while advocating "duplicate, equivalent" for the evaluation of the slave's service in comparison to that of a hired laborer.

22 as his reward.		36 In whatever city
23 If a fugitive		37 they declare a fugitive (to be),
24 of Pillia		38 the mayor and 5 notables
25 enters the land of Idrimi,		39 shall swear an oath. ³
26 and no one there seizes him		40 From whatever day Baratarna
27 but his owner seizes him,		41 swears the oath with Idrimi
28 then no reward		42 from that day
29 shall be given. If		43 it is decreed that a fugitive is to be returned.
30 a fugitive of Idrimi
31 enters the land of Pillia,		III. Curse (lines 44-47)
32 and no one there		44 Whoever transgresses the words of
33 seizes him but his owner		45 this tablet,
34 seizes him, then no reward		46 may Adad, Shapash, Išhara, and all the gods
35 shall be given.		47 destroy him.

³ See comment for AT 2 (COS 2.128, note 2). For a Talmudic parallel see Tsevat 1958:126.

REFERENCES

Text: Copy: AT pl. iv. Transliteration: AT 31-32. Translation: AT 31; Reiner 1969:532.

2. LAWS

THE LAWS OF ESHNUNNA (2.130)

Martha Roth

After the fall of the Ur III Dynasty, the north Mesopotamian city of Eshnunna, east of Babylon, fell under the sway of the Amorite settlers in the region. Under King Naram-Sin of Eshnunna, Eshnunna became one of the great military powers at the end of the nineteenth and the beginning of the eighteenth centuries BCE, alternately warring and allying with the other great powers of the time, Assur (or the Kingdom of Upper Mesopotamia), Mari, Elam, and Babylon. A successor to Naram-Sin, King Dadusha, may be referred to in the fragmentary superscription of the text here, although little else is known about this king. The kingdom of Eshnunna came to an end under his successor Ibal-pi-el II, when King Hammurabi captured the city during his thirty-first regnal year, 1766 BCE.

The composition is known from three school exercise texts; there is no literary prologue or epilogue preserved. This is the earliest extant of the Akkadian-language collections of laws. There are great similarities in content with the other known law collections, especially with the Laws of Hammurabi, and despite the lack of a framing structure, this composition stands within the scribal-legal tradition of the Laws of Ur-Namma, Lipit-Ishtar, and Hammurabi (COS 2.153, 154, 131).¹

Superscription
Appointment to the throne (lines i.1-7)
[...] day 21 [...] of the gods Entil and Ninazu, [when Dadusha ascended to] the kingship of the city of Eshnunna [and entered] into the house of his father, [when] he conquered with mighty weapons within one year the cities Šupur-Shamash [and ... on] the far bank of the Tigris River [...].		kel of silver. 40 SILA of bitumen — for 1 shekel of silver. 360 shekels of wool — for 1 shekel of silver. 600 SILA of salt — for 1 shekel of silver. 300 SILA of potash — for 1 shekel of silver. 180 shekels of copper — for 1 shekel of silver. 120 shekels of wrought copper — for 1 shekel of silver.
The Laws
§1	300 SILA of barley (can be purchased) for 1 shekel of silver. 3 SILA of fine oil — for 1 shekel of silver. 12 SILA of oil — for 1 shekel of silver. 15 SILA of lard — for 1 she-	§2 1 sila of oil, extract(?) — 30 SILA is its grain equivalent. 1 sila of lard, extract(?) — 25 SILA is its grain equivalent. 1 sila of bitumen, extract(?) — 8 SILA is its grain equivalent.
		§3 A wagon together with its oxen and its driver — 100 SILA of grain is its hire; if (paid in) silver, ⅓ shekel (i.e., 60 barley corns) is its

¹ The most recent edition is in Roth 1995/1997, on which this translation is based, and to which the reader is referred for details of sources and earlier editions.

	hire; he shall drive it for the entire day.	a Exod 22:1-2; Isa 38:1	to his or her fate, he will not take out all that he had brought, but only its excess shall he take. ²
§4	The hire of a boat is, per 300-sila capacity, 2 SILA; furthermore, [x] SILA is the hire of the boatman; he shall drive it for the entire day.	b Deut 24:6	§18A Per 1 shekel (of silver) interest accrues at the rate of 36 barleycorns (= 20%); per 300 SILA (of grain) interest accrues at the rate of 100 SILA (= 33⅓%).
§5	If the boatman is negligent and causes the boat to sink, he shall restore as much as he caused to sink.		§19 A man who lends against its corresponding commodity(?) shall collect at the threshing floor.
§6	If a man, under fraudulent circumstances, should seize a boat which does not belong to him, he shall weigh and deliver 10 shekels of silver.	c Judg 15:1-2	§20 If a man loans ... grain ... and then converts the grain into silver, at the harvest he shall take the grain and the interest on it at (the established rate of 33⅓%, i.e.,) 100 SILA per 300 SILA.
§7	20 SILA of grain is the hire of a harvester; if (paid in) silver, 12 barleycorns is his hire.	d Deut 22:23-27	§21 If a man gives silver for/to his/its ..., he shall take the silver and the interest on it at (the established rate of 20%, i.e.,) 36 barleycorns per 1 shekel.
§8	10 SILA of grain is the hire of a winnower.		§22 If a man has no claim against another man but he nonetheless takes the man's slave woman as a distress, the owner of the slave woman shall swear an oath by the god: "You have no claim against me"; he (the distrainer) shall weigh and deliver silver as much as is the value(?) of the slave woman. ³
§9	Should a man give 1 shekel of silver to a hireling for harvesting — if he (the hireling) does not keep himself available to work and does not harvest for him, he shall weigh and deliver 10 shekels of silver.		§23 If a man has no claim against another man but he nonetheless takes the man's slave woman as a distress, detains the distress in his house, and causes her death, he shall replace her with two slave women for the owner of the slave woman.
§9A	15 SILA is the hire of a sickle, and the broken blade(?) shall revert to its owner.		§24 If he has no claim against him ³ but he nonetheless takes the wife of a commoner or the child of a commoner as a distress, detains the distress in his house, and causes her or his death, it is a capital offense — the distrainer who distrained shall die.
§10	10 SILA of grain is the hire of a donkey, and 10 SILA of grain is the hire of its driver; he shall drive it for the entire day.		§25 If a man comes to claim (his bride) at the house of his father-in-law, but his father-in-law wrongs(?) him and then gives his daughter to [another], the father of the daughter shall return two-fold the bridewealth which he received. ⁴
§11	The hire of a hireling is 1 shekel of silver, 60 SILA of grain is his provender; he shall serve for one month.		§26 If a man brings the bridewealth for the daughter of a man, but another, without the consent of her father and mother, abducts her and then deflowers her, it is indeed a capital offense — he shall die. ⁴
§12	A man who is seized in the field of a commoner among the sheaves at midday shall weigh and deliver 10 shekels of silver; he who is seized at night among the sheaves shall die, he will not live. ⁵		§27 If a man marries the daughter of another man without the consent of her father and mother, and moreover does not conclude the nuptial feast and the contract for(?) her father and mother, should she reside in his house for even one full year, she is not a wife.
§13	A man who is seized in the house of a commoner, within the house, at midday, shall weigh and deliver 10 shekels of silver; he who is seized at night within the house shall die, he will not live.
§14	The hire of a fuller, per one garment valued at 5 shekels of silver — 1 shekel is his hire; (per one garment) valued at 10 shekels of silver — 2 shekels is his hire.
§15	A merchant or a tapster will not accept silver, grain, wool, oil, or anything else from a male or female slave.
§16	The son of a man who has not yet received his inheritance share or a slave will not be advanced credit.
§17	Should a member of the awilu -class bring the bridewealth to the house of his father-in-law — if either (the groom or bride then) should go to his or her fate, the silver shall revert to its original owner (i.e., the widower or his heir).
§18	If he marries her and she enters his house and then either the groom or the bride goes

² Subjects in the final clause are uncertain, and the resolutions outlined are not clear. For discussion of possibilities, see Yaron 1988:179-190.

³ i.e., the "commoner" mentioned later in the provision.

§28	If he concludes the contract and the nuptial feast for(?) her father and mother and he marries her, she is indeed a wife; the day she is seized in the lap of another man, she shall die, she will not live. ⁴	e Lev 20:10; Deut 22:22; Isa 38:1		mitted a fraud or misdeed"; thus shall he swear an oath to satisfy him and he will have no claim against him.
§29	If a man should be captured or abducted during a raiding expedition or while on patrol(?), even should he reside in a foreign land for a long time, should someone else marry his wife and even should she bear a child, whenever he returns he shall take back his wife.	f Exod 22:7-8		§38 If, in a partnership, one intends to sell his share and his partner wishes to buy, he shall match any outside offer. ⁶
§30	If a man repudiates his city and his master and then flees, and someone else then marries his wife, whenever he returns he will have no claim to his wife.	g Lev 25:29-30		§39 If a man becomes impoverished and then sells his house, whenever the buyer offers it for sale, the owner of the house shall have the right to redeem it. ⁵
§31	If a man should deflower the slave woman of another man, he shall weigh and deliver 20 shekels of silver, but the slave woman remains the property of her master.	h Exod 22:1-2		§40 If a man buys a slave, a slave woman, an ox, or any other purchase, but cannot establish the identity of the seller, it is he who is a thief. ⁴
§32	If a man gives his child for suckling and for rearing but does not give the food, oil, and clothing rations (to the caregiver) for 3 years, he shall weigh and deliver 10 shekels of silver for the cost of the rearing of his child, and he shall take away his child.	i Exod 21:24; Lev 24:20; Deut 19:21		§41 If a foreigner, a naptaru , or a mudû wishes to sell his beer, the tapster shall sell the beer for him at the current rate.
§33	If a slave woman acts to defraud and gives her child to a woman of the awtlu -class, when he grows up — should his master locate him, he shall seize him and take him away.	j Exod 22:3, 6		§42 If a man bites the nose of another man and thus cuts it off, he shall weigh and deliver 60 shekels of silver; an eye — 60 shekels; a tooth — 30 shekels; an ear — 30 shekels; a slap to the cheek ⁷ he shall weigh and deliver 10 shekels of silver. ¹
§34	If a slave woman of the palace should give her son or her daughter to a commoner for rearing, the palace shall remove the son or daughter whom she gave.			§43 If a man should cut off the finger of another man, he shall weigh and deliver 20 shekels of silver. ¹
§35	However, an adopter who takes in adoption the child of a slave woman of the palace shall restore (another slave of) equal value for the palace.			§44 If a man knocks down another man in the street(?) and thereby breaks his hand, he shall weigh and deliver 30 shekels of silver.
§36	If a man gives his goods to a naptaru for safekeeping, and he (the naptaru) then allows the goods which he gave to him for safekeeping to become lost — without evidence that the house has been broken into, the doorjamb scraped, the window forced — he shall replace his goods for him. ¹			§45 If he should break his foot, he shall weigh and deliver 30 shekels of silver.
§37	If the man's house ⁵ has been burglarized, and the owner of the house incurs a loss along with the goods which the depositor gave to him, the owner of the house shall swear an oath to satisfy him at the gate of (the temple of) the god Tishpak: "My goods have been lost along with your goods; I have not com-			§46 ⁸ If a man strikes another man and thus breaks his collarbone, he shall weigh and deliver 20 shekels of silver.
				§47 If a man should inflict(?) any other injuries(?) on another man in the course of a fray, he shall weigh and deliver 10 shekels of silver.
				§47A If a man, in the course of a brawl, should cause the death of another member of the awtlu -class, he shall weigh and deliver 40 shekels of silver.
				§48 And for a case involving a penalty of silver in amounts ranging from 20 shekels to 60 shekels, the judges shall determine the case against him; however, a capital case is only for the king.
				§49 If a man should be seized with a stolen slave or a stolen slave woman, a slave shall lead a slave, a slave woman shall lead a slave woman. ¹
				§50 If a military governor, a governor of the canal system, or any person in a position of

⁴ Yaron (1988:284-85) maintains his earlier position that it is the lover and not the woman who is the subject of imât ul iballut "s/he shall die, s/he shall not live," and that her punishment is left to her husband; but see Roth 1988. For the idiom and its parallels see Hallo 1999:41 and nn. 65-67.

⁵ I.e., the house of the depository, the naptaru "resident alien" of §36.

⁶ For other interpretations, see Yaron 1988:227-235.

⁷ "Slap to the cheek" is a reference to a physical or social assault to a person's honor; see Roth 1995:27-36; and COS 2.131 §§202-205.

⁸ On §§46, 47, 47A, see Roth 1990.

	* Exod 21:28-36	he shall weigh and deliver 15 shekels of silver.
		§56 If a dog is vicious and the ward authorities so notify its owner, but he fails to control his dog and it bites a man and thus causes his death, the owner of the dog shall weigh and deliver 40 shekels of silver.
§51 A slave or slave woman belonging to (a resident of) Eshnunna who bears fetters, shackles, or a slave hairlock will not exit through the main city-gate of Eshnunna without his owner.		§57 If it bites a slave and thus causes his death, he shall weigh and deliver 15 shekels of silver.
§52 A slave or slave woman who has entered the main city-gate of Eshnunna in the safekeeping of a foreign envoy shall be made to bear fetters, shackles, or a slave hairlock and thereby is kept safe for his owner.		§58 If a wall is buckling and the ward authorities so notify the owner of the wall, but he does not reinforce his wall and the wall collapses and thus causes the death of a member of the awilu -class — it is a capital case, it is decided by a royal edict.
§53 If an ox gores another ox and thus causes its death, the two ox-owners shall divide the value of the living ox and the carcass of the dead ox. ⁹		§59 If a man sired children but divorces his wife and then marries another, he shall be expelled from the house and any possessions there may be and he shall depart after the one who ..., [...] the house ... ⁹
§54 If an ox is a gorer and the ward authorities so notify its owner, but he fails to keep his ox in check and it gores a man and thus causes his death, the owner of the ox shall weigh and deliver 40 shekels of silver.		§60 ¹⁰ [If] a guard is negligent in guarding [a house], and a burglar [breaks into the house], they shall kill the guard of the house that was broken into [...], and he shall be buried [at] the breach without a grave.
§55 If it gores a slave and thus causes his death,

⁹ The interpretation of the provision is disputed, revolving around the identity (or identities) of the subjects in the subclauses of the apodosis; see the summaries of the discussion in Yaron 1988:214ff. and in Westbrook 1988: 72ff.

¹⁰ The provision is damaged, and the restorations and interpretation are uncertain; here, I follow the treatment put forward by Landsberger 1968:102.

REFERENCES

Text: Goetze 1948a; Yaron 1969/1988; Roth 1995/1997:57-70. Translations and Studies: ANET 161-163; TUAT 32-38; Goetze 1956; Eichler 1987; Finkelstein, 1970; Landsberger 1968; al-Rawi 1982; Roth 1988; 1990; 1995; 1995/1997:57-70; Saporetti 1984:41-48; Yaron 1969/1988; Westbrook 1988; 1994.

THE LAWS OF HAMMURABI (2.131)

Martha Roth

By the beginning of the second millennium, Amorite and other nomadic population groups integrated into Mesopotamian urban political and social life. The Amorite Sumu-abum (ca. 1894-1881 BCE) settled in Babylon, in the wasp-waist center of Mesopotamia, at the time that the rival cities of Isin and Larsa were struggling for dominance in the south. He and his successors for one hundred years stayed focused largely on their immediate geographical area, engaging in local political and military consolidation, fortification and temple building projects, canal maintenance, and some military actions. By the time the sixth ruler of this dynasty, Hammurabi (ca. 1792-1750 BCE), came to the throne, he found himself circumscribed by the rising powers of Larsa to the south, the Kingdom of Upper Mesopotamia to the north, Mari to the west, and Eshnunna and Elam to the east. In his first years, Hammurabi, like his predecessors, remained involved in building projects in Babylon itself, but then turned outward and began military forays into other territories; by his thirty-second regnal year, he had decisively defeated all the rivals mentioned. As "King of Sumer and Akkad," Hammurabi now had the luxury of turning his attention again to domestic programs, largely neglected during the years of military efforts. It is at this point that the law collection inscribed on the monumental stela was compiled and publicized in multiple copies placed in major cities of his realm, fulfilling Hammurabi's repeated claims of a just and righteous rule. In all this, Hammurabi and his law collection stand firmly in the stream of tradition of his royal predecessors in other dynasties and other cities of Mesopotamia, beginning at least with Ur-Namma and Lipit-Ishtar, although the product of Hammurabi's efforts is by far the longest, most polished, and most comprehensive.

Hammurabi's son and successor Samsu-iluna also enjoyed a long reign (ca. 1749-1712 BCE), but the empire Hammurabi consolidated began to splinter soon after his death. By the beginning of the sixteenth century, the much reduced city of Babylon fell to invading Hatti forces. Hammurabi himself, however, achieved and retained enormous personal appeal as a charismatic leader both during his lifetime and after. The enduring power of Hammurabi's name and deeds is dramatically demonstrated by the seven and a half foot tall stela with the most complete edition of the Laws, which was taken from Sippar as booty to Susa by conquering Elamites five hundred years later.

In addition to the famous monument, some fifty manuscripts are known to record all or part of the laws, prologue, and epilogue of the composition. The manuscripts range from those contemporary with the time of Hammurabi through to the middle of the first millennium, and come from a variety of sites. The scribes in schools studied and copied the Laws, and engaged in exercises resulting in commentaries to and extracts of the composition, and even one Sumerian-Akkadian bilingual.¹

Prologue (lines i 1-v 25)

Elevation of Marduk to head of the pantheon (lines i 1-26)

When the august god Anu, king of the Anunnaku deities, and the god Enlil, lord of heaven and earth, who determines the destinies of the land, allotted supreme power over all peoples to the god Marduk, the firstborn son of the god Ea, exalted him among the Igigu deities, named the city of Babylon with its august name and made it supreme within the regions of the world, and established for him within it eternal kingship whose foundations are as fixed as heaven and earth,

Appointment of Hammurabi to the throne (lines i.27-49)

at that time, the gods Anu and Enlil, for the enhancement of the well-being of the people, named me by my name: Hammurabi, the pious prince, who venerates the gods, to make justice prevail in the land, to abolish the wicked and the evil, to prevent the strong from oppressing the weak, to rise like the sun-god Shamash over all humankind, to illuminate the land.

Attributes and benefactions of Hammurabi to the temples and cities in his realm (lines i.50-v.13)

I am Hammurabi, the shepherd, selected by the god Enlil, he who heaps high abundance and plenty, who perfects every possible thing for the city Nippur, (the city known as) band-of-heaven-and-earth, the pious provider of the Ekur temple;

the capable king, the restorer of the city Eridu, the purifier of the rites of the Eabzu temple;

the onslaught of the four regions of the world, who magnifies the reputation of the city Babylon, who gladdens the heart of his divine lord Marduk, whose days are devoted to the Esagil temple;

seed of royalty, he whom the god Sin created, enricher of the city of Ur, humble and talented, who provides abundance for the Egishnugal temple;

discerning king, obedient to the god Shamash, the mighty one, who establishes the foundations of the city of Sippar, who drapes the sacred building of the goddess Aja with greenery, who made famous the temple of Ebabbar which is akin to the abode of heaven;

the warrior, who shows mercy to the city of Larsa, who renews the Ebabbar temple for the god Shamash his ally;

the lord who revitalizes the city of Uruk, who provides abundant waters for its people, who raises high the summit of the Eanna temple, who heaps up bountiful produce for the gods Anu and Ishtar;

the protecting canopy of the land, who gathers together the scattered peoples of the city of Isin, who supplies abundance for the temple of Egalmaḥ;

dragon among kings, beloved brother of the god Zababa, founder of the settlement of Kish, who surrounds the Emetsursag temple with splendor, who arranges the great rites for the goddess Ishtar, who takes charge of the temple of Ḫursagkalamma;

the enemy-ensnaring throw-net, whose companion, the god Erra, has allowed him to obtain his heart's desire, who enlarges the city of Kuṭl, who augments everything for the Emeslam temple;

the fierce wild bull who gores the enemy, beloved of the god Tutu, the one who makes the city of Borsippa exult, the pious one who does not fail in his duties to the Ezida temple, <the dwelling of> the god of kings;

the one who is steeped in wisdom, who enlarges the cultivated area of the city of Dilbat, who heaps up the storage bins for the mighty god Urash;

the lord, worthy recipient of the scepter and crown bestowed upon him by the wise goddess Mama, who devised the plans of the city of Kesh, who provides the pure food offerings for the goddess Nintu;

the judicious one, the noble one, who allots pasture and watering place for the cities of Lagash and

¹ The most recent edition is in Roth 1995/1997, on which this translation is based, and to which the reader is referred for details of sources and earlier editions.

Girsu, who provides plentiful food-offerings for the Eninnu temple;

who seizes the enemies, beloved of (the goddess Ishtar) the able one, who perfects the oracles of the city of Zabala, who gladdens the heart of the goddess Ishtar;

the pure prince, whose prayers the god Adad acknowledges, appeaser of the heart of the god Adad, the hero in the city of Karkara, who installs the proper appointments throughout the Eudgalgal temple;

the king who gives life to the city of Adab, who organizes the Enah temple;

lord of kings, peerless warrior, who granted life to the city of Mashkan-shapir, who gives waters of abundance to the Emeslam temple;

wise one, the organizer, he who has mastered all wisdom, who shelters the people of the city of Malgium in the face of annihilation, who founds their settlements in abundance, who decreed eternal pure food offerings for the gods Enki and Damkina who magnify his kingship;

leader of kings, who subdues the settlements along the Euphrates River by the oracular command of the god Dagan, his creator, who showed mercy to the people of the cities of Mari and Tuttul;

the pious prince, who brightens the countenance of the god Tishpak, who provides pure feasts for the goddess Ninazu, who sustains his people in crisis, who secures their foundations in peace in the midst of the city of Babylon;

shepherd of the people, whose deeds are pleasing to the goddess Ishtar, who establishes Ishtar in the Eulmash temple in the midst of Akkad-the-City; who proclaims truth, who guides the population properly, who restores its benevolent protective spirit to the city of Assur;

who quells the rebellious, the king who proclaimed the rites for the goddess Ishtar in the city of Nineveh in the Emesmes temple;

the pious one, who prays ceaselessly for the great gods, scion of Sumu-la-el, mighty heir of Sinmuballit, eternal seed of royalty, mighty king, solar disk of the city of Babylon, who spreads light over the lands of Sumer and Akkad, king who makes the four regions obedient, favored of the goddess Ishtar, am I.

Establishment of justice in the land (lines v. 14-25)

When the god Marduk commanded me to provide just ways for the people of the land (in order to attain) appropriate behavior, I established truth and justice as the declaration of the land, I enhanced the well-being of the people.

a Exod 20:16;
23:1-3; Deut
5:20; 19:16-21

b Exod 21:37;
22:1-2

c Exod 20:15;
Lev 19:11,
13; Deut
5:19

At that time:

The Laws

- §1 If a man accuses another man and charges him with homicide but cannot bring proof against him, his accuser shall be killed.^a
- §2 If a man charges another man with practicing witchcraft but cannot bring proof against him, he who is charged with witchcraft shall go to the divine River Ordeal, he shall indeed submit to the divine River Ordeal; if the divine River Ordeal should overwhelm him, his accuser shall take full legal possession of his estate; if the divine River Ordeal should clear that man and should he survive, he who made the charge of witchcraft against him shall be killed; he who submitted to the divine River Ordeal shall take full legal possession of his accuser's estate.
- §3 If a man comes forward to give false testimony in a case but cannot bring evidence for his accusation, if that case involves a capital offense, that man shall be killed.
- §4 If he comes forward to give (false) testimony for (a case whose penalty is) grain or silver, he shall be assessed the penalty for that case.
- §5 If a judge renders a judgment, gives a verdict, or deposits a sealed opinion, after which he reverses his judgment, they shall charge and convict that judge of having reversed the judgment which he rendered and he shall give twelvefold the claim of that judgment; moreover, they shall unseat him from his judgeship in the assembly, and he shall never again sit in judgment with the judges.
- §6 If a man steals valuables belonging to the god or to the palace, that man shall be killed, and also he who received the stolen goods from him shall be killed.^b
- §7 If a man should purchase silver, gold, a slave, a slave woman, an ox, a sheep, a donkey, or anything else whatsoever, from a son of a man or from a slave of a man without witnesses or a contract — or if he accepts the goods for safekeeping — that man is a thief, he shall be killed.
- §8 If a man steals an ox, a sheep, a donkey, a pig, or a boat — if it belongs either to the god or to the palace, he shall give thirtyfold; if it belongs to a commoner, he shall replace it tenfold; if the thief does not have anything to give, he shall be killed.^c
- §9 If a man who claims to have lost property then discovers his lost property in another man's possession, but the man in whose possession the lost property was discovered declares, "A seller sold it to me, I purchased

	it in the presence of witnesses," and the owner of the lost property declares, "I can bring witnesses who can identify my lost property," (and then if) the buyer produces the seller who sold it to him and the witnesses in whose presence he purchased it, and also the owner of the lost property produces the witnesses who can identify his lost property — the judges shall examine their cases, and the witnesses in whose presence the purchase was made and the witnesses who can identify the lost property shall state the facts known to them before the god, then it is the seller who is the thief, he shall be killed; the owner of the lost property shall take his lost property, and the buyer shall take from the seller's estate the amount of silver that he weighed and delivered. ^d	^d Exod 21:37; 22:3
§10	If the buyer could not produce the seller who sold (the lost property) to him or the witnesses before whom he made the purchase, but the owner of the lost property could produce witnesses who can identify his lost property, then it is the buyer who is the thief, he shall be killed; the owner of the lost property shall take his lost property.	^e Exod 21:16; Deut 24:7	§20
§11	If the owner of the lost property could not produce witnesses who can identify his lost property, he is a liar, he has indeed spread malicious charges, he shall be killed.	^f Exod 22:2-3	§21
§12	If the seller should go to his fate, the buyer shall take fivefold the claim for that case from the estate of the seller.	^g Lev 5:21-26; 19:11, 13	§22
§13	If that man's witnesses are not available, the judges shall grant him an extension until the sixth month, but if he does not bring his witnesses by the sixth month, it is that man who is a liar, he shall be assessed the penalty for that case.	^h Deut 21:1-11	§23
§14	If a man should kidnap the young child of another man, he shall be killed. ^e		§24
§15	If a man should enable a palace slave, a palace slave woman, a commoner's slave, or a commoner's slave woman to leave through the main city-gate, he shall be killed.		§25
§16	If a man should harbor a fugitive slave or slave woman of either the palace or of a commoner in his house and not bring him out at the herald's public proclamation, that householder shall be killed.		§26
§17	If a man seizes a fugitive slave or slave woman in the open country and leads him back to his owner, the slave owner shall give him 2 shekels of silver.		§27
§18	If that slave should refuse to identify his owner, he shall lead him off to the palace, his circumstances shall be investigated, and they shall return him to his owner.		§28
§19	If he should detain that slave in his own		§29
	house and afterward the slave is discovered in his possession, that man shall be killed.		§30
	If the slave should escape the custody of the one who seized him, that man shall swear an oath by the god to the owner of the slave, and he shall be released.
	If a man breaks into a house, they shall kill him and hang him in front of that very breach. ^f
	If a man commits a robbery and is then seized, that man shall be killed. ^g
	If the robber should not be seized, the man who has been robbed shall establish the extent of his lost property before the god; and the city and the governor in whose territory and district the robbery was committed shall replace his lost property to him.
	If a life (is lost during the robbery), the city and the governor shall weigh and deliver to his kinsmen 60 shekels of silver. ^h
	If a fire breaks out in a man's house, and a man who came to help put it out covets the household furnishings belonging to the householder, and takes household furnishings belonging to the householder, that man shall be cast into that very fire.
	If either a soldier or a fisherman who is ordered to go on a royal campaign does not go, or hires and sends a hireling as his substitute, that soldier or fisherman shall be killed; the one who informs against him shall take full legal possession of his estate.
	If there is either a soldier or a fisherman who is taken captive while serving in a royal fortress, and they give his field and his orchard to another to succeed to his holdings, and he then performs his service obligation — if he (the soldier or fisherman) should return and get back to his city, they shall return to him his field and orchard and he himself shall perform his service obligation.
	If there is either a soldier or a fisherman who is taken captive while serving in a royal fortress, and his son is able to perform the service obligation, the field and orchard shall be given to him and he shall perform his father's service obligation.
	If his son is too young and is unable to perform his father's service obligation, one third of the field and orchard shall be given to his mother, and his mother shall raise him.
	If either a soldier or a fisherman abandons his field, orchard, or house because of the service obligation and then absents himself, another person takes possession of his field, orchard, or house to succeed to his holdings and performs the service obligation for three years — if he then returns and claims his field, orchard, or house, it will not be given - to him; he who has taken possession of it and has performed his service obligation shall be the one to continue to perform the obligation.

- §31 If he should absent himself for only one year and then return, his field, orchard, and house shall be given to him, and he himself shall perform his service obligation.
- §32 If there is either a soldier or a fisherman who is taken captive while on a royal campaign, a merchant redeems him and helps him to get back to his city — if there are sufficient means in his own estate for the redeeming, he himself shall redeem himself; if there are not sufficient means in his estate to redeem him, he shall be redeemed by his city's temple; if there are not sufficient means in his city's temple to redeem him, the palace shall redeem him; but his field, orchard, or house will not be given for his redemption.
- §33 If either a captain or a sergeant should recruit(?) deserters or accepts and leads off a hireling as a substitute on a royal campaign, that captain or sergeant shall be killed.
- §34 If either a captain or a sergeant should take a soldier's household furnishings, oppress a soldier, hire out a soldier, deliver a soldier into the power of an influential person in a law case, or take a gift that the king gave to a soldier, that captain or sergeant shall be killed.
- §35 If a man should purchase from a soldier either the cattle or the sheep and goats which the king gave to the soldier, he shall forfeit his silver.
- §36 (Furthermore), the field, orchard, or house of a soldier, fisherman, or a state tenant will not be sold.
- §37 If a man should purchase a field, orchard, or house of a soldier, fisherman, or a state tenant, his deed shall be invalidated and he shall forfeit his silver; the field, orchard, or house shall revert to its owner.
- §38 (Furthermore), a soldier, fisherman, or a state tenant will not assign in writing to his wife or daughter any part of a field, orchard, or house attached to his service obligation, nor will he give it to meet any outstanding obligation.
- §39 He shall assign in writing to his wife or daughter or give to meet an outstanding obligation only a field, orchard, or house which he himself acquires by purchase.
- §40 (However), a naditu, a merchant, or any holder of a field with a special service obligation may sell her or his field, orchard, or house; the buyer shall perform the service obligation on the field, orchard, or house which he purchases.
- §41 If a man accepts a field, orchard, or house of a soldier, fisherman, or state tenant in an exchange and gives him a compensatory payment (for the difference in value), the soldier, fisherman, or state tenant shall reclaim his field, orchard, or house and shall also keep full legal possession of the compensatory payment which was given to him.
- §42 If a man rents a field in tenancy but does not plant any grain, they shall charge and convict him of not performing the required work in the field, and he shall give to the owner of the field grain in accordance with his neighbor's yield.
- §43 If he does not cultivate the field at all but leaves it fallow, he shall give to the owner of the field grain in accordance with his neighbor's yield, and he shall plow and harrow the field which he left fallow and return it to the owner of the field.
- §44 If a man rents a previously uncultivated field for a three-year term with the intention of opening it for cultivation but he is negligent and does not open the field, in the fourth year he shall plow, hoe, and harrow the field and return it to the owner of the field; and in addition he shall measure and deliver 3,000 SILA of grain per 18 iku (of field).
- §45 If a man leases his field to a cultivator and receives the rent for his field, and afterwards the storm-god Adad devastates the field or a flood sweeps away the crops, the loss is the cultivator's alone.
- §46 If he (the owner) should not receive the rent for his field (before the catastrophe destroys the field) or he leases out the field on terms of a half share or a third share (of the yield), the cultivator and the owner of the field shall divide whatever grain there is remaining in the agreed proportions.
- §47 If the cultivator should declare his intention to cultivate the field (in the next year) because in the previous year he did not recover his expenses, the owner of the field will not object; his same cultivator shall cultivate his field and he shall take (his share of) the grain at the harvest in accordance with his contract.
- §48 If a man has a debt lodged against him, and the storm-god Adad devastates his field or a flood sweeps away the crops, or there is no grain grown in the field due to insufficient water — in that year he will not repay grain to his creditor; he shall suspend performance of his contract and he will not give interest payments for that year.
- §49 If a man borrows silver from a merchant and gives the merchant a field prepared for planting with either grain or sesame ² (as a pledge for the loan) and declares to him, "You cultivate the field and collect and take away as much grain or sesame as will be grown" — if the cultivator should produce either grain or sesame in the field, at the harvest it is only the owner of the field who shall take the grain or sesame that is grown in the field, and he shall give to the merchant the grain equivalent to his silver which he borrowed from the merchant and the interest on it and also the expenses of the cultivation.	i Lev 19:23-25	his field and the shepherd who grazed sheep and goats on the field without the permission of the owner of the field shall give in addition 6,000 SILA of grain per 18 iku (of field) to the owner of the field.

§50	If he gives (to the merchant as a pledge for the loan) a field already plowed and sown with either <grain> or sesame, (at the harvest) it is only the owner of the field who shall take the grain or sesame that is grown in the field and he shall repay the silver and the interest on it to the merchant.	§58	If, after the sheep and goats come up from the common irrigated area when the penants announcing the termination of pasturing are wound around the main city-gate, the shepherd releases the sheep and goats into a field and allows the sheep and goats to graze in the field — the shepherd shall guard the field in which he allowed them to graze and at the harvest he shall measure and deliver to the owner of the field 18,000 SILA of grain per 18 iku (of field).
§51	If he does not have silver to repay, he shall give to the merchant, in accordance with the royal edict, <either grain or> sesame according to their market value for his silver borrowed from the merchant and the interest on it.	§59	If a man cuts down a tree in another man's date orchard without the permission of the owner of the orchard, he shall weigh and deliver 30 shekels of silver.
§52	If the cultivator should not produce grain or sesame in the field, he will not alter his agreement.	§60	If a man gives a field to a gardener to plant as a date orchard and the gardener plants the orchard, he shall cultivate the orchard for four years; in the fifth year, the owner of the orchard and the gardener shall divide the yield in equal shares; the owner of the orchard shall select and take his share first. ¹
§53	If a man neglects to reinforce the embankment of (the irrigation canal of) his field and does not reinforce its embankment, and then a breach opens in its embankment and allows the water to carry away the common irrigated area, the man in whose embankment the breach opened shall replace the grain whose loss he caused.	§61	If the gardener does not complete the planting of (the date orchard in) the field, but leaves an uncultivated area, they shall include the uncultivated area in his share.
§54	If he cannot replace the grain, they shall sell him and his property, and the residents of the common irrigated area whose grain crops the water carried away shall divide (the proceeds).	§62	If he does not plant as a date orchard the field which was given to him — if it is arable land, the gardener shall measure and deliver to the owner of the field the estimated yield of the field for the years it is left fallow in accordance with his neighbor's yield; furthermore he shall perform the required work on the field and return it to the owner of the field.
§55	If a man opens his branch of the canal for irrigation and negligently allows the water to carry away his neighbor's field, he shall measure and deliver grain in accordance with his neighbor's yield.	§63	If it is uncultivated land, he shall perform the required work on the field and return it to the owner of the field, and in addition he shall measure and deliver 3,000 SILA of grain per 18 iku (of field) per year.
§56	If a man opens (an irrigation gate and releases) waters and thereby he allows the water to carry away whatever work has been done in his neighbor's field, he shall measure and deliver 3,000 SILA of grain per 18 iku (of field).	§64	If a man gives his orchard to a gardener to pollinate (the date palms), as long as the gardener is in possession of the orchard, he shall give to the owner of the orchard two thirds of the yield of the orchard, and he himself shall take one third.
§57	If a shepherd does not make an agreement with the owner of the field to graze sheep and goats, and without the permission of the owner of the field grazes sheep and goats on the field, the owner of the field shall harvest	§65	If the gardener does not pollinate the (date palms in the) orchard and thus diminishes the yield, the gardener [shall measure and deliver] a yield for the orchard to <the owner of the orchard in accordance with> his neighbor's yield.

² Or "linseed"; see the discussion and literature cited in CAD Š 3:306f. s.v. šamaššammu.

- gap §a If a man borrows silver from a merchant and his merchant presses him for payment but he has nothing to give in repayment, and therefore he gives his orchard after pollination to the merchant and declares to him, "Take away as many dates as will be grown in the orchard as payment for your silver" — the merchant will not agree; the owner of the orchard himself shall take the dates that are grown in the orchard, he shall satisfy the merchant with silver and the interest on it in accordance with the terms of his contract, and only the owner of the orchard shall take the dates that are grown in the orchard in excess (of the debt).
- gap §b If a man intends to build a house and his neighbor [...]
- gap §c [If ...] he will not give to him [...] for a price; if he intends to give grain, silver, or any other commodity for a house encumbered by a service obligation and belonging to the estate of his neighbor which he wishes to buy, he shall forfeit whatever he gave; it shall return to its owner. If that house is not encumbered by a service obligation, he may buy it; he may give grain, silver, or any other commodity for that house.
- gap §d If a man should work his neighbor's uncultivated plot without his neighbor's permission, in the house [...] his neighbor [...]
- gap §e [If ... a man] declares [to the owner of a rundown house], "Reinforce your scalable wall; they could scale over the wall to here from your house," or to the owner of an uncultivated plot, "Work your uncultivated plot; they could break into my house from your uncultivated plot," and he secures witnesses — if a thief [breaks in] by scaling the wall, the owner [of the rundown house shall replace anything which is lost by] the scaling; if [a thief breaks in by access through the uncultivated plot], the owner [of the uncultivated plot] shall replace anything [which was lost ...]; if [...]
- gap §f [if ...] house [...]
- gap §g If [a man rents a house ... and] the tenant gives the full amount of the silver for his annual rent to the owner of the house, but the owner of the house then orders the tenant to leave before the expiration of the full term of his lease, the owner of the house, because he evicted the tenant before the expiration of the full term of his lease, shall forfeit the silver that the tenant gave him.
- gap §h [If] a tenant intends to purchase [the house of a commoner, ...] the rent obligation which he shall perform, in order to purchase the house of a commoner, [...] which he shall place [...] he shall place it [...]; if he is abroad(?) [...] of the commoner; if he does not purchase (the house) [he shall forfeit the silver that] he took and [the house of the commoner shall revert to] its owner.³
- gap §§i, j, k [...]
- gap §l [If a man borrows silver ...] he shall weigh and deliver his silver and the interest on it at the harvest; if he has nothing to give, [he shall give to him] any of his property, any commodity or grain; if he has ... to give, [...]
- gap §m If a merchant who for [...] ... for 5 shekels of silver [...] he did not write for him a sealed document [...] ... the son of a man ... that one ... they shall kill him.
- gap §n If a man's slave [...] he shall weigh and deliver 20 shekels of silver, and that slave [...] complete ... he shall be killed.
- gap §o [If] a man [...] another man [...] silver [...]
- gap §§p, q [...]
- gap §r [If...] to [...] wages [...] silver [...]; if that man who [...] does not [...] he shall forfeit the silver that he gave.
- gap §s If either a male slave or [a female slave ..., they shall return him] to [his] master; if [...] he beats(?) him, they will not return him [to] his [master].
- gap §t If a merchant gives grain or silver as an interest-bearing loan, he shall take 100 SILA of grain per GUR as interest (= 33⅓%); if he gives silver as an interest-bearing loan, he shall take 36 barleycorns per shekel of silver as interest (= 20%).
- gap §u If a man who has an interest-bearing loan does not have silver with which to repay it, he (the merchant) shall take grain and silver in accordance with the royal edict and the interest on it at the annual rate of 60 SILA per 1 GUR (= 20%); if the merchant should attempt to increase and collect the interest on the (silver) loan [up to the grain interest rate of 100 SILA of grain] per 1 GUR (= 33⅓%), [or in any other way beyond] 36 barleycorns [per shekel (= 20%) of silver], he shall forfeit whatever he had given.
- gap §v If a merchant gives grain or silver at interest and he then takes [...] grain or silver as interest according to the amount of his capital sum, [...] the grain and silver, his capital and interest [...], the tablet recording [his debt obligation shall be broken].	J Lev 19:35-36; Deut 25:13-16; Hos 12:8; Amos 8:5; Prov 11:1; 20:10; 20:23	silver to the merchant in the amount of the capital sum.

³ Taken by Donbaz and Sauren (1991:8-13) as a variant of the preceding provision presented here separately as gap §g.

gap §w If a merchant [...] should take [...] interest and [...], then does not deduct the payments of either grain [or silver] as much as [he received, or] does not write a new tablet, or adds the interest payments to the capital sum, that merchant shall return twofold as much grain as he received.		§103 If enemy forces should make him abandon whatever goods he is transporting while on his business trip, the trading agent shall swear an oath by the god and shall be released.
gap §x If a merchant gives grain or silver as an interest-bearing loan and when he gives it as an interest-bearing loan he gives the silver according to the small weight or the grain according to the small sātu-measure but when he receives payment he receives the silver according to the large weight or the grain according to the large sātu-measure, [that merchant] shall forfeit [anything that he gave].⁴		§104 If a merchant gives a trading agent grain, wool, oil, or any other commodity for local transactions, the trading agent shall return to the merchant the silver for each transaction; the trading agent shall collect a sealed receipt for (each payment in) silver that he gives to the merchant.
gap §y If [a merchant] gives [...] as an interest-bearing loan, [...] he shall forfeit anything that he gave.		§105 If the trading agent should be negligent and not take a sealed receipt for (each payment in) silver that he gives to the merchant, any silver that is not documented in a sealed receipt will not be included in the final accounting.
gap §z If a man borrows grain or silver from a merchant and does not have grain or silver with which to repay but does have other goods, he shall give to his merchant in the presence of witnesses whatever he has at hand, in amounts according to the exchange value; the merchant will not object; he shall accept it.		§106 If the trading agent takes silver from the merchant but then denies the claim of his merchant, that merchant shall bring charges and proof before the god and witnesses against the trading agent concerning the silver taken, and the trading agent shall give to the merchant threefold the amount of silver that he took.
gap §aa [If a man ...] like [...]		§107 If a merchant entrusts silver to a trading agent and the trading agent then returns to his merchant everything that the merchant had given him but the merchant denies (having received) everything that the trading agent had given him, that trading agent shall bring charges and proof before the god and witnesses against the merchant, and because he denied the account of his trading agent, the merchant shall give to the trading agent sixfold the amount that he took.
gap §bb [If...] he shall be killed.		§108 If a tapster should refuse to accept grain for the price of beer but accepts (only) silver measured by the large weight, thereby reducing the value of beer in relation to the value of grain, they shall charge and convict that tapster and they shall cast her into the water.
gap §cc If a man gives silver to another man for investment in a partnership venture, before the god they shall equally divide the profit or loss.		§109 If there should be a tapster in whose house criminals congregate, and she does not seize those criminals and lead them off to the palace authorities, that tapster shall be killed.
§100 If a merchant gives silver to a trading agent for conducting business transactions and sends him off on a business trip, the trading agent [shall ...] while on the business trip; if he should realize [a profit] where he went, he shall calculate the total interest, per transaction and time elapsed, on as much silver as he took, and he shall satisfy his merchant.		§110 If a naditu or⁴ an ugbaltu who does not reside within the cloister should open a tavern or enter a tavern for some beer, they shall burn that woman.^{4a}
§101 If he should realize no profit where he went, the trading agent shall give to the merchant twofold the silver he took.
§102 If a merchant should give silver to a trading agent for an investment venture, and he incurs a loss on his journeys, he shall return

⁴ Or: "If a naditu who is an ugbaltu ..."

^{4a} See Roth 1998.

- | | | |
|--|---|---|
| §111 If a tapster gives one vat of beer as a loan(?), she shall take 50 SILA of grain at the harvest. §112 If a man is engaged in a trading expedition and gives silver, gold, precious stones, or any other goods to another under consignment for transportation, and the latter man does not deliver that which was consigned to him where it was to be consigned but appropriates it, the owner of the consigned property shall charge and convict that man of whatever consignment he failed to deliver, and that man shall give to the owner of the consigned property fivefold the property that had been given to him. §113 If a man has a claim of grain or silver against another man and takes grain from the granary or from the threshing floor without obtaining permission from the owner of the grain, they shall charge and convict that man of taking grain from the granary or from the threshing floor without the permission of the owner of the grain, and he shall return as much grain as he took; moreover, he shall forfeit whatever he originally gave as the loan. §114 If a man does not have a claim of grain or silver against another man but distrains a member of his household, he shall weigh and deliver 20 shekels of silver for each distrainee. §115 If a man has a claim of grain or silver against another man, distrains a member of his household, and the distrainee dies a natural death while in the house of her or his⁵ distrainer, that case has no basis for a claim. §116 If the distrainee should die from the effects of a beating or other physical abuse while in the house of her or his distrainer, the owner of the distrainee shall charge and convict his merchant, and if (the distrainee is) the man's son,⁶ they shall kill his (the distrainer's) son; if the man's slave, he shall weigh and deliver 20 shekels of silver; moreover, he shall forfeit whatever he originally gave as the loan. §117 If an obligation is outstanding against a man and he sells or gives into debt service his wife, his son, or his daughter, they shall perform service in the house of their buyer or of the one who holds them in debt service for three years; their release shall be secured in the fourth year.⁶ §118 If he should give a male or female slave into debt service, the merchant may extend the | & Exod 21:2-11; Lev 25:48-50; Deut 15:12-18 Exod 22:6-9 | term (beyond three years), he may sell him; there are no grounds for a claim. §119 If an obligation is outstanding against a man and he therefore sells his slave woman who has borne him children, the owner of the slave woman shall weigh and deliver the silver which the merchant weighed and delivered (as the loan) and he shall thereby redeem his slave woman. §120 If a man stores his grain in another man's house, and a loss occurs in the storage bin or the householder opens the granary and takes the grain or he completely denies receiving the grain that was stored in his house -- the owner of the grain shall establish his grain before the god, and the householder shall give to the owner of the grain twofold the grain that he took (in storage).¹ §121 If a man stores grain in another man's house, he shall give 5 SILA of grain per GUR (i.e., per 300 SILA) of grain as annual rent of the granary. §122 If a man intends to give silver, gold, or anything else to another man for safekeeping, he shall exhibit before witnesses anything which he intends to give, he shall establish a contract, and (in this manner) he shall give goods for safekeeping. §123 If he gives goods for safekeeping without witnesses or a contract, and they deny that he gave anything, that case has no basis for a claim. §124 If a man gives silver, gold, or anything else before witnesses to another man for safekeeping and he denies it, they shall charge and convict that man, and he shall give twofold that which he denied. §125 If a man gives his property for safekeeping and his property together with the householder's property is lost either by (theft achieved through) a breach or by scaling over a wall, the householder who was careless shall make restitution and shall restore to the owner of the property that which was given to him for safekeeping and which he allowed to be lost; the householder shall continue to search for his own lost property, and he shall take it from the one who stole it from him. §126 If a man whose property is not lost should declare, "My property is lost," and accuse his city quarter, his city quarter shall establish against him before the god that no property of his is lost, and he shall give to his city quarter twofold whatever he claimed. |
|--|---|---|

⁵ The Akk. nipātu is fem., hence the fem. pronoun, but the person or animal given in distress could be male or female.

⁶ Or: "(if the distress is) a member of the awīlu-class."

- | | | |
|--|--|--|
| §127 If a man causes a finger to be pointed in accusation against an ugbabtu or against a man's wife but cannot bring proof, they shall flog that man before the judges and they shall shave off half of his hair. §128 If a man marries a wife but does not establish a contract for her, that woman is not a wife. §129 If a man's wife should be seized lying with another male, they shall bind them and cast them into the water; if the wife's master allows his wife to live, then the king shall allow his subject (i.e., the other male) to live." §130 If a man pins down another man's virgin wife who is still residing in her father's house, and they seize him lying with her, that man shall be killed; that woman shall be released." §131 If her husband accuses his own wife (of adultery), although she has not been seized lying with another male, she shall swear (to her innocence by) an oath by the god, and return to her house. §132 If a man's wife should have a finger pointed against her in accusation involving another male, although she has not been seized lying with another male, she shall submit to the divine River Ordeal for her husband." §133a If a man should be captured and there are sufficient provisions in his house, his wife [... she will not] enter [another's house]. §133b If that woman does not keep herself chaste but enters another's house, they shall charge and convict that woman and cast her into the water. §134 If a man should be captured and there are not sufficient provisions in his house, his wife may enter another's house; that woman will not be subject to any penalty. §135 If a man should be captured and there are not sufficient provisions in his house, before his return his wife enters another's house and bears children, and afterwards her husband returns and gets back to his city, that woman shall return to her first husband; the children shall inherit from their father. §136 If a man deserts his city and flees, and after his departure his wife enters another's house — if that man then should return and seize his wife, because he repudiated his city and fled, the wife of the deserter will not return to her husband. §137 If a man should decide to divorce a šugtu who bore him children, or a naditu who provided him with children, they shall return to that woman her dowry and they shall give | m Deut 22:22
n Deut 22:23-27
o Num 5:11-31
p Deut 22:13-19, 28-29 | her one half of (her husband's) field, orchard, and property, and she shall raise her children; after she has raised her children, they shall give her a share comparable in value to that of one heir from whatever properties are given to her sons, and a husband of her choice may marry her. §138 If a man intends to divorce his first-ranking wife who did not bear him children, he shall give her silver as much as was her bridewealth and restore to her the dowry that she brought from her father's house, and he shall divorce her. §139 If there is no bridewealth, he shall give her 60 shekels of silver as a divorce settlement. §140 If he is a commoner, he shall give her 20 shekels of silver. §141 If the wife of a man who is residing in the man's house should decide to leave, and she appropriates goods, squanders her household possessions, or disparages her husband, they shall charge and convict her; and if her husband should declare his intention to divorce her, then he shall divorce her; neither her travel expenses, nor her divorce settlement, nor anything else shall be given to her. If her husband should declare his intention to not divorce her, then her husband may marry another woman and that (first) woman shall reside in her husband's house as a slave woman." §142 If a woman repudiates her husband, and declares, "You will not have marital relations with me" — her circumstances shall be investigated by the authorities of her city quarter, and if she is circumspect and without fault, but her husband is wayward and disparages her greatly, that woman will not be subject to any penalty; she shall take her dowry and she shall depart for her father's house. §143 If she is not circumspect but is wayward, squanders her household possessions, and disparages her husband, they shall cast that woman into the water. §144 If a man marries a naditu, and that naditu gives a slave woman to her husband, and thus she provides children, but that man then decides to marry a šugtu, they will not permit that man to do so, he will not marry the šugtu. §145 If a man marries a naditu, and she does not provide him with children, and that man then decides to marry a šugtu, that man may marry the šugtu and bring her into his house; that šugtu should not aspire to equal status with the naditu. |
|--|--|--|

- §146 If a man marries a nadnu, and she gives a slave woman to her husband, and she (the slave) then bears children, after which that slave woman aspires to equal status with her mistress — because she bore children, her mistress will not sell her; (but) she may place upon her the slave-hairlock and reckon her with the slave women.
- §147 If she does not bear children, her mistress may sell her.
- §148 If a man marries a woman, and later la²bum-disease⁷ seizes her and he decides to marry another woman, he may marry; he will not divorce his wife whom la²bum-disease seized; she shall reside in quarters he constructs and he shall continue to support her as long as she lives.
- §149 If that woman should not agree to reside in her husband's house, he shall restore to her her dowry that she brought from her father's house, and she shall depart.
- §150 If a man awards to his wife a field, orchard, house, or movable property, and makes out a sealed document for her, after her husband's death her children will not bring a claim against her; the mother shall give her estate to whichever of her children she loves, but she will not give it to an outsider.
- §151 If a woman who is residing in a man's house should have her husband agree by contract that no creditor of her husband shall seize her (for his debts) — if that man has a debt incurred before marrying that woman, his creditors will not seize his wife; and if that woman has a debt incurred before entering the man's house, her creditors will not seize her husband.
- §152 If a debt should be incurred by them after that woman enters the man's house, both of them shall satisfy the merchant.
- §153 If a man's wife has her husband killed on account of (her relationship with) another male, they shall impale that woman.
- §154 If a man should carnally know his daughter, they shall banish that man from the city.⁸
- §155 If a man selects a bride for his son and his son carnally knows her, after which he himself then lies with her and they seize him in the act, they shall bind that man and cast him into the water.
- §156 If a man selects a bride for his son and his son does not yet carnally know her, and he himself then lies with her, he shall weigh and deliver to her 30 shekels of silver; moreover, he shall restore to her whatever she brought from her father's house, and a husband of her choice shall marry her.
- §157 If a man, after his father's death, should lie with his mother, they shall burn them both.⁹
- §158 If a man, after his father's death, should be discovered in the lap of his (the father's) principal wife who had borne children, that man shall be disinherited from the paternal estate.⁹
- §159 If a man who has the ceremonial marriage prestation brought to the house of his father-in-law, and who gives the bridewealth, should have his attention diverted to another woman and declare to his father-in-law, "I will not marry your daughter," the father of the daughter shall take full legal possession of whatever had been brought to him.
- §160 If a man has the ceremonial marriage prestation brought to the house of his father-in-law and gives the bridewealth, and the father of the daughter then declares, "I will not give my daughter to you," he shall return twofold everything that had been brought to him.
- §161 If a man has the ceremonial marriage prestation brought to the house of his father-in-law and gives the bridewealth, and then his comrade slanders him (with the result that) his father-in-law declares to the one entitled to the wife, "You will not marry my daughter," he shall return twofold everything that had been brought to him; moreover, his comrade will not marry his (intended) wife.
- §162 If a man marries a wife, she bears him children, and that woman then goes to her fate, her father shall have no claim to her dowry; her dowry belongs only to her children.
- §163 If a man marries a wife but she does not provide him with children, and that woman goes to her fate — if his father-in-law then returns to him the bridewealth that that man brought to his father-in-law's house, her husband will have no claim to that woman's dowry; her dowry belongs only to her father's house.
- §164 If his father-in-law should not return to him the bridewealth, he shall deduct the value of her bridewealth from her dowry and restore (the balance of) her dowry to her father's house.
- §165 If a man awards by sealed contract a field, orchard, or house to his favorite heir, when the brothers divide the estate after the father goes to his fate, he (the favorite son) shall take the gift which the father gave to him and apart from that gift they shall equally divide the property of the paternal estate.

⁷ The disease or illness la²bu may refer to a contagious skin disease; see Stol 1993:143 with literature.

- §166 If a man provides wives for his eligible sons but does not provide a wife for his youngest son, when the brothers divide the estate after the father goes to his fate, they shall establish the silver value of the bridewealth for their young unmarried brother from the property of the paternal estate, in addition to his inheritance share, and thereby enable him to obtain a wife.
- §167 If a man marries a wife and she bears him children, and later that woman goes to her fate, and after her death he marries another woman and she bears children, after which the father then goes to his fate, the children will not divide the estate according to the mothers; they shall take the dowries of their respective mothers and then equally divide the property of the paternal estate.
- §168 If a man should decide to disinherit his son and declares to the judges, "I will disinherit my son," the judges shall investigate his case and if the son is not guilty of a grave offense deserving the penalty of disinheritance, the father may not disinherit his son.
- §169 If he should be guilty of a grave offense deserving the penalty of disinheritance by his father, they shall pardon him for his first one; if he should commit a grave offense a second time, the father may disinherit his son.
- §170 If a man's first-ranking wife bears him children and his slave woman bears him children, and the father during his lifetime then declares to (or: concerning) the children whom the slave woman bore to him, "My children," and he reckons them with the children of the first-ranking wife — after the father goes to his fate, the children of the first-ranking wife and the children of the slave woman shall equally divide the property of the paternal estate; the preferred heir is a son of the first-ranking wife, he shall select and take a share first.
- §171 But if the father during his lifetime should not declare to (or: concerning) the children whom the slave woman bore to him, "My children," after the father goes to his fate, the children of the slave woman will not divide the property of the paternal estate with the children of the first-ranking wife. The release of the slave woman and of her children shall be secured; the children of the first-ranking wife will not make claims of slavery against the children of the slave woman. The first-ranking wife shall take her dowry and the marriage settlement which her husband awarded to her in writing, and

Deut 21:18-21

- she shall continue to reside in her husband's dwelling; as long as she is alive she shall enjoy the use of it, but she may not sell it; her own estate shall belong (as inheritance) only to her own children.
- §172 If her husband does not make a marriage settlement in her favor, they shall restore to her in full her dowry, and she shall take a share of the property of her husband's estate comparable in value to that of one heir. If her children pressure her in order to coerce her to depart from the house, the judges shall investigate her case and shall impose a penalty on the children; that woman will not depart from her husband's house. If that woman should decide on her own to depart, she shall leave for her children the marriage settlement which her husband gave to her; she shall take the dowry brought from her father's house and a husband of her choice shall marry her.
- §173 If that woman should bear children to her latter husband into whose house she entered, after that woman dies, her former and latter children shall equally divide her dowry.
- §174 If she does not bear children to her latter husband, only the children of her first husband shall take her dowry.
- §175 If a slave of the palace or a slave of a commoner marries a woman of the awilu-class and she then bears children, the owner of the slave will have no claims of slavery against the children of the woman of the awilu-class.
- §176a And if either a slave of the palace or a slave of a commoner marries a woman of the awilu-class, and when he marries her she enters the house of the slave of the palace or of the slave of the commoner together with the dowry brought from her father's house, and subsequent to the time that they move in together they establish a household and accumulate possessions, after which either the slave of the palace or the slave of the commoner should go to his fate — the woman of the awilu-class shall take her dowry; furthermore, they shall divide into two parts everything that her husband and she accumulated subsequent to the time that they moved in together, and the slave's owner shall take half and the woman of the awilu-class shall take half for her children.
- §176b If the woman of the awilu-class does not have a dowry, they shall divide into two parts everything that her husband and she accumulated subsequent to the time that they moved in together, and the slave's owner

- shall take half and the woman of the awflu-class shall take half for her children.
- §177 If a widow whose children are still young should decide to enter another's house, she will not enter without (the prior approval of) the judges. When she enters another's house, the judges shall investigate the estate of her former husband, and they shall entrust the estate of her former husband to her latter husband and to that woman, and they shall have them record a tablet (inventorying the estate). They shall safeguard the estate and they shall raise the young children; they will not sell the household goods. Any buyer who buys the household goods of the children of a widow shall forfeit his silver; the property shall revert to its owner.
- §178 If there is an ugbabbu, a naditu, or a sekretu whose father awards to her a dowry and records it in a tablet for her, but in the tablet that he records for her he does not grant her written authority to give her estate to whomever she pleases and does not give her full discretion — after the father goes to his fate, her brothers shall take her field and her orchard and they shall give to her food, oil, and clothing allowances in accordance with the value of her inheritance share, and they shall thereby satisfy her. If her brothers should not give to her food, oil, and clothing allowances in accordance with the value of her inheritance share and thus do not satisfy her, she shall give her field and her orchard to any agricultural tenant she pleases, and her agricultural tenant shall support her. As long as she lives, she shall enjoy the use of the field, orchard, and anything else which her father gave to her, but she will not sell it and she will not satisfy another person's obligations with it; her inheritance belongs only to her brothers.
- §179 If there is an ugbabbu, a naditu, or a sekretu whose father awards to her a dowry and records it for her in a sealed document, and in the tablet that he records for her he grants her written authority to give her estate to whomever she pleases and gives her full discretion — after the father goes to his fate, she shall give her estate to whomever she pleases; her brothers will not raise a claim against her.
- §180 If a father does not award a dowry to his daughter who is a cloistered naditu or a sekretu, after the father goes to his fate, she shall have a share of the property of the paternal estate comparable in value to that of one heir; as long as she lives she shall enjoy its use; her estate belongs only to her brothers.
- §181 If a father dedicates (his daughter) to the deity as a naditu, a qadištu, or a kulmaštu but does not award to her a dowry, after the father goes to his fate she shall take her one-third share⁸ from the property of the paternal estate as her inheritance, and as long as she lives she shall enjoy its use; her estate belongs only to her brothers.
- §182 If a father does not award a dowry to his daughter who is a naditu dedicated to the god Marduk of the city of Babylon or does not record it for her in a sealed document, after the father goes to his fate, she shall take with her brothers her one-third share⁹ from the property of the paternal estate as her inheritance, but she will not perform any service obligations; a naditu dedicated to the god Marduk shall give her estate as she pleases.
- §183 If a father awards a dowry to his daughter who is a šugtu, gives her to a husband, and records it for her in a sealed document, after the father goes to his fate, she will not have a share of the property of the paternal estate.
- §184 If a man does not award a dowry to his daughter who is a šugtu, and does not give her to a husband, after the father goes to his fate, her brothers shall award to her a dowry proportionate to the value of the paternal estate, and they shall give her to a husband.
- §185 If a man takes in adoption a young child at birth and then rears him, that rearing will not be reclaimed.
- §186 If a man takes in adoption a young child, and when he takes him, he (the child?) is seeking his father and mother, that rearing shall return to his father's house.
- §187 A child of (i.e., reared by) a courtier who is a palace attendant or a child of (i.e., reared by) a sekretu will not be reclaimed.
- §188 If a craftsman takes a young child to rear and then teaches him his craft, he will not be reclaimed.
- §189 If he should not teach him his craft, that rearing shall return to his father's house.
- §190 If a man should not reckon the young child whom he took and raised in adoption as equal with his children, that rearing shall return to his father's house.

⁸ That is, not the preferential (double) inheritance share of a primary heir, but the single share of any other heir; the terminology derives from the paradigmatic case of two heirs in which the estate is divided into three parts.

⁹ See note at §181.

§191	If a man establishes his household (by reckoning as equal with any future children) the young child whom he took and raised in adoption, but afterwards he has children (of his own) and then decides to disinherit the rearing, that young child will not depart empty-handed; the father who raised him shall give him a one-third share ¹⁰ of his property as his inheritance and he shall depart; he will not give him any property from field, orchard, or house.	u Exod 21:15	the cheek of another member of the awilu -class who is his equal, he shall weigh and deliver 60 shekels of silver.
§192	If the child of (i.e., reared by) a courtier or the child of (i.e., reared by) a sekretu should say to the father who raised him or to the mother who raised him, "You are not my father," or "You are not my mother," they shall cut out his tongue.	v Exod 21:23-25; Lev 24:18-20; Deut 19:21	§204 If a commoner should strike the cheek of another commoner, he shall weigh and deliver 10 shekels of silver.
§193	If the child of (i.e., reared by) a courtier or the child of (i.e., reared by) a sekretu identifies with his father's house and repudiates the father who raised him or the mother who raised him and departs for his father's house, they shall pluck out his eye.	w Exod 21:20-21, 26-27	§205 If an awilu 's slave should strike the cheek of a member of the awilu -class, they shall cut off his ear.
§194	If a man gives his son to a wet nurse and that child then dies while in the care of the wet nurse, and the wet nurse then contracts for another child without the consent of his father and mother, they shall charge and convict her, and, because she contracted for another child without the consent of his father and mother, they shall cut off her breast.	x Exod 21:18-20; Num 35:9-15	§206 If an awilu should strike another awilu during a brawl and inflict upon him a wound, that awilu shall swear, "I did not strike intentionally," and he shall satisfy the physician (i.e., pay his fees). ⁵
§195	If a child should strike his father, they shall cut off his hand."	y Exod 21:12-14; Num 35:9-34; Deut 19:1-13	§207 If he should die from his beating, he shall also swear ("I did not strike him intentionally"); if he (the victim) is a member of the awilu -class, he shall weigh and deliver 30 shekels of silver. ⁷
§196	If an awilu should blind the eye of another awilu , they shall blind his eye."	z Exod 21:22-25	§208 If he (the victim) is a member of the commoner-class, he shall weigh and deliver 20 shekels of silver.
§197	If he should break the bone of another awilu , they shall break his bone.		§209 If an awilu strikes a woman of the awilu -class and thereby causes her to miscarry her fetus, he shall weigh and deliver 10 shekels of silver for her fetus. ⁸
§198	If he should blind the eye of a commoner or break the bone of a commoner, he shall weigh and deliver 60 shekels of silver.		§210 If that woman should die, they shall kill his daughter.
§199	If he should blind the eye of an awilu 's slave or break the bone of an awilu 's slave, he shall weigh and deliver one-half of his value (in silver)."		§211 If he should cause a woman of the commoner-class to miscarry her fetus by the beating, he shall weigh and deliver 5 shekels of silver.
§200	If an awilu should knock out the tooth of another awilu of his own rank, they shall knock out his tooth.		§212 If that woman should die, he shall weigh and deliver 30 shekels of silver.
§201	If he should knock out the tooth of a commoner, he shall weigh and deliver 20 shekels of silver.		§213 If he strikes an awilu 's slave woman and thereby causes her to miscarry her fetus, he shall weigh and deliver 2 shekels of silver.
§202	If an awilu should strike the cheek of an awilu who is of status higher than his own, he shall be flogged in the public assembly with 60 stripes of an ox whip.		§214 If that slave woman should die, he shall weigh and deliver 20 shekels of silver.
§203	If a member of the awilu -class should strike		§215 If a physician performs major surgery with a bronze lancet upon an awilu and thus heals the awilu , or opens an awilu 's temple with a bronze lancet and thus heals the awilu 's eye, he shall take 10 shekels of silver (as his fee).
			§216 If he (the patient) is a member of the commoner-class, he shall take 5 shekels of silver (as his fee).
			§217 If he (the patient) is an awilu 's slave, the slave's master shall give to the physician 2 shekels of silver.
			§218 If a physician performs major surgery with a bronze lancet upon an awilu and thus causes the awilu 's death, or opens an awilu 's temple with a bronze lancet and thus blinds the awilu 's eye, they shall cut off his hand.

¹⁰ See note at §181.

§219	If a physician performs major surgery with a bronze lancet upon a slave of a commoner and thus causes the slave's death, he shall replace the slave with a slave of comparable value.	an Exod 22:12-15	shall construct (anew) the house which collapsed at his own expense.
§220	If he opens his (the commoner's slave's) temple with a bronze lancet and thus blinds his eye, he shall weigh and deliver silver equal to half his value.		§233 If a builder constructs a house for a man but does not make it conform to specifications so that a wall then buckles, that builder shall make that wall sound using his own silver.
§221	If a physician should set an awilu 's broken bone or heal an injured muscle, the patient shall give the physician 5 shekels of silver.		§234 If a boatman caulks a boat of 60-GUR capacity for a man, he shall give him 2 shekels of silver as his compensation.
§222	If he (the patient) is a member of the commoner-class, he shall give 3 shekels of silver.		§235 If a boatman caulks a boat for a man but does not satisfactorily complete his work and within that very year the boat founders or reveals a structural defect, the boatman shall dismantle that boat and make it sound at his own expense, and he shall give the sound boat to the owner of the boat.
§223	If he (the patient) is an awilu 's slave, the slave's master shall give the physician 2 shekels of silver.		§236 If a man gives his boat to a boatman for hire, and the boatman is negligent and causes the boat to sink or to become lost, the boatman shall replace the boat for the owner of the boat.
§224	If a veterinarian performs major surgery upon an ox or a donkey and thus heals it, the owner of the ox or of the donkey shall give the physician as his fee one sixth (of a shekel, i.e., 30 barleycorns) of silver.		§237 If a man hires a boatman and a boat and loads it with grain, wool, oil, dates, or any other lading, and that boatman is negligent and thereby causes the boat to sink or its cargo to become lost, the boatman shall replace the boat which he sank and any of its cargo which he lost.
§225	If he performs major surgery upon an ox or a donkey and thus causes its death, he shall give one quarter(?) ¹ of its value to the owner of the ox or donkey.		§238 If a boatman should cause a man's boat to sink and he raises it, he shall give silver equal to half of its value.
§226	If a barber shaves off the slave-hairlock of a slave not belonging to him without the consent of the slave's owner, they shall cut off that barber's hand.		§239 If a man hires a boatman, he shall give him 1,800 SILA of grain per year.
§227	If a man misinforms a barber so that he then shaves off the slave-hairlock of a slave not belonging to him, they shall kill that man and hang him in his own doorway; the barber shall swear, "I did not knowingly shave it off," and he shall be released.		§240 If a boat under the command of the master of an upstream-boat collides with a boat under the command of the master of a downstream-boat and thus sinks it, the owner of the sunken boat shall establish before the god the property that is lost from his boat, and the master of the upstream-boat who sinks the boat of the master of the downstream-boat shall replace to him his boat and his lost property.
§228	If a builder constructs a house for a man to his satisfaction, he shall give him 2 shekels of silver for each SAR of house as his compensation.		§241 If a man should distrain an ox, he shall weigh and deliver 20 shekels of silver.
§229	If a builder constructs a house for a man but does not make his work sound, and the house that he constructs collapses and causes the death of the householder, that builder shall be killed.		§242/ If a man rents it for one year, he shall give to its owner 1200 SILA of grain as the hire of an ox for the rear (of the team), and 900 SILA of grain as the hire of an ox for the middle (of the team).
§230	If it should cause the death of a son of the householder, they shall kill a son of that builder.	243	§244 If a man rents an ox or a donkey and a lion kills it in the open country, it is the owner's loss. ^{an}
§231	If it should cause the death of a slave of the householder, he shall give to the householder a slave of comparable value for the slave.		§245 If a man rents an ox and causes its death either by negligence or by physical abuse, he shall replace the ox with an ox of compara-
§232	If it should cause the loss of property, he shall replace anything that is lost; moreover, because he did not make sound the house which he constructed and it collapsed, he

